New Century Cyclopedia of Names

THIS BOOK HAS BEEN PROVIDED BY THE

FOR USE IN

MEMBER LIBRARIES

Barnhart, Clarence L., Ed.
The new century encyclopedia
R 900 CENTURY

SAUSALITO PUBLIC LIBRARY

For Reference

not to be taken from this room

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2013

http://archive.org/details/newcenturycyclop01barn

The New

CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA

OF

Names

The New
CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA
OF Names

EDITED BY

Clarence L. Barnhart

with the assistance of

William D. Halsey

and a staff of more than 350 consulting scholars, special editors, and other contributors

VOLUME ONE

A—Emin Pasha

APPLETON-CENTURY-CROFTS, INC.
NEW YORK

Copyright, 1954, by
APPLETON-CENTURY-CROFTS, INC.

All rights reserved. This book, or parts thereof, must not be reproduced in any form without permission of the publisher.

Library of Congress Card Number: 52–13879

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I

	PAGE
PREFACE	vii
HOW TO USE THE NEW CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA OF NAMES	xi
EDITORIAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE	xv
CONSULTING EDITORS	xvi
SPECIAL CONSULTANTS	xix
PRONUNCIATION EDITORS AND CONSULTANTS	xxv
SPECIAL WRITERS	xxv
OFFICE STAFF	xxv
ABBREVIATIONS	xxvi
KEY TO PRONUNCIATION	xxviii
CYCLOPEDIA OF PROPER NAMES (A–EMIN PASHA)	1–1440

CONTENTS OF VOLUME II

CYCLOPEDIA OF PROPER NAMES (EM'LY–NAKURU)	1441–2880

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III

CYCLOPEDIA OF PROPER NAMES (NALA–ZYRYANIANS)	2881–4228
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF WORLD HISTORY	4229–4261
LISTS OF RULERS, CHIEFS OF STATE, AND OTHER NOTABLES, BY COUNTRY	4263–4288
STATES OF THE UNITED STATES AND OF THE CONFEDERACY	4289
GENEALOGICAL CHARTS	4291–4294
MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS	4295
TABLE OF POPES	4297–4298
GEOLOGICAL TABLE	4299
LIST OF PRENAMES USED IN THIS WORK, WITH PRONUNCIATIONS	4301–4342

PREFACE

The New Century Cyclopedia of Names is a unique reference work consisting solely of information about proper names having importance in the English-speaking world. We give the most frequently used English and native spellings and pronunciations, as well as the essential facts, about more than 100,000 proper names of every description—persons, places, historical events, plays and operas, works of fiction, literary characters, works of art, mythological and legendary persons and places, and any other class of proper names of interest or importance today. The only condition of insertion has been that the name should be one about which information would be likely to be sought.

The original Century Cyclopedia of Names was for over fifty years the chief English-language source of information about all kinds of proper names. Benjamin E. Smith, the editor of the original work, wrote on September 1, 1894, that "it is entirely independent in subject and use, . . . primarily a dictionary of proper names, giving their orthography and pronunciation and such explanation of them as is necessary for their identification; and, secondarily, a condensed encyclopedia in its . . . treatment of several thousands of the more important articles." So well were the high editorial standards of the original book maintained that the original cyclopedia was still used fifty-eight years after its original publication, to obtain information about proper names entered in no other generally available reference work. For many years there has been a persistent demand by librarians and scholars that the original Century Cyclopedia of Names be brought up to date. In 1947 the publisher acceded to this demand, and work was begun on the modernization and revision of the Century Cyclopedia of Names.

Because of the wide extent of modern knowledge the editor formed an Editorial Advisory Committee (see page xv) of eminent scholars in various fields of knowledge or in the making and use of reference books to assist in the framing of basic policies. The scope of the original cyclopedia was unchanged but its size was greatly enlarged so that all useful names might be included. Two world wars and the closer linking together of distant parts of the world have greatly expanded the range of human interests and knowledge, and hence the number of names with which everyone comes in contact. In order to include the proper names important to the modern reader, we made the present work over twice as large as the original one. Even so the selection of names to be included was one of the first and most important problems before the Committee. In order to evaluate properly names for inclusion we decided, on the advice of this Editorial Advisory Committee, to enlist the help of additional scholars in a wide range of special fields. Before we could know where our chief problems lay, and in which fields we would be likely to encounter the greatest amount of difficulty, we analyzed the names in the original Century Cyclopedia of Names against a variety of special and general sources, and undertook a classification of all the names being considered for entry in the new work. We divided our master list of over 500,000 proper names into 1,248 categories, and the terms contained within each of these categories were subjected to further analysis against standard textbooks in each field, and other special works. On the recommendation of members of the Committee or of the Consulting Editors immediately responsible, systematic checks were made against a wide range of authoritative sources to ensure completeness and accuracy of the facts included. As a result, many important facts which have not hitherto been available in any general reference work have been added.

At the same time we turned to scholars recommended by members of the Editorial Advisory Committee for help in writing articles on the names in all the most difficult categories (see list of Consulting Editors beginning on page xvi). In still other cases, there were single names which were in themselves of such great importance as virtually to comprise separate categories; for these we obtained the help of nearly 200 Special Consultants (see list beginning on page xix).

In the New Century Cyclopedia of Names the reader will, so to speak, "find each name where it belongs"—which is simply to say that he will find it where experience has taught him to expect it. We use a system of entry based on those found in the two reference books which are probably most familiar to the greatest possible number of people, the telephone book and the dictionary. By combining the conventions of entry used in these two reference works we believe we have been able to produce an order-of-entry system with which most readers will already be completely familiar.

We have given precise and detailed facts instead of general information as a matter of policy. All dates have been carefully checked. In addition, exact places and dates of birth and death are given wherever they could be ascertained. Population, area, height and other comparable statistics are cited and dated from official sources; where no adequate official source could be obtained, the reader is clearly informed that the information given is an approximation, even though many of these approximations have been derived from documents of considerable authority. Readers interested in a fuller discussion of this highly technical matter are referred to the section "How to Use the New Century Cyclopedia of Names," beginning on page xi.

The bulk of the names in this work are entered as we believe they are most likely to be spelled by the greatest number of American readers. Such items as "Washington, D.C.," or "John Adams" present no problems. The more obscure American place names or those that have been changed (as "Governors Island," now written without an apostrophe) are entered according to the decisions of the U.S. Board on Geographic Names or the spellings used by the Bureau of the Census; personal names now in some doubt follow the spellings in the Dictionary of American Biography or the Dictionary of National Biography.

Entries on people or places of foreign countries using Roman alphabets are given in native spellings except where American usage is overwhelmingly against this practice, and the accents or diacritics of these alphabets are used. Thus we give as a main entry "Braşov," a city in Rumania, not "Brashov" as it was formerly often spelled to approximate the pronunciation, nor yet "Stalin," now its official designation but not well known. However, we prefer "Bucharest" to "Bucuresti," "Prague" to "Praha," and "Rome" to "Roma," all these first-named being manifestly the more familiar forms in the United States.

Names transliterated from non-Roman alphabets are presented as simply as possible, with almost no use of accented letters or diacritical marks, since most such marks (largely used to indicate pronunciation, which we give following the entry word) are puzzling in ordinary texts. So far as we could ascertain it, we have thus endeavored to follow the mandate of usage by literate Americans.

The letters of the alphabet are directions to say sounds, but the directions are often confusing since one letter or a combination of letters may represent more than one sound. Therefore, we use a system of diacritics to make the directions more precise. We use the pronunciation key of the New Century Dictionary, which is known to the hundreds of thousands of the users of that book. Such a pronunciation key, based upon the usual English sound-values of the letters, is one to which most of us are most accustomed and is therefore one which enables English-speaking consulters of a reference work to reproduce with a fair degree of accuracy the sounds indicated.

We provide the educated speaker of American English with standard pronunciations of names drawn from nearly every known language and every period of history. English names, of course, present no special difficulty. Moreover, many familiar American names are of non-English origin. Names of this latter type are "foreign" in origin only; they are anything but foreign in their application to present-day American people or places. Furthermore, many unquestionably "foreign" names (for instance, Caesar, Nineveh, Balboa, Tokyo, Pravda) are established words in our speech and have an established pronunciation among us. This established pronunciation may fall entirely within patterns of speech that are normal for English words, thus: (sē′zạr, nin′ẹ.vẹ, bal.bō′ạ, tō′ki.ō, präv′dạ). In some details, however, we often imitate the native pronunciation of a foreign name; thus, educated speakers usually pronounce Bach, the name of the German composer, as (bäċh), employing a sound which does not occur in English. It is possible, too, for the English pronunciation of a foreign name to vary from rather complete imitation, as in Versailles (ver.säy′, approximating the French pronunciation), through Anglicization partially imitating the foreign pronunciation (in our example, vėr.sī′), to a complete Anglicization suggested by the written form (here, vėr.sālz′, which is, of course, the regular pronunciation of this name when applied to places in America).

There remain many foreign names for which there is no established English pronunciation, but which nevertheless occur frequently in atlases, histories, translated literature, current news dispatches, and the like. In the absence of a traditional English pronunciation of these names, a work such as this must supply pronunciations according to some general principle, either respelling them with sounds suggested to Americans by the written forms, or imitating, so far as the resources of the English sound-system permit, the pronunciation of the original. The former practice was very commonly followed until recent times and unfamiliar names were freely Anglicized according to the spelling. At the present time, however, the tendency to approximate the native pronunciation is very strong, particularly in the United States, and the respellings in this volume reflect that fact. The closeness of the approximation naturally depends to some extent on the certainty (for Americans) of the pronunciation represented by the written form; this is quite exact in case of languages such as French and German, written in our Latin alphabet, rather less so for names transliterated from less familiar languages employing other alphabets or other forms of writing, and still less so for names recorded by European observers from native speech in remote parts of the world; in the less certain instances, the indicated pronunciation is what may be considered a reasonable spoken equivalent of the written form in which the name reaches us. The closeness of approximation varies, of course, with the degree of difference between American English speech patterns and those of the language imitated; thus, it is relatively easier for us to imitate most German names than it is to imitate most French names.

This work has been, in the truest possible sense, a coöperative effort by scholars, editors, and publisher. Without the invaluable policy-making advice of the nine members of the Editorial Advisory Committee many of the most valuable features of the work would never have come into being. Equally important, but with reference to particular fields of knowledge or particular individuals in history, was the work of the many consulting editors and consultants who gave so generously of their time for a period of several years in order to be sure that the information we gave would be the very best we could possibly obtain. Two persons on the staff deserve special mention: Mr. W. D. Halsey, the managing editor, who has devoted many long hours to detailed editing and has also participated in planning the cyclopedia, and Mr. R. A. Goodwin, who has spent much time on problems of transliteration and pronunciation. Invaluable assistance was also obtained from Mr. George Sarton, who generously made available to us all of the authoritative materials contained in his monumental Introduction to the History of Science. Finally, great thanks are due to Mr. W. Morgan Shuster and Mr. Dana Ferrin, of Appleton-Century-Crofts, without whose patience and understanding this work would certainly never have been possible. Much credit is due also to Mr. Joseph Giebel, of Appleton-Century-Crofts, and to the many people at the H. Wolff Book Manufacturing Company who were involved in work on the book, for solutions to a vast number of very difficult problems of composition and manufacture.

Clarence L. Barnhart

HOW TO USE THE NEW CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA OF NAMES

It is the belief of the editors of this work that the mechanics of its use—where and how to find particular entries, and the like—will be, for all practical purposes, self-explanatory. However, to those users who may be interested in knowing the technical details of its organization, the following sections may be of some interest.

Order of Entries

Perhaps the first thing to bear in mind in a discussion of this matter is that the term "strict alphabetical order," in the sense in which it is understood by most people, cannot be applied in any work as complex as this one. By their nature, dictionaries have been able to come somewhat closer to applying it than encyclopedias, and the result is that dictionaries are somewhat easier for many people to use than most encyclopedias. Realizing the great difficulties involved, we have nevertheless done our utmost in this work to achieve a blending of dictionary techniques with others desirable in such a work as this. A few examples may make it easier for the user of the book to understand what is meant by this. The sequence is simple, and there are no two ways of alphabetizing it; if this work were a simple glossary there would be no problem. But where in that sequence would one look for the entry "Albert the Bear"? In a telephone book it would be second in the sequence, in a dictionary third; in an encyclopedia or the index to a historical text it might be either place according to the convention adopted by the editors of the book. This question of arrangement can become complex indeed where the editor is faced with such a long list, for example, as that under Charles in this work: first, how to arrange the many kings, princes, and literary characters known only as "Charles"; second, how to arrange the many names containing the element "Charles," whether they are single words (Charleston) or phrases (Charles the Bold). In a biographical dictionary or a gazetteer the kinds of names are relatively few. Yet even in biographical works the ways of distinguishing among the persons known as Charles may be various and intricate (as for example emperors before kings, kings before dukes, dukes before earls, and so on—helpful provided the reader remembers that dukes rank higher than earls). And even in the indexes to two different atlases one may find Charles Town and Charlestown next to each other or separated by a column or two.

Albert
Alberta
Albertville

We have kept the system of placement simple and easy to use by combining the conventions of those reference books which are probably most familiar to most readers, the telephone book and the dictionary. The primary principle of arrangement in the telephone book is what is called "directory style," i.e., that people's names are entered in reverse, surname followed by prename. The comma between these two elements, though not printed in many directories, is strictly taken into account, and the user will not find Alberts, Andrew before Albert, William. It might be said that the primary system of ordering is based on what precedes the comma (assumed or actual): the Albert group comes before the Alberts group; and secondary ordering goes by what follows the comma: within the Albert group Albert, Charles precedes Albert, Daniel. This is also our principle. The comma between the elements of a reversed or "directory-style" name is rigidly observed, and primary and secondary ordering go according to what precedes and what follows the comma:

Andersen, Hans Christian Andersen, Karl Andersen Nexø, Martin
Anderson
Anderson, Adam

Finally, for the user of this work, which contains many multiple-word entries, it is important to have a convention that enables him easily to find an item (as Charles Town or Charlestown) even if he does not know whether it is written with or without a space. In this we follow dictionary style, which is familiar to most readers and easily used by them, though they may not be aware that the spaces between words are ignored. In a dictionary alphabet

alphabetize
alphabet noodles

would be found in that order. To return to the simple "glossary" sequence cited above and add to it the troublesome phrase, we have

Albert
Alberta
"Albert the Bear" (placed the same as if it were written "Albertthebear")
Albertville

These three simple principles of the glossary, the directory, and the dictionary cover the ordering of the great majority of entries in this work, and the treatment of any sequence of items involving the same name may be summarized as follows:

I.	the name alone:	Albert
before
II.	the name as a surname:	Albert, Heinrich or as other main element of a reversed or directory-style name:	Albert, Lake
before
III.	the name as part of a longer name, whether several words:	Albert Avogadro "Albert the Bear"
	or one word:	Albertville

Under these classes of entry there are sometimes enough cases otherwise identical as to need ways of distinguishing. Given several items the names of which are all simply "Albert," the arrangement is:

(1) people (biographical entries):

Albert (ȧl.ber). [Called "l'ouvrier Albert," meaning "Albert the Worker"; original name, Alexandre Martin.] b. at Bury, Oise, France, April 27, 1815; d. at Mello, Oise, France, May 28, 1895. French politician. . . .

Albert (al'bėrt), Prince. [Full name, Albert Francis Charles Augustus Emmanuel of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.] b. at the Rosenau, near Coburg, Germany, 1819; d. at Windsor Castle, 1861. Husband of Queen Victoria and prince consort of England. . . .

before

(2) places (geographical entries):

Albert (ȧl.ber). [Former name, Ancre.] Town in N France. . . .

before

(3) things (entries neither biographical nor geographical):

Albert (al'bėrt). In Goethe's Sorrows of Werther, a young farmer. . . .

Albert. [Title, Count of Geierstein.] Character in Sir Walter Scott's novel Anne of Geierstein. . . .

(It will be noted that neither the lightface title, in this case "Prince," nor the boldface variant names given in brackets have any bearing on order of main entry.)

Within categories 1 and 3 (people and things) the order is chronological: Albert born in 1815 precedes Albert born in 1819; because of earlier publication date the character from Goethe's work precedes the one from Scott's.

Within category 2 (places) the order is:

(a) alphabetical by place of location, which is the largest meaningful and well-known unit. (By "meaningful" is meant that we do not locate by the units United States, Canada, or Europe, since these are too large to make any distinction, in many cases, among places of the same name.) We use states of the United States, provinces of Canada, and countries elsewhere (further distinguishing, where there are two or more places of the same name in one country, by the name of the next unit in size thereunder, such as a county or department). The name of the locating unit appears close to the beginning of the entry, where it may be easily spotted:

Paris. City in W Arkansas.
Paris. City in N France.
Paris. City in E Illinois.
Paris. City in N Kentucky.
Paris. Town in SW Maine.
Paris. Town in Ontario, Canada.

(b) by size, when the difference is specifically known and the reader may be expected to use this as a guide:

Quebec. . . . Largest province of the Dominion of Canada.
Quebec. . . . City in SE Quebec.

(c) chronological:

Israel. Kingdom of the northern tribes of the Israelites who seceded during the 10th century B.C. from the southern tribes. . . .
Israel. Independent Jewish state in W Asia, formed from the N, W, and S parts of the former mandated territory of Palestine on May 14, 1948. . . .

In a small proportion of entries there are enough identical names to need still further means of distinction and thus of ordering. Probably most numerous is the list of Charleses, many of them kings, who cannot be spotted quickly even by the numerals that accompany many of the names. To arrange these simply in order of date would be to make a hopeless jumble as to numbers and to lead the reader interested in a dynasty, for instance, through many pages in his effort to trace the monarchs of one country. Therefore we have introduced, where it is needed, a phrase in parentheses designating the country or empire (in italic type) most familiarly associated with the ruler in question:

Charles I (of England).

This name, used as a secondary element in alphabetical order just as the prename is in common directory style, keeps the rulers of one country together and makes possible chronological order within each such group:

Charles I (of England).
Charles II (of England).
Charles I (of France).
. . .
Charles X (of France).
Charles I (of the Holy Roman Empire).

The numeral is regarded only as a plus element, in that name-plus-numeral (in the absence of country-designation) follows name alone:

Charles.
Charles (of Anjou).
Charles (of England), Prince.
Charles I.
Charles I (of England).

(Since the order of numerals parallels chronological order, they need not be considered as affecting sequence in themselves.)

Variant Names

All variant forms are given that have considerable usage, either in current reading matter or in historical sources. These are divisible generally into other spellings and other names. Where another spelling is virtually interchangeable with the one preferred it is presented in this style:

Manicheans or Manichaeans.

Most other spellings and other names now (or until recently) current are entered, however, in brackets after the main entry, preceded by the word "also":

Mahanadi. [Also, Mahanuddy.]
Magyars. [Also, Hungarians.]

There are other names of various special kinds, chief of which are the following (note that all are labeled as to kind):

1. Former names, whether:

(a) recent:

Malaya, Federation of. [Former name, Union of Malaya.]

(b) or ancient:

Málaga. [Ancient name, Malaca.]

(c) original names of persons or places whose names have been changed:

Mackenzie, Alexander Slidell. [Original name, Alexander Slidell.]
Mansfield, Katherine. [Maiden name, Beauchamp. . . .]

(d) or of persons better known by their titles:

Marlborough, 1st Duke of. [Title of John Churchill.]

(e) or of persons or places whose names are now commonly shortened:

Malraux, André. [Full name, Georges André Malraux.]

(Full names are also indicated by parentheses in the main entry where alphabetical order is not affected, thus: Markham, Edwin (Charles).)

2. Names current in modern languages other than that of the entry, including:

(a) Native forms where the English or Anglicized form has been used as main entry:

Magellan, Strait of. [Spanish, Estrecho de Magallanes.]

(b) Names in the languages of adjoining countries or countries of which a place has been part or with which a person was associated:

Mariánské Lázně. [German, Marienbad.]

(c) Names in other languages official or widely used in the same country, as are French, German, Italian, and Romansh in Switzerland, French and Flemish in Belgium, English and Irish in Ireland, and English and French in parts of Canada:

Matterhorn. [French, Mont Cervin; Italian, Monte Cervino.]

(d) Titles in other languages, if they have current or contemporary usage, of operas, books, and the like:

Nozze di Figaro, Le. [English title, The Marriage of Figaro.]

3. Additional names, assumed or conferred, as:

(a) Pseudonyms:

Marston, John. [Pseudonym, W. Kinsayder.]

(b) Nicknames or epithets:

Magnus I (of Denmark and Norway). [Called Magnus the Good.]

(c) Titles:

Mancini, Hortense. [Title, Duchesse de Mazarin.]

Cross References

The user of this work will find that a great deal of space has been given to cross references. This has been done in recognition of the number of names by which a person or place may be known (or have been known), and of the great variety of forms or spellings under which a name may be encountered by a reader whose range includes old works as well as new or the publications of regions and countries other than his own.

A suggestion of the kinds of variants included has been given in the section on Form of Entry. All of these are cross-referred if there is a reasonable possibility of their being looked up. Exceptions are: (1) spellings so close to that of the main entry that there is no likelihood of the desired article being overlooked (as Bilolj for Bitola), and (2) names or forms given as useful or interesting information but unlikely to be found in most reading (as Bermingham, the Middle English form of Birmingham).

Cross references are pronounced, like main entries, unless they are proper names derived from common words (such as White Mountain). Noncross-referred forms under category (1) of the preceding paragraph are pronounced unless pronunciation is identical with that of the preferred spelling or easily ascertainable from it. Most "information" variants are not pronounced.

In addition to cross references for variant forms the reader will find placement cross references, especially for:

(1) Middle names which may be confused with surnames:

Acuña de Figueroa, Francisco. See Figueroa, Francisco Acuña de.

(2) Multiple surnames:

Alexis, Pierre Nord. See Nord Alexis, Pierre.

(3) Surnames unconventionally used:

Brooke-Popham, Sir Henry Robert Moore. See Popham, Sir Henry Robert Moore Brooke-.

(4) "Switches," i.e., entries which might reasonably be looked for under more than one element:

East Africa, British. See British East Africa.

(5) Unfamiliar geographical generic words (such names being usually entered straight, not reversed as the more familiar "Lake" or "Mount" names are):

More, Ben. See Ben More.

Generic terms, particles, and other subordinate elements in foreign languages, which may appear only in variants or be treated as secondary parts of entries, are in many cases covered by general cross references explaining their uses and how to find names containing them. Among these are the particles Abd and Al, the geographical terms Cabo, Laguna, Wadi, and many others.

Entry of Pronunciations

1. Ordinarily, only the part of a name preceding the comma is pronounced. Thus:

Smith (smith), Adam.

Prenames are pronounced in a separate list in the back of the book. However, such elements as l', d', and dell', pronounced as part of the name, are included in the pronunciation. Thus:

Abbadie (dȧ.bȧ.dē), Antoine Thomson d'.
Abbate (del.läb.bä'tā), Niccolò dell'.

2. Generic geographical terms (in English) and other unequivocally generic words used in a literal sense are not pronounced. Thus:

Andaman Islands (an'dạ.mạn).
Brother Jonathan (jon'ạ.thạn).
Good Hope, Cape of.

Otherwise, all names are pronounced. Thus:

Roan Mountain (rōn).
White (hwīt), Alma.

3. When a name occurs with identical pronunciation in two or more successive entries, it is pronounced only at the point of first entry. Thus:

Cumberland (kum'bėr.lạnd).
Cumberland, Richard.
Cumberland Gap.

When successive entries have the same spelling but different pronunciations, as in Adam (English, ad'ạm; as a German surname, ä'däm; as a French surname, ȧ.däṅ), the pronunciation is given at every point of change from one pronunciation to another, and omission of any pronunciation indicates that the name is pronounced the same as the closest preceding entry where pronunciation was given.

4. When a name which has been pronounced is repeated (without change of pronunciation) as part of a successive entry, unhyphenated, only the new part of the compound entry is pronounced. Thus:

López (lō'pes), Carlos Antonio.
López Contreras (kōn.trā'räs), Eleázar.

For hyphenated names the full pronunciation is given, except that if each part of the compound has a primary accent, the repetition of the first element may be indicated by a hyphen. Thus:

Åbenrå (ô'bẹn.rô).
Åbenrå-Sönderborg (-sėn'nėr.bôrg).

Handling of Statistics

Figures for populations, areas, elevations above sea level, and the like, have been obtained from official sources wherever possible, and elsewhere from the most reliable unofficial ones available to us. Populations are dated in all cases where official sources have been used. A general prefatory statement, to the effect that latest census figures are cited, has not been considered sufficient; if no census has been held since 1930 on a certain South Pacific island, the reader should be so informed as he reads the entry. Therefore, the great majority of our population statistics are dated, even though they must occasionally bear old dates.

Every plain date, such as "(1951)" or "(1948)," means that an official census figure for that year is given. An official estimate is indicated by the abbreviation "est." preceding the date. For example:

Aerschot. Town in C Belgium. . . . 10,589 (1947).
Afghanistan . . . . Pop. ab. 12,000,000 (est. 1946).

In cases where the unit may be expected to have a focal point (or capital) and area, as well as population, all of this information is ordinarily supplied:

Ağri. Il (province or vilayet) in E Turkey. . . . Capital, Doğubayazit; area, 5,142 sq. mi.; pop. 155,545 (1950).

In cases where the name applies to two legally different units, one of which may entirely encompass the other, an effort has been made to provide exact statistics for each:

East Hampton. Town (in New York the equivalent of township in many other states) and village in SE New York. . . . Pop. of town, 6,325 (1950); of village, 1,737 (1950).

In certain other cases, where a significant population change may have taken place in recent years, two dated figures are often given in order that this important fact may be made adequately clear to the reader:

Mexico City. City in S central Mexico. . . . 1,448,422 (1940), 2,113,451 (1950).

Consistent use is made of the abbreviation "ab." (for "about") with all statistics not confirmable in detail (for example, round numbers for populations, areas computed from the metric or some other system of measurement, or elevations of mountain peaks where two or more equally reliable surveys have produced different figures or where no exact measurement is known to have been made).

Distances between places are given only as rough guides, chiefly for the location of points on the map. There are too many variables (such as changes in the routes of connecting roads or railroads and relocation of city lines or even of the "center of town") for accurate reporting of these mileages. Therefore such figures are frankly labeled "ab." and exactness is not implied where it cannot be established.

The lengths of rivers are among the most debatable of statistics, since all change their courses more or less, many are unnavigable and not yet reached by aerial surveys, and some even have never been accurately mapped. Here also the qualification "ab." is freely used wherever the reader should be informed that figures are open to any doubt.

In the case of biographical entries, a comparable effort has been made to provide the reader with vital statistics which are both detailed and precise:

Ahlwardt, Christian Wilhelm. b. at Greifswald, Prussia, Nov. 23, 1760; d. there, April 12, 1830.

Exceptions occur in all cases where such precise information could not be adequately confirmed or was not available in the sources at our disposal:

Ahumada y Villalon, Agustín de. b. c1700; d. at Mexico City, Feb. 6, 1760.

EDITORIAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Professor W. Cabell Greet, Chairman
Department of English
Barnard College, Columbia University

Professor I. Bernard Cohen
Harvard University
(and Editor of Isis)

Professor George B. Cressey
Department of Geography
Syracuse University

Professor Ralph Linton
Institute of Human Relations
Yale University

Professor Dumas Malone
Department of History
Columbia University

Mr. Paul North Rice
Chief of the Reference Department (now retired)
New York Public Library

Professor T. V. Smith
Department of Philosophy
Syracuse University

Professor Mark Van Doren
Department of English
Columbia University

Professor Harry R. Warfel
Department of English
University of Florida

CONSULTING EDITORS, WITH THEIR SPECIAL FIELDS

Burt W. Aginsky
Chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology
City College of New York
WESTERN AND CENTRAL EUROPEAN ETHNOLOGY

Edward D. Andrews
Dean of Students and Head of the Department of History
Scarborough School
Author: The Community Industries of the Shakers
SHAKER HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

Martin S. Allwood
Director of the Institute of Social Research
Mullsjo, Sweden
MODERN SWEDISH LITERATURE

Ralph C. Altman
INDONESIAN ARCHAEOLOGY

John C. Archer
Hoober Professor of Comparative Religion (1932–50)
Yale University
POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF MODERN INDIA, PAKISTAN, AND AFGHANISTAN

C. Rankin Barnes
Secretary of the General Convention and of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church
Author: The General Convention: Offices and Officers, 1785–1950
EPISCOPAL HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

William R. Bascom
Associate Professor, Department of Anthropology
Northwestern University
Author: The Sociological Role of the Yoruba Cult Group
AFRICAN ETHNOLOGY

Robert H. Bass
Instructor in History (1949–51)
Mount Holyoke College
MODERN CZECHOSLOVAKIAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Cyril E. Black
Associate Professor, Department of History
Princeton University
Author: Establishment of Constitutional Government in Bulgaria
POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF THE BALKANS IN MODERN TIMES

H. Boeschenstein
Professor of German
University of Toronto
MODERN SWISS LITERATURE

Carl B. Boyer
Professor of Mathematics
Brooklyn College
Author: The Concepts of the Calculus
MODERN MATHEMATICS AND MATHEMATICIANS

Edwin G. Burrows
Professor of Anthropology
University of Connecticut
Author: Western Polynesia; Hawaiian Americans
ETHNOLOGY OF OCEANIA

Werner J. Cahnman
EUROPEAN GEOGRAPHY

Shepard B. Clough
Professor of European History
Columbia University
Author: France, 1789–1939, A Study in National Economics; The Rise and Fall of Civilization
MODERN FRENCH POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

A. P. Coleman
President of Alliance College
POLISH LITERATURE

Carleton S. Coon
Professor of Ethnology and Curator of the University Ethnology Museum
University of Pennsylvania
Author: Tribes of the Rif; The Riffian; Measuring Ethiopia; Southern Arabia: A Problem for the Future; Cave Explorations in Northern Iran
NORTH AFRICAN AND NEAR EASTERN ETHNOLOGY

George B. Cressey (See Editorial Advisory Committee)
Maxwell Professor of Geography
Syracuse University
Author: China's Geographic Foundations; Asia's Lands and Peoples; The Basis of Soviet Strength
RUSSIAN AND ASIATIC GEOGRAPHY

Taraknath Das
Lecturer in the Department of History
Columbia University;
Adjunct Professor of Public Affairs
New York University
Author: India in World Politics; Sovereign Rights of Indian Princes; The War Comes to India; Status of Hyderabad Before and After the British Rule in India
MODERN INDIAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

John DeFrancis
Assistant Professor of International Relations
Walter Hines Page School
The Johns Hopkins University
Author: Nationalism and Language Reform in China
MODERN CHINESE POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Robert E. Dickinson
Professor of Geography
Syracuse University
Author: Germany: A General and Regional Geography; The West European City
EUROPEAN GEOGRAPHY

John F. Embree (deceased)
Associate Professor of Sociology and Anthropology, and Director of Southeast Asia Studies
Yale University
Author: The Japanese Nation; Bibliography of the Peoples and Cultures of Mainland Southeast Asia (in collaboration)
JAPANESE AND INDONESIAN ETHNOLOGY

José Famadas
MODERN BRAZILIAN AND PORTUGUESE LITERATURE

Pedro Villa Fernandez
Professor of Spanish
University of Florida
MODERN SPANISH LITERATURE

Josef Frejlich
MODERN POLISH POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Wilbur M. Frohock
Professor of French
Wesleyan University
Author: André Malraux and the Tragic Imagination
MODERN FRENCH LITERATURE

Iago Galdston
Executive Secretary of the Medical Information Bureau of The New York Academy of Medicine and Lecturer at the New York Medical College, Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospitals
MEDICAL HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

John W. Gassner
Associate Professor of English
Queens College

Consulting Editors, with Their Special Fields

Author: Masters of the Drama; Producing the Play; A Treasury of the Theatre; Our Heritage of World Literature

Senior Contributing Editor, Theatre Arts Magazine

MODERN EUROPEAN THEATER

William J. Gibbons

Associate Editor of America (1945–48)

ROMAN CATHOLIC HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

Alexander Gode-von Aesch

Lecturer in Germanics and Linguistics
Barnard College, Columbia University

Author: National Science in German Romanticism

GERMAN LITERATURE

Eugene Golomshtok

RUSSIAN AND SIBERIAN ARCHAEOLOGY

C. Hartley Grattan

Carnegie Corporation Fellow in Australia (1937–38)

Author: Introducing Australia

POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND IN MODERN TIMES

André von Gronicka

Associate Professor of Germanic Languages and Literatures
Columbia University

MODERN AUSTRIAN LITERATURE

Robert W. Habenstein

MODERN SOCIOLOGY

Robert S. Harper

Assistant Professor of Psychology
Knox College

PSYCHOLOGY

Einar Haugen

Thompson Professor of Scandinavian Languages
University of Wisconsin

Author: The Norwegian Language in America

MODERN DANISH, NORWEGIAN, AND ICELANDIC LITERATURE

Rufus S. Hendon

Director of the Indonesia Project
Center for International Studies
Massachusetts Institute of Technology

JAPANESE AND INDONESIAN ETHNOLOGY

E. H. Hespelt

Professor Emeritus of Spanish
New York University

Chief Editor: An Outline History of Spanish American Literature; An Anthology of Spanish American Literature

LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE

Hajo Holborn

Randolph W. Townsend Professor of History
Yale University

Author: The Political Collapse of Europe

MODERN INTERNATIONAL HISTORY

Fred W. Householder, Jr.

Associate Professor of Classics
Indiana University

MODERN GREEK POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Arthur W. Hummel

Chief of the Division of Orientalia
Library of Congress

Editor: Eminent Chinese of the Ch'ing Period

CHINESE ETHNOLOGY

Benjamin Hunningher

Queen Wilhelmina Professor of the History, Literature, and Language of The Netherlands
Columbia University

MODERN DUTCH, FLEMISH, AND SOUTH AFRICAN LITERATURE

Bernard Jaffe

Chairman of the Physical Science Department
James Madison High School, Brooklyn, New York

Author: Crucibles, the Story of Chemistry; New World of Chemistry; Chemical Calculations; New World of Science

CHEMISTRY

Preston E. James

Professor of Geography (Chairman of Department)
Syracuse University;
United States Member, Commission on Geography of the Pan American Institute of Geography and History

Author: An Outline of Geography; Latin America; A Geography of Man

LATIN AMERICAN GEOGRAPHY

Henry M. Kendall

Professor of Geography (Chairman of Department)
Miami University

NORTH AMERICAN GEOGRAPHY

Hibberd V. B. Kline, Jr.

Associate Professor of Geography
Syracuse University;
Consultant to the Dependent Areas Branch of the Mutual Security Agency

AFRICAN GEOGRAPHY

Bertram S. Kraus

Professor, Department of Anthropology
University of Arizona

Editor: The Prehistory of Japan, by G. Groot

JAPANESE ARCHAEOLOGY

Ursula Lamb

Barnard College, Columbia University

MODERN SPANISH POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Bruno Lasker

Consultant on Southeast Asia, Social Affairs Department, United Nations

Author: Standards and Planes of Living in the Far East; New Forces in Asia; Asia on the Move; Peoples of Southeast Asia

POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF INDONESIA AND SOUTHEAST ASIA

John Lotz

Associate Professor of General and Comparative Linguistics
Columbia University

MODERN HUNGARIAN LITERATURE

D. G. Mandelbaum

Professor of Anthropology
University of California

INDIAN ETHNOLOGY

M. F. Ashley Montagu

Professor of Anthropology (Chairman of Department)
Rutgers University

Editor: Atlas of Human Anatomy

ANATOMY

Dana Gardner Munro

Professor of Latin American History and Affairs;
Director of the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs
Princeton University

Author: Five Republics of Central America; The U. S. and the Caribbean Area; Latin American Republics: A History

MODERN LATIN AMERICAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Ants Oras

Former Professor of English Language and Literature
University of Tartu (Estonia);
Professor of English
University of Florida

MODERN LATVIAN, LITHUANIAN, AND ESTONIAN LITERATURE

John A. Pope

Assistant Director of the Freer Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

CHINESE ARCHAEOLOGY

Hugh W. Puckett

Professor of German Literature
Barnard College, Columbia University

GERMAN LITERATURE

Irving Rouse

Associate Professor of Anthropology and Associate Curator of the Peabody Museum of Natural History
Yale University

NORTH AMERICAN ARCHAEOLOGY

Thomas A. Sebeok

Assistant Professor of Linguistics
Indiana University

LINGUISTICS

Consulting Editors, with Their Special Fields

Demitri Shimkin

Research Associate, Russian Research Center;
Assistant Curator of Siberian Ethnology of the Peabody Museum
Harvard University

RUSSIAN AND SIBERIAN ETHNOLOGY

George N. Shuster

President of Hunter College
Author: The Germans; Strong Man Rules; Like a Mighty Army; Germany: A Short History

MODERN GERMAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

David B. Stout

Associate Professor of Anthropology University of Iowa

NORTH AMERICAN AND LATIN AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY

John W. Streeter

Assistant Director of the Fels Planetarium
The Franklin Institute, Philadelphia
Author: Understanding the Stars

ASTRONOMY

Theo Suranyi-Unger

Professor of Economics
Syracuse University

MODERN HUNGARIAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

R. Stanley Thomson

Head of the Department of History and Government
Russell Sage College

POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF BELGIUM, LUXEMBOURG, AND THE NETHERLANDS SINCE 1900

John H. Wuorinen

Professor of History
Columbia University

Author: Nationalism in Modern Finland; Finland and World War II

MODERN SCANDINAVIAN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Avrahm Yarmolinsky

Chief of the Slavonic Division
New York Public Library

MODERN RUSSIAN LITERATURE

J. H. Young

Assistant Professor, Department of Classics
The Johns Hopkins University

MODERN GREEK LITERATURE

SPECIAL CONSULTANTS, WITH THE SUBJECTS OF THEIR ASSISTANCE

Nabia Abbott

Professor of Islamic Studies
University of Chicago

Author: Aishah, The Beloved of Mohammed

MOHAMMED

Martin Ray Adams

Professor of English (Chairman of Department)
Franklin and Marshall College

Author: Political Radicalism in England, 1789–1799; Studies in the Literary Backgrounds of Political Radicalism in England

WILLIAM GODWIN

Frederick Lewis Allen

Editor in Chief of Harper's Magazine

Author: The Great Pierpont Morgan

JOHN PIERPONT MORGAN

Gay Wilson Allen

Professor of English
New York University

Author: Walt Whitman Handbook; American Prosody; Masters of American Literature (in collaboration)

WALT WHITMAN

Fulton H. Anderson

Professor of Philosophy (Head of Department)
University of Toronto

Author: The Philosophy of Francis Bacon

FRANCIS BACON

A. Joseph Armstrong

Professor of English (Head of Department)
Baylor University

Editor: Letters of Robert Browning to Isa Blagdon; Browning the World Over; Browning's Testament of Hope

ROBERT BROWNING

Newton Arvin

Professor of English
Smith College

Author: Herman Melville

HERMAN MELVILLE

Brooks Atkinson

Drama Critic of the New York Times

Author: Henry Thoreau, the Cosmic Yankee

Editor: Walden and Other Writings of Henry David Thoreau

HENRY DAVID THOREAU

John Bakeless

Author: Daniel Boone, Master of the Wilderness; Fighting Frontiersman; Eyes of Discovery

DANIEL BOONE

Robert Cecil Bald

Professor of English
University of Chicago

Author: Donne's Influence in English Literature

JOHN DONNE

William Thomas Bandy

Professor of French
University of Wisconsin

Author: Baudelaire Judged by His Contemporaries; A Word Index of Baudelaire's Poems

CHARLES PIERRE BAUDELAIRE

Theodore Howard Banks

Professor of English
Wesleyan University

Author: Milton's Imagery

JOHN MILTON

Eugene Campbell Barker

Professor of American History
University of Texas

Author: Life of Stephen F. Austin; Mexico and Texas, 1821–1835

Editor: The Austin Papers, 1765–1836

STEPHEN F. AUSTIN

Jacques Barzun

Professor of History
Columbia University

Author: Berlioz and the Romantic Century

HECTER BERLIOZ

Paull Franklin Baum

Professor of English
Duke University

Editor: Rossetti's The House of Life: Dante Gabriel Rossetti—An Analytical List of Manuscripts in the Duke University Library, with Hitherto Unpublished Verse and Prose; Rossetti's Letters to Fanny Cornforth

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI

Adelaide Brooke Baylis

JOAN OF ARC

John Yokum Beaty

Author: Luther Burbank, Plant Magician

Editor: Luther Burbank's Autobiography

LUTHER BURBANK

Arthur Eugene Bestor, Jr.

Professor of History
University of Illinois

Author: Backwoods Utopias: A History of Communitarian Socialism in America; Education and Reform at New Harmony: Correspondence of William Maclure and Marie Duclos Fretageot, 1820–1833

ROBERT OWEN

Bernard Bloch

Professor of Linguistics and Chairman of the Department of Indic and Far Eastern Languages and Literatures
Yale University

LEONARD BLOOMFIELD

Marguerite Beck Block

Associate in Religion, Department of Philosophy and Curator of the Bush Collection in Religion and Culture
Columbia University

Author: The New Church in the New World: A Study of Swedenborgianism in America

Managing Editor: Review of Religion, Columbia University

EMANUEL SWEDENBORG

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Richmond Pugh Bond

Professor of English
University of North Carolina

JOSEPH ADDISON

Catherine Drinker Bowen

Author: John Adams and the American Revolution

JOHN ADAMS (in collaboration with John H. Powell)

Frederick Edward Brasch

Consultant in Bibliography
Stanford University;
Consultant in History of Science (1944–48)
Library of Congress

Editor: Sir Isaac Newton 1727–1927 (memorial volume); Portfolio of Newton's Portraits and Statues

SIR ISAAC NEWTON

Crane Brinton

Professor of History (Chairman of Department)
Harvard University

Author: The Lives of Talleyrand

TALLEYRAND

S. H. Brockunier

Professor of History
Wesleyan University

Author: The Irrepressible Democrat: Roger Williams

ROGER WILLIAMS

Robert B. Brown

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Geoffrey Bruun

Visiting Professor of History
Cornell University

Author: Clemenceau; Saint-Just, Apostle of the Terror

CLEMENCEAU, SAINT-JUST

Storm Bull

Professor of Music and Head of the Division of Piano of the College of Music
University of Colorado

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

Kenneth Walter Cameron

Assistant Professor of English
Trinity College

Author: Emerson the Essayist; Ralph Waldo Emerson's Reading

RALPH WALDO EMERSON

Carl Carmer

LATTER-DAY SAINTS

Edward Hallett Carr

MICHAEL BAKUNIN

Thomas Caldecot Chubb

Author: Aretino: Scourge of Princes

PIETRO ARETINO

Paul S. Clarkson

Author: A Bibliography of William Sydney Porter (O. Henry)

RUFUS CHOATE,
THOMAS DE QUINCEY,
LUTHER MARTIN,
WILLIAM SYDNEY PORTER (O. HENRY)

Cyril Clemens

Editor: Mark Twain Quarterly

SAMUEL LANGHORNE CLEMENS

Reginald L. Cook

Professor of American Literature and Director of the Bread Loaf School of English Middlebury College

ROBERT FROST

Edward Samuel Corwin

McCormick Professor (Emeritus) of Jurisprudence
Princeton University;
Lecturer on Constitutional Law and History
The New School

Author: The Doctrine of Judicial Review; John Marshall and the Constitution; Court over Constitution

JOHN MARSHALL

Richard N. Current

Associate Professor of History
Mills College

Author: Old Thad Stevens

PHILETUS SAWYER,
CHRISTOPHER LATHAM SHOLES,
THADDEUS STEVENS

David Daiches

Formerly Professor of English
Cornell University;
University Lecturer in English
Cambridge University, England

Author: The Place of Meaning in Poetry; New Literary Values: Studies in Modern Literature; Poems in English 1930–1940; Poetry and the Modern World

T. S. ELIOT

Dominic de la Salandra

VASCO NUÑEZ DE BALBOA

René Jules Dubos

Author: Louis Pasteur—Free Lance of Science

Editor: Journal of Experimental Medicine

LOUIS PASTEUR

Clement Eaton

Professor of History
University of Kentucky

Author: Freedom of Thought in the Old South; A History of the Old South

ALEXANDER HAMILTON STEPHENS

Alfred Einstein (deceased)

Professor of Music
Smith College

Author: Mozart, His Character, His Work

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART

David Ewen

Author: Haydn: A Good Life

JOSEPH HAYDN

DeLancey Ferguson

Chairman of the English Department
Brooklyn College

RUDYARD KIPLING

Louis Filler

Associate Professor of American Civilization and Literature
Antioch College

Author: Crusaders for American Liberalism

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON

Paul Abraham Freund

Charles Stebbins Fairchild Professor of Law
Harvard Law School

LOUIS DEMBITZ BRANDEIS

Claude Moore Fuess

Headmaster (1933–47)
Phillips Andover Academy

Author: Calvin Coolidge, The Man from Vermont

CALVIN COOLIDGE

Leo Gershoy

Professor of History
New York University

NAPOLEON I

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Lawrence Henry Gipson

Research Professor of History
Lehigh University

Author: The Great War for the Empire; The American Revolution as an Aftermath of the Great War for the Empire and Other Essays in American Colonial History; The British Empire in the Eighteenth Century

THE FRENCH AND INDIAN WARS

Louis Gottschalk

Professor of History
University of Chicago

Author: Lafayette Comes to America; Lafayette Joins the American Army; Lady-in-Waiting—The Romance of Lafayette and Aglaé de Hunolstein; Lafayette and the Close of the American Revolution; The Letters of Lafayette to Washington; Lafayette between the American and the French Revolution (1783–1789)

MARQUIS DE LAFAYETTE

Garland Greever

Professor Emeritus of English
University of Southern California;
Visiting Professor of English
George Pepperdine College

Author: Facts and Backgrounds of Literature, English and American (in collaboration)

Editor: Tiger-Lilies and Southern Prose

SIDNEY LANIER

Elizabeth Hazelton Haight

Professor Emeritus of Latin
Vassar College

Author: Horace and His Art of Enjoyment

HORACE

Lewis Francis Haines

Professor of Humanities and Director of the University Press
University of Florida

CHARLES READE

Abram L. Harris

Professor of Economics and Professor of the Social Sciences in the Division of the Social Sciences
University of Chicago

KARL MARX

Seale Harris

Author: Banting's Miracle

SIR FREDERICK BANTING

Lodwick Hartley

Professor of English (Head of Department)
North Carolina State College

Author: This Is Lorence: A Narrative of the Reverend Laurence Sterne

LAURENCE STERNE

Paul Harold Heisey

Professor of Bible and Religious Education
Newberry College

Author: Three Essays on Luther

MARTIN LUTHER

Robert Selph Henry

Author: The Story of the Confederacy; "First With the Most" Forrest

NATHAN BEDFORD FORREST,
ROBERT E. LEE

William Best Hesseltine

Professor of History
University of Wisconsin

Author: Ulysses S. Grant

ULYSSES S. GRANT

Eldon Cleon Hill

Associate Professor of English
Miami University

Author: A Biographical Study of Hamlin Garland 1860–1895

HAMLIN GARLAND

David Hinshaw

Author: Herbert Hoover, American Quaker

HERBERT HOOVER

Fletcher Hodges, Jr.

Curator of the Foster Hall Collection
University of Pittsburgh

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER

Stanley F. Horn

Author: The Army of Tennessee

THOMAS JONATHAN JACKSON

Mark DeWolfe Howe

Professor of Law
Harvard University

Editor: Holmes Pollock Letters (Correspondence of Mr. Justice Holmes and Sir Frederick Pollock, 1874–1932); Touched with Fire (Civil War Letters of O. W. Holmes Jr.); Holmes Laski Letters (Correspondence of Mr. Justice Holmes and Harold J. Laski, 1916–1935)

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Allan F. Hubbell

Assistant Professor of English
University of Denver

Editor: American Speech

ENGLISH

William Thomas Hutchinson

Professor of American History and Chairman of the Department of History
University of Chicago

Author: Cyrus Hall McCormick: Seed-Time (1809–1856); Cyrus Hall McCormick: Harvest (1856–1884)

CYRUS HALL MC CORMICK

Clyde Kenneth Hyder

Professor of English
University of Kansas

Author: Swinburne's Literary Career and Fame

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE

Marquis James

Author: Andrew Jackson, The Border Captain; Andrew Jackson: Portrait of a President

ANDREW JACKSON

Frederick Lafayette Jones

Professor of English
University of Pennsylvania

Author: An Examination of the Shelley Legend (in collaboration)

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

Henry Donaldson Jordan

Professor of English History
Clark University

RICHARD COBDEN

Harnett Thomas Kane

Author: Louisiana Hayride: The American Rehearsal for Dictatorship

HUEY LONG

Sheila Kaye-Smith

Author: Speaking of Jane Austen (in collaboration with G. B. Stern); More about Jane Austen (in collaboration with G. B. Stern)

JANE AUSTEN

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Abraham C. Keller
Associate Professor of French
University of Washington
FRANÇOIS RABELAIS

Eric Philbrook Kelly
Professor of Journalism
Dartmouth College
Author: Helena Modjeska
HELENA MODJESKA

Fred C. Kelly
Author: George Ade—Warmhearted Satirist
Editor: The Permanent Ade
GEORGE ADE

Geoffrey Keynes
Consulting Surgeon
St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London
Author: Bibliography of William Harvey
WILLIAM HARVEY

Pearl Kibre
Associate Professor of History
Hunter College
ALBERTUS MAGNUS

Willard Leroy King
Author: Melville Weston Fuller
MELVILLE WESTON FULLER

Lewis Mansfield Knapp
Professor of English (Chairman of Department)
Colorado College
Author: Tobias Smollett, Doctor of Men and Manners
TOBIAS SMOLLETT

Bernhard Knollenberg
Associate Fellow
Saybrook College
Yale University
Author: Washington and the Revolution: A Re-Appraisal
GEORGE WASHINGTON

Edwin B. Knowles
Professor of English
Pratt Institute
MIGUEL DE CERVANTES

Dayton Kohler
Associate Professor of English
Virginia Polytechnic Institute
WILLA CATHER

Louis Knott Koontz
ROBERT DINWIDDIE

Laurence J. Lafleur
Head of the Department of Philosophy
University of Akron
Author: Bentham's Principles of Morals and Legislation
JEREMY BENTHAM

Wheaton Joshua Lane
Former Instructor in History
Princeton University
Author: Commodore Vanderbilt
CORNELIUS VANDERBILT

Lewis Leary
Professor of English
Columbia University
Author: That Rascal Freneau: A Study in Literary Failure; The Last Poems of Philip Freneau
PHILIP FRENEAU

Paul F. Leedy
Professor of English
Bowling Green State University
ALEXANDER POPE

Wilmarth Sheldon Lewis
Editor: A Selection of the Letters of Horace Walpole; Horace Walpole's Fugitive Verses; Yale Edition of Horace Walpole's Correspondence, 16 Volumes, to be completed 1965 in 50 Volumes
HORACE WALPOLE

David Alexander Lockmiller
President of the University of Chattanooga
Author: Sir William Blackstone
SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE

Rupert Clendon Lodge
Visiting Professor
Long Island University
Author: Plato's Theory of Ethics; Plato's Theory of Education; Plato's Theory of Art
PLATO

Louis Eleazer Lord
Professor Emeritus of Classics
Oberlin College
Author: Aristophanes
ARISTOPHANES

Robert Phillips Ludlum
President of Blackburn College
JOSHUA REED GIDDINGS

Gerstle Mack
Author: Paul Cézanne; La Vie de Paul Cézanne (translation by Nancy Bouwens)
PAUL CÉZANNE

Malcolm Lorimer MacLeod
Associate Professor of English
University of Florida
Author: A Concordance to the Poems of Robert Herrick; An Analysis of Herrick's Vocabulary
ROBERT HERRICK

Kemp Malone
Donovan Professor of English Literature
The Johns Hopkins University
Author: The Thorkelin Transcripts of Beowulf
ALFRED (THE GREAT),
BEOWULF

Watt Pearson Marchman
Director of the Hayes Memorial Library
RUTHERFORD B. HAYES

Helen Edith Marshall
Professor of Social Science
Illinois State Normal University Author: Dorothea Dix: Forgotten Samaritan
DOROTHEA LYNDE DIX

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

John Sedberry Marshall
Professor of Philosophy
University of the South
ARISTOTLE

Bernard Mayo
Professor of American History
University of Virginia
Author: Henry Clay, Spokesman of the New West
HENRY CLAY

Walter Flavius McCaleb
Fellow in History
University of Chicago
Author: The Aaron Burr Conspiracy
AARON BURR

George Leslie McKay
Author: A Bibliography of Robert Bridges
ROBERT BRIDGES

Silas Bent McKinley Author: Old Rough and Ready
ZACHARY TAYLOR

James G. McManaway
Consultant in Literature and Bibliography
The Folger Shakespeare Library
Editor: Shakespeare Quarterly
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

John Robert Moore
Professor of English and Library Consultant in Augustan Literature
Indiana University
Author: Daniel Defoe and Modern Economic Theory; Defoe in the Pillory and Other Studies; Defoe's Sources for "Robert Drury's Journal"
Editor: Defoe's Essay on the Regulation of the Press
DANIEL DEFOE

Glenn R. Morrow
Adam Seybert Professor of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy and Dean of the College
University of Pennsylvania
Author: The Ethical and Economic Theories of Adam Smith
ADAM SMITH

George Henry Nettleton
Lampson Professor (Emeritus) of English
Yale University
Author: English Drama of the Restoration and Eighteenth Century; The Major Dramas of Richard Brinsley Sheridan; British Dramatists from Dryden to Sheridan
RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN

Roy Franklin Nichols
Professor of History and Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences
University of Pennsylvania
Author: Franklin Pierce
FRANKLIN PIERCE

Russell Blaine Nye
Professor of English (Head of Department) and Director of Language and Literature
Michigan State College
Author: George Bancroft: Brahmin Rebel; Fettered Freedom: Civil Liberties and Slavery
GEORGE BANCROFT

Whitney J. Oates
Andrew Fleming West Professor of Classics (Chairman of Department) and Chairman of the Special Program in the Humanities
Princeton University
Author: The Stoic and Epicurean Philosophers
EPICURUS

Charles W. Olsen
Author: John Brown
JOHN BROWN

Howard Rollin Patch
Professor of English
Smith College
Author: The Tradition of Boethius
ANICIUS BOETHIUS

Rembert W. Patrick
Professor of American History and Social Sciences and Chairman of the Department of History
University of Florida
Author: Jefferson Davis and His Cabinet
JEFFERSON DAVIS

Donald Culross Peattie
Author: Singing in the Wilderness: A Salute to John James Audubon; Forward the Nation
JOHN JAMES AUDUBON,
SACAJAWEA

Kenneth Wiggins Porter
Author: John Jacob Astor, Businessman
ABRAHAM,
JOHN JACOB ASTOR,
COACOOCHEE,
SAMUEL GORTON,
OSCEOLA

Levi Arnold Post
Professor of Greek
Haverford College
Editor of the Loeb Classical Library
Translator: Menander—Three Plays
MENANDER

Frederick A. Pottle
Sterling Professor of English
Yale University
Author: The Literary Career of James Boswell
Editor: Boswell's London Journal, 1762–1763; Boswell in Holland, 1763–1764
JAMES BOSWELL

John H. Powell
Research Librarian
Free Library of Philadelphia
JOHN ADAMS (in collaboration with Catherine Drinker Bowen)

Lawrence Clark Powell
Director of the William Andrews Clark Memorial Library
University of California
Author: An Introduction to Robinson Jeffers; Robinson Jeffers, the Man and His Work
ROBINSON JEFFERS

Julius William Pratt
Professor of American History and Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences University of Buffalo
JAMES MONROE

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Robert A. Pratt
Professor of English
University of North Carolina
Author: Sources and Analogues of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (in collaboration)
GEOFFREY CHAUCER

Benjamin Quarles
Dean of Instruction
Dillard University
Author: Frederick Douglass
Assistant Editor: The Journal of Negro History
FREDERICK DOUGLASS

J. G. Randall (deceased)
Professor of History
University of Illinois
Author: The Civil War and Reconstruction; Lincoln the President; Lincoln and the South; Lincoln the Liberal Statesman
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Fannie Elizabeth Ratchford
Director of Rare Book Collections
University of Texas
Author: The Brontës' Web of Childhood; The Legends of Angria
BRONTË FAMILY

Gordon Norton Ray
Professor of English (Head of Department)
University of Illinois
Author: The Letters and Private Papers of William Makepeace Thackeray; The Buried Life: a study of the relation between Thackeray's fiction and his personal history
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY

Thomas Middleton Raysor
Professor of English
University of Nebraska
Editor: Coleridge's Shakespearean Criticism; Coleridge's Miscellaneous Criticism
SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE

Richard Ashley Rice
Professor of English Literature
Smith College
Author: Studies of Wordsworth and Byron; The Best of Byron
GEORGE GORDON NOEL BYRON

Lawrence Melville Riddle
Professor Emeritus of French
University of Southern California
Author: Sources of Pierre Corneille's Tragedies from Médée to Pertharite
Editor: Corneille's Cinna
PIERRE CORNEILLE,
JEAN ROTROU

Frank Humphrey Ristine
Professor Emeritus of English Literature
Hamilton College
JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER

William J. Roach
Professor of Romance Languages
University of Pennsylvania
Author: The Continuations of the Perceval of Chrétien de Troyes
CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES

Roy Marvin Robbins
Professor of History and Political Science (Head of Department)
Butler University
Author: Our Landed Heritage: A History of the Public Domain, 1776–1936
HORACE GREELEY

Charles Alexander Robinson, Jr.
Professor of Classics
Brown University
Author: The Ephemerides of Alexander's Expedition; Alexander the Great ALEXANDER THE GREAT

George Washington Robinson
Author: Errata in Cotton Mather's Magnalia
COTTON MATHER

Charles Alfred Rochedieu
Associate Professor of French
Vanderbilt University
JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU

Frederick William Roe
Professor Emeritus of English
University of Wisconsin
Author: Carlyle as a Critic of Literature; Social Philosophy of Carlyle and Ruskin
Editor: Ruskin—Selections and Essays; Carlyle—Sartor Resartus
THOMAS CARLYLE,
JOHN RUSKIN

Woodburn O. Ross
Professor of English
Wayne University
W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM

Kenneth R. Rossman
Professor of History (Chairman of Department)
Doane College
Author: Chester A. Arthur and the Civil Service Reform; Thomas Mifflin and the Politics of the American Revolution
CHESTER A. ARTHUR,
THOMAS MIFFLIN

William Hobart Royce
Founder and President of The Balzac Society of America
Author: A Balzac Bibliography
HONORÉ DE BALZAC (in collaboration with N. E. Saxe)

Una Bernard Sait
Former Professor of Philosophy
Scripps College
Author: Implications of Bergson's Philosophy
HENRI LOUIS BERGSON

N. E. Saxe
Chairman of the Division of Humanities and Head of the Department of Modern Languages
Washburn University
HONORÉ DE BALZAC (in collaboration with William Hobart Royce)

J. Salwyn Schapiro
Professor Emeritus of History
The City College of New York
Author: Condorcet and the Rise of Liberalism
CONDORCET

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Ferdinand Schevill
Former Professor of Modern History
University of Chicago
Author: History of Florence
MACHIAVELLI

Paul Arthur Schilpp
Professor of Philosophy
Northwestern University
ALBERT EINSTEIN

Martha Hale Shackford
Professor Emeritus of English Literature
Wellesley College
Author: E. B. Browning, R. H. Horne —Two Studies; The Brownings and Leighton
Editor: Letters from Elizabeth Barrett to B. R. Haydon
ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

Robert Shafer
Professor of Literature
University of Cincinnati
GEORGE GISSING

Samuel Shellabarger
CHEVALIER DE BAYARD

Clifford Kenyon Shipton Custodian of Archives
Harvard University
Author: Isaiah Thomas
ISAIAH THOMAS

Roger Vernon Shumate
Professor of Political Science
University of Nebraska
HENRY ADAMS

Charles Southward Singleton
Professor of Romance Languages
Harvard University
BOCCACCIO

St. George L. Sioussat
Professor of American History
University of Pennsylvania (1920–38); Honorary Consultant in American Historiography
Library of Congress
ANDREW JOHNSON

Emily Ellsworth Ford Skeel
Author: Mason Locke Weems, His Work and Ways (in collaboration)
MASON LOCKE WEEMS

Donald Smalley
Professor of English
Indiana University
Editor: Domestic Manners of the Americans . . . with a History of Mrs. Trollope's Adventures in America
FRANCES TROLLOPE

Charles G. Smith
Professor of English
Baylor University
Author: Spenser's Theory of Friendship
EDMUND SPENSER

Herman Dunlap Smith
President of the Chicago Historical Society
Author: War Journals of Henry Dearborn, 1773–1783, with Biographical Essay
HENRY DEARBORN

Theodore Clarke Smith
Professor Emeritus of American History
Williams College
Author: Life and Letters of James Abram Garfield
JAMES ABRAM GARFIELD

Harold Edwin Blame Speight
Former Professor of Biography
Dartmouth College
Author: Life and Writings of John Bunyan
Editor: Creative Lives
JOHN BUNYAN

Benjamin Townley Spencer
Professor of English
Ohio Wesleyan University; Visiting Professor of English (1952–53)
Universities of Uppsala and Stockholm
Author: Seventeenth Century Studies (in collaboration)
Editor: The Bondman
PHILIP MASSINGER

Robert E. Spiller
Professor of English
University of Pennsylvania
Author: Fenimore Cooper, Critic of His Times
Editor: A Descriptive Bibliography of James Fenimore Cooper (in collaboration); James Fenimore Cooper, Representative Selections
JAMES FENIMORE COOPER

Matthew Spinka
Waldo Professor of Church History
Hartford Theological Seminary
Author: John Hus and the Czech Reform
JOHN AMOS COMENIUS, JOHN HUS

William Edward Bloomfield Starkweather
Assistant Professor of Art and Lecturer on Spanish Art
Hunter College
Author: Drawings and Paintings of Francisco Goya in the Collection of the Hispanic Society of America
GOYA

Herbert Willmarth Starr
Assistant Professor of English
Temple University
Author: Gray as a Literary Critic
THOMAS GRAY

Vincent Starrett
Book Columnist of the Chicago Tribune
Author: Ambrose Bierce
AMBROSE GWINETT BIERCE

Lawrence D. Steefel
Professor of History
University of Minnesota
OTTO VON BISMARCK

Jack M. Stein
Assistant Professor of German
Columbia University
RICHARD WAGNER

Kate Steinitz
Librarian of the Elmer Belt Library of Vinciana
Author: Leonardo da Vinci's Manuscripts (in collaboration)
LEONARDO DA VINCI

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Randall Stewart
Professor of English
Brown University
Author: Nathaniel Hawthorne: A Biography
NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE

George Winchester Stone, Jr.
Professor of English Literature
The George Washington University
Author: The Journal of David Garrick, 1763
DAVID GARRICK

Dirk J. Struik
Professor of Mathematics
Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Author: Yankee Science in the Making
ASA GRAY

Frank Sullivan
Professor of English
Loyola University
SIR THOMAS MORE

Carl Brent Swisher
Thomas P. Stran Professor of Political Science
The Johns Hopkins University
Author: Roger B. Taney
ROGER B. TANEY

Robert Emmett Taylor
Professor of Business Law and Accounting
University of Cincinnati
Author: The Story of Robert Emmet
ROBERT EMMET

Charles Dewey Tenney
Vice-President and Provost, and Professor of Philosophy
Southern Illinois University
GEORGE MEREDITH

Adelaide Eve Thein
Former Chairman of the English Department
Doane College
WILLIAM COWPER

Helen Lewis Thomas
JOHANN KEPLER

Samuel M. Thompson
Professor of Philosophy (Head of Department)
Monmouth College
IMMANUEL KANT

Clarence DeWitt Thorpe
Professor of English
University of Michigan
Author: The Mind of John Keats
Editor: The Complete Poems and Selected Letters of John Keats
JOHN KEATS

Lewis Paul Todd
HORACE MANN

William Troy
Lecturer in Comparative Literature
The New School
HENRY JAMES

Berthold Louis Ullman
Kenan Professor of Classics (Head of Department)
University of North Carolina
Author: The Identification of the MSS. of Catullus
CATULLUS

Carl Van Doren (deceased)
JONATHAN SWIFT

Mark Van Doren (See Editorial Advisory Committee)
JOHN DRYDEN

Albert Tangeman Volwiler
Professor of History (Chairman of Department)
Ohio University
Editor: Correspondence between Benjamin Harrison and James G. Blaine
BENJAMIN HARRISON

Ira Owen Wade
Professor of Modern Languages (Chairman of Department)
Princeton University
Author: The Clandestine Organization and Diffusion of Philosophic Ideas in France from 1700 to 1750; Voltaire and Mme. du Châtelet; Studies in Voltaire
VOLTAIRE

Edward Wagenknecht
Professor of English
Boston University
Author: The Man Charles Dickens: A Victorian Portrait; An Introduction to Dickens
CHARLES DICKENS

Eva Ingersoll Wakefield
Editor: The Letters of Robert G. Ingersoll
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

Gerald Groveland Walsh (deceased)
Professor of Medieval Cultural History
Fordham University
DANTE

Harry R. Warfel (See Editorial Advisory Committee)
Author: Noah Webster: Schoolmaster to America; Charles Brockden Brown: American Gothic Novelist
CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN,
NOAH WEBSTER

Carl J. Weber
Roberts Professor of English Literature and Curator of Rare Books
Colby College
Author: Hardy's Lost Novel; Hardy of Wessex; Hardy in America; New Light on Hardy's "Woodlanders"; Hardy and the Lady from Madison Square
THOMAS HARDY

Stanley T. Williams
Sterling Professor (Emeritus) of English
Yale University
Author: Washington Irving
WASHINGTON IRVING

Special Consultants, with the Subjects of Their Assistance

Wayne Cullen Williams

Author: The Life of William Jennings Bryan

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Barnie F. Winkelman

Author: John D. Rockefeller

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER

Ione Stuessy Wright

Associate Professor of Hispanic American History University of Miami

JOSÉ DE SAN MARTÍN

Morton Dauwen Zabel

Professor of English
University of Chicago

Editor: The Portable Joseph Conrad

JOSEPH CONRAD

Casimir Douglass Zdanowicz (deceased)

Professor of Romance Languages
University of Wisconsin

MOLIÈRE

Donald Joseph Zinn

Assistant Professor of Zoölogy
University of Rhode Island

ALEXANDER AGASSIZ,
LOUIS AGASSIZ

PRONUNCIATION EDITORS AND CONSULTANTS

W. Cabell Greet
(See Editorial Advisory Committee)

R. A. Goodwin
(Editor in Charge)

Special Assistants:

Harriet Cassell

R. A. Hall, Jr.
Professor of Linguistics
Cornell University

Special Consultants:

Fang-Kuei Li
Professor of Far Eastern and Slavic Languages and Literatures
University of Washington

Joseph K. Yamagiwa
University of Michigan

SPECIAL WRITERS, WITH THEIR FIELDS

George T. Beck
MODERN POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY OF INDIA

Bruno Blau
EUROPEAN GEOGRAPHY

Imre Cholnoky
MODERN HUNGARIAN LITERATURE

Henry W. Dearborn
BRITISH PHYSICAL AND SOCIAL GEOGRAPHY

Dora Edinger
MODERN GERMAN BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Richard N. Fried
MODERN FINE ARTS OF EUROPE AND THE UNITED STATES

Helen Hause
Lecturer in Anthropology
Northwestern University
NORTH AFRICAN AND NEAR EASTERN ETHNOLOGY

Robert E. Huke
RUSSIAN AND ASIATIC GEOGRAPHY

Lionel F. Jaffe
MODERN CHEMISTRY

Edward J. Miles
Instructor in Geography and Economics
University of Maryland
GEOGRAPHY OF THE ARCTIC AND ANTARCTIC, CANADA, AFRICA, AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, AND THE ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC

Walter M. Mosse
Instructor in Theological German
Princeton Theological Seminary
MODERN EUROPEAN BIOGRAPHY

Hoh-Cheung Mui
Social Science Analyst of the United States Department of State
MODERN JAPANESE POLITICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Jerome P. Pickard
Instructor in Geography
University of Maryland
SPECIAL PROBLEMS IN GEOGRAPHY

Curt Proskauer
Consultant to the Library of the New York Academy of Medicine; Consulting Editor of the Journal of the History of Medicine and the Allied Sciences
MEDICAL BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

Herbert H. Rowen
Assistant Professor of History
State University of Iowa
MODERN FRENCH AND SCANDINAVIAN BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY

OFFICE STAFF

Editors: Harriet Cassell, Jerome Fried, W. M. Frohock, R. A. Goodwin, William Greenleaf, Maria Leach, Frances Murlin, Herbert Spencer Robinson, Grace G. Shaw

Associate Editors: Caroline Brady, Harry Freeman, Natalie Frohock, Charles Goodrich, Leo Hamalian, Anne Heffner, Ruth Hein, Winifred M. Irwin, Celia Koron, Margaret Madden, Shaemas O'Sheel, Ethel M. Ryan, Elizabeth St. Vincent, Pamela Taggard, Katherine Theda, Frederick Tozer, Irving Weiss, Carolyn D. Werley, Phyllis Ruckgaber Winant

Editorial Assistants: W. T. Atwood, Martha H. Decrouez, Barbara Fairberg, Ramona Grayson, Herbert J. Landar, Ellen L. Nelson, N. Bryce Nelson, Mary Guion Randel, John Wasley, Roger Williams

Office Assistants: Vincenta P. Adams, Helen Areinoff, Elizabeth Ballard, Helen Barlow, Anna-Luise Bartling, Marshall Brigham, Leroy Brightman, Joan Carvon, Dannydelle W. Dandridge, Filomene Della Donne, Dorothy Alma Druschen, Pat Ferrara, Thomas Gelardi, Esther Golden, Angelina Guido, William S. Hemingway, Jane E. Herrick, Emma Jean Huff, Jean G. Leftwich, Nancy Mastro, Mary F. Noble, Catherine T. Piacentino, James W. Porter, Cynthia A. Rogers, Harriette Roseth, Agnes Seaman, Sophie Shupín, Jaime Burnet Spencer, Janet Stone, Ruth C. Vickery, Marjorie C. Waldo

ABBREVIATIONS USED GENERALLY IN THESE VOLUMES

ab.	about
A.D.	year of our Lord (anno domini)
A.M.	before noon (ante meridiem)
b.	born
B.A.	Bachelor of Arts
B.C.	before Christ
B.S.	Bachelor of Science
C	central
c	about (circa, circiter, or circum)
ch.	chapter
d.	died
E	east, eastern
E.	east longitude
ed.	edition
Eng. trans.	English translation
est.	estimated
etc.	and so forth (et cetera)
et seq.	and afterward (et sequens)
F.	French
fl.	flourished (floruit)
ft.	feet
i.e.	that is (id est)
kw.	kilowatt
M.A.	Master of Arts
M.D.	Doctor of Medicine
mi.	miles
M.S.	Master of Science
N	north, northern
N.	north latitude
NE	northeast, northeastern
NW	northwest, northwestern
Ph.D.	Doctor of Philosophy
P.M.	after noon (post meridiem)
pop.	population
S	south, southern
S.	south latitude
Sc.	Scottish
SE	southeast, southeastern
sq.	square
SW	southwest, southwestern
UN	United Nations
U.S.	United States
U.S.S.R.	Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
v.	verse
vol.	volume
vols.	volumes
W	west, western
W.	west longitude

ABBREVIATIONS FOR STATES

Ala.	Alabama
Ariz.	Arizona
Ark.	Arkansas
Calif.	California
Colo.	Colorado
Conn.	Connecticut
D.C.	District of Columbia
Del.	Delaware
Fla.	Florida
Ga.	Georgia
Ill.	Illinois
Ind.	Indiana
Kan.	Kansas
Ky.	Kentucky
La.	Louisiana
Mass.	Massachusetts
Md.	Maryland
Me.	Maine
Mich.	Michigan
Minn.	Minnesota
Miss.	Mississippi
Mo.	Missouri
Mont.	Montana
N.C.	North Carolina
N.D.	North Dakota
Neb.	Nebraska
Nev.	Nevada
N.H.	New Hampshire
N.J.	New Jersey
N.M.	New Mexico
N.Y.	New York
Okla.	Oklahoma
Ore.	Oregon
Pa.	Pennsylvania
R.I.	Rhode Island
S.C.	South Carolina
S.D.	South Dakota
Tenn.	Tennessee
Tex.	Texas
Va.	Virginia
Vt.	Vermont
Wash.	Washington
Wis.	Wisconsin
W.Va.	West Virginia
Wyo.	Wyoming

ABBREVIATIONS FOR BOOKS OF THE BIBLE

Gen.	Genesis
Ex.	Exodus
Lev.	Leviticus
Num.	Numbers
Deut.	Deuteronomy
Josh.	Joshua
1 Sam.	I. Samuel
2 Sam.	II. Samuel
1 Chron.	I. Chronicles
2 Chron.	II. Chronicles
Neh.	Nehemiah
Ps.	Psalms
Prov.	Proverbs
Eccl.	Ecclesiastes
Cant.	Canticles (Song of Solomon)
Isa.	Isaiah
Jer.	Jeremiah
Lam.	Lamentations
Ezek.	Ezekiel
Dan.	Daniel
Hos.	Hosea
Obad.	Obadiah
Hab.	Habakkuk
Zeph.	Zephaniah
Hag.	Haggai
Zech.	Zechariah
Mal.	Malachi
Mat.	Matthew
Rom.	Romans
1 Cor.	I. Corinthians
2 Cor.	II. Corinthians
Gal.	Galatians
Eph.	Ephesians
Phil.	Philippians
Col.	Colossians
1 Thes.	I. Thessalonians
2 Thes.	II. Thessalonians
1 Tim.	I. Timothy
2 Tim.	II. Timothy
Phile.	Philemon
Heb.	Hebrews
Jas.	James
1 Pet.	I. Peter
2 Pet.	II. Peter
Rev.	Revelation
Ecclus.	Ecclesiasticus
Bar.	Baruch
1 Mac.	I. Maccabees
2 Mac.	II. Maccabees

The New
CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA
OF
Names

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION

a as in fat, man, pang, parrot.

ā as in fate, mane, dale.

ä as in far, father, palm, guard.

à as in ask, fast, ant.

ã as in fare, hair, bear.

e as in net, pen, bless.

ē as in me, meet, meat.

ė as in her, fern, herd, hurt.

i as in pin, it, biscuit.

ī as in pine, fight, file.

o as in not, on, gloss, forest, dog, god (a variable sound: in the speech of some, or in some words, approaching ä; in other cases, approaching ô).

ō as in note, poke, floor.

ö as in move, spoon, room.

ô as in nor, song, off.

u as in up, son, blood.

ū as in mute, few, lute, tube (in many words, after l, t, etc., replaced in common speech by ö).

u̇ as in pull, book, could.

oi as in oil, joint, boy.

ou as in out, proud, now.

A single dot under a vowel in an unaccented syllable indicates shortening and lightening, without absolute loss of the distinctive quality. Thus:

ạ as in aviary, prelate, captain.

ẹ as in elect, ablegate, episcopal.

ọ as in agony, abrogate, democrat.

ọ̇ as in into, injury.

ụ as in unite, singular, educate.

Two dots under a vowel in an unaccented syllable indicate that its sound is obscured. Thus:

a̤ as in errant, publican, rural.

e̤ as in ardent, prudence, towel.

o̤ as in actor, valor, idiot.

ṳ̄ as in nature, feature, natural.

ch as in chip, much.

g as in go, bag.

s as in say, yes, vice.

th as in thin.

TH as in then.

y as in you, yet.

A mark (˘) under the consonants d, s, t, z, indicates that they are variable to j, sh, ch, zh. Thus:

d̆ as in arduous, educate.

s̆ as in nausea, appreciation.

t̆ as in nature, adventure.

z̆ as in aphasia, usury.

o as in French cloche, German schloss (a short or medium open o-sound, intermediate in character between ō and ô: not an English sound).

ü as in French menu, German kümmel, Müller.

ċh as in Scotch loch, German ach.

ṅ nasal n, as in French bonbon.

B as in Spanish Habana, Córdoba (sounded almost like v).

H as in Spanish jacal, gitana (a strongly aspirated, guttural h-sound).

as in French faille, Swedish Strindberg (to indicate an obscure vowel-sound following a consonantal y-sound).

' denotes a primary accent, " a secondary accent. (A secondary accent is not ordinarily marked if it occurs at its regular interval of two syllables from the primary, or from another secondary.)

In the pronunciation of French words (except such as are regarded as at least partially Anglicized) no accents are indicated. This is the usage of French dictionaries, and is better suited to the light, nearly uniform accentuation of French words than the use of marks customarily denoting the heavier tonic accent of English words.

The New
CENTURY CYCLOPEDIA
OF
Names

A. In colonial New England, as an abbreviation for "adulterer" or "adulteress," the letter "A" was branded on individuals found guilty of thus violating the marriage oath. In Nathaniel Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter, a piece of scarlet cloth worn by Hester Prynne is made to assume the shape of this letter; in another, earlier story, Endicott and the Red Cross, Hawthorne employed the device in somewhat similar fashion.

Aa (ä). River in N France, flowing from Pas-de-Calais department to Gravelines on the North Sea between Calais and Dunkerque. The term "Aa" is applied as a proper name not only to this particular stream, but also to many others in N and W Europe, and from this usage the term has come to be an element of hundreds of European names of villages, towns, and cities near to or on the banks of rivers named "Aa." It has as its root the same Indo-European form as the Latin word "aqua."

Aa. River in NE Netherlands, in the province of Groningen, consisting of two branches, the Mussel Aa and Ruiten Aa, which join near Ohstwedde and flow NE into the Dollart.

Aa. River in S Netherlands, in the province of North Brabant, which flows NW to unite with the Dommel near 's Hertogenbosch.

Aa. River in N central Switzerland, in the cantons of Lucerne and Aargau, which flows N through Baldegg and Hallwil lakes into the river Aare.

Aa. [Also, Sarner-Aa.] River in C Switzerland, in the canton of Unterwalden, which flows NE through Lake Sarnen into the Lake of Lucerne near Alpnachstadt.

Aa. River in C Switzerland, in the canton of Unterwalden, which flows generally N into the Lake of Lucerne near Buochs. It should not be confused with the slightly larger river of the same name covered by the entry immediately preceding, and flowing also into the Lake of Lucerne.

Aa. Former name of the Gauja, a river in Latvia.

Aa. Former name of the Lielupe, a river in Latvia.

Aa, Pieter van der. fl. last half 17th century. Dutch publisher and engraver who, with his brothers, formed (c1682) a publishing house at Leiden. They edited and published several collections of travels in French and Dutch.

AA. See Alcoholics Anonymous.

AAA. See Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Aabenraa (ô'bẹn.rô). [Also: Åbenrå; German, Apenrade.] Town in S Denmark, in the amt (county) of Aabenraa-Sønderborg, in SE Jutland, situated at the head of a fjord that opens on the Little Belt, ab. 15 mi. S of Haderslev. It has a port, fisheries, and some importance as a shipping point in the lumber trade. The town's chief point of tourist interest is Castle Bruunlund, a structure dating from the 15th century. The community received town privileges in 1335; as part of Schleswig-Holstein, it belonged (1864–1920) to Prussia. After a plebiscite following World War I it was returned (1920) to Denmark. The population includes a German-speaking minority. 12,189 (1945).

Aabenraa-Sønderborg (sėn'nėr.bôrg). [Also, Åbenrå-Sönderborg.] Amt (county) of Denmark, in S Jutland, consisting of the island of Als and a strip of the nearby mainland. Capital, Sønderborg; area, 475 sq. mi; pop. 46,260 (1945).

Aach (äċh). Small village in SW Germany, in the Land (state) of South Baden, French Zone, ab. 20 mi. NW of Konstanz, Switzerland. It was the scene of a battle between the French and the Austrians on March 25, 1799.

Aachen (ä'ċhẹn). [French, Aix-La-Chapelle; Dutch, Aken; Latin, Aquae Grani, Aquisgranum.] City in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the border of Belgium, ab. 40 mi. SW of Cologne. It is a center of German textile manufacturing, and also has important glass (mirror) and needle industries; other manufactures include automobile parts and electrical equipment, brushes, and rubber and paper goods. The city has canneries and breweries of some importance. Its hot alkaline and sulfurous springs have been known for some 2,000 years, and there are numerous bathing establishments still used by people suffering from rheumatism, paralysis, and various intestinal and skin diseases. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic bishopric, and of an institute of technology and other educational institutions. In World War II, it was the first German city taken by the Allies (Oct. 20, 1944), having first been reduced virtually to ruins by artillery fire and aerial bombardment. 129,811 (1950).

Architecture. Of the once numerous historical buildings, only the Münster (cathedral) remains standing, although badly damaged. It is largely in the Romanesque style, but smaller parts of it were built at various times, the earliest dating back to the period of Charlemagne. This oldest section is the Emperors' Chapel, a domed octagonal building (796–804) designed for Charlemagne by Udo of Metz, largely after the Byzantine style of the Church of San Vitale at Ravenna, and consecrated by Pope Leo III. A later section of some importance is the Gothic choir, dating from 1414. Six chapels surround the central building, which contains the tombs of Charlemagne and Emperor Otto III. It was this building, or its sections, that served as the place of coronation of the German kings as Holy Roman emperors in the period of the 9th–16th centuries, the first being Louis the Pious (813), and the last Ferdinand I (1531). The 14th-century Rathaus (town hall) built on the site of Charlemagne's palace was formerly a structure of considerable historical and architectural interest, but it is now largely ruined.

History. Founded by the Romans as a watering place, Aachen became Charlemagne's northern (and favorite) capital; it was because they were technically his successors as Holy Roman emperors that the German kings of the Middle Ages were crowned here. Seventeen diets and eleven synods were convoked at Aachen during this period. Like most major European cities, Aachen suffered from several serious fires during the Middle Ages and later, the most serious of which took place in 1656 (but of course even this did relatively little damage compared to the wholesale destruction wrought during World War II). Aachen belonged to France in the period 1801–15; at the Congress of Vienna it was ceded to Prussia. Among the international agreements concluded at Aachen (under its French name) were the first Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle (1668), which ended the war of Louis XIV against Spain, and the second Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle (1748), which ended the War of the Austrian Succession. The Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, which took place here in 1818 after the final downfall of Napoleon, was the first meeting of the Holy Alliance. Economically, Aachen developed greatly during the 19th and 20th centuries, but it was dealt a tremendous blow in World War II and the resultant decrease of population (1939–46) amounted to 31.9 percent. The majority of the population is Catholic.

Aagesen (ô'gẹ.sẹn), Svend. [Also, Aageson.] fl. 1185. Danish historian. His Compendiosa historia regum Daniae, from the reign of King Skjold (c300) to that of Canute VI (1170–1202), is considered by some authorities to be the first connected history of Denmark. He also probably edited, and may have translated, a Latin version of the military laws of Canute the Great (c995–1035).

Aahhotep (ä.hō'tep). [Also, Ahhotpe.] Egyptian queen; wife of Kamose, last king of the XVIIth dynasty, and mother of Ahmose I, first king of the XVIIIth dynasty. Her coffin was found (1860) at Thebes in the ancient necropolis of No, placed in the museum at Bulaq, removed to Giza, and thence (1902) to Cairo.

Aakjaer (ôk'yer), Jeppe. [Called "the Danish Burns."] b. in Jutland, Denmark, Sept. 10, 1866; d. April 23, 1930. Danish lyric poet and novelist. A farm worker and herder who worked his way through the University of Copenhagen and was at one time imprisoned for socialistic writing, he made his Jutland farm a peasants' center for festivals and lectures on social theory. His novels include Bondens Søn (The Peasant's Son, 1899) and Vredens Børn; et Tyendes Saga (Children of Wrath; the Saga of a Servant, 1904). He wrote also Rugens Sange (Songs of the Rye, 1906), and other works of poetry.

Aakon (ä'kọn), Saint. See Saint Aaron (d. c305).

Aaland Islands (ä'lạnd, ô'-). See Ahvenanmaa.

Aalborg (ôl'bôrg). [Also, Ålborg.] Amt (county) of Denmark, in N Jutland, bounded by the amts of Randers, Viborg, and Hjørring, and by the Kattegat. It is traversed from E to W by the Lim Fjord. Capital, Aalborg; area, 1,129 sq. mi.; pop. 218,335 (1945).

Aalborg. [Also, Ålborg.] City in N Denmark, the capital of the amt (county) of Aalborg, ab. 130 mi. NW of Copenhagen, located on the S shore of the Lim Fjord, which joins the Kattegat and the North Sea. The name is Danish for "eel-town." A seaport and railroad center, it is important for its fisheries, for its exports of dairy products and livestock, and for its distilleries (it produces a major portion of Denmark's annual output of aquavit). It is the seat of a Lutheran bishopric, and has a museum, naval school, and other educational institutions. The community is noted for its medieval houses, for Budolphi Cathedral (erected in the 14th century, rebuilt in the 18th century), and for a castle built in the 17th and 18th centuries. Town privileges received in the 14th century; occupied by Prussian troops in 1864; airfield used as a base for the German attack on Norway during World War II. 60,880 (1945).

Aalen (ä'lẹn). City in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Württemberg-Baden, American Zone, formerly in the Jagst Kreis (district) of Württemberg, situated on the Kocher River, ab. 42 mi. E of Stuttgart. Primarily a manufacturing town, it has metalworking, lumber, leather, and pharmaceutical industries, and manufactures costume jewelry, linen, and lace, but it also has livestock markets of considerable local importance. The town (which has preserved in its streets and buildings much of its medieval character) was a free imperial city in the period 1360–1802, and came under Württemberg in 1803. The population increase (1939–46) amounted to 39.6 percent. 21,941 (1946), 25,375 (1950).

Aalesund (ô'lẹ.sùn). See Ålesund.

Aali Pasha (ä'lē pä.shä'; pàsh'ä), Mehemet. [Also, Mehemet Ali Pasha.] b. at Constantinople, 1815; d. at Erenkoi, in Asia Minor, Sept. 6, 1871. Turkish diplomat and political leader. He served as ambassador to Great Britain (1842–45), was five times grand vizier (1852 et seq.), and was a delegate to the London conference (1871) on Black Sea sovereignty. He was a vigorous proponent of Turkish Westernization.

Aalsmeer (äls'mār). Town in the W Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, ab. 8 mi. SW of Amsterdam. It is located near the center of one of the most fertile districts in the country, and is important as a distribution point for bulbs, plants, and various other horticultural products. The community also has some local importance as a shipbuilding center. 10,420 (1939).

Aalst (älst). [Also: Aelst; French, Alost.] Town in NW Belgium, in the province of East Flanders, situated on the Dender River, ab. 16 mi. NW of Brussels: lace, cotton, and linen textile manufactures; breweries; sugar refineries; grain and hops trade; railroad junction. Of particular historical and architectural interest are its 13th-century bell-tower, the beautiful but unfinished Church of Saint Martin, in late Gothic style, containing a painting by Rubens, the Church of Saint Rochus, and the medieval town walls. A former capital of the counts of Flanders (1056 et seq.), the town was conquered by a French army under Marshal Turenne in 1667 and was occupied by the French from 1667 to 1706. It was occupied by the Germans in World Wars I and II. 41,960 (1947).

Aalten (äl'tẹn). Town in the E Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, situated near the German border, ab. 29 mi. E of Arnhem: manufactures combs, buttons, and brushes. 11,966 (1939).

Aalto (äl'tō), Aino. [Maiden name, Marsio.] d. at Helsinki, Finland, cJan. 13, 1949. Finnish architect and furniture designer. She was the wife of Alvar Aalto, with whom she collaborated professionally.

Aalto, Alvar. [Full name, Hugo Alvar Henrik Aalto.] b. at Kuortane, near Helsinki, Finland, Feb. 3, 1898—. Finnish architect and industrial designer. He was a member of a small group which adopted and tried to introduce into Finland the advanced architectural ideas of Gropius, Le Corbusier, and Oud. He won the competition (1927) for the design of the municipal library at Viipuri, Finland (although actual construction was delayed until 1934 by opposition of the local clergy to its modern design) and won an international first prize for the Finnish pavilion at the Paris Exposition (1937). He first came to the U.S. in 1938; as research professor in architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he was later (1947) commissioned to plan a new dormitory. As a designer of furniture, he exhibited his first chair in 1932; made of plywood, it was based on studies of sitting postures. He founded (1935) the firm of Artek, Ltd., at Helsinki for the manufacture and distribution of Aalto furniture. He was awarded (1947) an honorary degree by Princeton University as a doctor of fine arts.

Aanrud (ôn'röd), Hans. b. in the Gudbransdal valley, Norway, 1863—. Norwegian writer of peasant stories, satiric comedies, and poems. His novelette, Lisbeth Longfrock, was translated (1907) into English. His books for children, Sidsel Sidsaerk (1903) and Sølve Solfeng (1910), were published (1935) as one volume in English.

Aar (är). See Aare.

Aaraaf (ar'af), Al. See Al Aaraaf.

Aarau (ä'rou). Town in N central Switzerland, the capital of the canton of Aargau, on the Aare River, ab. 180 mi. SE of Paris. It is the site of an ancient fortress, and ab. 8 mi. away is the castle (now in ruins) that was the first seat of the Hapsburg family. The modern town has foundries and manufactures of textiles, cutlery, and scientific instruments. 12,900 (1941).

Aarburg (är'bůrk). Small manufacturing town in NW Switzerland, in the canton of Aargau, on the Aare River, near Aarau, ab. 180 mi. SE of Paris. 2,932 (1941).

Aare (ä'rę). [Also, Aar.] River in Switzerland, rising in the Aare glaciers of the Bernese Oberland (Bernese Alps) near the Grimsel Pass. It crosses the Hasli valley and forms the Handegg Falls (ab. 200 ft. high), traverses the lakes of Brienz and Thun, flows through Bern, Solothurn, and Aargau cantons, and joins the Rhine opposite Waldshut. On it are the cities and towns of Bern, Solothurn, Aarau, Aarburg, and Brugg. The largest river totally within Switzerland, it is ab. 180 mi. long and navigable below Unterseen.

Aarestrup (ô'rę.ströp), Carl Ludvig Emil. b. at Copenhagen, Dec. 4, 1800; d. 1856. Danish lyric poet and physician, author of Digte (1838) and Elfterladte Digte (1863).

Aargau (är'gou). [French, Argovie.] Canton in N Switzerland, bounded on the N by the Rhine: a fertile, hilly region on the plateau between the Alps and the Jura Mountains, traversed by the Aare River. It has vineyards, tobacco and dairy farms, and some manufactures, particularly of ribbon. Baden, in the E part, is a tourist center. Seat of the Hapsburgs in the 13th century, Aargau was annexed in part to the Swiss Confederation in 1415, comprised the cantons of Aargau and Baden in 1798, and took its present form in 1803. Capital, Aarau; area, 548 sq. mi.; pop. 270,463 (1941).

Aarhus (ôr'hös). [Also: Århus, Aarhuus.] Amt (county) of Denmark, in E Jutland, bounded by the amts of Vejle, Ringkøbing, Viborg, and Randers, and by the Great Belt. Capital, Aarhus; area, 971 sq. mi.; pop. 183,808 (1945).

Aarhus. [Also: Århus, Aarhuus.] City in E Jutland, Denmark, the capital of the amt (county) of Aarhus, situated on the Bay of Aarhus, ab. 100 mi. NW of Copenhagen. The second largest city in Denmark, it has a large harbor, important shipping activities, and much trade. Its industrial facilities include oil mills, and factories for the manufacture of machinery and railroad equipment. It is the seat of a Lutheran bishopric. The Domkirke (cathedral), in the brick-Gothic style, dates from the 14th and 15th centuries, and the Church of Our Lady from the 13th century. The university dates officially from 1933, but many of its facilities were available to students several years earlier. It was here that the Prussians defeated the Danes on May 31, 1864, in one of the decisive battles of the war by which Denmark lost to Germany until the end of World War I a great part of its S territory. It was occupied by Germany again in World War II and an explosion of German ammunition-ships destroyed part of the harbor facilities in 1944. Pop. 107,393 (1945).

Aarlen (är'lęn). Flemish name of Arlon.

Aarö (ôr'ė''). See Ærø.

Aaron (ār'ǫn). [Hebrew, 'Aharon.] fl. c15th–16th centuries B.C. In the Old Testament, the first high priest of the Israelites and companion of Moses on the Exodus from Egypt; eldest son of Amram and Jochebed of the tribe of Levi, and brother of Moses and Miriam. He is often represented as the traditional religious representative of Yahweh (Jehovah), while Moses was the secular; in the opinion of some authorities, he was a rival of, if not actually hostile to, Moses, as in the making of the golden calf and in his subsequent revolt, with Miriam, against Moses. Consecrated as high priest after the revelation on Mount Sinai, he subsequently obtained confirmation of his position against a challenge by his opponents. From Aaron and his tribe, by tradition, are descended the priests of Israel. The period of his life has been variously given as ranging from the 16th to the 13th centuries B.C. Conflict exists within the Old Testament as to the place of his death, but he is usually said to have died at the age of 123 on Mount Hor. The most important Old Testament references to him are found in Exodus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

Aaron, Saint. [Also, Aakon.] d. c305. British martyr who, according to tradition, was put to death with Saint Julius and others at Caerleon-upon-Usk (near what is now Newport, Monmouthshire, England), in the reign of Diocletian.

Aaron, Saint. fl. 6th century. British hermit and abbot, superior of a monastery of hermits which he founded on the island in the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of Brittany which is now called (after one of Aaron's disciples) St. Malo.

Aaron. Moorish lover of the Gothic queen, Tamora, in Titus Andronicus, a play attributed to Shakespeare. His remarkable villainy has caused some scholars to suspect a definite link in authorship between this character and Barabas in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, and to attribute the tragedy for this reason to Marlowe. In the play, Aaron is ruthlessly punished by Titus for his treachery and cruelty on behalf of Tamora against Titus's family.

Aaron ben Moses ben Asher (ār'ǫn ben mō'zis ben ash'ėr). b. 900 A.D.; d. at Jerusalem, 960 A.D. Jewish scholar who contributed to the Masorah, i.e., the vowels and accents which make up the text of the Hebrew Masoretic Bible now used. His contemporary and opponent was Moses ben David ben Naphtali; when these authorities differ, both readings are given in the rabbinical Bibles.

Aaron of Alexandria. [Hebrew, 'Aharon; Arabic, Harun.] fl. c610 to c641. Author, possibly Jewish, of a Greek medical encylopedia (Pandectae medicinae), divided into 30 sections. It contained a description of smallpox and was translated into Syriac and Arabic. The writer, about whom little else is known, was almost certainly a contemporary of the Byzantine emperor Heraclius, father of Constantine III.

Aaron's Rod. In the Old Testament, a rod which turned into a serpent and by which Aaron thus surpassed the performance of the Egyptian magicians before Pharaoh (Ex. vii. 10). Later Aaron's Rod was one of the 12 rods of the 12 tribes of Israel. Representing the tribe of Levi, it was the only one that sprouted, budded, flowered, and bore ripe almonds, as a sign of the endowment of the priesthood upon Aaron and his descendants (Num. xvii. 8).

Aaron's Rod. Novel (1922) by D. H. Lawrence, written in Italy, partly Italian in setting.

Aarschot (är'sċhôt). See Aerschot.

Aarssens (är'sęns), Frans van. [Also, Francis Van Aarssen.] b. 1572; d. 1641. Dutch diplomat and writer of memoirs, now chiefly remembered as a member of the "packed" court which condemned Jan van Olden Barneveldt in 1619. He was at various times ambassador to England, France, and Venice, and his memoirs have been considered valuable by historians concerned with his period.

Aartsen (ärt'sęn), Pieter. See Aertszen or Aertsen, Pieter.

Aasen (ô'sęn), Ivar Andreas. b. at Ørsta, Norway, Aug. 5, 1813; d. at Christiania (now Oslo), Sept. 23, 1896. Norwegian lexicographer, philologist, and poet. Convinced by a study of Norwegian dialects that they, rather than the Dano-Norwegian which was at that time standard in most Norwegian literature, comprised (with some modification) the proper vehicle for writers in his country, he produced (1853) a new national language (Landsmaal) by standardizing the various dialects. He himself used this "country language" in his own work, and lived to see it widely established among Norwegian writers, teachers, and government officials. Author of Det norske Folkesprogs Grammatik (Grammar of the Norwegian Dialects, 1848), Ordbog over det norske Folkesprog (Dictionary of the Norwegian Dialects, 1850), later enlarged and issued under the title Norsk Ordbog (Norwegian Dictionary, 1873), and others.

Aat or Aath (ät). Flemish names of Ath.

Aavik (ä'vik), Johannes. b. on the Estonian island of Saare, in the Baltic Sea, Dec. 8, 1880—. Estonian linguist and language reformer. He studied linguistics and literature at Tartu, Nezhin, and Helsinki, and was for a time thereafter a high-school teacher, but subsequently became an instructor and professor at the University of Tartu. He influenced the development of the Estonian language by numerous bold suggestions for reform, extending to certain morphological features, and through the invention of new words, many of which entered the common language. A voluminous writer on linguistic and literary subjects, he has translated into Estonian various works by Edgar Allan Poe, Gabriele d'Annunzio, and others. In 1951 he was living in exile in Sweden.

Ab (ab, äb). Fifth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical calendar and eleventh month of the Jewish civil calendar (except in leap years, when the insertion of a new seventh month makes it twelfth). It falls variously in the period

July-August. The word is of Babylonian origin and is said to have been adopted, with the names of the other months, after the Babylonian exile.

Ab, Ninth of. [Also, Fast of Ab.] Jewish fast day commemorating the destruction of the second Temple. It is strictly observed only by Orthodox Jews; the day falls variously in July or August.

Ababda (ä.bäb'dä) or Ababdeh (ä.bäb'de). See Abadba.

Ababua (ä.bä.bö'ä). See Bwa.

Abaco Islands (ab'ạ.kō). Two islands (called Great Abaco and Little Abaco) in the British West Indies, at the extreme N end of the Bahamas group ab. 180 mi. E of Florida. With them, as an administrative district, are included a number of small surrounding islets (or cays). Although they are now, of course, all British subjects, many inhabitants of the district are descendants of Southern families that emigrated here after the collapse of the Confederacy. Area, 776 sq. mi.; pop. 3,461 (1943).

Abad (ä.bäd'). See Abbad.

Abadan (ä.bä.dän', ab.ạ.dan'). Island in a delta near the coast of SW Iran, in Khuzistan province, with access to the Persian Gulf. It has been the site of human settlements since the 5th century B.C. or earlier, but gained great international importance only in the 20th century through its position as the terminus of the oil pipe line from the interior of Iran and as the site of the chief refineries in Iran. Chief city, Abadan.

Abadan. City on the island of Abadan, in a delta near the coast of SW Iran, in Khuzistan province. It is a focal point for one of the world's greatest oil-refining centers, the terminus of the pipe line from the Iranian oil fields, and a major port for oil tankers. Pop. ab. 110,000 (est. 1948).

Abadba (ä.bäd'bä). [Also: Ababda, Ababdeh.] One of the predominantly Caucasoid Beja peoples of NE Africa, inhabiting NE Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and SE Egypt. They speak Arabic.

Abaddon (ạ.bad'ọn). Place of destruction; the depth of hell. It is mentioned in the Talmud and Milton's Paradise Regained, iv. 624. The term is also sometimes applied to the destroyer personified, or angel of the bottomless pit, more usually known by his Greek name Apollyon. Rev. ix. 11.

Abadeh (ä.bä.dā'). Town in C Iran, ab. 110 mi. N of Shiraz. A comparatively cool climate and ample moisture make it an important agricultural center, notably in the cultivation of fruit. It is known also for wood handicrafts of various kinds. Pop. ab. 7,000.

Abadites (ab'ạ.dīts). See Abbadides.

Abad y Queypeo (ä.bäth' ē kā.pā'ō), Manuel. [Also, Abad y Queipo (kāy'pō).] b. in Asturias, Spain, c1770; d. in prison, in Spain, 1824. Spanish ecclesiastic in Mexico, bishop (1809–20) of Michoacán. A close friend of Hidalgo y Costilla, with whom he had come (1800) to the attention of the Inquisition for admiring the works of Rousseau, Montesquieu, and other French writers, he was nevertheless one of the bishops who excommunicated him in 1810. Driven out of Mexico by the revolutionists, he returned in 1813. In 1820 he was deposed and imprisoned in Spain for opposition to the Inquisition; on his release he became a member of the government junta and bishop of Tortosa, Spain. Again imprisoned (1823) by the Inquisition, he died in confinement.

Abae (ā'bē). [Also, Abai (ā'bī).] In ancient geography, a city in Phocis, Greece, noted for its temple and oracle of Apollo. Looted and largely destroyed during one of the Persian invasions of Greece, it was later partly rebuilt under the Roman emperor Hadrian. Ruins of parts of the town still exist.

Abaelard or Abailard (ab'ẹ.lärd), Peter. See Abelard, Peter.

Abafi (ô'bô.fi), Michael. See Apafi, Michael.

Abakan (ä.bä.kän'). [Also: Abakansk (ä.bä.känsk'); former name, Ust-Abakanskoye.] City and river port in the U.S.S.R., in Asia, in the Khakass autonomous oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 2,000 mi. E of Moscow, on the Yenisei River near Minusinsk. It is an agricultural trading center and is connected by a branch of the Trans-Siberian Railroad through Minusinsk to the main line at Achinsk. An 18th-century prison fort was located here. Bronze Age tumuli and statues covered with hieroglyphs have been discovered in the vicinity. Pop. ab. 37,000.

Abaliget (ô'bô.lē.get). Village in SW Hungary, situated NW of Pécs. It is noted for a large stalactite cave ab. 3,000 ft. in length.

Aballum (ạ.bal'um). Latin name of Avallon.

"Abalone Song" (ab.ạ.lō'nē). Humorous poem composed in honor of a large, edible mollusk found in the coastal waters of California. Authorship of the work has been attributed to the poet George Sterling, although as many as 20 other writers, including Sinclair Lewis, are said to have written verses at various times during the second and third decades of the 20th century. The poem was conceived of originally primarily as a joke (Sterling used to sing its verses intentionally off-key to the tune of the hymn "Old Sarum"), but it has become during the past 20 years a true folksong of western America. Among the best-known of its many stanzas is the one that goes

> Oh! Some folks boast of quail on toast,
> Because they think it's tony;
> But I'm content to owe my rent
> And live on abalone.

Abalus (ab'ạ.lus). In ancient geography, an island reputedly abounding in amber, located by the Greek explorer Pytheas in the "Northern Ocean." Variously identified, it may have been near what is now the SW Baltic coast, between Danzig and Memel.

Abamonti (ä.bä.mōn'tē) or Albamonte (äl.bä.mōn'tā), Giuseppe. b. c1759; d. Aug. 8, 1818. Italian political leader. He was secretary-general (1798) under the Cisalpine Republic and a member of the executive committee at Naples. Arrested and condemned to death on the restoration (1799) of the monarchy, he was amnestied and again made secretary-general at Milan, serving in that post until 1805.

Abana (ab'ạ.nạ, ạ.bā'nạ). Biblical name of the Barada River. 2 Kings, v. 12.

Abancay (ä.bäng.kī'). Town in S Peru, capital of Apurímac department, on the Abancay River ab. 300 mi. SE of Lima: mining and sugar-refining center. It was the site of several battles during the Spanish conquest. 5,789 (1940).

Abancay River. Small river in S Peru, a tributary stream of the Apurímac, W of Cusco, and crossed by the road to Lima. The site of this crossing was a military point of some importance in the local wars of the 16th century. It was here that Alonso de Alvarado was defeated by the elder Diego de Almagro, and captured with his whole army, on July 12, 1537. On another occasion (May 21, 1554), at a point close by, Alvarado again suffered defeat, this time at the hands of the rebel Francisco Hernández Girón.

Abancourt (dà.bäṅ.kör), Charles Xavier Joseph de Franqueville d'. b. 1758; killed at Versailles, Sept. 8, 1792. French minister of war (July, 1792), last to hold office under Louis XVI. He was killed by officials of the revolutionary government, who were escorting him and other prisoners from Orléans to Paris, when word reached them of the massacres then taking place in the capital.

Abano (ä'bä.nō). [Also: Abano Bagni, Abano Terme.] Town and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Veneto, in the province of Padova, SW of Padua. It has been known from ancient times for its hot springs (Aponi Fons or Aquae Patavinae), which are visited by people suffering from arthritis, rheumatism, and various other diseases. It is reputed to be the birthplace of Livy. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 7,062 (1936); of town, 1,232 (1936).

Abano (dä'bä.nō), Pietro d'. [Also: Pietro di Apono; Anglicized, Peter of Abano; Latinized: Petrus Aponensis, Petrus Aponus.] b. at Abano, Italy, c1250; d. at Padua, c1316. Italian philosopher, physician, and translator from Greek and from French into Latin. He is said to have traveled considerably, and it is certain that he spent some time in Constantinople, probably before 1293, when he was established in Paris for the continuation of his studies. His residence in Paris may have lasted ten years or more. He then returned to Padua, where he taught in the university and spent the remainder of his life. He talked with Marco Polo (c1295–1310) and spoke of him in his Conciliator, this being the only reference to Marco Polo in a contemporary scientific work. Pietro was primarily an astrologer, but he had a good knowledge of astronomical theory, was genuinely interested in science and medicine, anxious on the one hand to understand nature and man, and on the other hand to apply his knowledge to medical or other needs. His most famous work, Conciliator differentiarum philosophorum et praecipue medicorum, was well advanced c1303, but was not completed until 1310. Its main purpose was to settle as far as possible the moot questions of human knowledge. Pietro aims at reconciling conflicting opinions (Greek, Arabic, Jewish, Latin) on more than two hundred questions (differentiae). For each of them the authorities are reviewed, a solution is offered, and objections are discussed. These questions concern science in general, medical philosophy, medical art, astrology, and similar subjects. The central interests are medical and astrological. His Lucidator astronomiae, dating from the same year, 1310, is the most important astronomical treatise written during the first part of the 14th century in Italy. In it the author incidentally reveals his scientific philosophy: the purpose of science is to account for the facts as faithfully and as simply as possible. During his stay at Constantinople Pietro found a copy of the Problems of Aristotle and made the first Latin translation of the work. He began a commentary on these problems while in Paris, and completed it in Padua in 1310. It is clear that Pietro had an unusually extensive knowledge of Greek literature. He did not hesitate to defend the fundamental doctrine of astrology (that man's fate is controlled by planetary and stellar events), and its applications to medicine and to practical life in general. Pietro may have fallen into trouble with the Inquisition because of his astrology. He may have been suspected of practicing black magic, and he is said to have denied the miracles of Christ. It is said that the Inquisition instituted proceedings against him twice, first in 1306 (or before 1303), when he was acquitted, and then in 1315, when he died during trial. Thomas of Strasbourg, general of the Augustinian order from 1345 to his death in 1357, stated that he witnessed the burning of Pietro's bones in Padua as a posthumous punishment for heresy.

Abarbanel (ä.bär.bä.nel′), Isaac. See Abravanel, Isaac.

Abarim (ab′ə.rim). In the Old Testament, a general term for the region E of the Dead Sea and Jordan River (now included in the kingdom of Hashemite Jordan) and, more specifically, the high tableland in this region, often called Pisgah. It was from the highest point of this tableland, known as Mount Nebo, that Moses is said to have looked into Palestine.

Abaris (ab′ə.ris). [Called "the Hyperborean."] Mythical Greek sage, assigned by Pindar to the 6th century B.C., by Eusebius to the 7th. According to these writers and to Herodotus, Apollo gave him a magic arrow on which he traveled and which he gave to Pythagoras in exchange for instruction in the latter's philosophy. He was believed to have worked miraculous cures, and was widely invoked by the ancient Greeks in oracles and charms.

Abasalo (ä.bä.sä′lō), Mariano. b. at Dolores (now Dolores Hidalgo), Mexico, 1783; d. at Cádiz, Spain, 1819. Spanish soldier in Mexico who joined the revolutionary movement (1810) of Hidalgo y Costilla and became lieutenant-general of the insurgents. Captured and sent to Spain, he died in prison.

Abascal y Sousa (ä.bäs.käl′ ē sō′sä), José Fernando. [Created in 1812 Marqués de la Concordia Española del Peru.] b. at Oviedo, Spain, June 3, 1743; d. at Madrid, June 30, 1821. Spanish general and politician. Governor of Cuba (1796) and viceroy of Peru (until 1816), he reconciled Spanish-Creole friction in those areas. He reorganized the Peruvian army, suppressed local rebellions, and led campaigns against the Argentinian and Chilean rebels.

Abasgi (ə.baz′jī) or Abasci (ə.bas′ī). See Abkhazians.

Abasgia (ə.baz′ji.ə). [Also, Abasia (ə.bas′i.ə).] In ancient geography, the region occupied by the Abkhazians (or Abasgi), approximately coextensive with what is now the Abkhaz Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic of the U.S.S.R.

A Basso Porto (ä bäs′sō pôr′tō). [Eng. trans., "At the Lower Harbor."] Opera by Nicola Spinelli, with libretto by Eugene Checchi, based on a work by Goffredo Cognetti. It was produced in German (1894) at Cologne and in English (1900) at New York. It tells the story of a mother who, in order to save her son from committing the crime, kills her daughter's lover, betrayer of the Camorra, an Italian secret society to which her son belongs.

Abate (del.lä.bä′tā) or Abati (del.lä.bä′tē), Niccolò dell'. See Abbate, Niccolò dell'.

Abauzit (ä.bō.zēt), Firmin. b. at Uzès, France, Nov. 11, 1679; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, March 20, 1767. French Protestant philosopher, theologian, and mathematician. He included among his friends such figures as Newton, Rousseau, and Voltaire, by each of whom he was at various times warmly and publicly praised. Educated from the age of six in Switzerland (his family had been compelled to take refuge at Geneva after the revocation (1685) of the Edict of Nantes), he was later offered patronage by William III of England and a professorship of philosophy at Geneva, but preferred a librarianship which permitted leisure for his extensive scholarly pursuits. His name was taken by Voltaire as a pseudonym.

Abaye (ə.bä′yē). [Also: Abayi; original name, Nachmani or Nahmani.] b. c280; d. 338. Babylonian amora (Rabbinic teacher and scholar). He was the director (333–338) of the Hebrew academy at Pumbeditha, in Babylonia.

Abazgi (ə.baz′jī). See Abkhazians.

Abba (äb′bä), Marta. b. at Milan, 1907—. Italian actress. She studied for three years while still under age at the Academy of the Theatre in Milan, and at 17 joined the Paollodini company. In 1925, Pirandello engaged her for his company at the Odescalchi Theatre, having remembered her from a performance in Chekhov's The Sea Gull. The same year she played at London in Pirandello's Six Characters in Search of an Author and Each In His Own Way, and repeated her success under Sacha Guitry's management at Paris. The next year she toured Europe, and in 1927, South America. In 1928 she formed her own company, playing in Molnar's The Good Fairy, Pirandello's As You Desire Me, and a dramatization of Tolstoy's Anna Karenina. In 1934 she played Portia at Venice under Reinhardt's direction and the next season at London. Pirandello, who regarded her highly as an artist and friend, dedicated many of his plays to her. She made her New York debut in Robert Sherwood's adaptation of Tovarich (1937). In January, 1938, she married and retired from the stage.

Abba Arika (ab′ə ə.rē′kə). [Also: Abba Aricha (or Arecha); called Rab.] b. c175 A.D.; d. 247 A.D. Jewish teacher and leader, one of the Babylonian amora (Rabbinic teachers and scholars). Born of a Babylonian family, he was educated in Palestine; he returned to Babylonia in 219, settling first at Nehardea, then at Sura on the Euphrates. He founded here the Academy of Sura, a school for the systematic study of scriptural materials, and was himself reckoned to be one of the outstanding Haggadists of Jewish religious history. This Academy flourished for nearly eight centuries and became one of the greatest intellectual centers of Israel. It soon made Babylonia independent from Palestine and gave it a predominant position in the Jewish world. A large part of the Babylonian Talmud is constituted by the opinions of Abba Arika and of his immediate disciples.

Abbad I (äb.bäd′). [Also, Abad.] d. 1042. Cadi and first Abbadide king of Seville; reigned 1023–42. He took advantage (1023) of political chaos at Córdoba to throw off the rule of that city, and to establish his independence as ruler of Seville. During the next 19 years he attained a position of unquestioned leadership in the Spanish Moslem world, and made Seville the strongest of Spain's city-states.

Abbad II. [Also: Abad; called Abbad al-Mutadid.] d. 1069. Second Abbadide king of Seville; reigned 1042–69. Poet, poisoner, filicide, and patron of the arts, he sought to expand his realm at the expense of his fellow Moslems, but in the attempt, weakened his own power to the point of having to send tribute to Ferdinand I of León and Castile.

Abbad III. [Also: Abad; called Abbad al-Mutamid.] d. at Morocco, 1095. Third and last Abbadide king of Seville; reigned 1069–91. He made Seville a center of the arts, particularly poetry, but had little success with his military and political ventures. When his war against Alfonso VI of León and Castile met with reverses, he obtained aid from the Almoravides, a sect of African Moslems, and was thus able finally (1086) to defeat Alfonso. However, he was thereupon himself attacked and deposed by the Almoravides, and is said to have bought his own life by compelling his sons to surrender (1091). He spent his last four years an exile in Morocco.

Abbadides (ab'ạ.didz). [Also: Abbadids (ab'ạ.didz), Abadites (ab'ạ.dīts).] Moslem dynasty (1023–91) at Seville, in Spain, of whom the reigning members were Abbad I, Abbad II, and Abbad III. The dynasty lasted until the capture of Seville by the Almoravides in 1091.

Abbadie (dȧ.bȧ.dē), Antoine Thomson d'. b. at Dublin, Jan. 3, 1810; d. at Paris, 1897. French explorer of Ethiopia (1838–48). With his brother and fellow explorer, Arnaud Michel d'Abbadie, he published Géodésie d'une partie de la Haute-Éthiopie (1860–73). Although both he and his brother were born at Dublin, they were taken (1818) by their family to live in France, with which country they were identified for the rest of their lives.

Abbadie, Arnaud Michel d'. b. at Dublin, July 24, 1815; d. 1893. French explorer; brother and companion of Antoine Thomson d'Abbadie. Author of Douze ans dans la Haute-Éthiopie (1868), which contains an account of the two brothers' joint explorations in the period 1838–48 and of Arnaud Michel d'Abbadie's subsequent expedition in 1853.

Abbadie (ȧ.bȧ.dē), Jacques. [German, Jakob Abbadie (ä.bä.dē'); English, James Abbadie (ab'ạ.di).] b. at Nay, France, c1654; d. at London, Sept. 25, 1727. French Protestant theologian and preacher at Berlin, in England, the Savoy, and Ireland. His zealous preaching to French Protestant refugees at Berlin (c1680–88) and his treatises in refutation of atheism, deism, Socinianism, and other disputed religious positions of the time won him the patronage of William III and George I of England, the former of whom appointed him (1699) dean of Killaloe, Ireland. Among his works, which were widely translated, were Traité de la vérité de la religion chrétienne (1684; Eng. trans., 1719, 1777), essays in support of the English revolution of 1688, The Art of Knowing One-Self (1694), Le Triomphe de la providence et de la religion (1723), and others.

Abba Jared (äb'bä yä'red). [Also, Abba Yared.] Mountain in E Africa, in N Ethiopia, NE of Gondar. Elevation ab. 15,000 ft.

Abbas (ab'ạs, äb.bäs'). b. c566; d. 652. Arab merchant and proselytizer of Islam; paternal uncle of Mohammed. He was the progenitor of the family that produced the Abbasside dynasty of caliphs.

Abbas I (of Egypt). b. at Jidda, Arabia, 1813; assassinated in Egypt, July 13, 1854. Turkish viceroy and pasha of Egypt (1849–54); nephew and successor of Ibrahim. He abolished the commercial monopolies established by his grandfather, Mehemet Ali, but his government otherwise did little that could be expected to help Egypt or win the affection of the people. His reign saw the beginning by the British government (but with his permission) of the Alexandria-Cairo railroad.

Abbas II (of Egypt). [Also, Abbas Hilmi Pasha.] b. at Cairo, July 16, 1874; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 21, 1944. Egyptian khedive (1892–1914); eldest son of Mohammed Tewfik Pasha. He held the khedivate until the outbreak of World War I, when Great Britain established a protectorate over Egypt and replaced him with his uncle, Hussein Kamil. Nominally subject to Turkey throughout his reign and sympathetic to the Turkish Central Power alignment in 1914, he sought to retain some degree of autonomy, but actually at every point he was compelled to accept the authority of Great Britain's representative at Cairo, who was at first the Earl of Cromer and subsequently Lord Kitchener.

Abbas I (of Persia). [Called Abbas the Great.] b. 1557; d. at Kazvin, Persia, Jan. 27, 1628. Shah of Persia (1586–1628), notable for a reign which was both prosperous and, for its time, extremely enlightened. When he ascended the throne Persia was threatened by enemies within and beyond her borders, and the administration of the country was in a state of chaos. The most immediate threat was presented by the Uzbek tribe of Tartars, who had succeeded in occupying a part of Persia, and it was against them that he made his first major military effort. Following their defeat (1597) near Herat, he diverted his chief force to war against the Turks, whom he defeated (1605) at Basra and from whom he wrested a considerable amount of territory. In 1622, with help from soldiers in the employ of the British East India Company, he took the island of Hormuz, off the S coast of Persia, from the Portuguese, and in the following year, after a lengthy siege in his intermittent war with Turkey, became master of Baghdad. Two years later (1625), with the capture of Kandahar, he expanded his realm in the east to include a considerable portion of what is now Afghanistan and N India. He encouraged commerce within all the vast territories thus included under his rule, and saw to it that builders of roads and bridges should follow closely behind the armies that enabled him so greatly to expand the boundaries of Persia.

Abbas, Ferhat. b. at Tahar, Constantine department, Algeria, Oct. 24, 1899—. Algerian political leader, an advocate of Algerian autonomy and opponent of French colonization. By profession a pharmacist, he entered politics (1931) as a supporter of assimilation policies. After the liberation of North Africa in World War II, he published a Manifesto to the Algerian People (December, 1942) supporting a federalist, autonomist position. He was arrested (May 8, 1945) as a result of a conflict between French troops and native Algerians, but was amnestied in March, 1946. He was elected to the French constituent assembly in June, 1946.

Abbas Effendi (e.fen'di). See Abdul Baha.

Abbas Hilmi Pasha (hil'mi pạ.shä', pash'ạ). See Abbas II (of Egypt).

Abbas Mirza (äb.bäs' mēr'zä). b. c1783; d. at Meshed, Persia, in December, 1833. Persian soldier and prince; younger son of the shah Fath Ali. He commanded (1811–13, 1826–28) in two unsuccessful wars against Russia. By the first war Persia lost its remaining possessions in the Caucasus and was compelled to acknowledge Russian control of the Caspian Sea; by the second it lost Armenia.

Abbassides (ạ.bas'ïdz, ab'ạ.sīdz). [Also: Abbasids (ab'ạ.sidz), Abbasides.] Dynasty (750–1258) of 37 caliphs at Baghdad, succeeding the Ommiad dynasty after a victory (750) over Marwan II, the last Ommiad caliph, by Abu-al-Abbas, who was thereafter (750–754) first caliph of the new dynasty. Abu-al-Abbas, who claimed descent from Abbas, the uncle of Mohammed, was succeeded by al-Mansur, who made (762) Baghdad the seat of the caliphate. The line was overthrown, so far as the caliphate was involved, in 1258 by Mongols under command of a grandson of Genghis Khan. The most famous of the Abbassides was Harun al-Rashid; the last of the line genealogically (but not one of the 37 caliphs included in the dynasty) was Mutawakkal III, who died (1538) at Cairo.

Abbas the Great (ab'ạs, äb.bäs'). See Abbas I (of Persia).

Abbate (del.läb.bä'tā), Niccolò dell'. [Also: Abate, Abati; called Messer Niccolino.] b. at Modena, Italy, c1512; d. in France, 1571. Italian painter of the Lombard school, known for his frescoes. He assisted in decorating the palace at Fontainebleau.

Abbatis Villa (ạ.bā'tis vil'ạ). Ancient name of Abbeville, France.

Abbatucci (ȧ.bȧ.tō'chē; Italian, ä.bä.tōt'chē), Charles. b. 1771; killed in battle, Dec. 2, 1796. French general; son of Jacques Pierre Abbatucci. He served under Napoleon in the Army of the Rhine.

Abbatucci, Jacques Pierre. b. 1726; d. 1812. Corsican partisan commander. He was an antagonist of the Corsican patriot, Pasquale Paoli, and later a divisional general in the French service under Napoleon in Italy.

Abbatucci, Jacques Pierre Charles. b. 1791; d. 1857. French jurist and politician; grandson of Jacques Pierre Abbatucci. He was for a time minister of justice in the French government under Napoleon III.

Abbaye (ȧ.be.ē), L'. French military prison once connected with the monastery of St.-Germain-des-Prés, at Paris. It was the scene of the murder (1792) of 164 prisoners by revolutionists during the massacres that took place at Paris in September of that year. Originally built in 1522, it was finally destroyed in 1854.

Abbazia (äb.bä.tsē'ä). Italian name of Opatija.

Abbe (ab'ē), Cleveland. [Called the "Father of the Weather Bureau."] b. at New York, Dec. 3, 1838; d. Oct. 28, 1916. American astronomer and meteorologist; brother of Robert Abbe. A pioneer (1869 et seq.) in demonstrating the feasibility of weather forecasts based on telegraphic reports, he was instrumental in the founding (1870) of a government weather service. He also took a leading part in establishing the use of standard time throughout the U.S. He was director (1868–73) of Cincinnati Observatory, meteorologist (1871–1916) of the U.S. Weather Bureau, and for many years editor of The Monthly Weather Review. Author of Report on Standard Time (1879), Mechanics of the Earth's Atmosphere (1892–1910), Relation between Climate and Crops (1901), Physical Basis of Long-range Forecasting (1902), and other works.

Abbe (äb'e), Ernst. b. at Eisenach, Germany, Jan. 23, 1840; d. at Jena, Germany, Jan. 14, 1905. German physicist, industrialist, and specialist in optics. Professor at Jena (1870–91), he was associated with Carl Zeiss as research director (1866 et seq.) and as a partner (1875 et seq.) in the Zeiss firm. He became head of the firm after the death (1888) of Zeiss and reorganized it (1896) as a foundation that would share its profits between its employees and the university. He invented Jena glass and the Abbe refractometer, and conducted experiments which largely made possible the high quality of the initial Zeiss instruments.

Abbe (ab'ē), Robert. b. at New York, April 13, 1851; d. March 7, 1928. American surgeon; brother of Cleveland Abbe. He received his M.D. from Columbia University (College of Physicians and Surgeons) in 1874. Notable as both teacher and practicing surgeon, he took great interest in the radiological work of the Curies (of whom he was a personal friend) and did pioneer work in the use of radium to treat cancer.

Abbé Constantin (là.bā kôn.stäñ.tañ), L'. Novel by the French dramatist and satirist Ludovic Halévy, published in 1882. It was enthusiastically received for its benevolent treatment of characters, in contrast to the types then being depicted by Zola.

Abbeokuta (ab''ē.ō.kō'tạ). See Abeokuta.

Abberville (ab'ėr.vil), Lord. Principal character in the sentimental comedy The Fashionable Lover (1772), by the English dramatist Richard Cumberland.

Abbeville (ȧb.vēl; Anglicized, ab'ē.vil). [Ancient name, Abbatis Villa.] City in N France, in the department of Somme, ab. 90 mi. NW of Paris, on the canal of the Somme River, ab. 12 mi. from the English Channel. It belonged in the 9th century to the abbey at St.-Riquier, and was a gathering point in the first and second Crusades. Among its several medieval churches is that of Saint Wulfram, begun in the 15th century and now partly demolished, a rich example of the flamboyant Gothic style. A major Allied base in World War I, the city was severely damaged in World War II, and many of its ancient and modern buildings have been destroyed. It is important as a trading center for various agricultural products, chiefly grain, and has carpet and woolen industries. The nearby area is notable for the fossil remains and prehistoric implements which have been found there. 16,780 (1946).

Abbeville (ab'ē.vil). Town in S Louisiana, parish seat of Vermilion Parish, ab. 125 mi. W of New Orleans: center of a rice-producing district. 9,318 (1950).

Abbeville. City in NW South Carolina, county seat of Abbeville County, ab. 70 mi. W of Columbia: textile mills. It was named for Abbeville, France, by Huguenot settlers, and is known in American history as the site of the last meeting in 1865 of the Confederate cabinet under Jefferson Davis. This fact, plus its earlier importance as a focal point of secessionist sentiment, has caused it to be referred to occasionally as "the cradle and the grave of the Confederacy." 5,395 (1950).

Abbeville (dȧb.vēl), Claude d'. See Claude d'Abbeville.

Abbeville (ȧb.vēl; Anglicized, ab'ē.vil), Treaty of. Treaty concluded (1259) between Henry III of England and Louis IX of France, formalizing the end of England's claims to Anjou, Poitou, Normandy, Touraine, and Maine, and acceptance of Guienne as a fief of the French throne.

Abbey (ab'i), Edwin Austin. b. at Philadelphia, April 1, 1852; d. at London, Aug. 1, 1911. American painter and illustrator. On the staff of Harper's Weekly (1871 et seq.), he was sent (1878) to London by Harper and Brothers on an assignment to provide illustrations for an edition of the poems of Robert Herrick. He subsequently also illustrated editions of Shakespeare and Goldsmith. Elected to the Royal Academy (1898), the National Academy (1902), and others; exhibited at London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Philadelphia, and elsewhere. He did mural paintings for the Boston Public Library (Quest of the Holy Grail, 1890–1902), the British Houses of Parliament (1910), and the state capitol at Harrisburg, Pa. (1911). He was, by royal request, official painter at the coronation of Edward VII of England.

Abbey, Henry Eugene. b. at Akron, Ohio, June 27, 1846; d. Oct. 17, 1896. American opera and theater impresario. He acquired Buffalo's Academy of Music with J. B. Schoeffel (1876); became leading New York producer with Schoeffel and Maurice Grau (1880 et seq.); and brought together the team of William H. Crane and Stuart Robson. He also managed the elder Sothern, Barrett, Henry Irving, and Edwin Booth; brought U.S. audiences Sarah Bernhardt, the de Reszkes, Emma Eames, Calvé, Adelina Patti, and the London Gaiety company; managed the Metropolitan Opera House and opened Abbey's Theater (1893).

Abbey Theatre. Irish company of actors and the theater at Dublin which is used by them. The company was founded in 1904 as a development of an earlier group, the Irish Literary Theatre (1899 et seq.), on a subsidy from Mrs. A. E. F. Horniman, who also enabled the group at that time to use the Dublin theater-building from which the name of the modern company is derived. Prominent among the members of the original group were Lady Gregory, J. M. Synge, and W. B. Yeats, all of whom wrote plays first produced by the Abbey Theatre; other playwrights whose works have been brought to the public through the Abbey Theatre include Padraic Colum, Sean O'Casey, Lord Dunsany, James Stephens, and Paul Vincent Carroll. In addition to giving plays at Dublin, the company has on several occasions toured the U.S. and other countries.

Abbiategrasso (ȧb.byä.tā.gräs'sō). Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lombardy, in the province of Milano, situated on the Naviglio Grande Canal, ab. 15 mi. SW of Milan. Economically important as the center of a rich agricultural region, it is also of some historical and architectural interest for its Church of Santa Maria Maggiore, erected in the 14th century, and altered in the 15th century according to plans by Bramante. Pop. of commune, 16,759 (1936); of town, 13,704 (1936).

Abbitibbe or Abbitibbi (ȧb.i.tib'ē). See Abitibi.

Abbon of Fleury (ȧ.bôn'; flē.rē). [Also, Abbo of Fleury; Latinized, Abbo Floriacensis.] b. near Orléans, France, c945; d. at La Réole, France, Nov. 13, 1004. French theologian and diplomat under Robert II of France, for whose period his letters (collected by Aimoin) are a valuable historical source. He was educated in France and England, and was abbot of Fleury (now St.-Benoît-sur-Loire) from 985. He wrote before 987 a commentary on Victorius's Calculus (second half of fifth century): De numero mensura et pondere super calculum Victorii. He wrote also Quaestiones grammaticales dealing with prosody and pronunciation.

Abbon of Paris. [Latinized, Abbo Parisiensis; called Cernuus, meaning "the Crooked."] d. c923. French Benedictine monk of St.-Germain-des-Prés, at Paris. He was the author of a Latin poem, De bellis Parisiacae urbis, on the siege of Paris (885–86) by the Normans.

Abbot (ab'ọt). See also Abbott.

Abbot, Benjamin. b. at Andover, Mass., Sept. 17, 1762; d. Oct. 25, 1849. American educator. He was principal (1788–1838) of Phillips Exeter Academy, where he taught Edward Everett, Jared Sparks, Daniel Webster, and others. He was notable among educators of his time for maintaining discipline without resort to corporal punishment.

Abbot, Charles. [Title, 1st Baron Colchester.] b. at Abingdon, Berkshire, Oct. 14, 1757; d. May 7, 1829. English politician. As speaker (1802–16) of the House of Commons, he was highly respected for his impartiality and the quality of his speeches. He initiated the practice of publishing annual tables of temporary laws, advocated (unsuccessfully) improving the language of laws, and introduced (1800) the first British census act. As chief secretary (1801–02) for Ireland under Addington, he compiled diaries now valuable to historians. An anti-Canning Tory, his published speeches (1828, 1829) include some opposing admission of Roman Catholics to Parliament.

Abbot, Charles Greeley. b. at Wilton, N. H., May 31, 1872—. American astrophysicist, notable as a specialist in research on solar radiation. Director of Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory (1907 et seq.); secretary of Smithsonian Institution (1928 et seq.); home secretary of the National Academy of Sciences (1918–23). He has published papers on solar eclipses, the infra-red spectrum, solar variability, and on instruments for solar measurement. Author of The Sun (1911), The Earth and the Stars (1925), The Sun and the Welfare of Man (1929), Fundamentals of Astronomy (1927, with S. A. Mitchell), and other works.

Abbot, Ezra. b. at Jackson, Me., April 28, 1819; d. at Cambridge, Mass., March 21, 1884. American Biblical scholar. He was professor of New Testament criticism and interpretation at Harvard (1872–84) and a member (1871 et seq.) of the American committee for New Testament revision. His written works include Literature of the Doctrine of a Future Life (1864), The Authorship of the Fourth Gospel (1880), and some 400 articles in the American edition of Smith's Dictionary of the Bible (1867–70).

Abbot, Francis Ellingwood. b. at Boston, Nov. 6, 1836; d. Oct. 23, 1903. American philosophical writer. He was editor (1870–80) of The Index, a journal of free thought, and founder (1867) of the Free Religious Association. Author of Scientific Theism (1885), The Way out of Agnosticism (1890), and other works, several of which (and particularly the first) were subjected to strong criticism by Josiah Royce and his followers.

Abbot, George. b. at Guildford, Surrey, Oct. 29, 1562; d. at Croydon, Surrey, Aug. 4, 1633. English prelate, archbishop of Canterbury (1611–33), and one of the translators of the New Testament in the Authorized (or King James) Version of the Bible. A militant Protestant, he was influential in state affairs during the reign of James I, but was largely deprived of his power under Charles I.

Abbot, George. [Called "the Puritan."] b. at Easington, Yorkshire, 1603; d. 1649. English scholar, lay writer on religious subjects, and member of the Long Parliament. Author of the Whole Book of Job Paraphrased (1640), which had a simplicity of style in striking contrast to that of other commentators then living, of Vindiciae Sabbathi (1641), which was influential in the Sabbatarian controversy, and others.

Abbot, Gorham Dummer. b. at Brunswick, Me., Sept. 3, 1807; d. at South Natick, Mass., Aug. 3, 1874. American educator and clergyman. For five years (1837–41) a Presbyterian pastor at New Rochelle, N. Y., he was later (1843) associated with his brothers, Jacob Abbott and John S. C. Abbott, in establishing a girls' school at New York. He subsequently founded and headed (until 1870) the institution that was to become known as the Spingler Institute, a school for girls. His enthusiasm for the education of women was imparted during his later life to Matthew Vassar. The spelling of his name with a single "t" was retained throughout his life, except for a brief period at Bowdoin, when he emulated his brothers' double-t spelling.

Abbot, Henry Larcom. b. at Beverly, Mass., Aug. 13, 1831; d. Oct. 1, 1927. American military engineer. Early in his career he assisted Captain A. A. Humphreys in a survey (1857) of the Mississippi flood problem and possible means of control. He served with the Union army in the Civil War, acting as commander of siege artillery at Petersburg and Richmond (1864–65). He later developed the Engineer School of Application at Willett's Point, N. Y. (1865 et seq.), and assisted with plans for the Panama Canal, both with the French Comité Technique and with the U.S. board which succeeded it in 1904.

Abbot, Joel. b. at Westford, Mass., Jan. 18, 1793; d. at Hong Kong, Dec. 14, 1855. American naval officer. He served as a midshipman in the War of 1812, notably under Macdonough on Lake Champlain. He is best remembered, however, as commander (1852 et seq.) of the frigate Macedonian in Matthew Calbraith Perry's expedition to Japan, and as successor to Perry as fleet commander when the latter returned (1854) to the U.S.

Abbot, Sir Maurice (or Morris). b. at Guildford, Surrey, 1565; d. at London, Jan. 10, 1642. English merchant, deputy-governor (1615–24) and governor (1624–c1635) of the British East India Company, and lord mayor (1638–39) of London; brother of George Abbot (1562–1633), archbishop of Canterbury. One of the original directors and earliest investors in the East India Company, he was its representative in the long disputes over trading and fishing rights with its Dutch counterpart. He was able during a great part of his career virtually to control the English merchant service, and took a major part in sending expeditions to look for the Northwest Passage. Elected (1621) to Parliament, he was a member (1624) of the council for establishing the colony of Virginia.

Abbot, Robert. b. at Guildford, Surrey, c1560; d. March 2, 1617. English prelate, bishop of Salisbury (1615–17); brother of George Abbot (1562–1633), archbishop of Canterbury, and of Sir Maurice Abbot (1565–1642). A vigorous opponent of Roman Catholicism and supporter of Calvinism as against Arminianism in the Anglican church, he was in great favor with James I for such works as the Mirror of Popish Subtleties (1594), Antichristi Demonstratio (1603), Defence of the Reformed Catholike of Mr. William Perkins (1606–09), and others.

Abbot, Robert. b. c1588; d. c1662. English Puritan divine. He was vicar (1616–43) of Cranbrook, and later pastor of St. Austin's, at London. Author of Triall of our Church Forsakers (1639), and other works.

Abbot, Samuel. b. at Andover, Mass., Feb. 25, 1732; d. April 12, 1812. Boston merchant and philanthropist. He was one of the founders (1807) of the Andover Theological Seminary, which has been since 1908 a part of Harvard University.

Abbot, The. Novel by Sir Walter Scott, published in 1820. A sequel to The Monastery, it is based on incidents from the life of Mary Queen of Scots, covering the period from her imprisonment in Lochlevel to her flight into England after the battle of Langside.

Abbot, Willis John. [Also, Abbott.] b. at New Haven, Conn., March 16, 1863; d. at Brookline, Mass., May 19, 1934. American journalist, author, and worker for world peace, especially as editor (1921–27) and contributing editor (1927–34) of the Christian Science Monitor. At one time a reporter for the New Orleans Times-Democrat and New York World (1885–86), he became part-owner (1887–88) of the Kansas City Evening News and was associated with papers at Chicago, New York, and Washington, participating in the highly nationalistic journalism of the Spanish-American war period and in several political campaigns before he joined (1921) the staff of the Christian Science Monitor and became interested in its peace plan.

Abbotsford (ab'ọts.fọrd). Residence (1812 et seq.) of Sir Walter Scott, on the Tweed ab. 3 mi. from Melrose, Scotland. A 100-acre farm nicknamed Clarty ("muddy") Hole when he bought it in 1811, it was enlarged and renamed by Scott, who built on it in 1817 a mansion in baronial style. The Abbotsford Club, which published (1835–64) historical books connected with Scott's works, was named by its founder, Turnbull, for Scott's home.

Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey (nū'sted). Second volume of The Crayon Miscellany (3 vols., 1835), by Washington Irving containing recollections of his visit to Scotland and a visit to Sir Walter Scott's home.

Abbott (ab'ọt). See also Abbot.

Abbott, Alexander Crever. b. at Baltimore, Feb. 26, 1860; d. near Woods Hole, Mass., Sept. 11, 1935. American bacteriologist who, after graduate studies at Johns Hopkins, Munich, and Berlin, became (1897) professor of hygiene and bacteriology at the University of Pennsylvania. Author of Principles of Bacteriology (1892, 1921), Hygiene of Transmissible Diseases (1899, 1902), and others.

Abbott, Austin. b. at Boston, Dec. 18, 1831; d. at New York, April 19, 1896. American lawyer and legal writer; son of Jacob Abbott (1803–79). He collaborated with his brother, Benjamin Vaughan Abbott (1830–90), on numerous legal works (1855 et seq.). The most useful of the many works of which he was sole author is generally considered to be Trial Evidence, The Rules of Evidence Applicable on the Trials of Civil Actions (1880).

Abbott, Benjamin Vaughan. b. at Boston, June 4, 1830; d. at Brooklyn, Feb. 17, 1890. American lawyer and legal writer; son of Jacob Abbott (1803–79). He collaborated with his brother, Austin Abbott (1831–96), on a Digest of New York Statutes and Reports (1860) and many other works. As a member of the New York Code Commission (1864), he drafted a plan which provided a basis for the present penal code of that state. He was later (1870–72) one of the commissioners selected to revise the Statutes of the U.S. Author of Judge and Jury (1880), The Travelling Law School (1884), Addison on Contracts (1888), and others.

Abbott, Charles. [Title, 1st Baron Tenterden of Hendon.] b. at Canterbury, England, Oct. 7, 1762; d. Nov. 4, 1832. British jurist, notable as chief justice (1818–32) of the King's Bench. He began practice at the Inner Temple (1796), and was subsequently appointed recorder of Oxford (1801) and a judge in the court of common pleas (1818). As chief justice, he presided over the trials of the Cato Street conspirators and of Arthur Thistlewood, and became known for his strong opposition to the Catholic Relief and Reform Bills and Romilly's reform of criminal law. He is now perhaps best remembered for the soundness and clarity of his decisions, and for his Law Relative to Merchant Ships and Seamen (1802), long a standard work in its field.

Abbott, Charles Conrad. b. at Trenton, N. J., June 4, 1843; d. July 27, 1919. American naturalist and archaeologist. Author of Days Out of Doors, Recent Rambles, Upland and Meadow, Travels in a Treetop; his autobiography, Ten Years Digging in Lenape Land (1912), is still of some importance to archaeologists. He wrote, in addition to his books, more than 100 articles for popular scientific journals.

Abbott, Claude Colleer. b. 1889—. English scholar and poet. He has been a professor (1932 et seq.) at Durham University and editor (1939 et seq.) of the Durham University Journal. His discovery (1930–31, although formal announcement was not made until 1936) in Scotland of some 1,600 previously unknown letters and other papers written by, or to, Samuel Johnson, James Boswell, and other figures of note in 18th-century English letters, has been of great value to specialists in the field of literary history. Author of Poems (1921), Early Medieval French Lyrics (1932), and The Sand Castle and other Poems (1946).

Abbott, Edith. b. at Grand Island, Neb., Sept. 26, 1876—. American social worker and dean of the University of Chicago School of Social Service Administration (1924 et seq.); sister of Grace Abbott (1878–1939). Author of Women in Industry (1910), The Tenements of Chicago (1936), and Public Assistance (1939), as well as numerous articles and books on immigration problems; editor of Social Service Review and Social Service Monographs.

Abbott, Edward. b. at Farmington, Me., July 15, 1841; d. April 5, 1908. American Congregational and Episcopal clergyman; youngest son of Jacob Abbott (1803–79). Congregational minister (1863–69) in and near Boston; assistant editor (1869–78) of the Congregationalist. Disturbed by what he considered to be an undesirable development of liberalism in Congregational thought, he transferred his religious affiliation to the Episcopal church in 1878.

Abbott, Edwin Abbott. b. at London, 1838; d. 1926. English clergyman, educator, and Shakespearean scholar, notable as headmaster (1865–89) of the City of London School; brother of Evelyn Abbott (1843–1901). Author of A Shakespearian Grammar (1870), Bacon and Essex (1877), Francis Bacon (1885), The Kernel and the Husk (1887), The Anglican Career of Newman (1892), and works of New Testament criticism (1900–17).

Abbott, Eleanor Hallowell. [Married name, Coburn.] b. at Cambridge, Mass., Sept. 22, 1872—. American short-story writer and novelist; granddaughter of Jacob Abbott (1803–79) and niece of Lyman Abbott (1835–1922). Her works include Molly Make-Believe (1910), Sick-Abed Lady and Other Stories (1911), Peace on Earth (1920), Rainy Week (1921), Fairy Prince and Other Stories (1922), Silver Moon (1923), Love and the Ladies (1928), But Once a Year (1929), The Minister Who Kicked the Cat and Other Stories (1932), and the autobiographical Being Little in Cambridge When Everybody Else Was Big (1936).

Abbott, Emma. b. at Chicago, Dec. 9, 1850; d. at Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 5, 1891. American soprano, successful both in Europe and America as an operatic singer.

Abbott, Evelyn. b. 1843; d. 1901. English classical scholar and librarian; younger brother of Edwin Abbott Abbott (1838–1926). Author of History of Greece (3 vols., 1888–1900), and various works on classical philology.

Abbott, Francis Lemuel. See Abbott, Lemuel.

Abbott, Frank. b. at Shapleigh, Me., Sept. 5, 1836; d. April 20, 1897. American dentist, known for the development of various dental instruments, notably an automatic mallet patented in 1887. He was on the faculty of the New York College of Dentistry (1866–97), serving as dean after 1869. Elected head of the American Dental Association (1888) and National Association of Dental Faculties (1895); author of Dental Pathology and Practice (1896), and numerous articles.

Abbott, Frank Frost. b. at Redding, Conn., March 27, 1860; d. at Montreux, Switzerland, July 23, 1924. American classical scholar. After serving for seven years (1884–91) as a Latin tutor at Yale, he received the first appointment to the faculty of the newly established University of Chicago, for which he drew up a curriculum and which he thereafter served as associate professor (1891–94) and professor (1894–1908) of Latin. He was subsequently (1908–24) Kennedy Professor of Latin at Princeton. Author of numerous scholarly works and articles on Roman history, language, and society.

Abbott, George. b. at Forestville, N. Y., June 25, 1889—. American playwright, producer, film director (1927–30), and former actor (1913–18). Adaptor of themes from Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors and classic Greek comedy in The Boys from Syracuse; coauthor, with J. C. Holm, and director of Three Men on a Horse; coauthor, with Philip Dunning, of Broadway (1926); collaborator with J. V. A. Weaver on Love 'em and Leave 'em (1928) and with Ann P. Bridgers on Coquette.

Abbott, Grace. b. at Grand Island, Neb., Nov. 17, 1878; d. June 19, 1939. American social worker and writer on social problems; younger sister of Edith Abbott (1876—). After serving as chief of the U.S. Department of Labor's Child Labor Division (1917–20) and Children's Bureau (1921–34), she became (1934) public welfare professor at the University of Chicago. Author of The Immigrant and the Community (1917), Federal Aid for the Protection of Maternity and Infancy (1923), and The Child and the State (2 vols., 1938).

Abbott, Horace. b. at Sudbury, Mass., July 29, 1806; d. near Baltimore, Md., Aug. 8, 1887. American iron manufacturer. With his brother, he secured (1836) control of Peter Cooper's Canton Iron Works in Maryland and began manufacture of wrought-iron machinery components, notably the power shaft of the Russian frigate, Kamchatka, which was the first large steamship shaft to be manufactured in the U.S. His ownership of four rolling mills (including one which was believed capable of handling the largest wrought-iron plate in the U.S.) proved invaluable to the U.S. government during the Civil War, as Abbott was thus enabled to produce armor for the original Monitor and for virtually all subsequent vessels of its type built on the Atlantic coast.

Abbott, Jacob. [Original surname, Abbot.] b. at Hallowell, Me., Nov. 14, 1803; d. at Farmington, Me., Oct. 31, 1879. American Congregational clergyman, educator, and prolific author of children's books; father of Austin Abbott (1831–96), Benjamin Vaughan Abbott (1830–90), and Lyman Abbott (1835–1922). He was the founder (1829) and first principal of Boston's Mt. Vernon School, one of the first women's academies in the U.S., but after the huge success of The Young Christian (1832) he devoted himself primarily to writing. A bibliography of his works lists 180 by him alone, including the 28-volume Rollo series, and 31 more on which he collaborated.

Abbott, Sir John Joseph Caldwell. b. at St. Andrew's, Quebec, March 12, 1821; d. at Montreal, Oct. 30, 1893. Canadian politician and jurist, premier of Canada (1891–92). A graduate (1847) and later dean of the law faculty at McGill University, he became queen's counsel in 1862 and was a member (1859–74) of the Canadian parliament.

Abbott, John Stevens Cabot. b. at Brunswick, Me., Sept. 18, 1805; d. at Fair Haven, Conn., June 17, 1877. American Congregational clergyman and historian; brother of Jacob Abbott (1803–79). Active for several years in the administration of a pioneer school for girls established by his brothers at New York in 1843, he returned (1853) to Brunswick, Me., where he completed his History of Napoleon Bonaparte (1855). His eulogies of Napoleon in this work, which appeared serially in Harper's Magazine (1851–55) before publication in book form, detracted greatly from its worth as a historical source, and led to hints by Horace Greeley and Charles Dana that interested parties in France might have given financial aid to the author. Abbott returned to the pulpit in 1861, and was thereafter engaged until his death in preaching and writing. His literary work eventually totalled 54 titles, in the fields of history, ethics, popular science, and juvenile stories.

Abbott, Joseph Carter. b. at Concord, N. H., July 15, 1825; d. at Wilmington, N. C., Oct. 8, 1881. American politician, journalist, and officer with the Union army during the Civil War. Editor (1859–61) of Boston's Whig Atlas and Bee, he was also adjutant-general of New Hampshire, in which latter capacity he offered his services to Lincoln in April, 1861, and served thereafter with the 7th New Hampshire Volunteers, being promoted to colonel in 1863. He established himself as leader of North Carolina's Republicans after the war, drawing his chief support from newly enfranchised Negroes, but became involved (1868 et seq.) in political and financial irregularities, and was eventually ousted from North Carolina politics.

Abbott, Josiah Gardner. b. at Chelmsford, Mass., Nov. 1, 1815; d. at Wellesley Hills, Mass., June 2, 1891. American jurist and politician. He was judge of the Superior Court of Massachusetts for Suffolk County (1855–59), a Democratic member of Congress (1876–77), and a member of the electoral commission (1877). He was twice (1875, 1877) an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for U.S. senator, and once (1878) for governor.

Abbott, Lemuel. [Sometimes signed his work Francis Lemuel Abbott.] b. 1760; d. 1803. English portrait painter, chiefly at London, where he did likenesses of various notable figures, including Lord Nelson and other naval heroes of the period, and the poet Cowper. He is said to have died of insanity brought on by an unhappy marriage.

Abbott, Lyman. b. at Roxbury, Mass., Dec. 18, 1835; d. at New York, Oct. 22, 1922. American Congregational clergyman, author, and editor; son of Jacob Abbott (1803–79). Appointed by the American Tract Society to be editor of the Illustrated Christian Weekly (1870), he later became co-editor with Henry Ward Beecher of the Christian Union (1876) and editor-in-chief upon Beecher's withdrawal (1881), continuing in that position when the name of the paper was changed (1893) to the Outlook. He succeeded Beecher also as minister (1890 et seq.) of the Plymouth Congregational Church at Brooklyn, but in 1899 withdrew from the pulpit to devote himself to editorial work and lecturing. Author of Theology of an Evolutionist (1897), The Other Room and Henry Ward Beecher (1903), The Great Companion (1904), The Spirit of Democracy (1910), What Christianity Means to Me (1921), and others.

Abbott, Mount. Culminating peak of the southward-projecting mountain mass that forms the W side of the N half of Terra Nova Bay, in Antarctica, in Victoria Land, at ab. 74°50′ S., 163°46′ E. It was probably first located by Captain Robert F. Scott's Discovery expedition (1901–04). Elevation, ab. 3,000 ft.

Abbott, Samuel Warren. b. at Woburn, Mass., June 12, 1837; d. Oct. 22, 1904. American physician and pioneer public health statistician. After service as a surgeon with the Union army during the Civil War he established a private practice in Massachusetts, and became, for his day, unusually concerned with problems of community health. He formulated what were probably the first Massachusetts standards for manufacture of a reliable smallpox vaccine, and was appointed (1886) secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Health (the first state body of its kind in the U.S.), in which capacity he served until 1904. In addition to summaries which were for many years models of U.S. public health statistics, he produced Past and Present Condition of Public Hygiene and State Medicine in the United States (1900), which was possibly the first adequate study of public health developments to be published in the U.S.

Abbott, Thomas Kingsmill. b. at Dublin, March 26, 1829; d. 1913. Irish clergyman and scholar. He was a graduate and fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, in which he occupied the chairs of moral philosophy (1867–72), of Biblical Greek (1875–88), and of Hebrew (1879–1900).

Abbott, Wilbur Cortez. b. at Kokomo, Ind., Dec. 28, 1869—. American historian. He was professor of history at Kansas (1902–08), Yale (1908–20), and Harvard (1920–37). Author of The Expansion of Europe (1917), Conflicts with Oblivion (1924), and others.

Abbott, William Hawkins. b. at Middlebury, Conn., Oct. 27, 1819; d. Jan. 8, 1901. American pioneer in petroleum production and refining. His ownership of an Ohio mercantile business led to a trip (1859) into the Pennsylvania oil fields shortly after the first Titusville well was completed. Interested by the business possibilities of this achievement, he made a small investment in adjoining oil land, which was followed in the next year by the sale of 200 barrels of Pennsylvania petroleum to the New York drug firm of Schieffelin Brothers, an achievement which is considered by many to have marked the actual opening of the U.S. oil trade. This, in turn, was followed in 1861 by the opening of the first Titusville refinery, and in 1862 by Abbott's removal to Pennsylvania, where he engaged in extensive coal-mining operations and was a cofounder (1867) of the first oil pipe-line consolidation, under the name of the Pennsylvania Transportation Co.

Abbott, Willis John. See Abbot, Willis John.

Abbt (äpt), Thomas. b. at Ulm, Germany, Nov. 25, 1738; d. at Bückeburg, Germany, Nov. 3, 1766. German professor of mathematics and philosophy. A friend of Moses Mendelssohn and C. F. Nicolai, he contributed to the latter's famous Litteraturbriefe (1759–65) after Lessing had withdrawn. He wrote Vom Tode fürs Vaterland (1761) and Vom Verdienste (1765).

ABC (ä′bā′thā′). Spanish newspaper, considered by many to be the leading news publication of modern Spain. Published (with occasional interruptions) since 1904, it reflects a conservative and monarchist point of view. Its circulation in 1949 was approximately 120,000.

A.B.C., An. Poem by Chaucer, designed as a prayer to the Virgin Mary. It contains 26 stanzas beginning in each case with a different letter of the alphabet. It is a loose translation from a work of Guillaume de Deguileville, a Cistercian monk who died c1360.

A.B.C. Conference. [Also, A.B.C. Mediation.] International conference (May-July, 1914) at Niagara Falls, N. Y., at which representatives from Argentina, Brazil, and Chile attempted mediation between the U.S. and the Huerta government of Mexico following the U.S. bombardment of Veracruz. The conference proposed that a provisional government of Mexico be chosen by agreement between the warring Huerta and Carranza factions, but the proposal was rejected by Carranza following his military victories over his opponents. Huerta, whom the Wilson administration considered a usurper, resigned, and Carranza became president on Aug. 22, 1914.

A.B.C. Powers. Term sometimes applied to Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, particularly in those cases where the three powers have acted jointly (1910 et seq.) to arrive at a treaty or agreement involving the U.S. or a major European power.

Abd (äbd, abd). Initial element of many Arabic and other Semitic proper names. Compound names containing "Abd" (which means "servant") are usually formed by the combination, through a linking element, of "Abd" with the name of a place, person, quality, etc., as in "Abd-al-Aziz," below. The spelling, in English, of names containing "Abd" has been subject, over a period of centuries, to widely differing systems of transliteration and transcription, with the result that the single name given above might also be found in some sources with such spellings as "Abdul Aziz," "Abdool Aziz," "Abdul-Aziz," "Abd-el-Aziz," "Abdel Aziz," and many more. The user of a general reference book will find it helpful to bear in mind that no one of these forms is necessarily more or less "correct" than another; methods of transcription have differed from country to country and from century to century. In this work, if usage does not clearly indicate preference for another form, we have written such names in the manner here first cited: "Abd-al-Aziz," "Abd-al-Malik," "Abd-al-Muttalib," and so forth. However, we have deferred first of all to the needs of the reader, which require that a name should be entered where it is most likely to be looked for by the greatest number of people, and this is a matter finally determined not by any one system but by actual usage in newspapers, magazines, works of history, textbooks, and novels. Where usage appears to be divided between two or more forms we have made liberal use of cross references in order to guide the reader to the main entry.

Abd-al-Aziz IV (äbd″äl.ä.zēz′). [Also: Abd-el-Aziz, Abdul-Aziz.] b. 1878; d. 1943. Sultan of Morocco (1894–1908); member of the Filali dynasty. His attempts to Westernize his country and his inability to control the state budget finally led to a popular revolt and the loss of his throne. He was instrumental in calling the Algeciras conference (1906), but his apparent submission to France and the chaos in his own country made his fall inevitable. He was deposed in 1908 by a junta under the leadership of his brother and successor, Abd-al-Hafid.

Abd-al-Aziz ibn-Saraya al-Hilli (äbd″äl.ä.zēz′ ib″n.sä-rä′yą äl.hil′li). b. in August, 1278; d. at Baghdad, in March, 1349. Iranian poet and musician. He was a court poet at various royal establishments (perhaps most notably in 1326 at that of the Mamelukes, in Cairo) and remains even today a favorite of many young Arab intellectuals. He was the author of a treatise on musical composition that urged the desirability of putting melodies together according to the zodiac (a kind of musical astrology that had a considerable tradition in the Arab world).

Abd-al-Hakam (äb″däl.hä.käm′). b. in Egypt; d. at Cairo (in what is now called locally al-Fustat, the older part of the city), 870 or 871. Egyptian historian. His account of the conquest of Egypt, North Africa, and Spain is the earliest Moslem history of its kind. It is a critical work and was used extensively by later historians.

Abdaldar (abd.al′där). One of the three great magicians (Lobaba and Mohareb are the other two) in Thalaba the Destroyer, by Robert Southey.

Abd-al-Hafid (äbd″äl.hä.fēd′). [Also: Abd-el-Hafid, Abd-al-Hafiz, Abdul-Hafiz.] b. c1875—. Sultan of Morocco (1908–12); member of the Filali dynasty. He overthrew his brother and predecessor, Abd-al-Aziz IV, but was himself deposed by the French when he interfered with the expansion of their domain in N Africa.

Abd-al-Kaaba (äbd.äl.kä′ä.bä). Original name of Abu-Bakr.

Abd-al-Kadir (äbd.äl.kä′dir). [Also, Abd-el-Kader.] b. near Mascara, Algeria, c1807; d. at Damascus, May 26, 1883. Arab chief and scholar, notable as leader of the tribes of Oran in a Moslem holy war (1832–47) against the French. With Abd-er-Rahman, sultan of Morocco, he was defeated by a French force under Marshal Bugeaud near the river Isly on Aug. 14, 1844. Imprisoned (1847 et seq.) in France, he was freed (1852) by Napoleon III. He was given the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor (1860) for pro-French action in Moslem anti-Christian riots at Damascus, and later (1871) urged Algerian submission to France. During his last years he lived as a pensioner of the French Government.

Abdalla (ab.dal′ą). The Mufti, a character in John Dryden's tragedy Don Sebastian.

Abdalla (äb.däl′lä), Baba. See Baba Abdalla.

Abdallah (ab.dal′ą, äb.däl.lä′). See also Abdullah.

Abdallah. [Also, Abdullah.] b. at Mecca, Arabia, c545; d. at Medina, Arabia, 570. Father of Mohammed, son of Abd-al-Muttalib (d. 578).

Abdallah-ibn-Yasin. (ib″n.yä.sēn′). [Also: Abdallah ben Yasim, Abdullah ibn-Yasin.] d. c1058. Arab scholar. He was the founder, chief lawmaker, and spiritual leader of the Almoravides, a Berber people of the African mountains whom he converted to Islam. Under his leadership they conquered much of the country between the Sahara and ancient Gaetulia. Under his successor, Yussuf ibn-Tashfyn, Almoravide power spread over much of N Africa, establishing (1062) Marrakech as a capital and eventually reaching (1086) Spain, at the behest of Abbad III of Seville, who sought their aid against Alfonso VI of León and Castile. In 1091 they turned on Abbad, ousted him, and were themselves for a brief period in control of Seville.

Abdallatif (äb″däl.lä.tēf′). [Also, Abd-al-Latif.] b. at Baghdad, 1162; d. there, Nov. 8, 1231. Arab physician, philosopher, scientist, and traveler. He was one of a group of scholars at the court of Saladin, and at various times a teacher at Cairo, Damascus, and Aleppo.

Abd-al-Malik (äbd″äl.mä.lik′). b. c646; d. 705. Fifth caliph (685–705) of the Ommiad dynasty. He defeated various rivals for the caliphate and united Islam, but his war against the Byzantine emperors was protracted and indecisive. He is perhaps most noteworthy as the first caliph to use Arabic coins, although he also improved postal facilities, reorganized the government, and made the Arabic language official in the area under his control.

Abd-al-Malik. b. at Basra (in what is now Iraq), c740. Arab doctor. An instructor of Harun al-Rashid, he was noted for his extraordinary memory. He is reputed to have written part, if not all, of one version of the Arabic romance of Antar.

Abd-al-Malik. b. at Córdoba, Spain, 801; d. 853. Spanish Moslem historian and theologian.

Abd-al-Mumin (äbd″äl.mö′min). See Abdul-Mumin.

Abd-al-Muttalib (äbd.äl.möt′tą.lib). d. 578. Grandfather of Mohammed and his guardian for two years; father of Abdallah (c545–570).

Abd-al-Rahman (äbd″äl.rä.män′). See Abd-er-Rahman.

Abdara (ab.där′ą). Ancient name of Adra.

Abdas (or Abda) of Susa (äb′däs; äb′dä; sō′zą, -są). d. c420. Persian bishop killed in a persecution of Christians brought about by his destruction of a Zoroastrian fire temple. He is said to have aided in driving a demon out of Yezdigerd, a king of Persia.

Abd-el- (äbd″el-). See under Abd.

Abdelazar (äb.del.ä′ząr). Tragedy derived by Aphra Behn from the play Lust's Dominion, first acted in 1676, and published the next year. It is notable for inclusion of the song Love in fantastic triumph sat.

Abd-el-Aziz IV (äbd″el.ä.zēz′). See Abd-al-Aziz IV.

Abd-el-Hafid (äbd″el.hä.fēd′). See Abd-al-Hafid.

Abd-el-Kader (äbd.el.kä′dėr). See Abd-al-Kadir.

Abd-el-Kadir (äbd.el.kä′dir). fl. 14th century. Arab musicologist. He was the author of several treatises on musical theory.

Abd-el-Krim (äbd.el.krim′). [Also: Abdel Krim; full name, Mohammed ibn Abd al-Karim al-Khattabi.] b. c1880—. Moroccan chieftain, notable as the leader of the Berber tribes of the Er Rif region of North Africa in their war (1920 et seq.) against Spain and, later, France. His education and intelligence enabled him while still a young man to attract (1908) the attention of the Spanish authorities in Morocco, and he became a member of the Spanish civil service at Ceuta. In 1920 he turned against the Spanish and led a rebellion of the tribesmen of the Er Rif, winning (1921) an important victory at Annual. In 1924 he forced Primo de Rivera, the Spanish dictator, again to withdraw his troops from their frontier positions, but Abd-el-Krim then made the mistake of attacking also his French neighbors. As a result, by 1925, Spain and France had agreed to coöperate against the tribesmen, and in 1926 Abd-el-Krim was defeated by a two-front offensive under Marshal Pétain. Within the next few weeks all remaining resistance was suppressed and the entire Er Rif region was once again securely under European control. Abd-el-Krim himself was captured and sent into exile on the French island of Réunion, in the Indian Ocean. In 1947, while on his way to France, he escaped on an Australian ship to take refuge in Cairo. He announced (1948) a decision to renew his struggle against European control of North Africa.

Abdemon (ab′dē.mon). [Also, Abdesmun.] By ancient tradition, a Tyrian, the subject of King Hiram of Tyre. He allegedly vindicated his country's honor and won a wager for his ruler by answering a series of riddles put to Hiram by King Solomon, and by posing riddles which Solomon was unable to answer. Despite Solomon's earlier success with riddles set by Hiram, and Hiram's inability to solve the problems set by Solomon, Abdemon's success was considered to have won the contest for the Tyrian monarch and the forfeit was paid by Solomon.

Abdenago (ab.den'ạ.gō). See Abed-nego.

Abdera (ab.dir'ạ). [Greek, Avdera.] In ancient geography, a maritime city in Thrace, on Cape Balastra, opposite the island of Thasos in NE Greece. Although there is an ancient legend that it was founded by Hercules, it is now known actually to have been colonized (c650 B.C.) by people from Clazomenae. Destroyed sometime before 550 B.C. by Thrace, it was resettled (c540) by refugees from the Persian occupation of Teos, and became during the next 200 years one of the most prosperous of Greek cities. It thereafter declined in importance, and the ancient city is now entirely in ruins, although a small agricultural community still occupies part of the original site. It was thought in ancient times that the air of the region caused people to become dull, and from this came a folk belief among the ancient Greeks that all Abderites were stupid. This conviction persisted despite the fact that a number of famous men, including Protagoras and Democritus, were either born at or residents of Abdera.

Abdera. Ancient name of Adra.

Abderhalden (äb'dėr.häl.dẹn), Emil. b. in Switzerland, 1877—. Swiss biochemist and physiologist. His extensive work in the field of nutrition, especially with proteins and amino acids, includes discovery of norleucine and of protective enzymes (proteinasas). He is the editor of Handbuch der Biologischen Arbeitsmethoden, a handbook of biochemical techniques in nine volumes (1910 et seq.), and director (1911 et seq.) of the Halle Physiological Institute.

"Abderite (ab'dẹ.rīt), The." An epithet of Democritus.

Abd-er-Rahman (äbd.ėr.rä'män). [Also: Abd-al-Rahman, Abd-ar-Rahman, Abdurrahman.] d. 732. Moslem emir (731–732) of Spain and governor (721 et seq.) of southern Gaul. He invaded France with a large army, but was defeated and slain (732) by Charles Martel near Tours.

Abd-er-Rahman. b. Nov. 28, 1778; d. in August, 1859. Sultan of Fez and Morocco (1822–59). The piracy practiced in the Mediterranean trade routes by his subjects involved him at intervals throughout his reign in conflicts with Austria, England, and Spain. He supported Abd-al-Kadir (c1807–83) against France, but made peace after a decisive defeat (1844).

Abd-er-Rahman I. [Also: Abd-al-Rahman, Abd-ar-Rahman, Abdurrahman.] b. at Damascus, 731; d. 788. Founder (756) of the Ommiad dynasty of emirs of Córdoba, Spain. He survived the overthrow by the Abbassides of the Ommiad dynasty of caliphs, and took refuge in Syria. Invited by a faction of Arabs in Spain to be their sovereign, he quickly established his power in that country by overcoming (756) the rival emir Yusuf in a battle near the Guadalquivir River. He was thereafter successful in several encounters with the Franks, but never actually met Charlemagne in battle. (In the one instance when a meeting seemed inevitable, Charlemagne withdrew before battle was joined. According to legend, however, this was the occasion of the gallant stand of the Frankish rearguard that gave rise to the Song of Roland.) Abd-er-Rahman I is also generally credited with having begun construction of the great mosque which still stands at Córdoba.

Abd-er-Rahman II. [Also: Abd-al-Rahman, Abd-ar-Rahman, Abdurrahman.] b. 788; d. 852. One of the emirs of the Ommiad dynasty at Córdoba, Spain. He encouraged writing, painting, and architecture, but his rule (822–852) was marked, politically, by weakness and vacillation.

Abd-er-Rahman III. [Also: Abd-al-Rahman, Abd-ar-Rahman, Abdurrahman.] b. 891; d. in Spain, 961. Ommiad ruler of Córdoba (912–961), the first to assume (929) the title of caliph, which had previously been used only by the rulers of the holy cities of Islam. He strengthened and centralized the government; a great patron of the arts and sciences, he made Córdoba a center of European learning and brought Moslem Spain to the height of its power.

Abd-er-Rahman Khan (kän). [Also, Abdurrahman Khan.] b. c1844; d. Oct. 1, 1901. Amir of Afghanistan (1880–1901); grandson of Dost Mohammed Khan (1793–1863). He came to the throne partly as a result of the Second Afghan War (1878–81) with Great Britain, during which the British coöperated in his installation as amir at Kabul. He later consolidated his control, ruling independently except for the British Indian government's voice in foreign affairs. He established a strong national army, set up efficient tax collection, and brought about a considerable reduction of crime. It was in his reign also that border clashes with Russia (1885) and India (1893) resulted in the fixing by Great Britain of the boundaries of Afghanistan.

Abdias (ab.dī'ạs). See Obadiah.

Abdiel (ab'di.el). Seraph in Milton's Paradise Lost (v. 896), the only seraph who remained loyal when Satan stirred up the angels to revolt. He is mentioned also by the Jewish cabalists.

Abdi-Milkut (äb'dē.mil.köt'). fl. 7th century B.C. King of Sidon, a contemporary and dependent ruler of Esar-Haddon, king of Assyria (c681–668 B.C.). He attempted to repudiate his allegiance to Assyria, was attacked, and, after a prolonged resistance, fled, probably to the island of Cyprus. He was caught and decapitated in 676.

Abdool (äb'döl). See under Abd.

Abduction from the Seraglio (se.ral'yō, -räl'-), The. [German title, Die Entführung aus dem Serail.] Opera (1782) by Mozart, with libretto based on a play by Bretzner. It is a romance, set in the 16th century, of Belmonte's rescue of his sweetheart, Constanze, who has been captured by Selim Pasha.

Abdul-, Abdu-l- (äb'dul). See under Abd.

Abdul-Aziz (äb'dul.ä.zēz'). b. Feb. 9, 1830; d. June 4, 1876. Sultan of Turkey (1861–76). He was the brother and successor of Abdul-Medjid (1823–61). He is sometimes credited with attempts to Westernize Turkey, and he displayed an interest in some aspects of European culture on his tour (1867) of France, England, Austria, and Germany. Nevertheless, few reforms were actually made, and the financial position of the country reached in 1875 a point so hopeless that Turkey was unable to pay the interest on its bonds. Partly as a result of this, and partly because of widespread unrest in Turkey's Balkan possessions, he was deposed on May 29, 1876. He died (probably murdered, but possibly a suicide) a few days thereafter.

Abdul-Aziz IV. See Abd-al-Aziz IV.

Abdul Baha (äb'dul bä.hä'). [Also: Abbas Effendi; as an English knight, Sir Abdul Baha Bahai.] b. 1844; d. 1921. International Bahai leader and son of Baha Ulla, originator of the Bahai sect. He was exiled and imprisoned (1868–1908) by the Turks at Acre, in Palestine, but meanwhile became (1892) leader of Bahaism on his father's death. He was liberated during the "Young Turk" regime and won international acceptance for Bahaism through world-wide preaching (1911–13). He was knighted (1920) by Great Britain for various services to that country during World War I.

Abdul-Hafiz (äb'dul.hä.fēz'). See Abd-al-Hafid.

Abdul-Hamid I (äb'dul.hä.mēd'). b. May 30, 1725; d. April 7, 1789. Sultan of Turkey (1774–89). He inherited from his brother and predecessor, Mustafa III, a disastrous war with Russia which, by the treaty of Kuchuk Kainarji (1774), resulted in the loss by Turkey of the Crimea and adjacent regions.

Abdul-Hamid II. [Called the "Great Assassin" and the "Red Sultan."] b. Sept. 22, 1842; d. 1918. Sultan of Turkey (1876–1909); second son of Abdul-Medjid (1823–61), brother and successor of the insane Murad V (1840–1904), and nephew of Abdul-Aziz (1830–76), whom he accompanied (1867) on a European tour. Possessed of considerable astuteness and a notable capacity for international intrigue, he was determined to share the reins of government with no one, for which reason his early promise of reforms was soon abandoned. Nevertheless, his bloody suppression of uprisings in Bulgaria and elsewhere led to protests by the great European powers, and finally to the temporary restoration of the constitution of 1876. In the meantime, war with Russia (1877–78) had ended with the Treaty of San Stefano by which, as later modified by the Berlin Treaty, Turkey lost considerable territory in Europe and Asia. Called the "Great Assassin" and the "Red Sultan" by many western European newspapers for his part in the Armenian atrocities of 1894–96, he nonetheless escaped punishment for the treaty violation implicit in these atrocities by his shrewd intrigues among the great powers. He exchanged favors to German business, especially in connection with the proposed Berlin-to-Baghdad railway, for aid in reorganization of the Turkish army and navy. A true despot, with an army of spies, he was finally forced by the reformist political faction known as the "Young Turks" to abdicate (1909), was exiled, and later imprisoned.

Abdul Illah (äb'dul il.lä'). [Also, Abdul Ilah.] b. Nov. 24, 1913—. Regent of Iraq (1939 et seq.) during the minority of King Feisal II (b. 1935), his nephew.

Abdul-Kerim Pasha (äb'dul.ke.rēm' pä.shä'). b. 1811; d. 1885. Turkish general. He was honored for his services in the Crimean War (1853–56) and against the Serbians (1876), but was banished for his failure as Turkish commander in the Russian war of 1877–78.

Abdulla (ab.dul'ą). Malay trader in Outcast of the Islands and Almayer's Folly, by Joseph Conrad.

Abdullah (ab.dul'ą, äb.döl.lä'). See also Abdallah.

Abdullah. [Full name, Abdullah ibn-Husein (äb.döl.lä' ib"n.hö.sīn').] b. at Mecca, Arabia, 1882; assassinated at Jerusalem, July 20, 1951. King of Hashemite Jordan (in popular usage, often called the king of Transjordan, or Trans-Jordan, but since 1949, at his request and in accord with the constitution of his country, "Hashemite Jordan" or, simply, "Jordan" have been more often used). The son of Husein, a Hashemite leader who was crowned king of Hejaz after World War I, Abdullah was one of the Arab leaders who revolted against Turkey during World War I and who supported the British during that war in the Near East. As emir of Transjordan (1921–46) he maintained close relations with the British, receiving from them an annual subsidy and aid in maintaining the so-called "Arab Legion," the small, efficient army which has made Transjordan one of the most powerful states in its part of the world. He became king of Jordan in 1946. For some 30 years a bitter rival of ibn-Saud of Saudi Arabia for leadership and territory in the Arab world, Abdullah after World War II, and particularly in connection with opposition to the state of Israel, took a leading part in the loose federation of Arab states known as the Arab League. His assassination in the summer of 1951 was alleged to have taken place at the instigation of the Grand Mufti, a prominent Arab leader resident at Cairo, notable for both his anti-British convictions (which would by themselves have tended to alienate him from the pro-British Abdullah) and for his opposition to the Hashemite dynasty of Arab rulers.

Abdullah (ab.dul'ą), Achmed. b. (probably) at Yalta, in the Crimea, May 12, 1881; d. at New York, May 12, 1945. Novelist and short-story writer. Educated at Eton, Oxford, the University of Paris, and elsewhere, he served with the British army in the Near East, India, China, and France before becoming a writer. He produced a vast amount of superficial but quick-moving and colorful fiction, and also contributed works to the stage and, during his later years, to the films.

Abdullah (ab.dul'ą, äb.döl.lä'), Sheik Mohammed. [Called "Sher-i-Kashmir."] b. at Srinagar, in Kashmir, 1905—. Indian Moslem leader, prominent as head of the movement in Kashmir to accede to the Union of India.

Abdullah ibn-Yasin (äb.döl.lä' ib"n.yä.sēn'). See Abdallah ibn-Yasin.

Abdul-Medjid I (äb'dul.me.jēd'). [Also, Abdul-Mejid.] b. April 23, 1823; d. June 25, 1861. Sultan of Turkey (1839–61); brother of Abdul-Aziz (1830–76), his successor, and father of Murad V (1840–1904) and Abdul-Hamid II (1842–1914). Defeated in war (1839) by Mehemet Ali, viceroy of Egypt, at what is now the town of Nizip, in S Turkey, he was protected from the consequences of his defeat by the intervention (1840) of England, Austria, and Russia. He promulgated the documents of Turkish constitutional reform known as the Hatti-sherif of Gülhanè (the imperial palace whence it was formally announced) in 1839, and the Hatti-y-humayun (1856), which avowedly guaranteed security of life and property, impartial justice, and civil and religious liberty to his subjects. He also introduced certain fiscal, educational, and military reforms, which were, however, imperfectly enforced, because of strong opposition by the privileged classes. He sheltered Kossuth after the Hungarian uprising of 1849. Influenced to some extent throughout his reign by the British foreign office and its representatives in Turkey, he was the ruler of Turkey during the Crimean War (1853–56). Thereafter, by increasing extravagance, he helped to bring on the financial disintegration of Turkey that took place during the latter part of the 19th century.

Abdul-Medjid (II) Effendi (e.fen'di). b. 1868—. Last Turkish caliph at Constantinople. He served (1922–24) as caliph after the national assembly at Ankara abolished the office of sultan and provided that the caliphate should be filled by election from among the princes of the Osmanli (or Ottoman) dynasty. When the assembly dissolved (March 2, 1924) the Turkish caliphate and deprived him of his Turkish citizenship, he took up residence in Switzerland.

Abdul-Mumin (äb'dul.mö'min). [Also, Abd-al-Mumin.] b. in Africa, c1101; d. 1163. Arab chief, political founder of the Almohade dynasty, and claimant (1130–63) to the title of caliph. A disciple of and successor to Mohammed ibn-Tumart (the spiritual founder of the Almohades), he extended his power into Morocco and Algeria (1139–47), and, by defeating the Almoravides, into Spain (1148 et seq.).

Abdul the Bulbul Ameer (ab'dul ŦHę böl'böl ä.mir'). [Also: Abdul the Bul Bul Ameer, Abul Abulbul Ameer, and many others.] Humorous song popular for several generations in American schools and colleges. Some authorities have considered that it may have had its original inspiration in the Crimean War. It recounts the tale of a fabulous contest between the Moslem Abdul and the Cossack Ivan Skivinsky Skivar (whose name also exists in innumerable variant forms, some of which are covered by Carl Sandburg in his American Songbag). It begins

> The sons of the Prophet are hardy and bold,
> And quite unaccustomed to fear;
> But of all the most reckless of life and of limb
> Was Abdul the Bulbul Ameer. . . .

Abdurrahman (äb.dur.rä'män). See Abd-er-Rahman.

Abdurrahman, Abu Zeid. See ibn-Khaldun.

Abdurrahman Khan (kän). See Abd-er-Rahman Khan.

Abe (ä.be), Isoo. b. in Fukuoka prefecture, Japan, Feb. 4, 1865; d. at Tokyo, Feb. 10, 1949. Japanese politician, known as the "father of baseball" in Japan. Educated in Japan and the U.S., he served as professor of political economy at Waseda University until 1926, and also as head of the baseball department at that institution.

Abe, Nobuyuki. b. in Ishikawa prefecture, Japan, 1875—. Japanese general and government official. Twice prime minister (August-September, 1939, and September, 1939-January, 1940), he is sometimes held to have been a member of Japan's peace-seeking group because of his statement (August, 1939) that Japan would have no part in Europe's war. Later (1944–45) governor general of Korea, he was removed from office and arrested by U.S. troops under Lieutenant General John R. Hodge.

Abecedarians (ā"bē.sē.dār'i.ąnz). German Anabaptist sect of the 16th century, led by Nicholas Stork, a Zwickau weaver. Members of the sect rejected all learning, even down to the alphabet, as a hindrance to religion, and claimed possession of mystically revealed truth superseding the Bible. Their tendency to back up with actual deeds their predicted overthrow of existing governments did not increase their popularity with the civil authorities of the time.

Abéché (ą.bā.shā). [Also, Abeshr.] Caravan center and principal town in Wadai, in the C Sudan, situated in the E central part of the Chad territory (formerly a colony), French Equatorial Africa, near the border of Darfur, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. It became a portion of the colony of Chad under French rule in 1920, although it had already been under French control for 17 years in an unaffiliated status.

à Becket (ą bek'ęt), Thomas. See Thomas à Becket.

à Beckett (ą bek'ęt), Arthur William. b. 1844; d. 1909. British playwright, journalist, and lawyer; son of Gilbert Abbott à Beckett. Author of The À Becketts of Punch, (1903).

à Beckett, Gilbert Abbott. b. at London, Jan. 9, 1811; d. at Boulogne, France, Aug. 30, 1856. British lawyer and journalist, chiefly noted for his contributions to Punch, although he also wrote for the London Times. Author of à Beckett, Gilbert Arthur. b. 1837; d. 1891. British playwright and journalist, a member (1879 et seq.) of the staff of Punch; son of Gilbert Abbott à Beckett. In addition to his contributions to Punch, he wrote works for the stage, most notably The Happy Land (1873), in collaboration with W. S. Gilbert.

Comic History of England (1848), Comic History of Rome (1852), and others.

Abed-nego (ą.bed′nē.gō). [Also: Abednego; in Douay Version, Abdenago.] In the Old Testament, one of the three Hebrews (Shadrach and Meshach were the others) cast by Nebuchadnezzar into the fiery furnace. By intervention of an angel, all three were miraculously delivered unharmed from the flames. Abed-nego's Hebrew name was Azariah, Abed-nego being substituted for it by the prince of the eunuchs of the king of Babylon. Dan. i. 7.

Abegg (ä′bek), Julius Friedrich Heinrich. b. at Erlangen, Bavaria, March 27, 1796; d. at Breslau, May 29, 1868. German jurist, author of Versuch einer Geschichte der preussischen Çivilprozessgesetzgebung (1848), and others.

Abegg, Richard Wilhelm Heinrich. b. at Danzig, 1869; d. in Pomerania, 1910. German physical and inorganic chemist. He outlined a valency theory (with Bodländer, 1899), and carried out experiments on the freezing points of various solutions, ice's dielectric constant, and potentials in nonaqueous solutions (with Neustadt). He was a professor (1909–10) at Breslau.

Abeilard (ab′ę.lärd), Peter. See Abelard, Peter.

Abel (ā′bęl). In the Old Testament, the second son of Adam, slain by his brother Cain. Gen. iv. 1–8.

Abel (ä′bęl), Carl. b. at Berlin, Nov. 25, 1837; d. 1906. German comparative philologist. He was Ilchester lecturer on comparative lexicography at Oxford, and served as Berlin correspondent of the London Times and Standard. Author of Linguistic Essays (1880) and others.

Abel (ā′bęl), Sir Frederick Augustus. b. at Woolwich (now part of London), 1827; d. at London, 1902. English chemist, notable as a specialist in explosives. He was the inventor (with Sir James Dewar) of cordite and of the Abel test for the flash point of petroleum. He also developed improved techniques for the manufacture of guncotton. Professor at the Royal Military Academy (1851–55); war department chemist (1854–88); president of the Institute of Chemistry and other learned societies.

Abel (ä′bęl), Heinrich Friedrich Otto. b. at Reichenbach, Württemberg, Jan. 22, 1824; d. at Leonberg, Württemberg, Oct. 28, 1854. German historian. He was a collaborator on the Monumenta Germaniae historica, and author of König Philipp der Hohenstaufe (1852) and others.

Abel (ā′bęl), John Jacob. b. at Cleveland, Ohio, May 19, 1857; d. May 26, 1938. American pioneer in endocrinology and modern physiological chemistry. He is credited with having first produced insulin in its crystalline form, and with having isolated (1926) the pituitary hormone. His finding of amino acids in the blood stream, as well as his work with adrenal glands (which facilitated Takamine's development of adrenalin and in connection with which he himself isolated epinephrine), made him a leader in international science. He was professor of pharmacology at Johns Hopkins (1893–1932), and thereafter professor emeritus and director of that university's Laboratory for Endocrine Research.

Abel (ä′bęl), Joseph. b. at Aschach, Austria, 1768; d. at Vienna, Oct. 4, 1818. Austrian historical and portrait painter.

Abel, Karl Friedrich. b. at Köthen, Germany, 1725; d. at London, June 20, 1787. German composer, notable as a performer on the viola da gamba. He studied under Johann Sebastian Bach at Leipzig, and was later court musician to the elector of Saxony (1748–58) and to Queen Charlotte of England (1758 et seq.). He conducted (c1764 et seq.) Bach and Abel concerts at London.

Abel (ā′bęl), Mr. The narrator and chief male character of Green Mansions, by William Henry Hudson.

Abel (ä′bęl), Niels Henrik. b. at Findø, Norway, Aug. 5, 1802; d. near Arendal, Norway, April 6, 1829. Norwegian mathematician, a leader in improving methods of analysis, and noted especially for his researches on elliptic functions. His complete works, edited by Holmbø, were published in 1839.

Abel (ā′bęl), Thomas. See Abell, Thomas.

Abela (ab′ę.lą). An ancient name of Ávila, city.

Abelard (ab′ę.lärd), Peter. [French, Pierre Abélard (ą.bā.lär); Latinized, Petrus Abelardus; older spellings, Abaelard, Abailard, Abeilard.] b. of a noble family at Pallet (Palais) near Nantes, France, 1079; d. at the abbey of St. Marcel near Châlons-sur-Saône, April 21, 1142. French logician, philosopher, theologian, and teacher.

Life. Abelard was the eldest son of a minor vassal in Brittany. His father had some education and wanted his children to have more, so he gave his son the best instruction available in the district. Abelard became inflamed with the desire for knowledge and abandoned his birthright, preferring to spend the rest of his life in study rather than to take over the government of the family estates. After he left home, he wandered about France, studying under various masters, especially William of Champeaux, a leader of the realist school of philosophy; he may also have studied under Roscellin of Compiègne. He soon attacked the views of William of Champeaux and forced him to modify his position. At the age of twenty-two he opened a school of his own at Melun. Finally, he reached Paris where he finished his work in logic and taught there with considerable success. Employed by Fulbert, a canon of Paris, to supervise the education of his niece Héloïse, Abelard fell in love with his pupil and seduced her. Her uncle eventually learned of the affair and forced Abelard to marry her. Abelard tried to keep the marriage secret and persuaded Héloïse to hide herself in a convent. Fearing that Abelard planned to repudiate Héloïse, Fulbert hired some ruffians who broke into Abelard's house at night and castrated him. Abelard then took refuge in monastic life at St. Denis. Cited (1121) before the Synod of Soissons on a charge of disseminating Sabellianism (explanation of the doctrine of the Trinity on philosophical principles) and compelled to burn his Introductio ad Theologiam, he retired to Nogent-sur-Seine, where he was sought out by devoted students who built for him the Oratory of the Paraclete. Abbot of St. Gildas, Brittany, from 1125 to c1134, he was accused (1140) of heresy at the Council of Sens by Bernard of Clairvaux (who believed that faith must be mystical and intuitive rather than rationalistic) and was condemned by the Council in 1141, and, finally, in Rome by the Pope in 1142. Abelard was buried at the Paraclete and in 1164 Héloïse was buried there also at the side of her lover. They are now supposed to be buried in the Père Lachaise, Paris, where their tomb is shown to visitors.

Philosophy and Writings. Abelard defended a sort of compromise between Roscellin's nominalism and Champeaux's extreme realism; this middle doctrine, called conceptualism, was a sort of mitigated and disguised nominalism (universals exist, but only as concepts in the minds of men, and previous to that, in the mind of God). Partly because of Abelard's eloquence and dialectical power, partly because of its intermediate nature, this doctrine became very popular; it remained for three centuries (the twelfth to the fourteenth) the favorite solution of the problem of universals. Though Abelard's views were less objectionable to the Church than pure nominalism, they were repeatedly condemned. Abelard's philosophy is best expressed in his Glossulae super Porphyrium. His dialectical attitude is illustrated by the Sic et Non (Yes and No), a collection of scriptural and patristic extracts showing the pro and con of a number of theological and casuistic questions. Abelard exposed these contradictions without trying to solve them. He was essentially a dialectician and may be considered one of the founders of the scholastic method; his teaching prepared for the reception of Aristotle and the Aristotelian supremacy. His own work was done before the arrival of Arabic philosophy—either in Latin or in Hebrew; it is interesting to note that he deplored the fact that the latter language was generally unknown.

Summary. Abelard was the completely questioning mind for whom reason was superior to faith. He was a rationalist but not a freethinker; he relied on orthodox authorities and not on his own observation. He never denied the doctrines of the Church, though he loved to reason about them. His methods and many of his results were adopted by later theologians who were never accused of heresy. Abelard's method of collecting arguments on both sides of a question was followed by all theologians of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. For example, Peter Lombard, who wrote the first of the great theological encyclopedias, the Book of Sentences, cited authorities, pro and con, for every statement, but he did one thing more—he indicated a preferred solution to the problem. This was safer than Abelard's system of leaving the question open for discussion, for it affirmed the orthodoxy of the writer.

Abel de Pujol (ȧ.bel dẹ pü.zhol), Alexandre Denis. b. at Valenciennes, France, c1785; d. at Paris, Sept. 28, 1861. French historical painter, a pupil of Jacques Louis David.

Abelin (ä′bẹ.lin), Johann Philipp. [Pseudonyms: Philipp Arlanibäus, Johann Ludwig Gottfried, or Gothofredus.] b. at Strasbourg; d. c1635. German historian, founder of Theatrum Europaeum, a 21-volume serial work on contemporary history, later carried forward by Schieder, Oräus, and others into the 18th century, and illustrated by Matthäus Merian (1593–1650). He was the author also of a history of the West Indies, Historia Antipodum, and other works.

Abe Lincoln in Illinois. Play by Robert Sherwood, produced in 1938 and published in 1939, when it was awarded a Pulitzer prize. A simple chronicle play, in many scenes, covering the years between 1830 and Lincoln's election to the presidency, there is no extraneous comment in the text, simply the implication that in the figure of Lincoln there is an imperishable example of faith and courage.

Abelites (ä′bẹl.īts). [Also: Abelonites, Abelonians, Abelians (ab′ẹ.lọn.īts, ā.bẹl.ō′ni.ạnz, ạ.bē′li.ạnz).] Christian sect in Africa which spurned procreation in order not to perpetuate inherited sin, following the traditional example of Abel, son of Adam. Abelite couples, in order to continue their sect, would adopt the children of others. The sect is mentioned (c400) by Augustine as having within recent years utterly disappeared.

Abell (ä′bẹl), Arunah Shepherdson. b. at East Providence, R. I., Aug. 10, 1806; d. at Baltimore, Md., April 19, 1888. American printer and newspaper publisher. After an apprenticeship (1822 et seq.) on the Providence Patriot and a period as a journeyman printer at Boston and New York, he formed an association with William M. Swain and Azariah H. Simmons to found a paper patterned on the highly successful New York Sun, first of the American "penny papers." The Philadelphia Public Ledger (March 24, 1836) and Baltimore Sun (May 17, 1837) were the result, the latter entirely managed by Abell although owned jointly with Swain and Simmons.

Abell (ä′bẹl), Kjeld. b. at Ribe, Denmark, Aug. 28, 1901—. Danish dramatist, notable in his own country and elsewhere as an innovator of new and popular stage techniques. His Melodien der blev væk (1935; Eng. trans., The Melody That Got Lost, 1939) is a tuneful revue-drama suggesting the evanescence of youth, while his Anna Sophie Hedvig (1939) is a serious study of the spirit of resistance to all forms of tyranny.

Abell (ä′bẹl), Thomas. [Also, Abel.] Executed at Smithfield, London, July 30, 1540. Roman Catholic clergyman, a rector at Bradwell, Essex, and chaplain to Catherine of Aragon, wife of Henry VIII. He actively supported the queen in her endeavor to prevent the divorce sought by Henry, and was thereupon condemned and executed on a charge of concealing the alleged treason of Elizabeth Barton, called the "Nun of Kent." Author of Invicta veritas (c1532).

Abellinum (ab.ẹ.lī′num). Latin name of Avellino, city.

Abe Martin (āb′ mär′tin). Character in the newspaper columns and humorous books by Frank McKinney Hubbard.

Abenak (ab.ẹ.näk′) or Abenaki (ab.ẹ.nä′kē). See Abnaki.

Abencérages (ȧ.bäṅ.sā.rȧzh). Opera by Cherubini, with a libretto by Jouy. First performed (1813) for Napoleon I, at the Paris Opéra, it is now infrequently played, except for the overture. Its basis is the tragic story of the famous family of Spanish Moors called, in English, the Abencerrages.

Abencerrages (ạ.ben′sẹ.rāj.iz). [Spanish, Abencerrajes (ä.ʙen.thä.rä′ʜäs).] Moorish family in Granada, famous in Spanish romance. The tale of the struggle of the Abencerrages with the family of the Zegris, and of their final destruction in the Alhambra near the end of the period of Moslem rule in Granada, is recounted by Pérez de Hita (as a story based on history, but not as actual fact) in his Historia de las guerras civiles de Granada (1595). The accounts of this family later served as the groundwork of a romance by Chateaubriand (1826) and of an opera by Cherubini (1813).

Åbenrå (ô′bẹn.rô). See Aabenraa.

Åbenrå-Sönderborg (-sên′nėr.bôrg). See Aabenraa-Sønderborg.

Abensberg (ä′bẹns.berk). [Latin, Castra Abusina.] City in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Kreis (district) of Lower Bavaria-Upper Palatinate, situated on the Abens River, ab. 18 mi. SW of Regensburg. A center of the Lower Bavarian hops trade, it has ferruginous thermal springs and a brewery. Its Gothic town hall has attracted some tourist interest. It was the scene of a victory (April 20, 1809) by Napoleon I over the Austrians under the archduke Louis. 4,010 (1946).

Abeokuta (ab″ē.ō.kō′tạ). [Also: Abbeokuta.] City in W Africa, in Nigeria, capital, chief trading center, and principal town of Abeokuta province, Western Provinces. Under British control, it is situated approximately 64 mi. N of Lagos. Founded (c1830) by members of the Egba tribe of Yorubas seeking refuge from slave hunters, its government was semi-autonomous for much of the 19th century. 54,000 (est. 1950).

Aber (ab′ėr). Element in many place names of ancient British origin, signifying "a confluence of waters," either of two rivers or of a river with the sea, as in Aberdeen, Aberdour, Abergavenny, Aberystwyth, and others.

Aberavon (ab.ėr.ā′vọn). Former municipal borough, now officially comprising two wards of Port Talbot, in S Wales, in Glamorganshire, situated near the mouth of the river Avon, on Swansea Bay (an inlet of Bristol Channel), ab. 7 mi. E of Swansea. It has no direct rail connections for passengers, except through Port Talbot, ab. 178 mi. W of London. Situated in the South Wales coal field, the community has large manufacturing works, and easy access to iron ore from mines in the vicinity. 16,848 (1931).

Aberbrothock (ab″ėr.brọ.thok′) or Aberbrothwick (ab.ėr.broth′ik). Former names of Arbroath.

Abercarn (ab.ėr.kärn′). Urban district in W England, in Monmouthshire, ab. 10 mi. NW of Newport, ab. 144 mi. W of London by rail: tin-plating factories; coal mining. 18,757 (1951).

Aberconway (ab′ėr.kon.wā). See Conway, Wales.

Abercorn (ab′ėr.kôrn). Civil parish in S Scotland, in West Lothian, situated on the Firth of Forth, ab. 10 mi. W of Edinburgh. It was the seat of a bishopric from 681 to 685. Pop. 775 (1931).

Abercrombie (ab′ėr.krom.bi, -krum.bi), James. See Abercromby, James (1706–81).

Abercrombie, John. b. at Aberdeen, Scotland, Oct. 10, 1780; d. at Edinburgh, Nov. 14, 1844. Scottish physician, pathologist, and philosophical writer. He was the author of Pathological and Practical Researches on Diseases of the Brain and Spinal Cord (1828), Pathological and Practical Researches on Diseases of the Stomach, the Intestinal Canal, etc. (1828), Enquiries Concerning the Intellectual Powers and the Investigation of Truth (1830), Philosophy of the Moral Feelings (1883), and others.

Abercrombie, Lascelles. b. at Ashton-on-Mersey, Cheshire, England, Jan. 9, 1881; d. at London, Oct. 27, 1938. British poet, critic, playwright, and professor. He taught English literature at the universities of Leeds (1922–29) and London (1929–35). Abercrombie did not attempt to sever himself completely from the Victorian tradition; there are, in fact, many signs of Browning's influence on him. He made frequent use of the dialogue form in his verse, which included Interludes and Poems (1908), Emblems of Love (1912), and Twelve Idylls (1928). Of his six plays from The Adder (1913) to Phoenix (1923), the best-known and the best-liked was Deborah (1913). Perhaps The Sale of Saint Thomas (published in part in 1911 but not entire till 1930) is the most memorable. His reputation was academic rather than popular, and his hold upon the intellectuals was strengthened by his work in criticism and aesthetics: An Essay towards a Theory of Art (1922), Principles of English Prosody (1923), The Idea of Great Poetry (1925), Romanticism (1926), and Principles of Literary Criticism (1932).

Abercrombie, Sir Leslie Patrick. b. 1879—. British architect and town planner, a member of the comimttee appointed to supervise post-World War II reconstruction of London and Plymouth.

Abercromby (ab'ėr.krom.bi, -krum.bi), David. d. c1702. Scottish physician and philosophical writer. Author of A Discourse of Wit (1685), and a medical treatise (1684) which was translated into French, Dutch, and German.

Abercromby, James. [Also, Abercrombie.] b. at Glassaugh, Banffshire, Scotland, 1706; d. at Stirling, Scotland, April 28, 1781. British army officer. He served (1756 et seq.) against the French in Canada, as second in command (1756–58) and as commander of all British troops in America (1758). In this same year, however, a costly defeat in the assault on Fort Ticonderoga led to his replacement by Jeffrey Amherst and recall to England.

Abercromby, James. [Title, 1st Baron Dunfermline.] b. Nov. 7, 1776; d. in Midlothian, Scotland, April 17, 1858. British lawyer and politician; third son of Sir Ralph Abercromby (1734–1801). He entered Parliament in 1807, and was subsequently appointed judge-advocate-general (1827), chief baron of exchequer of Scotland (1830), master of the mint (1834), and speaker of House of Commons (1835). Author of a memoir (1861) on his father.

Abercromby, Sir John. b. 1772; d. at Marseilles, Feb. 14, 1817. English soldier; second son of Sir Ralph Abercromby (1734–1801). He served in Flanders (1793–94), was arrested by Napoleon and imprisoned at Verdun in 1803, was exchanged in 1808, and was appointed commander in chief at Bombay in 1809. He captured Mauritius in 1810.

Abercromby, Patrick. b. at Forfar, Scotland, 1656; d. c1716. Scottish physician, antiquarian, and historian. He was the author of Martial Achievements of the Scots Nation (1711–16), pamphlets in favor of the union with England, and others.

Abercromby, Sir Ralph. b. at Menstry, Clackmannan, Scotland, Oct. 7, 1734; d. near Alexandria, Egypt, March 28, 1801. British general, generally considered to have been an expert on military discipline and efficiency. He was commander in chief in the West Indies (1795–97).

Abercromby, Sir Robert. b. at Tullibody, Clackmannan, Scotland, 1740; d. at Airthrey, near Stirling, Scotland, in November, 1827. British general; brother of Sir Ralph Abercromby (1734–1801). He served in the French and Indian War, and in the Revolutionary War (at the battles of Brooklyn, Brandywine, and Germantown, and later at Charleston and Yorktown). He subsequently (1792 et seq.) commanded in India.

Aberdare (ab.ėr.dār'). Urban district, market town, and coal-mining center in S Wales, in Glamorganshire, situated at the confluence of the rivers Dar and Cynon, ab. 4 mi. SW of Merthyr Tydfyl, ab. 163 mi. W of London by rail. It was a center of the British iron industry in the 19th century, until rail transportation made it more economical to smelt iron elsewhere. Since that time (c1875) coal mining has been the major industry of the community. 40,916 (1951).

Aberdare, 1st Baron. Title of Bruce, Henry Austin.

Aberdeen (ab.ėr.dēn'). See also Aberdeenshire.

Aberdeen (ab'ėr.dēn). [Former name, Dundee.] City in NE Mississippi, county seat of Monroe County, on the Tombigbee River, ab. 125 mi. SE of Memphis, in a cotton-growing area. It was a thriving plantation town before the Civil War, and the community still retains several excellent examples of the architecture of that period. 5,282 (1950).

Aberdeen (ab.ėr.dēn'). [Called the "Granite City," and "Silver City by the Sea."] City, royal burgh, seaport, holiday resort, and manufacturing and shipbuilding center in C Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, situated on the North Sea between the mouths of the rivers Dee and Don, ab. 131 mi. NE of Edinburgh, and ab. 524 mi. N of London by rail. It comprises Old Aberdeen (in the N portion of the city) and New Aberdeen (in the S portion). It is the county seat of Aberdeenshire, and the third-ranking town in Scotland in population. Aberdeen is the principal seaport in Scotland N of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and has had a long history of commerce with Europe, beginning at least as early as the 13th century. It is an important port in herring fishery and has large exports of the cured fish. Granite working is an important activity in the vicinity, both for local use (many houses in the city are built of granite) and for export. At the beginning of the 19th century Aberdeen was Scotland's principal shipbuilding center, specializing in clipper ships. It now builds smaller craft for the fisheries trade. Aberdeen has been an important Scottish cultural center since the Middle Ages and has a university over 400 years old (King's College, in Old Aberdeen, and Marischal College, in New Aberdeen). In more recent years the town has become one of the principal holiday resorts of Scotland. 188,853 (est. 1948).

Aberdeen (ab'ėr.dēn). City in NE South Dakota, county seat of Brown County, ab. 120 mi. NE of Pierre: second largest city in South Dakota; rail and truck distributing center for agricultural products. It is the seat of Northern State Teachers College. Hamlin Garland resided here at one time. 21,051 (1950).

Aberdeen. City in SW Washington, in Grays Harbor County, on the N shore of Grays Harbor, ab. 43 mi. W of Olympia: manufactures of paper, lumber products, and canned seafood. It was platted in 1884, but a settlement had been established on the site of the present city some 20 years earlier. 19,475 (1950).

Aberdeen (ab.ėr.dēn'), Old. Former registration district (abolished 1931) and historic community in C Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, situated on the S bank of the river Don at its mouth, ab. 1 mi. N of New Aberdeen. Together with New Aberdeen it forms the city and royal burgh of Aberdeen. It contains the Cathedral of Saint Machar, and King's College in the University of Aberdeen. The old cathedral (begun c1366) is now a parish church, with only the spacious nave remaining of the original building.

Aberdeen Proving Grounds (ab'ėr.dēn). Installation of the U.S. Army in N Maryland, NE of Baltimore. It is used for the testing and development of guns, tanks, and other heavy weapons.

Aberdeenshire (ab.ėr.dēn'shir) or Aberdeen (ab.ėr.dēn'). Maritime county in NE Scotland, bounded on the N and E by the North Sea, on the S by Kincardineshire, Angus, and Perthshire, on the W by Inverness-shire, and on the NW by Banffshire. The coastline is generally bold and rocky with few inlets or bays. The surface is hilly, becoming mountainous in the SW portion where it reaches an altitude of 4,296 ft. in Ben Macdhui. Much of the county is wooded, the most densely wooded portion of Scotland being on the Buchan Plateau in the E part of the county. In this county beef cattle are raised in some quantity, the meat being shipped largely to London. About one half of the total area of the county is under cultivation or in pasture. The most important commercial crop is oats, which are of fine quality; except for a little barley, the county produces no other grains in quantities sufficient to have commercial importance. However, some root crops are produced, such as potatoes, turnips, and rutabagas. The chief industries are agriculture and fisheries, notably of herring, whitefish, and salmon. Granite-working (especially in the vicinity of the city of Aberdeen) is also important. County seat, Aberdeen; area, ab. 1,971 sq. mi.; pop. 334,400 (est. 1949).

Aberdeen University (ab.ėr.dēn'). Incorporated under this name in 1860 as a union of King's College, which was founded in 1494 by Bishop Elphinstone at what is now called Old Aberdeen, and Marischal College, which was founded in 1593 by Earl Marischal in the newer part of the city. It included, by 1943, three readerships, 34 chairs, and 68 lectureships. Conjointly with the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, it sent, until after World War II, the three "Scottish Universities" members to Parliament.

Aberdour (ab.ėr.dör'). Civil parish and summer resort in C Scotland, in Fifeshire, situated on the N bank of the Firth of Forth, ab. 8 mi. N of Edinburgh, ab. 411 mi. N of London by rail. It has the ruins of Aberdour Castle nearby. 2,055 (1931).

Aberfoyle (ab.ėr.foil'). Civil parish in C Scotland, in Perthshire, situated on the river Forth, ab. 8 mi. SW of Callander, ab. 462 mi. N of London by rail. It figures in Scott's novel Rob Roy. 1,014 (1931).

Abergavenny (ab''ėr.gạ.ven'i). [Latin, Gobannium.] Municipal borough and market town in W England, in Monmouthshire, situated at the confluence of the rivers Gavenny and Usk, ab. 20 mi. N of Newport, ab. 153 mi. W of London by rail. During the 19th century it was important for its coal mines and ironworks, and as a market center, but has now lost much of its commercial importance. It was involved constantly in the border struggles of the Middle Ages and was burned (1404) by Owen Glendower. It has the ruins of a Norman castle, and also an ancient priory church containing the tombs and effigies of the lords of Bergavenny, once owners of the castle. 8,844 (1951).

Abergele (ab.ėr.gāl'). Urban district and market town in N Wales, in Denbighshire, ab. 5 mi. W of Rhyl, ab. 214 mi. NW of London by rail. It is a seaside resort, situated on the S shore of Liverpool Bay. 7,539 (1951).

Aberhart (ā'bėr.härt), William. b. near Seaforth, Ontario, 1878; d. at Vancouver, British Columbia, April 23, 1943. Canadian politician who served (1935–43) as premier of Alberta and there introduced a program of social credit based on the theories of C. H. Douglas. During his early career, he taught school at Brantford (1905–10) and Calgary (1910 et seq.).

Abernethy (ab.ėr.nē'thi, -neth'i). Police burgh in C Scotland, in Perthshire, ab. 7 mi. SE of Perth, ab. 442 mi. N of London by rail. It was in ancient times a seat of Culdee worship and a Pictish royal residence. The community has a round tower, said to date from the 10th century. 676 (est. 1948).

Abernethy, George. b. at New York, Oct. 7, 1807; d. May 2, 1877. American merchant, administrator, and first provisional governor (1845 et seq.) of what is now the state of Oregon. Chosen financial director of a Methodist mission in Oregon, he arrived there (1840) on the Lausanne with the earliest American colonizers. He established the first newspaper in the area, and embarked upon such commercial enterprises as fisheries and lumbering in successful rivalry with the Hudson's Bay Company. Twice (1845, 1847) elected governor of the provisional administrative machinery that preceded the territorial government, his administrations were marked by the Whitman massacre, retaliatory war against the Indians, and efforts to secure aid of Congress.

Abernethy, John. b. at Coleraine, Ireland, Oct. 19, 1680; d. in December, 1740. Irish Presbyterian clergyman, appointed (1717) by the synod to leave his parish at Antrim for one at Dublin. His refusal to obey caused a schism in Irish Presbyterianism which resulted (1726) in the separation of the "non-subscribers" (as those who refused to accept the authority of the ecclesiastical courts were called) from the main body of Presbyterians. Abernethy was, as might be expected from his position in this conflict, the author of several controversial writings on freedom of worship.

Abernethy, John. b. at London, April 3, 1764; d. at Enfield, England, April 28, 1831. English surgeon. He was a lecturer on anatomy and physiology at London's College of Surgeons (1814–17) and surgeon at St. Bartholomew's Hospital (1815–27). His medical works were collected (c1830) in five volumes. He is now perhaps best remembered for developing (1797) a technique for ligation of the external iliac artery.

Abershaw (ab'ėr.shô), Louis Jeremiah. [Also: Avershawe; called "Jerry."] b. c1773; d. 1795. English highwayman. He was for several years able to exact tribute from travelers by coach and horseback on the roads from London to Kingston and Wimbledon, which were then some ten miles SW of the city proper.

Abersychan (ab.ėr.suk'ạn). Former urban district, now in Pontypool, in W England, in Monmouthshire, ab. 147 mi. W of London by rail. It is a coal-mining town, and has ironworks. 25,748 (1931).

Abert (ā'bėrt), Hermann. b. at Stuttgart, Germany, March 25, 1871; d. there, 1927. German musicologist and teacher; son of Johann Joseph Abert (1832–1915). He was successor (1920) to the professorship held earlier and made famous by Hugo Riemann at Leipzig.

Abert (ā'bėrt), John James. b. probably at Shepherdstown, Va., Sept. 17, 1788; d. at Washington, D. C., Jan. 27, 1863. American topographical engineer. He assisted F. R. Hassler in topographical and geodetic surveys (to 1829) of rivers, harbors, and canals in the eastern U.S., and afterward (1831) became chief of the Topographical Bureau of the War Department. As commissioner (1832–34) for Indian affairs, he was instrumental in establishing western reservations. He was a cofounder and director of the National Institute of Science.

Aberteifi (ab.ėr.tī'vi). Welsh name of Cardigan.

Abertillery (ab.ėr.til'ėr.i). Urban district in W England, in Monmouthshire, ab. 15 mi. NW of Newport, ab. 151 mi. W of London by rail, in a coal and iron producing region. 27,617 (1951).

Aberystwyth (ab.ėr.ist'with). [Also, Aberystwith.] Municipal borough, seaport, seaside resort, and national cultural center in W Wales, in Cardiganshire, situated at the mouths of the rivers Ystwyth and Rheidol on Cardigan Bay, ab. 38 mi. NE of Cardigan, ab. 234 mi. W of London by rail. It is notable as the seat of the University College of Wales and of the Welsh National Library, which contains nearly a million books in addition to valuable manuscripts in Welsh. The Welsh National Library is one of six libraries entitled to receive a free copy of every book printed in the United Kingdom. 9,323 (1951).

Abeshr (a.besh'ėr). See Abéché.

Abessa (ạ.bes'ạ). Character in Spenser's Faerie Queene who personifies superstition and ecclesiastical corruption, particularly with reference to abbeys and convents.

Abetti (ä.bāt'tē), Giorgio. b. at Padua, Italy, Oct. 5, 1882—. Italian astronomer. Director (1922 et seq.) of the observatory at Arcetri, near Florence, he is noted for solar studies with a tower telescope. Author of Il Sole.

Abetz (ä'bets), Otto. b. 1903—. German government official and propaganda agent of the Nazi party. He was for several years (1932 et seq.) before the outbreak of World War II active as a German propagandist in France. At one time a student and teacher of drawing, he purported to be interested chiefly in cultural matters and in a better understanding by both France and Germany of each other's problems. He was expelled from France in 1935 but returned almost immediately as a member of the German diplomatic staff at Paris. After the fall of France in 1940 he was appointed German ambassador to the Pétain-Laval government at Vichy and also served as German commissioner for occupied France. After the liberation of France he was held by the French for trial as a war criminal. Convicted (July 22, 1949) at Paris of having taken part in the arrest and deportation of French army officers during the period 1940–45, he was sentenced to prison for 20 years.

Abgar (ab'gär). [Latinized, Abgarus (ab'gạ.rus).] An appellation of the kings of Edessa, used as was "Caesar" among the Romans, "Pharaoh" and "Ptolemy" in Egypt, and "Antiochus" in Syria. It is said that there were 29 Abgars and that the dynasty lasted from 99 B.C. to 217 A.D. According to Eusebius, Abgar V (who was called Ukkāmā or Ucomo, meaning "the Black") wrote to Christ asking him to take up his abode with him and to cure him of leprosy. Tradition has it that Christ promised to send him one of his disciples after his ascension, and accordingly, through Thomas, sent Thaddeus. By another account, the man who bore the message to Christ was a painter, and desired to make a portrait of Jesus, but was so dazzled by the splendor of his countenance that he was unable to carry out his plan. Thereupon Christ washed his face and dried it with a linen cloth, upon which his features were miraculously impressed. This cloth, according to the legend, was then taken back to Edessa by the messenger. These tales, and others, as well as the supposed correspondence of Abgar V, have been the cause of much discussion within Christian churches, but the letters are now considered by virtually all Christian sects to be spurious.

Abhiras (ab.hē'rạz). [Also, Abhira.] Term sometimes used as a generic name for the peoples inhabiting the NW coast of India, on the Arabian Sea E of the mouth of the Indus River. This region has been identified by some scholars with the Ophir of the Old Testament.

Abhorson (ab.hôr'sọn). An executioner in Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Abiad (äb'yäd), Bahr el. See White Nile.

Abiah or Abia (ą.bī'ą). See also Abijah (second king of Judah).

Abiah. [Also, Abijah.] The second son of Samuel, one of the judges whose injustice led to the establishment of the kingdom. 1 Sam. viii. 2, 1 Chron. vi. 28.

Abiathar (ą.bī'ą.thär). fl. probably c1000–980 B.C. In the Old Testament, a high priest of Israel, a supporter and companion of David during his exile, appointed for his services high priest conjointly with Zadok, the appointee of Saul. 1 Sam. xxii. 20, etc.

Abibe (ä.bē'be). See Dabaiba.

Abich (ä'biċh), (Otto) Wilhelm Hermann von. b. at Berlin, Dec. 11, 1806; d. at Gratz, Austria, July 1, 1886. German mineralogist, geologist, and traveler in Russia, Armenia, Persia, and elsewhere. Professor at Dorpat (1842 et seq.), he was a specialist in volcanic structure and deposits. Author of Geologische Forschungen in den Kaukasischen Ländern (1878–87) and other works.

Abidjan (ab.i.jän'). Town in W Africa, the capital of the French territory of the Ivory Coast, French West Africa, situated on a lagoon near the coast. It is important as an administrative center and as the terminus of the railway to Bobo-Dioulasso in the interior. It is also an educational center. Its seaport is Port Bouet, ab. 7 mi. away, with which it is connected by rail. 33,000 (1945).

Abie's Irish Rose. Comedy by Anne Nichols, which after a success in California was produced at the Fulton Theatre, New York, May 23, 1922, and ran for over 2,500 performances. The plot concerns itself with practically every form of love known to human beings. There is, first, the love a boy, Abraham Levy, and a girl, Rose-Mary Murphy, who have been married secretly, knowing the religious prejudice of their respective fathers. Next is the love of Solomon Levy and Patrick Murphy for their children; third, the love, sanctified by memory, of the dead mothers of the young couple; and finally the love of the grandfathers for their twin grandchildren, through whom the reconciliation is brought about. There is thus secured an appeal to all ages and conditions, sharpened by shrewdly conceived dialogue, which is based on the century-old principle of antithesis, and borrowed from the variety show.

Abiezer (ā.bi.ē'zėr). [Also, Abiezar.] In the Old Testament, a grandson of Manasseh and nephew of Gilead, founder of an important family to which also, collectively, the name was applied.

Abiezer. In the Old Testament, one of David's chief warriors, an inhabitant of Anathoth, of the tribe of Benjamin.

Abigail (ab'i.gāl). In the Old Testament, mother of Amasa and stepsister of David.

Abigail. In the Old Testament, wife of Nabal and, after his death, of David. By hastening to meet David with a supply of provisions when he was marching to take vengeance upon Nabal she succeeded in arresting his anger. 1 Sam. xxv.

Abigail. Lady's maid in Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, and in other plays, presumably after the Abigail of the Bible, who called herself (1 Sam. xxv. 24) the handmaid of David. This Elizabethan usage later caused the name to become a literary synonym for lady's maid.

Abigail. Daughter of Barabas in Christopher Marlowe's The Jew of Malta. The dialogue between father and daughter is in some ways very close to that between Shylock and Jessica in Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice.

Abigor (ab'i.gôr). In medieval demonology, a demon of high degree, grand duke in the infernal realms, with 60 legions at his command; an authority on war. He was represented as a knight carrying a lance, standard, or scepter.

Abihu (ą.bī'hū). In the Old Testament, the second of the sons of Aaron by Elisheba. For neglecting to burn incense with fire taken from the great altar and using "strange" or common fire, he was slain with his elder brother Nadab by fire from heaven. Lev. x.

Abijah (ą.bī'ją). See also Abiah.

Abijah. [Also: Abijam, Abiah, Abia.] In the Old Testament, the second king of Judah; son of Rehoboam and grandson of Solomon. He reigned for approximately three years in the late 10th century B.C. A victory over Jeroboam in which 400,000 men are said to have fought for Abijah and 800,000 for Jeroboam, leaving 500,000 dead (obviously somewhat exaggerated numbers), was a notable event of his reign. 2 Chron. xii.

Abijah. [Also, Abijam.] Name of various minor persons mentioned in the Old Testament: 1. a son of Becher, one of the sons of Benjamin (1 Chron. vii. 8). 2. the wife of Hezron and mother of Ashur (1 Chron. ii. 24). 3. a priest, a descendant of Eleazar, the chief of the eighth of the 24 courses into which the priesthood was divided by David (1 Chron. xxiv. 10). 4. a son of Jeroboam the son of Nebat (1 Kings, xiv. 1). 5. the mother of Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxix. 1). 6. a priest mentioned in Nehemiah (x. 7).

Abildgaard (ä'bil.gôr), Nikolaj Abraham. b. at Copenhagen, 1743; d. at Fredericksdal, Denmark, June 4, 1809. Danish historical painter. He was (1786 et seq.) professor at, and later (1789 et seq.) director of, the Copenhagen Academy.

Abilene (ab'i.lēn). City in E central Kansas, county seat of Dickinson County, on the Smoky Hill River ab. 115 mi. W of Kansas City. Settled in 1856 and given (1867) a Syrian name meaning "grassy plain," it was an important cattle town, being at various times (1867 et seq.) the terminus of both the Abilene and Chisholm trails over which Texas cattle were brought for eastern shipment. "Wild Bill" Hickok was town marshal in 1871. Still a cattle-shipping point, it is now more important as a grain and flour-milling center. 5,775 (1950).

Abilene (ab.i.lē'nē). In ancient geography, a district of Syria, lying E of the Antilibanus (Anti-Lebanon) mountains. A kingdom of Ituraea, which came under Roman domination with Pompey's conquest (c62 B.C.) of Syria, it became (c37 A.D.) a tetrarchy.

Abilene (ab'i.lēn). City in N central Texas, county seat of Taylor County, ab. 200 mi. NW of Austin: marketing and shipping center for the cattle, cotton, and dairy products of the southern high plains. Settled c1881, it was named for Abilene, Kansas. It is the seat of Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene Christian College, and McMurry College. Abilene State Park is nearby. 47,102 (1950).

Abilene Trail. Cattle trail from Texas to Abilene, Kan., over which the first cattle from the Texas ranges were driven northwards in 1866 (although it was not known by this name until 1867, when Abilene was formally named). Differences exist as to its precise route because of the trail's many branches. Although it had the same terminus in Kansas, it was not identical with the Chisholm Trail.

Abimelech (ą.bim'ę.lek). In the Old Testament, a name believed by some scholars to have been used as a general title (like the Egyptian "Pharaoh") for the Philistine kings. In Gen. xx. allusion is made by this name to a king of Gerar who, supposing Sarah to be Abraham's sister, as Abraham asserted, took her into his harem, but dismissed her when he found she was Abraham's wife. In Gen. xxvi. another allusion by the same name is made to a king of Gerar in the time of Isaac, with whom Isaac found refuge during a famine. According to some authorities, these two were actually a single ruler; in other sources, however, they are cited as having been separate individuals.

Abimelech. In the Old Testament, a son of Gideon by a concubine, a native of Shechem, made "king" of Israel (for about three years) by the Shechemites. Judges, ix.

Abimelech. See Ahimelech.

Abimelech Jackwood (jak'wůd). See Jackwood, Abimelech.

Abingdon (ab'ing.dọn), 4th Earl of. Title of Bertie, Willoughby.

Abingdon. [Latin, Abindonia (ab.in.dō'ni.ą).] Municipal borough and grain-marketing town in S England, in Berkshire, ab. 7 mi. S of Oxford on the Thames. It was an important river port for coal shipped up from London during the 16th and 17th centuries, and contains the remains of a 7th-century Benedictine abbey, at one time one of the wealthiest and most beautiful in England. 10,176 (1951).

Abingdon. City in NW Illinois, in Knox County, in a farming region. 3,289 (1950).

Abingdon. [Former name, Wolf Hills.] Town in SW Virginia, county seat of Washington County: manufactures of chemicals, wagons, lumber, condensed milk, and cigars; shipping point for burley tobacco. It was established in 1778. The Barter Theater, one of the first and best known of U.S. summer theaters, was founded here in 1933. Pop. 4,709 (1950).

Abington (ab'ing.tọn). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Plymouth County, ab. 20 mi. S of Boston: shoes, textiles, garments, and ice cream. Settled in 1668 and incorporated c1712, it produced many of the boots worn by Union soldiers in the Civil War. During the 1850's, nearby Island Grove Park was the site of antislavery meetings led by William Lloyd Garrison and others. 7,152 (1950).

Abington, Frances. [Maiden name, Barton.] b. at London, 1737; d. there, March 4, 1815. English actress. From flower girl and street singer, she rose to a position of eminence on the stage which she held for 43 years. Garrick's leading lady at the Drury Lane for 18 years, she was the first to play the role of Lady Teazle in Sheridan's School for Scandal.

Ab-Initio Movement (ab.i.nish'i.ō). Political and legal position that came into being in Texas in 1866 during the state constitutional convention that followed the Civil War. It involved the question of whether or not secession had been invalid from the outset (i.e., ab initio) or whether it had been invalidated as a result of the war. If the Ab-Initio position were to be held sound, it meant that the laws (and hence most public and private contracts of the period 1860–65) operative under secession could be disregarded. Controversy over this point caused a considerable rift among Texas politicians of the day, but the Ab-Initio position was finally, with some compromises, set aside in the formulation of the new state constitution.

Abipon (ab.i.pōn'). [Also, Abipones (ab.i.pō'nās).] Name given to a tribe of South American Indians, now extinct, which during the 16th century occupied both banks of the river Paraguay ab. 600 mi. above the Paraná. They later moved to the Chaco region, whence they were driven southward by the Spaniards. According to the accounts of that day and later, they were savage and intractable, wandering in their habits, and lived by hunting and fishing. After the introduction by the Spaniards of horses to South America, the tribe acquired considerable numbers of them and attained great skill in horsemanship. For many years the Abipon were a serious hindrance to colonial settlement. Their language was of the Guaycuruan family.

Abisa (ā.bē'sạ). See Bisa.

Abishag (ab'i.shag). In the Old Testament, a Shunammite woman taken by David to comfort him in his old age. 1 Kings, i. 1–4.

Abishai (ạ.bish'ā.ī). In the Old Testament, a stalwart soldier of David, and son of his sister, Zeruiah. 2 Sam. ii. 18.

Abitibi Lake (ab.i.tib'i). [Also: Abbitibbe, Abbitibbi.] Lake in E central Canada, in Ontario, S of James Bay, on the boundary between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Elevation, 868 ft.; length, ab. 60 mi.; area, ab. 350 sq. mi.

Abitibi River. [Also: Abbitibbe, Abbitibbi.] River in E central Canada, the outlet of Abitibi Lake, Ontario, flowing generally N to join the Moose River, which flows into James Bay, an arm of Hudson Bay. Length, ab. 220 mi.

Abkhaz Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic (ab.kaz'; Russian, äp.нäs'). [Also: Abkhazia (ab.kā'zhạ), Abkhazian Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic.] Autonomous republic of the U.S.S.R., the westernmost of those comprising the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic, on the E coast of the Black Sea and the S slope of the Caucasus Mountains. The chief occupations of the people are stock raising and lumbering. There are several health resorts here, including Sukhumi, on the Black Sea. The republic includes much of the ancient region of Colchis, which was conquered by the Abasgi in the 7th century; they called their kingdom Abasgia and united (978 A.D.) with Iberia to the E to form an empire powerful until the Mongol invasion (1234 A.D.). Capital, Sukhumi; area, 3,155 sq. mi.; pop. 198,854 (1939).

Abkhazians (ab.kā'zhạnz). [Also: Abazgi; earlier spellings, Abasgi, Abasci, Abasges.] A Circassian people of the Black Sea coast of the Transcaucasus, numbering about 59,000 (1939).

Ableman v. Booth, 21 Howard 506 (1859) (ā'bl.mạn; böth). U.S. Supreme Court decision, handed down by Chief Justice Roger B. Taney for a unanimous court, upholding the validity of the federal Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 and prohibiting state interference with federal prisoners. The case arose over the freeing of Sherman Booth, who had violated the Fugitive Slave Law, by the supreme court of Wisconsin, which discharged him from custody on a writ of habeas corpus. After U.S. District Marshal Ableman had secured a writ of error, Booth was tried again before the U.S. district court, and sentenced to imprisonment and fine. The supreme court of Wisconsin again ordered his release on the ground that the Fugitive Slave Law was unconstitutional. Chief Justice Taney's opinion in this case is considered notable by historians of American jurisprudence for its masterly analysis of the nature of federal and state powers.

Able McLaughlins (mạk.lŏf'linz), The. Novel by Margaret Wilson, published in 1923. It was awarded a Pulitzer Prize in 1924.

Ablesimov (äb.lyi.sē'mọf), Aleksandr Anisimovich. b. 1742; d. c1783. Russian satirical playwright and composer of comic operas, notable as the first to utilize peasant songs and legends on the Russian stage. His opus The Miller, which ran for nearly two months at Moscow, is considered by some music historians to have been the first successful Russian opera.

Abnaki (ab.nä'kē). [Also, Abenak; often, in American history, Abenaki.] Confederacy of Indian tribes in NE North America, speaking languages of the Algonquian linguistic stock of the Central-Eastern New England type. They withdrew from territory in Maine after the French, to whom they were allied, were defeated by the British in the French and Indian War. Their name became almost a synonym for savagery among the New England colonists of the 18th century (who called them also Tarrateens), by reason of the repeated forays made by them, under the influence of the French, against the British settlers. Their descendants now live chiefly in Quebec, New Brunswick, and Maine.

Abner (ab'nėr). In the Old Testament, a blood relative of Saul and the commander in chief of his army. After Saul's death he maintained the interests of the royal house, supporting Ishbosheth against David. In his flight, after his defeat by David, he slew Joab's brother, Asahel, who was pursuing him. Later, when he was about to effect a compromise with David prejudicial to Joab's interest, Joab treacherously slew him. 1 Sam. xxvi.

Abney (ab'ni), Sir Thomas. b. at Willesley, Derbyshire, England, in January, 1640; d. at Theobalds, Hertfordshire, England, Feb. 6, 1722. English merchant (originally a fishmonger), sheriff of London and Middlesex (1693–94), one of the original directors of the Bank of England, and lord mayor of London (1700–01). He was a friend and patron of the noncomformist theologian, Isaac Watts, who for the last 36 years (1712–48) of his life made his home at the Abney residence.

Abney, Sir William de Wiveleslie. b. at Derby, England, 1843; d. at Folkestone, England, 1920. English physicist and chemist, known for his work in photographic chemistry, color photography, and spectroscopy. President of the Royal Astronomical Society (1893–95) and of the Physical Society (1895–97), he was knighted in 1900.

Åbo (ō'bō). Swedish name of Turku.

Aboan (ạ.bō'ạn). Slave in the play Oroonoko, adapted by Thomas Southerne from the novel by Aphra Behn. Though of secondary importance in the play, the part was for many years esteemed by critics.

Aboccis (ạ.bok'is). An ancient name of Abu Simbel.

Abolitionist. In U.S. history before and during the Civil War, a term applied to one sympathetic to extreme antislavery doctrines, but more characteristically to one engaged in militant agitation against Negro slavery, employing such means as political action, moral condemnation, or force. Sentiment against the institution of slavery existed in the American colonies as early as 1688, when the Society of Friends at Germantown, Pa., registered its disapproval in a formal vote on the question. Until c1830 antislavery societies were active in the South, where they were actually more numerous than their Northern counterparts, but mounting fears of slave uprisings and the emerging Southern defense against Northern abolitionism discouraged further effort in the South and led to the effective end of the movement there. Northern abolitionism after c1830 was associated with the general development of humanitarian movements, particularly in New England and the older Middle West. Far from being unified, the abolitionist movement was beset by many differences, as witness the history of the extremists best represented by William Lloyd Garrison. Political developments after the Mexican War saw the progressive rise of abolitionism in national affairs, and the Compromise of 1850 ushered in an era that witnessed the amalgamation of the abolitionist moral crusade with political interests in the North. Among the prominent abolitionist leaders, in addition to Garrison, were William Ellery Channing, Theodore Weld, Theodore Parker, and Wendell Phillips. The outstanding literary work of the movement was Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852), by Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Abomey (ạ.bō′mi, ä.bō.mā′). Town in W Africa, in Dahomey, ab. 70 mi. from the S coast of French West Africa, ab. 1,900 mi. S of Algiers. Before its capture by the French in 1892, it was capital of the native kingdom of Dahomey. It is connected by rail with the port of Cotonou and with Porto-Novo, the capital of Dahomey. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Abominations, Tariff of. Name given to the U.S. tariff law of 1828, by which congressional supporters of Andrew Jackson for the presidency sought through very high duties on raw materials to create an issue which could be identified with the administration of John Quincy Adams, and which would be equally offensive to the South (already considered safe for Jackson) and New England (believed to be firmly behind Adams). The plan of Jackson's supporters was simple: to weaken Adams in his own stronghold of New England so seriously as to enable his defeat It was expected that the tariff would be defeated and that Jackson could then turn to the protectionist Middle Atlantic states for sufficient additional votes to make his election a certainty. The measure had little or no regard for the actual needs of the country; as John Randolph pointed out, it was concerned with "manufactures of no sort or kind but the manufacture of a president." Much to the surprise of its sponsors, it secured enough New England support actually to be passed as law, and was immediately and bitterly attacked by the South. It was nullified by a South Carolina ordinance in 1832.

Abongo (ạ.bong′gō). See Bongo.

Abony (ô′bōny′). [Also, Nagy Abony.] Town in C Hungary, in the county of Pest, ab. 50 mi. SE of Budapest, between Cegléd and Szolnok. 15,585 (1948).

Aborn (ā′bôrn), Milton. b. at Marysville, Calif., May 18, 1864; d. at New York, Nov. 12, 1933. American opera producer who did much to popularize with American audiences the works of Gilbert and Sullivan and Victor Herbert, and other operas in English. Starting with his own opera company, he was subsequently an actor and stage director (1887–95) for the Keith-Albee chain, and later managed companies with his brother, Sargent Aborn, under the sponsorship (1913–15) of Otto H. Kahn.

Ab'-o'th'-Yate (ab′ọ.ᴛʜẹ.yāt′). Pseudonym of Brierley, Benjamin.

Abou ben Adhem (ä′bö ben ä′dem). Short poem by Leigh Hunt in which Abou ben Adhem discovers, from an angel who appears to him at night, that his name is not listed in the golden book of those who love the Lord. He thereupon prays that he may at least be listed as one who loves his fellow men, and discovers on the following night that he is therefore entered with those who love the Lord.

Aboukir (ä.bö.kēr′). See also Abukir.

Aboukir. British heavy cruiser which, together with the cruisers Hague and Cressy, was sunk (Sept. 22, 1914) while on patrol in the North Sea by the German submarine U–9. The sinking of the three ships was the first major British naval disaster of World War I, and indicated clearly the need for special tactics in combating German submarines. One immediate result was that British heavy vessels were forbidden to stand by to pick up survivors in a submarine attack (the Hague and Cressy presented easy targets to the U–9 when they halted to pick up crew members of the Aboukir). The loss of life reached approximately 1,400 men from the total crews of the three ships.

Aboukir, Bay of. See Abukir, Bay of.

Abou-Klea (ä′bö klā′ạ). See Abu Klea.

About (ȧ.bö), Edmond François Valentin. b. at Dieuze, France, Feb. 14, 1828; d. at Paris, Jan. 16, 1885. French satirical novelist, journalist, and dramatist. He studied archaeology at the French school, at Athens, and after his return (1853) to France, wrote for Le Moniteur and Le Soir; his political articles supported Napoleon III.

A. B. Plot. Term applied to the so-called plot (1823–24) stemming from the political differences between U.S. Secretary of the Treasury William H. Crawford and Senator Ninian Edwards of Illinois, a supporter of Calhoun. It takes its name from a number of articles signed "A.B." which appeared (1823) in the Washington (D. C.) Republican. The articles, which came from the pen of Edwards, charged Crawford with official misconduct in the use of western banks for collecting public-land revenues, and it was believed by some that they were written primarily, if not solely, in order to damage Crawford's chances in the presidential campaign of 1824. In 1824 Edwards' charges against Crawford were formally presented to the House of Representatives, and the committee report which cleared Crawford also served to cast doubts on Edwards' character and probity.

Abra (ä′brä). See also Abra River.

Abra. Province of the Philippine Islands, in NW Luzon, bounded by Ilocos Norte on the N, Ilocos Sur on the W and S, and Mountain Province on the E. Capital, Bangued; area, 1,475 sq. mi.; pop. 86,600 (1948).

Abra (ab′rạ). Favorite concubine of Solomon, notable in Matthew Prior's Solomon on the Vanity of the World for her docility:

> "Abra was ready ere I called her name;
> And, though I called another, Abra came."

Abrabanel (ä.brä.bä.nel′), Isaac. See Abravanel, Isaac.

Abradatas (ab.rạ.dā′tạs). fl. 6th century B.C. King of Susa. He was at first an enemy, then an ally, of the Persians under Cyrus the Great. In the Cyropaedia of Xenophon is told as an episode (the earliest example of a sentimental romance) the story of the loves of Abradatas and his wife Pantheia, which ends with the death of Abradatas in battle and the suicide of Pantheia and her eunuchs.

Abraham (ā′brạ.ham). [Also, Abram.] First of the patriarchs, traditional progenitor of the Hebrew people, and also, through his son Ishmael, a traditional ancestor of the Arabs. Many critical scholars do not consider Abraham a historical figure, and it is unquestionably true that particular stories about him in the scriptures comprise something which is closer to saga than to any other easily classifiable type of religious writing. In the case of Abraham, however, what might be called strict historical fact is secondary to his position as the bearer of the promise of God to his people. For this reason, such stories as that of his son Isaac (whom he was willing to sacrifice, if need be, to God) must be taken as indicating the quality of his devotion to God, rather than as strictly factual accounts of a historical episode in the usual sense. The question of the date of his life is a difficult one, but the 14th chapter of Genesis contains enough specific references to identifiable contemporary historical figures to suggest a tentative dating between 1550 and 1450 B.C. Abraham is equally revered by Jews, Christians, and Mohammedans. We are told that he was buried in the cave of Machpelah (the double cave) at Hebron, now said to be enclosed by the Great Mosque (Haram) of that place.

Abraham. b. c1787–1791; d. on the Little River, Seminole Nation, Indian Territory, sometime after 1870. Seminole interpreter and counselor. Originally a slave at Pensacola, Fla., he escaped to the Seminoles, with whose principal chief he became closely associated and whom he served as an interpreter when the tribe sent a delegation to Washington, D. C., in 1825. He was prominent in the Seminole War of 1835–37, and a principal negotiator of the treaty of Fort Dade (March 6, 1837). Shipped to Indian Territory in 1839, he later visited Florida, Washington, and New York with a delegation to Billy Bowlegs, a recalcitrant Florida Seminole chief, in 1852.

Abraham, John. See Braham, John.

Abraham, Plains of. Elevated plain SW of the city of Quebec, above the St. Lawrence River, on which was fought (Sept. 13, 1759) the deciding battle of the French and Indian War in its last phase. The British were led by General James Wolfe and the French by the Marquis de Montcalm; both commanders were killed in the battle. The British victory in this battle was one of the chief factors in determining that the further development of North America would rest primarily with the English rather than the French. A portion of the area is now preserved by the Canadian government as a national park.

Abraham, William. [Called Mabon.] b. in Afon Valley, Wales, 1842; d. 1922. British labor leader and politician, for many years (1885–1920) member of Parliament from Glamorganshire (Rhondda division), in Wales. He was influential with the Welsh miners throughout his political life, and served as first president of the South Wales Miners' Federation.

Abraham Adams (ad'ąmz). See Adams, Abraham.

Abraham a Sancta Clara (ä'brä.häm ä zängk'tä klä'rä). [Original name, Hans Ulrich Megerle.] b. at Kreenheinstetten, near Messkirch, Baden, July 2, 1644; d. at Vienna, Dec. 1, 1709. Austrian theologian and satirical writer. An Augustinian monk (1662 et seq.), he was court preacher (1667 et seq.) at Vienna. Author of a satirico-religious romance entitled Judas the Arch-rascal (Judas der Erzschelm) (1686–95), of Gack, Gack, Gack a Ga of a Marvellous Hen in the Duchy of Bavaria, or a Detailed Account of the Famous Pilgrimage of Maria Stern in Taxa (1687), and others. His collected works were published after his death in 21 volumes.

Abraham ben Meïr ibn-Ezra (ä'brą.ham ben mär' ib''n.ez'rä). See ibn-Ezra, Abraham ben Meïr.

Abraham Cresques (kres'kęs). [Called Cresques lo Juheu, meaning "Cresques the Jew"; Lo Jueu buscolor, meaning "the map Jew"; El Judio de las brujulas, meaning "the compass Jew."] fl. at Palma de Mallorca, on Majorca island; d. 1387. Cartographer, believed to have been a member of a Jewish family from Catalonia. One of the greatest cartographers of his age and generally recognized to have been founder of the Jewish cartographical school at Palma de Mallorca, he was for most of his life in the service of the rulers of Aragon. He was probably (although there is no archival proof) the author of Atlas Catalan, originally made in 1375 for Charles V of France (Charles the Wise) and now considered by geographers to have been one of the outstanding cartographical achievements of the Middle Ages.

Abrahamites (ä'brą.ham.īts). Christian sect in Syria during the 9th century, linked by some scholars with the Paulicians. Their name derived from Abraham, or Ibrahim, of Antioch, whose denial of Christ's divinity became a distinguishing characteristic of their theology and caused them to be branded as heretics by the established Church.

Abrahamites. Bohemian deists of the 18th century who professed to follow the religion of Abraham before his circumcision. Their refusal to accept identification with either Christians or Jews led to their exclusion from the edict of tolerance laid down by Joseph II in 1781 and to their banishment in 1783. They had disappeared as a sect by the end of the century.

Abraham Lincoln. Critical estimate of Abraham Lincoln by James Russell Lowell, originally published (1864) in the North American Review as "The President's Policy." It now appears in the Political Essays as "Abraham Lincoln," with a short addition written after Lincoln's death. It treats of Lincoln's difficult task in preserving the Union and is, on the whole, a tribute to him.

Abraham Lincoln. Eulogistic poem (1865) by William Cullen Bryant, written at the request of the committee of arrangements when Lincoln's body was carried in funeral procession through the city of New York.

Abraham Lincoln. A biographical writing (1865) by Ralph Waldo Emerson. It prophesied that Lincoln would "serve his country even more by his death than by his life."

Abraham Lincoln. Historical play (1918) in six episodes by John Drinkwater. It was first produced at the Birmingham Repertory Theatre and was staged at London in 1919.

Abraham Lincoln. Biography by Carl Sandburg, in two parts: Abraham Lincoln: The Prairie Years (2 vols., 1926) and Abraham Lincoln: The War Years (4 vols., 1939). Unquestionably his major prose work, its research and writing occupied a major part of Sandburg's effort for some 20 years.

Abraham Lincoln: A History. Ten-volume biography of Abraham Lincoln, written by John Hay, with the help of John G. Nicolay. It was published in 1890.

Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight. Poem by Vachel Lindsay, published in The Congo and Other Poems (1914), in which Lincoln is seen pacing the dark streets of Springfield in an agony of distress over the war in Europe.

Abraham-man (ā'brą.ham.man''). [Also, Abram-man.] Name originally applied to a mendicant lunatic from London's Bethlehem (Bedlam) Hospital, notably one from the ward named after the patriarch Abraham. On certain days of the year, patients from this ward were permitted to beg on the London streets, wearing a distinctive badge and becoming known in time as "Abrahammen." Their success as beggars led others to wear the badge, and to feign lunacy, until the term came to mean any imposter who sought alms under pretense of madness. The once common term "to sham Abraham," in the sense of pretending sickness, derives from this usage.

Abraham of Antioch (an'ti.ok). [Also, Ibrahim.] fl. 9th century A.D. Founder of the Christian sect known, after him, as Abrahamites.

Abraham's Oak. Ancient oak or terebinth which stood for many years on the plain of Mamre, near Hebron in Palestine, and was said to be that under which the patriarch Abraham pitched his tent.

Abrahamsohn (ä'brä.häm.zōn), Otto. See Brahm, Otto.

Abraham the Jew and the Merchant Theodore. Medieval story devised to support iconolatry, in which the friendless and penniless Theodore pledges himself before the statue of Christ, set up by Constantine at Byzantium, to repay a loan by Abraham. When, after a period of prosperous travel, he finds himself with the money but without a messenger to return it, he places it in a box and "commits it, in the name of Christ, to the waves," by which it is thereupon washed to the feet of Abraham at Byzantium. But when Theodore returns, Abraham, to test him, feigns not to have received repayment, upon which Theodore demands that Abraham should make an oath to this effect before the statue of Christ. The oath is never made, however, for as Theodore himself prays before the image, Abraham's heart is filled with faith in the trustworthiness of men who, like Theodore, have been at one time friendless, and he acknowledges receipt of the money.

Abrahen (ab'rą.hen). Second son of the caliph in George Chapman's tragedy, Revenge for Honor.

Abram (ā'brąm). See also Abraham.

Abram (ab'rąm). Urban district in NW England, in Lancashire, ab. 2 mi. SE of Wigan, ab. 208 mi. NW of London by rail. It is a coal-mining center, located on the south Lancashire coal field. 6,286 (1951).

Abram (ā'brąm). Montague's servant in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Abrams (ā'brąmz), Albert. b. at San Francisco, Dec. 8, 1863; d. Jan. 13, 1924. American physician, author of a controversial theory of diagnosis based on changes in electronic vibration measurable at the skin, known as "Electronic Reactions of Abrams," or "ERA." Practicing in San Francisco, he acquired an international reputation for his extensive researches and publications, particularly his discovery of the visceral reflexes named for him. His attempt to combine the latter with the claims of chiropractors, and his development on a commercial basis of expensive apparatus for diagnosis and treatment by means of ERA, prompted ridicule among his colleagues and finally an investigation (1923) by the Scientific American (although, at the same time, others were inclined to credit him with the beginnings of revolutionary discoveries). Author of The Blues (Splanchnic Neurasthenia) (1904–14), Spondylotherapy; Spinal Concussion (1910), New Concepts in Diagnosis and Treatment (1916), and others.

Abrams v. United States, 250 U.S. 616 (1919). Majority opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court, in its first decision involving the Sedition Act of 1918, upholding that statute and the conviction of the appellants. The latter had been charged with the publication of two leaflets denouncing the U.S. government and calling for a general strike to frustrate Allied intervention in Russia. The case is memorable for the dissenting opinion of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, who made it a vehicle for a characteristic expression of his philosophical views. With the concurrence of Justice Louis D. Brandeis, he declared that "when men have realized that time has upset many fighting faiths, they may come to believe . . . that the ultimate good desired is better reached by free trade in ideas—that the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market, and that truth is the only ground upon which their wishes safely can be carried out. That at any rate is the theory of our Constitution. It is an experiment, as all life is an experiment."

Abrantes (ạ.brun'tēsh). [Latin, Aurantes.] Town and concelho (commune) in C Portugal, in the province of Ribatejo, in the district of Santarém, situated on the Tejo River at the head of navigation, ab. 75 mi. NE of Lisbon. In a hilly location of some strategic importance, the town has a large medieval castle, and contains the Church of São Vicente, considered by some to be one of the most remarkable churches in Portugal. Conquered by the Arabs in 1116, the town was reconquered by the Portuguese in 1148. It was taken by the French under Junot in 1807, but returned to Portugal in 1808. Pop. of concelho, 43,733 (1940); of town, 8,881 (1940).

Abrantes, Marquis and Viscount of. Titles of Calmón du Pin e Almeida, Miguel.

Abrantès (dȧ.brän.tes), Duc d'. Title of Junot, Andoche.

Abra River (ä'brä). River in Luzon, Philippine Islands, rising in Mountain Province and taking a circuitous course through Abra and Ilocos Sur provinces to the South China Sea. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Abravanel (ä.brä.vä.nel'), Isaac. [Also: Abrabanel, Abarbanel.] b. at Lisbon, 1437; d. at Venice, 1508. Jewish scholar, theologian, and statesman. The most notable member of a Sephardic family which claimed descent from the royal house of David and which produced a number of scholars and scientists during the 15th and 16th centuries, Abravanel is now perhaps best known for his commentaries on the Old Testament, particularly those on the books of Kings and Samuel. Convinced that such scholarship was most productive if it dealt with the meaning of a book in its entirety, rather than with the mere interpretation of isolated words and sentences, he sought also to have his commentaries reflect an understanding of the social, political, and economic conditions of the period within which a particular book of the Old Testament was actually prepared. The result was a body of theological writing widely used by both Christian and Jewish religious scholars for centuries after his death. In his own lifetime, Abravanel was treasurer to Alfonso V of Portugal until that ruler died in 1481, and was thereafter for eight years in the service of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella at Madrid. Forced to quit Spain after the expulsion of the Jews in 1492, he lived successively at Naples, Sicily, Corfu, and Venice, being employed by the Venetian republic as a member of its diplomatic corps.

Abreu (ạ.brā'ö), Casimiro José Marques de. b. on a farm near Barra de São João, Brazil, Jan. 4, 1839; d. there, Oct. 18, 1860. One of Brazil's most popular romantic poets. He lived for some time (1853–57) in Portugal, where he wrote part of his work. Author of Camões e o Jau (1856), and of Primaveras (1859), a book of poems which has had many editions in Brazil and Portugal.

Abreu, João Capistrano de. b. at Maranguape, Ceará, Brazil, Oct. 23, 1853; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 13, 1927. Brazilian historian, scholar, and essayist, notable as the author of several important works dealing with the colonial period in Brazil. He was assistant at the National Library at Rio de Janeiro, and professor (1883–99) at Pedro Segundo College. Among his best known writings are O Brasil no Século XVI (1880), O descobrimento do Brasil (1883), Materiais e achegas para a história e geografia do Brasil (1886), and Capítulos da história colonial (1907).

Abreu, José de. [Created in 1826 Baron of Serro Largo.] b. in Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, c1775; killed at the battle of Ituzaingó, Feb. 20, 1827. Brazilian general. He was of obscure parentage and enlisted in the army as a common soldier, but rapidly rose in rank and is considered to have been one of the most distinguished Brazilian leaders in the campaigns (1816–20) against Artigas. In 1820 he became field marshal, and in 1826 took part in the Uruguayan campaign under the marquis of Barbacena.

Abricatae (ab.ri.kā'tē) or Abrincatae (ab.rin.kā'tē). Ancient name of Avranches.

Abricium (ạ.brish'i.um). [Also, Abrutum.] In ancient geography, a place in Moesia, a Roman province in SE Europe. In the vicinity Decius was defeated and killed by the Goths in 251 A.D.

Abrikosov (äb.rē.kô'sof), Aleksey Ivanovich. b. in Russia, 1875—. Russian pathologist. He was surgeon (1911) at the Botkin Hospital, Moscow, and became (1920) director of the Institute of Pathologic Anatomy of the Moscow Medical Institute. He discovered a muscle tumor with which his name is associated.

Abrocomes and Atheia (ạ.brok'ō.mēz; ạ.thē'ạ). [Called Ephesian Stories; also, Abrocomas and Anthia, Habrocomas and Anthia.] Romance in five books by a Hellenistic writer named Xenophon of Ephesus, in which he describes the premarital and domestic adventures of a young Greek couple of the period. The later writers Chariton and Heliodorus are believed to have used this work as a pattern for some of their writing.

Abrolhos (ạ.brō'lyös). [Full name, Parcel dos Abrolhos.] Group of islets and reefs off the coast of Brazil.

Abron (ä.brōn'). [Also: Abrono, Brong.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Guang peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the C part of the Gold Coast.

Abrutum (ạ.brō'tum). See Abricium.

Abruzzi (ä.brōt'tsē). Former division of Italy, comprising the provinces of Chieti, Teramo, and L'Aquila; a part of the former kingdom of Naples. Within it were the highest and wildest portions of the Apennines. Although, strictly speaking, the term is without significance in the political geography of Italy today, it is still used as a general regional designation by many people.

Abruzzi, Duke of the. [Additional title, Prince Luigi Amedeo of Savoy-Aosta.] b. at Madrid, 1873; d. 1933. Italian explorer, mountaineer, and naval officer; third son of Prince Amedeo of Aosta, one-time king of Spain. He was the first to climb Mount St. Elias, Alaska (1897) and Mount Ruwenzori, East Africa (1906), and leader of the polar expedition (1899–1900) on the Stella Polare, which reached the farthest northern latitude (86°33′ N.) gained up to that time. He also climbed Mount Godwin-Austen (or K2), in the Himalayas, to a height of 20,000 ft., and Bride Peak, to 24,600 ft. (1909). He was commander (until 1917) of the Italian Adriatic fleet in World War I.

Abruzzi e Molise (ā mō.lē'zā). Compartimento (region) in E central Italy, containing the modern provinces of Campobasso, Chieti, L'Aquila, Pescara, and Teramo. It is comprised for the most part of mountainous territory, and situated between the Adriatic Sea and the Apennines, which here attain their greatest height. Livestock raising and forestry are the most important activities of the region, but some olives, wine, and grain are produced. Part of the duchy of Spoleto under the Lombards and of Apulia under the Normans, the region was unified under Emperor Frederick II in 1240. Later a part of the kingdom of Naples, it was incorporated into Italy in 1860. Most of the inhabitants have long been, and remain, the victims of extreme poverty, which has led to frequent uprisings, much banditry, and (in the 20th century) large-scale emigration. Area, 5,883 sq. mi.; pop. 1,600,631 (1936), 1,663,000 (est. 1949).

Abruzzo Citeriore (ä.brōt'tsō chē.tā.ri.ō'rā). Former name of Chieti, province.

Abruzzo Ulteriore I (öl.tā.ri.ō'rā ö'nō). Former name of Teramo, province.

Absalom (ab'sạ.lọm). In the Old Testament, the third son of David, king of Israel. He slew his brother Amnon for the rape of his sister Tamar, and thereupon fled the wrath of David. He subsequently returned and was accepted by his father, but later rebelled (with David's counselor Ahithophel) against him, and was defeated and slain in the forest of Ephraim. 2 Sam. xiii–xix.

Absalom. An undutiful son, intended to represent the Duke of Monmouth, in John Dryden's satirical Absalom and Achitophel.

Absalom, Absalom! Novel by William Faulkner, published in 1936, describing the maniacal design of Colonel Sutpen to build a big house and establish a landed family.

Absalom and Achitophel (ą.kit'ō.fel). Political satire in heroic couplets by John Dryden, published in 1681. After the excitement of the Popish Plot (1678) there had been repeated attempts to force a bill through Parliament excluding Catholics (and thus the legitimate heir, the duke of York) from the throne of England. The villain in these attempts was the Whig leader, the earl of Shaftesbury, who in the summer of 1681 was under arrest charged with high treason. At the suggestion of the King, Absalom and Achitophel was written and its publication timed to fall just a week before Shaftesbury's fruitless arraignment. The poem makes use of biblical story to suggest how Achitophel (Shaftesbury) is tempting to rebellion Absalom (the duke of Monmouth, illegitimate son of Charles II and the Whig candidate to succeed his father). Since Monmouth had not yet rebelled, the poem lacks action, but not tenseness. It consists largely of satirical portraits and of eloquent argumentative speeches in Dryden's epical style. A second part, chiefly written by Nahum Tate, but revised by Dryden and containing 200 lines written by him, was published in 1682 against the lesser figures in the conspiracy. The name "Achitophel" was taken from the Vulgate Bible, and corresponds to the "Ahithophel" of the King James version. The poem, which still ranks as one of the leading political satires in English verse, had an immediate success, and was to a large extent responsible for the quick waning of the Shaftesbury cabal.

Absalon (äp'sä.lôn). [Also, Axel.] b. 1128; d. at Sorø, Zealand, Denmark, 1201. Danish prelate, statesman, and warrior; archbishop of Lund (1178–1201). Under his counselorship to Valdemar I and Canute VI, there occurred a considerable expansion of the territory controlled by Denmark, particularly in the general region of what is now Estonia. He also repudiated the claim of the German emperor Frederick Barbarossa to fealty from the Danish crown. A naval commander of considerable skill, he defeated the Wendish pirates (1168) and the Pomeranian fleet (1184). He is remembered also as the founder of schools and of religious orders, and as the patron of Saxo Grammaticus and Svend Aagesen.

Absaroka (ab.sä'rō.kạ). Name which has been applied to the entire tribe of Crow Indians, of the Siouan linguistic family, and too, by some historians of the American West, to a subdivision or remnant of the Crows in S Montana. Etymologically speaking, all Crows may be called Absaroka, in view of the fact that "Crow" stems ultimately to the word "Absaroke," meaning crow or sparrow-hawk, which was the Indians' own name for themselves.

Absaroka Mountains. Range of the Rocky Mountains, in NW Wyoming and S Montana. The range is named after the Crow Indians who were once numerous in this area. Touching at one point on Yellowstone National Park, the range is variously estimated to be 150–180 mi. in length.

Absecon (ab.sē'kọn). [Also, Absecum.] Name of a bay and an inlet on the coast of New Jersey, NE of Atlantic City.

ABSIE (ab'si). [Full name, American Broadcasting Station in Europe.] Agency of the U.S. government, under the State Department, established (April 30, 1944) at London to convey news, coded instructions to the various underground groups on the Continent, and communications from the various Allied commanders to the peoples of Europe. As the reader will note, its most usual name is an acronym from its full name. It continued to exist for several months after the close of World War II (broadcasting in English, Norwegian, Danish, French, Dutch, and German) and anticipated to some extent the type of work which was later taken over by the Voice of America.

Absolon (ab'sō.lon). In Chaucer's Miller's Tale, an amorous parish clerk who comes to grief in his wooing of the carpenter's wife.

Absolon, John. b. at London, May 6, 1815; d. there, June 26, 1895. English painter, best known for his water colors.

Absolute (ab'sō.löt), Captain Jack. In Richard Brinsley Sheridan's The Rivals, the son of Sir Anthony Absolute. He is a spirited soldier and persistent lover who appears as the impecunious Ensign Beverley (and is thus his own rival) to win the affections of the romantic Lydia Languish. She, in turn, scorns a match with one so suitable as the son of Sir Anthony Absolute, but falls in love with him, unknowingly, as Ensign Beverley, and is thereby persuaded to accept him when his real identity becomes known.

Absolute, Sir Anthony. Character in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy The Rivals, an obstinate, passionate, self-willed, but generous old man.

Absyrtus (ab.sėr'tus). In Greek legend, the brother of Medea, killed by her on her flight from Colchis with Jason, to delay the pursuit of her father, Aeëtes. She cast the pieces of Absyrtus's body into the sea and Aeëtes, stopping to recover them, was left behind.

Abt (äpt), Franz. b. at Eilenburg, Saxony, Dec. 22, 1819; d. at Wiesbaden, Hesse, March 31, 1885. German conductor and composer. One of the best known of his songs is When the Swallows Homeward Fly.

Abt Vogler (fō'glėr). Poetic work by Robert Browning, published (1864) in Dramatis Personae. The work is written in the form of a dramatic monologue from the mouth of a certain "Abbe (or Abt) Vogler," in real life (1749–1814) court chaplain at Mannheim, Germany, notable for devising various improvements in the organ. In the poem, Vogler at first expresses his sorrow that the beautiful musical structure which he has just extemporized on the organ should disappear with the sound that brought it into being, but is then heartened to recall that nothing beautiful or true can ever really be lost: God hears or knows it, and it thus acquires an existence transcending human understanding.

Abu (ä'bö). Initial element of many Arabic proper names. It means "father." For a discussion of the relative "correctness" of the various methods of transcribing such Arabic forms as this, see the note under Abd.

Abu, Mount. Plateaulike area in NW India, in Bombay state: notable for its Jain temples. Parts of the area have long been popular as resorts. Highest point, 5,650 ft.

Abu Abdallah Mohammed (äb.dăl'lä mō.häm'med). See ibn-Batuta.

Abu Abdullah (äb.döl.lä'). Arabic name of Boabdil.

Abu-al-Abbas (ä'böl.äb.bäs'). [Also: Abul-Abbas; called as-Saffah, meaning "the Bloodspiller."] b. c721; d. 754. First Abbasside caliph. He established the Abbasside dynasty after defeating (750) Marwan II, the last Ommiad caliph, near the river in Mesopotamia now called the Great Zab. He based his claim to the caliphate on his descent from Mohammed's uncle, Abbas, and was named caliph at Kufa, in Mesopotamia, which was later superseded by Baghdad as the capital. He is noted in history for his ruthless treatment of his opponents.

Abu-al-Ala al-Maarri (ä'böl.ä.lä' ăl.mä.är'rē). b. at Maarrah, near Aleppo, Syria, 973; d. 1057. Arab poet and skeptic, blind from infancy. His rationalist iconoclasm was important for several generations in the philosophy and literature of the Arabic world.

Abu-al-Atahiya (ä'böl.ä.tä'hē.yä). b. at Anbar, in Mesopotamia, 748; d. 828. Arab philosophic poet and moralist. Befriended and aided by Caliphs al-Mamun and Harun al-Rashid, he lived at Kufa and Baghdad. He developed a simple verse form to replace the archaic qasīda, or elegy, and established a technique of Arabic sacred poetry which held for generations. Despite the fact that he has been called the "father of Arabic sacred poetry," he was accused by some of his contemporaries of being a heretic.

Abu-al-Faraj al-Isfahani (ä'böl.fä.räj' ăl.ēs.fä.hä'nē). [Also, Abulfaraj.] b. at Isfahan, Persia, 897; d. 967. Arab historian and anthologist. Born of a Qurashite family, he was a descendant of the last Ommiad caliph, and some of his many books were dedicated to his relatives in Spain. He lived at Baghdad, Aleppo, and elsewhere. His Book of Songs is a treasury of Arab poetry, music, and archaeology; it embodies the researches of earlier humanists, is by far the most important work of its kind, and is an invaluable source for the study of Arab antiquity.

Abu 'Arish (ä'bö ä.rēsh'). Town in SW Arabia, ab. 24 mi. from the Red Sea and ab. 40 mi. N of the border of Yemen: trading center. The irrigated area around the town produces various crops. Pop. ab. 8,000.

Abu-Bakr (ä'bö.bäk'ėr). [Also: Abu-Bekr; original name, Abd-al-Kaaba; called al-Siddik, meaning "the Faithful."] b. at Mecca, Arabia, 573; d. at Medina, Arabia, 634. First Moslem caliph (632–634); father-in-law and one of chief supporters of Mohammed, whom he accompanied on the Hegira. He was the immediate successor (632) to Mohammed as leader of Islam, which gained its first great strength in Arabia under his rule. He completed the first written record of Mohammed's sayings, the basis of the Koran. His dispute with Ali (who was Mohammed's nephew and son-in-law) over the succession began the schism between Sunnites and Shiites, the two chief Moslem sects. His daughter Ayesha was Mohammed's wife, and the source of the name by which he is now usually known (it means, in Arabic, "father of the virgin"). He was succeeded by Omar I.

Abu Beker ibn-el-Tufeil (ä'bö bek'ėr ib"n.el.tö.fīl'). See ibn-Tufail.

Abu-Bekr (ä'bö.bek'ėr). See Abu-Bakr.

Abu-Hanifah (ä'bö.hä.nē'fä). [Also: Abu-Hanifa; full name, Abu-Hanifah al-Numan ibn-Thabit (äl.nö'män ibn.thä'bit).] b. at Kufa, in Mesopotamia, c699 or c680; d. at Medina, c768. Moslem jurist, notable as the founder of the Hanifite school of Moslem law, based on free interpretation of the Koran by judges.

Abu Hassan (ä'bö häs.sän'). Opera by Carl Maria von Weber, first performed in 1811.

Abu-Hassan (ä'bö.has'ạn). In the story of "The Sleeper Awakened" in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, a citizen of Baghdad who while entertaining the disguised caliph expresses a wish to "be caliph for one day." The wish is granted in such a way that Abu-Hassan is entirely deceived as to the caliph's real identity, to the great amusement of the caliph, who in the end makes him his companion and favorite. Shakespeare has adopted this idea, from an older play, in the deception practiced on Sly, the tinker, in the induction to the Taming of the Shrew.

Abukir (ä.bö.kēr'). [Also, Aboukir.] Small village in N Egypt, on the Bay of Abukir, ab. 13 mi. NE of Alexandria, near the site of the ancient Canopus, probably a little to the west. Here, July 25, 1799, Napoleon with 5,000 French defeated 15,000 Turks. On March 8, 1801, the English under Sir Ralph Abercromby captured the town from the French.

Abukir, Bay of. [Also, Bay of Aboukir.] Bay N of Egypt, between Abukir and the Rosetta mouth of the Nile, the scene of the Battle of the Nile (Aug. 1–2, 1798), in which an English fleet under Nelson defeated the French fleet under Brueys, who lost 13 out of 17 vessels and some 9,000 men.

Abu Klea (ä'bö klā'ạ). [Also, Abou-Klea.] Wells in the Nubian desert in the bend of the Nile on the route between Korti and Shendi, where, on Jan. 17, 1885, the Mahdists attacked the British, and were repulsed with severe losses on both sides.

Abul-Abbas (ä'böl.äb.bäs'). See Abu-al-Abbas.

Abulfaragius (ab"ul.fạ.rā'ji.us). See Bar-Hebraeus.

Abulfaraj (ä'böl.fä.räj'). See Abu-al-Faraj al-Isfahani; see also Bar-Hebraeus.

Abulfazl (ä'böl.fä'zl). [Also, Abul Fazl.] b. 1551; d. 1602. Minister of state and historiographer of the Mogul emperor Akbar. He was the author of Akbar Namah (Book of Akbar), comprising a history of Akbar's reign and an account of the religious and political constitution and administration of the empire.

Abulfeda (ä'böl.fe.dä'). [Also, Abulfida.] b. at Damascus, 1273; d. in Syria, Oct. 26, 1331. Arab geographer and historian; a collateral descendant of Saladin. He warred against the Crusaders (1285 et seq.); served at the court of Malik al-Nasir (1298); and was governor (1310), prince (1312), and sultan (1320–31) of Hama, in Syria. A patron of letters, he was himself the author of a geographical work of some importance and An Abridgement of the History of the Human Race, a valuable source of Arab history to 1329 (published in modern times in 1869 at Constantinople).

Abulghazi Bahadur (ä.böl.gä'zē bä.hä.dör'). [Also, Abul Ghazi Bahadur Khan.] b. 1605; d. c1665. Khan of Khiva (1643–64). He is now best known as the author of a history of the Mongols and Tatars, which has been translated into French and various other European languages. By some accounts, this work was completed after he had abdicated as khan.

Abul Kasim (ä'böl kä'sim). [Also: Abu-l-Qasim; Latinized, Abulcasis, Albucasis, Alsaharavius.] b. near Córdoba, Spain; d. near Córdoba, Spain, c1013. Arab surgeon, considered the greatest in the Spanish-Moslem culture. His great medical encyclopaedia in 30 sections, al-Tasrif (Vade mecum), contains interesting methods of preparing drugs by sublimation and distillation, but its most important part is the surgical, in three books. Great importance is attached to cauterization and styptics. Parts of the surgery are devoted to obstetrics and to the surgical treatment of eyes, ears, and teeth. This work was illustrated with views of the surgical instruments. It was early translated into Latin, Provençal, and Hebrew. Moslem prejudices against surgery stifled his fame in Islam, but in the Christian world his prestige was soon immense.

Abul Kasim (or Qasim) Mansur (or Hasan) (män.sör'; hä'sạn). See Firdausi.

Abuncis (ạ.bun'sis). An ancient name of Abu Simbel.

Abu-Nuwas (ä'bö.nö.wäs'). b. in Persia, c756; d. at Baghdad, 810. Arab lyric poet at the courts of Harun al-Rashid and al-Amin, caliphs of Baghdad. He is notable among Arab poets for his songs of love and wine, and his satires of Baghdad society and of traditional poetic forms, especially the qasīda (elegy).

Aburi (ä.bö'rē). Town in W Africa, in Gold Coast colony, ab. 15 mi. inland from Accra. Owing to its altitude, it is used as a health resort by British residents and officials.

Abury (ā'bėr.i). See Avebury.

Abus (ā'bus). Latin name of the Humber.

Abuses Stript and Whipt. Long moralistic poem (1613) by George Wither, divided into two books.

Abu Shahrein (ä'bö shä.rān'). Modern name of Eridu.

Abushehr (ä.bö.sher'). See Bushire.

Abu Simbel (ä'bö sim'bel). [Also: Ipsambul; ancient names, Abuncis, Aboccis.] Place in Upper Egypt situated on the Nile, famous for its two rock temples, one large and the other smaller, built (c1250 B.C.) in the steep face of a cliff by Rameses II. For the great temple the rock has been cut away to form a smooth façade ab. 100 ft. wide and high, with a cornice of seated cynocephali.

Abusina (ab.ụ.sī'nạ), Castra. Latin name of Abensberg.

Abusir (ä.bö.sēr'). [Ancient name, Busiris.] Small town in Egypt, in the Nile valley S of Cairo, containing pyramids said to have been erected by kings of the Vth dynasty.

Abu-Tammam (ä'bö.täm.mäm'). [Also, Abu-Teman; full name, Abu-Tammam Habib ibn-Aus.] b. in Syria, 807; d. at Mosul, in Mesopotamia, c845. Arab poet and anthologist. Author of the Diwan, a collection of his own poems, and more notably of the Hamasa, an anthology of early Arabic poetry. He served as court poet at Baghdad.

Abu-Ubaida (ä'bö.ö.bī'dä). [Also, Abu-Ubayda.] b. at Basra, 728; d. there, c825. Arab scholar and writer. Employed (803 et seq.) by Harun al-Rashid at Baghdad as an antiquarian and philologist, he wrote a vast number of essays and verses, of which 105 are mentioned in the Fihrist (a catalogue of early Arabic writing), but of them all only one now survives. Affiliated with the Kharijite sect in politics and religion, and of Jewish-Persian parentage, he was a champion of the non-Arab Moslems.

Abyad (äb'yäd), Bahr el. See White Nile.

Abydos (ạ.bī'dọs). In ancient geography, a town in Upper Egypt on the W bank of the Nile, near what is now the village of Arabat-el-Madfuneh, famous for a temple of Osiris built by Seti I, and also for a temple built by Rameses II. The former is described by Strabo as the "Memnonion." The plan is a square facing the NE, with a large rectangular projection from the back of the SE side. From the outer court is entered the long first hall, with two ranges of columns, and from it the second hall, with three ranges. Both these great halls are ornamented with reliefs. From the second hall there is access to an extensive series of chambers, corridors, and smaller halls, all decorated with colored reliefs. In one of the corridors is the important Tablet of Abydos, from which much of our present knowledge of Egyptian chronology was deduced.

Abydos. [Also, Abydus.] In ancient geography, a town in Mysia, Asia Minor, on the Hellespont, noted in the legend of Hero and Leander, in Byron's Bride of Abydos, and as the location of the famous bridge of boats by which the Persians, under Xerxes, crossed from Asia into Europe in their assault on Greece.

Abydos, Tablet of. A block of stone in a corridor of the temple built at Abydos, in Egypt, by the Pharaoh Seti I. The inscriptions on it enabled archaeologists to establish a tentative chronology for 65 Egyptian rulers over a period of some 2,200 years.

Abydos, The Bride of. See Bride of Abydos, The.

Abyla (ab'i.lạ). [Also: Abyla Columna, Abyla Mons.] In ancient geography, a promontory in Africa, the modern Jebel Musa, opposite the ancient Calpe (the modern Gibraltar). The two together constitute the famous "Pillars of Hercules" of the ancient geographers.

Abyla. An ancient name of Ávila, city.

Abyssinia (ab.i.sin'i.ạ). See Ethiopia.

Acacians (ạ.kā'shạnz). An early Christian sect, in some respects close to the Arians, but not actually an Arian group. The sect was named after Acacius, a bishop of Caesarea.

Acacius (ạ.kā'shus). [Surnamed Monophthalmus, meaning "the One-eyed."] d. after 365 A.D. Bishop of Caesarea and founder of the Acacian sect, an early Christian group that favored the Arian heresy. Condemned by the semi-Arian Synod of Lampsacus in 365, he was deposed.

Academic Festival Overture. Name given to an overture (opus 80) by Johannes Brahms, written for the University of Breslau in appreciation of the conferring of an honorary degree upon the composer, and embodying a number of German student songs.

Academic Legion. Name once generally applied to armed student corps in the European insurrections of 1848, and particularly to one at Vienna which was prominent in the revolt of that year.

Académie de Musique et de Danse (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dẹ mü.zēk ā dẹ dȧńs). A state-supported institution at Paris for the performance of opera and ballet. Established (1669) by a grant from Louis XIV and opened (1671) as the Académie des Opéras with Cambert's pastoral Pomone, its official title has been changed several times since 1672; popularly, it is now known as the "Opéra."

Academy. See also under other elements of the full name for important academies not listed immediately below. Where usage has indicated the desirability of doing so (as with "French Academy" and "Royal Academy") entry has been made under the initial element of the name rather than under the word "Academy."

Academy. [Greek, Akademeia, Akademia.] Name applied to what was originally a public pleasure-ground on the Cephissus, about one mile NW of ancient Athens, on land said to have belonged, in the time of the Trojan war, to the hero Academus. It was surrounded with a wall by Hipparchus and further adorned by Cimon, the son of Miltiades, who bequeathed it to the citizens of Athens. It was the resort of Plato, who taught in its groves for nearly 50 years.

Academy. Term applied to the Platonic school of philosophy down to the time of Cicero; so called from the pleasure-ground of the same name. It is commonly divided into the Old, the Middle, and the New Academy. The chief representatives of the first were, in addition to Plato himself, Speusippus, Xenocrates of Chalcedon, Polemo, Crates, and Crantor. The Middle Academy was founded by Arcesilaus ab. 244 B.C., and the New Academy by Carneades ab. 160 B.C. Sometimes the academies of Philo and Antiochus are spoken of as the Fourth Academy and the Fifth Academy, respectively.

Academy, Royal Spanish. [Spanish, Real Academia Española.] Organization founded at Madrid in 1713 by the Duke of Escalona, and established by royal confirmation in 1714, with the object of cultivating and improving the national language.

Academy, Swedish. [Earlier names: Royal Swedish Academy, Academy of Sciences at Stockholm.] Society, originally private, founded June 2, 1739, and originally incorporated March 31, 1741, as the Royal Swedish Academy. Its quarterly publications, Svenska Akademiens Handlingar, are issued in annual volumes, of which the first 40 (1779) form a series known in English as the Old Transactions.

Academy of Ancient Music. Organization established (c1710) at London by a group of instrumental performers for the purpose of learning and performing group works. It was active until 1792.

Academy of Arcadians (ăr.kā'di.ạnz). [Also, Society of Arcadians.] Society founded in 1690 in Italy by Giovan Mario Crescimbeni and Gian Vincenzo Gravina. Its chief aim was to establish in literature the simplicity of the shepherds of the fabled golden age of Arcadia.

Academy of Fine Arts. [French, Académie des Beaux-Arts (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dā bō.zȧr).] Institution at Paris, originating in a private association of painters in the 14th century, recognized by royal French authority in 1648 as the Academy of Painting and Sculpture, and definitively constructed in 1655 by Cardinal Mazarin. At the creation of the National Institute in 1795 it was united with the Academy of Architecture, founded by Colbert in 1671, to form the fourth class of the institute; and since 1819 this class has borne the name of Academy of Fine Arts. It consists of 40 members and a secretary, ten honorary academicians, ten foreign associates, and 50 correspondents. It publishes its memoirs and transactions and the Dictionnaire géneral des beaux-arts.

Academy of Fine Arts. Institution at Florence, Italy, occupying the building formerly known as the Ospedale di San Matteo. The pictures in the collection represent especially the Italian painters of the 15th century. In the "domed room" is Michelangelo's statue of David and a collection of casts of the sculptor's work.

Academy of Fine Arts. Institution at Venice which occupies the old Scuola di Santa Maria della Carità on the Grand Canal. The gallery, which was founded in 1798, is devoted to paintings by Venetian masters.

Academy of France at Rome. [French, Académie de France à Rome (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dẹ frȧńs ȧ rom).] School of fine arts founded at Rome by Louis XIV, where those artists are sent, at the public expense, who obtain the annual prizes of the Academy of Fine Arts at Paris.

Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres. [French, Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dā.zaṅ.skrēp.syôṅ ā bel.letr).] Association composed originally of four members, chosen by Colbert from among the members of the French Academy to draw up inscriptions for the monuments erected by Louis XIV and the medals struck in his honor. It received a separate organization in 1701, which was confirmed by the letters patent of Louis XIV in 1712. It was suppressed by the Convention in 1793, but at the creation of the National Institute in 1795 its members were incorporated in that body. In 1816 the title was restored by Louis XVIII for the second class of the Institute. It has 40 members, 15 free members, 12 foreign associates, and 30 French and 40 foreign correspondents.

Academy of Medicine. [French, Académie de Médecine (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dẹ māt.sēn).] Organization founded in France in 1820 to preserve vaccine matter and act as a bureau of information to the government on sanitation and the public health. It publishes memoirs and carries on an extensive correspondence.

Academy of Moral and Political Sciences. [French, Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques (ȧ.kȧ.dā.mē dā syȧńs mo.rȧl ā po.lē.tēk).] Organization founded as the fifth class of the French National Institute. It was originally established in 1795, suppressed by Napoleon in 1803, and reëstablished by Louis Philippe in 1832. It has 40 members, 10 honorary academicians, 12 foreign associates, and 60 corresponding members.

Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Organization founded in the U.S. in 1927 for the purpose of advancing the arts and sciences of motion pictures. It maintains headquarters at Los Angeles, Calif., has a library of some 3,000 volumes on the history and development of motion pictures, and makes "Annual Awards of Merit" (usually called "Oscars") for outstanding achievement in various phases of motion-picture acting, writing, and production.

Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. A scientific institution organized at Philadelphia in 1812, and incorporated in 1817, possessing a valuable library relating chiefly to natural history, and an extensive collection of specimens in natural history. Its publications consist of Proceedings from 1841, Frontiers (1936 et seq.), and Notulae Naturae (1939 et seq.).

Academy of Political Science. Organization established in the U.S. in 1880 for the purpose of contributing toward an informed public opinion. It maintains headquarters at Columbia University and publishes the Political Science Quarterly and Proceedings.

Academy of Science of St. Louis. Organization founded at St. Louis in 1856 for the purpose of promoting science and establishing a museum and library of scientific works. The latter contains more than 70,000 volumes. The academy issues Transactions (irregularly).

Academy of Sciences. [French, Académie des Sciences (ȧ.kā.dā.mē dā syäns).] Institution founded at Paris in 1666 by Colbert, approved by Louis XIV in 1699, suppressed by the Convention in 1793, and reconstituted in 1795 as a class of the National Institute. It numbers 66 members, 10 honorary academicians, 12 foreign associates, and 110 corresponding members.

Academy of Sciences and Letters, Royal Danish. [Danish, Det Kongelige Danske Videnskabernes Selskab.] An academy established as a private society in 1742, and received under royal Danish protection in 1743.

Academy of Sciences at Berlin, German. [German, Deutsche Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin (doi'chę ä.kä.dā.mē' dėr vis'ẹn.shäf.tẹn tsö ber.lēn').] Institution founded in 1700 by Frederick I, according to plans submitted by Leibniz, and opened in 1711. It was formerly known as the Royal Academy of Sciences at Berlin. It has 55 members, more than 100 correspondents, a library containing some 55,000 volumes, and has sections on natural science, mathematics, history, and philosophy.

Acadia (ạ.kā'di.ạ). [French, Acadie (ȧ.kȧ.dē).] Former French colony in North America, approximating the modern Nova Scotia in geographical extent, bounded by the Atlantic Ocean, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the St. Lawrence River, and westward by a line running N from the mouth of the Penobscot River. It was colonized by France in 1604, on the Bay of Fundy, and ceded (except for Cape Breton Island, which remained French until 1763) to Great Britain by the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. The French settlers in Nova Scotia were deported by the British in 1755, from which event Longfellow derived the basis for his poem Evangeline.

Acahaí (ä.kä.ī'). City in SW Paraguay, in Paraguarí department. 13,000 (est.).

Acajutla (ä.kä.нöt'lä). Town in SW El Salvador, in Sonsonate department, ab. 40 mi. W of San Salvador: seaport and railroad terminus; exports coffee. Pop. under 5,000 (est. 1942).

Acámbaro (ä.käm'bä.rō). City in C Mexico, in Guanajuato state, ab. 90 mi. NW of Mexico City. 17,643 (1940).

Acampichtli or Acampixtli (ä.käm.pēsh'tlē). [Eng. trans., "Handful of Reeds."] d. 1403. Chief of the Aztecs of Mexico, who, according to one chronology, was elected in 1375. He led the Indians of Tenochtitlan in their wars with Tecpan, and canals and stone houses were first made in his time. Although sometimes called a "king," his power was very limited.

Acapulco (ä.kä.pöl'kō). [Full name, Acapulco de Juárez.] City in SW Mexico, in Guerrero state, on the Pacific Ocean. It has been developed during the 20th century as a major Mexican resort, and today attracts many tourists from the U.S. Possessed of one of the best harbors in the country, it had a large commerce during the 17th and 18th centuries, particularly during the Spanish colonization of the Philippines. It suffered a severe earthquake in July, 1909. Pop. 9,993 (1940).

Acarahy Mountains (ä''kạ.rạ.ē'). [Portuguese, Serra Acaraí.] Mountain range in NE South America, forming part of the border between Brazil and British Guiana.

Acarnania (ak.ạr.nā'ni.ạ). [Also, Akarnania.] In ancient geography, a division of Greece, bounded by the Ambracian Gulf on the N, by Amphilochia on the NE, by Aetolia on the E (partly separated by the Achelous River), and by the Ionian Sea on the W. Its ancient inhabitants were the Leleges and Curetes. They were considered rude mountaineers by the people of the Greek city-states, but were nevertheless regarded as Hellenes, and as such were allowed to participate in the Panhellenic games.

Acaste (ȧ.kȧst). Character in Molière's play Le Misanthrope, a gay and brilliant marquis, a lover of Célimène.

Acasto (ạ.kas'tō). Character in Thomas Otway's play The Orphan, a nobleman, the father of Polydore and Castalio, retired from the court and living on his estates.

Acastus (ạ.kas'tus) or Akastos (-tos). In Greek legend, a son of King Pelias of Iolcos, an Argonaut, and one of the hunters of the Calydonian boar; father of Laodamia. He was killed by Peleus, king of the Myrmidons, whom his wife had falsely accused and whose magic sword he had stolen.

Acawa (ak'ạ.wạ). See Chewa.

Acawai (ä.kä.wä.ē'). [Also: Akawai, Wakawai.] Indian tribe of British Guiana, whose settlements were once located on the Cuyuni, Barama, Barima, and Pomeroon rivers. The Acawai language belongs to the Cariban linguistic stock.

Acaxee (ä.käsh'ē). Indian tribe, now extinct, which once inhabited part of the state of Durango, Mexico. Its language was a member of the Uto-Aztecan stock.

Acca (ak'ạ). Arabic name of Acre, Palestine.

Accad (ak'ad, ăk'ăd). See Akkad.

Accademia della Crusca (äk.kä.dā'myä del.lä krös'kä). Academy founded at Florence in 1582 by the poet Grazzini, with the object of purifying the Italian language and literature. It published in 1612 the first edition of the Vocabolario degli Accademici della Crusca, long the standard dictionary of the Italian language.

Acca Larentia (or Laurentia) (ak'ạ lạ.ren'shi.ạ; lô.ren'shi.ạ). Variously identified in Roman legend: 1. as the wife of Faustulus and nurse of Romulus and Remus, her nickname Lupa (she-wolf, or courtesan) being perhaps the source of the story that they were raised by a wolf. 2. as a beautiful woman won in gambling by Hercules, wife of an Etruscan whose wealth she bequeathed to the Romans, honored by their festival called Larentalia.

Accau or Accault (ȧ.kō), Michel. See Aco, Michel.

Accho (ak'ō). Old Testament name of Acre, Palestine.

Acciajuoli (ät.chä.ywô'lē) or Acciajoli (ät.chä.yô'lē), Donato. b. at Florence, 1428; d. at Milan, Aug. 28, 1478. Italian scholar and government official. He was gonfalonier, or chancellor, of Florence in 1473. Author of lives of Hannibal, Scipio, and Charlemagne, of a translation of some of Plutarch's Lives, and of commentaries on Aristotle's Ethics and Politics.

Acciajuoli or Acciajoli, Nerio. Italian nobleman, a member of the Florentine family of that name, created Duke of Athens in 1394. The title and the Athenian seat were retained by his successors till 1456, when the Turks put an end to the domination of parts of Greece by various of the Italian city-states.

Acciajuoli or Acciajoli, Niccolò. d. 1365. Florentine banker and statesman. He served for many years as the chief adviser of Joanna, Queen of Naples, and was invested in 1358 with the barony and hereditary governorship of the fortress of Corinth, in Greece.

Accioli de Cerqueira e Silva (äk.syō'lē dę ser.kā'rạ ę sēl'vạ), Ignacio. b. at Coimbra, Portugal, 1808; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 1, 1865. Brazilian geographer. When very young he emigrated with his father to Brazil, and in 1833 began the publication of a series of geographical works on the Brazilian empire, of which he was made official chronicler.

Accius (ak'shi.us), Lucius. [Also, Attius.] b. c170 B.C.; d. c90 B.C. Roman tragic poet and prose writer notable for his Greek adaptations, though he dealt also with Roman subjects.

Acco (ak'ō). Old Testament name of Acre, Palestine.

Accolon (ak'ọ.lon). Character in the Morte d'Arthur, a knight of Gaul, celebrated for his combat with King Arthur. In this combat the latter sought to regain his enchanted sword and scabbard, of which Accolon had gained possession through the aid of Morgan le Fay.

Accolti (äk.kôl'tē), Benedetto. b. at Arezzo, Italy, 1415; d. at Florence, 1466. Italian jurist and writer, gonfalonier, or chancellor, of the Florentine republic (1459–66). He was a brother of Leonardo Accolti.

Accolti, Benedetto. b. at Florence, 1497; d. 1549. Italian cardinal and poet; nephew of Pietro Accolti (1455–1532). He was the author of Latin poems collected in Carmina illustrium poetarum Italorum.

Accolti, Bernardo. [Called "l'Unico Aretino."] b. c1465; d. c1535. Italian poet; son of Benedetto Accolti (1415–66). He was famous in his day, particularly as an extemporaneous poet, and is known (partly through Castiglione's The Courtier) to many modern readers of Italian literature.

Accolti, Francesco. b. at Arezzo, Italy, 1418; d. at Siena, Italy, 1483. Italian jurist, professor of law at Bologna and Ferrara, and secretary to the duke of Milan; brother of Benedetto Accolti (1415–66).

Accolti, Leonardo. fl. 15th century. Italian historian and writer. He shared the authorship, with his brother, Benedetto Accolti (1415–66), of a history of the First Crusade used by Tasso as a source for Jerusalem Delivered.

Accolti, Pietro. [Called "Cardinal of Ancona."] b. at Florence, 1455; d. there, 1532. Italian cardinal and legate in Ancona; brother of Bernardo Accolti (c1465–c1535). As abbreviator under Pope Leo X, he drew up the bull against Luther in 1520. He was made archbishop of Ravenna in 1524 by Pope Clement VII.

Accoramboni (äk"kō.räm.bô'nē), Vittoria. [Title, Duchess of Bracciano.] b. at Rome, c1557; d. at Padua, Dec. 22, 1585. Italian beauty, whose tragic story has been used by numerous writers in the centuries since her death. Her first husband, Francesco Peretti, was murdered (1581) at the instigation of Paolo Giordano Orsini, Duke of Bracciano, whom she subsequently married. On his death (1585) she became involved in litigation with Lodovic Orsini concerning the inheritance, and was murdered by him. These events were adapted in Webster's tragedy The White Devil, or Vittoria Corombona (1612), recounted by the biographer Gnoli (1870), and made the subject of a novel by Ludwig Tieck, Vittoria Accoramboni (1840).

Accorso (äk.kōr'sō), Buono. [Also: Buonaccorso; Latinized, Accursius.] b. at Pisa, Italy, c1450. Italian classical scholar and rhetorician, a commentator on Caesar and other Latin authors.

Accorso, Francesco. [Latinized, Franciscus Accursius.] b. at Bagnolo, Tuscany, or in Florence, c1182; d. at Bologna, c1260. Italian jurist, for a time teacher of law at Bologna. His most celebrated work was a methodical compilation of all the commentaries on Roman law, called, in English, The Great Gloss. This work remained the final authority until the time of Bartolo (late 14th century).

Accorso, Francesco. [Latinized, Franciscus Accursius.] b. at Bologna, 1225; d. there, 1293. Italian jurist; son of Francesco Accorso (c1182–c1260). He was professor of law at Bologna, entered the service of Edward I of England, and lectured on law at Oxford (c1275).

Accorso, Mariangelo. [Latinized, Accursius.] b. at Aquila, Italy, c1490; d. 1544. Italian literary critic at the court of Charles V. He was the author of Diatribae in Ausonium, Jul. Solin Polyhistora, et in Ovidii Metamorphoses (1524), and editor of Ammianus Marcellinus (1553), and others.

Account of Corsica. Narrative (1768) by James Boswell, written as a result of a visit to Corsica in 1765. In it Boswell clearly reveals his sympathy for the Corsicans in their lengthy period of rebellion (1729–68) against control by Genoa. The book was published in the year that Corsica was sold by Genoa to France.

Accra (ak'rą, ą.krä'). [Also: Akkra, Akra.] City in W Africa, the capital and largest city of the Gold Coast, situated on the Gulf of Guinea ab. 60 mi. W of the mouth of the Volta River. An important port, it is connected by rail with the cocoa-growing districts and the major towns of the interior. It is the educational center of the area, with several schools and a college. The chief exports of the port are cocoa, kola, lumber, and palm oil. 135,926 (1948).

Accrington (ak'ring.ton). Municipal borough and market town in NW England, in Lancashire, situated on the river Hinburn, ab. 20 mi. NW of Manchester, ab. 205 mi. NW of London by rail. Its industries include the manufacture of cheap cotton cloth, calico printing, dyeing, iron founding, and the manufacture of textile machincry, 40,671 (1951).

Accum (äk'ùm), Friedrich Christian. b. at Bückeburg, Germany, 1769; d. at Berlin, June 28, 1838. German chemist, long resident in London. He is known chiefly for his Practical Treatise on Gas-light (1815), and his efforts to promote the use of gas for purposes of illumination.

Accursius (ą.kėr'shi.us; -shus). Latinized form of Accorso.

Aceldama (a.sel'da.ma). Field said to have been situated S of Jerusalem, the Potter's Field, purchased with the bribe which Judas took for betraying Jesus (whence the name, meaning "field of blood" in Aramaic). It was later appropriated to the interment of strangers, and it was from this use that the term "potter's field" came to mean a burying ground for paupers. Mat. xxvii. 8; Acts, i. 19.

Acelum (as'ę.lum). Ancient name of Asolo.

Acephali (ą.sef'ą.lī). Name given to various 5th and 6th century Christian groups who repudiated the authority of all bishops and other church heads (the name derives from a Greek word meaning "without a head"). Most notable among them were the Monophysites, who in 482 rejected the authority of Peter Mongus, bishop of Alexandria, on doctrinal grounds.

Acerbas (ą.sėr'bas) or Akerbas (-kėr'-). [Also, Sicharbas.] In classical legend, uncle and husband of Elissa, a wealthy and powerful Tyrian noble, high priest of the Tyrian god Melkarth. In Vergil's Aeneid Acerbas was Sichaeus, husband of Dido (Elissa), murdered for his riches by her brother Pygmalion. Dido was able, however, when she fled from Tyre and founded Carthage, to take the treasure with her.

Acerbi (ä.cher'bē), Giuseppe. b. at Castel-Goffredo, near Mantua, Italy, May 3, 1773; d. Aug. 26, 1846. Italian scholar, traveler, and naturalist. One of the founders (1816) of Biblioteca Italiana, a literary magazine, he is remembered also as the author of Travels through Sweden, Finland, and Lapland to the North Cape in the Years 1798 and 1799 (Eng. trans., 1802).

Acernus (ą.sėr'nus), Sebastian. See Klonowicz, Sebastjan Fabjan.

Acerra (ä.cher'rä). [Latin, Acerrae.] Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Napoli, situated on the Carmignano Canal, ab. 10 mi. NE of Naples. It is an agricultural community. Pop. of commune, 21,973 (1936); of town, 19,177 (1936).

Acesines (ą.ses'i.nēz). Ancient name of the Chenab.

Acestes (ą.ses'tēz). In Greek legend, a son of the Sicilian river-god Crimisus and Egesta (Segesta), a Trojan woman. He figured in the Trojan War, and was introduced by Vergil in the Aeneid.

Acevedo Díaz (ä.sā.bā'ŦHō dē'äs), Eduardo. b. 1851; d. in exile, 1924. Uruguayan historical novelist whose work, written entirely in his several periods of exile, stimulated and was a model for much modern gaucho prose in Uruguay and Argentina. Author of Ismael (1888), Nativa (1890), Grito de gloria (1894), and Soledad (1894), the first three of which have been said to constitute a nationalistic "hymn to blood."

Ach (äċh), Narziss. b. Oct. 29, 1871—. German psychologist, a member of Külpe's "Würzburg School." In his Über die Willenstätigkeit und das Denken (1905) he presented three notable contributions to psychology: (1) the concept of determining tendency, (2) the concept of awareness (bewusstseinlage), and (3) the technique of systematic experimental introspection. He accepted a professorial chair at Göttingen upon the retirement of G. E. Müller in 1921.

Achá (ä.chä'), José María de. b. c1805; d. at Cochabamba, Bolivia, 1868. Bolivian revolutionist. He served under Santa Cruz (1829–39), and under José Ballivián in the war against Peru (1841). Appointed (1858) minister of war by President Linares, he revolted, and in May, 1861, was proclaimed president of Bolivia. During the four years of his administration Bolivia was the victim of much civil strife, and he was himself deposed (1865) through the successful revolt of a rival politician.

Achaea (ą.kē′ą). [Also: Achaia (ą.kā′ą); called Achaea Phthiotis (thī.ō′tis).] In ancient geography, a small region in S Thessaly, containing Phthia. It was probably the original home of the Achaean people, and it retained its name as late as the time of Herodotus.

Achaea. [Also: Achaia; original name, Aegialus or Aegialeia, meaning "The Coast."] In ancient geography, a mountainous district in the Peloponnesus, bordering on the Gulf of Corinth, N of Elis and Arcadia.

Achaea. [Also, Achaia.] In ancient geography, a collective term applied to the states forming the Achaean League (c280–146 B.C.).

Achaea. [Also, Achaia.] In ancient geography, a Roman province, of uncertain limits, but corresponding approximately to modern Greece, formed probably in the first century B.C. Its northern boundary was probably drawn south of Thessaly and Epirus. The province was abolished by Nero, but was reëstablished by Vespasian.

Achaea. [Also, Achaia.] In medieval geography, a Frankish principality in Greece, corresponding generally to the Peloponnesus.

Achaea. [Also: Akhaia, Achaia.] In modern geography, a nomos (department) in S Greece, situated on the N coast of the Peloponnesus. It includes the provinces of Aegialia, Kalavryta, and Patras. Capital, Patras; area, 2,065 sq. mi. pop. 221,633 (1940).

Achaean League (ą.kē′ąn). A religious confederation in Achaea, consisting at the time of Herodotus of 12 cities: Pellene, Aegeira, Aegae, Bura, Helike, Aegion, Rhypes, Patrae, Pharae, Olenos, Dyme, and Tritaea. Somewhat later, Rhypes and Aegae fell into decay, and their places in the confederacy were taken by Leontion and Keryneia.

Achaean League. A political confederation of Achaean and other Greek cities extending over the period of 281 B.C. to 146 B.C. After the death of Lysimachus in 280 B.C., the Achaean cities Dyme, Patrae, Tritaea, and Pharae formed a confederation to resist the Macedonian domination, and were afterward joined by the other Achaean cities, except Olenos and Helike. In 251 B.C. the confederation acquired new strength by the accession of Sikyon, under the leadership of Aratus. In 245 B.C. Aratus was elected strategus of the league, which under his guidance rapidly rose to national importance. In a short time it embraced Athens, Aegina, Salamis, and the whole of Peloponnesus, with the exception of Sparta, Tegea, Orchomenos, Mantineia, and Elis. It was destroyed by the Romans in 146 B.C., and with it fell the last stronghold of freedom in Greece. The Achaean League is remarkable as one of the most perfect types of federal government which has been handed down from antiquity. The confederation was inseparable, every city having equal rights with the others; in foreign affairs the federal government was supreme. Common affairs were regulated at general meetings held twice a year by the citizens of all the towns.

Achaeans (ą.kē′ąnz). [Also: Achaei (ą.kē′ī), Achaians (ą.kā′ąnz), Achivi (ą.kī′vī).] One of the four principal peoples of ancient Greece (the Aeolians, Dorians, and Ionians were the other three). Their chief places of abode were S Thessaly and the E part of the Peloponnesus. The name is applied generally to all Greeks in Homeric poetry, and to some extent by poets in later times. The Achaeans formed the ethnic basis of the Achaean League which lasted until 146 B.C., when the Romans finally subjugated the Greeks.

Achaemenes (ą.kē′mẹ.nēz). [Old Persian, Hakhāmaniš, meaning "the Friendly."] fl. c7th cent. B.C. Eponymous founder (possibly mythical) of the ancient Persian royal family of the Achaemenidae. He was, initially, ruler of Anshan, in SW Persia. His name was later used as a family name, beginning (550 B.C.) with Cyrus.

Achaemenidae (ak.ẹ̄.men′i.dē). [Also: Achaemenides (-dēz), Achemenides, Achemenids.] Ancient royal family of Persia, founded c600 B.C. Its leading members were Achaemenes, Cyrus the Great, Cambyses (Gomates, the Magian usurper), Darius Hystaspis, Xerxes I, Artaxerxes I, Xerxes II, Sogdianos, Darius Ochus, Artaxerxes Mnemon, Ochus, Arses, and Darius Codomannus.

Achaeus (ą.kē′us) or Achaios (ą.kā′os). fl. c484–448 B.C. Greek poet of Eretria in Euboea. He was the author of 44 dramas, only fragments of which remain, and of which the titles of only 17 are now known. He contended with Sophocles and Euripides in the great Hellenic drama contests of his day.

Achalm (äch′älm). Mountain peak in S Germany, in Württemberg, near Reutlingen. 2,313 ft.

Achamoth (ak′ą.moth). Name given by the Gnostic philosopher Valentinus to a lower or imperfect Wisdom, the weakest aeon, the form under which spirit surrenders itself completely to matter and becomes the foundation of the real world.

Achan (ā′kan). [Also, Achar (ā′kär).] In the Old Testament, an Israelite of the tribe of Judah, stoned to death, with his family, for plundering during the sack of Jericho. Josh. vii; 1 Chron. ii. 7.

Achard (äch′ärt), Franz Karl. b. at Berlin, April 28, 1753; d. in Silesia, April 20, 1821. German chemist, notable as a pioneer in beet-sugar manufacture and as the discoverer of a method for working platinum. Following Marggraf's discovery of sugar in beets, he conducted experiments and a school in beet-sugar manufacture on a government-granted Silesian estate.

Achard (ą.shär), Louis Amédée Eugène. b. at Marseilles, in April, 1814; d. at Paris, March 25, 1875. French novelist and dramatist. He was the author of La Belle Rose (1847), La Chasse Royale (1849–50), and others.

Achard, Marcel. b. at Sainte-Foy-lès-Lyon, France, July 5, 1899—. French dramatist, particularly successful with whimsical comedy. His plays include Voulez-vous jouer avec moâ (1923), La Vie est belle (1928), La Belle Marinière (1929), and Jean de la Lune (1929). The last is his best-known work, because of the international success of the motion picture based upon it.

Acharius (ą.kā′ri.ụs), Erik. b. at Gefle, Sweden, Oct. 10, 1757; d. at Wadstena, Sweden, Aug. 14, 1819. Swedish physician and botanist. A specialist in lichens, he was a pupil of Linnaeus. Author of Lichenographia universalis (1804) and Synopsis methodica Lichenum (1814).

Acharnians (ą.kär′ni.ąnz), The. Comedy of Aristophanes, first brought out, under the name of Callistratus, at the Lenaea, or country Dionysia, at Athens, in 425 B.C. It was an attempt to support the aristocratic peace-party against the intrigues and intimidations of the democratic war-party represented by the chorus of Acharnians. In form it is an extravagant farce rather than a comedy.

Achates (ą.kā′tēz). Faithful companion (called fidus Achates) of Aeneas, and hence in literary usage sometimes used to mean any follower, adherent, or companion of great loyalty.

Ache (dāsh), Caran d'. See Caran d'Ache.

Acheen (ą.chēn′). See Atjeh.

Achehnese (ach.ẹ.nēs′, -nēz′). [Also: Achenese, Achinese, Atjehnese, Atjenese.] A Malayo-Polynesian-speaking, rice-growing coastal people of N Sumatra.

Achelous (ak.e.lō′us). [Modern Greek, Akheloos, Aspropotamos.] River in NW Greece which rises in Epirus, in the Pindus Mountains, forms part of the boundary between what was ancient Aetolia and Acarnania, and flows into the Ionian Sea. It is not commercially navigable, but it is important in modern Greece as a source of hydroelectric power. Length, ab. 130 mi.

Achelous. In Greek mythology, a river god, defeated by Hercules in a struggle over Deianira.

Achemenides (ak.ẹ̄.men′i.dēz) or Achemenids (ak.ẹ̄-men′idz). See Achaemenidae.

Achenbach (ą′chẹn.bäch), Andreas. b. at Cassel, Germany, Sept. 29, 1815; d. 1910. German landscape and marine painter; brother of Oswald Achenbach (1815–1910). He was a pioneer in 19th-century German realism.

Achenbach, Max. [Stage name, Max Alvary.] b. at Düsseldorf, Germany, c1858; d. 1898. German operatic tenor; son of Andreas Achenbach (1815–1910). He made his debut at Weimar, and later (1884–89) performed at New York.

Achenbach, Oswald. b. at Düsseldorf, Germany, Feb. 2, 1827; d. there, 1905. German landscape painter, chiefly of Italian subjects; brother of Andreas Achenbach (1815–1910). His paintings are notable for their richness of color.

Acheng (ä′cheng′). [Also: Ajeho, Alchoku, Ashehoh.] Town in NE China, in the province of Sunkiang, Manchuria, ab. 20 mi. SE of Harbin, in a wheat and millet growing area. Pop. ab. 5,000.

Achen Lake (äċh'ẹn). [German, Achensee (äċh'ẹn.zā).] Small lake in W Austria, in the Tirol, lying N of the valley of the lower Inn. It empties into the Isar. Length, ab. 5½ mi.

Achenwall (äċh'ẹn.väl), Gottfried. b. at Elbing, Prussia, Oct. 20, 1719; d. at Göttingen, Germany, May 1, 1772. German scholar, professor of philosophy (1748 et seq.) and of law (1761 et seq.) at the University of Göttingen. He is considered by some authorities to have been the founder of the science of statistics.

Achern (äċh'ėrn). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Baden, French Zone, ab. 31 mi. SW of Karlsruhe: wine trade; metallurgical and paper manufactures. The insane asylum of Illenau is in the vicinity. 4,391 (1947).

Achernar (a.kėr'när). Name given to the blue first-magnitude star α Eridani, at the southern extremity of the constellation Eridanus, 32½ degrees from the South Pole.

Acheron (ak'ẹ.ron). In ancient geography, the name of several small rivers in Greece, of which the chief (the modern Gurla) was in Thesprotia in Epirus. It flowed through the lake Acherusia, received the waters of the Cocytus (the modern Vuvos), and emptied into the Ionian Sea.

Acheron. In Greek mythology, one of the five rivers surrounding Hades, the river of woe. The souls of the dead had to bathe in it or cross it. Later it became synonymous with the lower world in general.

Acheron. An ancient name of Fusaro Lake.

Acherusia Palus (ak.ẹ.rö'si.ạ pā'lus). [Eng. trans., "Acherusian Bog."] In ancient geography, the name of several small lakes supposed to be connected with the lower world. The most important were the lake through which the Acheron flowed, and one ab. 11 mi. W of Naples, the modern Fusaro Lake. Like Acheron, the name came to be applied, in ancient literary usage, to the lower world itself.

Acheson (ach'ẹ.sọn), Dean Gooderham. b. at Middletown, Conn., April 11, 1893—. American lawyer and statesman. He was graduated (1915) from Yale, and in 1918 received his law degree from Harvard. He then served (1919–21) as private secretary to Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis, and in 1921 joined the law firm of Covington, Burling, and Rublee (Washington, D. C.), of which he became a partner in 1934. During the early New Deal period he was undersecretary of the treasury (May 19–Nov. 15, 1933). In 1941 he was named assistant secretary of state, and in 1945 was appointed undersecretary of state, holding that post until 1947. On Jan. 7, 1949, he was named U.S. secretary of state, succeeding George C. Marshall. During the first year of his service he took a leading role in the discussions which culminated in the signing of the Atlantic Pact by the U.S., France, Great Britain, Norway, Italy, and other nations. He presided in 1951 over the meeting of the Allies at San Francisco that saw the signing of a peace treaty with Japan, and was succeeded as secretary of state in January, 1953, by John Foster Dulles.

Acheson, Edward Goodrich. b. at Washington, Pa., March 9, 1856; d. at New York, July 6, 1931. American inventor and technician, notable for his development of carborundum. With Edison, he installed the first electric lights in Belgium, the Netherlands, and Italy (c1885). He later organized the Acheson Graphite Company (1899), and patented processes for Egyptianizing clay and for producing synthetic graphite.

Acheulean Period (ạ.shé'lē.ạn). Stage of early Paleolithic development during which the techniques of Chellean hand-axe manufacture were further developed. In time it apparently coincides with the gradual onset of the last glaciation in Europe; the woolly rhinoceros and the mammoth are associated with the period. It seems to have been succeeded by the Mousterian Period.

Achewa (ach'ẹ.wạ). See Chewa.

Ach Gott vom Himmel (äċh got fom him'ẹl). Hymn by Martin Luther published in 1524, the melody of which is used in Mozart's Magic Flute.

Achikunda (ach.i.kün'dạ). See Chikunda.

Achill (ak'il). [Also: Achil, Eagle Island.] Island in W Ireland, in Connacht province of the Irish Republic, County Mayo. It lies off the W coast of that county, and is the largest island on the coast of Ireland, with which it is connected by a bridge. Its highest elevation is Slievemore (2,204 ft.). Area, 80 sq. mi.

Achilleis (ak.i.lē'is). [Also, Achilleid (-id).] Unfinished epic poem by the Roman poet Publius Papinius Statius.

Achilleis. [Also, Achilleid.] Name given to the part of the Iliad comprised by Books I, VIII, and XI–XXII, regarded by some critics as constituting a poem of which the theme is the "wrath of Achilles," and which is distinct from, and older than, the rest of the Iliad. The name Achilleis was first applied to these books by George Grote.

Achilles (ạ.kil'ēz). In Greek legend, a great warrior, one of the chief heroes of the Trojan War. He is said to have been the son of Peleus and Thetis, the grandson of Aeacus, and chief of the Myrmidons, a Thessalian tribe. According to the legend of his life, he was educated by the centaur Chiron. He is the central hero of Homer's Iliad, which is largely occupied with his quarrel with Agamemnon, leader of the Greek host, and with his martial exploits. He was the slayer of Hector, and was himself slain by Paris, who pierced his heel, Achilles' only vulnerable spot (all other portions of his body had been rendered invulnerable when his mother, holding him by the heel, had immersed him as a child in the river Styx).

Achilles Tatius (tā'shus). fl. in the late 2nd century (or during the 3rd century) A.D. Greek astronomer who was one of the many commentators on the astronomical work, in verse, now usually spelled Phenomena (or Phainomena), written by Aratos of Soli. His commentary, entitled On the Sphere is preserved only in a fragmentary condition.

Achilles Tatius. fl. probably in 4th century A.D. Greek rhetorician at Alexandria, in Egypt. He was the author of the Greek romance Adventures of Leucippe and Cleitophon.

Achilleum (ak.i.lē'um). In ancient geography, a place on the promontory of Sigeum, in NW Asia Minor, in the Troad, containing, according to tradition, the tomb of Achilles.

Achill Head (ak'il). Promontory in W Ireland, at the W extremity of the island of Achill, in Connacht province of the Irish Republic, County Mayo. Elevation, 2,192 ft.

Achillini (ä.kēl.lē'nē), Alessandro. [Called "the Second Aristotle."] b. at Bologna, Italy, Oct. 29, 1463; d. Aug. 2, 1512. Italian anatomist and philosopher. One of the first European medical scholars to dissect cadavers; he served as professor of both philosophy and medicine at the universities of Bologna and Padua. He was the author of works in both fields, but is best known for his contributions as an anatomist.

Achin (ä.chēn'). See Atjeh.

Achinese (ach.ẹ.nēs', -nēz'). See Achehnese.

Achinsk (ä'chinsk). [Also, Atchinsk.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Krasnoyarsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, on the Trans-Siberian Railroad, situated on the Chulym River ab. 100 mi. W of Krasnoyarsk: important rail and highway junction, and trading center. Manganese is mined in the vicinity. Pop. ab. 17,000.

Achipeta (ach.i.pē'tạ). See Chipeta.

Achish (ā'kish). In the Old Testament, a Philistine king of Gath with whom David sought refuge when fleeing from Saul. 1 Sam. xxi. 10–15; 1 Sam. xxix.

Achish. In the Old Testament, a king of Gath who reigned in the time of Solomon. 1 Kings, ii. 39–40.

Achithophel (ạ.kit'ọ.fel). A character in Dryden's poem Absalom and Achitophel, intended to represent the Earl of Shaftesbury, who was called by this name by his contemporaries, implying a treacherous friend and adviser. The name is intended, of course, to suggest the counselor of David, in the Old Testament, who joined Absalom in his revolt against his father. Dryden took his spelling from the Vulgate Bible; the King James Bible shows "Ahithophel," which is now the spelling most commonly used for the Old Testament character, but Dryden's character retains the Vulgate spelling.

Achitophel. Variant spelling of Ahithophel found in the Vulgate and Douay Bibles. It was from the former of these that John Dryden derived the spelling used in his satiric poem Absalom and Achitophel.

Achivi (ą.kī'vī). See Achaeans.

Achmet (äċh'met). See also under Ahmed.

Achmet Pasha (pä.shä', pâsh'ä). See Bonneval, Claude Alexandre, Comte de.

Acholi (ä.chō'lē). [Also: Atscholi, Gang, Schuli, Shuoli.] Nilotic-speaking people of E Africa, inhabiting Acholi district of N Uganda and a small portion of S Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Their population is estimated at ab. 180,000 (by M. A. Bryan, Distribution of the Nilotic and Nilo-Hamitic Languages of Africa, 1948).

Achray (ą.krā'), Loch. Lake in C Scotland, in Perthshire, situated in the Trossachs, between Loch Katrine and Loch Vennachar, ab. 19 mi. NW of Stirling. Length, ab. 2 mi.

Achúcharro (ä.chö'chär.rō), Nicolás. b. at Bilbao, Spain, 1881; d. at Madrid, 1918. Spanish histologist. A pupil of Ramón y Cajal, he took postgraduate work with Pierre Marie at Paris (1901–02), with E. Kraepelin and A. Alzheimer at Munich, and with G. Lugaro at Florence, and became (1908) director of the laboratory of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington, D. C. His investigations (1909) of the changes in the nervous systems of animals suffering from rabies led him to the study of neuroglial reactions in this disease and thence to an understanding of the need for a better neuroglial staining method. He developed (1911) the tannic acid and silver technique which bears his name. With the help of Ramón y Cajal he set up a neuropathology laboratory in the museum of natural history at Madrid which was later united with Ramón y Cajal's Laboratorio de Investigaciones Biológicas. Among his more important neuropathologic works were those on general paresis (1911, 1912, 1914), functions of the neuroglia (1909, 1913, 1915), brain tumors (1912, 1913), and Alzheimer's disease (1914).

Acidalius (as.i.dā'li.us; German, ä.tsē.dä'li.ŭs), Valens. b. at Wittstock, Prussia, May 25, 1567; d. at Neisse, Prussia, May 25, 1595. German philologist and critic, author of several commentaries on the Latin classics.

Acilia gens (ą.sil'i.ą jenz). In ancient Roman history, a clan or house whose family names were Aviola, Balbus, and Glabrio. Members of the last two families were frequently tribunes of the plebs.

Acilium (ą.sil'i.um). Latin name of Aiguillon.

Acireale (ä''chē.rā.ä'lā). City and commune in S Italy, on the island of Sicily, in the province of Catania, situated on the E coast of Sicily and on the E slope of Mount Etna, ab. 9 mi. N of Catania. It is the center of a fertile citrus and wine producing district, and contains numerous churches and houses in the Sicilian baroque style. World War II damage included the Chiesa del Suffragio, the roof and windows of the Duomo (cathedral), and the dome and windows of San Sebastiano, but repairs are now completed or being carried out. Nearby are the hot springs of Santa Venera, which are visited by people suffering from neuritis, gout, and respiratory diseases. Pop. of commune, 36,871 (1936); of city, 19,440 (1936).

Acis (ā'sis). In classical mythology, a beautiful Sicilian, son of Faunus and Symaethis, beloved by Galatea, and slain by Polyphemus the Cyclops, his unsuccessful rival.

Acis and Galatea (gal.ą.tē'ą). Pastoral opera by Handel, composed c1721. The words by John Gay, with additions by Alexander Pope and John Dryden, spiritedly burlesque one of Ovid's Metamorphoses.

Acis et Galatée (ą.sēs ā gą.lą.tā). Opera by Jean Baptiste Lully, with words by Jean Galbert de Campistron, first produced in 1686.

Acken (äk'ęn). See Aken.

Acker (ak'ėr), Charles Ernest. b. at Bourbon, Ind., March 19, 1868; d. at Ossining, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1920. American electrical engineer and manufacturer, inventor of numerous processes in electrochemistry and electrometallurgy. Beginning with his electrolytic process for caustic soda and chlorine production (1896), on which was founded the Acker Process Company, Niagara Falls, N. Y., he obtained over 40 patents for inventions including methods of producing caustic alkalis, gases, nitrides, carbon and tin tetrachlorides, detinning processes, and others. He was director of the American Electro-chemical Society (1905–10) and of the Westchester County Bureau of Municipal Research.

Ackermann (äk'ėr.män), Alexander. Original name of Agricola, Alexander.

Ackermann, Johann Christian Gottlieb. b. Feb. 17, 1756; d. at Altdorf, Bavaria, March 9, 1801. German medical writer. He was the author of Institutiones historiae medicinae (1792), and lives of Hippocrates, Theophrastus, Dioscorides, Áretaeus, Rufus Ephesius, and Galen.

Ackermann, Konrad Ernst. b. in Schwerin, Germany, Feb. 1, 1712; d. at Hamburg, Nov. 13, 1771. German actor, usually credited with establishing the basic standards of the German theater in his day. He appeared on the stage first at Lüneburg (1740), traveled with various companies, and built and operated (1764–67) a theater at Hamburg. He was the stepfather of Friedrich Ludwig Schröder.

Ackermann (ą.ker.mąn), Louise Victorine. [Maiden name, Choquet.] b. at Paris, Nov. 30, 1813; d. at Nice, France, Aug. 2, 1890. French poet. Author of Contes (1855), Contes et poésies (1863), Poésies philosophiques (1874), and a volume of prose, Pensées d'une solitaire (1883).

Ackermann (ak'ėr.mąn), Rudolph. b. at Schneeberg, Saxony, April 20, 1764; d. at Finchley, Middlesex, England, March 30, 1834. German art publisher and bookseller at London (1795 et seq.). A one-time coach-builder and harness-maker, he patented (1801) a method of making cloth and paper waterproof, which had considerable value to publishers of books. He himself published (1817–28) the monthly Repository of Arts, Literature, Fashions, etc. and travel books, illustrated with lithographs by Rowlandson and others. The establishment of lithography as a fine art in England is often credited to him.

Ackermann aus Böhmen (äk'ėr.män ous bė'męn), Der. German dialogue written in 1400 by Johannes von Saaz. In this most human document of the period a man who has just lost his wife argues with death only to be shown by God in the end that death must be.

Ackland (ak'ląnd), Rodney. b. 1908—. English playwright. His Strange Orchestra (1932) was much admired at London, but failed after a single performance at New York. Other plays include The Old Ladies (1935), an adaptation of Sir Hugh Walpole's novel about three aged gentlefolk, and the Chekhovian After October (1936) and Remembrance of Things Past (1938). He also adapted (1949) Crime and Punishment for the stage.

Acklins Island (ak'linz). Island in the Atlantic Ocean, a British possession in the Bahamas, ab. 120 mi. NE of Cuba. Area, 120 sq. mi.; pop. 1,744 (1943).

Ackté-Jalander (äk.tā'yä'län.dėr), Aino. [Maiden name, Stoemer-Ackté.] b. at Helsinki, Finland, April 23, 1876; d. there, 1944. Finnish operatic soprano. She won fame at the Grand Opéra (1897–1904), the Metropolitan (1904–06), and Covent Garden (1907, 1910).

Acla (ä'klä). In early Spanish-American history, a Spanish colonial town in N Panama, in Colón province, on the Caribbean side of the Isthmus of Panama, probably near San Blas Bay. It was founded by Pedrarias in 1515, and was the place where Balboa built his ships to be transported across the isthmus in 1517, and where he was executed. The settlement, for a time important, was abandoned before 1580.

Acland (ak'ląnd), Lady Christian Henrietta Caroline. [Called Lady Harriet.] b. Jan. 3, 1750; d. at Tetton, near Taunton, England, July 21, 1815. Wife of John Dyke Acland, whom she accompanied in North America during the Revolutionary War on Burgoyne's Saratoga campaign in 1777.

Acland, Sir Henry Wentworth Dyke. b. at Exeter, England, Aug. 23, 1815; d. at Oxford, England, 1900. English physician. As regius professor of medicine at Oxford (1858–94), he took a leading part in the revival of the medical school at Oxford, and made himself known as an advocate of public-health legislation. He was also for many years a friend of Ruskin, and attended the Prince of Wales on a voyage to America in 1860.

Acland, John Dyke. d. near Dulverton, England, Oct. 31, 1778. English soldier and politician. As a member of Parliament, he was a vigorous opponent of the demands of the American colonies, and joined Burgoyne's Saratoga campaign (1777) during the Revolutionary War as a major. During the decisive battle of this campaign, near Saratoga in the autumn of 1777, he was wounded and taken prisoner.

Aco (ä.kō), Michel. [Also: Accau, Accault, Ako.] b. at Poitiers, France; fl. 1680–1702. French explorer and trader in colonial America. Sent (1680) by La Salle, with Auguel and Hennepin, to explore the upper Mississippi, he was captured with them by the Sioux. After rescue by Duluth, the three made their way through the Great Lakes and arrived (1681) at Montreal. Later (1693) appearing in Illinois as a trader at the fort erected by Tonty, Aco married the daughter of a Kaskaskia chief.

Acoemetae (as.ē.mē'tē). [Called Studites.] Monastic order founded (c430) by Alexander, a Syrian monk. Their religious zeal led the members of the order to divide the 24-hour day into three equal parts, during each of which one third of the monks would engage in prayer, so that the religious devotion of the order might be uninterrupted.

Acolastus (ak.ō.las'tus). Latin comedy composed by Gulielmus Fullonius (Willem de Volder), a schoolmaster at The Hague. It was translated into English prose and published (1540) by John Palsgrave, in a volume which also contained the Latin version. It was first acted, in Latin, in 1529. It was designed for use in schools, and there were 40 different issues of it during the lifetime of the author.

Acolhuas (ä.kō.lō'ąz). [Also, Acolhuans (ä.kō.lō'ąnz).] Name which has been applied to a Nahuatl-speaking tribe of Indians which, according to tradition, preceded the Aztecs in the valley of Mexico.

Acoma (ä'kō.mą). Pueblo Indian village in W central New Mexico; the language is of the Keresan family. Pop. ab. 600.

Acomat (ą.ko.mą). In Jean Baptiste Racine's tragedy Bajazet, an ambitious vizier.

Aconcagua (ä.kông.kä'gwä). Province in C Chile, bounded by Coquimbo on the N, and by Santiago and Valparaíso on the S. Capital, San Felipe; area, 3,940 sq. mi.; pop. 121,206 (est. 1943).

Aconcagua. Mountain in W Argentina, on the border of Chile. An inactive volcano, it is the tallest mountain in South America and the Western Hemisphere. 22,835 ft.

Aconcagua River. River in C Chile, N of Valparaíso. It empties into the Pacific Ocean.

Aconcio (ä.kōn'chō) or Aconzio (ä.kōn'tsyō), Giacomo (or Jacopo). [Also: Concio; Latinized, Jacobus Acontius.] b. at Trent, in the Tirol, c1500; d. at London, c1566. Italian theologian and engineer. A refugee (1559 et seq.) in Elizabethan England because of his repudiation of Catholic doctrine, he there wrote Stratagemata Satanae (Stratagems of Satan, 1565), in which he sought to articulate a basis for belief which might be shared by all Christians (the "stratagems of Satan" were, in his eyes, the conflicting dogmas that lay behind the conflicts between various Christian groups).

Aconquija (ä.kōng.kē'hä), Sierra de. See Sierra de Aconquija or Anconquija.

Acontius (ą.kon'shi.us, -shus). Principal character in the tale of Acontius and Cydippe, told by Aristaenetus and by Ovid. "Acontius gathered an orange in the garden of Venus, and having written on the rind the words, 'By Artemis, I will marry Acontius,' threw it in Cydippe's way. She took it in her hand, read out the inscription, and threw it from her. But Artemis heard the vow, and brought about the marriage." William Morris took the legend for the subject of one of his poems in The Earthly Paradise.

Açores (ą.sō'rēsh). Portuguese name of the Azores.

Acosta (ą.kôsh'tą), Christovão de. d. 1580. Portuguese traveler and naturalist, author of Tratado de las drogas y medecinas de la Indias orientales (1578).

Acosta, Gabriel. [Also: Gabriel da Costa, Gabriel d'Acosta; after conversion, Uriel da Costa, Uriel Acosta, Uriel d'Acosta, Uriel de Acosta.] b. at Oporto, Portugal, 1591; d. a suicide, 1647. Portuguese philosopher and religious skeptic. He moved to Amsterdam as a young man and was converted to Judaism from Catholicism, but was thereafter twice excommunicated by the synagogue for his outspoken skepticism. His autobiography, Exemplar humanae vitae (1687), was reprinted in 1847 and used as a source by K. F. Gutzkow for his tragedy, Uriel Acosta (1847).

Acosta (ä.kôs'tä), Joaquín. b. in Colombia, c1795; d. 1852. Colombian patriot, soldier, and historian, notable for his service (1819) with Bolívar. His subsequent activity as a member of the Colombian legislature was followed by diplomatic appointments, and by historical research in the Spanish archives at Madrid (1845), and later at Paris. He was the author of Compendio histórico del descubrimiento y colonización de la Nueva Granada (1848).

Acosta, José de. b. at Medina del Campo, Spain, 1540; d. at Salamanca, Spain, Feb. 15, 1600. Spanish Jesuit historian, archaeologist, and missionary. The first two books of his Natural and Moral History of the Indies, in Latin, appeared at Salamanca in 1588 and 1589. The entire work was published in Spanish at Seville in 1590.

Acosta, Julio. [Full name, Julio Acosta Garcia.] b. May 23, 1872—. Costa Rican politician and diplomat who was during World War II the foreign secretary of his country. Earlier served as president (1920–24) and member of congress (1906–10, 1932–36, 1938–42); chairman (1945) of the Costa Rican delegation to the San Francisco United Nations conference.

Acqs (äks). See Ax.

Acquaviva delle Fonti (äk.kwä.vē'vä del.lā fôn'tē). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Apulia, in the province of Bari, ab. 18 mi. S of Bari. It is the center of a wine, olive, almond, and fruit producing district, and contains several distilleries. Pop. of commune, 12,809 (1936); of town, 11,934 (1936).

Acqui (äk'kwē). [Ancient name, Aquae Statiellae.] Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont, in the province of Alessandria, situated on the Bormida River, ab. 29 mi. NW of Genoa. The town is renowned for its hot springs, which are visited by people suffering from respiratory, skin, and certain other diseases. The cathedral and castle, dating from the 11th and 13th centuries, were undamaged in World War II. Remains of a Roman aqueduct may still be seen in the vicinity. Originally a Roman provincial town, and later under Lombard rule, Acqui was subsequently part of the county of Monferrato; it fell to the house of Savoy in 1708. Pop. of commune, 18,336 (1936); of town, 9,643 (1936).

Acragas (ak'rą.gąs). Greek name of Agrigento.

Acrasia (ą.krā'zi.ą). In Spenser's Faerie Queene a beautiful woman, the personification of intemperance in all things, living in the "Bower of Bliss," which contains everything to delight the senses. She was suggested originally by Circe and, more directly, by the Alcina of Ariosto.

Acrates (a.krā'tēz). Male character in Spenser's Faerie Queene, personifying the intemperate love of pleasure.

Acre (ä'krę). See also Acre River.

Acre. [Former name, Aquiry.] Territory in W Brazil, N of the Acre River, bordering on Bolivia and Peru. The boundary dispute between Bolivia and Brazil with regard to this territory was adjusted by a treaty in November, 1903, and an agreement to adjudicate a similar dispute between Brazil and Peru was reached in July, 1904. Capital, Rio Branco; area, 59,139 sq. mi.; pop. 116,124 (1950).

Acre (ā'kėr, ä'kėr). Former subdistrict of the Galilee district, in N Palestine, now part of Israel.

Acre. [Arabic, Acca or Akka; French, St.-Jean-d'Acre; in the Old Testament, Accho, Acco, or Akko; in the New Testament, Ptolemaïs.] City and seaport in Palestine, in NW Israel, ab. 9 mi. NE of Haifa. Once a leading port and trading center of the E Mediterranean, Acre has in modern times lost much of its economic importance through the development of feeder rail-lines to other cities and ports. Its population fluctuated from approximately 8,000 to 11,000 over the period from 1900 to the end of World War II, but dipped sharply in 1948 when an estimated two thirds of the city's predominantly Arab population fled Israel to live in adjoining Arab states. From a 1948 low point of 4,000 (est.), the population had risen to 12,200 (1950), including 8,200 Jews.

History. Although it was in the territory assigned to the tribe of Asher (Judges, i. 31.), Acre was never conquered in Biblical times by the Israelites. Its kings were reckoned next in importance to those of Tyre and Sidon. It was conquered by the Assyrian king Sennacherib, and again by his grandson, Assurbanipal, who sacked it. Subsequently it was captured by the Arabs (638), by the Crusaders (1104), by Saladin (1187), and again by the Crusaders (1191). It was thereafter held by the Knights of St. John until 1291, being the last Palestinian stronghold to be held by the Christians of western Europe. It was taken by Turkey in 1517, who held it against various attacks (including one by Napoleon in 1799), until it was absorbed (1832) as part of Syria into Egypt, falling again (with British help) to the Turks in 1840. In World War I the British captured it from the Turks in 1918, and administered it thereafter until 1948.

Acre, Bay of. Bay of the E Mediterranean, on the W coast of Palestine, in NW Israel. It serves as a harbor for vessels calling at the major port of Haifa and the lesser port of Acre. Width, ab. 8 mi.

Acrelius (ą.krē′li.us; Swedish, ä.krā′li.ûs), Israel. b. at Öster-Åker, Sweden, Dec. 4, 1714; d. at Fellingsbro, Sweden, April 25, 1800. Swedish Lutheran pastor (1749–56) of Christina (now Wilmington), Delaware. Besides organizing Swedish ecclesiastical affairs in that region, he contributed to the work of the Pennsylvania German Lutherans and wrote a History of New Sweden (1759; English trans., 1874), a scholarly history of the colony under the Swedes, Dutch, and English.

Acre River (ä′krē). [Former name, Aquiry.] River in C South America, in Brazil. For part of its length it forms the boundary between Brazil and Bolivia. Length, ab. 330 mi.

Acres (ā′kėrz), Bob. A character in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy The Rivals, an awkward and simple country gentleman changed into a boasting coward by the sudden excitement of high society at fashionable 18th-century Bath, England. His brag, his ludicrous vanity, and his assurance are combined with a comic trepidation and an uneasy gaiety.

Acri (ä′krē). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lucania, in the province of Cosenza, situated on the Mucone River, ab. 13 mi. NE of Cosenza. It has wine, oil, cattle, and hog markets, and produces various sausage products. The palace of the princes of Bisignano dates from the 17th century. Pop. of commune, 16,213 (1936); of town, 5,387 (1936).

Acrisius (ą.kris′i.us). In Greek mythology, a king of Argos, father of Danaë.

Acroceraunia (ak″rō.sē.rô′ni.ą). [Also: Akrokeraunia; modern Greek, Glossa; Italian, Linguetta.] In ancient geography, a promontory projecting from what was then the NW part of Epirus (and is now SW Albania) into the Ionian Sea. The name has sometimes been incorrectly extended to the whole range of the Ceraunian Mountains.

Acroceraunian Mountains (ak″rō.sē.rô′ni.ąn). Occasional name of the Ceraunian Mountains.

Acrocorinthus (ak″rō.kō.rin′thus). [Also: Akrokorinthos, Acro-Corinth (ak.rō.kor′inth).] Height (ab. 1,885 ft.) covered with ruins, under the N slope of which lies the city of Corinth, Greece. It is celebrated for its extensive view. The medieval fortifications form a triple line, 1½ mi. in circuit, below the summit. Of the ancient fortifications, and the celebrated temple of Aphrodite and other religious structures, the remains are very scanty.

Acropolis (a.krop′ō.lis). General name for the citadel of an ancient Greek city, but especially appropriated to that of Athens, famous for the placing on its summit in the 5th century B.C. of the highest achievements of Greek art, the Parthenon and the Erechtheum, with the sculptures which adorned them without and within, and the Propylaea, or monumental gate, inside of the walls at the W end. The Acropolis is a precipitous rock which rises about 260 ft. above the city, and extends 1,000 ft. from E to W, and 400 in its greatest width. It was the site of the earliest Athens known to history, was strongly fortified, and contained the palace of the king until the expulsion of the Pisistratids.

Sacred Ground and Fortress. From this time it ceased to be inhabited, and was reserved as sacred ground and as a last refuge in time of danger. It was taken and sacked by the Persians in 480 B.C.; shortly afterward its fortifications were strengthened and completed and its area increased by retaining-walls and filling, especially by Cimon, who had much to do with devising the plans for monumental embellishment which were carried out under Pericles. The ancient entrance to the Acropolis was on the southwest, by a narrow, winding path commanded by the battlements above. Among the other monuments of the Acropolis are the pre-Persian temple of Athena, correctly identified and studied by Dorpfeld in 1885, the colossal bronze statue, by Phidias, of Athena Promachos, and the temple of the Wingless Victory. The slopes of the Acropolis were occupied by important foundations, particularly on the south, where lie the Odeum of Herodes, the sanctuary of Aesculapius, and the Dionysiac theater.

Fate in Medieval and Modern Times. Under the medieval Franks and Turks the Acropolis was the citadel and abode of the dukes and pashas. The Parthenon was in turn cathedral and mosque; the Propylaea became the palace and government offices; and the Erechtheum, after being a church, was fitted as the pasha's harem. These great monuments remained comparatively unharmed until a late date in the Turkish domination. The Propylaea were shattered by an explosion of gunpowder induced by lightning, the Erechtheum was destroyed by the overweighting of the roofs in the effort to make them bomb-proof, and the Parthenon was cut in two in 1687, during the Venetian siege of Athens under Königsmark, by a bomb purposely shot into the powder stored in it.

Acropolita (ak″rō.pō.li′tą), George. [Greek, Georgios Akropolites.] b. at Constantinople, 1217; d. in December, 1282. Byzantine historian. In 1233 he went to the Nicaean court, where he was trained for the diplomatic service; in 1257 he was entrusted the command of an army by his former pupil Theodoros II Lascaris, but failed and was made prisoner; Michael VIII Palaeologos freed him in 1260 and used him as a diplomat. After 1261 he lived chiefly at Constantinople. In 1273 he was sent to Pope Gregory X to negotiate the reconciliation of the Latin and Greek churches, and in the following year, at the council of Lyon, he acknowledged in the emperor's name the supremacy of the Roman pontiff. In 1282 he was sent to John II, emperor of Trebizond. He died soon after his return to Constantinople in the same year, a few months before Michael VIII. His main work is a chronicle dealing with the period extending from the conquest of Constantinople by the Latins to the Byzantine restoration (1204–61).

Across Spoon River. Autobiographical work (1936) by the poet Edgar Lee Masters.

Across the Plains. Autobiographical narrative by Robert Louis Stevenson, originally published (1883) in Longman's Magazine and expanded into book form in 1892.

Acta Diurna (ak′tą dī.ėr′ną). [Eng. trans., "Daily Events."] Roman official daily chronicle, which, in addition to official reports of events in the imperial family, and state and city affairs, contained regulations by the magistrates, transactions and decrees of the senate, accounts of accidents, and family news communicated to the editors. The Acta were publicly exhibited on a whitened board (album), which any one might read and copy, and there were men who made a business of multiplying and transmitting such news to the provinces. After a time the originals were placed among the state archives for the benefit of those who wished to consult them. The publication of such news was made official by Caesar; it ceased, apparently, on the transfer of the capital to Constantinople. The 11 fragments of Acta (diurna) populi first published in 1615 (called "fragmenta Dodwelliana," from Henry Dodwell, the chief defender of their genuineness) are now regarded as spurious.

Actaeon (ak.tē′ọn). In Greek mythology, a hunter, who, having seen Artemis (Diana) bathing, was changed by her into a stag and (according to the most usual account of his death) torn to pieces by his own dogs.

Acta Eruditorum (ak′tą e.rö.di.tō′rum). Latin journal, the first literary periodical in Germany, founded by Otto Mencke at Leipzig, 1682, and discontinued in 1782. After his death (1707) his son Burkhard Mencke became editor. In 1732 the title was changed to Nova Acta Eruditorum, a new series edited by F. O. Mencke, son of Burkhard Mencke. A total of 117 volumes appeared. Leibniz was one of the contributors.

Acta Pilati (pī.lā'tī). Report formerly believed to have been sent by Pontius Pilate to the emperor Tiberius on the trial and death of Christ. The Acta Pilati written in the 4th century is a part of the apocryphal Latin Gospel of Nicodemus.

Acta Sanctorum (sangk.tō'rum). [Eng. trans., "Acts of the Saints."] Title that may be applied to all collections of accounts of saints and martyrs, both of the Roman and Greek churches; specifically, the great Roman Catholic work begun (1643) by the Bollandists, a society of Jesuits. It now consists of more than 60 folio volumes, including an index published in 1875.

Acte (ak'tē). See Athos.

Action Française (äk.syôn fräṅ.sez). [Eng. trans., "French Action."] French royalist organization known for its extreme political and social conservatism and for its advocacy of the violent overthrow of the French Third Republic. Established (1898) during the period of the Dreyfus Affair as the Comité d'Action Française (Committee of French Action), with Henri Vaugeois and Maurice Pujo as principal initiators, it became (1905) the Ligue de l'Action Française (League of French Action). The principal leaders were Charles Maurras, Léon Daudet, Pujo, and (until 1925) Georges Valois. An auxiliary group of supporters who engaged in demonstrations, street riots, and other forms of violence was formed (1908) under the name of Camelots du Roi (The King's Pedlars). The organization sponsored the publication L'Action Française. The French Catholic hierarchy and the Vatican rejected (1926) the support of the group, and placed its newspaper on the Index. During World War II, the group supported the Pétain regime. Many of its leaders were convicted (1945) of collaboration with the Germans during World War II.

Actium (ak'shi.um, -ti.um). [Greek, Aktion.] In ancient geography, a promontory on the NW coast of Acarnania, in Greece. The ancient peribolos or sacred enclosure, rectangular in plan and built in opus reticulatum, the seat of the famous Actian games of Augustus, still remains. Modern excavations have laid bare extensive ruins of several successive temples, one of the latest of which is that dedicated by Augustus after the victory of 31 B.C. A famous naval battle was fought (Sept. 2, 31 B.C.) near Actium between Octavius and Mark Antony and Cleopatra. It was decided by the flight of Cleopatra, Mark Antony's land forces thereupon surrendering to Octavius. The victory secured for Octavius supreme rule over the Roman dominion.

Act of Chapultepec (chä.pöl'te.pek). Doctrine proclaimed (1945) by the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace at Chapultepec Castle, Mexico City. The act, in effect, made the guardianship of the Monroe Doctrine the responsibility of all nations of the Western Hemisphere, even in the event of aggression originating among them. Argentina was the only Latin American nation absent from the conference but subscribed to it upon declaration (March 27, 1945) of war against the Axis.

Act of Havana (ha.van'a). Pact approved (July 30, 1940) by the second meeting of Foreign Ministers of the American Republics at Havana. It provided that European-owned territory in the Western Hemisphere in danger of enemy attack might be taken into the "collective trusteeship" of the American republics for the duration of the emergency.

Acton (ak'ton). Municipal borough in SE England, in Middlesex, ab. 4 mi. W of Paddington station, London. Acton is a western suburb of London. 67,424 (1951).

Acton, Lord. [Full name, John Emerich Edward Dalberg-Acton; title, 1st Baron Acton of Aldenham. b. at Naples, Italy, Jan. 10, 1834; d. at Tegernsee, in Bavaria, June 19, 1902. English historian. He succeeded his father as eighth baronet in 1837, and was successively member of Parliament for Carlow (1859–65) and for Bridgenorth (1865–66). He was a Liberal and a close friend of Gladstone, who obtained his elevation to the peerage in 1869. He was appointed regius professor of modern history at Cambridge University in 1895. His famous historical library of about 60,000 volumes was purchased by Andrew Carnegie, who, after Acton's death, gave it to John Morley, who presented it to the University of Cambridge. He was a leader of liberal British Roman Catholics in opposing the doctrine of papal infallibility, but accepted it when it was promulgated officially. He published Lecture on the Study of History (1895), and outlined the plan of the Cambridge Modern History (which was completed, however, by others after his death, except for the first volume). His famous Lectures on the French Revolution, edited by J. Neville Figgis and Reginald Vere Laurence, were published in 1910.

Acton. [Former name, Concord Village.] Town in E Massachusetts, in Middlesex County: wool textiles, radio cabinets, and metal products. 3,510 (1950).

Acton, Charles Januarius Edward. b. at Naples, Italy, March 6, 1803; d. there, June 23, 1847. English ecclesiastic; the second son of Sir John Francis Edward Acton (1736–1811). He entered the service of the Pope, was made cardinal in 1842, and played an important part in papal politics, especially in matters relating to England.

Acton, Eliza. b. at Battle, England, April 17, 1799; d. at Hampstead, England, Feb. 13, 1859. English poet and prose writer, now best known, however, as the author of Modern Cookery (1845).

Acton, Sir John Francis Edward. b. at Besançon, France, 1736; d. at Palermo, Italy, Aug. 12, 1811. English soldier of fortune and political adventurer. He was an officer in the Tuscan navy during the campaign against Algiers (1775), and later army and navy commander, minister of finance, and prime minister at Naples (1779 et seq.), where he instituted a regime of ruthless oppression but was forced to flee by French entry (1806) into the city.

Acton, Thomas Coxon. b. at New York, Feb. 23, 1823; d. there, May 1, 1898. American banker and public official, president of the board of New York police during the Civil War draft riots in 1863.

Acts of the Apostles. Book of the New Testament, a continuation of the third gospel (Luke), and, according to tradition, written by the same author. It is a history of the early progress of Christianity after (and including) the ascension of Christ.

Acuña (ä.kö'nyä), Cristóbal de. b. at Burgos, Spain, 1597; d. at Lima, Peru, c1676. Spanish Jesuit missionary and author. He accompanied Pedro Teixeira on an exploration of the Amazon (1639), and published (1641) at Madrid his Nuevo descubrimiento del gran río de las Amazonas, the first known eyewitness account of that river.

Acuña, Hernando de. b. c1500; d. 1580. Spanish poet and soldier. He served in the expedition of Charles V against Tunis, and translated Olivier de la Marche's Le Chevalier délibéré. His own poems were published after his death, under the title Varias Poesías (1591).

Acuña de Figueroa (dā fē.gā.rō'ä), Francisco. See Figueroa, Francisco Acuña de.

Acuña y Bejarano (ä.kö'nyä ē bā.hä.rä'nō), Juan de. [Title, Marquis of Casa Fuerte.] b. at Lima, Peru, 1657; d. in Mexico, 1734. Spanish soldier and colonial administrator in America. He was governor of Messina, viceroy of Aragón and Mallorca, member of the supreme council of war, and viceroy of New Spain from 1722 until his death.

Acushnet (a.kush'net). Town in SE Massachusetts, in Bristol County: site of a battle (September, 1776) between the Minute Men and British troops. 4,401 (1950).

Acusilaus (a.kū.si.lā'us). b. at Argos, probably mid-6th century B.C. Greek commentator on, or prose paraphrast of, the Theogony of Hesiod. He was by some regarded as one of the seven wise men.

Ada (ā'da). City in S central Oklahoma, in Pontotoc County, in an oil-producing, cattle-ranching, and agricultural region: cotton, corn, sorghum, wheat, oats, hay, and sugar cane; manufactures of flour and cement. It is the seat of East Central State College. The city was established in 1889. Pop. 15,995 (1950).

Ada (ä'dä). Village and varos (township) in NE Yugoslavia, in the region of Bačka, in the autonomous province of Vojvodina, federative unit of Serbia, former banovina (province) of Dunavska, situated on the right bank of the Tisa River, between Stari-Bečej and Senta. The town belonged to Hungary prior to 1919. Pop. 10,414 (1948).

Ada (ā'dȧ). Greek form of Adah.

Ada. Former name of Brookings, S. D.

Adabazar (ä"dä.bä.zär'). See Adapazari.

Adachi (ä.dä.chē), Kenzo. b. in Kumamoto prefecture, Japan, Oct. 23, 1864–. Japanese politician. Founder of several newspapers in Korea and long a member of the Japanese house of representatives, to which he was elected 14 times (1902–40), he was also founder and president of the Kokumin Domei (1932–40), a political party of the extreme right.

Adachi, Mineichiro. b. in Yamagata prefecture, Japan, 1869; d. at Amsterdam, The Netherlands, Dec. 28, 1943. Japanese diplomat and jurist, remembered chiefly as president (1931–33) of the Permanent Court of International Justice. A graduate of Imperial University at Tokyo, he served in various Japanese embassies, and was chief interpreter (1905) for the peace conference at Portsmouth, N. H., after the Russo-Japanese War (1904–05). He was subsequently minister to Mexico (1916–17), ambassador to Belgium (1917–27), and ambassador to France and principal Japanese delegate to the League (1928–30).

Ada Clare (ā'dȧ klâr). See Clare, Ada.

Adad (ā'dad). See Hadad; see also Ramman.

Adad-Nirari (ā'dad.ni.rä'ri). See Ramman-Nirari.

Adah (ā'dȧ). [Greek, Ada.] In the Old Testament: 1. The first of the two wives of Lamech. Gen. iv. 19–23. 2. One of the wives of Esau and the mother of Eliphaz. Gen. xxxvi.

Adah. Wife of Cain, a character in Cain, by Byron.

Adaiel (ä.dī'el). See Adal.

Adai Kokh (ä.dī' kôĸ'). [Also, Adai Khokh.] Mountain peak in the U.S.S.R., in the Caucasus. 15,240 ft.

Adair (ȧ.dâr'), James. b. c1709; d. c1783. English trader and American pioneer who lived (1735–70) with the Chickasaw and Cherokee Indians. He wrote a History of the American Indians (1775), which maintains that the Indians are descendants of the Jews.

Adair, John. b. in Chester County, S. C., Jan. 9, 1757; d. at Harrodsburg, Ky., May 19, 1840. American politician and soldier. He served in the Revolutionary War, in the Indian wars, and commanded the Kentucky troops at the battle of New Orleans; U.S. senator from Kentucky (1805–06), governor of Kentucky (1820–24), and a member of Congress from Kentucky (1831–33).

Adair, Sir Robert. b. at London, May 24, 1763; d. there, Oct. 3, 1855. English diplomat and writer of historical memoirs. He was sent on diplomatic missions to Vienna (1806–07), to Constantinople (1808–09), where he concluded the treaty of the Dardanelles, and to the Low Countries (1831–35).

Adair, Robin. See Robin Adair.

Adair v. United States, 208 U.S. 161 (1908). Decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which held unconstitutional Section 10 of the Erdman Act of 1908 prohibiting "yellow dog" labor contracts. The majority opinion held that the provision impaired liberty of contract in violation of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment and also declared that the federal government had exceeded its powers under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Adajel (ä.dä'yel). See Adal.

Adak (ā'dak). One of the Aleutian Islands, in the Andreanof group, off the SW coast of Alaska. Its surface is barren and rocky, but it has good harbors and was important in World War II as the site of a U.S. air base (1942 et seq.) which supported the campaign against the islands then still held by the Japanese further to the west.

Adal (ä.däl'). [Also: Adaiel, Adajel, Adel.] Region in E Africa, bordering on the Red Sea, mainly included in the former Italian colony of Eritrea and now part of Ethiopia. Its S end lies in French Somaliland. Its inhabitants are the Danakil.

Adalberon (a.dal'bę.ron) or Adalbero (a.dal'bę.rō). d. 988. Bishop of Reims and chancellor of France under Lothaire and Louis V. In 963 he was made archbishop, and in 987 he officiated at the coronation of Hugh Capet.

Adalbert (ad'ȧl.bėrt). See also Adelbert.

Adalbert, Saint. d. c740. English saint, perhaps a grandson of Oswald, king of Deira. He devoted himself to missionary work among the Friesians, and is said to have been the first archdeacon of Utrecht.

Adalbert. [Called "Apostle of the Slavs."] d. 981. German missionary to Russia (961) and archbishop of Magdeburg.

Adalbert, Saint. [Also: Adelbert; Czech, Vojtěch; called "Apostle of the Prussians."] b. near Prague, c955; killed in Pomerania, 997. Bohemian prelate and nobleman. Bishop of Prague (983 et seq.), he incurred the dislike of various powerful nobles and withdrew (988) to Rome, but returned (993) to Bohemia at the behest of Pope John XV. He found the situation in that country still difficult and obtained permission to undertake missionary work first in Hungary, then in Poland and northern Germany. He is said to have been assassinated by an agent of the non-Christian Poles.

Adalbert (of Prussia). [Full name, Heinrich Wilhelm Adalbert.] b. at Berlin, Oct. 20, 1811; d. at Karlsbad, June 6, 1873. Prince of Prussia; son of Prince Wilhelm, youngest brother of King Frederick William III. He entered the army as an artillery officer (1832). In 1842 he visited southern Brazil, traveling over parts of the Amazon and Xingú rivers. A description of this voyage was published for private circulation, and republished in English (2 vols., 1849). After the revolution of 1848 he was employed in the organization of the German fleet, and was for much of the rest of his life a leading figure in the development of German naval strength.

Adalia (ä.dä'lē.ä). Former name of Antalya, city.

Adalia, Gulf of. See Antalya, Gulf of.

Adam (ad'ȧm; French, ȧ.däṅ). See also Adenet.

Adam (ad'ȧm). The first man; the father of all humanity, according to the account of the creation in Genesis. In its etymology, the word "Adam" derives from a Babylonian term meaning "man" in the general sense, and is found used in this sense in both Hebrew and Assyrian. Adam may therefore be taken to refer to both "mankind" and to the specific and particular individual of the male sex from one of whose ribs was derived Eve, and from whom mankind is said to have descended. Some scholars have pointed particularly to the fact that there is in the Bible no attempt to link Adam to God as having been himself a semi-divinity, or as having derived from a linking genealogy of demi-gods or heroes; in other words, original man is not of the substance of God, but a creation of God. The fact that man is nevertheless capable of moral judgment, of reason, and of communion with God (all of which are qualities possessed by no other living beings) is taken by many to be one of the noblest conceptions of the three great monotheistic religions (Christianity, Islam, and Judaism) which share the account of man's beginning as told in Genesis.

Adam. City in Palestine mentioned in the third chapter of Joshua.

Adam. Character in Shakespeare's As You Like It, an old and faithful servant of Oliver, but following the fortunes of the exiled Orlando. There is a tradition that Shakespeare himself acted this part.

Adam (ȧ.däṅ), Adolphe Charles. b. at Paris, July 24, 1803; d. there, May 3, 1856. French composer of comic operas. His best-known works are Cantique de Noël, the opera Le Postillon de Longjumeau (1836), and the ballet Giselle, but he composed in all more than 50 musical works for the stage.

Adam (ä'däm), Albrecht. b. at Nördlingen, Germany, April 16, 1786; d. at Munich, Aug. 28, 1862. German painter, engraver, and lithographer, chiefly known for his battle-pieces and paintings of horses.

Adam (ad'ȧm), Alexander. b. near Forres, Scotland, June 24, 1741; d. at Edinburgh, Dec. 18, 1809. Scottish educator, rector of the High School of Edinburgh (1768–1809), and antiquarian. He published Roman Antiquities (1791), and other works.

Adam (ȧ.däṅ), Antoine Edmond. b. 1816; d. 1877. French politician and police official; second husband of Juliette Adam. He was prefect of the Paris police (1870 et seq.) and a life-member of the French senate.

Adam, François Balthasar Gaspard. b. 1710; d. 1761. French sculptor, much of whose work was done for Frederick the Great at Sans Souci. He is generally considered, however, to have been less talented than his brothers, Nicolas Sébastien Adam (1705–78) and Lambert Sigisbert Adam (1700–59).

Adam (ä'däm), Franz. b. at Milan, Italy, May 4, 1815; d. 1886. German painter, once well known for his battle scenes; son of Albrecht Adam (1786–1862).

Adam (ad'ạm), James. b. 1730; d. 1794. British architect; brother of Robert Adam (1728–92), with whom he collaborated in the design of London's Adelphi terrace (1768–71).

Adam, Jean. b. near Greenock, Scotland, 1710; d. at Glasgow, 1765. Scottish poetess and schoolmistress, now remembered chiefly as the author of Poems (1734), a collection of religious verse. She died in a poorhouse after a life of extreme hardship.

Adam (à.däṅ), Jean Louis. b. at Miettershelz, in Alsace, Dec. 3, 1758; d. at Paris, April 8, 1848. French pianist and composer.

Adam, Juliette. [Also: J. La Messine; pseudonym, Comte Paul Vasili; maiden name, Lamber.] b. at Verberie, France, Oct. 4, 1836; d. 1936. French writer, a founder and editor of the Nouvelle Revue (1879–99).

Adam (ä'däm), Karl. b. Oct. 22, 1876—. German theologian and professor (1919 et seq.) of Catholic dogma at the University of Tübingen. His publications include Der Kirchenbegriff Tertullians (1907), Die Geistige Entwicklung d. hl. Augustinus (1931), and Una Sancta, Zur Wiedervereinigung im Glauben (1947).

Adam (à.däṅ), Lambert Sigisbert. [Called Adam l'ainé, meaning "Adam the elder."] b. 1700; d. 1759. French sculptor and antiquarian; brother of Nicolas Sébastien Adam (1705–78) and François Balthasar Gaspard Adam (1710–61).

Adam (ä'däm), Melchior. b. at Grottkau, in Silesia, 1551; d. 1622. German Protestant divine and biographer; author of Vitae Germanorum philosophorum (1615–20), and other works.

Adam (à.däṅ), Nicolas Sébastien. [Called Adam le jeune, meaning "Adam the younger."] b. 1705; d. 1778. French sculptor. He created the tomb of Catherine Opalinska, queen of Poland, and is generally considered to have been more talented than either of his brothers, Lambert Sigisbert Adam (1700–59) and François Balthasar Gaspard Adam (1710–61).

Adam, Paul Auguste Marie. b. at Paris, Dec. 7, 1862; d. there, Jan. 2, 1920. French novelist and essayist, cofounder of several important French literary periodicals.

Adam, Quirin François Lucien. b. at Nancy, France, May 31, 1833; d. 1900. French magistrate and philologist, noted for his researches on American Indian and other languages.

Adam (ad'ạm), Robert. b. at Kirkcaldy, Scotland, 1728; d. at London, March 3, 1792. British architect, furniture designer, and landscape painter. Impressed during travels (c1754) in Italy and Dalmatia by the architecture of the ancient Romans, he patterned much of his work, as architect (1762–68) to King George III, upon it. He was assisted in virtually all his work (perhaps most notably in connection with London's famous Adelphi terrace) by his brother, James (1730–94). Adam's architecture, with its delicate and graceful interior designs, probably influenced him in the selection of the wreaths, paterae, honeysuckle, and fan ornaments which are the characteristic marks of his furniture style.

Adam, William. b. at Maryburgh, Kinross, Scotland, Aug. 2, 1751; d. at Edinburgh, Feb. 17, 1839. British lawyer and politician. He was a manager in Parliament of the impeachment proceedings against Warren Hastings (1788) and chancellor of the Duchy of Cornwall (1806).

Adam, William Patrick. b. Sept. 14, 1823; d. at Ootacamund, India, May 24, 1881. British politician. He was parliamentary whip of the Liberal party from 1874 to 1880, and governor of Madras from 1880 till his death.

Adam Anglicus (or Anglo-Scotus) (ang'gli.kus; ang'-glō.skō'tus). See Adam Scotus.

Adamastor (ad.ạm.as'tọr). Phantom of the Cape of Good Hope in the Lusiad, a terrible spirit described by Camões as appearing to Vasco da Gama and prophesying the misfortunes which should fall upon other expeditions to India.

Adamawa (à.dä.mä'wä). [Ancient name, Fumbina.] Region in W Africa, in E Nigeria and W Cameţoun, having ar. area of ab. 70,000 sq. mi., approximately coextensive with a former native kingdom. The region is dominated by the Fulah class but the population consists of several Negro tribes with Bantu admixtures. Germany, France, and England divided the region among them until c1900. Later it was divided between the French and English, the French section being included in French Equatorial Africa and the British part becoming a province in Nigeria.

Adamawa. One of the Northern Provinces of Nigeria, in W Africa, paralleling the E boundary of the protectorate and straddling the Benue River. The administrative center is Yola; area, ab. 35,000 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 650,000.

Adam Bede (ad'ạm bēd). See also Bede, Adam.

Adam Bede. Novel by George Eliot, published in 1859. It was her first full-length novel.

Adam Bell (bel). See Bell, Adam.

Adam Bell, Clym of the Cloughe, and Wyllyam of Cloudeslee. Old ballad of outlaw life printed (c1550) by William Copland, and in the collections of both Thomas Percy and Joseph Ritson. The 19th-century American scholar Francis James Child repeated it from Ritson, with some variations from an edition older than Copland's recovered by Payne Collier.

Adamberger (ä'däm.ber.gėr), Valentin. [Stage name in Italy, Adamonti.] b. at Munich, July 6, 1743; d. at Vienna, Aug. 24, 1804. Operatic tenor and friend of Mozart, who wrote for Adamberger several songs and the opera part of Belmonte in The Abduction from the Seraglio.

Adam Cupid (ad'ạm kū'pid). Nickname of Cupid in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Adam de La Halle (à.däṅ dẹ là àl). [Called "Le Bossu d'Arras (lẹ bo.sü dà.ràs), meaning "the Hunchback of Arras."]. b. at Arras, France, c1230; d. in Italy, c1287. French poet and dramatist. He was educated as a monk, but forsook his religious seclusion and married; later he abandoned his native town and his family, and went first to Douai, and then with Robert of Artois to Italy. His Le Jeu de la feuillée has been regarded as the earliest comedy in the French tongue, while his pastoral drama, Robin et Marion, ranks as the earliest specimen of French comic opera.

Adam de Marisco (ad'ạm dẹ mạ.ris'kō). [Also, Adam Marsh.] b. in Somerset, England; d. 1257 or 1258. English Franciscan monk. He entered the Franciscan order, at Worcester, c1237. He is not mentioned because of his writings, which are lost, but rather because he was the real founder of the great Franciscan school at Oxford, the friend and counselor of such men as Robert Grosseteste, with whom he attended the Council of Lyon in 1245. He exerted a moderating influence on Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, the main leader of the crusade against the Albigenses, and upon various other statesmen and churchmen.

Adamello Alps (ä.dä.mel'lō). Mountain range in S central Europe, a group of the Alps near the border between Italy and the Tirol, S of the Ortler group. The highest point is ab. 11,693 ft.

Adamic (ad'ạ.mik), Louis. b. at Blato, in Slovenia (then under Austria-Hungary, now part of Yugoslavia), March 23, 1899; d. Sept. 4, 1951. American writer. He entered the U.S. in 1913 and served in the U.S. army during World War I, becoming a citizen in 1918. Author of The Native's Return (1934), What's Your Name (1942), My Native Land (1943), A Nation of Nations (1945), Dinner at the White House (1946), The Eagle and the Roots (1952), and others.

Adamites (ad'ạm.īts). Sect which originated in N Africa during the 2nd century A.D. and claimed to have attained the primitive innocence of Adam. They spurned marriage and, in their assemblies or "paradises," made a rite of nudity. Their beliefs derived to a great extent from a gnostic espousal of sensualism as a path to mystic revelation. The sect reappeared in Savoy during the 14th century and among the Brethren and Sisters of the Free Spirit in Germany, Bohemia, and Moravia during the 15th century, being suppressed in the latter instance for immorality. The edict of toleration proclaimed (1781) by Joseph II brought them again into existence for a brief period, but they were proscribed almost at once and did not again reappear until the period of European political unrest in 1848–49, after which they appear to have vanished utterly as a religious group.

Adam Kadmon (ad'ạm kad'mọn). Name of the first man, in cabalistic doctrine, where he is presented as the second divine principle and the personification of the ten Sephiroth, which are the direct emanations of God.

Adamnan (ad′ạm.nạn) or Adomnan, Saint. b. in Ulster, Ireland, c625; d. at Iona, Scotland, 704. Irish ecclesiastic, abbot of Iona (679–704). He was the author of Vita Columbae and of De Locis Sanctis, an account of Palestine and other countries.

Adam of Bremen. [Latinized, Adamus Bremensis.] b. in Upper Saxony, probably at Meissen, before 1045; d. c1076. German geographer, considered to have been the first German in his field. His history of the diocese of Hamburg down to 1072 is the fundamental source for the early history, geography, and ethnography of N Europe and of the Scandinavian colonies. It contains the earliest known record of Wineland (Vineland) and a very valuable account of North European trade. It was largely based on oral information collected in Bremen and in Denmark.

Adam of Murimuth (mur′i.muth). [Latinized, Adamus Murimuthensis.] b. in Oxfordshire, c1274; d. 1347. English chronicler. He was educated at Oxford, where he became a doctor of civil law in 1312 or soon before. From c1312–18 and even later he spent much time at Avignon, representing the archbishop of Canterbury or the king, and defending English ecclesiastical interests before the curia. By 1323, he was canon at Hereford, and he held other ecclesiastical offices at Exeter and London. Having observed that the chronicles of Exeter did not extend beyond 1302 and those of Westminster beyond 1305, he decided to write a "continuatio ex visu et auditu mei temporis." This work, entitled Continuatio chronicorum, covers the period from 1303 to 1347. He began to write it c1325 and worked at it until the last year of his life. The information for the years 1303–37 is quite meager; for the last ten years the material is more abundant, although he never wrote in great detail. This part of the chronicle is of particular value for the account of the English campaigns in France and of the negotiations between the two countries. The chronicle is of special interest from the ecclesiastical point of view. There is an anonymous continuation down to 1380.

Adam of Orlton (ôrl′tọn). b. at Hereford, England; d. at Farnham, England, July 18, 1345. English prelate, made bishop of Hereford in 1317, of Worcester in 1327, and of Winchester in 1333. He took the part of the barons against Edward II, was tried by Parliament for treason as an adherent of Mortimer (the first English bishop, it is said, ever tried before a lay court), and was influential in political affairs during the reign of Edward III.

Adamonti (ä.dä.mōn′tē). Italian stage name of Adamberger, Valentin.

Adamov (ä′dä.môf). [German, Adamsthal.] Village in Czechoslovakia, in C Moravia, on the Svratka River, N of Brno: ironworks. The stalactite caves of the Moravian Karst are in the vicinity. 1,432 (1947)

Adamowski (ä.dä.môf′skē), Joseph. b. at Warsaw, July 4, 1862; d. 1930. American concert cellist and music teacher; married (1896) Antoinette Szumowska. Debut (1883) as soloist at Warsaw; joined (1889) Boston Symphony after concert tours (1883 et seq.) and teaching (1885–87) in Russia and Germany; member of Adamowski Trio and Quartet; professor (1903 et seq.) at New England Conservatory; trustee of Paderewski Fund; a founder and director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund.

Adamowski, Timothée. b. at Warsaw, March 24, 1858; d. at Boston, 1943. American concert violinist and conductor; brother of Joseph Adamowski (1862–1930). Arrived (1879) in the U.S. and made tours with Clara Louise Kellogg and others; member of the Adamowski Trio and Quartet; member (1884–1908) of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; taught (1885 et seq.) at the New England Conservatory at Boston.

Adams (ad′ạmz). Town in NW Massachusetts, in Berkshire County, ab. 47 mi. NW of Springfield: manufactures of textiles and paper; stone quarries. It was incorporated in 1778. Pop. 12,034 (1950).

Adams, Abigail. [Maiden name, Smith.] b. at Weymouth, Mass., Nov. 11, 1744; d. at Quincy, Mass., Oct. 28, 1818. Wife of John Adams (second president of the U.S.) and mother of John Quincy Adams (sixth president). She supported her husband in his political views and work, joined him in France (1784), and accompanied him to London, where he was U.S. minister (1785–88). Her letters are not only important to historians but possess literary quality as well. The general impression from the letters is that of a woman of extraordinary character, a fit mate for a president and the mother of a president, who had strong prejudices but had a mind far above the usual man or woman of the time and who wrote in a style that is direct and often brilliant. The Letters of Mrs. Adams, The Wife of John Adams: With an Introductory Memoir, by Her Grandson, Charles Francis Adams (Boston, 1840) contains some of the best of Abigail Adams's correspondence, altered unfortunately at times by the editor. Additional collections of her letters are preserved at the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Mass. One hundred and forty-two of these were published in the Proceedings of the Society. These were reprinted with a revised introduction as New Letters of Abigail Adams, 1788–1801 (Boston, 1947).

Adams, Abraham. [Called "Parson Adams."] In Henry Fielding's novel Joseph Andrews, a poor curate whose amusing adventures in the company of Joseph Andrews and his betrothed, Fanny, constitute a large part of the book. Usually considered to be a portrait of Fielding's friend William Young (a classical scholar with whom Fielding had collaborated on a translation of Aristophanes' Plutus), he is a good-natured but naïve scholar. As a character in fiction, he is ranked by many authorities with Oliver Goldsmith's "Vicar" and Laurence Sterne's "Uncle Toby."

Adams, Alva. b. in Iowa County, Wis., May 14, 1850; d. Nov. 1, 1922. American businessman and banker, twice (1886, 1896) elected and seated as governor of Colorado. He contributed to the development of state educational and penal institutions and advocated strong reforms in state taxation. Elected in his second campaign as a candidate of the fusion of the Democrats with the Free Silver Republicans, he was defeated in a challenge of a third election (1904) instituted by the retiring governor. He later served on the Democratic National Committee (1908) and as a commissioner for the Panama-Pacific exposition (1915).

Adams, Alvin. b. at Andover, Vt., June 16, 1804; d. Sept. 1, 1877. Pioneer in the U.S. express business. He established what later became the Adams Express Company with Ephraim Farnsworth (1840) by purchasing two season round-trip railroad tickets between Boston and New York and making daily journeys between the two cities for his customers. He expanded (1841) with Farnsworth's successor, William B. Dinsmore, and incorporated (1854) the ten-million-dollar Adams Express Company, which carried on a tremendous business during the Civil War in both parcels and mail.

Adams, Andrew. b. at Stratford, Conn., Dec. 11, 1736; d. Nov. 27, 1797. American jurist. He was a prominent member (1776 et seq.) of the Connecticut General Assembly, a delegate (1777–80) to the Continental Congress, and chief justice (1793–97) of the Connecticut superior court.

Adams, Andy. b. in Whitley County, Ind., May 3, 1859; d. Sept. 26, 1935. American writer of cowboy stories based on his experiences in the 1880's as a Texas cowhand.

Adams, Brooks. b. at Quincy, Mass., June 24, 1848; d. Feb. 13, 1927. American lawyer and historian; son of Charles Francis Adams (1807–86) and brother of Henry Adams (1838–1918). He was secretary to his father when the latter was U.S. arbitrator at the Geneva tribunal (1871–72) that met to settle the U.S. claims against Great Britain for damages suffered by U.S. shipping from the Alabama and other Confederate raiders outfitted in British yards. Author of The Emancipation of Massachusetts (1887), The Law of Civilization and Decay (1895), America's Economic Supremacy (1900), The New Empire (1902), The Degradation of Democratic Dogma (1920), and others.

Adams, Charles. [Original name, Karl Adam Schwanbeck.] b. in Pomerania, Dec. 19, 1845; d. at Denver, Colo., Aug. 19, 1895. American soldier, Indian fighter, and diplomat. He joined a Massachusetts regiment soon after his arrival in the U.S. and served throughout the Civil War; subsequently he enlisted with the 3rd Cavalry and fought Indians in New Mexico and Texas. Appointed (1870) brigadier general of Colorado militia, he later served as Ute Indian agent, with which tribe he attained sufficient influence to arbitrate the Ute uprising of Sept.

29, 1879. Sent (1880) by President Hayes as U.S. ambassador to Bolivia, he successfully reconciled differences that existed between that country and Chile. A term (1882–85) as post-office inspector was terminated by President Cleveland for "offensive partisanship," and he spent the rest of his life in private business.

Adams, Charles Baker. b. at Dorchester, Mass., Jan. 11, 1814; d. Jan. 18, 1853. American naturalist. Employment (1836) with New York geological survey followed by teaching at Amherst; appointed (1838) chemistry and natural history professor at Middlebury and later (1845) Vermont state geologist; recalled (1847) to Amherst, where he served as professor of astronomy and natural history until his death. He is notable for his work in tropical zoology, which resulted in Contributions to Conchology (1849–52) and Catalogue of Shells Collected at Panama (1852).

Adams, Charles Christopher. b. at Clinton, Ill., July 23, 1873—. American zoologist. Director of N.Y. State Museum (1926 et seq.); author of Guide to the Study of Animal Ecology (1913) and numerous magazine articles.

Adams, Charles Follen. b. at Dorchester, Mass., April 21, 1842; d. March 8, 1918. American writer of German-dialect verse. His work was collected in the volume Yawcob Strauss and Other Poems (1910).

Adams, Charles Francis. b. at Boston, Aug. 18, 1807; d. there, Nov. 21, 1886. American diplomat, lawyer, and biographer; son of John Quincy Adams (1767–1848). He was Free Soil vice-presidential candidate (1848), a member of Congress (1858–61), minister to England (1861–68), and U.S. arbitrator at the Geneva tribunal that met (1871–72) to settle the Alabama claims. He published Life and Works of John Adams (10 vols., 1850–56) and Diary of John Quincy Adams (12 vols., 1874–77).

Adams, Charles Francis. b. at Boston, May 27, 1835; d. at Washington, D.C., March 20, 1915. American lawyer, historian, and railroad authority; son of Charles Francis Adams (1807–86). Served in Civil War, attaining brevet rank as brigadier general; member Massachusetts Board of Railroad Commissioners (1869–79), and chairman after 1872; through influence of Carl Schurz, appointed (1878) chairman of government board for the Union Pacific Railroad and later (1884) its president; lost post (1890) through pressure by Jay Gould, but not until Adams had put railroad on a solid footing. Three lectures made by him at Oxford (1913) were published under the title Trans-Atlantic Historical Solidarity; author also of A College Fetich (1883), Chapters of Erie and Other Essays (1871), Railroads: Their Origin and Problems (1878), Richard Henry Dana, A Biography (2 vols., 1890), Life of Charles Francis Adams (1900), Studies Military and Diplomatic (1911), and others.

Adams, Charles Francis. b. at Quincy, Mass., Aug. 2, 1866—. American financier and lawyer; grandson of Charles Francis Adams (1807–86). Secretary of the navy (1929–33) under Herbert Hoover; board chairman of State Street Trust Company, Boston.

Adams, Charles Kendall. b. at Derby, Vt., Jan. 24, 1835; d. at Redlands, Calif., July 26, 1902. American educator and historian. Professor of history at Michigan (1867–85), he was later president of Cornell (1885–92) and Wisconsin (1892–1901). Author of Democracy and Monarchy in France (1874), Manual of Historical Literature (1882), and others.

Adams, Clement. b. at Buckington, Warwickshire, c1519; d. Jan. 9, 1587. English writer and teacher, schoolmaster to the royal "henchmen" (pages) at Greenwich. His transcription of Richard Chancellor's narrative of the journey to Moscow (1553) is the first written account of the earliest Anglo-Russian contact. It was published by Richard Hakluyt in his Collections (1589).

Adams, Comfort Avery. b. at Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 1, 1868—. American electrical engineer and professor. At one time an associate of Albert Abraham Michelson, he has been Lawrence professor of engineering at Harvard (1914–35) and Gordon McKay professor of electrical engineering at Harvard (1935–36). Author of Dynamo Design Schedules and numerous technical articles.

Adams, Cyrus Cornelius. b. at Naperville, Ill., Jan. 7, 1849; d. at New York, May 4, 1928. American geographer, president (1889–93) of the department of geography at the Brooklyn Institute. He wrote a biography of David Livingstone, and was the editor (1908 et seq.) of the Bulletin of the American Geographical Society.

Adams, Daniel. b. at Townsend, Mass., Sept. 29, 1773; d. at Keene, N.H., June 8, 1864. American physician, educator, and civic benefactor. He was during his early career (1799 et seq.) a practicing physician at Leominster, Mass., but largely abandoned active practice when he undertook publication of a weekly newspaper, the Telescope, and preparation (1801 et seq.) of improved elementary textbooks, notably The Scholar's Arithmetic (1801), Geography or a Description of the World (1814), and works on the nature and use of language. He moved (1813) to New Hampshire, to become again a practicing physician, after teaching school (1805 et seq.) and editing a monthly agricultural journal at Boston.

Adams, Daniel Weissiger. b. at Lynchburg, Va., 1820; d. at New Orleans, La., June 13, 1872. American lawyer and soldier, with Confederate army in Civil War. Appointed (1861) member of a three-man military committee responsible for organizing Louisiana for war, he entered one of two regiments thus prepared, and fought at Shiloh, Stone's River, Chickamauga, and elsewhere, being three times wounded and rising to the rank of brigadier general. He resumed (1865) practice of law at New Orleans.

Adams, Ebenezer. b. in New Hampshire, Oct. 22, 1765; d. Aug. 15, 1841. American educator. He was prevented by poverty from entering college until the age of 22, but graduated (1791) with honors from Dartmouth, and served (1792–1806) as preceptor of an academy at Leicester, Mass., becoming also local justice of the peace and first postmaster of the town. Appointed (1808) first professor of mathematics and natural science at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N.H., after two years of teaching at Portland, Me., he returned (1809) to Dartmouth as professor of languages, and succeeded (1810) to the chair of mathematics and philosophy on the death of John Hubbard, which post he held until 1833. During the period of the "Dartmouth University" controversy with the state of New Hampshire, he remained a stalwart champion of Dartmouth College, and was active in raising funds to carry the issue to the Supreme Court of the U.S.

Adams, Edwin. b. at Medford, Mass., Feb. 3, 1834; d. at Philadelphia, Oct. 28, 1877. American actor, notable for his performances in light comedy. His debut (1853) at Boston's National Theatre was followed a few years later by his first great popular success at Baltimore; subsequently he played Shakespearian roles with Kate Bateman, Edwin Booth, and others. He is, however, probably chiefly remembered for his characterization of Enoch Arden, in the dramatization of Tennyson's poem of the same name, in which role he toured the U.S.

Adams, Eliphalet. b. at Dedham, Mass., March 26, 1677; d. at New London, Conn., Oct. 4, 1753. American clergyman, notable as a missionary to the Indians and leader of the New England Puritans. Successor to Gurdon Saltonstall as pastor at New London, he held his pulpit for 43 years (c1709 et seq.) against the attacks of Baptists, Episcopalians, and New Light adherents within his own congregation.

Adams, Ephraim Douglass. b. at Decorah, Ia., Dec. 18, 1865; d. Sept. 1, 1930. American historian. Professor at Stanford University (1906 et seq.); author of Great Britain and the American Civil War (1925) and others.

Adams, Frank Dawson. b. at Montreal, 1859; d. 1942. Canadian geologist. As Logan professor of geology at McGill University (until 1931), he was an outstanding teacher of his science in North America; received honors from scientific societies in Canada, Great Britain, and elsewhere. Author of Birth and Development of the Geological Sciences (1938).

Adams, Franklin Pierce. [Pseudonym, F.P.A.] b. at Chicago, Ill., Nov. 15, 1881—. American humorous author, journalist, and radio performer. He began his newspaper career at Chicago, but moved to New York where his column, "The Conning Tower," was successively carried by three papers (1922–41). He was a charter performer on the radio program, "Information Please" (1938 et seq.). Author of The Diary of Our Own Samuel Pepys (1935), The Melancholy Lute (1936), and others.

Adams, Frank Ramsay. b. at Morrison, Ill., July 7, 1883—. American novelist, musical-comedy writer, and motion-picture scenarist. Author of 15 novels, including Men on Foot (1937) and Fathers of Madelon (1939), he also did the books for seven musical comedies and scripts for the films Trade Winds and The Cowboy and the Lady.

Adams, Frederick Upham. b. at Boston, Dec. 10, 1859; d. at Larchmont, N.Y., Aug. 28, 1921. American engineer, inventor of electrical devices, and author. Developed electric lamp post (1886) and signal tower (1887); built record-breaking experimental train for Baltimore and Ohio Railroad (1900); founder and editor (1896–98) of reformist New Time; author of several novels as well as works on engineering and social problems.

Adams, George Burton. b. at Fairfield, Vt., June 3, 1851; d. at New Haven, Conn., May 26, 1925. American historian. Professor of history at Yale (1888–1925); author of Civilization during the Middle Ages (1894), Origin of the English Constitution (1912), and others.

Adams, Hannah. b. at Medfield, Mass., Oct. 2, 1755; d. at Brookline, Mass., Dec. 15, 1831. American writer, author of View of Religious Opinions (1784, later entitled Dictionary of Religions), and others. She is credited by some authorities with having been the first woman in the U.S. to make even a meager commercial success of writing.

Adams, Harry William. b. at Worcester, England, Nov. 3, 1868—. English landscape-painter, noted particularly for his winter scenes. In 1896 he became a member of the Royal Academy, and in 1900 his painting Winter's Sleep was purchased under the terms of the Chantrey Bequest.

Adams, Henry. b. at Boston, Feb. 16, 1838; d. March 28, 1918. American historian, author, and philosopher; son of Charles Francis Adams (1807–86), grandson of John Quincy Adams (1767–1848), and great-grandson of John Adams (1735–1826). He graduated from Harvard in 1858 and studied briefly in Germany, after which he spent two years traveling in Europe, mostly in Germany and Italy. He then served as secretary to his father, who was U.S. minister (1861–68) to England, returning thereafter to the U.S., avowedly to seek a career in journalism. From 1870 to 1877 he served as assistant professor of history at Harvard, and as editor of the North American Review. While at Harvard he introduced the seminar method of instruction in history. After leaving Harvard he devoted the remainder of his life to writing, traveling, and reflecting upon the relationship between man and the universe. His best-known works are Mont-Saint Michel and Chartres (privately printed, 1904; published, 1913) and The Education of Henry Adams (privately printed, 1907; published, 1918). His most scholarly work, however, is his nine-volume History of the United States During the Administrations of Jefferson and Madison (1885–91). Other works include The Life of Albert Gallatin (1879), Democracy (1880), John Randolph (1882), Esther (1884), A Letter to American Teachers of History (1910), and The Degradation of the Democratic Dogma (1919). He also collaborated with his brother, Charles Francis Adams, in writing Chapters of Erie and Other Essays (1871) and with three of his students at Harvard in writing Essays on Anglo-Saxon Law (1876). In his search for a philosophy of history he extended his studies to politics, economics, astronomy, physics, chemistry, mathematics, geology, anthropology, and psychology. As a result of his study and reflection, he concluded that the second law of thermodynamics is as applicable to human society as it is to mechanical energy, i.e., that institutions, like individuals, must follow the law of senescence and decay, and that both man and the "celestial universe" are doomed. Despite his vast learning and the recognition which he received, he professed to believe that his education was wholly inadequate and his life a failure.

Adams, Henry Carter. b. at Davenport, Ia., Dec. 31, 1851; d. Aug. 11, 1921. American economist, writer, and educator. For many years (1887 et seq.) professor of political economy and finance at Michigan, he is now perhaps best known as the author of The State in Relation to Industrial Action (1887). He was the author also of Public Debts (1887), The Science of Finance (1898), American Railway Accounting (1918), and others.

Adams, Henry Cullen. b. in Oneida County, N.Y., Nov. 28, 1850; d. en route from Washington, D.C., to Wisconsin, July 9, 1906. American politician, congressman (1902–06) from Wisconsin. After serving (1895–1902) as Wisconsin dairy and food commissioner, he was elected (1902) to Congress, where he became known for his support of the National Food and Drugs Act, and of a law providing for federal inspection of meat. He also espoused the act admitting Arizona and New Mexico into the U.S. as separate states, and was responsible for the Adams Act, which provided for an annual appropriation of one million dollars for agricultural research.

Adams, Herbert. b. at West Concord, Vt., Jan. 28, 1858; d. May 21, 1945. American sculptor. Although he was best known for his busts of women, many of them done in polychrome, he also did statues and busts of many men important in American history, including William Cullen Bryant and William Ellery Channing. In addition to this, he executed the figures for the McMillan fountain at Washington, D.C., as well as the Vanderbilt memorial bronze doors of New York's Saint Bartholomew's Church.

Adams, Herbert Baxter. b. at Shutesbury, Mass., April 16, 1850; d. at Amherst, Mass., July 30, 1901. American historian and political scientist, Awarded degrees with highest honors by Amherst (1872) and Heidelberg (1876), he was a faculty member (1876 et seq.) at Johns Hopkins, serving (1891 et seq.) as professor of American and institutional history. He was a founder (1884) and first secretary (1884–1900) of the American Historical Association, and author of the Life and Writings of Jared Sparks (1893) and many others.

Adams, Isaac. b. at Adams Corner, Rochester, N.H., Aug. 16, 1802; d. July 19, 1883. American inventor and manufacturer of printing machinery. His invention (1827) of the "Adams Power Press" and establishment (1836) of the manufacturing firm of I. and S. Adams was of enormous importance in the history of printing in 19th-century America. For more than 50 years, until it was replaced with the cylinder press, Adams's press, which handled 30- by 40-inch sheets, was standard equipment for much of the American book-printing industry.

Adams, James Hopkins. b. in South Carolina, March 15, 1812; d. there, July 13, 1861. American politician and cotton planter, governor (1854 et seq.) of South Carolina. Terms at various times (1834 et seq.) in both houses of the state legislature were followed by a successful campaign for the governorship, but his administration was marred by espousal of a bill to reopen the African slave trade. Probably because of this, and his fiery advocacy of secession at a time when most South Carolinians still disapproved it, he was defeated (1858) in a campaign for a seat in the U.S. Senate. His secessionist views, however, made him a prominent member of the convention which voted for withdrawal from the Union in 1860 and he was elected one of three commissioners to negotiate transfer of federal property to state ownership.

Adams, James Truslow. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., Oct. 18, 1878; d. at Westport, Conn., May 18, 1949. American historian and former stockbroker (1900–12). Won Pulitzer Prize with Founding of New England (1921); wrote The Epic of America (1931), now published in nine languages; recent works are The American (1943) and Frontiers of American Culture (1944); editor-in-chief of the Dictionary of American History.

Adams, Jasper. b. at East Medway, Mass., Aug. 27, 1793; d. Oct. 25, 1841. American college administrator and Episcopal clergyman. As president (1824–36) of Charleston College, in South Carolina, he raised that institution from poverty and ill repute to respectable rank among southern colleges, although indifference on the part of the trustees led him at one point (1826) to accept a post as first president of Hobart College, Geneva, N.Y. (but his absence awakened Charlestonians to his value and he was recalled in 1828). He later served (1838–40) as chaplain and professor of geography, history, and ethics at West Point. Author of Elements of Moral Philosophy (1837).

Adams, John. b. at what is now Quincy (then part of Braintree), Mass., Oct. 19, 1735; d. there, July 4, 1826. American political philosopher, revolutionist, diplomat, second president of the U.S. (1797–1801); father of John Quincy Adams (1767–1848). He was graduated from Harvard College in 1755, studied law at Worcester with James Putnam and by 1770 had attained the position of leading barrister in Massachusetts. From the year 1765, he was a principal figure of the Revolutionary movement in Massachusetts, opposing the governors Bernard and Hutchinson in their enforcement of the Stamp Act, the Townsend Acts, and other measures of the British government. Adams's numerous pamphlets on political issues were influential and he acted as constitutional adviser to the Massachusetts Assembly, the committees of correspondence, and to a number of Massachusetts town meetings. In 1770 he defied public opinion by defending the constitutional rights of the British soldiers involved in the Boston Massacre. From 1774 to 1778, Adams represented Massachusetts in the Continental Congress, where he tutored the several states in their constitution-making and drafted the Plan of Treaties establishing the new nation's conduct of its foreign relations. His diary of these years and his letters are the source of most of our knowledge of the personal history of the Congress. The years from 1778 to 1788 Adams spent abroad as our diplomatic representative in France and Holland; at the close of the War for Independence he was one of the peace makers and first minister of the U.S. to Great Britain. While abroad he wrote his three-volume Defence of the Constitutions of the United States of America against the Attacks of Mr. Turgot (London, 1787–88), which was influential in the reform of the American government. When the new Constitution went into effect, Adams was chosen vice-president (1789–97), and after Washington's retirement was elected president and served during four years of political strife at home and our quasi-war with France abroad. John Adams is responsible for the early growth of the navy and for our policy of naval defense. As a Federalist, he mistrusted the French Revolution, believing in the Anglo-Saxon heritage of reform by "gradual abolition." He ran for a second term, was defeated by Jefferson, and in 1801 returned to Quincy where he lived in retirement until his death on July 4, 1826, the 50th anniversary of American independence. He married Abigail Smith of Weymouth. His eldest son, John Quincy Adams, was sixth president of the U.S.

Adams, John. [Also, Alexander Smith.] b. in England, c1760; d. on Pitcairn Island, in the Pacific Ocean, 1829. English seaman and leading mutineer of the Bounty (1789). The only mutineer not massacred (1794) by the Tahitians, he eventually became governor of Pitcairn Island.

Adams, John. b. at Canterbury, Conn., Sept. 18, 1772; d. April 24, 1863. American educator, principal (1810–32) of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. His administration of Phillips Academy was notable for successful efforts to reimpose discipline and to restore the original high standing of the institution, but a slackening of his control led trustees to request his resignation in 1832, despite his earlier success. The last 31 years of his life were spent variously as principal of an academy at Elbridge, N.Y., as seminary president at Jacksonville, Ill., and as an agent for the American Sunday School Union.

Adams, John. b. at Nashville, Tenn., July 1, 1825; killed in battle at Franklin, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1864. American army officer, with Confederate forces in Civil War.

Adams, John Coleman. [Called "the Dean of the Hartford Ministry."] b. at Malden, Mass., Oct. 25, 1849; d. at Hartford, Conn., June 22, 1922. American Universalist clergyman and author. Pastorates at Newton, Mass., Lynn, Mass., Chicago, and Brooklyn were followed (1901) by a call to All Souls' Church, Hartford, Conn., where he soon became known for his liberal, but firm, theological views, and his feeling for nature.

Adams, John Couch. b. at Lidcot, Cornwall, England, June 5, 1819, d. at Cambridge, England, Jan. 21, 1892. English astronomer, notable as professor of astronomy and director of the observatory at Cambridge University. He shares with Leverrier the honor for discovery of the planet Neptune in 1845–46. In addition to this, he brought out a tabulation of moon's parallax (1852), published findings (1853) on secular acceleration of the moon's mean motion which partly superseded the theories of Laplace, and conducted research into Leonids of the meteor shower in 1866.

Adams, John Quincy. b. at what is now Quincy (then part of Braintree), Mass., July 11, 1767; d. at Washington, D.C., Feb. 23, 1848. Sixth president of the United States (1825–29); son of President John Adams (1735–1826). Minister to the Netherlands (1794–97, and to Prussia (1797–1801); senator from Massachusetts (1803–08); minister to Russia (1809–14); a negotiator of the Treaty of Ghent (1814) which ended the War of 1812; minister to England (1815–17); secretary of state (1817–25). A candidate for president in 1824 (with his support coming chiefly from New England and New York), he ran second to Andrew Jackson (99 vs. 84 votes) in the Electoral College, but was elected by the House of Representatives, largely through the instrumentality of Henry Clay (Jackson, although the leader of the four candidates in the Electoral College, lacked a majority). In his campaign (1828) for a second term, Adams was defeated by Jackson. He was a Whig member of Congress thereafter (1831–48). His Memoirs were posthumously edited and published (1874–77) by his son, Charles Francis Adams (1807–86).

Adams, John Quincy (2nd). b. at Boston, Sept. 22, 1833; d. Aug. 14, 1894. American politician; eldest son of Charles Francis Adams (1807–86). He was the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for governor of Massachusetts in 1867 and 1871.

Adams, Joseph Alexander. b. at New Germantown, N.J., 1803; d. 1880. American wood-engraver, believed by some to have been the first electrotyper in America. Aided during his apprenticeship as a printer by Dr. Alexander Anderson, a pioneer American wood-engraver, he is now perhaps chiefly remembered for his 1,600 illustrations in Harper's Illuminated Bible (1843). His work has been commended for firmness and clarity of line by such authorities as W. J. Linton in History of Wood Engraving in America (1882).

Adams, Joseph Quincy. b. at Greenville, S.C., March 23, 1881; d. Nov. 10, 1946. American Shakespearean scholar. He was professor of English at Cornell University (1919–31), and director of the Folger Shakespeare Library, at Washington, D.C. (1931 et seq.). Author of Shakespearean Playhouses (1917); editor of Chief Pre-Shakespearean Dramas (1924), The Adams Shakespeare (1929), The Passionate Pilgrim (1939); general editor of The New Variorum Shakespeare.

Adams, Léonie Fuller. b. at Brooklyn, N.Y., 1899—. American poet. She has taught at New York University and Bennington College. She was an early advocate of breaking with the established tradition in American poetry. Her works include Those Not Elect (1925), High Falcon (1929), and This Measure (1933).

Adams, Maude. [Original name, Maude Kiskadden.] b. at Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 11, 1872; d. near Tannersville, N.Y., July 17, 1953. American actress. She made her first professional appearance in 1888 with E. H. Sothern's company. She first became well known for her role in Men and Women while with the Charles Frohman Stock Company, and later supported John Drew for five years in The Masked Ball, The Butterflies, and others (1892–97). Her principal successes include The Little Minister, Quality Street, Peter Pan, and What Every Woman Knows (all by J. M. Barrie) and also L'Aiglon, Romeo and Juliet, Joan of Arc, and Chantecler.

Adams, Moses. A pseudonym of Bagby, George William.

Adams, Mount. Mountain in N New Hampshire, in the Presidential Range, second highest summit of the White Mountains, near Mount Washington. 5,798 ft.

Adams, Mount. Peak of the Cascade Mountains in the state of Washington. 12,307 ft.

Adams, Nehemiah. b. at Salem, Mass., Feb. 19, 1806; d. Oct. 6, 1878. American Congregational clergyman, notable for his defense of orthodox trinitarian Congregationalism against Unitarianism and for his arguments on behalf of a solution by the South of the problem of slavery. The latter view is covered in A South-side View of Slavery (1854), which brought Adams violent criticism from many of his own Boston parishioners. His sermons and other writings, in a style based on Addison and Jeremy Taylor, brought him international renown.

Adams, Oscar Fay. b. at Worcester, Mass., 1855; d. at North Truro, Mass., April 30, 1919. American editor and author, chiefly known for his Through the Years with the Poets (12 vols., 1886) and Dictionary of American Authors (1897). Author also of The Archbishop's Unguarded Moment and Other Stories (1899). He was U.S. editor of The Henry Irving Shakespeare.

Adams, Point. Northwesternmost headland of Oregon, at the mouth of the Columbia River.

Adams, Samuel. b. at Boston, Sept. 27, 1722; d. there, Oct. 2, 1803. American patriot and political agitator, one of the leaders of the American Revolution. Opposed Sugar Act (1764) and Stamp Act (1765); as member of Massachusetts legislature (1765–74) thrust James Otis aside as leader of popular party; organized committee of correspondence (1772) to acquaint colonial leaders with latest political developments; delegate to first Continental Congress (1774), and an influential member thereafter until 1781; a signer of the Declaration of Independence; member of Massachusetts ratifying convention (1788); lieutenant governor of Massachusetts (1789–94); governor of Massachusetts (1794–97).

Adams, Samuel Hopkins. b. at Dunkirk, N.Y., Jan. 26, 1871—. American novelist and magazine writer. During his early career he was, successively, a New York Sun reporter (1891–1900), an editor of McClure's Magazine (1903–05), and author of a famous exposé (1905) of quack medicine for Collier's Magazine. He has written numerous novels, several of which have received film adaptation, including It Happened One Night (1934), Gorgeous Hussy (1934), and The Harvey Girls (1942).

Adams, Sarah Flower. b. at Great Harlow, Essex, Feb. 22, 1805; d. in August, 1848. English poet, now remembered chiefly as the author of the hymn Nearer, My God, to Thee (1840).

Adams, Sherman. b. at East Dover, Vt., Jan. 8, 1899—. American politician. He was elected to the New Hampshire legislature in 1940, serving as speaker (1943–44). He became a member of Congress in 1945, and in 1949 was sworn in as governor of New Hampshire. After playing a leading role in Dwight D. Eisenhower's presidential campaign, he was appointed (1953) the new president's chief administrative assistant.

Adams, Thomas. d. c1655. English Puritan divine and writer. He published The Happiness of the Church (1618, a collection of sermons), a collection of occasional sermons (1629), and a commentary on the second epistle of Saint Peter (1633).

Adams, Walter Sydney. b. at Antioch, Turkey, Dec. 20, 1876—. American astronomer. He was a staff member (1904 et seq.) of the Mt. Wilson Observatory, Pomona, Calif., and Observatory director (1923–46). Author of numerous articles on stellar and solar spectroscopy, and other subjects.

Adams, William. [Called Will Adams; Japanese title, Anjin Sama, meaning "Mr. Pilot."] b. at Gillingham near Chatham, England, sometime between 1564 and 1575; d. in Japan, 1620. English navigator, notable as the first Englishman to reach Japan. He joined (1598) as pilot major a Dutch fleet of five ships fitted out by Rotterdam merchants for the India trade, and after an unfortunate voyage in which all the ships except the Charity, in which he sailed, returned to Holland or were lost, arrived (1600) at Kyushu. Although he remained in Japan at first under compulsion, he rose into favor at the Japanese court, and received from the reigning shogun an estate near Yokosuka. In 1613 he obtained for the English a trading-station at Hirado. He later married a Japanese woman and made voyages to Siam (1616) and Cochin-China (1617–18).

Adams, William. b. at Colchester, Conn., Jan. 25, 1807; d. Aug. 31, 1880. American Presbyterian clergyman. Ordained (1831) after graduation (1827) from Yale at the head of his class in classical scholarship, he was one of the founders of the Union Theological Seminary in 1836, and later (1874 et seq.) its president (in which post he had much to do with increasing its endowment). He was regarded by many as the leading Presbyterian divine of his day, and was after 1837 a leading member of the "New School" group within the Presbyterian church.

Adams, William. b. 1814; d. 1848. English clergyman and writer, vicar of Saint Peter's at Oxford (1840). Author of The Shadow of the Cross (1842), Distant Hills (1844), and other sacred allegories.

Adams, William Henry Davenport. b. at London, May 5, 1828; d. at Wimbledon, near London, Dec. 30, 1891. English author, editor, compiler, private tutor, and French translator. He founded (1870) and edited (1870–78) the Scottish Guardian, later editing several volumes in the Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humor. Author of Memorable Battles in English History (1862), The Bird World (1877), Good Queen Anne (1886), and a Concordance to the Works of Shakespeare (1886).

Adams, William Lysander. b. at Painesville, Ohio, Feb. 5, 1821; d. April 26, 1906. American editor, physician, Campbellite preacher, and a founder of the Republican Party in Oregon. He emigrated (1848) to Oregon, after studying under William Campbell, and spent the period until 1855 as farmer, schoolteacher, preacher, and occasional contributor to newspapers; owner, publisher, and editor of the Oregon City Argus (1855–61) and federal collector of customs at Astoria (1861 et seq.); student of medicine (1873) at Philadelphia, and subsequently a practicing physician and founder of the Hood River sanitarium in Oregon. He is probably chiefly remembered for his ruthless campaign against the "Salem Clique," which he apparently suspected of secessionist plots on behalf of Brigham Young and the Mormons.

Adams, William Taylor. [Pseudonym, Oliver Optic.] b. at Bellingham, Mass., July 30, 1822; d. at Boston, March 27, 1897. American teacher and fiction writer, chiefly of works for young boys, including the series entitled the Boat Club, Young America Abroad, Starry Flag, Riverdale Series, and Onward and Upward. Founded and edited Oliver Optic's Magazine; teacher for 20 years in Boston public schools.

Adam's Bridge. [Also, Rama's Bridge.] Series of shoals between NW Ceylon and SE India, a considerable hindrance to shipping in the area. By tradition, the shoals are the remains of a causeway built by Rama, the hero of the Ramayana, in order that he might cross from India to Ceylon to rescue his wife Sita; geologically, it seems probable that the gap between India and Ceylon was actually once bridged by an isthmus, and that Adam's Bridge may be what is left of it. Length, ab. 30 mi.

Adam Scotus (ad'ạm skō'tus). [Also: Adam Anglicus, Adam Anglo-Scotus.] fl. c1180. Scottish theologian and religious writer. He was a Christian mystic and advocate of asceticism whose works (first published in 1518) gained him international repute.

Adams Express Company (ad'ạmz). American shipping concern whose origin as a corporation may be said to date from the small carrying trade instituted (1840) by Alvin Adams and Ephraim Farnsworth between Boston and New York. The enterprise enjoyed a rapid expansion, reaching into the Middle States, the South, and the Pacific Coast. The company's considerable stock holdings gave it an important financial position and considerable influence in the years after the Civil War. Its shipping activity was eventually absorbed by the American Railway Express Company.

Adamson (ad'ạm.sọn), John. b. at Gateshead, England, Sept. 13, 1787; d. at Newcastle, England, Sept. 27, 1855. English archaeologist and scholar of Portuguese.

Adamson, Patrick. [Original surname, Conston, Constant, Consteane, or Constantine.] b. at Perth, Scotland, March 15, 1537; d. at St. Andrew's, Scotland, Feb. 19, 1592. Scottish prelate. Archbishop at St. Andrew's (1576 et seq.), he was excommunicated on various charges in 1588, but the sentence was later nullified.

Adamson, Robert. b. 1852; d. 1902. Scottish philosophical writer, professor of philosophy at Owens College, Manchester, and of logic and rhetoric at Glasgow (1895–1902). Author of Roger Bacon: the Philosophy of Science in the Middle Ages (1876), On the Philosophy of Kant (1879), Fichte (1881), and others.

Adamson, William Charles. b. at Bowdon, Ga., Aug. 13, 1854; d. Jan. 6, 1929. American lawyer and politician, notable for the introduction in Congress of the Adamson Act specifying the eight-hour day as normal for railroad laborers. After admission (1876) to the bar, he was judge (1885–89) of the city court at Carrollton, Ga.; representative (1897–1917) in Congress until his resignation (1917) to accept a post on the Board of U.S. General Appraisers of the Customs Court.

Adamson Act. Act passed (Sept. 2, 1916) by the U.S. Congress during the first Wilson administration. Part of the "New Freedom" program, it regulated the working hours of railroad employees engaged in interstate commerce by reducing the work day from ten to eight hours.

Adams-Onís Treaty (ad'ạmz.ō.nēs'). Treaty between the U.S. and Spain signed (Feb. 22, 1819) at Washington, D.C., by the U.S. secretary of state, John Quincy Adams, and the Spanish minister, Luis de Onís. The treaty provided for the termination of the West Florida controversy, the cession to the U.S. of East Florida, the U.S. assumption of claims of its own nationals against Spain, the fixing of a boundary line from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean, and the reaffirmation of certain provisions of Pinckney's Treaty (1795). The Adams-Onís Treaty is considered by most authorities to have been a landmark in the history of American expansionism.

Adam's Peak (ad'ạmz). Conical mountain near the W shore of Ceylon. There is a Buddhist temple on the summit, but it is a holy place also for Hindus and Moslems (according to Moslem legend, a small indentation in one of its topmost rocks was formed by Adam, the first man, who was compelled to stand there, on one foot, for 1,000 years as a penance for eating the apple in the Garden of Eden). 7,420 ft.

Adamsthal (ä'däms.täl). German name of Adamov.

Adams v. Tanner, 244 U.S. 590 (1917) (ad'ạmz; tan'ẽr). Decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which voided a Washington law prohibiting the acceptance of fees as payment for assistance in obtaining employment. The majority opinion held that this statute affecting employment agencies violated the constitutional guarantee of due process of law.

Adana (ä.dä'nạ). [Also: Seyhan, Seihan.] City in S Turkey, on the Seyhan River and capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Seyhan: fourth largest city in Turkey. Founded in the 1st century B.C. by the Romans, it was for several centuries thereafter an important point on one of the great military highways built by them to link the various portions of their eastern empire, but subsequently waned in importance until the 8th century A.D., when it was restored by Harun al-Rashid. It is now an important commercial and agricultural center, with rail and air connections to other major Turkish cities. 117,799 (1950).

Adana (ad'ạ.nạ). An ancient name of Aden.

Adangme (ä.däng'mā). [Also, Adangbe (-bā).] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting the coastal towns of the SE Gold Coast. They are considered a subgroup or an eastern extension of the Ga, to whom they are closely related in language and culture.

Adans (ä.dänṣ). See Adenet.

Adanse (ä.dän'sā). One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the S part of the Gold Coast, to the S of Kumasi.

Adanson (ä.däṅ.sôṅ), Michel. b. at Aix, France, April 7, 1727; d. at Paris, Aug. 8, 1806. French naturalist and traveler in Senegambia. He was the author of Histoire naturelle du Sénégal (1757), Familles des plantes (1763), and others.

Adapazari (ä.dä.pä.zä.ri'). [Also: Adabazar; Turkish, Adapazarı.] Town in NW Turkey, on the Sakarya River in the il (province or vilayet) of Kocaeli; commercial and textile center. 29,386 (1945).

Adar (ạ.där'). [Also, Adar Sheni.] Name of the 12th month (falling variously in February-March) of the Babylonian calendar, from which it was adopted by the Jews, along with the rest of the names of the months, after the Exile. It stands as 12th month in the Jewish ecclesiastical calendar, sixth in the civil calendar. On leap years, a new seventh month is added to the calendar, and in such years the variant "Adar Sheni" becomes the name of the seventh month.

Adara (a.dä'rạ). Name of the second-magnitude star ε Canis Majoris, second brightest in the constellation Canis Major ("Great Dog"), situated in the animal's thigh.

Adare (ạ.dãr'), Cape. Cape in Antarctica, the E entrance point of Robertson Bay and the NE extremity of Victoria Land, in 71°17′ S., 170°15′ E. It was named (1841) by Sir James Clark Ross after a friend, Viscount Adare. Here the first landing on the Antarctic mainland was made (1895) by a party from the Norwegian ship Antarctic.

Adar Sheni (ạ.där' she.nē'). See Adar.

Adbeel (ad'bē.el). Name of the third son of Ishmael. Gen. xxv. 13, 1 Chron. i. 29. An Arabian tribe, Idiba'il, is mentioned in the cuneiform inscriptions. It was probably located on the Egyptian border. The name has also been found in a Minaean inscription.

Adda (äd'dä). [Latin, Addua.] River in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lombardy. It rises in the Alps W of the Ortler Spitze (highest mountain in the Ortler range), traverses the Valtellina and Lake Como, and joins the Po River ab. 8 mi. W of Cremona. Length, ab. 180 mi.; navigable ab. 75 mi.

Addams (ad'ạmz), Jane. b. at Cedarville, Ill., Sept. 6, 1860; d. May 21, 1935. American social worker, author, and advocate of international peace. She graduated from Rockford College (1881) and, with Ellen Gates Starr, opened (1889) Chicago's Hull House, of which she was head resident until her death. President of Women's International League for Peace, she presided at conventions at The Hague (1915–22), Zurich (1919), Vienna (1921), Washington (1924), Dublin (1926), and Prague (1929). She shared the Nobel Peace Prize with Nicholas Murray Butler in 1931. Author of Democracy and Social Ethics (1902), Newer Ideals of Peace (1907), Twenty Years at Hull House (1910), A New Conscience and an Ancient Evil (1911), The Second Twenty Years at Hull House (1930), The Excellent Becomes the Permanent (1932), and others.

Addar (ad.där'), Ras. Arabic name of Bon, Cape.

Adding Machine, The. Play by Elmer Rice, produced and published in 1923, satirizing the commercial spirit and social and economic regimentation. Its chief character, Mr. Zero, loses his job as an accountant when he is replaced by an adding machine, and thereupon murders his employer, is executed, and goes to heaven, where he derives pleasure from the operation of a giant adding machine. Ordered to return to earth, he at first defies the command, but is informed that it is his cosmic destiny to be an eternal slave to the machine age.

Addington (ad'ing.tọn), Henry. [Title, 1st Viscount Sidmouth.] b. at Reading, England, May 30, 1757; d. Feb. 15, 1844. English politician, at one time the leader of the parliamentary faction known as the "king's friends." He entered Parliament in 1783, and was subsequently speaker (1789–1801) and prime minister (1801–04). During his office as home secretary under Liverpool (1812–22), his suspension (1817) of the Habeas Corpus Act and alleged encouragement of police repression infuriated a large section of the English public. He withdrew from the government entirely in 1824.

Addis Ababa (ad'is ab'ạ.bạ). [Also: Adis Ababa, Adis Abeba.] City in E Africa, the capital of Ethiopia, in the province of Shoa, ab. 487 mi. inland from the Gulf of Aden, at the end of the railway from Djibouti, in French Somaliland. A treaty of peace with Italy was concluded here on Oct. 26, 1896, after Italy's first attempt to conquer Ethiopia had ended in disaster. The second Italian invasion, during the 1930's, ended with the occupation (1936) of Addis Ababa. The city was freed during the collapse of the Italian empire in Africa during World War II. It is the only large urban area in Ethiopia, and because of its altitude (over 8,000 ft.) it enjoys a fine, healthful climate. Pop. ab. 300,000.

Addiscombe (ad'is.kum). Ward of Croydon, county borough, in SE England, in Surrey, ab. 13 mi. S of Charing Cross station, London. It was formerly the seat of a college for the cadets of the East India Company. 14,048 (1931).

Addison (ad'i.sọn), Christopher. [Title, 1st Viscount Addison of Stallingborough.] b. in Lincolnshire, 1869; d. Dec. 11, 1951. English politician and professor of anatomy. Active in the government during and after World War I, he was later minister of agriculture in MacDonald's second Labour cabinet (1930–31), Labour leader in the House of Lords (1940), and secretary for the dominions (1945).

Addison, John. b. at London, c1766; d. there, Jan. 30, 1844. English composer and performer on the double-bass. His work includes several operettas which were very popular in his day, as well as a number of songs.

Addison, Joseph. b. at Milston, Wiltshire, England, 1672; d. at Holland House, London, 1719. English essayist, poet, and statesman; son of Lancelot Addison (1632–1703). He was a graduate of Charterhouse School (where he first met Richard Steele) and Oxford (where he won high praise for his Latin verse). Partly because of a poem in Latin on the Peace of Ryswick, he was appointed to receive a subsidy to enable him to prepare for diplomatic service by travel (1699–1703) on the Continent. In 1705, he wrote Campaign in couplets to celebrate the victory at Blenheim, and won political preferment among Whigs; the same year also saw publication of his long Remarks on Italy, in prose. He was under-secretary of state (1706–08), chief secretary to the lord lieutenant of Ireland (1709–10), and a member of Parliament (1708 et seq.). During this period he wrote the opera Rosamond (1707) and the classical tragedy Cato (1713), the latter an immediate success partly because of its political implications. He contributed also to the Tatler, writing (1709–11) approximately 80 papers alone or with Steele; he also wrote about 250 Spectators (1711–12) and about 50 Guardians (1713). He edited and was the main contributing author of the revived Spectator (1714), as well as the Free-Holder (1715–16). He married (1716) the Countess of Warwick, and served (1717–18) in the cabinet as secretary of state.

Addison, Julia de Wolf. b. at Boston, Mass., 1866—. American muralist, author, composer, and designer.

Addison, Lancelot. b. at Crosby Ravensworth, Westmorland, England, 1632; d. at Lichfield, Staffordshire, England, 1703. English clergyman and writer; father of Joseph Addison (1672–1719). A zealous royalist and Episcopalian, he was appointed after the Restoration to a post as English chaplain at Dunkerque, on the Channel coast of France.

Addison, Thomas. b. 1793; d. 1860. British physician. He discovered "Addison's disease," an illness involving adrenal gland destruction, ordinarily caused by tuberculosis.

Addison of Stallingborough (stôl'ing.bėr.ō), 1st Viscount. Title of Addison, Christopher.

Addison's Walk. A walk in the grounds of Magdalen College, Oxford, said to have been a favorite promenade of the English essayist, Joseph Addison (1672–1719), who in 1689 held a demyship (foundation scholarship) in that college.

Addled Parliament. Nickname of the second Parliament of James I (April-June, 1614), which was dissolved without having passed any acts, on its refusal to grant supplies until the king's imposition of customs and the restoration of the nonconforming clergy ejected from the Anglican Church in 1604 had been considered.

Addua (ad'ō.a). Latin name of the Adda.

Addums (ad'umz), Mozis. A pseudonym of Bagby, George William.

Addyston Pipe and Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211(1899) (ad'is.tən). Unanimous decision of the U.S. Supreme Court holding illegal under the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act an association of cast-iron pipe manufacturers established for the purpose of fixing prices and eliminating competition.

Ade (ād), George. b. at Kentland, Newton County, Ind., Feb. 9, 1866; d. at Brook, Newton County, Ind., May 16, 1944. American journalist, columnist, humorist, and playwright. On the staff of the Chicago Record (1890–1900), he conducted a column, "Stories of the Streets and of the Town," and became nationally famous with his widely syndicated "Fables in Slang," beginning in 1900. His fables were a reflection of the common sense of the plain people. The form of the fable, with capital letters plentifully bestowed on important words and an aphoristic moral in italics at the end, served to garnish what was often a crisp short story dealing with familiar human types in well-worn situations. Ade in his fables was Ring Lardner in the germ, except that he was the inventor of novel turns of speech rather than a reporter mimicking the idiom actually spoken. The first book of his collected "fables" (entitled Fables in Slang, like his column) was a national best-seller from the day of its publication in 1900. His other books of fables, about a dozen, included The Girl Proposition (1902), People You Know (1903), and Knocking the Neighbors (1912). He also wrote Single Blessedness, a volume of humorous essays (1922), and The Old Time Saloon (1931). In Babel, made up of short stories that originally appeared in his newspaper column, includes stories acclaimed by the critic H. L. Mencken as among the best ever written by an American. He became one of the most successful playwrights of his time and wrote at least 17 plays, including the musical comedies The Sultan of Sulu (1902) and The Sho-gun (1904), and continued his dramatic work until 1914. The County Chairman (1903) is a study of the human politician in a small town in Indiana. In The College Widow (1904) Ade presented a picture of Atwater College, evidently in the Middle West. Just Out of College (1905) is a satire on the college man who has available from his education nothing that he can sell in the business world.

Adee (ā'dē), Alvey Augustus. b. at Astoria, N.Y., Nov. 27, 1842; d. July 5, 1924. American career diplomat, sometimes called "the anchor of the State Department" because of his 37-year tenure as second assistant secretary of state (1886 et seq.). He was also chief of the diplomatic bureau (1878–82) and third assistant secretary of state (1882–86).

Adel (ā.dāl'). See also Adal.

Adel (ā.del'). City in S Georgia, county seat of Cook County. 2,776 (1950).

Adela (ad'ę.la). b. c1062; d. 1137. Fourth daughter of William the Conqueror. She was the wife of Stephen, earl of Blois and Chartres, and mother of Stephen, king of England, whose claim to the throne derived through her.

Adelaer (ä'dę.ler), Cort Sivertsen. [Also, Cort Sivertsen Adeler, meaning "Cort Sivertsen the Eagle"; original name, Cort Sivertsen.] b. at Brevig, Norway, Dec. 16, 1622; d. at Copenhagen, Nov. 5, 1675. Scandinavian naval commander. He was successively in the service of the Netherlands (1637 et seq.), of Venice against Turkey (1642 et seq.), and of Denmark (1663 et seq.). Adelaer or Adeler was added to his original name as a tribute to his boldness.

Adelaide (ad'ę.lād), Saint. [German, Adelheid.] b. c931; d. at Seltz, in Alsace, 999. German noblewoman and religious figure; wife of Otto I of Germany (951–973) and founder of the Benedictine cloister at Seltz, in Alsace. Daughter of Rudolph II of Burgundy, she was first married to Lothair of Italy (947–950). Imprisoned by his successor, Berengar II, she escaped and married Otto I (951), being crowned empress in 962 by Pope John XII. She had great influence during the first part of the reign (973–983) of her son, Otto II, but in 978, possibly because her generosity to religious groups was depleting the exchequer, her power waned. With Otto's widow, the Empress Theophano, she defended the right of the infant Otto III to the throne and was sole regent (991–996).

Adélaïde (ä.dā.lä.ēd). b. at Paris, Aug. 25, 1777; d. Dec. 31, 1847. Princess of Orléans; sister of Louis Philippe, King of France. She is said to have persuaded her brother to accept the crown in 1830.

Adelaide (ad'ę.lād). [Full name, Amelia Adelaide Louise Theresa Caroline.] b. Aug. 13, 1792; d. Dec. 2, 1849. Princess of Saxe-Coburg-Meiningen and queen of England; wife of the Duke of Clarence (later William IV), whom she married on July 18, 1818.

Adelaide. City in SE Australia, the capital of the state of South Australia, on the Torrens River, ab. 7 mi. SE of Port Adelaide. Named for Adelaide, queen of England and wife of William IV, the city was founded in 1836. It contains the University of Adelaide, founded in 1874. Today the city is the industrial and commercial center of the state. Pop. including suburbs, ab. 422,000 (1950).

Adelaide Island. Island in Antarctica, lying N of Marguerite Bay on the W side of the Palmer Peninsula, in 67°15′ S., 68°40′ W. It was discovered on Feb. 14, 1832, by John Biscoe and named by him for Adelaide, then queen of England. Length, ab. 68 mi.; width, ab. 20 mi.

Adelard of Bath (ad'ę.lärd). [Also: Æthelhard; Latinized, Adelardus Bathoniensis.] b. at Bath, England; fl. c1116 to c1142. English mathematician, scientist, philosophical writer, and traveler, known for his knowledge of Arabic learning, and considered to have been the greatest in his field before Grosseteste and Bacon. He studied at Tours and Laon, and then traveled in Italy, Sicily, Greece, Asia Minor, and Africa, returning to England in the reign of Henry I. Before 1116 he wrote a philosophical treatise on identity and difference (De eodem et diverso), and before 1137 (probably much earlier) a dialogue (Questiones naturales) divided into 76 chapters, each of which treats of a scientific question, the whole purporting to expound Arabic knowledge on these questions. In chapter 51, apropos of an experiment carefully described by him, he explains the impossibility of a vacuum by a theory of universal continuity (developed later by Roger Bacon). The De eodem et diverso is a dialogue explaining Platonic views similar to those of the School of Chartres and opposing exaggerated Realism: genera and species are nothing but individuals considered from different points of view. This attitude has been regarded as preparing Abelard's conceptualism. Adelard's most important contributions, however, were in the field of mathematics. Early in life (before his Arabic contacts) he wrote a treatise on the abacus (Regule abaci). Later, in 1126, he translated from Arabic into Latin a revised edition of the astronomical tables of al-Khowarizmi; they included tables of sines. Thus was Moslem trigonometry, and more specifically the sine and tangent functions, introduced into the Latin world. He was also in all probability the "Magister A" who translated al-Khowarizmi's mathematical treatise (Liber ysagogarum Alchorismi). Thus Adelard was an abacist at the beginning of his career, and later became an algorist, the earliest (or one of the earliest) of them. Finally, he translated Euclid's works from the Arabic, this being the earliest Latin translation known to us, though he would seem to have made use of an earlier version from the Greek. There are many manuscripts of this, yet they are very divergent, and the exact nature of Adelard's original work, whether it was an abridgment, a close translation, or a commentary, is not clear. His translation of Euclid included the determination of the sum of the angles of stellated polygons. One of his latest writings was a treatise on the astrolabe (De opere astrolapsus; c1142–46). To complete this brief account of Adelard's mathematical activity, he was probably instrumental in introducing some knowledge of Moslem music into the West, for he had studied music in France, and al-Khowarizmi's mathematical treatise, covering the whole quadrivium, contains a section on music.

Adelbert (ad'ẹl.bėrt). See also Adalbert.

Adelbert or Adalbert. b. c1000; d. at Goslar, Prussia, March 16, 1072. German prelate, archbishop of Bremen and Hamburg (c1045). He attempted the formation of a northern European patriarchate with 12 suffragan bishoprics.

Adelboden (ä'dẹl.bō.dẹn). [Also, Engstligenthal.] Alpine valley in S central Switzerland, in the canton o Bern, connecting with the Kander valley, ab. 15 mi. SW of Interlaken.

Adeler (ä'dẹ.lėr), Cort Sivertsen. See Adelaer, Cort Sivertsen.

Adeler, Max. See under Clark, Charles Heber.

Adelheid (ä'dẹl.hīt). German form of Adelaide.

Adelheid. Character in Goethe's Götz von Berlichingen.

Adélie Coast (ad'ẹl.ē, ȧ.dā.lē'). [Also, Adélie Land.] Region in Antarctica, a part of the coast of Wilkes Land, lying between 136°20′ E. and 142°20′ E. It was discovered and named in 1840 by the French naval commander Dumont d'Urville for his wife. It was later explored by Sir Douglas Mawson, and has been since 1938 within the area placed under French administration. According to some authorities, this part of Antarctica has the strongest winds in the world.

Adeliza (ad.ẹ.lī'zạ). d. in March, 1151. Second queen of Henry I of England; daughter of Godfrey (Barbatus) of Louvain, duke of Brabant or Lower Lotharingia, and a descendant, in the male line, of Charlemagne. She was married to Henry I on Jan. 24, 1120 (or 1121), and after his death married William de Albini.

Adelon (ȧd.lôn̄), Nicolas Philibert. b. at Dijon, France, Aug. 20, 1782; d. July 19, 1862. French medical writer.

Adelphi (ạ.del'fī; -fē). Section in W central London, in Westminster metropolitan borough, comprising several streets on the S side of the Strand, on the approximate site (now occupied by office buildings) of the Adelphi terrace, facing the river. The name was given from the Greek adelphoi ("brothers") from the fact that the terrace which formerly occupied it was designed (c1768) by the Adam brothers.

Adelphi Theatre. Theater on the Strand, London, first built in 1806, and rebuilt and enlarged in 1858.

Adelphoe (ạ.del'fē). [Also, Adelphi.] Comedy by Terence, adapted from Menander's work of the same name in Greek, with the addition of a scene from a play of Diphilos. It suggested Molière's École des maris and Baron's L'École des pères.

Adelung (ä'dẹ.lůng), Friedrich von. b. at Stettin, Prussia, Feb. 25, 1768; d. at St. Petersburg, Russia, Jan. 30, 1843. German philologist; nephew of Johann Christoph Adelung (1732–1806). He wrote Rapport entre la langue sanscrite et la langue russe (1811), Übersicht der Reisenden in Russland bis 1700, and others.

Adelung, Johann Christoph. b. at Spantekow, Prussia, Aug. 8, 1732; d. at Dresden, Sept. 10, 1806. German philologist, librarian at Dresden (1787–1806). He wrote Grammatischkritisches Wörterbuch der hochdeutschen Mundart (1774–86), and others. His Mithridates contained the Lord's Prayer in nearly five hundred languages and attempted a vast survey of languages throughout the world. Publication was begun in the year of Adelung's death (1806); the work was completed by Johann Severin Vater, the last volume appearing in 1817. Mithridates reflects the state of linguistic knowledge in the latter part of the 18th century immediately before the dawn of the scientific study of language in the 19th century.

Aden (ä'dẹn, ā'-). [Ancient names: Adana, Attanae.] City in the SW Arabian peninsula, seaport and capital of the British colony and protectorate of Aden, on the Gulf of Aden, situated on a rocky peninsula connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. It is an important coaling station, and a port of call of ships to and from the Orient via the Suez Canal. The production of salt and cigarettes are among its chief industries. It was captured and annexed by the British in 1839. Aden and the settlements adjoining (Aden Settlement), with the island of Perim at the S entrance to the Red Sea, and the Kuria Muria Islands S of Muscat and Oman, constitute a crown colony. Area of the colony, ab. 110 sq. mi.; of Aden Settlement, 75 sq. mi.; pop. of Aden city, 80,516 (1946).

Aden, Gulf of. Arm of the Indian Ocean, S of the Arabian Peninsula and N of the "horn" of Africa, connected with the Red Sea by the strait of Bab el Mandeb. British Somaliland occupies most of the S shore of the Gulf.

Adena (ạ.dē'nạ). Collective name for a North American Indian culture revealed archaeologically at sites in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, West Virginia, and W Pennsylvania. It is dated at about 500–900 A.D., during the Burial Mound I period, and consists of large earthen burial mounds and village sites which contain pottery of particular styles, a variety of stone and bone tools, and ornaments of shell, copper, mica, and stone.

Adenauer (ä'dẹn.ou.ėr), Konrad. b. at Cologne, Germany, Jan. 5, 1876—. German politician, first chancellor of the West German federal republic after World War II. Mayor of Cologne (1917–33), he was banished from Cologne by the Nazis and twice arrested. He was appointed to his former post by the British after the overthrow of the Hitler regime. He was thereafter zonal chairman of the CDU (Christian Democratic Union), president of the parliamentary council at Bonn in 1948, and chancellor in 1949, taking the additional post of foreign minister in 1951.

Aden Colony (ä'dẹn, ā'-). See under Aden.

Adenet (ȧd.ne). [Also: Adam, Adans, Adenès, Adenez; called le Roi, meaning "the King."] French trouvère of the 13th century. He is known for his refashioning of three chansons de gestes, Les enfances Ogier, Berte aus grans Piés, and Bueves de Commarchis; author of Cléomadès, a roman d'aventure of 20,000 verses.

Adenis (ȧd.nē), Jules. [Full name, Jules Adenis-Colombeau.] b. at Paris, 1821; d. there, 1900. French journalist and dramatist. He was on the editorial staff of the Corsaire (1847–49), and wrote many comedies, vaudevilles, and librettos. Among his independent works are Philanthropie et repentir (1855), Une Crise de ménage (1857), Les Chasseurs et la laitière (1865; music by Gavaert), La Fiancée d'Abydos (1865; music by Barthe), Le Nouveau Sorcier (1867), and Les Trois Souhaits (1873; music by Poise).

Aden Protectorate (ä'dẹn, ā'-). British protectorate in S Arabia, E, W, and N of the colony of Aden, consisting of the territories of a number of sultans and Arab chiefs in protectorate treaty relations with the British crown. It is divided for administrative purposes into Western Aden Protectorate, which includes some 19 sultanates in the vicinity of the city of Aden, and Eastern Aden Protectorate, which includes the Hadhramaut region, the island of Socotra in the Arabian Sea, and several smaller divisions W of the sultanate of Muscat and Oman. Government is by the individual sultans, subject to the governor of Aden colony. Fishing is important along the coast; in the interior the main occupation is herding. Capital, Aden; length of coastline, 750 mi.; area, 112,000 sq. mi.; pop. 600,000 (est. 1946).

Aden Settlement. See under Aden.

Adeodatus I (ā.dē.od'ạ.tus). See Deusdedit, Saint.

Adeodatus II, Saint. Pope from 672 to 676. He was an upholder of monastic discipline and opponent of the Monothelite heresy.

Aderar (ä.de.rär') or Aderer (-rār'). See Adrar.

Adernò (ä.der.nô'). See Adrano.

Adeste fideles (ä.des'tā fē.dā'lās). [English, O Come, All Ye Faithful.] Hymn, originally in Latin, beginning with these words. It has been ascribed to Bonaventura (1221–74), but is more probably of the 17th or 18th century and of French or German authorship. The familiar arrangement, commencing "O come, all ye faithful, joyfully triumphant," first appeared in Murray's Hymnal in 1852 and is an adaptation of the translation made by the Reverend Frederick Oakeley in 1841. It has also been published in many other translations. The tune is ascribed to John Reading (1677–1764), organist, and was at first called the "Portuguese Hymn" in England because it was sung at the chapel of the Portuguese embassy in 1797.

Adhemar (ä.de.mär). See under Bourbon.

Adhémar de Chabannes (ä.dā.mär dẹ shä.bän). [Latinized, Ademarus Cabannensis (or Engolismensis, meaning "of Angoulême").] b. at Chabannes, near Châteauponsac, Haute-Vienne, France, 988; d. at Jerusalem, 1034. French monk and chronicler, active for most of his life at Limoges and Angoulême. His main work is a chronicle of French history with special reference to Aquitania (Chronicon aquitanicum), from mythical ages down to 1028, in three books. The first two books are largely copied from older chronicles, but Book 3, dealing with the period 814 to 1028, is the most important source for the history of Aquitania in the 10th and 11th centuries.

Adherbal (ad.hėr'bạl). d. c112 B.C. Son of Micipsa and king of Numidia (118 B.C.), sharing the rule with his brother Hiempsal and cousin Jugurtha. Hiempsal was slain by Jugurtha, and Adherbal sought protection of the Romans, who restored him to the throne (117 B.C.), but he was ousted and slain (c112 B.C.) by Jugurtha.

Adiabene (ad"i.ạ.bē'nē). In ancient geography, a small Assyrian district on the Tigris not far from Nisibis. It was a vassal of Parthia, and succumbed to Rome under Trajan. Its queen, Helen, and her sons Izates and Monabaz, embraced Judaism c18 A.D.

Adi-Buddha (ä'dē.bụd'ạ). Deity appearing (c10th century A.D.) in northern Buddhism, probably under the influence of Christianity. He was believed to be infinite, self-existent, and omniscient and by the exercise of the five meditations to have evolved out of himself the five Buddhas of contemplation, each of whom created a Bodhisattva, who in turn created out of his immaterial essence a material world.

Adicia (ạ.dish'i.ạ). In Spenser's Faerie Queene, the wife of the Soldan, an unrighteous woman, transformed into a raging tiger.

Adige (ä'dē.jā). [German, Etsch; Latin, Athesis.] River in N Italy. It rises near the frontier of Switzerland, flows S through the Alps to the plain of the Po, sends arms to the Po, and flows into the Adriatic N of the mouths of the Po. Its length is ab. 255 mi., and it is navigable for ab. 180 mi. On it are Trent and Verona.

Adigetto (ä.dē.jät'tō). Canal or arm of the Adige, in N Italy, which separates from it near Badia, and flows past Rovigo into the Adriatic N of the Po.

Adighe (ä.di.gā'). See Adyge.

Adi-Granth (ä'dẹ.gränth'). Bible of the Sikhs, compiled by the fifth successor of Nanak, Guru Arjun (1584–1606).

Adin (ā'din). Head of a Hebrew family which returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Ezra, ii. 15, Neh. vii. 20.

Adipurana (ä"dẹ.pö.rä'nạ). See Brahmapurana.

Adirondack Mountains (ad.i.ron'dak). Range of mountains in NE New York, the highest in the state. The main group is in Hamilton, Essex, Franklin, and Clinton counties, but the name is extended to the whole NE region of New York. The highest peak is Mount Marcy (5,344 ft.). Other notable summits are Mount Dix, Mount McIntyre, Mount Seward, Mount Whiteface, and Haystack.

Adirondack State Forest. [Also, Adirondack Park.] Park established by act of the New York State legislature in 1892 within the counties of Hamilton, Essex, Franklin, Warren, St. Lawrence, and Herkimer, for the use of the public. Further provision for the park was made by act of 1893. Area, 2,171,690 acres.

Adis Ababa (ad'is ab'ạ.bạ) or Adis Abeba (ä.bā.bä'). See Addis Ababa.

Adites (ad'īts). Early Arabian (Cushite) rulers.

Aditi (ä'di.ti). Term used in the Vedas as an adjective to mean "unbound," "free," "limitless," "infinite," "exhaustless," and, as a noun, to mean "freedom," "security," and then "infinity," in particular that of heaven in contrast with the finitude of earth and its spaces. The last conception personified is the goddess Aditi, the mother of the Adityas.

Adityas (ä'dit.yạz). [Eng. trans., "Sons of Aditi."] In the Vedic literature, the seven gods of the heavenly light, at whose head stands Varuna, who is the Aditya par excellence. They are Varuna, Mitra ("the friend"), Aryaman ("the bosom friend"), Bhaga ("the liberal"), Daksha ("the capable"), Ansa ("the apportioner"), and an uncertain seventh. Mitra and the rest are only a splitting up and reflection of Varuna, the god of the vast luminous heavens, viewed as embracing all things and as the primary source of all life and every blessing. In the Brahmanas and later, the Adityas are 12 in number, with manifest reference to the number of the months. The term Aditya is also used from the earliest times as a designation for the sun.

Adjunta (ạ.jun'tạ). See Ajanta.

Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924. Measure passed by the U.S. Congress over presidential veto in 1924 providing a bonus for honorably discharged servicemen who had been members of the U.S. armed forces during World War I. The bonus credits were based upon length of service, domestic service bringing one dollar a day, while foreign service brought one dollar and twenty-five cents a day. The act stipulated deferral of payment until 1945 for all eligible veterans except those receiving a bonus of less than 50 dollars. More than 3,500,000 veterans received Adjusted Compensation Certificates which became redeemable in 1936 after long agitation by ex-servicemen's groups brought congressional sanction of payments in a move overriding President Franklin D. Roosevelt's veto.

Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U.S. 525 (1923) (ad'kinz). Minimum-wage case in which the U.S. Supreme Court, by a vote of five to three, declared void an act of the U.S. Congress fixing minimum wages for women and children in the District of Columbia. The statute was held unconstitutional on the grounds that it impaired freedom of contract and violated the due process clause.

Adler (äd'lėr), Alfred. b. at Penzing-Vienna, Austria, Feb. 7, 1870; d. at Aberdeen, Scotland, May 28, 1937. Austrian psychiatrist, a chief proponent of the "inferiority complex" as a key to problems in psychopathology. At one time professionally close to Sigmund Freud, he later asserted that Freud overemphasized the sexual motive in behavior. He studied medicine, psychology, and philosophy at Vienna, where he served (1895–97) at the General Hospital and Polyclinic, and was later (1897–1927) a general practitioner and nerve specialist. He became privatdocent (1924) at the Pedagogical Institute of the city of Vienna, and was a lecturer (1928) at Columbia University medical center, being also appointed in the same year clinical director of the Mariahilfer Ambulatorium, at Vienna. He became in 1932 visiting professor of medical psychology at the Long Island College of Medicine, at New York. At the time of his death he was connected with the faculty of Aberdeen University, at Aberdeen, Scotland, where he had been lecturing on psychopathology. He established the School of Individual Psychology at Vienna, and founded (1914) the Journal of Individual Psychology. Convinced that his techniques could help to prevent neurosis and delinquency in childhood, he organized child guidance centers in 30 schools at Vienna, and began educating teachers to apply his methods in them. Author of Studie über Minderwertigkeit von Orgnen und ihre seelische Kompensation (1907; Eng. trans., Study of Organ Inferiority and its Psychical Compensation, 1917), Über den nervösen Charakter (1912), Heilen und Bilden (1914), Praxis und Theorie der Individualpsychologie (1918), Problem der Homosexualität (1919), Menschenkenntnis (1921), Technik der Individualpsychologie (1928), The Science of Living (1929), Problems of Neurosis (1929), Education of Children (1930), The Pattern of Life (1930), Der Sinn des Lebens (1932), and Social Interest: A Challenge to Mankind (1936).

Adler (ad'lėr), Cyrus. b. at Van Buren, Ark., Sept. 13, 1863; d. April 7, 1940. American archaeologist, educator, and Jewish historian. He was a librarian (1892–1905) and assistant secretary (1905–08) of the Smithsonian Institution. Subsequently president (1908 et seq.) of Dropsie College, at Philadelphia, he was during the latter part of his life acting president (1916–24) and president (1924 et seq.) of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, at New York. He was also an editor of the Jewish Encyclopedia, editor of the American Jewish Year Book (1899–1906), and a council member of the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

Adler (ad'lėr, äd'-), Felix. b. at Alzey, Germany, Aug. 13, 1851; d. April 24, 1933. American lecturer, writer, and reformer, notable as the founder (1876) of the New York Society for Ethical Culture. He was professor of political and social ethics at Columbia (1902 et seq.) and Hibbert lecturer at Oxford (1923). Author of Creed and Deed (1877), Life and Destiny (1903), Marriage and Divorce (1905), Religion of Duty (1905), The World Crisis and Its Meaning (1915), An Ethical Philosophy of Life (1918), and others.

Adler (äd'lėr), Friedrich. b. at Berlin, Oct. 15, 1827; d. there, Sept. 15, 1908. German architect and archaeologist. He is now best known as a writer on the medieval and Renaissance architecture of Germany, but he was also a chief associate of Ernst Curtius in the excavations on the plain of Olympia, in Greece, the results of which were published between 1890 and 1897.

Adler, Friedrich. b. at Vienna, July 9, 1879—. Austrian socialist; son of Viktor Adler (1852–1918). He joined the pacifist left wing of the Social Democratic Party during World War I and killed (1916) the Austrian prime minister, Count Carl Stürgkh, as a protest against the government's militarism. For this he was condemned to death, but the sentence was commuted, and he was amnestied in 1918 at the time of the collapse of the Hapsburg regime.

Adler (ad'lėr, äd'-), George J. b. at Leipzig, 1821; d. in Bloomingdale Asylum, New York, Aug. 24, 1868. American philologist. He arrived in the U.S. in 1833, and graduated (1844) as class valedictorian from New York University, where he became (1846) professor of modern languages. The publication (1849) of his Dictionary of the German and English Languages, which added nearly 30,000 new terms and numerous articles on synonyms to an earlier dictionary by the German scholar Johann Gottfried Flügel, marked him as one of the great philologians of his period, but the staggering labor of preparation entailed by this work permanently damaged Adler's mental health. After a trip (1849) to Europe, during which he met and became intimate with Herman Melville, he undertook once again his university work, but fell subject (1853) to delusions of persecution which necessitated confinement in Bloomingdale Asylum, where he nevertheless completed several philological works before his death.

Adler (äd'lėr), Ludwig. b. at Vienna, Austria, Nov. 7, 1878—. Austrian gynecologist and obstetrician. He served at the general hospital and at the institute of pathological anatomy of the University of Vienna, where he became privatdocent (1912) and professor (1919) of gynecology and obstetrics. He was also for many years director of the gynecological department of the Wilhelminespital at Vienna. He is known for his work (with F. Hitschmann) on the endometrium (1908), his studies on the pathology of the uterus, function of the ovaries, and X-ray treatment of uterus carcinoma.

Adler (ad'lėr), Mortimer Jerome. b. at New York, Dec. 28, 1902—. American educator and author. He was an instructor in psychology at Columbia (1923–29) and associate professor (1930–42) and professor (1942–52) of the philosophy of law at Chicago. Author of Dialectic (1927), How To Read a Book (1940), The Problems of Species (1940), and How To Think about War and Peace (1944), and associate editor of Great Books of the Western World (1945 et seq.).

Adler (ad'lėr, äd'-), Nathan Marcus. b. at Hanover, Germany, Jan. 15, 1803; d. at Brighton, England, Jan. 21, 1890. Chief rabbi of the United Congregations of Jews of the British Empire. Elected (1844) chief rabbi of London, he founded (1855) and was first president of the college for Jewish teachers at London. He proposed (1860) the plan which in 1870 was passed by Parliament as the United Synagogue Act.

Adler, Samuel. b. at Worms, Germany, Dec. 3, 1809; d. June 9, 1891. American rabbi and proponent of Reform Judaism. His appointment (1857) as head of Congregation Emanu-El at New York brought him to the U.S., where he subsequently completed a revision of the prayer book started by Dr. L. Merzbacher and aided in the establishment of New York's Hebrew Orphan Asylum. Prior to this, in Europe, a deep interest in bringing new vigor to the practice of Judaism had led him to the Rabbinical Reform Conferences at Brunswick (1844), Frankfort on the Main (1845), and Breslau (1846) which prepared the way for Reform Judaism, and he continued throughout his life to urge every change which he felt would open the way to a fuller religious life by his congregation.

Adler (äd'lėr), Viktor. b. at Prague, June 24, 1852; d. Nov. 12, 1918. Austrian journalist and Socialist leader. Founder (1886) of the newspaper, Gleichheit, which later became Die Arbeiterzeitung, the chief organ of the Austrian Social Democrats, he was a member of the Austrian Diet (1902) and of the Reichsrat (1905 et seq.), and played a leading role in securing (1907) universal suffrage for Austria. He was for a few days before his death foreign minister of the provisional government that immediately preceded the Austrian republic established at the close of World War I.

Adlerberg (äd'lėr.berk), Count Vladimir. b. at St. Petersburg, Russia, Nov. 10, 1790; d. there, March 20, 1884. Russian general and minister in the service of the Russian czars Nicholas I and Alexander II.

Adlerbeth (äd'lėr.bet), Gudmund Göran. b. 1751; d. 1818. Swedish poet, dramatist, translator (of old Norse poetry, Vergil, Horace, Ovid, and others), and historical writer.

Adlercreutz (äd'lėr.kroits), Count Karl Johan. b. near Borgå (now Porvoo, Finland), April 27, 1757; d. Aug. 21, 1815. Swedish general, defeated (1808) in Finland by the Russians. He took part in deposing (1809) Gustavus IV of Sweden, and later served in Germany (1813) and in Norway (1814).

Adlersparre (äd'lėr.spär.rę), Count Georg. b. in Jemtland, Sweden, March 28, 1760; d. in Wermland, Sweden, Sept. 23, 1835. Swedish author, editor, government official, and general. He contributed (1809) to the overthrow of Gustavus IV of Sweden, and was later appointed major general in the Swedish army and made a member of the nobility.

Adlersparre, Karl August. b. June 7, 1810; d. May 5, 1862. Swedish poet and historian; son of Count Georg Adlersparre (1760–1835).

Adlum (ad'lum), John. b. at York, Pa., April 29, 1759; d. March 1, 1836. American horticulturist and viticulturist. He is remembered for his development of the Catawba grape and, among botanists, as the source of the plant name Adlumia. Author of Adlum on Making Wine (1826) and A Memoir on the Cultivation of the Vine in America and the Best Mode of Making Wine (1823, 1828).

Admah (ad'mą). In the Old Testament, one of the cities destroyed with Sodom. Gen. xiv. 2.

Ad Mediam (ad mē'di.ąm). Ancient name of Mehadia.

Admetus (ad.mē'tus). [Also, Admetos (-tos).] In Greek mythology, a Thessalian king, son of Pheres, king of Pherae, delivered from death by the voluntary sacrifice of his wife Alcestis (who was thereupon rescued from Hades by Hercules). He took part in the expedition of the Argonauts and in the chase of the Calydonian boar.

Administration of Justice Act. See under Coercive Acts.

Admirable Bashville (bash'vil), The. Drama (1901) by George Bernard Shaw. It is based on Cashel Byron's Profession, written by Shaw in 1882 and generally considered to be the best of his five novels.

Admirable Crichton (krī'tọn), The. Dramatic work (1902) by J. M. Barrie. Crichton is the butler in a wealthy household whose head, Lord Loam, likes to pretend that class distinctions are actually meaningless, and who accordingly once a year entertains his servants at tea. Believing firmly that such an arrangement violates the laws of nature, Crichton resists, but without avail until during a yachting trip the family is wrecked on a desert island and left there for two years. Now the situation is different, and the laws of nature clearly dictate that the most competent member of the party (obviously Crichton) shall be the leader. He cheerfully assumes the responsibility, and accepts all the prerogatives of an absolute master: the others are reduced to the status of slaves, and he proposes to marry his former master's daughter. However, when rescue comes and the party returns to England, Crichton punctiliously returns to his original menial rank, and life goes on as it had before the shipwreck except for one important difference: Crichton's point about the relative positions of master and servant has now been clearly driven home to Lord Loam. In real life, there was a man actually called "the Admirable Crichton" (a Scottish scholar and adventurer of the late 16th century, named James Crichton) whose accomplishments were comparable in their variety (although not in kind) to those of Barrie's character.

Admirable Doctor. See Bacon, Roger.

Admiralty Inlet (ad'mi.rạl.ti). Arm of Puget Sound, on the W coast of the state of Washington, E of Juan de Fuca Strait.

Admiralty Island. Island W of the SE part of Alaska, SW of Juneau, belonging to the U.S.

Admiralty Islands. Archipelago in the Pacific, NE of the island of New Guinea, discovered by the Dutch in 1616, and annexed by Germany in 1885. In 1920 the League of Nations included the islands in the New Guinea mandate to Australia, and they remained, as a trust territory of the United Nations, still under Australian control after World War II. The islands are important chiefly for their coconut plantations and pearl fisheries. They were occupied by the Japanese early in World War II, and Allied forces of liberation landed on the small subgroup of Los Negros in 1944. There are ab. 18 islands in the group, of which the chief is Manus (the name Manus is also used in reference to the entire group). Area, ab. 800 sq. mi.; pop. 13,172 (1941).

Admiralty Islands, Battle of the. Name usually given to a series of amphibious attacks carried out by U.S forces against the Japanese in the early part of 1944 as a part of the overall campaign in the SW Pacific area. Action centered on Los Negros, invaded on Feb. 29, and Manus, which fell into U.S. hands on March 18 (although organized resistance did not end until April 17). As a result of the operation the Allies obtained several air strips from which to harass the Japanese garrisons stranded at Rabaul and in New Britain. Another and possibly more important result of the victory was that it gave the Allies air bases within easy reach of the Japanese sea lanes to all territory S of the Admiralty Islands, and thus made possible the launching of a sustained attack against the vessels carrying supplies to the Japanese forces (estimated at 100,000 men) throughout the Bismarck archipelago. In General MacArthur's words, the battle enabled the Allies to "put the cork in the bottle," so far as any important strategic use of the Japanese forces S of the Admiralty Islands was concerned.

Admiralty Range. Name given to the N part of the great mountain system W of the Ross Sea, in Victoria Land, in Antarctica. The largest mountains in the range reach a height of ab. 10,000 ft.

Admiralty Sound. Arm of the Strait of Magellan, in SE Chile, on the W coast of King Charles's South Land, Tierra del Fuego.

Admonitionists (ad.mō.nish'ọn.ists). Sect of 16th-century English Puritans who followed Thomas Cartwright in urging church government by presbyters rather than bishops and demanding recognition of church authority as superior to that of the state. The name derives from An Admonition to Parliament, published in 1572 by two members of the sect, which was followed by a second work of the same nature under Cartwright's own name.

Admont (äd'mont). Town in E Austria, in Styria, situated on the Enns River ab. 50 mi. S of Linz. It is noted for its scenery and a Benedictine abbey, founded 1074, of which the main buildings, particularly the library, are considered to be excellent examples of the Austrian baroque style of the 18th century. The library contains 100,000 volumes and manuscripts. 2,221 (1946).

Ado (ā'dō), Saint. b. c800; d. 875. Archbishop of Vienne, in France (859 et seq.). He was notable among the church leaders of his day for his zeal in reforming the morals of the people and in enforcing church discipline.

Adolf of Nassau (ad'olf, ā'dolf; German, ä'dọlf). [Latinized, Adolphus.] b. c1255; d. in battle at Göllheim, in the Rhine Palatinate, 1298. King of Germany, elected in 1292 and deposed in 1298; son of Walram, count of Nassau. He was chosen to succeed Rudolph I. His position in relation to the nominally subordinate princes who elected him was always unsure, and was made even more precarious by his seizure (1294–96) of Meissen and Thuringia.

Adolf of Nassau. [Full German name, Wilhelm August Karl Friedrich Adolf.] b. July 24, 1817; d. Nov. 17, 1905. Last duke of Nassau. He succeeded to the duchy in 1839. In 1866 he allied himself with Austria (thereby sharing in the Hapsburg defeat in the Austro-Prussian War) and Nassau was annexed to Prussia in the same year. He became grand duke of Luxembourg in November, 1890.

Adolph (ā'dolf), Karl. b. at Vienna, May 19, 1869; d. there, Nov. 22, 1931. Austrian writer of novels on social themes. He is considered noteworthy by some critics of modern Austrian fiction for his naturalistic style.

Adolphe (ä.dolf). [Full title, Adolphe: anecdote trouvée dans les papiers d'un inconnu.] Romance by Benjamin Constant, first published in 1816, which ranks as one of the major novels of the French Romantic period.

Adolphus (ạ.dol'fus). Latinized form of Adolf.

Adolphus, John. b. at London, Aug. 7, 1768; d. there, July 16, 1845. English barrister and historian. He was the author of History of England from the Accession of George III, to the Conclusion of Peace in 1783 (1802), and others.

Adolphus, John Leycester. b. May 11, 1795; d. Dec. 24, 1862. English barrister and man of letters, now remembered as the author of Letters to Richard Heber containing Critical Remarks on the Series of Novels beginning with Waverley (1822), in which he asserted Sir Walter Scott's authorship of the Waverley novels. His argument was based on resemblances between Scott's poems (which were acknowledged by their author) and the novels (which had been published anonymously because Scott considered it beneath his dignity as an official of the law to attach his name to a novel). Adolphus's work made clear beyond all reasonable doubt a fact that had been known or suspected from the first by such good judges of literary style as Jane Austen, and in 1825, in the introduction to one of his later series of novels, Scott himself affirmed what everyone by that time knew: that he was "the sole and unaided author of these Novels of Waverley."

Adolphus Frederick (of England). [Title, Duke of Cambridge.] b. at London, Feb. 24, 1774; d. July 8, 1850. English general and prince of the royal house; youngest son of George III. He was viceroy of Hanover in the period 1816–37.

Adolphus Frederick (of Sweden). [German, Adolf Friedrich; Swedish, Adolf Fredrik.] b. May 14, 1710; d. Feb. 12, 1771. King of Sweden (1751–71) and duke of Holstein-Eutin. He was chosen as heir to the Swedish throne in 1743.

Adomnan (ad'ọm.nạn, ạ.dom'nạn), Saint. See Adamnan, Saint.

Adonai (ad.ō.nā'ī, ạ.dō'nī). Name substituted by the Hebrews in place of the ineffable name YHWH (the tetragrammaton from which, with greater or lesser error, Yahweh and Jehovah were derived) wherever it occurs in the Scriptures. The term "Adonai" means "my lord" in Hebrew.

Adonais (ad.ọ̄.nā'is). Elegiac poem by Percy Bysshe Shelley, commemorating the death of John Keats, published in 1821, and generally considered to rank second only to Lycidas among English elegies.

Adonijah (ad.ọ̄.nī'ja). In the Old Testament, the fourth son of David. He plotted near the close of David's reign to obtain the succession to the throne in place of Solomon. 1 Kings, i.

Adonijah. In the Old Testament, a Levite, a teacher of the law, mentioned in 2 Chron. xvii.

Adonis (ą.don'is, ą.dō'nis). [Modern, Nahr-Ibrahim.] In ancient geography, a small river in Syria, rising in Lebanon, and flowing into the Mediterranean ab. 13 mi. N of what is now Beirut.

Adonis. In ancient Greek mythology, a young man of extraordinary beauty who was loved by Aphrodite. He died, according to the usual account, from the wound of a boar's tusk, received while hunting. Acceding partly to the entreaties of Aphrodite that he be restored to life, Zeus thereupon decreed that he should pass half the year in the upper and half in the lower world. Adonis has been considered by some scholars to have been originally an oriental deity of nature, typifying the withering of nature in winter, and its revival in summer. By way of Asia Minor his cult came first to Greece, then passed to Egypt, and thence finally was brought to Rome. The yearly festival of Adonis in the spring was a special favorite with women. In the Old Testament reference is made to the weeping of the women over Tammuz, the Babylonian equivalent of Adonis (Ezek. viii. 14).

Adoptive Emperors. Collective term for the Roman emperors Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, and Marcus Aurelius; so called because after Nerva, who was elected by the senate on the death of Domitian, each was the adopted son of his predecessor. They are usually considered to have been, as a group, the greatest of the Roman emperors, and the period of their reigns the most beneficent in Roman history (indeed, according to Gibbon, the happiest in the history of the world).

Ador (ą.dôr), Gustav. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 23, 1845; d. there, March 31, 1928. Swiss diplomat, Red Cross official (1910 et seq.), and League of Nations delegate (1920 et seq.). He was president of Switzerland (properly termed, in strict political usage, the Swiss Confederation) in the period 1918–19.

Adoration of the Lamb. [Also: Agnus Dei, Ghent Altarpiece, Mystic Lamb, and Worship of the Lamb.] Large altarpiece in oil on wood begun (1420) by Hubert van Eyck and finished (1432) by his brother Jan for the church of Saint Bavon, at Ghent. Many authorities consider it to be the van Eycks' greatest single work. The central painting depicts the worship of the lamb of God by a company consisting of groups of angels, martyrs, hermits, prophets, apostles, and knights; the rest of the 24 panels show Christ in judgment, Adam and Eve, the Annunciation, and the prophets of the birth of Christ.

Adoration of the Magi. A subject much used by medieval and Renaissance painters, characteristically showing the Virgin and Child in a stable, ruin, or similar setting, with wise men and often kings and other personages, accompanied by their retinues, worshiping and presenting gifts. Noteworthy examples include: 1. A number of paintings (at Berlin, New York, and elsewhere) by the Flemish artist Hieronymus Bosch, with whom it was a favorite subject. 2. Several paintings by the Florentine painter Sandro Botticelli, notably one in tempera (at the Uffizi, in Florence) done originally for the church of Santa Maria Novella, Florence, in which the three kings are portraits of Cosimo, Giuliano, and Giovanni de' Medici and which, according to Vasari, got the artist a commission from Pope Sixtus IV to decorate the Sistine Chapel. 3. A painting (at the Uffizi, in Florence) by the German artist Albrecht Dürer, one of his first important works, showing the influence of both German and Italian masters. 4. A monochrome painting (at the Uffizi, in Florence), one of several unfinished studies by the Florentine artist Leonardo da Vinci for an altarpiece intended for the church of San Donato at Florence. In this work the story is subordinated to an elaborate and masterful exercise in design and perspective. 5. A large triptych, called the Dombild, done for the Cologne Cathedral by the German artist Stephan Lochner. Painted against an interwoven gold background, the Virgin and kings in this work are flanked by Ursula and Gereon, patron saints of Cologne, and their followers. An outstanding example of the work of the early Renaissance in Germany, this altarpiece combines certain medieval features of decorative treatment with a new feeling of plasticity and realism. 6. One of the later paintings (at Buckingham Palace, London) of the Dutch artist Rembrandt. In it the Virgin and Child sit at the right, the Magi kneel before them, kings and old men stand in the background, and a camel caravan is seen in the distance. 7. Several paintings (at New York, Madrid, and elsewhere) by the Flemish artist Peter Paul Rubens, including a large one (at Antwerp) in oil on a wooden panel in which the life-size figures are disposed with a spirit of magnificence and movement typical of Rubens' most admired work. 8. A copper engraving by the German artist Martin Schongauer, containing a rich composition of many figures skilfully treated in its small area. 9. An altarpiece (at Siena) by the Italian painter Sodoma, done for the church of San Agostino at Siena. 10. One of a series by the Venetian painter Tintoretto, done for the Scuola di San Rocco at Venice. In this the problem of making the Child's radiance the only source of light is typical of the experiments this artist set for himself. 11. An early painting (at Madrid) by the Spanish artist Velasquez. 12. A large painting (at Dresden) by the Venetian artist Paolo Veronese, done as a companion-piece for his Marriage at Cana. In this the numerous attendants, camels, and horses of the kings provide occasion for the pageantry and lively composition characteristic of Tintoretto's work.

Adour (ą.dör). [Ancient name, Aturus.] River in SW France which rises in the Pyrenees and flows into the Bay of Biscay ab. 5 mi. W of Bayonne. Length, ab. 200 mi.; navigable for ab. 70 mi.

Adowa (ä'do.wä). See Aduwa.

Ad Pirum (ad pī'rum). In historical geography, a Roman military station in what is now NW Yugoslavia, NE of Trieste, on the road across the Alps into Italy, noted in connection with Theodosius' victory at the Frigidus, 394 A.D.

Adra (ä'drä). [Ancient name, Abdera or Abdara.] Commune in Spain, in the province of Almería, situated on the Mediterranean coast at the mouth of the Almería River, ab. 30 mi. W of the town of Almería. It is a seaport, exporting lead and iron ore. The climate is subtropical, and sugar cane is grown in the vicinity. Originally a Phoenician colony, taken over by the Carthaginians, it was later occupied and settled by the Romans, probably under Tiberius. It was the last Moslem possession in medieval Spain, under Boabdil. 12,443 (1940).

Adrain (ad'rān), Robert. b. at Carrickfergus, Ireland, Sept. 30, 1775; d. at New Brunswick, N.J., Aug. 10, 1843. American mathematician and one-time Irish patriot, notable for his hypothecation of the curve catenaria volvens and two proofs of the exponential law of error which anticipated the demonstration of the same law by the German mathematician Karl Friedrich Gauss (for whom the law is now generally named) by one year. Largely self-educated, Adrain began teaching in Ireland, but emigrated to the U.S. after joining the Irish separatists and being nearly killed in battle with British authorities. He taught at Queen's College (now Rutgers), Columbia, and the University of Pennsylvania, where he became (1828) vice-provost.

Adrammelech or Adramelech (ą.dram'ę.lek). In the Old Testament: 1. An idol worshiped, with the sacrifice of children, by the inhabitants of Sepharvaim with whom Sargon, king of Assyria, colonized Samaria. 2 Kings, xvii. 31. 2. A son of Sennacherib, king of Assyria. With the help of his brother Sharezer he slew his father in the so-called temple of Nisroch, on his return from his expedition against Hezekiah. 2 Kings, xix. 37; Isa. xxxvii. 38. This event is mentioned also in the Babylonian chronicles (cuneiform).

Adrammelech or Adramelech. In angelology, one of the fallen angels.

Adramyti (ad.rą.mit'i). See Edremit.

Adramyttium (ad.rą.mit'i.um). Biblical name of Edremit.

Adramyttium, Gulf of. See Edremit, Gulf of.

Adrano (ä.drä′nō). [Also: Adernò; Latin, Adranum, Hadranum.] Town and commune in SW Italy, on the island of Sicily, in the province of Catania, situated near the Simeto River on the W slope of Mount Etna, ab. 17 mi. NW of Catania. It is the market center of a wine and citrus growing district. The town, which was founded by the Greeks, has Siculian, Greek, and Roman remains. Considerable damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 24,515 (1936); of town, 24,307 (1936).

Adrar (ä.drär′). [Also: Dhar Adrar, Aderar, Aderer.] Mountainous region in the western Sahara desert, within the territory of Mauritania, French West Africa, near the protectorate of Spanish Sahara. The chief place is Atar, which is connected by road with St.-Louis, Senegal.

Adraste (ä.drast). Principal character of Molière's play Le Sicilien, a young French gentleman who succeeds in carrying off Isidore, the beautiful Greek slave of Don Pèdre, by disguising himself as a portrait painter (and hence the second title of the play, L'Amour peintre).

Adrasteia (ad.ras.tī′ạ). In Greek mythology: 1. A name of Nemesis and of Rhea-Cybele. 2. A Cretan nymph, daughter of Melisseus, to whom Rhea entrusted the infant Zeus to be reared in the Dictaean grotto.

Adrastos of Aphrodisias (ạ.dras′tos). fl. at Aphrodisias, in Caria, about the beginning of the 2nd century B.C. Greek philosopher who wrote commentaries on Aristotle (ethics, logic, physics), on Theophrastos (ethics), and on Plato's Timaeos. His commentary on the Timaeos dealt with mathematical and astronomical questions. He also wrote a treatise upon the order of the Aristotelian writings.

Adrastus (ạ.dras′tus). [Also, Adrastos (-tos).] In Greek legend, a king of Argos, leader and only survivor of the original expedition of the "Seven against Thebes." Some ten years later he led the sons of the Seven in a successful campaign to avenge their fathers, and on this occasion was able to capture Thebes. He was worshiped as a hero in several places, among them Megara.

Adrea (ā′drē.ạ). Tragedy by David Belasco and John Luther Long, produced in 1904.

Adria (ā′dri.ạ). In ancient geography, the sea now called the Adriatic, and also (about the first century A.D.) that part of the Mediterranean which lies between Crete and Sicily.

Adria (ä′drē.ä). [Also: Adria Veneta (ve.nā′tä); ancient names, Atria, Hadria, Hatria.] Town and commune in NE Italy, in the province of Rovigo, situated on an island in the delta of the Po River, on the Bianco Canal between the Adige and the Po Grande rivers, ab. 16 mi. SW of Venice. The town, now far inland, was in ancient times situated much nearer the Adriatic Sea, which derived its name from the name of the town. It was successively an Etruscan, Greek, and Roman town, the remains of which have been excavated, and some of which are in the civic museum. The Duomo (cathedral) and the Church of Santa Maria della Tomba were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 32,762 (1936); of town, 9,435 (1936).

Adrian (ā′dri.ạn). City in S Lower Michigan, on the Raisin River, ab. 55 mi. SW of Detroit, county seat of Lenawee County: center of a manufacturing and agricultural area. It is the seat of Siena Heights College and Adrian College. 18,393 (1950).

Adrian. A lord in Shakespeare's The Tempest.

Adrian I. [Also, Hadrian.] d. 795. Pope from 772 to 795. He summoned (773) Charlemagne to quell the Lombard king, Desiderius, who was threatening Rome, and presided over and accepted the decree of the second Nicaean Council (787) upholding the veneration of images and anathematizing iconoclasts. His firm and constructive rule included restoration of the ancient Roman aqueducts and maintenance of close ties with Charlemagne.

Adrian II. [Also, Hadrian.] Pope from 867 to 872. He passed a sentence of deposition on Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, which was confirmed at the fourth Council of Constantinople (869–870).

Adrian III, Saint. [Also, Hadrian.] Pope from 884 to 885.

Adrian IV. [Also: Hadrian; original name, Nichola Breakspear.] b. at Langley, near St. Albans, in Hertfordshire, England, before 1100; d. at Anagni, Italy, 1159. Pope from 1154 to 1159, the only Englishman ever to occupy the papal chair. Created cardinal-bishop of Albano (1146) by Pope Eugenius III, he was legate to Denmark and Norway (1152–54). As pope, he is said to have bestowed (c1156) Irish sovereignty on Henry II of England (this point has long been a center of controversy among historians, but it is now generally agreed that it is true and that the documents supporting it are genuine). He also opened the great conflict between the papacy and the Hohenstaufens by his firm assertion of papal prerogatives against the emperor Frederick I (Frederick Barbarossa).

Adrian V. [Also: Hadrian; original name, Ottoboni Fiesco.] Pope in 1276. A native of Genoa, he lived only five weeks after his accession.

Adrian VI. [Also, Hadrian.] b. at Utrecht, 1459; d. 1523. Pope from 1522 to 1523. He studied at the University of Louvain, of which he later became vice-chancellor, and was chosen by the emperor Maximilian to tutor his grandson, the archduke Charles (who was later to be the emperor Charles V). Bishop of Tortosa and grand inquisitor of Aragon (1516), he was created a cardinal by Leo X (1517), and was for a short time regent of Spain (1520). He attempted as Pope to check the Reformation and the Turkish attack on Rhodes, but failed in both.

Adrian, Edgar Douglas. b. Nov. 30, 1889—. British physiologist, winner of the Nobel Prize in medicine (1932) for his work with Sir Charles Scott Sherrington in the field of nerve impulses. He is the author of The Basis of Sensation (1928), The Mechanism of Nervous Action (1932), and numerous technical articles.

Adriana (ā.dri.ā′nạ). Character in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors; the wife of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Adriana Lecouvreur (ä.drē.ä′nä lẹ.kö.vrêr′). [French, Adrienne Lecouvreur.] Opera by Francesco Cilea, with words based on a play by Augustin Eugène Scribe and Gabriel Jean Baptiste Ernest Wilfrid Legouvé. It was first produced at Milan in 1902.

Adrian de Castello (ā′dri.ạn dẹ kas.tel′ō). [Also, Adrian de Corneto (dē kôr.net′ō).] b. at Corneto, Tuscany, Italy, c1460; d. c1521. Italian ecclesiastic and scholar, nuncio of Pope Innocent VIII in Scotland in 1488, agent at Rome of Henry VII of England, collector of Peter's pence in England, and papal prothonotary. He obtained in 1492 the prebend of Ealdland in Saint Paul's Cathedral, and the rectory of Saint Dunstan-in-the-East, but returned to Rome on the death of Innocent VIII. He was made bishop of Hereford in 1502, bishop of Bath and Wells in 1504, and cardinal in 1503. In 1517 he was implicated in the conspiracy of Cardinals Petrucci, De Sauli, and Riario to poison Pope Leo X, and was deprived of his cardinalate (1518) and of his dignities in England. He was probably assassinated. He wrote Venatio, a poem (1505), De Vera Philosophia (1507), De Sermone Latino et modo Latine Loquendi (1513), and others.

Adriani (ä.drē.ä′nē), Giovanni Battista. b. at Florence, 1513; d. 1579. Florentine statesman and historian. With the patronage of Cosimo de' Medici, he wrote a useful history of the period 1536–74 (published 1583; modern edition, 1872).

Adrianople (ā″dri.ạn.ō′pl). Former name of Edirne.

Adrianople, Battle of. Name given to: 1. The victory of the Visigoths over the emperor Valens in 378 A.D. 2. The victory of the Bulgarians over the Byzantines in 551 A.D.

Adrianople, Peace or Treaty of. Treaty between Russia and Turkey, signed at Adrianople (now Edirne), on Sept. 14, 1829. By its terms, Turkey ceded to Russia important fortresses and districts on the NE coast of the Black Sea; granted to Russian subjects freedom of trade in Turkey, and freedom of navigation in the Black Sea, on the Danube, and through the Dardanelles; confirmed and extended the protectorate exercised by the czar over the Danubian principalities; gave Russia control of a part of the left bank of the lower Danube, and of one of the mouths of that river; and recognized the independence of Greece.

Adrianopolis (ā″dri.ạn.op′ō.lis). A Latin name of Edirne, city.

Adriatic Sea (ā.dri.at'ik, ad.ri.at'ik). [Italian, Mare Adriatico (mä'rā ä.drē.ä'tē.kō); Latin, Adria, Mare Adriaticum.] That part of the Mediterranean Sea which lies between Italy on the W and NW, and Yugoslavia and Albania on the E, and is connected with the Ionian Sea by the Strait of Otranto. Its chief arms are the Gulfs of Manfredonia, Venice, Trieste, and Quarnero (Veliki Kvarner), and its largest tributaries are the rivers Po and Adige. Length, ab. 500 mi.; area, ab. 51,000 sq. mi.; average depth, ab. 795 ft.; greatest known depth, 4,590 ft.

Adrienne Lecouvreur (ä.drē.en lẹ.kö.vrėr). French prose drama in five acts, by Augustin Eugène Scribe and Gabriel Jean Baptiste Ernest Wilfrid Legouvé, first presented on April 14, 1849.

Adrienne Lecouvreur. French title of the opera Adriana Lecouvreur.

Adrienne Toner (ā'dri.en tō'nėr). Novel by Anne Douglas Sedgwick, published in 1922.

Adua (ä'dö.ä). Italian name of Aduwa.

Aduatici (ad.ū.at'i.sī) or Aduatuci (-ū.sī). Tribe in Belgic Gaul, living W of what is now the Meuse River. They are considered by some authorities to have been descendants of the Cimbri and Teutones, and may therefore have been either Celtic or Germanic in their ethnic origin. In 57 B.C. they were suspected (with the other Belgic tribes) of planning a general attack on the Romans, and were compelled by Julius Caesar to lay down their arms. To avoid possible further difficulties with them, Caesar thereupon sold the entire tribe into slavery.

Adula (ä'dö.lä). [German, Rheinwaldgebirge.] Group of Alps in the W part of the canton of Graubünden, Switzerland, the source of the Hinter Rhein, a tributary of the river Rhine. The highest point is the Rheinwaldhorn (ab. 11,174 ft.).

Adulateur (ad'ū.lā.tėr), The. Satirical play by Mercy Otis Warren, published at Boston in 1773. It attacks Thomas Hutchinson, the Boston merchant who was until 1774 royal governor of Massachusetts. Hutchinson's acceptance of the Stamp Act in 1765, and continuing support thereafter of British policy, had infuriated the population of Boston. However, as is implied by the title of the play, many people were doubly offended by the fact that official support for this policy had come from a fellow Bostonian, who therefore seemed to them clearly to be acting as a toady of the British crown.

Adulis (ad'ū.lis). See under Zula.

Adullam (ạ.dul'ạm). City and "cave" (scribal error for "stronghold") in the territory of Judah in the low country; originally a Canaanite city. It was used by David as a hiding place. It has been identified with various places in modern geography, the most usual one being Aid-el-ma, ab. 10 mi. NE of Hebron. A traditional, and highly conjectural, identification with Khareitun, near Bethlehem, is now generally discounted by scholars.

Adullam, Cave of. In the Old Testament, the stronghold to which David withdrew from Gath (see immediately above). 1 Sam. xxii.

Adullamites (ạ.dul'ạm.īts). Group of English Liberals who in 1866 withdrew from their party and supported the Conservatives after the introduction by Lord John Russell and Gladstone of a bill to broaden the elective franchise. Their action, which was bitterly attacked by their former colleagues in the Liberal Party, brought them their name when they were likened by John Bright to the malcontents who took refuge with David in the Cave of Adullam, for which reason they were often thereafter referred to collectively as "The Cave of Adullam" or simply "The Cave." The term is said to have been used earlier (1864) by President Lincoln to characterize a somewhat similar situation in U.S. politics.

Aduwa (ä'du.wä). [Also: Adowa; Italian, Adua.] Town in NE Ethiopia, in Tigré province, just inside the old Eritrean frontier. It was here that Ethiopian forces under Menelik II defeated the Italians in 1896 and brought world attention to their country for the first time in modern history. Pop. ab. 5,000.

Advaita (ạ.dvī'tạ). See under Chaitanya.

Advance. Vessel used in the 1850's by the American Elisha Kane, in his search through the Arctic regions for the lost expedition of Sir John Franklin.

Advent. Christian religious season commemorating the coming of Christ. It encompasses the four Sundays before Christmas and begins on the Sunday closest to Saint Andrew's Day (Nov. 30). In the Roman Catholic Church the season is observed by fasting; most Protestant groups observe it as a liturgical season only.

Adventure. Sloop constructed (1791–92) on Nootka Sound, on the coast of Vancouver Island, by two Boston captains, John Kendrick and Asa Gray, who were members of a trading and exploring party in the Northwest region. The vessel was the first American sailing craft built on the Pacific coast.

Adventure. Ship used by the pirate captain, William Kidd.

Adventure. Ship in which Captain Philip Parker King (associated with Robert Fitzroy, commander of the Beagle) explored the coasts of South America in the period 1826–30.

Adventures of Alonso (ạ.lon'zō). Romance (1775) attributed to Thomas Atwood Digges.

Adventures of an Atom, The. Political satire by Tobias Smollett, published in 1769. It pretended to be about Japan, but was recognized by all its readers as being actually a coarse and virulent satire on important political issues and persons in the early part of the reign of George III.

Adventures of a Young Man. Novel by John Dos Passos, published in 1939, portraying the disillusionment of a too hasty adherent of Communism.

Adventures of Brown, Jones, and Robinson, The. See Brown, Jones, and Robinson, The Adventures of.

Adventures of Captain Bonneville, The. Account by Washington Irving, published in 1837, of the adventures in the West of a U.S. army officer of this name. It was this officer (whose full name was Benjamin Louis Eulalie de Bonneville) after whom the Bonneville Dam was later named.

Adventures of Cléomadès (klā.o.mä.des'). See Cléomadès, Adventures of.

Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, The. See Huckleberry Finn, The Adventures of.

Adventures of Philip (fil'ip). Novel by W. M. Thackeray, published in 1862. It was the last of Thackeray's novels to be published in his lifetime, and is considered by most critics to reflect a waning of the novelist's creative power.

Adventures of Robin Day (rob'in dā), The. Picaresque novel (1839) by Robert Montgomery Bird.

Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, The. See under Sherlock Holmes.

Adventures of Tom Sawyer, The. See Tom Sawyer, The Adventures of.

Advertisements for the Unexperienced Planters of New England, or Anywhere. Work by Captain John Smith (1580–1631) dealing with colonial settlement, and based on his own experiences (1606 et seq.) in the Virginia colony. It was published in 1631.

Advice to a Raven in Russia. Last poem written by Joel Barlow, published posthumously in 1843. It was a bitter attack upon Napoleon's allegedly tyrannical tactics in Russia.

Advice to the Privileged Orders. Tract by Joel Barlow, published in 1792. Most historians consider that it reflects Barlow's political beliefs more clearly than any of his other works, and see in it clear evidence of an influence by Thomas Paine, who had become Barlow's friend during the 1780's. Written in France, within the atmosphere of equalitarianism produced by the early phases of the French Revolution, it urges that the state should be representative of all the people, rather than of a particular class or group, and that it should also be finally responsible for the welfare of each individual it represents.

Adwick-le-Street (ad'ik.lẹ.strēt'). Urban district in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 5 mi. NW of Doncaster, ab. 160 mi. NW of London by rail. 18,808 (1951).

Ady (ô'dē), Endre. [English, Andrew Ady.] b. at Érdmindszent, Hungary, Nov. 22, 1877; d. at Budapest, Jan. 27, 1919. Hungarian poet, leader in his country of the modernist symbolist movement. He is generally regarded as the greatest Hungarian poet of the 20th century. His career began with the publication of a volume Uj versek (New Poems, 1906), which caused a split in the entire modern Hungarian literary world. Although he spent a great part of his life at Paris, his verse reflects a deep love for his native country. He was the author also of seven volumes in prose.

Adye (ā'di), Sir John Miller. b. at Sevenoaks, Kent, Nov. 1, 1819; d. Aug. 26, 1900. English general and military writer. He was the author of Recollections of a Military Life (1895), and others.

Adyge (ä.di.gā'). [Also: Adighe, Adygei, Adyghe.] A people of the NW slopes of the Caucasus Mountains, near Krasnodar.

Adyge. [Also: Adighe, Adygei.] Autonomous oblast (region) of Krasnodar Territory, Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, U.S.S.R., in the foothills of the Caucasus Mountains. The occupations of the people have been agriculture, herding, and (in modest quantities) lumbering. However, the discovery in comparatively recent years of oil has given the region a position of vital importance in the industrial economy of Russia, and has made Maikop, the chief city of the oblast, an important oil center. Of the inhabitants today, less than half belong to the Circassian tribe known as the Adyge; the remainder of the population is divided between people of Russian stock and a slightly smaller number of Ukrainians. Capital, Maikop; area, ab. 1,700 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 250,000 (est. 1941), but some recent estimates have ranged upwards of 300,000.

Adzhar Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic (ą.jär', ä'jär). [Also: Adjar; often called Adzharia.] Autonomous republic in the SW Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic, in the U.S.S.R. A great part of the republic is in the coastal area of the Black Sea, and in its S part it touches on the border of Turkey. In the level areas along the coast the climate is subtropical, which has permitted the republic to become the largest Russian tea-producing area; considerable quantities of rice, cotton, and Indian corn are also grown. Tobacco is grown in the central portion of the republic, and livestock breeding is important in the mountains. However, the most significant occupation of the people is not agriculture, but oil production, refining, and distribution; Batum, the chief city of the republic, has been for many years one of the world's great oil centers. Because of this, the republic as a whole, and Batum in particular, comprised a chief objective of the Germans in World War II. In August, 1942, the Germans occupied a great part of the area, but it was liberated by the Russians approximately six months later in the great offensive of early 1943. Capital, Batum; area, ab. 1,080 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 170,000 (est. 1941), but more recent estimates have ranged as high as 200,000.

Æ. See Russell, George William.

Aeacus (ē'ą.kus). In Greek mythology, the son of Zeus and Aegina, renowned for his justice, and made a judge in the lower world. He was a reputed grandfather of Achilles.

Aedhan (ad'han), Saint. See Aidan, Saint.

Aëdon (ā.ē'don). In Greek legend, a daughter of Pandareus of Ephesus. According to Homer she was the wife of Zethus, king of Thebes, and the mother of Itylus. Inspired by envy of Niobe, the wife of her brother Amphion, who had six sons and six daughters, she formed the design of killing Niobe's eldest son, but by mistake destroyed her own son Itylus. To relieve her grief she was changed by Zeus into a nightingale.

Aedua (ed'ū.ą, ē'dū.ą). A Latin name of Autun.

Aedui (ed'ū.ī). [Also: Haedui, Hedui.] Celtic people in C Gaul, W of the Sequani between what are now the Saône and the Loire rivers. Their capital was Bibracte (the Roman Augustodunum, and the modern French Autun). They were allies of the Romans, but joined in the revolt of 52 B.C.

AEF. See American Expeditionary Forces.

Aegadian Isles (ē.gā'di.ąn) or Aegates (ē.gā'tēz). Ancient names of the Egadi Islands.

Aegae (ē'jē). An ancient name of Edessa.

Aegaeon (ē.jē'on). See Briareus.

Aegaleos (ē.gā'lē.os), Mount. In ancient geography, a mountain in W Attica, W of Athens. It ended in a promontory (Amphiale), opposite the island of Salamis, from which Xerxes is said to have witnessed (480 B.C.) the defeat of his forces by the Greeks in the Battle of Salamis. Elevation, ab. 1,534 ft.

Aegean Islands (ē.jē'ąn). [Modern Greek, Nēsoi Aigaiou.] In modern political geography, a district of E Greece. It includes the nomoi (departments) of Chios, Lesbos, Lemnos, and Samos. Area, 1,506 sq. mi.; pop. 311,751 (1940).

Aegean Sea. [Greek, Aigaion Pelagos; Latin, Mare Aegaeum.] Name given to that part of the Mediterranean Sea which lies between Greece on the W and N, and Turkey on the E. It communicates with the Sea of Marmara, and thence with the Black Sea, by the strait of the Dardanelles. It contains many islands, as Aegina, Euboea, the Cyclades, the Sporades, Samos, Chios, Lesbos, Samothrace, Thasos, and others. Its chief arms are the Gulf of Nauplia, the Gulf of Aegina (Saronic Gulf), the Channels of Evripos and Talanta, and the Gulfs of Lamia, Volos, Salonika, Cassandra, Monte Santo, Contessa, Saros, Edremit, İzmir, Kuşadasi (Scala Nuova), Mendelia, and Kos. Its chief tributaries are the Salembria, Vardar, Strymon, Maritsa, Gediz, and Menderes rivers. Length, ab. 400 mi.; greatest width, over 200 mi.; area, ab. 69,000 sq. mi.; average depth, 1,910 ft.

Aegeon (ē.jē'on). Character in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors; a merchant of Syracuse and the father of the Antipholus twins.

Aegeri (ā'gę.rē). See Ägeri.

Aegeus (ē'jē.us, -jōs). In Greek legend, the father of Theseus, and king of Athens. He is said to have drowned himself in what is now called the Aegean Sea (whence, according to one tradition, its name) out of grief at the supposed killing of his son by the Minotaur.

Aegialus (ē.jī'ą.lus) or Aegialeia (ē"ji.ą.lē'ą). Original name of the ancient district of Achaea, in the Peloponnesus.

Aegidi (ā.gē'dē), Ludwig Karl. b. at Tilsit, in East Prussia, April 10, 1825; d. at Berlin, Nov. 19, 1901. German jurist, publicist, and politician. He was professor of jurisprudence at Bonn (1868 et seq.) and at Berlin (1877 et seq.).

Aegidia (ē.jid'i.ą). An ancient name of Capodistria.

Aegidius (ē.jid'i.us). fl. second half of the 5th century. Roman commander in Gaul under the emperor Majorian (457–461). After the death of the emperor he is said to have maintained an independent sovereignty, possibly with the title of king, at what is now Soissons. He was voluntarily chosen king of the Franks during the temporary exile of the unpopular Childeric I, father of Clovis.

Aegidius a Columnis (ā kō.lum'nis). b. probably at Rome c1247; d. 1316. Scholastic philosopher and general of the Augustine order, surnamed "Doctor Fundatissimus."

Aegidius of Assisi (ą.sē'zē). [Also, Blessed Giles.] d. 1262. Friar, philosopher, and companion of Saint Francis of Assisi, by whom he was called "the Knight of our Round Table." His aphorisms were collected and printed as the Dicta after his death; an English translation of this was made by Paschal Robinson under the title The Golden Words of the Blessed Brother Giles (1906).

Aegina (ē.jī'ną). [Modern Greek: Aigina, Aiyina.] Island in SE Greece, in the Aegean Sea, in the Gulf of Aegina, in the nomos (department) of Attica and Boeotia, ab. 22 mi. SW of Athens. It was conquered and colonized in very ancient times by the Dorians, and was an important Greek commercial state and center of art in the 6th and 5th centuries B.C. In 459 B.C. it was defeated for the first time by Athens, and some three decades later (431 B.C.) relegated to a position of comparative insignificance when the Athenians carried out a mass deportation of its population. In the 12th century A.D. it achieved brief notoriety as a nest of pirates, and partly as a result of their suppression it later came under the control of Venice. It was invaded and sacked in 1537 by the Algerian pirate Khair ad-Din Barbarossa. It was under Turkish rule for several centuries before the Greek war for independence in the early 19th century. Length, 9 mi.; pop. 10,762 (1940).

Aegina. [Also: Aiyina, Aigina.] Town in SE Greece, in the nomos (department) of Attica and Boeotia, the capital of the island of Aegina, situated on the W coast: center of the island's sponge-fishing industry. Aegina was the seat of the Greek government after its defeat by the Turks in 1826. Pop. 5,814 (1940).

Aegina. [Also, Aigina.] In Greek mythology, a river nymph, the daughter of Asopus, the river-god, and mother of Aeacus, a reputed grandfather of Achilles. She was beloved by Zeus, and carried by him to the island of Aegina (whence, according to one tradition, its name).

Aegina, Gulf of. [Also: Saronic Gulf; Greek, Saronikós Kólpos; Latin, Saronicus Sinus.] Arm of the Aegean Sea, lying SW of Attica and NE of Argolis, Greece. It contains the islands of Salamis and Aegina. Length, ab. 50 mi.

Aeginetan Marbles (ej.i.nē′tạn). Name given to an important collection of ancient Greek sculptures from the temple of Athena at Aegina, now the property of a museum at Munich. Discovered in 1811, these sculptures consist for the most part of the remains of the series of statues from both pediments of the temple. Five figures survive from the eastern pediment, and 10 from the western, which is probably complete. Both groups represent the exploits of Greek heroes in the Trojan War, with Athena as the central figure.

Aegion (ē′ji.on). See Aigion.

Aegipan (ē′ji.pan). In Greek mythology, a name sometimes used for the goat Pan. In some forms of the myth he is identical with Pan, and in others different from him. He is called the son of Zeus and Aega, Pan's wife, and also the father of Pan.

Aegir (ā′gir, ē′jir). [Also: Gymir; Old Norse, Hlér.] In Old Norse mythology, the god of the ocean. He was the principal water-demon and by race a giant, but personifies the more propitious characteristics of the sea. His wife is Ran.

Aegisthus (ẹ.jis′thus). In Greek legend, a son of Thyestes and cousin of Agamemnon. According to the older accounts, he seduced Clytemnestra, and procured the murder of Agamemnon, although in the Agamemnon of Aeschylus it is Clytemnestra, incited to the act by Aegisthus, who commits the murder.

Aegium (ē′ji.um). See Aigion.

Aeglamour (ē′glạ.mör). The "Sad Shepherd" in Ben Jonson's play of that name. He grieves at the reported drowning of the shepherdess Earine.

Aegle (eg′lē). In Greek mythology: 1. A naiad, mother of the Graces. 2. One of the Hesperides.

Aegospotami (ē.gọs.pot′ạ.mī). [Also, Aegospotamos (-mos).] In ancient geography, a small river and a town in that part of ancient Thrace known as the Chersonesus Thracica (geographically identical with what is now called the Gallipoli Peninsula of Turkey in Europe). The area of the river's mouth is noted as the scene of the decisive naval victory of the Spartans under Lysander over the Athenians, in 405 B.C., which led to the close of the Peloponnesian War.

Aegusa (ẹ.gū′sạ). A Latin name of Favignana.

Aegydius (ẹ.jid′i.us), Saint. See Saint Giles.

Aegyptus (ẹ.jip′tus). In Greek mythology, a son of Belus and twin brother of Danaüs. He received from Belus the sovereignty of Arabia and conquered Egypt. It is from his name, by one tradition, that the name "Egypt" is derived.

Aegyptus. Latin name of Egypt.

Aehrenthal (ā′rẹn.täl), Alois Lexa, Count von. b. in Bohemia, 1854; d. Feb. 17, 1912. Austro-Hungarian diplomat, notable as the foreign minister (1906–12) of his country during most of the international crises that set the stage for World War I. During his earlier career he was ambassador to Rumania (1895) and to Russia (1899). As foreign minister, he maneuvered the annexation of Bosnia-Hercegovina (1908) after the Buchlau conference with Russia, guided Austria through the Moroccan crisis, the Algeciras conference, and the First Balkan War, and tightened the Triple Alliance of Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Italy.

Aeken (ā′kẹn), van. See Bosch, Hieronymus.

Aelana (ẹ.lā′nạ). An ancient name of Aqaba.

Aelen (ā′lẹn). German name of Aigle.

Ælfheah (alf′he″ạch), Saint. [Also: Alphege, Elphege.] b. 954; d. 1012. Anglo-Saxon bishop of Winchester (984) and archbishop of Canterbury (1006). He obtained a peace promise from the Danes in 994, but was later (1011) captured by them and slain (1012).

Ælfred (al′frẹd). See Alfred, king of England.

Ælfric (al′frik). [Called Grammaticus.] b. c955; d. c1020. Anglo-Saxon abbot, author of homilies (edited by Benjamin Thorpe and published 1844–46), a Latin grammar and glossary, a treatise on the Old and New Testaments, a volume of lives of the saints, and others. He was abbot of Cernel (now Cerne Abbas, in Dorsetshire), and later of Eynsham (in what is now Oxfordshire). The clarity and fluency of his prose has led some authorities to class it as the best in Anglo-Saxon literature.

Ælfthryth (alf′thrith). See Elfrida.

Aelia (ē′li.ạ) or Aelia Capitolina (kap″i.tọ.lī′nạ). See under Jerusalem, city.

Aelia gens (ē′li.ạ jenz). In ancient Rome, a plebeian clan or house whose family names and surnames were Bala, Catus, Gallus, Gracilis, Lamia, Ligur, Paetus, Sejanus, Staienus, Stilo, and Tubero. To this gens belonged the emperor Hadrian and through him, by adoption, several (Antonius Pius, Marcus Aurelius, and Lucius Aurelius Verus) of the so-called Antonine emperors.

Aelianus (ē.li.ā′nus), Claudius. [Called Aelian (ē′li.ạn).] b. at Praeneste, in Latium; d. probably after 222. Roman rhetorician. He was the author of Variae historiae, De natura animalium, and others. His works, most of which were written originally in Greek, cover a wide range of animal curiosa and human anecdote.

Aelianus Tacticus (tak′ti.kus). [Sometimes called Aelian (ē′li.ạn).] fl. c100 A.D. Greek military historian and writer, residing at Rome. He was the author of a work in Greek on the military tactics of the Greeks and the constitution of a Roman army.

Aelius Donatus (ē′li.us dọ.nā′tus). See Donatus, Aelius.

Aelius Herodianus (hẹ.rō.di.ā′nus). See Herodianus, Aelius.

Aelius Paetus (pē′tus), Sextus. fl. in the 2nd century B.C. Roman jurist, consul in 198, censor in 193. Author of the Tripartita (or Jus Aelianum) containing a recension of the Twelve Tables (450 B.C.) with commentary.

Ælla (al′ạ). d. 588. King of the Deirans from 559 to 588, the son of Iffa, ealdorman of the Deirans. He cast off the supremacy of the Bernicians at the death of Ida.

Aello (ā.el′ō). In Greek mythology, one of the Harpies.

Aelst (älst). See Aalst.

Aelst, Willem van. b. at Delft, in the Netherlands, 1620; d. at Amsterdam, 1679. Dutch painter, known particularly for his pictures of flowers and fruit.

Aemilia (ẹ.mil′i.ạ). In the fourth book of Spenser's Faerie Queene, a lovely lady "rapt by greedie lust," into the power of a cannibal giant who held Amoret also captive. She was saved by Belphoebe.

Aemilia. In Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, the wife of Aegeon, acting as the abbess of Ephesus.

Aemilia. Ancient name of Emilia-Romagna.

Aemilia gens (ẹ.mil′i.ạ jenz). One of the most ancient patrician houses at Rome, probably of Sabine origin, which regarded as its ancestor Mamercus, called Aemilius on account of his persuasive language, who was variously represented as the son of Pythagoras, or of Numa, or as the descendant of Ascanius. The first member of the gens who obtained the consulship was L. Aemilius Mamercus (in 484 B.C.). Its family names are Barbula, Buca, Lepidus, Mamercus or Mamercinus, Papus, Paulus, Regillus, and Scaurus.

Aemilian Way (ẹ.mil′i.ạn). See Via Aemilia.

Aemilius (ẹ.mil′i.us). In Titus Andronicus, attributed to Shakespeare, a noble Roman.

Aenaria (ẹ.nār′i.ạ). An ancient name of Ischia.

Aeneas (ẹ.nē′ạs). In classical legend, a Trojan prince, son of Anchises, king of Dardanus, and Aphrodite. The accounts of his life and achievements vary considerably, depending on the period of their writing. According to Homer, having been robbed of his cattle by Achilles, he took sides, with his Dardanians, against the Greeks, played an important part in the Trojan War, and after the sack of Troy, and the extinction of the house of Priam, reigned (as did also his descendants) in Troas (or the Troad, as the territory in the vicinity of Troy was known). In post-Homeric accounts he is sometimes represented as absent from the sack of Troy, sometimes as seeking refuge, on the admonition of Aphrodite, on Mount Ida, and carrying his father thither on his shoulders (with other variations), and as settling in the peninsula of Pallene, or in the Arcadian Orchomenos. Most of the accounts, however (including that in Vergil's Aeneid), represent him as landing in Italy, and becoming the ancestral hero of the Romans.

Aeneas, Dido and. See Dido and Aeneas.

Aeneas Tacticus (tak'ti.kus). fl. c360 B.C. Greek writer on tactics. He was an Arcadian or, at any rate, Peloponnesian, who had seen service in the Aegean and in Asia Minor. In the fragment that has come down to us he explains how to conduct defensive warfare and how to resist a siege (Commentarius poliorceticus). This book was very probably composed in 357–356 B.C. The hydraulic telegraph invented by Aeneas was described by Polybios. Aeneas also explains a system of cryptography.

Aeneid (ē.nē'id). [Also, Aeneis.] Epic poem, in 12 books, by Vergil, recounting one version of the adventures of Aeneas after the fall of Troy, founded on the Roman tradition that Aeneas settled in Latium and became the ancestral hero of the Roman people. The hero, driven by a storm onto the coast of Africa, is hospitably received by Dido, queen of Carthage, to whom he relates the fall of Troy and his wanderings. An attachment between them is broken by the departure of Aeneas in obedience to the will of the gods, and the suicide of Dido follows. After a visit to Sicily, Aeneas lands at Cumae in Italy. In a descent to the infernal regions he sees his father, Anchises, and has a prophetic vision of the glorious destiny of his race as well as of the future heroes of Rome. He marries Lavinia, daughter of Latinus, king of the Latini, and a contest with Turnus, king of the Rutuli, the rejected suitor, follows, in which Turnus is slain. The poem is a glorification of Rome and of the emperor Augustus, who, as a member of the Julian gens, traced his descent from Julus (sometimes identified with Ascanius), the grandson of Aeneas. The poem was completed, but not finally corrected, at the death of the author in 19 B.C. Among the more noteworthy English translations of the poem into English are those by Gavin Douglas (in rhyme, 1512–13), by Henry Howard, called by courtesy "the earl of Surrey" (whose translation in the middle of the 16th century is believed to mark the first appearance of blank verse in English poetry), by John Dryden (1697), and by William Morris (a translation notable more for the fact that it was done (1876) by Morris than for its quality).

Aenesidemus (ē.nes.i.dē'mus). b. at Cnossus, on the island of Crete; fl. 1st century B.C. Greek skeptical philosopher, notable for his teaching at Alexandria, in Egypt. He was the author of Pyrrhonian Principles and others.

Aenos (ē'nos). An ancient name of Enez.

Aenus (ē'nus). An ancient name of Enez.

Aenus. A Latin name of the Inn.

Aeoliae Insulae (ē.ō'li.ē in'sụ.lē). A Latin name of the Lipari Islands.

Aeolian Hall (ē.ō'li.ạn). London concert hall opened in 1904: the remodeled Grosvenor Gallery.

Aeolian Islands. Ancient name of the Lipari Islands.

Aeolians (ē.ō'li.ạnz). [Also: Aeoles (ē.ō'lēz), Aeoli (-lī).] One of the four great divisions of the ancient Greeks (the Achaeans, Dorians, and Ionians were the other three).

Aeolis (ē'ọ.lis). [Also, Aeolia (ē.ō'li.ạ).] In ancient geography, originally the W coast of Asia Minor between the river Hermus and Lectum, settled by Aeolians. Later it extended along Troas (the Aegean coastal territory in the vicinity of the ancient city of Troy).

Aeolus (ē'ọ.lus, ē.ō'lus). In Greek mythology: 1. The god of the winds, which he confined in a cavern. 2. The son of Hellen, and the eponymic founder of the division of the ancient Greek people known as the Aeolians.

Aepinus (ā.pē'nûs), Franz Maria Ulrich Theodor. [Original surname, Hoch.] b. at Rostock, on the Baltic Sea, 1724; d. at Dorpat (now Tartu, Estonia), 1802. German physicist, author of Tentamen theoriae electricitatis et magnetismi (1759), and others. He derived his name of "Aepinus" (as did Johann Aepinus, immediately following) by translating his original surname (which means "high" in German) into its Greek equivalent, which he then Latinized.

Aepinus, Johann. [Original surname, Hoch.] b. at Ziesar, Prussia, 1499; d. at Hamburg, May 13, 1553. German Protestant theologian, an opponent of Melanchthon, and author of a work entitled De Purgatorio.

Aequi (ē'kwī). Tribe in Latium, E of Rome and N of the Hernici, often allied with the Volscians and at war with the Romans. They were subdued at the end of the second Samnite war in 304 B.C.

Aërians (ā.ē'ri.ạnz). Reformist Arian sect which developed in Pontus, Asia Minor, during the 4th century under Aërius. Held by some scholars to have been a forerunner of modern Presbyterianism, the sect maintained that a presbyter or elder has equal authority with a bishop, repudiated prayers for the dead, and rejected church fasts.

Aërius (ā.ē'ri.us). fl. middle of the 4th century A.D. Early Christian leader, notable as a presbyter at Sebastia, in Pontus, Asia Minor. He was the founder of the sect known, from him, as Aërians.

Ærø (er'ė''). [Also: Aarö, Arröe.] Island of Denmark in the Little Belt, S of Fyn island, in the amt (county) of Svendborg. Length, 15 mi.; area, 33 sq. mi.; pop. 10,723 (1945).

Aerschot (är'sċhôt). [Also: Aarschot, Arschot.] Town in C Belgium, in the province of Brabant, situated on the Demer River, ab. 23 mi. NE of Brussels. At the center of an agricultural district, it has a considerable grain trade. During World War I it was the scene of severe fighting between the Belgians and Germans in August-September, 1914. In World War II the convent building of the lay order known as the Beguines was gutted and partly destroyed. 10,589 (1947).

Aertszen or Aertsen (ärt'sẹn), Pieter. [Also, Aartsen.] b. at Amsterdam, c1507; d. 1573. Dutch painter, noted for his realistic portrayal of furniture, kitchen utensils, and other simple furnishings of the peasant cottages which he used as background material in his work. An excellent example of his style is provided by a small Crucifixion in the Antwerp Museum.

Aescanes (es'kạ.nēz). Character in Shakespeare's Pericles; a lord of Tyre.

Aeschines (es'ki.nēs). fl. latter half of 5th century B.C. Athenian philosopher, a contemporary and disciple of Socrates. The three extant dialogues ascribed to him are now considered to be spurious.

Aeschines. b. 389 B.C.; d. on the island of Samos, in the Aegean Sea, 314 B.C. Athenian orator and political antagonist of Demosthenes, twice (347–346 B.C.) an envoy to Philip of Macedon. At one time anti-Macedonian, he later advocated a pro-Macedonian policy for Athens and was accused (343) by Demosthenes of accepting bribes from Philip. He was defeated (330) in a suit brought by him against Demosthenes' friend, Ctesiphon, and fled to Rhodes.

Aeschines the Orator. Greek statue from Herculaneum, in the National Museum at Naples, of high rank among works of its class. The orator stands quietly, his arm wrapped in his mantle; the expression is preoccupied, but full of dignity.

Aeschylus (es'ki.lus). b. at Eleusis, Greece, 525 B.C.; d. at Gela, Sicily, 456 B.C. Athenian tragic dramatist. He was a soldier of Athens in the war against the Persians, and is believed by many to have been at the battles of Marathon, Artemisium, Salamis, and Plataea (490–479). In his career as a playwright, he entered the annual Athenian competition of tragic drama more than 20 times (499–458), and won first prize 13 times (484–468), being finally defeated by Sophocles. Of his approximately 90 plays, seven survive: The Suppliants, The Persians, The Seven against Thebes, Prometheus Bound (sole surviving drama of his Promethean trilogy), and the Orestean trilogy, consisting of Agamemnon, Choëphoroe, and Eumenides.

Aesculapius (es.kụ.lā'pi.us). [Also: Asclepius, Asklepios.] In Greek mythology, the god of medicine; son of Apollo and Coronis. He was killed with a thunderbolt by Zeus, because Pluto complained that, through his efforts, Hades was being depopulated. At the request of Apollo, he was, after death, placed among the stars. He is commonly represented as an old man with a beard, his usual attribute being a staff with a serpent coiled around it. The common offering to him was a cock.

Aesernia (ē.sėr'ni.ạ). Ancient name of Isernia.

Aeshma Da·a (ä ˈä′ā.vą). In Zoroastrian mythology, a der ger, identified with the Asmodeus of t Book ...

Aesir (ē′sėr, ā′sir). Coll ...ve name for the gods of the Scandinavian mythology. There were 12 gods and 26 goddesses, dwellers in Asgard.

Aesis (ē′sis). Ancient name of Iesi.

Aeson (ē′sọn). In Greek legend, the father of Jason, and stepbrother of Pelias, who excluded him from his share of the kingdom of Thessaly. One account has it that when Pelias, on the reported return of the Argonauts, attempted to kill him, he committed suicide. According to Ovid, he was rejuvenated by Medea after the return of the Argonauts.

Aesop (ē′sọp). [Also, Esop.] According to tradition, a Greek fabulist of the 6th century B.C., represented as a dwarf and originally a slave. Samos and other places claimed the honor of being his birthplace. After obtaining his freedom he visited Lydia and Greece. Of the so-called fables of Aesop there have been several editions, but they are all considered to be spurious. Indeed, Aesop was probably not an actual historical personage. Several of the fables which he is popularly supposed to have written have been traced to sources which considerably antedate his own alleged period of life; some, in fact, may be found in Egyptian materials dating from approximately the 14th century B.C. He was represented in later art as deformed, "perhaps to indicate his nearer approach to the lower animals and his peculiar sympathy for their habits."

Aesopus (ē.sō′pus), Clodius. [Also, Aesop.] fl. 1st century B.C. Roman tragic actor, a contemporary and intimate friend of Cicero, regarded by Horace as the equal of the great actor Roscius.

Aestii (es′ti.ī). People of the Baltic coast mentioned (1st century A.D.) by Tacitus. Some authorities believe they may have been the progenitors of the modern Estonians, who are ethnically close to the Finns; other sources classify them, tentatively, as a Balto-Slavic tribe.

Aeta (ā.ā′tä). [Also, Eta.] Negrito peoples of the Philippines, found chiefly in the mountains of Luzon, Palawan, and Mindanao. The group is believed to be aboriginal in the Philippines, and is known certainly to have been in the archipelago before the tribes which now predominate. They depend for their sustenance primarily upon game, wild fruits, and plants. Most of them now speak one of the Philippine dialects of the Indonesian group of the Malayo-Polynesian languages. This, and much else of their present culture, they have borrowed from their more advanced neighbors.

Aeth (ät). Flemish name of Ath.

Aethalia (ē.thā′li.ą). An ancient name of Elba.

Æthelhard of Bath (ath′ęl.härd). See Adelard of Bath.

Ætheling (a′thę.ling), Edgar (or Eadgar). See Edgar (or Eadgar) Ætheling.

Aethiopia (ē.thi.ō′pi.ą). See ancient Ethiopia.

Aethiopis (ę.thī′ọ.pis). [Also, Lay of Aethiopia.] Greek epic poem of the Trojan cycle (by Arctinus of Miletus, the oldest (c776 B.C.) certainly known epic poet), so named from one of its heroes, Memnon the Aethiopian. It was a continuation of the Iliad, reaching "from the death of Hector to that of Achilles, and telling of the arrival of the Amazons and the Aethiopians to aid Troy."

Aethusa (ę.thū′zą). A Latin name of Favignana.

Aëtion (ā.ē′shi.ọn). fl. c350 B.C. Greek painter, probably a contemporary of Apelles. He is noted for his painting The Marriage of Alexander and Roxana.

Aëtius (ā.ē′shi.us). [Greek, Aëtios (-os).] b. at Amida, Mesopotamia; fl. c500. Greek writer and physician. He was the compiler of a medical work, in Greek, of 16 books (Latin translation, 1542).

Aëtius, Flavius. b. at Durostorum (now Silistra, Rumania), c396; murdered at Rome, 454. Roman general and commander in chief under Valentinian III. He maintained the crumbling northern borders of the empire against the Visigoths (West Goths), Franks, and Burgundians (433 et seq.). He is remembered particularly for his decisive defeat (451) of Attila and the Huns near what is now Châlons-sur-Marne (this battle, which was the last major triumph of Roman arms, is often said to have saved Europe from the barbarians). He was killed in 454 by Valentinian, who suspected that he might covet the throne.

Aëtius of Antioch. [Greek, Aëtios (ā.ē′shi.os); called "the Atheist."] b. at Antioch; d. at Constantinople, 367. Syrian theologian. He was the founder of a sect of extreme Arians, called Aetians from him, Eunomians from his disciple Eunomius, and Anomoeans from their espousal of the doctrine that the Son was unlike (Greek, anomoios) the Father. Exiled (359) by Constantius, he was recalled (c361) by Julian, who retained him at the court in Constantinople.

Aetna (et′nạ). Latin didactic poem, which has been erroneously attributed to Vergil. It combats the mythical theory (still popular at the time the poem was written) as to the causes of volcanic action.

Aetna. Latin name of Etna, Italy.

Aetolia (ę.tō′li.ą). [Also, Aitolia.] In ancient geography, a district of Greece, bounded by Epirus and Thessaly on the N, Doris on the NE, Locris on the E and SE, the Corinthian Gulf on the S, and Acarnania on the W. In modern Greece, it forms part of the nomos (department) of Aetolia and Acarnania.

Aetolia and Acarnania (ak.ạr.nā′ni.ą). [Also spelled Aitolia and Acarnania.] Nomos (department) in N Greece. Capital, Missolonghi; area, 3,004 sq. mi.; pop. 220,208 (1951).

Aetolian League (ę.tō′li.ạn). Confederation of Greek cities whose organization was copied from that of the Achaean League. It waged war against Macedon in 323 B.C., against the Gauls in 279, and against the Achaean League in 220. In the period 211–192 B.C., it was allied with Rome. It was dissolved in 167 B.C.

Afanas'evo (ä.fä.nä′syi.vọ). Early Neolithic culture in the area of what is now the central U.S.S.R., widely distributed throughout the Minusinsk area and in W Siberia. It apparently flourished c2000–1500 B.C.

Afanasyev (ä.fä.nä′syif), Aleksandr Nikolayevich. b. 1826; d. 1871. Russian folklorist and archaeologist. He published numerous collections of tales and poems from the folklore of various groups in W and C Russia, and is to some extent responsible for their becoming known to non-Russian readers during the latter part of the 19th century. The most recent English translation of fairy tales from his various collections was published in 1945.

Afar Country (ą.fär′). See Danakil.

Afema (ä.fā′mä). [Also, Sanwi Agni.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Anyi peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SE part of the Ivory Coast, to the E of Bingerville.

Afer (ā′fėr), Domitius. b. at Nemausus (now Nîmes, France); d. 60 A.D. Roman orator, a teacher of Quintilian. In 26 A.D. he conducted the accusation for the government against Claudia Pulchra, the cousin of Agrippina, and in 27 A.D. appeared against Varus Quintilius, her son.

Affair of Dishonor, An. Historical romance by William De Morgan, published in 1910.

Affleck (af′lek), Thomas. b. at Dumfries, Scotland, July 13, 1812; d. Dec. 30, 1868. American agricultural writer, notable as an advocate of improved methods of farming in the southern U.S. He became a junior editor (1840) of Western Farmer and Gardener at Cincinnati eight years after arriving in the U.S. Subsequently he moved to Mississippi and Texas, where he acquired extensive properties, including the only gristmill in Texas.

Affonso (ą.fon′sō; Portuguese, ą.fõn′sö). See Alfonso.

Affre (âfr), Denis Auguste. b. at St.-Rome, Tarn, France, Sept. 27, 1793; d. at Paris, June 27, 1848. French ecclesiastic, appointed (1840) archbishop of Paris. He was mortally wounded in the insurrection of 1848 while attempting to admonish the insurgents.

Afghanistan (af.gan′i.stan). [Also: Pukhtun-Khtun; ancient name, Aryana.] Country in W central Asia, bounded by the U.S.S.R. on the N, Pakistan on the E and S, and Iran on the W. It is ab. 700 mi. long and ab. 600 mi. wide. The prevailing religion is Mohammedanism (predominantly of the Sunnite sect).

Government, Population, and Area. Since 1926, the government has been a constitutional monarchy, consisting of the king (the title of amir was abolished in 1926), a supreme council of state (or cabinet), a senate of 45 members (appointed for life by the king), and a national assembly of approximately 138 members elected by popular vote. There are seven major provinces (Kabul, Mazar, Kandahar, Herat, Kataghan, Simat-i-Mashriqi, Simat-i-Junubi) and three minor provinces (Badakhshan, Farah, Maimana), each of which is administered by a governor responsible to the monarchy. Capital, Kabul; area, ab. 250,000 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 12,000,000 (est. 1946).

Topography and Climate. The Hindu Kush range of mountains, and its various extensions, is the chief topographical feature of Afghanistan, although in the N and S parts of the country there are arid plains of considerable extent. The principle rivers are four: the Kabul, the Kunduz, the Herat, and the Helmand. For obvious reasons, a major part of the country's agricultural activity is found in the valleys of these rivers, but the plateau region in C Afghanistan provides valuable grazing areas for the camels, goats, and sheep vital to the existence of many of the country's inhabitants. The average annual rainfall of the country is not great (10 to 11 inches), and occurs chiefly in the period from October through May. The range in temperature, even within a 24-hour span, is often considerable; the seasonal range is, of course, very much greater, running from a low of ab. 0° F. in the winter to a high of ab. 100° in the summer.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Afghanistan has little industry in the usual Western sense of the word (the total electric-power output of the country is only slightly over 6,000 kilowatts), but there are cotton and woolen mills of some size. However, the bulk of the material produced by these mills, and by the other, smaller manufacturing enterprises of the country, is consumed domestically. Some evidence exists that worthwhile mineral resources may exist, but thus far lack of capital and the extraordinary difficulties of transportation (Afghanistan has no railroad facilities, and uncertain highways) have prevented their exploitation. In agriculture, and in the raising of livestock, the Afghan economy finds its chief basis perhaps most notably with the famous karakul sheep, which produce the fur usually spelled "caracul" in the U.S. There are an estimated 4,000,000 of these sheep now on the Afghan ranges. Other products exported by the country include wheat, nuts, and many fruits. Some cotton is grown, but not in sufficient quantity to be significant except for domestic use.

History. Afghanistan was included in the Persian empire of Darius I, in the empire of Alexander the Great, in the Mogul empire of India, and others. The country became an autonomous unit in 1747, when it achieved independence of Persia under the Durani dynasty (which was itself derived from a governor responsible to Persia). Under the last member of the Durani dynasty, Dost Mohammed Khan, the First Afghan War broke out with the British in 1838. The latter captured Kandahar, Ghazni, and Kabul in 1839, and succeeded briefly in establishing a new amir at Kabul, but in 1841 the British agent was killed, and the British army was largely annihilated in 1842 as it withdrew from Kabul through the Kurd-Kabul Pass. Later in the same year, a British force under Sir George Pollock forced its way back into Kabul, but the victory was only temporary, and sporadic outbreaks of British-Afghan hostility occurred throughout the next several decades. In 1878, under the amir Shere Ali, the Second Afghan War broke out, and the British captured Jalalabad and Kandahar. Shere Ali fled, and Yakub Khan was proclaimed amir in 1879. A massacre of the British at Kabul followed, and brought another British invading force, under Frederick Sleigh Roberts (the "Bobs Bahadur" of Kipling's stories), and Yakub Khan abdicated. The latter's brother Ayub Khan in 1880 at first defeated the British forces, but again under Roberts the British relieved Kandahar in 1880, defeated Ayub Khan, and recognized Abd-er-Rahman Khan as amir. Although Abd-er-Rahman Khan was nominally an independent ruler (except in foreign affairs), the British interest in Afghanistan was now evident at Kabul and generally recognized by the European powers. Various disputes arose during the next decade regarding the boundary between Afghanistan and the Russian possessions, and when the Russians seized Panjdeh in 1885, war between Great Britain and Russia was narrowly averted. An Anglo-Russian commission arranged the delimitation of the N frontier in 1886–87, and the so-called Pamir Commission of 1895 defined the NE border. The government and domestic affairs of Afghanistan were thereafter relatively stable until just after World War I, when resentment of British interference in combination with sympathy for their Moslem co-religionists, the Turks, led the Afghans into a brief war against Great Britain in 1919. Thereafter, during the 1920's and 1930's, a considerable effort was made by various rulers to modernize the country, but with comparatively little success. (One of the chief reasons for this was, and continues to be, that the majority of Afghans is suspicious of any change which appears to threaten the cultural conservatism that has been produced by the intense devotion to orthodox Mohammedanism characteristic of the country.) Some U.S. financial aid was extended to Afghanistan during and after World War II, but the country still remains, by Western standards, comparatively undeveloped. In 1948 a new boundary agreement was negotiated and signed with Russia.

Afghan Turkistan (af'gan tėr'ki.stan). [Also, Afghan Turkestan.] Name sometimes applied to a region in N Afghanistan, a low plain between the Amu Darya (Oxus) River and the Hindu Kush mountains to the S.

Afghan Wars. Two wars between Great Britain and Afghanistan during the years 1838–42 and 1878–80.

Afinger (ä'fing.ėr), Bernhard. b. at Nuremberg, Bavaria, May 6, 1813; d. at Berlin, Dec. 25, 1882. German sculptor.

Afinogenov (ä.fē.no.gye'nọf), Aleksandr Nikolayevich. b. 1904; killed by a bomb during a German air raid on Moscow, Nov. 4, 1941. Russian playwright. Some half a dozen of his plays, all dealing with Soviet life, are available in English.

Afium (or Afiun) Karahissar (ä.fyöm'; ä.fyön'; kä.rä.hi.sär'). See Afyon, town.

AFL or A. F. of L. See American Federation of Labor.

afloat and Ashore. Romance by James Fenimore Cooper, published in 1844.

Afontova Mountain (ä.fôn'to.vạ). [Russian, Afontova Gora (go.rä').] Upper Paleolithic site situated near Krasnoyarsk, Siberia, and first excavated (1886) by I. T. Savenko. Another series of excavations, under N. K. Auerbach, was started in 1923.

Afragola (ä.frä.gô'lä). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Napoli, ab. 10 mi. NE of Naples. The center of a rich agricultural district, it belongs to the metropolitan region of Naples; it has hat manufactures and a considerable agricultural trade. Pop. of commune, 29,281 (1936); of town, 29,156 (1936).

Afranius (ạ.frā'ni.us), Lucius. fl. c100 B.C. Roman comic poet, an imitator of the Greek Menander. Extant fragments of his work indicate that he dealt, like Menander, chiefly with middle-class life.

Afranius, Lucius. d. in Africa, 46 B.C. Roman general. An adherent of Pompey, who assisted him to become consul (60 B.C.), he was defeated by Caesar at Ilerda, Spain in 49 B.C. Despite a promise not to serve thereafter against Caesar, he joined Pompey's forces and was present at the defeats of Pompey at Pharsalus (48 B.C.) and Thapsus (46 B.C.). He was captured in the last-named battle and taken to Caesar, by whose soldiers he was thereupon put to death.

Africa (af'ri.kạ). [Called the "Dark Continent."] Continent in the Eastern Hemisphere, next to Asia the largest grand division of the world. It is bounded on the N by the Mediterranean Sea (which separates it from Europe), on the E by the Isthmus of Suez (which connects it with Asia), the Red Sea (which separates it from Asia), and the Indian Ocean, by the Southern Ocean (or the Indian and South Atlantic oceans) on the S, and the Atlantic Ocean on the W. The length of the continent is 4,970 mi., its breadth 4,700 mi.; area, 11,698,830 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 198 million (est. 1950).

Political Divisions. The principal political divisions are: Egypt; the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan (an Anglo-Egyptian condominium); Ethiopia, including Eritrea; United Nations trust territories of Italian, British, and French Somaliland; the British territories of East Africa (Kenya colony and protectorate, Uganda protectorate, and the trust territory of Tanganyika); Mozambique (Portuguese); the British colonies of Northern and Southern Rhodesia, Nyasaland protectorate, and Bechuanaland protectorate; the French colony of Madagascar; the Union of South Africa (Cape of Good Hope Province, Natal, Orange Free State, Transvaal, and the trust territory of South-West Africa); the British native protectorates of Basutoland and Swaziland; the Belgian Congo; Angola (Portuguese); French Equatorial Africa; British Cameroons; Cameroun (French); the British West-African territories (Nigeria, the Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, and Gambia); Liberia; Portuguese Guinea; the French West African federation consisting of Mauritania, Senegal, the Ivory Coast, French Guinea, French Togo, Dahomey, French Sudan, and Niger; Spanish Sahara; French Morocco; Algeria; Tunisia; Spanish Morocco; and the former Italian colony of Libya (which after World War II was divided between France, Great Britain, and Italy as trust territories under the United Nations, and in 1951 became an independent kingdom).

Physical Geography. The more distinctive physiographic features of the continent are the Atlas Mountains, the Sahara desert, the great equatorial forests, the lake region (Albert, Victoria, Tanganyika, and others), and the S central plateau. Principal rivers: Nile, Congo, Niger, and Zambezi (with Victoria Falls, the "African Niagara"). Africa has few high mountains; the highest are the glacier-covered Kilimanjaro (19,565 ft.) in Tanganyika, and Kenya (17,040 ft.) in Kenya colony.

History. Even to this day the least-known of the earth's grand divisions, Africa has been called the "Dark Continent." Its northern portions were early seats of civilization, and part of the Roman Empire; but some of its interior remains even today still unexplored. It was circumnavigated by the Phoenicians as early as the 7th century B.C. Coastline exploration was undertaken by the Portuguese in the middle of the 15th century, and the Portuguese navigator, Vasco da Gama, rounded the Cape of Good Hope, from the Atlantic Ocean into the Indian Ocean, in 1497. Explorations of the interior have been made since the last part of the 18th century by Bruce, Mungo Park, Hornemann, Burckhardt, Denham, Clapperton, Lander, Oudney, Rebmann, Barth, Richardson, Overweg, Vogel, Livingstone, Burton, Speke, Grant, Baker, Stanley, Schweinfurth, Mauch, Nachtigal, De Brazza, Holub, Wissmann, Serpa Pinto, Cameron, Rohlfs, Lenz, Du Chaillu, Emin Pasha, and others. During the last decade of the 19th century and in the early years of the 20th century the great European powers engaged in a scramble for colonial possessions in Africa. The main participants were France, Great Britain, Portugal, and Spain, but Belgium also obtained a share as did Italy, which was late in entering the race for territory. After World War I, Germany lost her colonies, which became mandated territories under France, Great Britain, and the Union of South Africa. A similar disposition was made of portions of the Italian Empire as a result of World War II.

Africa. Diocese of the later Roman prefecture of Italy. It comprised the Roman provinces of Africa, Numidia, and a part of Mauritania, and corresponds to modern Algeria, Tunisia, and Tripoli. To the Arabs, Africa meant the province of Carthage or Tunis and its capital, which was not at first Tunis but successively Kairouan and Mahdiya. Throughout the later Middle Ages the name "Africa" was applied by Christian writers to the latter city.

Africaine (lä.frē.ken), L'. Opera by Meyerbeer, with a libretto by Augustin Eugène Scribe, produced at the Académie at Paris, on April 28, 1865, in the year following the composer's death.

Africanus (af.ri.kā'nus), Scipio. See Scipio.

Africanus, Sextus Julius. fl. at Rome, c200–250. Christian historian, traveler, and author. He wrote an account of the world from its creation (which he calculated at 5499 B.C.) to 221 A.D. His chronology, which moved back the birth of Christ three years, was thereafter for many years accepted by virtually all Eastern churches. Fragments of his writing are extant in Eusebius's Chronicon and elsewhere.

African War. Name sometimes applied to the war between Julius Caesar and the followers of Pompey, who had collected in the Roman province of Africa after the defeat at Pharsalus, in Greece, in 48 B.C., and were overthrown at Thapsus in 46 B.C.

Africa Orientale Italiana (ä'frē.kä ō.ryän.tä'lä ē.tä.lyä'nä). Italian name of Italian East Africa.

Afrikaans (af.ri.känz'). A creolized Germanic language, modified Dutch, spoken among the Boers in South Africa.

Afrikander Bond (af.ri.kan'dėr bond) or Afrikander Bund (äf.rē.kän'dėr bunt). South African association originally established in 1879, and which assumed the name here cited in 1880. It aimed not only at the furtherance of Afrikander influence, but at the ultimate complete independence of South Africa. In 1910 the group merged with others of a similar point of view into the South African Party.

Afrique Équatoriale Française (a.frēk ā.kwà.to.ryal fräń.sez). French name of French Equatorial Africa.

Afrique Occidentale Française (ok.sē.däń.tal). French name of French West Africa.

Aftalion (äf.tà.lyôń), Albert. b. at Nancy, France, Oct. 21, 1874—. French economist, noted for his studies in the field of monetary theory. He was a professor at the University of Paris. Author of Les Crises périodiques de surproductions (2 vols., 1913), Monnaie, prix et change (1927), and L'Équilibre dans les relations économiques internationales (1937).

Afyon (äf.yōn'). [Also, Afyonkarahisar (äf.yōn''kä.rä.hi.sär').] Il (province or vilayet) in W central Turkey, long known for its hand-loomed rugs and for its opium trade. Several caravan routes cross the mountainous terrain included within its boundaries. The chief crops are wheat, cotton, and tobacco. Capital, Afyon; area, 4,880 sq. mi.; pop. 372,566 (1950).

Afyon. [Also: Afium (or Afiun) Karahissar, Afyonkarahissar ("Black Castle of Opium"), Karahissar.] Town in W central Turkey, capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Afyon, ab. 175 mi. SE of Istanbul: an important rail junction with large railroad shops; center of a large opium-growing area; wheat and tobacco are other important crops. It was the birthplace of Othman, founder of the Turkish empire. Near it is the site of the ancient Synnada (Eskikarahisar). Pop. ab. 27,000 (1945).

Afzelius (äf.sā'lē.ùs), Adam. b. at Larf, Sweden, Oct. 7, 1750; d. Jan. 30, 1837. Swedish naturalist and founder (1802) of the Linnaean Institute at Uppsala. He was variously an explorer (1792) in Sierra Leone, secretary (1796) of the Swedish legation at London, and professor of materia medica (1812) at Uppsala. He published (1823) the autobiography of Linnaeus.

Afzelius, Arvid August. b. Oct. 8, 1785; d. at Enköping, Sweden, Sept. 25, 1871. Swedish clergyman, writer, and collector of folksongs. He was pastor (1828 et seq.) at Enköping.

Aga (ä'gä). Modern name of the Allia.

Agabus (ag'ą.bus). Prophet and martyr of the early Christian church, supposed to have been one of the 70 disciples of Christ. In 43 A.D., while Paul and Barnabas were in Antioch, he came from Judea to Antioch, where he predicted the approach of a famine. (Acts, xi. 27, 28.)

Agada (ag'ą.dą). [Also: Agadta, Haggadah.] Name given in Aramaic to one of the two great divisions of post-Biblical Hebrew literature. The spelling of the name here shown is the one preferred by most authorities in the field, but the spelling "Haggadah" is also common and the term "Haggadist" is generally used to describe a Talmudic scholar who concerns himself chiefly with this division of Hebrew literature. It denotes that portion of the Talmudic literature not devoted to religious law; thus the exegetical and homiletical portions, fables, proverbs, the ethics, as well as everything relating to natural science and history, are included under the Agada, which is thus complementary to the Halacha, the legal portions.

Agade (ą.gä'dē). See under Akkad.

Agadès (à.gà.des, ag'ą.dēz). City in W Africa, former capital of the old sultanate of Air, in Niger territory, French West Africa, between Nigeria and Algeria. It is connected by caravan route with Nigeria and Dahomey in the S and with Ghardaïa and Laghouat in Algeria. It is also the name of a district, of which Agadès is the administrative center. Pop. of district, 32,448 (1946).

Agadir (à.gà.dēr, ag.ą.dir'). Seaport in NW Africa, in French Morocco, on the Atlantic coast near the mouth of the Sous River, in the SW part of the country. It is connected by road with Mogador and Marrakech. 5,730.

Agadir Crisis. European crisis which precipitated (1911) the second Moroccan Crisis. It arose when the German gunboat Panther arrived (July 1) at Agadir harbor on the Moroccan coast, avowedly to protect German interests In effect, the visit was designed to bring action by the French on a settlement which would give to Germany concessions in the French Congo. Eventually, on Nov. 4, a settlement was reached by which Germany gained a slice of French Congo and recognized Morocco as a French protectorate.

Agag (ā'gag). In the Old Testament, an Amalekite king, defeated but spared by Saul, killed by Samuel. 1 Sam. xv.

Agag. Character in John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, generally believed to be a satirical portrait of Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey, a magistrate who received the declaration of Titus Oates. His mutilated body was found in a country ditch shortly thereafter, which led Dryden to the allusion:

"And Corah might for Agag's murder call
In terms as coarse as Samuel used to Saul."

The name "Corah" applies, of course, to Titus Oates.

Aga Khan I (ä'gä ċhän). [Title of Hasan Ali Shah.] b. 1800; d. 1881. First of the Ismaili Moslem leaders of this name to settle in India, under British protection. At one time he held temporal authority under the Persian shah, but fled after a quarrel. He traced his descent and spiritual authority from Mohammed's daughter, Fatima. He aided the British in restraining the Moslems on India's N border.

Aga Khan II. d. 1885. Ismaili Moslem leader in India; eldest son of Aga Khan I. He continued the policy of coöperation with the British which had been established by his father and was, like him, given by the British a degree of support. He was for part of his life a member of the Bombay legislative council.

Aga Khan III. b. at Karachi (now in Pakistan), 1875—. Indian statesman, spiritual leader since 1885 of the Ismaili Moslem sect, numbering followers in E Africa, C Asia, and India; son of Aga Khan II. Member (1902–04) of the viceroy's council; obtained Moslem support in India and elsewhere for the British in World War I; aided Turkey in peace negotiations with Allies; a founder and benefactor of Moslem Aligarh University; proposed (1924) for Nobel peace prize by Indian council of state.

Agamemnon (ag.ạ.mem'non). In Greek legendary history, the son of Atreus, king of Mycenae, and the most powerful ruler in Greece. He led the Greek expedition against Troy and on his return was slain, according to Homer, by Aegisthus, and according to Aeschylus, by his wife Clytemnestra, who was incited to the deed partly by jealousy of Cassandra, and partly through fear on account of her adultery with Aegisthus.

Agamemnon. Tragic drama by Aeschylus, considered by some to have been his greatest. The scene is laid in Argos, in the palace of Agamemnon, at the time of the king's return from the capture of Troy. The catastrophe is the murder (behind the scenes) of Agamemnon and Cassandra (whom he has brought captive with him) by the queen Clytemnestra urged on by her paramour Aegisthus.

Agamemnon of Aeschylus. Translation (1877) by Robert Browning of the Greek play by Aeschylus. Many critics consider that Browning attempted deliberately to reproduce in this work the harshness and obscurity of the original Greek in order to increase, by comparison, the stature of Euripides (whom Browning greatly admired) at the expense of Aeschylus (who was receiving at that time a degree of acclaim which seemed to Browning a reflection on Euripides).

Agaña (ä.gä'nyä). Seat of the U.S. government, and formerly the largest settlement, on the island of Guam, Pacific Ocean. It was largely destroyed when Guam was recaptured (1944) from the Japanese during World War II; reconstruction was begun in 1946. 10,004 (1940), 1,330 (1950).

Aganippe (ag.ạ.nip'ē). In ancient geography, a fountain near Mount Helicon, in Boeotia, Greece, sacred to the Muses. It was believed to inspire those who drank of it, and it gave the name "Aganippides" to the Muses.

Agape (ag'ạ.pē). In Spenser's Faerie Queene, a fay (or fairy), the mother of three knights, Diamond, Priamond, and Triamond, for whom she obtained the gift that if one were killed his strength should pass into the remaining brothers or brother.

Agapetus I (ag.ạ.pē'tus), Saint. [Also, Agapitus.] Pope from May, 535, to April, 536; son of Gordianus, a Roman priest. He went to Constantinople in 536 and deposed Anthimus the Eutychian, patriarch of Constantinople, but died before returning to Rome.

Agapetus II. Pope from 946 to 955, a Roman by birth. He strove to restore church discipline and to uphold temporal power, but was frustrated by Alberic, ruler of the independent Roman state.

Agar (ā'gär), Herbert Sebastian. b. at New Rochelle, N.Y., Sept. 29, 1897—. American editor and writer. London correspondent for the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times (1929–34); editor, Louisville Courier-Journal (1940 et seq.); collaborated with his second wife, Eleanor Carroll Chilton, on volumes of verse; author of The People's Choice (1933), which won him a Pulitzer prize. He has also written Bread and Circuses (1930), Land of the Free (1935), Pursuit of Happiness (1938), A Time for Greatness (1942), A Declaration of Faith (1952), and others.

Agard or Agarde (ạ.gärd'), Arthur. b. at Foston, Derbyshire, 1540; d. at London, Aug. 22, 1615. English antiquary, clerk in the British Exchequer, and (1603) deputy chamberlain. He prepared catalogues of state papers, compiled a list of all the leagues, treaties of peace, "intercourses," and marriages arranged between England and other countries down to the end of the 16th century, and wrote a Latin treatise on the Doomsday Book. He bequeathed his numerous manuscripts partly to the Exchequer and partly to his friend Robert Cotton. Most of them are now in the British Museum.

Agardh (ä'gärd), Jakob Georg. b. at Lund, Sweden, 1813; d. there, 1901. Swedish naturalist; son of K. A. Agardh. He served as professor of botany at Lund. Author of Species, Genera, et Ordines Algarum, of Theoria Systematis Naturalis Plantarum (1858), and other works.

Agardh, Karl Adolf. b. at Bastad, Sweden, Jan. 23, 1785; d. at Karlstad, Sweden, Jan. 28, 1859. Swedish naturalist and political economist, professor of botany and economics at the University of Lund (1812), and bishop of Karlstad (1834). His most important scientific works are Systema Algarum (1824), Icones Algarum Europaearum (1828–35), and Lärobok i Botanik (1830–32).

Agarrib (ag'ạ.rib), Gebel (or Jebel). See Gharib, Gebel.

Agasias (ạ.gā'shi.ạs). Name of two Greek sculptors of the Ephesian school who lived sometime during the 1st century B.C.: 1. Son of Dositheus. His name is inscribed on the base of the Borghese Gladiator in the Louvre, at Paris. 2. Son of Menophilus. A military statue done by him is in the Athens national museum.

Agassiz (ag'ạ.si; French, ạ.gà.sē), Alexander. b. at Neuchâtel, Switzerland, Dec. 17, 1835; d. in mid-Atlantic, on the steamship Adriatic, March 27, 1910. American morphologist, geologist, zoölogist, oceanographer, museum director, and mining engineer; son of Louis Agassiz. His early schooling at Neuchâtel and Baden was under the guidance of Braun and von Siebold; he arrived in the U.S. in 1849 and took further education at Cambridge High School, Harvard (1855), and Lawrence Scientific School (1857, 1862). He went with the U.S. Coast Survey to California (1859) and to Panama (1860). In the latter year he married Anna Russell; their children were George, Maximilian, and Rodolphe. Business manager, a curator, and finally director of the Museum of Comparative Zoology (1860–98), he became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1861. He published Embryology of the Starfish in 1864, and A Catalogue of North American Acalephae in 1865. Superintendent (1867–68) and president (1871–1910) of the Calumet and Hecla copper mines; traveled in Europe (1869–70). His authoritative Revision of the Echini was published in 1873. Conducted collecting expedition to Lake Titicaca (1874–75); established marine laboratory at Newport, R.I. (1877–98); in charge of the three important oceanographic cruises of the steamer Blake (1877–80), results published (1888). Investigated and collected in Mexico (1881–82), India (1883–84), Sandwich (now Hawaiian) Islands (1885), Egypt (1885–86), northern Africa (1889–90), Japan (1891–92), the Bahamas and Bermudas (1893–94), the Great Barrier Reef (1896), the Fijis (1897–98), South Africa (1898–99), tropical Pacific (1899–1900), and the Maldives (1900–02). In charge of the first three Albatross Expeditions (1891, 1899, 1904). Published a great many papers on coral reefs and the Echinoderms, especially Hawaiian and Other Pacific Echini (1897). He was primarily a great investigator with many interests, who contributed more to the advancement of pure science than his more famous father.

Agassiz, Elizabeth Cabot. [Maiden name, Cary.] b. at Boston, Dec. 5, 1822; d. at Arlington Heights, Mass., June 27, 1907. American teacher and author; second wife (1850 et seq.) of Louis Agassiz. She was a founder (1879) of Radcliffe College and its president (1894–1902). Author and editor of Louis Agassiz: His Life and Correspondence (1885) and others.

Agassiz, Lake. Extensive post-glacial lake which once occupied the valley of the Red River in North Dakota, Minnesota, and Manitoba. The retreating ice sheet ponded waters in front of it, and in these were laid down sediments, now the fertile wheat fields of this region.

Agassiz, Louis. [Full name, Jean Louis Rodolphe Agassiz.] b. at Motier-en-Vuly, Switzerland, May 28, 1807; d. at Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 14, 1873. American teacher, naturalist, biologist, geologist, paleontologist, and ichthyologist. After early schooling at Bienne, Switzerland, he attended college at Lausanne, Zurich, Heidelberg, Erlangen (Ph.D., 1829), Munich (M.D., 1830); taught by Leuckart, Tiedmann, Braun, Oken, Döllinger, Fuchs, and others. Published Martius's and Spix's collection in Latin, Brazilian Fishes (1829); studied prevention and treatment of cholera (1831). Cuvier directed his work on fossil fishes at the Jardin des Plantes at Paris (1831–32). Humboldt's generosity and guidance led to a professorship of natural history in the lyceum at Neuchâtel (1832–46), where he included among his pupils Desor, Guyot, and Vogt. He married Cecile Braun in 1833; their children were Alexander, Pauline, and Ida. Published his monumental Recherches sur les poissons fossiles (1833–43) and an important monograph The Fossil Fish of the Old Red Sandstone (1844). His ice-age hypothesis was presented in Études sur les glaciers (1840), followed by Système glaciare (1847). Investigations (mostly paleontological) resulted in Monographie d'echinodermes vivans et fossiles (1838) and Études critiques sur les mollusques fossiles (1840–44). The comprehensive Nomenclator Zoölogicus (1842–46, 1848) preceded the Bibliographia Zoölogiae et Geologiae (1854). Arrived (1846) in America; gave eight series of Lowell Institute Lectures (1846–70); professor of zoölogy and geology at Harvard (1848–73); conducted (and published on) exploration of Lake Superior (1848). He married Elizabeth Cabot Cary in 1850. Executed Coastal Survey of Florida (1850–51); served as professor of comparative anatomy at the Medical College of Charleston, S.C. (1852–53); founded (1855) Agassiz School for girls, predecessor of Radcliffe College; established (1859) Museum of Comparative Zoölogy at Harvard, the parent stem of all American natural history museums. He became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1861. Issued four volumes of a prospective ten on Contributions to the Natural History of the United States including his famous Essay on Classification (1857–62); wrote Geological Sketches in two series (1853–54; 1864–65); published Methods of Study in Natural History (1863); gave lecture series at Cornell (1868); conducted (and published on) zoölogical expeditions to Brazil (1865), and to San Francisco by way of the West Indies and Cape Horn (1871–72). He established (1873) the Anderson School of Natural History on Penikese Island, Buzzards Bay, Mass., the forerunner of all modern marine and lacustral biological stations. His bibliography consists of more than 425 published books and papers.

Agassiz (ä.gä.sēs'), Mount. Peak in SE Chile, in the territory of Magallenes. Elevation, ab. 10,000 ft.

Agassiz (ag'ạ.si), Mount. A peak of the Uinta Mountains in Utah. Elevation, ab. 13,000 ft.

Agate (ā'gạt), Alfred T. b. at Sparta, in Westchester County, N.Y., Feb. 14, 1812; d. at Washington, D.C., Jan. 5, 1846. American illustrator and painter of miniatures; brother of Frederick Styles Agate (1803–44). He was artist for the Wilkes Exploring Expedition (1838–42), and a member of the National Academy. One of the best-known of his works is Cocoanut Grove.

Agate, Frederick Styles. b. at Sparta, in Westchester County, N.Y., Jan. 29, 1803; d. there, May 1, 1844. American religious and historical painter; brother of Alfred T. Agate (1812–46). He was a student of S. F. B. Morse, and a founder (1826) of the National Academy of Design. His paintings include Ugolino, Pietá, The Assumption, Columbus and the Egg, and The Old Oaken Bucket.

Agate, James Evershed. b. at Manchester, England, 1877—. British critic and author. He served as dramatic critic of the London Sunday Times, film critic of The Tatler, and literary critic of the London Daily Express. He was also the author of the Ego autobiographical volumes, most lately Ego 7 (1945).

Agatha (ag'ạ.thạ), Saint. b. at Catania or Palermo, Sicily; d. 251. Sicilian virgin martyr, tortured and killed by Quintianus, governor of Sicily, whose advances she had spurned. She is a patron saint of Catania and is also invoked against storms.

Agatha. Latin name of Agde.

Agatharchides of Cnidos (ag.ạ.thär'ki.dēz; nī'dọs). [Also: Agatharcus, Agatharchus.] b. at Cnidos; fl. 2nd quarter 2nd century B.C., at Alexandria. Greek geographer and historian. His On the Erythraean Sea, which has been preserved through Photius, contains valuable geographic and ethnographic information on Arabia and Ethiopia. He also wrote a geography and history of Asia (in 10 books) and a geography and history of Europe (in 49 books).

Agatharchus (ag.ạ.thär'kus). b. on the island of Samos, in the Aegean Sea; fl. c460–417 B.C. Athenian painter, said by Vitruvius to have painted a scene for a tragedy by Aeschylus, and thus sometimes credited with having been the inventor of scene painting for the theater.

Agathias (ạ.gā'thi.ạs). b. at Myrina, in Asia Minor, c536; d. c582. Byzantine poet and historian.

Agathinos (ag.ạ.thī'nos). [Full name, Claudios Agathinos.] b. in Sparta; fl. second half of the 1st century A.D. Greek physician. He wrote a treatise on the pulse, another on the action of hellebore (partly based on experiments), and recommended the use of cold (as opposed to warm) baths.

Agatho (ag'ạ.thō), Saint. b. at Palermo, Sicily; d. 681. [Surnamed Thaumaturgus.] Pope from 678 to 681.

Agathocles or Agathokles (ạ.gath'ọ.klēz). b. at Thermae, Sicily, 361 B.C.; d. 289 B.C. Sicilian despot, tyrant of Syracuse (317–289 B.C.). He seized power with an army of exiles and Campanian hirelings, and shortly became involved in war with Carthage, traditional enemy of the Sicilian Greeks. He made his way through the Carthaginian forces around Syracuse and crossed the Mediterranean to attack Carthage in 310 B.C., but returned to find Syracuse rumbling with incipient revolt. He thereupon made peace with the Carthaginians, and put down his opposition, but died before he could renew attack on Carthage.

Agathon (ag'ạ.thon). b. c450 B.C.; d. c400 B.C. Athenian tragic poet; friend of Euripides and Plato. His house on the occasion of his winning his first dramatic victory (416 B.C.) at Lenaea is the scene of Plato's Symposium. He is considered to have been the first Athenian dramatist to devise an original plot and to sever the link between plot and choral odes.

Agathon. Unknown author referred to by Chaucer in the prologue to the Legend of Good Women.

Agathon. Philosophical novel by Christoph Martin Wieland, published in 1766: so named from its chief character in whom the author depicted himself.

Agave (ạ.gā'vē). In Greek legend, the daughter of Cadmus, wife of the Spartan Echion, and mother of Pentheus, king of Thebes, whom she destroyed in a fit of frenzy.

Agawam (ag'ạ.wom, -wôm). Town in S Massachusetts, in Hampden County, on the Connecticut River: a suburb of Springfield. 10,166 (1950).

Agawam. Original name of Ipswich, Mass.

Agbatana (ag.bat'ạ.nạ). Ancient name of Hamadan.

Agde (ägd). [Latin, Agatha.] Town in S France, in the department of Hérault, situated on the Hérault River and the Canal du Midi, near the Mediterranean, ab. 29 mi.

SW of Montpellier. Founded by the Phoenicians, it was occupied by the Goths in the 6th century. Alaric II called a council here in 506. It was frequently sacked during the Middle Ages, and was held for some years by the Huguenots. The cathedral of Saint Étienne dates from the 12th century. 7,594 (1946).

Ageladas (aj.ẹ.lā′dąs). [Also: Hageladas, Hagelaidas.] fl. c520–c460 B.C. Greek sculptor, a native of Argos, thought by some to have been instructor to Myron, Phidias, and Polycleitus. None of his work is now known to exist.

Agelaus (aj.ẹ.lā′us). In Greek mythology, a servant of Priam, who exposed Paris on Mount Ida.

Agelaus. In Greek mythology, the bravest of the suitors of Penelope. He was one of the last to be slain by Ulysses.

Agen (à.zhaṅ). [Latin, Aginnum.] City in SW France, the capital of the department of Lot-et-Garonne, situated on the Garonne River between Bordeaux and Toulouse. It is a center of trade for the fruit growers of the vicinity. The cathedral of Saint Caprais dates from the 11th to the 16th centuries, with Romanesque and Gothic architectural elements. There are a number of buildings, including a library and a museum, from the medieval and the Renaissance periods. The town was the capital of the ancient Nitiobriges, and came under French control in 1439. It suffered considerable damage during the Albigensian and Huguenot religious wars. 33,397 (1946).

Agen (dà.zhaṅ), Augustin Boyer d'. See Boyer d'Agen, Augustin.

Agendicum (ą.jen′di.kum). A Latin name of Sens.

Agenois (àzh.nwà) or Agenais (àzh.ne). Former district of France, comprised in the modern department of Lot-et-Garonne.

Agenor (ą.jē′nôr, -nọr). In Greek legend, a king of Phoenicia; son of Poseidon and Libya, and father of Cadmus and Europa.

Agenor. In Greek legend, a brave Trojan warrior, son of Antenor, who appears in the Iliad as a leader in the attack on the fortifications of the Greeks. He fought with and wounded Achilles, and Apollo assumed his form in order to lead Achilles away from his pursuit of the retreating Trojans.

Age of Innocence. An oil painting (in the National Gallery, London) by the English artist Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723–92). The subject is a little girl seated on the ground in a wooded landscape.

Age of Innocence, The. Novel by Edith Wharton, published in 1920, and awarded a Pulitzer prize the following year. It was dramatized (1928) by Margaret Ayer Barnes.

Age of Reason, The. Deistic work by Thomas Paine published at Paris, in two parts (Part I, 1794; Part II, 1796). Shortly after the publication of the first part, the author was arrested. Part I asserts the existence of God, suggests that the Word of God is contained in His creation, and deprecates the machinery of national churches. Part II endeavors to point out the fallibility of the Bible by presenting examples of its inconsistency. The work was in its time regarded as revolutionary and has been called "the atheist's bible."

Ager (ā′gėr), Captain. Character in Middleton and Rowley's play A Fair Quarrel, a soldier of delicate and noble nature who makes, in his consideration of a point of family honor, a fine distinction between moral and physical courage.

Ägeri (ā′gẹ.rē). [Also: Aegeri, Egeri.] Small valley in the E part of the canton of Zug, Switzerland.

Ägeri, Lake of. [Also: Lake of Aegeri, Lake of Egeri.] Lake in the canton of Zug, Switzerland. It drains by way of the Lorze River into the Lake of Zug. Length, ab. 3½ mi

Ages, The. Poem by William Cullen Bryant, published in 1821.

Agesander (aj.ẹ.san′dėr) or Agesandros (-dros). fl. 42–21 B.C. Greek sculptor, a native of Rhodes. With Athenodorus and Polydorus of Rhodes he carved the famous sculptured group known as the Laocoön, which is now in the Vatican, and which shows Laocoön and his two sons struggling with the serpents sent by the gods to kill them.

Agésilan de Colchos (à.zhā.zē.läṅ dẹ kol.kos). [English, Agesilan of Colchos.] Principal character in the romance of that name in the eleventh and twelfth books of the Amadis de Gaule.

Agésilan de Colchos. A tragicomedy by Rotrou, produced in 1635 or 1636. It is based on the Amadis.

Agésilas (à.zhā.zē.làs). Tragedy by Pierre Corneille, produced in 1666.

Agesilaus (ą.jes.i.lā′us) or Agesilaos (-os). b. c444 B.C.; d. in Egypt, c360 B.C. King of Sparta (c399–c360); son of Archidamus II of the Eurypontid line of Spartan rulers. He aided the Asiatic Greeks against Persia (396–395 B.C.). Called home to subdue the Corinthian league of Greek states allied against Sparta, he defeated them at the battle of Coronea in Boeotia (394 B.C.) and withstood a series of attacks on Sparta, culminating in a campaign by four armies against the unwalled city (369). He died in Egypt, where he had led a force of Spartan mercenaries.

Agger of Servius Tullius (ag′ėr; sėr′vi.us tul′i.us). Name given to a stretch of the Servian Wall of Rome, extending from the Colline Gate across the low ground to the Esquiline Gate, adjoining the existing Arch of Gallienus, at the foot of the Esquiline. In the middle of the Agger there was a third gate, the Porta Viminalis. The Agger consisted of a great mound of earth, in front of which there was a ditch 30 ft. deep and 100 ft. wide. The mound had a very massive retaining-wall in front, rising 30 ft. above the top of the ditch, and a lighter wall at the back.

Aggershus (äg′ėrs.hös). See Akershus.

Aggtelek (ôg′te.lek). [Also, Agtelek.] Village in NE Hungary, situated on the Czechoslovakian border N of the city of Miskolc. It is noted for its cavern (Hungarian, Baradla), which is, after the one at Postonje, in Yugoslavia, the largest stalactite grotto in Europe.

Agha Jari (ä′gä jä′rē). Region in W Iran, ab. 75 mi. SE of Ahwaz, at the foot of the W slopes of the Zagros Mountains: an important oil-field area and the terminus of a pipe line to Khorramshahr.

Aghlabites (ag′lą.bīts). See Aglabites.

Aghrim (ôg′rim, ôch′-). See Aughrim.

Agiadae (ą.jī′ą.dē). See under Agis I.

Agias (ā′ji.ąs). fl. c740 B.C. Greek cyclic poet of Troezen, in the Peloponnesus; author of the Nostoi (Homeward Voyages) of the Achaean heroes after the siege of Troy.

Agias (ä.yäs′). [Also: Agyia, Ayiá.] Town in Thessaly, N Greece, in the nomos (department) of Larissa, situated at the foot of Mount Ossa. 3,001 (1940).

Agilolfinger (ä.gi.lol′fing.ėr). The family of the earliest dukes of Bavaria. The line began in the 6th century and ended in 788.

Agilulf (ä′gi.lùlf). d. 616. Duke of Turin and king of Lombardy.

Agincourt (aj′in.kōrt; French, à.zhaṅ.kör). [Modern French, Azincourt.] Village in the department of Pas-de-Calais, France, ab. 29 mi. SE of Boulogne, noted for the victory gained there on Oct. 25, 1415, by English bowmen under Henry V over a very much larger force of heavily armed French knights under the Constable d'Albret.

Aginnum (ą.jin′um). Latin name of Agen.

Agion Oros (ä′yôn ô′rôs). [Also: Hagion Oros, Ayion Oros; English, Mount Athos.] Nomos (department) in N Greece, situated in Macedonia. On the mountain of the same name are 20 monasteries, mostly of the Greek Orthodox Church, forming an autonomous community, first established in the 10th century, which promulgated its own constitution in 1783, and renewed it in 1926. Capital, Karyai; pop. 3,100 (1951).

Agira (ä.jē′rä). [Also: San Filippo d'Argirò; ancient name, Agyrium.] Town and commune in SW Italy, on the island of Sicily, in the province of Enna, situated on the Salso River, ab. 30 mi. W of Catania. It is the center of a rich agricultural and sulfur-mining district. The church of San Filippo dates from the 17th century. One of the oldest cities in the interior of Sicily, it flourished under the Greeks and retained its importance under the Romans and later the Moslems and the Normans. Pop. of commune, 15,350 (1936); of town, 14,411 (1936).

Agis I (ā′jis). King of Sparta (c1032 B.C.). He was the reputed founder of the royal line known as the Agiadae.

Agis II. King of Sparta (c427–399 B.C.); victorious at Mantinea in 418 B.C.

Agis III. King of Sparta (338–331 B.C.). He was allied with Persia against Macedon, and was defeated and killed in 331.

Agis IV. King of Sparta (244–240 B.C.); son of Eudamidas II of the Eurypontid line of Spartan rulers. He proposed to recruit additions to the ranks of the Spartans from among the Perioeci, and advocated a redistribution of the landed property. In these measures of reform he was opposed by his colleague, Leonidas II, of the royal line known as the Agiadae, and was, after some transient successes, captured and sentenced to death by the Spartan ephors. Alfieri produced a tragedy which used his story as its basis.

Aglabites (ag'lą.bīts). [Also: Aghlabites, Aglabides (-bīdz).] Arab dynasty which reigned in N Africa (capital at Kairouan) for approximately 100 years, from the beginning of the 9th century to 909. It was succeeded by the Fatimites.

Aglaia (ą.glā'ą). In Greek mythology, one of the three Graces.

Aglaia. Asteroid (No. 47) discovered by R. Luther at Düsseldorf, Germany, on Sept. 15, 1857.

Aglaura (ą.glô'rą). Tragedy by Sir John Suckling, acted in 1637–38 and printed in 1646.

Aglauros (ą.glô'ros), Agraulos (-grô'los), or Agraule (-lē). In Greek mythology, the wife of Cecrops; also, the daughter of Cecrops, noted in legends of Attica.

Agnano (ä.nyä'nō), Lake. [Italian, Lago d'Agnano.] Formerly a small lake, now an open crater, in S Italy, ab. 5 mi. W of Naples, noted for the Grotta del Cane. It was drained in 1870.

Agnes (ag'nęs), Saint. fl. probably in middle of 3rd century. Virgin and child martyr, said to have been beheaded at the age of 12 or 13 after being cast into a brothel. She is the patron saint of young maidens, and the source of the legend that on Saint Agnes's Eve (Jan. 20) a girl might perform a certain ritual and discover the visage of her future husband, a superstition important in Keats's Eve of Saint Agnes. The date of her martyrdom is very uncertain. The Acts of Agnes are regarded as spurious, and the latest studies suggest that she did not suffer under Diocletian (304), but during a persecution just after or before the reign of Decius (251).

Agnès (ä.nyes). Character in Molière's L'École des Femmes, an ingénue. She contrives to make extremely suggestive allusions while speaking with the utmost simplicity of mind. Wycherley took his Country Wife from this character. The name has become proverbial for a person of this kind.

Agnes (ag'nęs), Black. See Dunbar, Agnes.

Agnès (ä.nyes), Mère. See Arnauld, Jeanne Catherine Agnès.

Agnes (ag'nęs), The Eve of Saint. Poem by John Keats, written in 1818.

Agnes' Eve, Saint. Poem by Alfred Tennyson, published in 1842.

Agnes Grey (grā). Novel by Anne Brontë, published (1847) under the pseudonym Acton Bell.

Agnesi (ä.nyä'zē), Maria Gaetana. b. at Milan, 1718; d. there, 1799. Italian mathematician; sister of Maria Teresa Agnesi. Professor at Bologna (1752 et seq.); author of Instituzioni Analitiche (1748; Eng. trans., 1801), and others.

Agnesi, Maria Teresa. b. at Milan, 1724; d. c1780. Italian composer and pianist; sister of Maria Gaetana Agnesi. She composed five operas (including Sofonisbe, Ciro in Armenia, Nitocri, and Insubria Consolato), two piano concertos, and several cantatas.

Agnes of Austria. b. 1281; d. 1364. Daughter of the German king Albert I, and wife (1296 et seq.) of Andrew III of Hungary. She is remembered in history for her unceasing efforts to wreak vengeance against John the Parricide (her first cousin) and all others connected with the murder of her father.

Agnes of Meran (mā.rän'). d. at Poissy, France, 1201. Wife of Philip II of France; daughter of Duke Berthold of Meran. Philip's divorce of his previous wife, Ingeborg of Denmark, was held to be invalid by the Pope, and Philip was thereupon forced by an interdict to give up Agnes.

Agnes of Poitou (pwä.tö'). d. Dec. 14, 1077. Second consort of the emperor Henry III, and daughter of William V, duke of Aquitaine. At the death of Henry III, on Oct. 5, 1056, she became guardian of her son, Henry IV.

Agnes's Eve (ag'nęs.ęz), Saint. Christian feast, celebrated on the night of Jan. 20. It is especially a holiday for young maidens. It was supposed possible by various forms of divination for a girl on this night to see the form of her future husband. A narrative poem by John Keats, The Eve of Saint Agnes, is based on this tradition.

Agnew (ag'nū), David H. b. in Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 24, 1818; d. at Philadelphia, March 22, 1892. American surgeon, professor of clinical surgery (1870) and professor of surgery (1871–89) at University of Pennsylvania. He was chief surgical consultant when President Garfield was shot (1881) by Guiteau.

Agnew, Eliza. b. at New York, Feb. 2, 1807; d. in Ceylon, June 14, 1883. American missionary and teacher.

Agnew, Patrick. b. 1822; d. at Multan, India, April 21, 1848. English civil servant in India, murdered with his companion, Lieutenant W. A. Anderson, by the retainers of Mulráj, dewan (governor) of Multan. It was this incident that precipitated the second Sikh war.

Agni (ä'nyē). See also Anyi.

Agni (ag'ni). In Hindu mythology, the god of fire.

Agni Purana (ag'ni pō.rä'ną). Epic poem (grouped by some scholars with 18 others in the Sanskrit work known collectively as the Puranas and so named because it is supposed to have been communicated by Agni to Vasishtha) devoted ostensibly to the glorification of Siva.

Agno (äg'nō). River in C Luzon, Philippines. It rises in the northern mountains of Mountain Province, and flows S into Pangasinan, where it divides and turns W, entering Lingayen Gulf by channels at Dagupan, Lingayen, San Isidro, and San Fabian. The produce of the N part of the C valley of Luzon is carried by branches of the Agno to Lingayen Gulf. Length, ab. 128 mi.

Agnoëtae (ag.nō.ē'tē). [Also: Agnoïtoe (-ī'tē), Agnoïtes (ag'nō.īts).] Christian sect of the 4th century A.D., which denied the omniscience of God, maintaining that He knows the past only by memory and the future only by inference from the present.

Agnoëtae. [Also: Agnoïtoe, Agnoïtes; Greek, Agnoetai.] Christian sect of the 6th century A.D., followers of Themistius, deacon of Alexandria. The group was notable for its contention that Christ, as man, was ignorant of many things, including the time of the day of judgment.

Agnolo (dä'nyō.lō), Baccio d'. b. at Florence, c1461; d. 1543. Florentine architect.

Agnolo da Siena (ä'nyō.lō dä sye'nä). fl. 1310–c1350. Italian architect and sculptor, with Agostino da Siena.

Agnone (ä.nyō'nā). Town and commune in C Italy, in the province of Campobasso. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Agnus Dei (ag'nus dē'ī). See Adoration of the Lamb.

Agnyi (ä'nyē). See Anyi.

Agobard (ä.gō.bär). b. c799; d. 840. Frankish theologian, archbishop of Lyons (816 et seq.). He was important in the renaissance of scholarship that came into existence for a brief period in western Europe under the aegis of Charlemagne. Said to have had "the clearest head of his time," he was a champion of reason against superstition, denouncing the fallacies involved in persecution for witchcraft, trial by ordeal, judicial duel, image worship, and the magical explanation of storms.

Agora (ag'ǫ.rą). Large irregular area at Athens, Greece, which may be entered beneath the NE angle of the Colonus Agoraeus hill (on which stands the so-called Theseum) by the broad portico-bordered Dromos Street running to the Dipylon Gate, thence passing along the base of the "Theseum" hill, and extending one branch north of the Areopagus, and another around the W end of the Areopagus, and between the Pnyx and the Acropolis. This last portion was especially the political agora, or place of assembly, while the portion north of the Areopagus was more particularly the original commercial agora or market place.

Agoracritus (ag.ō.rak'ri.tus) or Agorakritos (-tos). b. on the island of Paros, in the Aegean Sea; fl. 5th century B.C. Greek sculptor, favorite pupil of Phidias and rival of Alcamenes. He is now remembered chiefly for his Nemesis at Rhamnus, fragments of which are in the British Museum and Athens Museum.

Agosta (ä.gōs'tä). See Augusta, Italy.

Agostini (ä.gō.stē'nē), Leonardo. b. at Siena, Italy; fl. in the 17th century. Italian scholar, appointed inspector of antiquities by Pope Alexander VII. He was editor of a new edition of Paruta's Sicilian Medals and of other works.

Agostini, Paolo. b. at Vallerano, Italy, 1593; d. at Rome in September, 1629. Italian composer, chiefly of sacred music. He was successor (1627) to Ugolini as maestro of the Vatican chapel.

Agostino (ä.gō.stē'nō) and Agnolo da Siena (ä'nyō.lō dä sye'nä). fl. 1310–c1350. Italian architects and sculptors who together designed the Sienese church and convent of Saint Francis and who are often mistakenly treated as brothers. Their best sculptural work is usually considered to have been Bishop Tarlati's tomb at Arezzo, which was destroyed by the French during the Napoleonic period.

Agostino di Duccio (dē dōt'chō). b. at Florence, Italy, c1418; d. at Perugia, Italy, c1498. Florentine sculptor, noted for his glazed terra-cotta reliefs. His façade for the church of San Bernardino at Perugia is considered to be an outstanding example of Italian polychrome architectural adornment.

Agotes (ä.got). See Colliberts.

Agotime (ä.gō.tē'mā). Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting S French Togo. They form a small group and are surrounded by Ewe peoples, but are related culturally and linguistically to the Ga.

Agoult (dä.gö), Marie Catherine Sophie de Flavigny, Comtesse d'. [Pseudonym, Daniel Stern.] b. at Frankfort on the Main, 1805; d. at Paris, 1876. French authoress; mistress of Franz Liszt, by whom she had three children. One of them, Cosima, married Hans von Bülow and later Richard Wagner; another, Blandine, married Emile Olliver. Her novel Nélida contains a thinly veiled account of her breach with Liszt. She was mentioned as "Arabella" in Lettres d'un voyageur, by George Sand; contributed to Revue des deux Mondes; wrote Esquisses morales et politiques (1849), Histoire de la Révolution de 1848 (1851), and others.

Agoust (dä.göst), Bertrand d'. Original name of Pope Clement V.

Agra (ä'grạ). Division of Uttar Pradesh state, in N Union of India, ab. 120 mi. S of Delhi: rice, wheat, sugar, and cotton. Capital, Agra; area, ab. 9,000 sq. mi.; pop. 5,326,768 (1941).

Agra. District of the division of Agra, Union of India. Capital, Agra; area, ab. 1,800 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 1,000,000.

Agra. City in N India, the capital of the division and district of Agra, Union of India, on the Jumna River, ab. 120 mi. S of Delhi. Agra is chiefly famous for its architectural monuments, though its manufactures of carpets, embroideries, and stone work are considerable. It was the capital of the Mogul empire during the last part of the 16th and the first part of the 17th century, and was captured by the British in 1803. The English in Agra were besieged in the fort by the Sepoy mutineers, during July–October, 1857. Pop. 284,149 (1941).

Agrae (ä'grē). Suburb of ancient Athens extending E from opposite the temple of Olympian Zeus over the hills on the S bank of the Ilissus. In it lies the Panathenaic Stadium.

Agramante (ä.grä.män'tā). In Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato and Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, the young king of Africa.

Agramonte (ä.grä.mōn'tā), Arístides. b. at Puerto Príncipe (now Camagüey), Cuba, June 3, 1869; d. at New Orleans, in August, 1931. Cuban bacteriologist, pathologist, and physician, notable as a member of the four-man commission which demonstrated (1901) the transmission of yellow fever by the mosquito Aëdes calopus.

Agramonte y Loinaz (ē loi.näs'), Ignacio. b. at Puerto Príncipe (now Camagüey), Cuba, 1841; killed at Jimaguayú, Cuba, July 1, 1873. Cuban revolutionist and patriot. Leader in the revolts of 1867 and 1868 against Spain, he was commissioned a major general by Céspedes.

Agrarian Party. Group of several Czechoslovak parliamentary parties, among which the republican party was the largest, that came into being with the 20th-century development of Czech and Slovak national sentiment.

Agraulos (ạ.grô'los) or Agraule (-lē). See Aglauros.

Agraviados (ä.grä.BYÄ'ᵀHŌS). In Spanish history, the adherents of the Hapsburgs in Spain in the 18th century, who opposed recognition of the Bourbons; also, the partisans of an unsuccessful absolutist revolt in 1826–28.

Agreda (ä.grā'ᵀHÄ), María de. [Original name, María Fernández Coronel.] b. at Agreda, Spain, 1602; d. there, 1665. Spanish mystic. She was abbess (1627 et seq.) of the convent of the Immaculate Conception at Agreda, and a correspondent of Philip IV, who seems to have given considerable weight to her advice; author of a life of the Virgin Mary, which was later termed indecent by Bossuet and censured by the Sorbonne, despite her assertions of divine revelation. Her Mystic City of God (1668) was for a time under ecclesiastic ban, but this was later lifted.

Agreeable Surprise, The. Farce by John O'Keeffe, produced in 1781.

Agreeb (ag'rēb), Gebel (or Jebel). See Gharib, Gebel.

Agreement of St.-Jean-de-Maurienne. Secret treaty, one of several defining spheres of interest in the Near East, signed in April, 1917, by Great Britain, France, and Italy. In it France and Great Britain promised to Italy a sphere N of Smyrna and possession of the southern third of Anatolia.

Ağrı (äg.rı'). [Also, Karaköse.] Il (province or vilayet) in E Turkey, in mountainous country where subsistence crops, wool, and opium are raised. Capital, Doğubayazit; area, 5,142 sq. mi.; pop. 155,545 (1950).

Ağrı. A former name of Doğubayazit.

Agrib (ag'rib), Gebel (or Jebel). See Gharib, Gebel.

Agricane (ä.grē.kä'nā). In Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato, a king of Tatary who is in command of an enormous army, but is killed by Orlando in single combat.

Agricola (ạ.grik'ō.lạ), Alexander. [Original surname, Ackermann.] b. probably in the Netherlands, c1446; d. at Valladolid, Spain, c1506. Composer of religious music. He was employed at the court of France, by Lorenzo de' Medici, and elsewhere. His works include motets, songs, and several masses.

Agricola, Christoph Ludwig. b. at Ratisbon (now better known as Regensburg), Bavaria, 1667; d. there, 1719. German landscape and portrait painter.

Agricola, Georg. [Original surname, Bauer.] b. at Glauchau, Saxony, March 24, 1494 (or possibly 1490); d. at Chemnitz, Saxony, Nov. 15 (or 21), 1555. German mineralogist, author of numerous scientific books. His most important work was De re metallica, published posthumously in 1556. An English translation by Herbert C. Hoover, later president of the U.S., and Lou H. Hoover, appeared in 1912.

Agricola, Gnaeus Julius. b. at Forum Julii (now Fréjus, France), 37 A.D.; d. at Rome, 93 A.D. Roman soldier and politician; father-in-law of Tacitus. Quaestor in Asia (63) under Salvius Titianus; made commander (70) of the XXth Legion in Britain by Vespasian; governor of Aquitania (74–78); elected consul (78) and assigned to southern Britain, where in seven campaigns (78–84) he extended Roman law to the northern boundary of Perth and Argyll. He may have been poisoned by agents of the emperor. Tacitus' Agricola, an account of his life and accomplishments, is generally considered to be an outstanding example of good classical biography.

Agricola, Johann. [Called "Magister Islebius"; original surname, Schneider, later Schnitter.] b. at Eisleben, Saxony, 1492; d. at Berlin, 1566. German Protestant theologian. He was at one time a follower of Luther, but separated from him in 1536 on the issue of the Antinomian heresy, which Agricola espoused. Author of various theological works and a collection of German proverbs (1529–48).

Agricola, Johann Friedrich. b. at Dobitschen, Saxe-Altenburg, Jan. 4, 1720; d. at Berlin, Nov. 12, 1774. German organist and composer, director (1759–74) of the Royal Chapel at Berlin. He was at one time a pupil of J. S. Bach.

Agricola, Martin. [Original surname, Sohr or Sore.] b. at Sorau, Brandenburg, c1486; d. at Magdeburg, Saxony, June 10, 1556. German writer on music and musical director at Magdeburg, notable for his attempt to improve musical notation. Author of Ein kurtz deutsche Musica (1528), Musica instrumentalis deudsch (1529), and others.

Agricola, Rodolphus. [Original name, Roelof Huysmann (or Huysman).] b. at Baflo, near Groningen, the Netherlands, 1443; d. at Heidelberg, Germany, 1485. Dutch scholar, painter, and musician. He was a lecturer (1482 et seq.) on Greek and Roman literature at Worms and Heidelberg.

Agricultural Adjustment Act. Act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1933 to meet national economic distress by cutting down farm surpluses and increasing agricultural income. Its provisions, including soil-conservation measures, were carried out by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. An important part of the early New Deal legislative program, it was declared unconstitutional in 1936 on the ground that its taxing provisions exceeded the powers allotted to the federal government.

Agricultural Adjustment Act. [Full title, Agricultural Adjustment Administration Act of 1938.] Act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1938 which placed upon a permanent basis the farm-relief and soil-conservation measures of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (1936). This act introduced the policy of the "ever normal granary" through commodity loans and storage against less productive years of the surplus thus obtained. It continued also the earlier provision of benefit payments to farmers and restored the 1909–14 "parity" ratio of agricultural prices.

Agricultural Adjustment Administration. [Called "the AAA."] National agency established by the Agricultural Adjustment Acts (1933, 1938) to administer the farm-relief and soil-conservation measures provided for by these acts. Its activities were altered early in World War II toward the end of increasing food production.

Agricultural Marketing Act of 1929. Measure designed to aid U.S. agricultural production and marketing by means of voluntary coöperation under official agencies. It stressed the development of farm coöperatives, set up a Federal Farm Board of eight members, and established a revolving fund of five hundred million dollars for loans to coöperatives.

Agricultural Wheel. U.S. farm movement initiated (1882) by W. W. Tedford for the purpose of improving agricultural conditions. In 1886 it changed its name to the National Agricultural Wheel; three years later it was amalgamated with the National Farmers' Alliance and Co-operative Union of America.

Agriculture, U.S. Department of. Department of the national government established by an act of the U.S. Congress, May 5, 1862. It is the eighth of the national departments, and was elevated to cabinet status on Feb. 9, 1889. Between 1862 and 1889 it was headed by a commissioner, and confined the scope of its functions to experimentation, research, seed distribution, and the collection and dissemination of information. During this period it established new divisions, including those of botany, chemistry, forestry, and pomology. After attaining cabinet status it expanded rapidly and penetrated numerous special phases of agricultural activity. It carries out service functions (including the activities of the Weather Bureau); administers more than 50 regulatory laws relating to the inspection of foodstuffs in interstate commerce, the supervision of stockyards and packers, and the like; undertakes information and extension activities; pursues important research and planning programs, ranging from studies in animal and plant pathology to erosion control; participates in the control or eradication of animal and plant diseases and pests; supervises crop-credit, insurance, and subsidy plans; and takes part in road-construction programs.

Agrigento (ä.grē.jen'tō). [Former name, Girgenti.] Province in SW Italy, on the island of Sicily. Capital, Agrigento; area, 1,172 sq. mi.; pop. 418,265 (1936), 458,000 (est. 1946).

Agrigento. [Former name, Girgenti; Latin, Agrigentum; Greek, Acragas, Akragas.] City and commune in SW Italy, on the island of Sicily, the capital of the province of Agrigento, situated on the Girgenti River, near the S coast of Sicily. Some war damage was suffered by buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 32,951 (1936); of city, 27,785 (1936).

Agrigentum (ag.ri.jen'tum). [Modern name, Agrigento; Greek, Acragas, Akragas.] City founded (c582 B.C.) by Greek colonists from Gela. In the middle of the 6th century B.C. it was ruled by the tyrant Phalaris; afterward its government was in turn oligarchic and republican. It was most flourishing in the 5th century B.C., when it was a great commercial center, with (according to some estimates) nearly one million inhabitants.

Agrinion (ä.grē'nyôn). [Former name, Vrakhori.] Town in C Greece, in the nomos (department) of Aetolia and Acarnania, Trikhonis province, situated ab. 24 mi. inland from the W coast of Greece, in a tobacco-growing region. 20,981 (1940).

Agrippa (ą.grip'ą), Marcus Vipsanius. b. at Rome, 63 B.C.; d. in Campania, 12 B.C. Roman soldier and politician, who rose from a humble birth to become son-in-law, friend, and counsellor to Augustus. He put down the Aquitanian revolt (38 B.C.) in Gaul, was elected consul (37) and defeated (36) Sextus Pompeius Magnus (often called Pompey the Younger) at Mylae and Naulochus. He became an aedile in 33, and defeated (31) Antony's fleet at Actium. Recalled from the governorship of Syria to become (23) Augustus's chief counsellor, he shared the tribuneship with Augustus (18 et seq.). He is also known for his geographical writings.

Agrippa, Menenius. Character in Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Agrippa Postumus (pos'tū.mus). b. 12 B.C.; d. 14 A.D. Posthumous son of Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa by Julia, the daughter of Augustus; adopted by Augustus in 4 B.C. He was exiled and murdered on the accession of Tiberius, probably by the order of Livia.

Agrippa von Nettesheim (ä.grip'ä fon net'ęs.hīm), Heinrich Cornelius. b. at Cologne, Germany, Sept. 14, 1486; d. at Grenoble, France, Feb. 18, 1535. German physician, philosopher, and student of alchemy. Author of De incertitudine et vanitate scientiarum (1527), De occulta philosophia (1510), and others.

Agrippina (ag.ri.pī'nạ), Julia. [Called Agrippina the Younger.] b. at Oppidum Ubiorum (later named, for her, Colonia Agrippina, now Cologne), c15 A.D.; killed near Baiae (now Baia), on the Bay of Naples, 59. Daughter of Germanicus and Vipsania Agrippina, and wife of Domitius Ahenobarbus, by whom she was mother of Nero. She later married Crispus Passienus, and in 49 her uncle, Claudius, whom she poisoned (54) after excluding his son, Britannicus, from the throne in favor of Nero. She was influential during the early part of Nero's reign, but was eventually killed by him after she threatened to support the claims of Britannicus.

Agrippina, Vipsania. [Called Agrippina the Elder.] b. c13 B.C.; d. at Pandataria, near what is now Naples, 33 A.D. Roman matron, known for the loftiness of her character; youngest daughter of Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa and Julia, daughter of Augustus; wife of Germanicus and mother of Caligula. She accompanied her husband on his military campaigns and was with him at Antioch when he was poisoned (19 A.D.); returned to Rome and publicly denounced the governor of Syria, Calpurnius Piso, as the poisoner; incurred the jealous hatred of Tiberius and Sejanus, and was banished by them to Pandataria; believed by some to have starved herself to death, and by others to have been starved by order of Tiberius.

Agtelek (ôg'te.lek). See Aggtelek.

Agua (ä'gwä). [Spanish, Volcán de Agua.] Volcanic mountain ab. 25 mi. SW of Guatemala City, Guatemala. In 1541 it apparently discharged water, and destroyed by floods the old city of Antigua Guatemala. Elevation, ab. 12,300 ft.

Aguadilla (ä.gwä.тнē'yä). Department in NW Puerto Rico. It is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean on the N, Arecibo and Ponce on the E, Mayaguez (separated by mountains) on the S, and the Atlantic Ocean on the W. Capital, Aguadilla; area, 240 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 100,000.

Aguadilla. City at the NW extremity of Puerto Rico, on the Caribbean Sea, capital of Aguadilla department. It is a seaport from which fruit, cotton, sugar, and other produce is exported. 13,468 (1940).

Aguado (ä.gwä'тнō), Juan de. Spaniard who accompanied Columbus on his second voyage to America (1493), returned to Spain the next year, and was made royal commissioner to investigate the affairs of Hispaniola.

Agua Fria (ä'gwä frē'ä). River in C Arizona, a northern tributary of the Gila River.

Aguán (ä.gwän'). River in N Honduras, that flows NE and empties into the Caribbean Sea, at Santa Rosa de Aguan.

Aguanaval (ä''gwä.nä.вäl'). River in N Mexico, forming part of the border between the states of Durango and Coahuila. It flows NE to Lake Viesca.

Aguascalientes (ä''gwäs.kä.lyen'tās). State in C Mexico, NE of Mexico City. Capital, Aguascalientes; area, 2,499 sq. mi.; pop. 188,104 (1950).

Aguascalientes. City in C Mexico, capital of Aguascalientes state, on the Aguascalientes River: textile mills, tobacco factories, and breweries. There are hot springs in the vicinity (whence the name). 117,409 (1950).

Aguecheek (ā'gū.chēk), Sir Andrew. Character in Shakespeare's comedy, Twelfth Night, a timid, silly, but amusing country squire. He is the friend of Sir Toby Belch.

Agüero (ä.gwā'rō), Cristóbal. b. at San Luis de la Paz, Michoacán, Mexico, 1600; date of death not known. Dominican missionary, who spent the greater part of his life working among the Zapotecan Indians. He left several works on their language.

Agüero, Joaquín de. b. at Puerto Principe (now Camagüey), Cuba, Nov. 15, 1816; executed there, Aug. 12, 1851. Cuban revolutionist. He was a planter of moderate fortune and lofty ideals. In 1843 he freed his slaves and took measures to have them educated. Later he endeavored to bring white immigrants to Cuba. He engaged in the insurrection of 1851, and was captured and shot.

Aguesseau (dȧ.ge.sō), Henri François d'. [Original surname, Daguesseau.] b. at Limoges, France, 1668; d. at Paris, 1751. French jurist and three times chancellor of France (1717–18, 1720–22, 1737–50). A selection of his works was published in two volumes (Paris, 1865) under the title Oeuvres choisies.

Aguilar (ä.gē.lär'). [Also, Aguilar de la Frontera.] Commune in Spain, in the province of Córdoba, ab. 35 mi. S of Córdoba: the center of a rich agricultural district; olives, fruits, and excellent wines are produced in the vicinity. The upper town has a Moorish castle. 16,091 (1940).

Aguilar (ą.gwil'ąr, ä.gē.lär'), Grace. b. at London, 1816; d. at Frankfort on the Main, 1847. English writer on Jewish history, best known for The Spirit of Judaism (1842). She also wrote several novels, including Home Influence (1847) and The Vale of Cedars (1850).

Aguilar (ä.gē.lär'), Manuel. b. c1800; d. in Guatemala, June 6, 1846. Central American statesman, president (1837–38) of Costa Rica. He occupied various public posts in Costa Rica, represented that state in the assembly of 1828, and was elected president on April 7, 1837. He was deposed by Carillo in May, 1838.

Águilas (ä'gē.läs). [Also, San Juan de las Águilas.] Commune in Spain, in the province of Murcia, situated on a peninsula on the Mediterranean coast, ab. 40 mi. SW of Cartagena: seaport, important for the export of the lead and copper ores of the Sierra Almagrera; trade in esparto grass; medieval castle. 15,166 (1940).

Aguilera (ä.gē.lā'rä), Francisco Javier (or Xavier). b. at Santa Cruz, Bolivia, c1775; killed at Valle Grande, Bolivia, Nov. 23, 1828. Royalist guerrilla chief of Charcas (approximately coextensive with what is now Bolivia), notorious for his cruelty. He received a commission as brigadier general, and for a time was military commandant of Santa Cruz. In 1828, with a small force, he captured a Spanish post, and proclaimed Ferdinand VII as king. He was soon captured and shot.

Aguinaldo (ä.gē.näl'dō), Emilio. b. near Cavite, Luzon, Philippine Islands, c1869—. Philippine patriot and insurrectionary leader. He headed Philippine forces in revolt against Spain (1896–98) and in resistance to the U.S. (1899–1901). Captured by General Frederick Funston at Palawan, he took an oath of allegiance to U.S.

Aguirre (ä.gēr'rā), José Antonio. b. at Bilbao, Spain, 1904—. Basque nationalist and statesman. Trained in law, he became leader of the Basque Catholic youth in 1929, mayor of Biscay in 1931, and (having served as deputy for Navarre and Biscay in the Spanish Cortes), was elected president of the newly established Basque republic in 1936. His book De Guernica a Nueva York Pasando por Berlin describes his experiences during and after the Spanish Civil War (1936–39). In 1942–43 he was visiting professor at Columbia University.

Aguirre, Josef Sáenz de. b. at Logroño, in Castile, March 24, 1630; d. at Rome, Aug. 19, 1699. Spanish cardinal and theologian, author of Defensio cathedrae S. Petri (1682), Collectio maxima Conciliorum (1693), Theologia S. Anselmi, and others.

Aguirre, Lope de. [Called "Aguirre the Madman."] b. at Oñate, Spain, c1508; killed Oct. 27, 1561. Spanish adventurer who early in life drifted to America, engaged in several rebellions, was outlawed, and joined the expedition of Pedro de Ursua in search of El Dorado and the kingdom of the Omaguas on the upper Amazon (1559). Ursua was murdered by Aguirre at Machiparo (1561), and Fernando de Guzman (whom Aguirre afterward murdered) was made general with Aguirre as his lieutenant. The band declared themselves rebels, proceeded down the Amazon, plundering Indian villages, and finally reaching the island of Margarita (July 20, 1561), where Aguirre murdered the governor, and robbed the royal treasury. He was captured at Barquisimeto, and shot by his own followers.

Aguirre Cerda (ser'тнä), Pedro. b. 1879; d. Nov. 25, 1941. Chilean politician, landowner, and student of viticulture, elected (1938) president of Chile as candidate of the so-called Popular Front coalition. His presidency was marked by strict neutrality with reference to the war in Europe. A millionaire and political "moderate," he received last-minute electoral support from the Nacistas (Chilean Nazis), who later (1939) re-formed as the "Popular Socialist Vanguard" and opposed his government. Dissension among Communist, Socialist, and Radical party members of the Popular Front was bitter throughout Aguirre Cerda's administration and he withdrew (1941) in favor of the minister of the interior.

Agujari (ä.gö.yä'rē), Lucrezia. [Called "La Bastardella" or "La Bastardina."] b. at Ferrara, Italy, 1743; d. at Parma, Italy, May 18, 1783. Italian soprano. Mozart observed after hearing her at Parma (1770) that her voice ranged a full octave higher than that of the average professional; her illegitimate birth, which brought her the sobriquet "La Bastardella," was openly admitted and used freely to increase public interest in her career.

Agulhas (ą.gul'ąs; Portuguese, ą.gö'lyąsh), Cape. Southernmost point in Africa, ab. 100 mi. SE of the Cape of Good Hope.

Agusan (ä.gö'sän). Province of the Philippine Islands, occupying most of the NE corner of Mindanao island. It is bounded on the NE by Surigao, on the N by the Mindanao Sea, on the W by Misamis Oriental and Bukidnon, and on the S by Davao. The Diuata Mountains form the E boundary of the province, and most of the C part is occupied by the Agusan River and its drainage basin. Capital, Butuan; area, 4,120 sq. mi.; pop. 126,448 (1948).

Agustina (ä.gös.tē'nä). [Called the "Maid of Saragossa."] d. at Cueta, Spain, June, 1857. Spanish patriot, noted for her bravery in the defense of Saragossa (1808–09).

Agustini (ä.gö.stē'nē), Delmira. b. 1886; killed by her husband, 1914. Uruguayan modernist poet, considered by some critics the greatest of Spanish-American poetesses. Author of El Libro blanco (1907) and others.

Agyia (ą.yä'). See Agias.

Agylla (ą.jil'ą). See Caere.

Agyrium (ą.jir'i.um). Ancient name of Agira.

Ahab (ā'hab). d. c853 B.C. Israel's seventh ruler (c875–853 B.C.); son of King Omri. He was the husband of Jezebel, daughter of the king of Tyre, and the father-in-law of the heir to Judah. His astute diplomacy brought Israel to its peak of power and united adjoining realms by war (854) against Assyria's Shalmaneser II; he was killed at Ramoth Gilead in battle against Benhadad of Damascus. His acquiescence in the worship of Baal and Astarte by his wife and others provoked the anger of Elijah.

Ahab, Captain. Whaler in Moby Dick (1851), a novel by Herman Melville. His unceasing quest for the white whale exemplifies the theme of the book.

Ahaggar (ą.hag'ąr). Large plateau and mountainous region in N central Africa, in the Sahara, in the SE part of Algeria ab. 700 mi. NW of Lake Chad. It rises in some places to more than 9,000 ft. The chief place in the region is Ideles.

Ahala (ą.hā'lą), Gnaeus Servilius Structus. Roman patrician, master of the horse in 439 B.C. (according to the common chronology), and slayer of the popular leader Spurius Maelius.

Ahanta (ä.hän'tą). District of Gold Coast colony, W Africa, in the W part. The chief town in the district is Axim.

Ahanta. [Also, Akanta.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SW part of the Gold Coast, to the E of Axim.

Aharon (ä.hä.rōn'). Hebrew name of Aaron.

Ahasuerus (ą.has.ū.ē'rus). In the Old Testament, a Persian shah, mentioned as the father of Darius the Mede (Dan. ix. 1). He has been variously identified as Astyages and Cyaxeres.

Ahasuerus. In the Old Testament, a great ruler of Persia, and husband of Esther, probably identical with Xerxes I. He is mentioned in Ezra, iv. 6., and throughout the Book of Esther.

Ahasuerus. Name sometimes given to the legendary Wandering Jew.

Ahava (ą.hā'vą). In the Old Testament, the name of a place and river, or canal, in Babylon at which the Jews assembled who formed the second expedition which returned to Jerusalem with Ezra. Its exact location is unknown. Ezra, viii. 15.

Ahaz (ā'haz). d. c727 B.C. King of Judah, now believed to have reigned from c731 B.C. to c727 B.C. He was a contemporary of the prophet Isaiah. On his accession to the throne, which took place in his youth, Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, formed a conspiracy against him. Contrary to the advice of Isaiah he sought (and obtained) the assistance of the Assyrian king, to whom he paid homage and tribute. (This latter fact is mentioned both in the Bible and in cuneiform inscriptions. In the latter he is called Iauhazi, which would indicate that his name is shortened from Joahaz.) The price of Assyrian aid was paid for partly in gold (which Ahaz obtained from the Temple at Jerusalem) and partly by a loss of independence. Ahaz was bitterly criticized by Isaiah and others, both for his sacrilegious use of the Temple treasure and for his political dalliance with the Assyrians. He was succeeded by his son Hezekiah. 2 Kings, xvi.

Ahaziah (ā.hą.zī'ą). In the Old Testament, son of Ahab and king of Israel, c853–851 B.C. 1 Kings, xxii. 40.

Ahaziah. In the Old Testament, son of Jehoram and Athaliah, and king of Judah, c844–c843 B.C. After his accidental death at Jezreel he was succeeded by his mother. 2 Kings, viii. 25.

Ahenobarbus (ą.hē.nō.bär'bus, ą.hen.ō-). A plebeian family of Rome, of the gens Domitia, to which the emperor Nero belonged.

Ahenobarbus, Gnaeus Domitius. fl. 104–92 B.C. Roman official; father of Lucius Domitius Ahenobarbus. A tribune (104 B.C.), pontifex maximus (103 B.C.), consul (96 B.C.), and censor (92 B.C.), he framed the law, later repealed by Sulla, that certain types of priests should be selected by the lay citizenry rather than by each other.

Ahenobarbus, Lucius Domitius. fl. 34–48 B.C. Roman official and political opportunist; son of Gnaeus Domitius Ahenobarbus. He was a consul in 54 B.C. and Caesar's successor as governor of Gaul in 49 B.C. He opposed both Caesar and Pompey, but later attached himself to the latter and was slain after the defeat at Pharsalus.

Ahhotpe (ä.hōt'pe). See Aahhotep.

Ahi (u'hē). See Vritra.

Ahijah (ą.hī'ją) or Ahiah (ą.hī'ą). In the Old Testament, the name of several persons, of whom the most notable was a son of Ahitub and high priest in the reign of Saul (1 Sam. xiv. 3, 18). He is probably the same as Ahimelech, high priest at Nob, who was killed by Saul for assisting David.

Ahimaaz (ą.him'ą.az). In the Old Testament, the father of Ahinoam, wife of Saul. 1 Sam. xiv. 50.

Ahimaaz. In the Old Testament, a high priest, the son and successor of Zadok. He distinguished himself by his services to King David during the revolt of Absalom. 2 Sam. xv, xviii.

Ahimelech (ą.him'ę.lek). In the Old Testament, a high priest at Nob; father of Abiathar, the friend of David. He gave to David, who was fleeing from Saul, the sacred bread and the sword of Goliath from the tabernacle. For this Saul slew him. 1 Sam. xxi. 1–9. See also Ahijah.

Ahimelech. [Also, Abimelech.] In the Old Testament, a priest in David's time; son of Abiathar and grandson of Ahimelech, the priest at Nob. 1 Chron. xviii. 16.

Ahir (ä.ēr'). See Air.

Ahithophel (ą.hith'ō.fel). In the Old Testament, a counselor of King David and, later, of Absalom in his revolt against his father. He was famous for his political wisdom, and his defection caused David great apprehension. His advice, however, was rejected by Absalom, and he thereupon retired to his home, set his affairs in order, and hanged himself. He is thought to have been the grandfather of Bathsheba.

Ahl (äl), Henry Hammond. b. at Hartford, Conn., 1869; d. at Newburyport, Mass., May 21, 1953. American painter and sculptor. He studied with Gérôme, at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris. His works include church murals and many portraits.

Ahlat (ä.lät'). [Also, Akhlat.] Town in E Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Erzurum, on the NW shore of Lake Van over a mile above sea level: a minor trading center. Near it are the ruins of the ancient Khelat. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Ahle (ä'lę), Johann Georg. b. at Mühlhausen, in Thuringia, Germany, 1651; d. there, Dec. 2, 1706. German composer and organist; son of Johann Rudolph Ahle.

Ahle, Johann Rudolph. b. at Mühlhausen, in Thuringia, Germany, Dec. 24, 1625; d. there, in July, 1673. German composer and organist. His hymn, Liebster Jesu, wir sind hier, is still occasionally sung in Germany.

Ahlen (ä'lęn). City in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated on the Werse River, ab. 19 mi. SE of Münster: shoe factories; zinc industry; manufactures tools, machines, vehicles, and other metallurgical articles; cannery; coal mines are in the vicinity. The population is predominantly Catholic. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. 33,141 (1950).

Ahlheide (äl'hī.dę). A barren plain in the C part of Jutland, Denmark.

Ahlquist (äl'kvist), August Engelbert. b. at Kuopio, Finland, Aug. 7, 1826; d. Nov. 29, 1889. Finnish philologist, poet, and traveler in Russia and Siberia. He was appointed (1862) professor of Finnish language and literature at the University of Helsingfors (now Helsinki).

Ahlwardt (äl'värt), Christian Wilhelm. b. at Greifswald, Prussia, Nov. 23, 1760; d. there, April 12, 1830. German philologist, rector successively of several public schools, and later professor of ancient literature at the University of Greifswald. His work was chiefly upon the Greek poets (edited Pindar, 1820).

Ahlwardt, Theodor Wilhelm. b. July 4, 1828; d. Nov. 1, 1909. German orientalist; son of Christian Wilhelm Ahlwardt. He was professor of oriental languages at the University of Greifswald.

Ahmadabad (ä"mąd.ą.bäd'). See Ahmedabad.

Ahmadnagar (ä.mąd.nug'ėr). [Also: Ahmednagar, Ahmednuggur.] District of Bombay, Union of India, ab. 100 mi. E of the city of Bombay: teakwood, wheat, and millet. Capital, Ahmadnagar; area, 6,646 sq. mi.; pop. 1,142,229 (1941).

Ahmadnagar. [Also: Ahmednagar, Ahmednuggur.] City in W India, the capital of the district of Ahmadnagar, Union of India, ab. 120 mi. E of the city of Bombay: important road junction and trading center. In the 15th and 16th centuries it was the capital of a Mohammedan kingdom. It surrendered to the British under Wellington in 1803. Pop. 54,193 (1941).

Ahmad Shah (ä'mäd shä). [Also, Ahmad Shah Durrani (or Durani).] b. 1724; d. 1773. Ruler of Afghanistan (1747 et seq.).

Ahmed (ä'med). [Full name, Sidi Ahmed-esh-Sherif es-Senusi (or Senussi).] b. 1872; d. at Medina, Arabia, 1933. Chieftain (1902–18) of the Senusi, a Moslem sect in Africa; successor to his uncle, Senusi al-Mahdi. He resisted (1904–11) the French, who succeeded in conquering Oudai from the Senusi; as a supporter of the pan-Islamic movement, he aided (1911) the Turks in their struggle against the Italian invasion of Tripolitania and Cyrenaica; after the conclusion (1912) of the Treaty of Lausanne, he independently pursued a military campaign against the Italians. During World War I he sided with the Central Powers and carried out attacks against British positions in Egypt and the Sudan; his forces were defeated at Agaya (Feb. 26, 1916) and at Siwa (February, 1917). He left (1918) Cyrenaica and settled in Turkey, where he was active in the pan-Islamic movement.

Ahmed I. [Also, Achmet I.] b. 1589; d. Nov. 22, 1617. Sultan of Turkey; son of Mohammed III, whom he succeeded (1603). He began his reign with promise, but later became dissolute. He concluded (1606) the peace of Sitvatorok with Austria, abolishing, for a large settlement, Austrian payment of tribute and observing for the first time certain principles of modern international law in diplomatic relations. He fought (1603–12) an unsuccessful war with Persia under Abbas I.

Ahmed II. [Also, Achmet II.] b. 1642; d. Feb. 6, 1695. Sultan of Turkey; son of Ibrahim, brother of Suleiman II, whom he succeeded in 1691. He lost control of Hungary at the battle of Slankamen (1691) in which the grand vizier Mustafa Kuprili was defeated and slain by the Austrians under Louis William I (of Baden).

Ahmed III. [Also, Achmet III.] b. 1673; d. 1736. Sultan of Turkey (1703–30); son of Mohammed IV, brother of Mustafa II, whom he succeeded. He became involved through Charles XII of Sweden in a war with Russia under Peter the Great, which ended in the Peace of the Pruth (1711). He took Morea and the Ionian islands from Venice (1715), but was defeated at Peterwardein (1716) and Belgrade (1717) by the Austrians under Prince Eugene, and signed the Treaty of Passarowitz in 1718. Compelled by the Janizaries to resign, he died of poison in prison. He was succeeded by his nephew, Mahmud I.

Ahmedabad (ä''med.ä.bäd'). [Also, Ahmadabad.] District of Bombay state, Union of India, ab. 280 mi. N of the city of Bombay, at the head of the Bay of Cambay: cotton and wheat. Capital, Ahmedabad; area, ab. 3,800 sq. mi.; pop. 1,372,171 (1941).

Ahmedabad. [Also, Ahmadabad.] City in W India, capital of the district of Ahmedabad, on the Sabarmati River, ab. 50 mi. N of the head of the Bay of Cambay. One of the most important manufacturing cities of India, it is now the second in India in the production of cotton and has become highly industrialized. It is the former home of Mohandas K. Gandhi. It was captured by the British in 1780, and was ceded to them in 1818. The Jumma Musjid of Ahmedabad, built by Ahmed Shah in the early 15th century, is one of the most beautiful of mosques. The gross dimensions are 382 by 258 ft., three sides of the court being surrounded by a colonnaded gallery, and the sanctuary, 95 ft. deep, occupying one end. The sanctuary contains 260 columns, which support three rows each of five domes, the central one of which is the largest and highest, flanked by two which are higher than the other 12. The front facing the court is formed by a fine screen, with three pointed arches, flanked on each side by a lower arcade. 591,267 (1941).

Ahmed Bey (ä'med bā). [Also, Achmet Bey.] d. July 16, 1822. Turkish commander in the Greek war of independence. He was repulsed (May 27, 1821) by the Greeks in an attack on the fortified post at Valtetzi.

Ahmed Fuad II (fō.äd'). b. at Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 16, 1952—. King of Egypt (1952 et seq.); son of King Farouk. After the forced abdication of his father in July, 1952, the six-month-old crown prince was named king and a council of regents was established to rule in his name.

Ahmednagar or Ahmednuggur (ä''med.nug'ėr). See Ahmadnagar.

Ahmedpur (ä.med.pör'). [Also, East Ahmedpur.] Town in the state of Bahawalpur, Pakistan, S of the Sutlej River. Cotton and wheat are raised intensively in the area around the city as a result of the irrigation from the dams on the Sutlej. Located on a railroad, the town is a large trading and shipping center. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Ahmed Riza Bey (ä'med rē.zä' bā). b. c1870; d. 1930. Turkish politician. Active in the Young Turk party, he served (1908) as president of the Turkish parliament and was a member of the Turkish peace commission after World War I.

Ahmed Shah (shä). [Also, Ahmed Mirza.] b. 1898; d. 1930. Last shah of Persia in the Kajar dynasty. He ruled under a regency (1909–14) following the deposition of his father, Mohammed Ali. He lived in Paris (1923 et seq.) and was deposed (1925) in favor of Riza Shah Pahlavi by the National Assembly when he declined to return.

Ahmes Papyrus (ä'mēz). [Also, Rhind Papyrus.] The most important surviving work of ancient Egyptian mathematics, containing tables of unit fractions and numerous questions involving linear equations arising from problems in mensuration. It was copied c1650 B.C. by a scribe named Ahmes from an older treatise.

Ahn (än), Johann Franz. b. at Aix-la-Chapelle (now Aachen, Germany), Dec. 15, 1796; d. at Neuss, Germany, Aug. 21, 1865. German teacher and grammarian, noted for his methods of teaching modern languages. He published The Poetry of Germany (1859), and numerous grammars.

Ahnen (ä'nẹn), Die. Series of historical romances by Gustav Freytag, illustrating German history (published 1870–80). It comprises Ingo und Ingraban, Das Nest der Zaunkönige, Die Brüder vom deutschen Hause, Markus König, Die Geschwister, and Aus einer kleinen Stadt.

Ahnfeld (än'felt), Arvid Wolfgang Nathanael. b. Aug. 16, 1845; d. Feb. 17, 1890. Swedish journalist, author of a History of the Literature of the World (1874–76), and other encyclopedic works.

Aholibamah (ạ.hol.i.bā'mạ). One of the wives of Esau. Gen. xxxvi. 2.

Aholibamah. Name of an Edomite tribe.

Aholibamah. Character in Byron's Heaven and Earth, the proud, ambitious granddaughter of Cain.

Ahom (ä'hôm). Originally, a Thai-speaking people who in 1229 founded a kingdom which by the 18th century ruled much of Assam (which owes its name to them).

Ahoskie (ạ.hos'ki). Town in NE North Carolina, ab. 40 mi. W of the Atlantic coast. It is a local trading center for tobacco, some cotton, and light lumber products manufactured in the area. 3,579 (1950).

Ah Puch (ä pöch'). In Maya religion, the lord of death and, in one of his aspects, the deity who presided over the ninth layer of the underworld.

Ahr (är). River in W Germany, in the former Rhine Province of Prussia, which flows generally NE and joins the Rhine at Sinzig (above Bonn). On its banks are produced the noted Ahr wines. Length, ab. 55 mi.

Ahrens (ä'rẹns), Franz Heinrich Ludolf. b. at Helmstedt, Germany, June 6, 1809; d. at Hanover, Germany, Sept. 24, 1881. German philologist, noted as a student of the Greek dialects. Author of De Graecae linguae dialectis (1839–43).

Ahrens, Heinrich. b. at Kniestedt, Prussia, 1808; d. at Salzgitter, Prussia, Aug. 2, 1874. German philosophical writer and jurist, professor at Brussels (1834–50), at Gratz (1850–59), and at Leipzig (1859).

Ahrensbök (ä'rẹns.bėk). [Also, Ahrensböck.] Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, British Zone, formerly the province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, NW of Lübeck: manufactures rubber, asbestos, cotton and woolen textiles, and furniture. The Marienkirche (Church of Mary), in the Gothic style, dates from 1328. Prussia ceded the place to Oldenburg (Enclave of Eutin) in 1867. It has a predominantly Protestant population. 10,169 (1950).

Ahrensburg (ä'rẹns.bůrk). Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, British Zone, formerly the province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, NE of Hamburg, of which it is a residential suburb:

electrical, metallurgical, cement, and foodstuff industries. The population is predominantly Protestant. 17,586 (1950).

Ahrweiler (är'vī.lėr). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Ahr River ab. 20 mi. S of Cologne, in a wine-growing community. 6,688 (1947).

Ahtena (ä'te.nä). North American Indian tribe inhabiting the Copper River area, Alaska. The language is of the Athabaskan family.

Ahuachapán (ä.wä.chä.pän'). Department in W El Salvador, bordering on Guatemala and the Pacific Ocean. It is the chief commercial and industrial department of the country, and has a widely varied agriculture and some mining. Capital, Ahuachapán; area, 804 sq. mi.; pop. 103,198 (est. 1942).

Ahuachapán. City in W El Salvador, capital of Ahuachapán department: distribution center for cereals, coffee, sugar, and tobacco. 10,290 (1950).

Ahuizotl or Ahuitzotl (ä.wē'tsō.tl). d. 1502. Aztec chief of Tenochtitlan (in what is now Mexico) from 1486.

Ahumada (ä.ö.mä'тнä), Duke of. [Title of Pedro Girón; additional title, Marqués de las Amarillas.] b. at San Sebastián, Spain, 1788; d. at Madrid, May 17, 1842. Spanish politician and general, chief of the general staff of the Spanish army in the war of independence, minister of war for a short time in 1820, member of the regency during the minority of Isabella, and again minister of war in 1835.

Ahumada y Villalon (ē вē.lyä.lōn'), Agustín de. [Title, Marqués de las Amarillas.] b. c1700; d. at Mexico City, Feb. 6, 1760. Spanish general and administrator. He distinguished himself in the Italian and Peninsular wars, and served (Nov. 10, 1755 et seq.) as viceroy of Mexico.

Ahura Mazda (ä'hö.rä mäz'dä). [Also: Ormazd, Ormuzd; Eng. trans., "The Wise Lord."] Good Spirit in the dual system of Zoroaster. He is the modern Persian Ormazd or Ormuzd.

Ahuréi (ä.ö.rā'). [Also, Aurai.] Seaport on the island of Rapa, Austral Islands, South Pacific: a coaling station on the steamship route from Panama to New Zealand and Sydney. It is a French possession.

Ahvenanmaa (ä've.nän.mä'). [Also: Aaland (or Aland Islands; Swedish, Åland or Ålandsöerna.] Group of about 300 small islands at the entrance of the Gulf of Bothnia, belonging to Finland. They were ceded to Russia by Sweden in 1809 and remained Russian until 1917 when Finland and the islands became independent. In 1921 they were awarded to Finland as an autonomous department by the League of Nations. Capital, Maarianhamina; area, ab. 581 sq. mi.; pop. 22,569 (1951).

Ahwaz (ä.wäz', -hwäz'). City in W Iran, in Khuzistan, on the Karun River ab. 70 mi. NE of the city of Abadan. At this point several oil pipe lines join and run into Abadan and the refineries there. Near here was a bridge of boats which made it possible for Nearchus to join the land forces of Alexander in 325 B.C. The town was an ancient residence of Persian kings, and a flourishing center under the Arabs in the early Middle Ages. 30,000 (1942).

Ah, Wilderness! Comedy by Eugene O'Neill, produced in 1932.

Ai (ī). See also Ai River.

Ai (ā'ī). In the Old Testament, a city of the Canaanites, in the territory of Benjamin, ab. 10 mi. N of Jerusalem. It was conquered by Joshua. Josh. vii. 1–5.

Aiblinger (ī'bling.ėr), Johann Kaspar. b. at Wasserburg, Bavaria, Feb. 23, 1779; d. at Munich, May 6, 1867. German composer of religious music.

Aicard (ā.kär), Jean. b. at Toulon, France, 1848; d. 1921. French poet, author, and playwright. Among his works are Les Jeunes croyances (1867), Poèmes de Provence (1874), La Chanson de l'enfant (1876), Le Père Lebonnard (1889), Le Manteau du roi (1907), and others.

A.I.C.C. See All-India Congress Committee.

Aichi (ī.chē). Prefecture of Japan, in C Honshu. The area, which is of considerable industrial importance, was heavily bombed by the U.S. Air Force in World War II. Capital, Nagoya; area, 1,950 sq. mi.; pop. 3,390,585 (1950).

Aïda (ä.ē'dạ). Opera in four acts composed by Giuseppe Verdi, with libretto by Ghislanzoni, first performed at the Cairo Opera House at Cairo, Egypt, on Dec. 24, 1871.

Aidan (ā'dạn). d. 606. King of Scottish Dalriada. In 575, at the council of Drumceat, he declared the independence of his kingdom, which had been formed in the 5th century by emigrants from Irish Dalriada, and which had hitherto been treated as an Irish dependency.

Aidan, Saint. [Also, Aedhan.] d. 651. Irish monk, first bishop of Lindisfarne, and founder of the church in Northumbria, to which he was sent by the monks of Hii or Iona in answer to a request by King Oswald that someone be dispatched to his realm in order to convert his heathen subjects. After the defeat (642) of Oswald by Penda, Aidan joined Oswin, king of the Deirans.

Aïdé (ä.ē.dā', ī.dā'), Hamilton. b. at Paris, c1829; d. 1906. English novelist and poet. Son of an Armenian father and English mother, he was for a time (1845–52) an officer in the British army. His poetic works include Eleanore and Other Poems (1856), The Romance of the Scarlet Leaf (1865), and Songs Without Music (1882); his novels include Rita (1859), The Marstons (1868), Passages in the Life of a Lady (1887), and others.

Aid-el-ma (īd.el.mä'). See under Adullam.

Aidenn (ā'dẹn). Paradise: an Anglicized form of the Arabic for Eden, used, for the rhyme's sake, by Edgar Allan Poe in The Raven.

Aïdin (ī.din'). See Aydin.

Aiea (ä.ē.ā'ä). Town in Hawaii, in the S part of the island of Oahu, NW of Honolulu, touching on the E side of Pearl Harbor. 3,714 (1950).

Aigai (ī'gī). [Modern name, Nimrud-Kalessi.] In ancient geography, a town in Aeolia, Asia Minor. On its site are the ruins of various ancient structures.

Aigaion Pelagos (e.ye'ôn pe'lä.gôs). Greek name of the Aegean Sea.

Aigaiou (e.ye'ö), Nesoi. Modern Greek name of the Aegean Islands.

Aigina (e'yē.nä). See Aegina.

Aigion (e'yôn). [Also: Aiyion, Aegion, Aegium.] Town in S Greece, in the nomos (department) of Achaea, Aiyalia province, situated on the NW coast of the Peloponnesus on the Gulf of Corinth, ab. 22 mi. E of Patras: railroad station; exports currants. 16,047 (1940).

Aigle (egl). See also Laigle.

Aigle. [German, Aelen.] Small town in S Switzerland, in the canton of Vaud, on the Grande Eau River, near the Rhône, S of Villeneuve. 3,918 (1941).

Aiglon (le.glôṅ), L'. See Napoleon II.

Aiguebelle (eg.bel). Small town in SE France, in the department of Savoie, ab. 17 mi. E of Chambéry. Here, in 1742, the French and Spaniards defeated the Sardinians.

Aiguebelle (deg.bel), Paul Alexandre Neveue d'. b. Jan. 7, 1831; d. Feb. 21, 1875. French naval officer, in the Chinese service during the Taiping rebellion (1862–64).

Aigueperse (eg.pers). Town in S central France, in the department of Puy-de-Dôme, ab. 19 mi. NE of Clermont-Ferrand. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Aiguesmortes or Aigues-Mortes (eg.môrt). [Latin, Aquae Mortuae.] Town in S France, in the department of Gard, near the Mediterranean, ab. 22 mi. SW of Nîmes, founded by Saint Louis in 1246. From here he embarked on his Crusades (1248 and 1270) to Egypt and Tunis. The modern town has salt works and fisheries. Its fortifications, constructed (1270–85) by Philip III, are among the most remarkable in France. The town has a theater, hôtel de ville (town hall), and the Church of Notre-Dame-de-Sablons. 3,616 (1946).

Aiguille d'Argentière (e.gwēy' dȧr.zhäṅ.tyer). Alpine peak in E France, NE of Mont Blanc. 12,832 ft.

Aiguille de la Grande-Sassière (dẹ lȧ gräṅd.sȧ.syer). One of the chief peaks of the Tarentaise Alps, France, on the Italian border. 12,325 ft.

Aiguille du Midi (dü mē.dē). Alpine peak NE of Mont Blanc. 12,605 ft.

Aiguille du Midi. Peak in the Alps of Oisans, Isère, France. Elevation, ab. 11,025 ft.

Aiguille Verte (vert). Alpine peak NE of Mont Blanc. 13,540 ft.

Aiguillon (e.gwē.yôṅ). [Latin, Acilium.] Town in SW France, in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, on the Lot River near its junction with the Garonne, ab. 16 mi. NW of Agen. It has Roman ruins and an 18th-century castle of the dukes of Aiguillon. 2,778 (1946).

Aiguillon (de.gwē.yôṅ), Armand de Vignerot du Plessis de Richelieu, Duc d'. b. 1750; d. at Hamburg, 1800. French aristocrat, republican sympathizer during the first days of the French Revolution; son of Emmanuel Armand Vignerot du Plessis de Richelieu, Duc d'Aiguillon. Despite his renunciation of aristocratic privilege, he fell under suspicion (1792) and was compelled to flee France.

Aiguillon, Emmanuel Armand Vignerot du Plessis de Richelieu, Duc d'. b. 1720; d. 1782. French politician, minister of foreign affairs (1771–74) under Louis XV. He was related to Cardinal Richelieu, and linked himself to the group at court which opposed Madame de Pompadour and the Jansenists.

Aigun (ī.gŏn'). [Also: Aihun (-hŏn'); Chinese, Heilungkiang-cheng or Heilungkiang-chieng.] City in NE China, in the province of Heilungkiang, Manchuria, on the Amur River. It was opened to international trade in 1905. Important placer gold mines are located nearby. 38,112 (est. 1931).

Aijalon (ā'ja.lŏn, ī'ja-). [Also, Ajalon.] In Biblical geography, a town in Palestine, the later Yâlo, ab. 14 mi. NW of Jerusalem.

Aikawa (ä.ē.kä.wä). City in Japan, situated on the W coast of the island of Sado, ab. 165 mi. NW of Tokyo. There are rich gold and silver mines in the area. 8,621 (1945).

Aikawa, Yoshisuke. b. in Yamaguchi prefecture, Japan, 1880—. Japanese industrialist, active in the industrial development of Manchuria when it was under Japanese domination.

Aiken (ā'kĕn). [Called the "Polo Capital of the South."] City in W South Carolina, county seat of Aiken County: notable as a winter resort. It has textile mills, kaolin refineries, granite quarries, and lumber mills. It was platted in 1834 and incorporated in 1835. Since 1951 Aiken has had a great increase in population due to the construction ab. 15 mi. S of the city, on the Savannah River, of a major plant of the Atomic Energy Commission. 7,083 (1950).

Aiken, Charles Avery. b. at Georgia, Vt., 1872—. American muralist and print-maker. He originated and first exhibited prints produced from plaster blocks. Examples of his work may be seen at the National Collection of Fine Arts, Washington, D.C., and elsewhere.

Aiken, Conrad Potter. b. at Savannah, Ga., Aug. 5, 1889—. American poet, anthologist, critic, and fiction writer. A leader among the "new poets" immediately after World War I, he was one of the editors (1916 et seq.) of The Dial; awarded (1929) Pulitzer prize for Selected Poems. Author also of Earth Triumphant (1914), The Jig of Forslin (1916), The Charnel Rose (1918), Priapus and the Pool (1922), John Deth (1930), Time in the Rock (1936), and And in the Human Heart (1940); novels, including Blue Voyage (1927), Great Circle (1933), King Coffin (1935), and The Conversation (1940); anthologies, including Twentieth Century American Poetry (1945), and A Comprehensive Anthology of American Poetry; and the autobiographical Ushant (1952).

Aiken, George L. b. at Boston, Dec. 19, 1830; d. April 27, 1876. American playwright and actor. He adapted numerous 19th-century prose works for the stage, but is now remembered for only one of them: Uncle Tom's Cabin. His version of this work was first performed in 1852, at Troy, N.Y., and ran for 200 performances during the next year in the city of New York. It was the first successful dramatization of Harriet Beecher Stowe's enormously successful novel, and the prototype of virtually all subsequent stage versions.

Aikens (ā'kĕnz), Andrew Jackson. b. at Barnard, Vt., Oct. 31, 1830; d. Jan. 22, 1909. American newspaper editor and owner, and pioneer of "boiler-plate" in journalism. As a proprietor of Milwaukee's Evening Wisconsin he headed a syndicate which offered mats of complete pages, including advertisements, to country papers (1864).

Aikin (ā'kin), Anna Letitia. See Barbauld, Anna Letitia.

Aikin, Arthur. b. at Warrington, Lancashire, England, May 19, 1773; d. at London, April 15, 1854. English chemist and mineralogist; son of John Aikin (1747–1822).

Aikin, John. b. at Kibworth, England, Jan. 15, 1747; d. at Stoke Newington, England, Dec. 7, 1822. English physician and writer. Author of General Biography (1799–1815), Evenings at Home (1792–95, written in conjunction with his sister, Anna Letitia Barbauld), and others.

Aikin, Lucy. b. at Warrington, Lancashire, Nov. 6, 1781; d. at Hampstead, England, Jan. 29, 1864. English writer; daughter of John Aikin (1747–1822). Author of Memoirs of the Court of Queen Elizabeth (1818), Memoirs of the Court of James I (1822), Memoirs of the Court of Charles I (1833), Life of Addison (1843), and others.

Aikipyak (ī.kēp'yăk). [Also: Ilaikipyak, Laikipia.] Former subgroup of the Nilo-Hamitic-speaking Masai of S Kenya and N Tanganyika in E Africa.

Aikman (āk'mąn), William. b. at Caerney, Scotland, Oct. 24, 1682; d. at London June 7 1731. Scottish portrait-painter.

Aikwe (ī'kwā). [Also, Naron.] Central Bushman group of S Africa, inhabiting W Bechuanaland.

Ailly or Ailli (dă.yē), Pierre d'. [Latinized name, Petrus d'Alliaco; called the "Hammer of Heretics" and "Eagle of the Doctors."] b. 1350; d. at Avignon, France, c1420. French cardinal and theologian. An advocate of nominalism, he endeavored to end the schism in the Roman Catholic Church. His proposal that a clerical council should have authority even over the Pope was in later years condemned by the Roman Catholic Church as heretical, but d'Ailly urged it after the Council of Pisa (1409), which produced a third Pope, as the only solution; at the Council of Constance (1414–18) he continued his efforts toward reform, but accepted the condemnation of Huss.

Ailsa Craig (āl'są krāg). Rocky island in S Scotland, in Ayrshire, situated near the entrance of the Firth of Clyde, ab. 25 mi. SW of Ayr. It is conical in shape, and rises to a height of 1,114 ft.

Aimar (e.mär). See under Bourbon.

Aimard (e.mär), Gustave. [Pseudonym of Olivier Cloux; sometimes called the "French Fenimore Cooper."] b. at Paris, 1818; d. there, 1883. French novelist and traveler in the U.S., Mexico, Spain, Turkey, and the Caucasus. His works include Les Trappeurs de l'Arkansas (1858), La Grande Flibuste (1860), Nuits mexicaines (1863), and others.

Aimeo (ī.mā'ō). See Moorea.

Aimoin of Fleury (e.mwaṅ; flė.rē). [Latinized, Aimoinus Floriacensis.] b. at Périgord, France, c960; d. some time after 1010. French chronicler. His main work (begun before 1004) is a history of the Franks (Historia Francorum) from their origins (which he believed to have been in ancient Troy) to 654. It is actually merely a compilation, but it enjoyed much popularity. He also wrote a life of Abbo, one of his predecessors as abbot of Fleury, and an account of the miracles wrought by Saint Benedict's relics at Fleury from 887 to 1003. The history of the Franks is preceded by a topographical introduction in eight chapters. Various continuations of it were successively compiled, the latest between 1169 and 1174.

Aimon (ā'mŏn). See Aymon.

Aimoré (ī.mō.rā'). See Botocudo.

Aimorés (ī.mŏ.res'), Serra dos. Mountain range in E South America, near the Brazilian coast, extending from the Parahyba do Sul River N nearly to the mouth of the São Francisco River. They are properly a northern prolongation of the Serra da Mantiqueira, which here becomes the Coast Range, the Serra do Mar dying out.

Aimwell (ām'wel"). In George Farquhar's comedy The Beaux' Stratagem, a young gentleman of a romantic temperament, who has dissipated his fortune and who, with his cooler-headed friend Archer disguised as his servant, impersonates a rich lord, with a view to retrieving their losses by a rich marriage for either or both, making a journey from one town to another, and taking turns in being master and man. The stratagem is successful at the end of the play.

Aimwell. In James Shirley's play The Witty Fair One, the lover of Violetta.

Ain (aṅ). See also Ain River.

Ain. Department in E France, formerly belonging to Burgundy, bounded by the departments of Saône-et-Loire and Jura on the N, Haute-Savoie and Savoie (from both of which it is separated by the Rhone) and Switzerland on the E, the department of Isère (from which it is separated by the Rhone) on the S, and the departments of Rhône and Saône-et-Loire (from both of which it is separated by the Saône) on the W. The city of Lyons is situated near the SE corner of the department. Ain is essentially an agricultural department, producing corn, wine, hemp, and flax, and raising fowl and hogs. Among the industries, the plastics industry of Oyonnax, the optical industry of Gex, and the manufacture of silks and other textiles are outstanding. There are important asphalt and stone quarries. Winter sports enthusiasts are attracted to the Jura Mountains on the E border of the department. It is on the main line of the railway between Paris and Geneva. Capital, Bourg; area, 2,248 sq. mi.; pop. 306,778 (1946).

Ainad (ī.näd′). Trading town in Hadhramaut, S Arabia, in Aden Protectorate, ab. 175 mi. NE of Aden.

Ainger (ān′jėr), Alfred. b. at London, Feb. 9, 1837; d. at Darley Abbey, Derbyshire, Feb. 8, 1904. English clergyman, author, and editor. He wrote biographies of Lamb (1882) and of Crabbe (1903), and published annotated editions of Lamb's Essays of Elia (1883), of Lamb's Letters (1888), and of Hood's Poems, with a biographical memoir (1897).

Ain Hersha (īn her′shä). [Also, Ain Herché (her.shā′).] Village in E Lebanon, ab. 30 mi. W of Damascus. It contains a Roman temple in antis, practically complete except the roof.

Ain Jidy or 'Ain Jidi (ān ji′dē). Modern name of En-gedi.

Ain Kadish (kä.dēsh′). Modern name of Kadesh, in Edom.

Ainmiller (īn′mil.ėr), Max Emanuel. [Also, Maximilian Emmanuel Ainmüller (-mül.ėr).] b. at Munich, Feb. 14, 1807; d. there, Dec. 8, 1870. German painter of architectural subjects and on glass. He developed a modern variant of the Renaissance enamel process of producing colored glass windows.

Aino (ī′nō). See Ainu.

Ain Qadis (ān kä.dēs′). Modern name of Kadesh, in Edom.

Ain River (añ). River in E France, which joins the Rhone ab. 17 mi. E of Lyons. It is narrow in its lower course. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Aïn-Sefra (īn se.frä′). [Official name, Territoire d'Aïn-Sefra.] One of the Territoires du Sud of Algeria, in NW Africa. It is bounded on the N by French Morocco and the Oran department of Algeria, on the W by the Spanish Sahara and French Mauritania, on the S by French West Africa, and on the E by the territories of Ghardaïa and Oasis Sahariennes. The administrative center is the town of Aïn-Sefra. Area, ab. 251,000 sq. mi.; pop. 250,894 (1948).

Ainslie (ānz′li), Douglas. [Original full name, Douglas Ainslie Grant Duff.] b. at Paris, 1865—. English poet, critic, and diplomat. Translated works of Benedetto Croce into English; author of Chosen Poems (1928), The Conquest of Pleasure (1942), and others.

Ainsworth (ānz′wėrth), Frederick Crayton. b. at Woodstock, Vt., Sept. 11, 1852; d. June 5, 1934. American army officer. Entered medical corps (1874); remembered for efficient reorganization of Record and Pension Office, of which he was chief (1892–1907); adjutant general (1907–12); reached rank of major general (1904).

Ainsworth, Henry. b. at Pleasington, Lancashire, England, 1571; d. at Amsterdam, c1622. English separatist clergyman and rabbinical scholar. Driven (1593) from England by persecution of the Brownists, a Nonconformist sect with which he was affiliated, he became porter to an Amsterdam bookseller and later (1596) teacher to the refugee members of Francis Johnson's London congregation; pastor of his own congregation (1610–22); author of several Brownist tracts and a body of rabbinical studies.

Ainsworth, Robert. b. near Manchester, England, 1660; d. at London, 1743. English lexicographer and teacher; author of a Latin-English dictionary, Thesaurus linguae Latinae compendiarius (1736).

Ainsworth, William Francis. b. at Exeter, England, Nov. 9, 1807; d. at Hammersmith, in London, Nov. 27, 1896. English geologist and traveler. He published Researches in Assyria, Babylonia, etc. (1838), Travels and Researches in Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, etc. (1842), Travels in the Track of the 10,000 Greeks (1844), A Personal Narrative of the Euphrates Expedition (1888), and others.

Ainsworth, William Harrison. b. at Manchester, England, 1805; d. at Reigate, England, 1882. English editor, publisher, and writer. He was editor (1840 et seq.) of Bentley's Miscellany, Ainsworth's Magazine, and the New Monthly. His novel Rookwood (1834) established him as a successful writer, and by 1881 he had published 39 novels, including Crichton (1837), Jack Sheppard (1839), Tower of London (1840), Old St. Paul's and Guy Fawkes (both 1841), Windsor Castle (1843), The Flitch of Bacon, and others. Seven of his novels were illustrated by Cruikshank.

Ainsworth, William Newman. b. at Camilla, Ga., Feb. 10, 1872; d. 1942. American Methodist Episcopal bishop. President of Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga. (1909–12); elected bishop (1918); president of American Anti-Saloon League (1935–36).

Aintab (īn.täb′). Former name of Gaziantep, city.

Aintree (ān′trē). Small area in W England, in Lancashire, ab. 5 mi. N of Liverpool, comprising a racecourse over which the steeplechase known as the Grand National is run in March of each year. The racecourse, which was founded over 100 years ago, is ab. 4½ mi. long and notable as one of the most difficult for riders in the world.

Ainu (ī′nō). [Also, Aino.] The aboriginal inhabitants of Japan, now found only on Hokkaido and Sakhalin islands; they number ab. 17,000. They live along the coasts and river banks, subsisting chiefly upon sea food.

Aiposha (ī.pō.shä′). [Also, Naivasha.] Former subgroup of the Nilo-Hamitic-speaking Masai of S Kenya and N Tanganyika in E Africa.

Air (ä.ēr′). [Also: Ahir, Asben, Azbine.] Mountainous oasis and former sultanate in the Sahara desert, in Niger territory, French West Africa, between Nigeria and the Territoires du Sud of Algeria. Chief town, Agadès; area, ab. 20,000 sq. mi.; pop. 60,000 (est.)

Airay (ār′ā), Henry. b. at Kentmere, England, c1560; d. Oct. 6, 1616. English Puritan divine, vice-chancellor of Oxford (1606), and author of a Commentary on Philippians (1618).

Aircastle (ār′kas″l). Character in Samuel Foote's comedy The Cozeners, originally played in an amusingly prolix and digressive manner by Foote himself, burlesquing Gahagan, a highly educated young Irish gentleman who was hanged (1749) for "filing or diminishing the current coin of the realm."

Air Corps Ferrying Command, U.S. See Air Transport Command.

Airdrie (ār′dri). Parliamentary burgh and market town in S Scotland, in Lanarkshire, ab. 10 mi. E of Glasgow, ab. 426 mi. N of London by rail. The town is situated on the Lanarkshire coal field. It has an iron and steel industry, which now uses mostly imported iron ores. 30,645 (est. 1948).

Aire (ār). [Also: Aire-sur-l'Adour; Latin, Vicus Julii, Atura.] Town in SW France, in the department of Landes, situated on the Adour River, between Bayonne and Tarbes. An old town, it has been a bishopric since the 6th century. The episcopal palace dates from the 12th, 14th, and 18th centuries. The cathedral is partly in the Romanesque style and partly in the Gothic. 4,298 (1946).

Aireborough (ār′bėr.ō). Urban district in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 208 mi. NW of London by rail. It has been formed from parts of the former urban districts of Guiseley, Otley, Rawdon, and Yeadon. 27,533 (1951).

Aire River (ār). River in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It rises in Malham Tarn, a small lake ab. 11 mi. NW of Skipton, and flows SE past Skipton, Bingley, Leeds, Rothwell, Castleford, and Knottingley to a confluence with the river Ouse ab. 18 mi. SE of York. Length, ab. 70 mi.; navigable above Leeds.

Aire River. Small river in E France, which joins the Aisne in the department of Ardennes.

Aires (ī′rēs), Matias. [Full name, Matias Aires Ramos da Silva de Eça.] b. at São Paulo, Brazil, March 27, 1705; d. at Lisbon, Portugal, Dec. 10, 1763. Brazilian moralist, regarded as one of the classical writers in the Portuguese language and best known for his Reflexões sôbre a vaidade dos homens (1752), which has appeared in several editions. He studied at the University of Coimbra, Portugal, and at Bayonne, France.

Aire-sur-l'Adour (ār.sür.là.dör). See Aire.

Aire-sur-la-Lys (ār.sür.là.lēs). Town in N France, in the department of Pas-de-Calais, situated at the junction of the Lys and Melde rivers and various canals, ab. 30 mi. SE of Calais. It was formerly a fortified place, and has preser ed the aspect of the 17th and 18th centuries. The hôtel du ville (town hall) dates from the 18th century. The Church of Saint Pierre was reconstructed in the 16th century. 8,213 (1946).

Air Force, U.S. Department of the. Executive agency established under the military unification act passed by the U.S. Congress on July 25, 1947. The department is part of the National Military Establishment embracing all the armed forces of the U.S. The air force secretary, equal in rank to the secretaries of the army and the navy, does not have cabinet rank. The first secretary of the air force was W. Stuart Symington. Unification established the air force as an independent arm, but it did not affect the status of naval aviation, which still remains a part of the U.S. navy. The commander in chief of the air force is the president of the U.S.; its executive head is the chief of staff of the U.S. Air Force. The air force had its inception (Aug. 1, 1907) in the Aeronautical Division of the Signal Corps, U.S. Army. It saw service in World War I as the Army Air Service, and later became the Army Air Corps. During World War II, as one of the three major components of the U.S. Army, it functioned under the designation of the Army Air Forces. The chief functions of the U.S. Air Force, which includes air combat and service forces, is to assure ability to carry out prompt and sustained combat operations in the air, to be responsible (in line with policies established by the Joint Chiefs of Staff) for the defense of the U.S. against air attack, to be responsible for strategic air warfare, and to gain and maintain general air supremacy. Its combat operations are divided into three categories: air reconnaissance and observation, air attack, and air fighting. Its basic combat unit is the squadron, consisting of two or more flights (a flight may number as few as three planes). A group is made up of two or more squadrons; a wing consists of two or more groups; and a command is made up of two or more wings. The various commands comprise the U.S. Air Force. Commissioned officers of the U.S. Air Force (except administrative and other ground officers) are the pilots, bombardiers, navigators, aerial photographers, and flight surgeons. At the close of World War II the Army Air Forces had in service more than 43,000 combat aircraft and a total enrollment of approximately 2,500,000 officers and men. Shortly before it was placed under the National Military Establishment, its personnel numbered 388,000.

Ai River (ī). River in NE China, in the province of Liaoning, Manchuria, which flows into the Yalu River opposite Gishu, Korea. It played an important part in the attack of the right wing of the Japanese forces upon the Russians in the battle of the Yalu River, May 1, 1904. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Airlanga (er.läng'gä). [Also: Erlanga, Erlangga.] b. in Bali, 1001; d. in Java, 1049. King of an East Javanese empire. His memorial statue from his tomb, now in the Modjokerto museum, is one of the most famous stone sculptures of Java.

Airolo (ī.rô'lō). [German, Eriels.] Small town in S Switzerland, in the canton of Ticino (German, Tessin), at the S entrance to the St. Gotthard railway tunnel, on the Ticino River. It is the first Italian-speaking community reached when traveling south by this route. 1,719 (1941).

Air Raid. Radio play by Archibald MacLeish, produced in 1938.

Air Service Command. [Abbreviation, ASC.] American air-supply arm in World War II, formed in October, 1941, with its own depots, warehouses, and over 300,000 employees. It maintained a world-wide supply network. Meeting day-to-day as well as emergency needs, it became one of the largest supply lines the Allies had in the war, carrying everything from cigarettes to munitions.

Air Transport Command. [Original name, U.S. Air Corps Ferrying Command.] Branch of the U.S. Air Force established in World War II to ferry planes from the U.S. to various theaters of operations, and to perform for the U.S. land and air forces generally the duty of flying urgently needed freight and passengers to or between operational areas. It was established formally in July, 1942, on a basis of the U.S. Air Corps Ferrying Command, which had been established primarily to ferry planes to Great Britain and the Middle East. Using to a great extent the planes and personnel of private air companies and carriers on a contract basis, it carried out important supply deliveries to all parts of the world in World War II. Its best-known single achievement was perhaps the operation (called "flying the hump") by which supplies were flown over the Himalaya Mountains from India to China. It became important again with the outbreak in June, 1950, of war in Korea, serving in this case not only to transport supplies to the combat area, but also as a primary means of evacuating casualties to hospitals in Japan and the U.S.

Airways, Inc. Play by John Dos Passos, published in 1928 and produced in 1929.

Airy (ār'i), Sir George. The successful lover of Miranda in Susannah Centlivre's comedy The Busybody.

Airy, Sir George Biddell. b. at Alnwick, Northumberland, 1801; d. at Greenwich, London, 1892. English astronomer. As director of the Greenwich observatory and astronomer royal (1835–1881), he made 8,000 lunar observations of earlier dates available to astronomers (1846), and calculated mean density of earth (1854). His discovery of new inequality in the motions of Venus and the earth is considered to have been one of the outstanding achievements of 19th-century astronomy.

Aisén (ī.sān'). [Also, Aysen.] Province in S Chile. It is wooded, mountainous, rainy, cool, and largely unexplored. Lumbering is the principal source of livelihood. Capital, Aisén; area, 34,348 sq. mi.; pop. 23,430 (est. 1950).

Aisne (ān; French, en). Department in NE France, bounded by Belgium and the department of Nord on the N, by the departments of Ardennes and Marne on the E, by Seine-et-Marne department on the S, and the departments of Oise and Somme on the W; formed from parts of the former provinces of Picardy, Brie, and Île-de-France. Ravaged in the civil and religious wars of former centuries, it was overrun by German armies in World Wars I and II; its rivers (Aisne, Marne, Oise) and chief towns (Château-Thierry, Laon, Soissons, St. Quentin) have seen much bitter fighting and widespread destruction. Important for sugar-beet, potato, and flax production, cattle-raising, dairying, and various other agricultural activities; it also has metallurgical, textile, glass, and other industries. It contains many fine (and still essentially undamaged) examples of medieval architecture. Capital, Laon; area, 2,866 sq. mi.; pop. 453,411 (1946).

Aisne, Battles of the. Three separate engagements of World War I, which occurred in the vicinity of the Aisne River, France. The first battle (Sept. 15–18, 1914) was an Allied effort to follow up the successful counter-thrusts on the Marne, but was blocked by German resistance. A second Allied offensive (April, 1917) on the Aisne River failed in conjunction with the third battle of Champagne. The final battle of the Aisne (May 27–June 6, 1918) was part of Ludendorff's final plunge toward Paris, in which the Germans again reached the Marne River.

Aisne-Marne Offensive (ān'märn'). World War I operation in France, involving U.S. troops and allied French forces, which took place from July 18 to Aug. 6, 1918. The Allied strategy called for a counterattack against the German right flank NW of Soissons. The operation compelled a German retreat from the Marne, eliminated their salient, and marked the end of major German offensive action in World War I. The engagement was notable for its demonstration of the battle vigor and fitness of the American Expeditionary Forces. Among the U.S. divisions participating in the operation were the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 26th, 28th, 32nd, 42nd, and 77th.

Aisne River (ān; French, en). [Ancient name, Axona.] River in N France, which rises in the department of Meuse, flows through Marne, Ardennes, Aisne, and Oise, and joins the Oise River near Compiègne. On it are Rethel and Soissons. Its chief affluents are the Aire and Vesle, and it communicates by canals with the Meuse and Marne. Its valley was the scene of several important battles in World War I. Length, ab. 175 mi.; navigable for ab. 75 mi.

Aïssé (ä.ē.sā), Mlle. Haidée. b. c1694; d. at Paris, 1733. Daughter of a Circassian chief, who gained fame as a writer of letters at Paris. Sold by the Turks at the age of four to the French ambassador at Constantinople, she was educated at Paris, where she became renowned for her beauty and wit. Her Letters, which were first edited (1787) by Voltaire, are an excellent source of certain kinds of historical material for the early 18th century.

Aist (īst), Dietmar von. See Dietmar von Aist.

Aistulf (īs'tůlf) or Astolf (as'tolf). d. 756. King of the Lombards (749–756). His conquest (752) of the exarchate of Ravenna aroused the Pope's fears for the safety of Rome, and Pepin, king of the Franks, was called by Pope Stephen II to repel the Lombard threat. In the campaign that followed (755-756), Aistulf was defeated and driven out of Ravenna (755–756).

Aitken (āt'kẹn), Robert. b. at Dalkeith, Scotland, 1734; d. July 15, 1802. American printer, publisher, engraver, and bookseller. He opened his original bookstore in Philadelphia in 1769; in 1771 he reopened the store and added bookbinding. He published the Pennsylvania Magazine (1775–76), with contributions from Hopkinson, Witherspoon, and Thomas Paine, and produced America's first complete English Bible (1782.)

Aitken, Robert. b. at Crailing, Scotland, Jan. 22, 1800; d. in Paddington Station, London, July 11, 1873. Clergyman of the Church of England, from which he temporarily withdrew (1824–40).

Aitken, Robert Grant. b. at Jackson, Calif., Dec. 31, 1864; d. at Berkeley, Calif., Oct. 29, 1951. American astronomer at Lick Observatory, Calif. (1895 et seq.); observatory director (1930–35); awarded (1932) gold medal of Royal Astronomical Society for his discovery of more than 3,000 double-stars.

Aitken, Robert Ingersoll. b. 1878; d. Jan. 3, 1949 American sculptor and designer.

Aitken, William Maxwell. See Beaverbrook, 1st Baron

Aitkenites (āt'kẹn.īts). Party in the Church of England led by Robert Aitken, a minister originally ordained (1823 by the Church of England, but for some 16 years (1824–40 a preacher in Methodist and various other Nonconformist churches. In 1840 he rejoined the Church of England, as a High Churchman, and was vicar of Pendeen, in Cornwall, from 1849 to 1873. The object of the Aitkenites was to engraft certain Methodist practices and views upon the Anglican Church.

Aitolia (e.tō.lē'ä). See Aetolia.

Aiton (ā'tọn), William. b. near Hamilton, Scotland, 1731; d. at Kew, near London, Feb. 2, 1793. Scottish botanist. He was for many years (1759–93) director of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew, near London. He published Hortus Kewensis in 1789.

Aiton, William Townsend. b. 1766; d. 1849. British botanist; eldest son of William Aiton (1731–93). He was successor to his father as director of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Kew and brought out an expanded edition of his father's work, Hortus Kewensis, in the period 1810–13.

Aitos (ī'tôs). See Aytos.

Aitutaki (ī.tō.tä'kē). [Also, Aitutake.] One of the chief islands of the Cook Islands, in the Pacific Ocean: a possession, since 1901, of New Zealand. Area, 3,900 acres; pop. 2,590 (est. 1949).

Aiud (ä'yōd). [Hungarian, Nagyenyed; German, Strassburg.] Town in NW Rumania, in Transylvania province, situated on the Mureş River, ab. 45 mi. S of Cluj: theological seminary and teachers college; wine-growing in the environs. The people are mostly Hungarians. 9,535 (1948).

Aivalik (ī.vä.lik') or Aivali (-li'). See Ayvalik.

Aivazovski (ī.vä.zôf'ski), Ivan Konstantinovich. b. at Feodosia, in the Crimea, July 7, 1817; d. there, May 2, 1900. Armenian painter. He was for many years professor at the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts, St. Petersburg.

Aix (eks). See also Aix-les-Bains.

Aix (āks; French, eks). [Also: Aix-en-Provence; Latin, Aquae Sextiae.] City in S France, in the department of Bouches-du-Rhône, ab. 15 mi. N of Marseilles: seat of an archbishopric; has various old churches, among them the cathedral of Saint Sauveur with Romanesque nave and Roman columns, an art museum, a museum of ancient furniture, an art academy, and a public library with about 200,000 volumes. It is the seat of the University of Aix-Marseilles. It is a center for trade in olive oil and fruit, and has textile, ceramics, and food industries. Aix is the site of the oldest Roman establishment in Gaul; founded in 124 B.C. by the proconsul Gaius Sextius Calvinus (for whom it was named Aquae Sextiae), it soon became renowned for its baths. Here took place the great victory of Marius over the Teutones, Ambrones, and some other Germanic tribes in 102 B.C. Aix flourished as the capital of Provence until the 6th century. It was sacked by the Saracens in 731. It was the temporary residence of Charles V (1536). After the reunion of Provence with France (1481), it again became the capital of Provence and the seat of the provincial parliament (1501–1790). The historian Mignet and the painter Cézanne were born here. 46,053 (1946).

Aix (deks), Île d'. Island off W France, in the department of Charente-Maritime, situated between the mouth of the Charente River and the island of Oléron. The island was the last refuge of the Emperor Napoleon I, before his deportation (1815) to St. Helena. There are a Napoleonic museum and an African museum. 161 (1946).

Aix-en-Provence (eks.äṅ.pro.väṅs). See Aix.

Aix-la-Chapelle (eks.lȧ.shȧ.pel; Anglicized, āks''lä.shă-pel'). French name of Aachen.

Aix-la-Chapelle, Congress of. Meeting of the powers of the Quadruple Alliance which resulted (Oct. 9, 1818) in a convention providing for withdrawal of occupation forces from France. Although the sovereigns of Russia, Austria, and Prussia were present, actual negotiations were largely in the hands of Wellington and Castlereagh (England), Metternich (Austria), Nesselrode (Russia), and Hardenberg and Bernstorff (Prussia). The congress reaffirmed the reactionary design of the Holy Alliance and, through the duc de Richelieu, invited French participation.

Aix-la-Chapelle, Treaty of. [Sometimes called "Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle."] 1. Treaty (May 2, 1668) which ended the War of Devolution between France and Spain, and which was guaranteed (May 7, 1669) by the Triple Alliance (England, Sweden, and the Netherlands). It permitted France to retain the Flemish acquisitions of 1667, but compelled French return to Spain of Cambrai, Aire, and St.-Omer, and the province of Franche-Comté. 2. Treaty (Oct. 18, 1748) which ended the War of the Austrian Succession. Based on mutual restitution of conquests, except that Austria was compelled to cede Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla to Spain's infante, Philip, and to confirm Prussian possession of Silesia and Gratz, it confirmed the pragmatic sanction (i.e., the right of female succession to the Hapsburg throne) and reaffirmed recognition of Protestant succession to the English throne.

Aix-les-Bains (eks. lā. baṅ). [Also: Aix; Latin, Aquae Gratianae, Aquae Domitianae.] Town in E France, in the department of Savoie, situated near Lake Bourget, ab. 8 mi. N of Chambéry. It is a famous summer and winter resort and has been known since Roman times for its hot sulfur springs, in which many have bathed in an attempt to cure such ailments as rheumatism and gout. The poet Lamartine was born here. Nearby is the abbey of Hautecombe founded (1125) by Saint Bernard and Count Amédée III and later reconstructed (1824–43); it is occupied by the Cistercians and is the ancient funeral place of the princes of the house of Savoy. 14,556 (1946).

Aiyina (e'yē.nä). See Aegina.

Aiyion (e'yôn). See Aigion.

Aizani (ī.zä'nē). See Azani.

Aizu (ī.zö). Former name of Wakamatsu, Honshu, Japan.

Ajaccio (ä.yät'chō). Town on the island of Corsica, the capital of the French department of Corse, situated on the Gulf of Ajaccio, on the W coast of the island. It is a winter resort and a center for the trade in fruit, olive oil, and other products. Napoleon Bonaparte was born here; the 16th-century cathedral contains the font where he was baptized. The town has a statue of Napoleon and a museum. 31,434 (1946).

Ajalbert (ȧ.zhȧl.ber), Jean. b. at Clichy-la-Garenne, France, 1862; d. 1947. French lawyer, novelist, and author of various discussions of public questions.

Ajalon (aj'ạ.lon). See Aijalon.

Ajan (ä'jan). [Also, Ajam (-jam).] Region in E Africa, on the Somaliland coast, S of Cape Guardafui.

Ajanta (ạ.jun'tạ). [Also: Adjunta, Ajunta.] Small place in Hyderabad, Union of India, celebrated for its cave-temples.

Ajax (ā'jaks). In Greek legend, one of the leading Greek heroes in the Trojan War, famous for his size and physical strength and beauty; son of Telamon and half-brother of Teucer. According to Homer he was, next to Achilles, the bravest of the Greek warriors. He engaged several times in victorious single combat with Hector, and was always a source of terror to the Trojans. There are various accounts of his exploits after the war and of his death. According to the common poetical tradition, he died by his own hand. The decision of Agamemnon (on the advice of Athena) to award the arms of Achilles to Odysseus drove Ajax mad, and, according to Sophocles, in his insanity he furiously attacked and slew the sheep of the Greeks, imagining them to be his enemies. Shame for this conduct drove him to suicide. According to other accounts he was murdered. From his blood was said to have sprung up a purple flower bearing on its leaves the letters ai, which were the first letters of his name in Greek and also an exclamation of woe. His story was dramatized by Sophocles.

Ajax. Locrian legendary king, son of Oïleus, and one of the heroes in the Trojan War. Having incurred the displeasure of Athena, he was shipwrecked and drowned on his return from the war. He is often called the "Lesser Ajax."

Ajeho (ä.je'hō). See Acheng.

Ajiba (aj'i.bạ). See Beir.

Ajmer (ạj.mēr'). [Also: Ajmeer, Ajmere, Ajmir; former name, Ajmer-Merwara (mėr.wä'rạ)]. State of the Union of India, in the NW part, a former chief-commissionership of Rajputana. It consists of two former districts, Ajmer and Merwara, united in 1871. Ajmer district was ceded to the British in 1818. Forest products and cattle raising are important here. Capital, Ajmer; area, 2,425 sq. mi.; pop. 692,506 (1951).

Ajmer. [Also: Ajmeer, Ajmere, Ajmir.] City in NW India, the capital of the state of Ajmer, Union of India, ab. 275 mi. NE of the city of Ahmedabad: important junction and trading center, particularly for salt and cotton textiles. The Mosque of Ajmer was founded in the early 13th century, and is one of the first established in India. It occupies the spacious square court of a 12th-century Jain temple, whose old colonnades of graceful and well-carved columns remain in place around the walls and support a series of low domes. The great beauty of the monument lies in the screen of seven keel-shaped Mohammedan arches carried across the W side of the court in front of the colonnade. This screen is covered with bands of Cufic and Togra inscriptions separated by diaper-work, admirable in decorative motive, and cut with great delicacy. 147,258 (1941).

Ajo (ä'hō, ä'jō). Unincorporated community in S Arizona, in Pima County: copper mining and smelting. 5,817 (1950).

Ajodhya (ạ.jōd'yạ). [Also: Ayodhya, Oudh.] Town in N India, in Fyzabad district, United Provinces, Union of India, across the Gogra River from Fyzabad, with which it is united for administrative and census purposes. It is a trading center, on the site of an important ancient city.

Ajtos (ī'tôs). See Aytos.

Ajunta (ạ.jun'tạ). See Ajanta.

Ajuti (ä.jō'tē). [Also: Atyuti, Adjati.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Guang peoples of W Africa, inhabiting N British Togo.

Aka (ä'kä). [Also: Aca, Akowa, Baca, Wochua.] One of the eastern pygmy groups discovered by Miani and Schweinfurth in C Africa, inhabiting the Ituri forests of NE Belgian Congo. They speak a Sudanic language.

Akaba or Akabah (ä'kạ.bạ). See Aqaba.

Akademeia or Akademia (ạ.kad.ẹ.mī'ạ). Greek name of the Academy.

Akakia (ȧ.kȧ.kē.ȧ). [Original name, Martin Sans-Malice.] b. at Châlons-sur-Marne, France; d. 1551. French physician, lecturer at the Collège de France founded by Francis I. He published several medical works. The name "Akakia," by which he is known, is a translation into Greek of the French words "sans malice," which made up his own original surname.

Akalkot (ä'kạl.kōt). Former state of the Union of India, in the Deccan States, ab. 230 mi. SE of Bombay, now part of Bombay state, in a tobacco and millet growing area. Capital, Akalkot; area, 498 sq. mi.; pop. 103,903 (1941).

Akan (ä'kän). Group of Sudanic-speaking peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the S part of the Gold Coast, all of whom speak dialects of Tshi (or Twi). The Akan include the Adanse, Ahanta, Akim, Akwapim, Aowin, Ashanti, Asini, Denkyira, Efutu, Etsi, Fanti, Kyefo, Nzima, Sefwi, and Wasa. They are closely related to the Anyi of SE Ivory Coast; the Guang peoples of C Gold Coast, who were formerly classed as Akan, are also related. The Akan peoples established a number of kingdoms of varying size, which controlled the Guinea Coast in this area, the most important being that of the Ashanti.

Akanta (ä.kän'tä). See Ahanta, a Sudanic-speaking people.

Akarnania (ak.ạr.nā'ni.ạ). See Acarnania.

Akarnania (ä.kär.nä'nē.ä). See Acarnania.

Akashi (ä.kä.shē). City in Japan, situated on the shore of the Inland Sea ab. 12 mi. W of Kobe: an industrial suburb of Kobe, with some heavy industry and much general light industry. It has a good deep-water harbor. The city is administered as a part of Kobe. 65,642 (1950).

Akassa (ä.käs'ạ). Seaport in W Africa, in Nigeria, situated on the W side of the Nun mouth of the Niger River.

Akastos (ạ.kas'tos). See Acastus.

Akawai (ä.kä.wä.ē'). See Acawai.

Akbar (ak'bär). [Also: Akber (äk'bėr), Akhbar; full Arabic name, Jelal-ed-Din-Mohammed; called Akbar the Great.] b. at Amarkote, India, 1542; d. at Agra, India, 1605. Greatest of India's Mogul emperors; reigned 1556–1605. He was born during the exile of his father, Humayun, who 12 years later recovered his throne at Delhi but died within the year; ruled (1556–60) under the regency of Bairam Khan, a tyrannical Turkoman noble whom he displaced upon reaching 18 years of age. Akbar engaged (1560–67) in constant warfare to consolidate his realm, conducting campaigns in the Punjab, and against Chitor and Ajmer (1567). Later campaigns (1572 et seq.) brought conquest of Gujarat, Bengal, Orissa, Kabul, Kashmir, and Kandahar, including, finally, Berar in the Deccan; his empire at time of his death included all India N of the 20th parallel. His achievements as a civil administrator rivaled his military feats; he instituted laws against extortion, a uniform system of weights and measures, banned child marriage below a certain age, and compelled toleration of religious diversity. His chief minister, Abulfazl, recorded the emperor's achievements in the biography Akbar-nameh.

Ak-Denghiz (äk.deng.gēz'). See Balkhash.

Aké (ä.kā'). One of the principal ruined cities of Yucatán, Mexico, situated ab. 30 mi. E of Mérida, noted for its pyramid.

Akeley (āk'li), Carl Ethan. b. at Clarendon, N.Y., May 19, 1864; d. in the Belgian Congo, Africa, Nov. 17, 1926. American naturalist, taxidermist, sculptor, and author. He developed a technique, now used by many museums, of mounting animals in habitat groups; headed expeditions to Africa for Chicago's Field Museum (1896, 1905) and for the American Museum of Natural History (1909, 1920–22, 1926). His bronze sculptures include The Wounded Comrade, Lion and Cape Buffalo and The Nandi Spearmen and Lions. He invented the cement gun used in mounting many of his subjects and the "Akeley camera" used by naturalists.

Akeley, Mary. [Maiden name, Jobe.] b. at Tappan, Ohio. American explorer, teacher, author; second wife (1924 et seq.) of Carl Akeley. Explored Canadian Rockies (1914–18); accompanied her husband on African expedition (1926–27) and headed it after his death; author of Carl Akeley and the Great Adventure (1940), Rumble of a Distant Drum (1946), and others.

Akeman Street (āk'mạn). Ancient Roman road in England connecting what is now Bath, through Speen and Wallingford, with London. Parts of it are still discernible near Oxford.

Aken (ä'kẹn). [Also, Acken.] Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the Elbe River, near the influx of the Mulde and Saale rivers, ab. 25 mi. SE of Magdeburg. It is an important river port, and before World War II had manufactures of oils and essences, textile factories, and sugar refineries. The population is chiefly Protestant. 14,624 (1946).

Aken. Dutch name of Aachen.

Akenside (ā'kẹn.sīd), Mark. b. at Newcastle, England, 1721; d. at London, 1770. English poet and physician

Akerbas (ạ.kėr'bạs). See Acerbas.

Akerblad (ä'kėr.blăd), Johan David. b. in Sweden, 1760; d. at Rome, Feb. 8, 1819. Swedish orientalist and diplomat, author of works on oriental inscriptions.

Akerman (ä'kėr.män; Russian, ä.kir.män'). Former name of Belgorod-Dnestrovski.

Akerman (ā'kėr.mạn), Amos Tappan. b. at Portsmouth, N.H., Feb. 23, 1821; d. at Cartersville, Ga., Dec. 21, 1880. American lawyer and politician. He settled at Elberton, Ga., in 1850 and followed his adopted state in secession from the Union in 1861, but became a Republican and reconstructionist after the war. He was attorney general (1870–71) under Grant.

Akerman (ä'kėr.män), Convention of. Treaty concluded between Russia and Turkey, Oct. 6, 1826, by which Russia secured the navigation of the Black Sea, and various agreements were entered into concerning Moldavia, Wallachia, and Serbia. The nonfulfillment of the treaty by Turkey led to the war of 1828–29 between Russia and Turkey.

Akerman (ā'kėr.mạn), John Yonge. b. at London, June 12, 1806; d. at Abingdon, England, Nov. 18, 1873. English numismatist.

Akers (ā'kėrz), Benjamin Paul. [Called "St. Paul Akers."] b. at Saccarappa, Me., 1825; d. at Philadelphia, 1861. American sculptor. Among his works are Una and the Lion, Saint Elizabeth of Hungary, The Dead Pearl-Diver, and others.

Akers, Elizabeth Chase. [Also: Elizabeth Allen; maiden name, Chase; pseudonym, Florence Percy. b. at Strong, Me., Oct. 9, 1832; d. at Tuckahoe, N.Y., Aug. 7, 1911. American poetess; wife of Benjamin Pau Akers.

Akers, Floyd. A pseudonym of Baum, Lyman Frank.

Akershus (ä'kėrs.hös). [Also, Aggershus.] Fylke (county in SE Norway, bordering on Sweden in the E and bounde by the fylker (counties) of Østfold, Hedmark, Opland. and Buskerud. Capital, Oslo; area, 1,894.7 sq. mi.; pop. 170,133 (1946).

Akeyem (ä.kā.yem'). See Akim.

Akha (ä'kä). [Chinese, Wo-ni.] A Tibeto-Burman-speaking hill people of S Yunnan in China, N Laos in Indochina, N Thailand (Siam), and the E Shan States of Burma.

Akhaia (ä.ċhä'yä). See Achaea, a department of modern Greece.

Akhal Tekke (ä.ċhäl' tek'ke). Oasis in the U.S.S.R., in the Turkmen Soviet Socialist Republic, in C Asia, N of Iran.

Akhaltsikhe (ä.ċhäl'tsē.ċhe). [Also, Akhalzikh (-tsēċh).] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Georgian Soviet Socialist Republic, famous for silver filigree work. It is the ancient capital of Turkish Georgia, and was captured by the Russians under Paskevich on Aug. 27, 1828. A Turkish attack upon it was repulsed in March, 1829, and near it a Russian victory was gained on Nov. 26, 1853. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Akhbar (ak'bär). See Akbar.

Akheloos (ä.ċhe.lô'ŏs). See Achelous.

Akhinos (ä.ċhē.nŏs') or Akhinou (-nö'). Modern Greek names of Cercinitis.

Akhisar (äk.hi.sär'). [Also: Akhissar; ancient name, Thyatira.] Town in W Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Manisa, ab. 58 mi. NE of Izmir (formerly Smyrna): a trading center served by a railway. It exports grapes. figs, olives, and opium. Pop. ab. 21,000.

Akhissar (äk.hi.sär'). Turkish name of Krujë.

Akhlat (äċh.lät'). See Ahlat.

Akhmatova (äĸ.mä'to.vạ), Anna. [Pseudonym of Anna Andreyevna Gorenko.] b. at Odessa, Russia, 1888—. Russian poet. Between 1912 and 1923 she published half a dozen slim volumes of delicately wrought personal lyrics, but it was not thereafter until World War II that her name reappeared in the press under a few poems. In the summer of 1946 her work was scathingly denounced by the secretary of the Communist party as harmful to Soviet youth, and was proscribed. A group of her poems is to be found in Avrahm Yarmolinsky's A Treasury of Russian Verse.

Akhmim (äċh.mēm'). [Also: Ekhmim; ancient names, Khemmis, Panopolis.] Town in Egypt, on the E bank of the Nile between Asyut and Thebes. It was the seat of the cult of Ammon Khem, and its ancient necropolis was discovered by Maspero in 1884. Pop. ab. 25,000.

Akhmim Papyrus. Greek papyrus which is interesting because it gives what might be called a last glimpse of Egyptian mathematics. Strangely enough, it is also the earliest document on Greek practical arithmetic. The author was a Christian. The papyrus is Byzantine and anterior to the Arab invasion of 640–641. It dates probably from the sixth or seventh century.

Akhtal (äċh'täl), al-. [Original name, Ghiyath ibn-Harith.] b. in Iraq, c640; d. c710. Arab poet.

Akhtiar (uċh.tyär'). See Sevastopol.

Akhtuba (äĸ'tö.bạ). River in the U.S.S.R., an arm of the Volga River which branches from the main stream near Stalingrad, and flows parallel with it to the Caspian Sea. Length, ab. 300 mi.

Akhtyrka (äĸ.tir'kạ). Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 75 mi. NW of Kharkov: industrial center. Pop. ab. 28,000.

Akim (ä.kim'). [Also, Akeyem.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SE part of the Gold Coast.

Akins (ā'kinz), Zoë. [Married name, Mrs. Hugo Cecil Levinge Rumbold.] b. at Humansville, Mo., Oct. 30, 1886—. American poet, playwright, and film writer. Her poetry includes Interpretations (1911), The Hills Grow Smaller (1937); her plays include Déclassée (1919), Daddy's Gone a-Hunting (1921), A Royal Fandango (1924), The Greeks Had a Word for It (1929), and The Little Miracle (1936). She won a Pulitzer prize in drama for her adaptation of The Old Maid (1935), and is the author of the novel Forever Young (1941).

Akir (ä.kēr'). Modern name of Ekron.

Akita (ä.kē.tä). Prefecture in Japan, in N Honshu. It is important for its resources of oil and copper, which (although modest by U.S. standards) are among the largest in Japan. Capital, Akita; area, 4,484 sq. mi., pop. 1,309,091 (1950).

Akita. City and port in Japan, in NW Honshu. It has considerable industrial importance for its oil refineries, and is politically significant as the capital of the prefecture of Akita. Its population, which increased throughout World War II, was 126,074 in 1950.

Akka (äk'kạ). Arabic name of Acre, Palestine.

Akkad (ak'ad, äk'käd). [Also, Accad.] One of the four cities of Nimrod's empire (Gen. x. 10.) in Shinar or Babylonia; in the cuneiform inscriptions it is usually the name of a region. The kings of Babylonia and those of Assyria who conquered Babylonia called themselves kings "of Sumer and Akkad," whence it is usually assumed that Sumer denominated S Babylonia and Akkad N Babylonia. The boundaries of this district are not certain, but it seems to have lain between the Tigris River and the Elamitic and Median mountains, its northern limit being the upper Zab. The name of a city, Agade, discovered in an inscription of Nebuchadnezzar, is held by some to be identical with the city of Akkad. Agade was the residence of the earliest known Babylonian king, Sargon I (c3800 B.C.). Cyrus mentioned this city as still existing in his time. Friedrich Delitzsch considered it part of the city of Sepharvaim; other scholars, however, have doubted this identification. Akkadian is the name given to the people and dialect of Akkad.

Akkerman (ä.kir.män'). Former name of Belgorod-Dnestrovski.

Akko (ak'ō). Old Testament name of Acre, Palestine.

Akkra (ak'rạ, ạ.krä'). See Accra.

Aklavik (ą.klav'ik, ä.klä'vik). Largest settlement in the far northern area of Canada, situated in the Northwest Territories, on the delta near the mouth of the Mackenzie River. It is the most northerly town not only on the continent of North America but also in the entire British Commonwealth. It is the headquarters for Anglican and Roman Catholic missions in the area; each denomination maintains its own cathedral, school, and hospital here. Pop. ab. 760 (including 170 whites, 213 Indians, and 377 Eskimos).

Akmolinsk (äk.mo.lēnsk'). [Also, Akmollinsk.] Oblast (region) of the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic, in the U.S.S.R., ab. 600 mi. NW of Alma-Ata. It is level in the N, hilly in the center, and a desert steppe in the S.

Akmolinsk. City in the U.S.S.R., the capital of the Akmolinsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Ishim River. A rail junction with lines to Magnitogorsk and Karaganda, it is also a caravan center. 44,700 (1935).

Ako (ä.kō), Michel. See Aco, Michel.

Akola (ą.kō'lą). District of Madhya Pradesh, Union of India, NE of Bombay. Cotton and millet are the chief crops. Capital, Akola; area, 4,093 sq. mi.; pop. 907,742 (1941).

Akola. Capital of Akola district, Madhya Pradesh, Union of India, ab. 300 mi. NE of Bombay: important trading center, especially for cotton. 62,564 (1941).

Akowa (ä'kō.wä). See Aka.

Akra (ak'rä, ą.krä'). See Accra.

Akrabbim (ą.krab'im). [Also, Maaleh-acrabbim.] In Biblical geography, a group of hills S of the Dead Sea, variously identified.

Akragas (ak'rą.gąs). Greek name of Agrigento.

Akrokeraunia (ak''rō.kē.rô'ni.ą). See Acroceraunia.

Akrokorinthos (ak''rō.kō.rin'thos). See Acrocorinthus.

Akron (ak'rǫn). City in NE Ohio, county seat of Summit County, ab. 36 mi. S of Cleveland, on the divide between the Lake Erie and Ohio River watersheds. It is known as the rubber capital of the world and is the chief supplier of automobile tires to nearby Detroit. Other manufactures include dirigibles, clay products, breakfast foods, and matches. It is the seat of the University of Akron and the Goodyear Industrial University. It was platted in 1825 and was an important shipping point on the Ohio and Erie Canal. Pop. of city, 244,791 (1940), 274,605 (1950); of urbanized area, 366,765 (1950).

Akropolites (ak''rō.pō.lī'tēz), Georgios. See Acropolita, George.

Ak-sai (äk.sī'). See Ak Su Darya.

Aksakov (äk.sä'kǫf), Ivan Sergeyevich. b. at Ufa, Russia, 1823; d. at Moscow, 1886. Russian Slavophile author, journalist, and politician; son of Sergey Timofeyevich Aksakov (1791–1859). He edited or founded several papers, including the Sbornik (1852), the Den (1861–65), the Moskva (1867), and the Slavophile organ, Rus (1880 et seq.). All of his journalistic ventures were at one time or another banned by the government.

Aksakov, Konstantin Sergeyevich. b. at Moscow, 1817; d. on the Greek island of Zante, in the Ionian Sea, 1860. Russian poet and prose writer; son of Sergey Timofeyevich Aksakov (1791-1859). Author of several Slavophile works, including The Prince Lupuvitski and Moscow Delivered in 1812.

Aksakov, Sergey Timofeyevich. b. at Ufa, Russia, 1791; d. at Moscow, 1859. Russian novelist and friend of Gogol, influential in the development of realism in Russian literature. Author of A Family Chronicle (1856) and other books, most of which are now remembered for their accurate portrayal of life on the estates of the Russian rural aristocracy, in the region of the Ural frontier.

Aksaray (äk.sä.rī'). [Also: Akserai; ancient name Archelais.] Town in C Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Kirşehir, ab. 110 mi. NW of Adana. It is a trading center for various nomads of the region, who sell Angora wool here, and has a rug industry. Pop. ab. 9,000

Akşehir (äk.she.hēr'). [Also: Akshehr, Ak-Sheher ancient name, Philomelion.] Town in W central Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Konya, ab 120 mi. N of Antalya: scene of the victory of Frederick Barbarossa over the Seljuks, on May 18, 1190. Bajazet I died here in 1403. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Akserai (äk.se.rī'). See Aksaray.

Akshehr (äk.sher') or Ak-Sheher (-she.her'). See Aksehir.

Ak Su Darya (äk sö där'yą). [Also: Aksu, Ak-sai.] River in China, in the province of Sinkiang, a northern tributary of the Tarim. It rises in the Tien Shan. Length, ab. 300 mi.

Aksum (äk.söm'). [Also, Axum.] Ancient town in Tigré, Ethiopia, noted for its antiquities including, according to tradition, the Ark of the Covenant. It was the capital of the Axumite Kingdom, and a coptic religious center.

Akte (äk'tē). See Athos.

Aktion (ak'ti.on, -shi.on). Greek name of Actium.

Aktyubinsk (äk.työ'binsk). City in Asia, in the U.S.S.R., in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic. Its location on a major rail line from the Caspian Sea plus considerable mineral resources in the area resulted in its development even before World War I as an industrial center of some importance. It is now believed to contain sizeable machine shops, plants for the working of chrome and nickel, and a chemical factory. The oil pipe line N from the Caspian Sea passes through the city. 41,500 (1935).

Akuapen (ä.kwä.pen'). See Akwapim.

Akunakuna (a.kö.nä.kö'nä). [Also, Akurakura.] Semi-Bantu-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting an area SE of Afikpo on the E bank of the Cross River in S Nigeria. Their number has been estimated at 9,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926).

Akupara (äk.ö.pä'rą). In Hindu mythology, the tortoise which upholds the world.

Akureyri (ä'kür.ā.ri). Seaport in N Iceland, situated on the Eyja Fjord, on the N coast of the island. It is a tourist center, and the second largest community in Iceland. 7,439 (1950).

Akwapim (ä.kwä.pēm'). [Also, Akuapen.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SE part of the Gold Coast in the neighborhood of Koforidua. Their dialect was reduced to writing in 1838, and since then has become the literary form of Tshi used by the Akan peoples of the Gold Coast.

Akyab (ak.yab', äk.yäb'). District in the division of Arakan, on the W coast of Burma, ab. 350 mi. SE of Calcutta, isolated from the rest of the country by mountains and dense jungles. Rice paddies occupy 90 percent of the cultivated land; fishing is the chief nonagricultural occupation. Area, ab. 5,000 sq. mi.

Akyab. Seaport in NW Burma, capital of the district of Akyab, and capital and chief port of the Arakan division of Burma, ab. 325 mi. NW of Rangoon. The major exports are fish and rice. 38,094 (1931).

Akyerman (ä.kir.män'). Former name of Belgorod-Dnestrovski.

Al- or al- (äl, al). Particle in many Arabic names, similar in use to de and von. Most such names are entered in this book under the element following the al- (as "Gazali, Abu Hamid Mohammed al-"); in some cases names have become better known in a westernized form such as "Alcazarquivir" and are thus entered. For such Arabic or Arabic-derived names not found under A, look under the second element.

Ala (ä'lä). Town and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Trentino-Alto Adige, in the province of Trento, situated on the Adige River, ab. 23 mi. SW of Trent. It was formerly a border community of the Austrian Tirol; incorporated into Italy in 1919. Pop. of commune, 6,171 (1936); of town, 2,301 (1936).

Ala-ad-Din (ä.lä'äd.dēn'). See Ala-ed-Din.

Al Aaraaf (al ar'af). Allegorical poem by Edgar Allan Poe published (1829) as the title-piece of a volume. It is written in octosyllabic divisions, heroic couplets, and songs. Deriving in some measure from the "Al Araf" of Mohammedan theology (a partition between heaven and hell wherein reside the souls of those who have been neither virtuous enough for heaven nor wicked enough for hell) the Al Aaraaf of Poe is conceived of as a star from which the Idea of Beauty originates. The youth Angelo is transported from the Earth to Al Aaraaf, where his love for the maiden Ianthe takes him out of the ideal realm. The couple are punished for their defection by being sentenced to hell.

Alabama (al.ą.bam'ą). [Called the "Cotton State" and the "Yellowhammer State."] State in the S United States, bounded by Tennessee on the N, Georgia (partly separated by the Chattahoochee) and Florida (separated by the Perdido) on the E, Florida and the Gulf of Mexico on the S, and Mississippi on the W: one of the Gulf States.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. Alabama is divided for administrative purposes into 67 counties. It sends 9 representatives to Congress and has 11 electoral votes. Capital, Montgomery; area, 51,279 sq. mi. (51,998 sq. mi. including water); pop. 3,061,743 (1950). The state ranks 28th in area, and 17th (on the basis of the 1950 census) in population. The chief cities are Birmingham, Mobile, Montgomery, Gadsden, Tuscaloosa, and Anniston.

Terrain and Climate. The Raccoon and Lookout ranges of the S Appalachians lie in the NE part of the state. The Cumberland Plateau, a low hilly range in the NE, is traversed by the Tennessee River, which flows across the N part of the state. Muscle Shoals, formerly ab. 37 mi. of rapids on the Tennessee in the NW, has been submerged by Lake Wilson, formed by Wilson Dam, a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority. At the head of Lake Wilson, and forming Wheeler Lake, is Wheeler Dam, on the Tennessee River and also a part of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The S part of the state consists of a fertile coastal plain with a general elevation of no more than 600 ft. The Tallapoosa and Coosa rivers, joining above Montgomery, form the Alabama River. The Alabama unites with the Tombigbee River, ab. 35 mi. above Mobile. From their confluence to Mobile Bay, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico, the combined streams are known as the Mobile River. Another river formed by the confluence of the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers is the Tensaw, or Tensas, which branches off ab. 5 mi. N of the Mobile and also flows into Mobile Bay. Other rivers in the state include the Chattahoochee, forming the SE boundary, the Conecuh and the Pea in the SE and S, the Choctawhatchee in the S, and the Black Warrior (a tributary of the Tombigbee) in the N.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. With agriculture as the state's chief industry, Alabama produces approximately one tenth of the nation's cotton. Peanuts, corn, potatoes (including sweet potatoes), sugar cane, tobacco, oats, fruits, and hay are other important crops, and the raising of livestock is a major occupation. Valuable deposits of coal and iron, particularly in the Birmingham region, make mining the second most important industry of the state. Limestone, clay, bauxite, marble, and sandstone are also abundant. The state's many forests supply material for a lumber industry of some scope. Annual income in the state from agriculture ranges as high as $315,000,000 and from mineral output as high as $112,000,000. The extensive system of waterways provides excellent facilities for transportation of goods, and Mobile is a busy port with considerable foreign trade.

History. Alabama was explored in the 16th century by the Spanish, chiefly De Soto, in c1540. The French established a temporary settlement on the Mobile River in 1702, making the first permanent settlement in 1711 on the site of the modern city of Mobile. The territory N of lat. 31° N. was ceded to Great Britain in 1763, and to the U.S. in 1783. The S portion became part of West Florida, falling (1783) to Spain; claimed (1803) by the U.S. under the Louisiana Purchase. Alabama was created a territory in 1817. The first constitutional convention was held in 1819 and Alabama became a state of the Union (the 22nd) on Dec. 14, 1819; seceded (Jan. 11, 1861) from the Union at a state convention. The government of the Confederate States of America was formed (Feb. 4, 1861) at Montgomery. Secession was declared null and void and slavery was abolished by a constitutional convention in 1865. The state rejoined the Union in June, 1868, after the constitutional convention of 1867. The present constitution was adopted in 1901.

Culture. A large rural segment is contained in the population. Negroes comprise approximately a third of the total. Institutions of higher learning include the Univeristy of Alabama, with branches at Birmingham, Mobile, and Montgomery, and the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, both state-supported, as is Alabama College for Women, Montevallo; five state teachers colleges, including one for Negroes; and Tuskegee Institute. State motto: Audemus Jura Nostra Defendere ("We Dare Defend Our Rights"); state flower, goldenrod; state bird, yellowhammer; state song, "Alabama."

Alabama. One of the several North American Indian communities, now extinct, that formed the Creek Confederacy, and after which the state of Alabama is named.

Alabama. Wooden steam-sloop of 1,040 tons built during the Civil War for the Confederacy, at Birkenhead, England. Her commander was Captain Raphael Semmes of the Confederate navy. Her crew and equipment were English. She cruised (1862–64), destroying American shipping, and was sunk by the Kearsarge, off Cherbourg, France, on June 19, 1864.

Alabama Claims. Claims for damages preferred by the U.S. against Great Britain for losses caused during the Civil War by Confederate raiders on the high seas, the chief of which was the Alabama, fitted out or supplied in British ports under the direction of the Confederate government. The adjustment of these claims was provided for by the treaty of Washington, concluded May 8, 1871, which referred them to a tribunal of arbitration to be composed of five members, named respectively by the governments of the U.S., Great Britain, Italy, Switzerland, and Brazil. The tribunal assembled at Geneva, Switzerland, on Dec. 15, 1871, and was composed of the following arbitrators: Count Federigo Sclopis, of Italy; Baron Itajuba, of Brazil; Jacques Staempfli, of Switzerland; Charles Francis Adams, of the U.S.; and Lord Chief Justice Sir Alexander Cockburn, of Great Britain. The agent for Great Britain was Lord Tenterden, the counsel Sir Roundell Palmer; the agent for the U.S., J. C. Bancroft Davis, the counsel William M. Evarts, Caleb Cushing, and Morrison R. Waite. Count Sclopis was elected president, and Alexandre Favrot, of Switzerland, secretary. After having received the cases of the contending parties, the tribunal adjourned till June 15, 1872. The U.S. claimed, in addition to direct damages, consequential or indirect damages; Great Britain contended against any liability whatever, and especially against any liability for indirect damages. The decision of the tribunal was announced on Sept. 14, 1872, a gross sum of 15,500,000 dollars in gold being awarded the U.S. in satisfaction for all claims. The Geneva tribunal is of importance in the history of international law on account of the rules relating to neutrals which it adopted to guide its action.

Alabama Platform. Political formula adopted (1848) by the state convention of Democrats in Alabama which enlisted the support of other elements in the South. Designed as a reply to the doctrine of squatter sovereignty and the Wilmot Proviso, the platform called for congressional safeguards for slavery in the territory ceded by Mexico to the U.S.

Alabama River. River in Alabama, which is formed by the Coosa and Tallapoosa above Montgomery, flows SW and unites with the Tombigbee to form the Mobile, ab. 32 mi. N of Mobile. Its chief tributary is the Cahawba. Length, ab. 315 miles; navigable to Montgomery.

Alabanda (al.ą.ban'dą). Ancient city of Caria, Asia Minor, on the site of the modern Hissar.

Alabaster (al'ą.bas.tėr), William. [Also, Arblastier.] b. at Hadleigh, Suffolk, 1567; d. in April, 1640. English poet and clergyman. Author of a Latin tragedy Roxana (acted at Cambridge c1592, printed 1632), and of various learned works.

Alabat (ä.lä.bät'). Elongated island in Lamon Bay on the N coast of the SE peninsula of Luzon, Philippine Islands: part of Tayabas province. Chief town, Alabat; area, 73.8 sq. mi.; pop. 11,723 (1939).

Alacaluf (ä.lä.kä.löf'). [Also: Alakaluf, Halakwulup.] South American Indian tribe inhabiting the archipelago on the S Chilean coast from ab. latitude 48° S. to W of the island of Tierra del Fuego. Greatly reduced in population today, they possessed an extremely simple material culture, much like the Yahgan, gaining their food principally from the sea and therefore spending much of the time in their bark canoes. The Alacaluf language forms an independent stock unrelated to any others.

Alacranes (ä.lä.krä'nes). See Arrecife Alacrán.

Aladağ (ä.lä.däg'). [Also, Ala-Dagh.] Range of the Taurus Mountains in the SE part of Turkey, N of Adana, a continuation of the Bulgar-Dagh. The range runs E and W for a distance of 200 mi. and reaches a height of 12,250 ft. Through these mountains engineers built a road in 1,000 B.C.

Aladağ. [Also: Ala-Dagh, Allah Dagh.] Mountain range in N part of Turkey. It runs NE to SW for a distance of ab. 220 mi. and reaches a height of 8,451 ft.

Aladağ. [Also, Ala-Dagh.] Mountain range in E Turkey, N of Lake Van, the source of the Eastern Euphrates. Elevation, ab. 11,545 ft.

Aladağ. [Also: Ala Dagh, Aladja-Dagh.] Mountain near Kars, in Turkish Armenia, the scene of a victory (Oct. 13–15, 1877) of the Russians under the Grand Duke Michael over the Turks under Mukhtar Pasha.

Aladdin (ą.lad'in). See also Ala-ed-Din.

Aladdin. In the story of "Aladdin or the Wonderful Lamp," in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, the son of a poor widow in China, who becomes possessed of a magic lamp and ring, which command the services of two powerful jinns. Learning the magic power of the lamp by accidentally rubbing it, Aladdin becomes rich and marries the Princess of Cathay through the agency of the "slave of the lamp," who also builds in a night a palace for her reception. One window of this palace is left unfinished, and no one can complete it to match the others. Aladdin therefore directs the jinns to finish it, which is done in the twinkling of an eye (hence the phrase "to finish Aladdin's window"; that is, to attempt to finish something begun by a greater man). After many years the original owner of the lamp, a magician, in order to recover it, goes through the city offering new lamps for old. The wife of Aladdin, tempted by this idea, exchanges the old and rusty magic lamp for a new and shining useless one (hence the phrase "to exchange old lamps for new"), and the magician transports both palace and princess to Africa, but the ring helps Aladdin to find them. He kills the magician, and, possessing himself of the lamp, transports the palace to Cathay, and at the sultan's death succeeds to the throne.

Ala-Denghiz (ä'lä.deng.gēz'). See Balkhash.

Ala-ed-Din (ä.lä'ed.dēn'). [Also: Aladdin, Ala-ad-Din.] fl. 14th century. Ottoman statesman; son of Othman, the founder of the Ottoman Empire. Orchan, Ala-ed-Din's elder brother, offered to share the empire with him, but he would accept only revenues from a single village and the post of vizier. With Orchan, he organized the corps of Janizaries (the élite military force that consisted of non-Turks captured as children and carefully schooled for their military career), with which he gained (1330) a victory over the emperor Andronicus and took Nicaea, chief defense of the Greek empire in Asia.

Alagez (al.ą.gez'; Russian, ä.lä.gyôs'). [Also: Alaghez, Alagöz, Ali-Ghez, Aragats.] Extinct volcano in the U.S.S.R., in the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic, ab. 30 mi. NW of Erivan. 13,436 ft.

Alagôas (ä.lą.gō'ąs). State in E Brazil, bounded by Pernambuco on the N and NW, the Atlantic on the SE, and Sergipe on the SW. Its chief products are cotton, sugar, and tobacco. Capital, Maceió; area, 11,016 sq. mi.; pop. 1,106,454 (1950).

Alai (ä.lī'). Mountain range in Asia, in the Kirghiz Soviet Socialist Republic, in the U.S.S.R. Its highest peaks reach an altitude of between 19,000 and 20,000 ft.

Alain (ą.laṅ). Pseudonym of Chartier, Émile.

Alain de Lille (dę lēl). [Latinized name, Alanus ab (or de) Insulis; called "Doctor Universalis."] b. c1128; d. 1202. French monk, theologian, and scholastic philosopher. Author of the satirical poem De planctu naturae, and the encyclopedic poem Anticlaudianus (1536), which attempts to encompass morality, science, and the arts.

Alain le Gros (lę grō). See Aleyn.

Alais (ą.le, -les). Former name of Alès.

Alaiye (ä.lī'ye). See Alanya.

Alajuela (ä.lä.HWā'lä). Province in W Costa Rica: agriculture. Capital, Alajuela; area, 3,652 sq. mi.; pop. 148,850 (1950).

Alajuela. Capital of Alajuela province, in C Costa Rica: center of the sugar industry, and a summer resort. 13,903 (1950).

Alakaluf (ä.lä.kä.löf'). See Alacaluf.

Ala Kul (ä'lä köl). [Also, Ala Kol.] Lake in the U.S.S.R., in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic, Asiatic Russia, near the Chinese frontier. It has no outlet. Area, ab. 900 sq. mi.

Alamán (ä.lä.män'), Lucas. b. at Guanajuato, Mexico, Oct. 18, 1792; d. in Mexico, June 2, 1853. Mexican historian and politician. He was secretary of the interior for the provisional government (1823–25), foreign minister under Bustamante, and again under Santa Anna.

Alamanni or Alemanni (al.ą.man'ī). Confederation of Suevic-speaking Germanic tribes which occupied the region from the Main to the Danube in the first part of the 3rd century A.D. Their territory extended later across the Rhine, including Alsace and part of E Switzerland.

Alamanni (ä.lä.män'nē) or Alemanni (-lā-), Luigi. b. at Florence, 1495; d. at Amboise, France, 1556. Italian poet, author of eclogues, hymns, satires, elegies, a didactic poem La Coltivazione (1546), an epic poem Girone il cortese (1548), and others. He conspired against Guilio de' Medici and escaped to Venice, from which place he went to Genoa, and in 1523 to the court of France, where, after returning to Florence for a short time (1527–30), he spent most of his later life. Through Wyatt, who imitated him, he exerted considerable influence upon English poetry.

Alamannia or Alemannia (al.ą.man'i.ą). Division of ancient Germany, which first appears about the end of the 3rd century. It lay in the SW part of Germany and adjoining parts of Switzerland and the Tirol, the region settled largely by the Alamanni (ancestors of the Swabians, German Swiss, and others).

Alamannic Federation (al.ą.man'ik). [Also, Alemannic Federation.] A federation of several German tribes, chiefly Suevi, which appeared in the area of the Main River in the third century after Christ. Caracalla engaged in war with them in 214. Under Aurelian they invaded the empire, but were defeated in three battles in 271. In 356 and 357 they were defeated by Julian; in 366 by Jovinus; and in 496 they were completely subjugated by Clovis.

Alambagh (ą.lum'bäg). [Also, Alumbagh.] An enclosure near Lucknow, India. It was held by Sir James Outram against the Sepoys from November, 1857, until March, 1858.

Alameda (al.ą.mē'dą). City in C California, in Alameda County, ab. 9 mi. E of San Francisco, on San Francisco Bay: naval air station; shipbuilding and fishing. 64,430 (1950).

Alameda. Village in SE Idaho, in Bannock County, near Pocatello. 4,694 (1950).

Alameda. Unincorporated community in C New Mexico, in Bernalillo County, ab. 9 mi. N of Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande River, in an agricultural region producing chiefly sorghum, chili peppers, and alfalfa. Nearby are the Alameda Pueblo ruins, a pre-Columbian Tigua Indian village. The Indian Pueblo was burned (1681) during Indian uprisings against the Spanish. 1,792 (1950).

Alaminos (ä.lä.mē'nōs), Antón or Antonio. fl. 1499–1520. Spanish navigator. He accompanied Columbus in 1499 and 1502, and was chief pilot of successive expeditions (1517–20) made by Cordova, Grijalva, and Cortés to Mexico. He discovered the Bahama channel in 1520.

Alamo (al'ą.mō). City in S Texas, NW of Brownsville: trading center for an agricultural area. 3,017 (1950).

Alamo. Mission building at San Antonio, Texas, begun in 1744. It was used as a parish church until 1793, when the mission was secularized. In February, 1836, it was occupied by William B. Travis with about 150 Texans in revolt against the government of Mexico. After withstanding a lengthy siege by Mexican forces under Santa Anna, it was taken by assault on March 6, and the surviving members of the garrison (including David Crockett and James Bowie) were killed. The American casualties, which included reinforcements, were 187 dead. The Mexicans, who employed between 6,000 and 7,000 men in the operation, lost about 1,500 killed. Although the affair involved, as defenders of the mission, Texas settlers who had emigrated from the U.S. to live in what was at the time of their emigration still Mexican territory, and the U.S. itself was therefore not directly involved, the "Battle of the Alamo" has come to be regarded as one of the most heroic of U.S. military achievements.

Alamogordo (al"ạ.mọ.gôr'dō). Town in S New Mexico, county seat of Otero County: railroad repair shops and a marble works. Near here, at the Alamogordo Air Base, the first successful test of the atomic bomb was made on July 16, 1945. Pop. 6,783 (1950).

Alamo Heights. City in C Texas, in Bexar County, N of San Antonio, of which it is a suburb. 8,000 (1950).

Alamos (ä'lä.mōs). Town in NW Mexico, in Sonora state. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Alamosa (al.ạ.mō'sạ). City in S Colorado, county seat of Alamosa County, on the Rio Grande: shipping point for potatoes and meat. 5,354 (1950).

Álamos de Barrientos (ä'lä.mōz ᴛʜā bär.ryen'tōs). b. at Medina del Campo, Spain, 1550; d. c1635. Spanish philologist.

Alamut (ä.lä.mōt'), Rock of. Place in N Iran, in the Elburz Mountains, ab. 70 mi. NW of the city of Tehran. In medieval times it was a stronghold of the Assassins.

Åland (ō'länd) or Ålandsöerna (ō'länds.ė'ėr.nä). Swedish names of Ahvenanmaa.

Alanda (ạ.lan'dạ). Celtic name of Lodi, Italy.

Aland Islands (ä'länd, ô'-). See Ahvenanmaa.

Alane (al'ạn), Alexander. See Alesius, Alexander.

Alani (ạ.lā'nī) or Alans (ā'lạnz). A people of Scythian origin, dwelling originally in the Caucasus. With the Huns they defeated the Ostrogoths (or East Goths) in 375 A.D., and invaded Gaul with the Suevi and Vandals in 406, and Spain in 409. They were defeated (c418) by the Visigoths (or West Goths) and disappeared as a nation in the 5th century.

Alantika (ä.län'ti.kä). Mountain range in W central Africa, in Adamawa, on the border between Nigeria and Cameroun. Average elevation, ab. 5,000 ft.

Alanus ab (or de) Insulis (ạ.lā'nus ab, dē, in'sụ.lis). Latinized name of Alain de Lille.

Alanya (ä.län'yä). [Also: Alaiye, Alaya.] Town in S Turkey, ab. 75 mi. SE of Antalya, on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, in a rich lowland area producing cotton, tobacco, wheat, grapes, and barley. It has a small flour mill and a macaroni factory. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Alaotra (ä.lä.ō'trä), Lake. Largest lake in Madagascar, NW of Tamatave. Length, ab. 30 mi.; width, ab. 5 mi.

Alapaevsk (ä.lä.pä'yifsk). [Also, Alapayevsk.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Sverdlovsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic; situated on the Neiva River ab. 80 mi. NE of the city of Sverdlovsk. High-grade iron and aluminum ores are found near it, and it is an iron-smelting center. Pop. ab. 12,000.

Alapaha (ạ.lap'ạ.hä). [Also, Allapaha.] River in S Georgia, which flows S into N Florida, a tributary of the Suwannee.

Alapalli (ạ.lap'ạ.li). See Alleppey.

Al Araf (äl ä'räf). In Mohammedan theology, a partition between heaven and hell (described in the Koran, Surah, vii. 44) in which may be found the souls of those who have not yet entered into heaven but desire to do so. It is regarded by some as a limbo for the patriarchs and prophets, or for other holy persons, and by others as a place of abode for those whose good and evil works are about equally balanced.

Alarbus (ạ.lär'bus). In Titus Andronicus, attributed to Shakespeare, a son of Tamora, queen of the Goths.

Alarcón (ä.lär.kōn'), Hernando de. b. (possibly) at Trujillo, Spain, 1500; date of death not known. Spanish navigator and sea captain. He was sent (c1540) to support by sea Francisco Vasquez de Coronado's expedition into what is now the southwestern U.S., and proved by penetration of the Gulf of California that California was not an island. The first to explore the Colorado River, he made two attempts to ascend it, planting a cross (subsequently found by Melchior Diaz) at the highest point he reached. His report is contained in Hakluyt's Voyages.

Alarcón, Pedro Antonio de. b. at Guadix, in Granada, Spain, March 10, 1833; d. at Madrid, July 20, 1891. Spanish poet, novelist, journalist, and politician. He accompanied the Spanish army to Morocco as a newspaper correspondent in 1859, and in 1864 was elected a member of the Cortes from Cádiz.

Alarcone (ä.lär.kō'nā). In Torquato Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, the king of Barca who fought against the Crusaders with the Egyptians.

Alarcón y Mendoza (ä.lär.kōn' ē men.dō'thä), Juan Ruiz de. b. at Taxco, Mexico, c1580; d. at Córdoba, Spain, Aug. 4, 1639. Spanish dramatic poet. He went to Spain after 1606, obtained a position under the Council of the Indies, and began to publish his comedies in 1628. They are regarded by some judges as the finest in the Spanish language. Perhaps the best known is La Verdad sospechosa, which was imitated by Corneille in Le Menteur.

Alard (ạ.lär), Jean Delphin. b. at Bayonne, France, March 8, 1815; d. Feb. 22, 1888. French violinist, music teacher, and composer. Taught (1843–75) at the Paris conservatory, where he included Sarasate among his pupils.

Alardo (ä.lär'dō). Younger brother of Bradamant in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

À la recherche du temps perdu (ạ lạr.shersh dü täñ per.dü). French novel (1913–27: in 13 to 16 vols., depending on the edition; Eng. trans., Remembrance of Things Past, 1922–32) by the French writer Marcel Proust (1871–1922). The individual parts of the novel are Du côté de chez Swann (1913; Eng. trans., Swann's Way), A l'ombre des jeunes filles en fleurs (1918; Eng. trans., Within a Budding Grove), Du côté de Guermantes (1920; Eng. trans., Guermantes Way), Sodome et Gomorrhe (4 vols. 1921–1922; Eng. trans., Cities of the Plain), La Prisonnière (2 vols., 1923; Eng. trans., The Captive), Albertine disparue (2 vols., 1925; Eng. trans., The Sweet Cheat Gone), and Le Temps retrouvé (2 vols., 1927; Eng. trans., Time Regained). Essentially a reconstruction of memories projected into fiction, the series records the disintegration of the French aristocracy and the rise to social primacy of the rich middle class.

Alaric (al'ạ.rik). b. on the island of Peucè, in the Danube, c370; d. at Cosentia, Italy, 410. King of the West Goths (or Visigoths) and conqueror of Rome. He commanded the Gothic auxiliaries under the emperor Theodosius in the war against Eugenius and Arbogastes (394), but left the Roman service upon the death of Theodosius and was elected (395) king of the West Goths. In the same year he invaded Greece but was compelled by Stilicho to retire (396) to Epirus; appointed prefect of eastern Illyricum by Arcadius; invaded Italy (400) but halted by Stilicho at Polentia (402); appointed prefect of western Illyricum by Honorius; invaded Italy (408) and after twice besieging Rome, captured and sacked it on Aug. 24, 410. He died while making preparations for an invasion of Sicily and Africa.

Alaric II. Killed in battle near what is now Poitiers, France, 507. King (484 et seq.) of the West Goths (or Visigoths); defeated and slain by Clovis, king of the Franks. He established a commission to draw up Breviarium Alaricianum (Breviary of Alaric), which was based on Roman law and formed a legal code for his subjects in Spain.

Alascans (ạ.las'kạnz). Name given to the foreign Protestants in London during the reign of Edward VI, taken from the name of the superintendent of the foreign (German, French, and other) churches in London, John Laski, a Polish refugee and follower of Zwingli.

Alasco (ạ.las'kō). [Also called Dr. Demetrius Doboobie.] Old astrologer in Sir Walter Scott's novel Kenilworth, secretly in the employ of Richard Varney.

Alaşehir (ä.lä.she.hēr'). [Also: Alashehr (-sher'); ancient name, Philadelphia.] Town in W Turkey, situated on the slope of Tmolus ab. 80 mi. E of Izmir (formerly, Smyrna): a small trading center, on two railways, of some local importance in the export of wool. It is the seat of a Greek archbishopric. Pop. ab. 8,000.

Alaska (ạ.las'kạ). Territory of the U.S., in NW North America, the largest territorial unit under U.S. control (in square miles, including areas of inland water, it is slightly more than twice the size of Texas). It is bounded on the N by the Arctic Ocean, on the E by Canada, on the S by the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by Bering Strait and the Bering Sea. At its westernmost point, at the tip of the Seward Peninsula, it is only ab. 50 mi. by air from the easternmost point of Siberia, in the U.S.S.R. During and since World War II it has received considerable attention as a strategic military outpost by the tacticians of the U.S. Department of Defense. Capital, Juneau; area, 571,065 sq. mi. (land only), 586,378 sq. mi. (including areas of water); pop. 72,524 (1940), 128,643 (1950).

Terrain and Climate. The chief mountain ranges are the Alaska range in the S and C part of the territory, the Aleutian range, extending SW from the main body of the territory over a considerable part of the Aleutian peninsula (and often included under the Alaska range), the Brooks range, in the N part of the territory, N of the Arctic Circle, and the Coast range in the S part of the territory. The highest mountain is Mount McKinley, which is at its peak (20,300 ft.) not only the highest point in Alaska, but also the highest in North America. About 125 mi. SE of Mount McKinley is Matanuska Valley, notable for its fertility and relatively mild climate. The longest river in Alaska is the Yukon, which is navigable during the summer all the way from the Bering Sea to the territory of Yukon, under Canadian jurisdiction; its overall length of ab. 2,000 mi. makes it one of the longest rivers in North America. The seasonal temperature range in some parts of Alaska is considerable (at Fort Yukon, which lies almost exactly on the Arctic Circle, there are recorded instances of —78° Fahrenheit in the winter and of 100° Fahrenheit in the summer), but the greater part of the territory lies in the North Temperate Zone, S of the Arctic Circle, and considerable portions of the S coastal area are comparable in their climate to the NW coast of the U.S.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Alaska's major exports derive chiefly from the territory's gold mines and fisheries: gold production in recent years has reached a peak of more than $25,000,000 per annum in value; exported fish, 90 percent of which are salmon, bring an annual revenue of millions of dollars. Agricultural products still play a comparatively modest part in Alaska's economy, but the development of such areas as the Matanuska Valley is expected vastly to increase their quantity and value. Other products of some importance include furs, lumber, and a growing volume of processed (either by canning or quick-freezing) fish.

History. The first white men known to have reached the area of what is now Alaska were members of the expedition headed by Vitus Bering, who touched on the islands off the coast in 1741 and claimed the area for Russia. It was not until 1784, more than 40 years later, that the Russians established their first permanent settlement (on Kodiak island), but Russian interest in the furs which could be obtained from Alaska was considerable almost from the time of Bering's voyage. In 1799, after many years of collection and marketing by individuals, the fur trade was consolidated officially in the hands of the Russian American Fur Company, under the direct management of Aleksandr Baranov, who proceeded forcefully and effectively to exploit the native inhabitants of Alaska, both fur-bearing and human. Baranov's tactics in dealing with the Aleuts, Tlingits, and other native tribes were ruthless to the point of inhumanity, but he made the territory a profitable one for his employers in Moscow and their agents in Alaska. After his death, in 1819, the value of Alaskan fur-exports declined, and when (as a result of the cost of the Crimean War and possible further difficulties with England) the Russian government was willing to consider selling the territory, an interested listener was found in U.S. Secretary of State William H. Seward. Largely through Seward's efforts, Alaska was purchased by the U.S. from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000, but there were few in the U.S. at the time who could appreciate the value of the territory; Seward was ridiculed and abused for what was generally considered to be a piece of wanton extravagance involving the taxpayers' money. In 1897, however, the discovery of gold in the Yukon brought a complete reversal of this attitude, and by 1898 there had developed a rush of prospectors from the U.S. to Alaska that rivaled the California gold rush of 1849. It was at this time largely because of the now obvious value of the region that a boundary dispute between the U.S. and Canada concerning the extreme southern portion of Alaska reached a point of climax; it was solved, in favor of the U.S., by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal in 1903. During the first decade of the 20th century, as the quantity of easily accessible gold became steadily less, a considerable portion of the population of the territory returned to the U.S., and Alaska was for a short time seemingly destined to become once again a neglected appendage of one of the world's great powers. In the 1920's, however, completion of the Alaska railroad, an increasing amount of tourist interest, and the development of modest farming communities all combined to hasten a new development of the territory. A full understanding of the strategic importance of the region was brought home to most Americans by the events of World War II, and the status of the territory by the beginning of the sixth decade of the century was that of both a key military bastion and of a steadily developing economic asset to the U.S. as a whole.

Alaska Boundary Tribunal. Convention called (1903) between the U.S. and Great Britain to determine the boundary between SE Alaska and Canada. The Canadians had made claims to land which would give them access to the sea through inlets and thus facilitate transportation into the Klondike gold fields. The tribunal, composed of three Americans, two Canadians, and the Lord Chief Justice of England, met at London, and rejected the principal Canadian claims. The two Canadians dissented, but Lord Alverstone voted with the American delegation, thus arousing the charge that President Theodore Roosevelt had influenced his decision.

Alaska Highway. [Called the "Alcan Highway"; former names, Alaska Military Highway, Alaskan International Highway.] An all-weather highway for motor vehicles between Dawson Creek, in British Columbia, and Fairbanks, Alaska. Based on the distance between these two points, its length is generally given as 1,523 mi., but if certain branches and short feeder-roads are included it may be said to be some 150 mi. longer. It came into being as the result of an agreement between Canada and the U.S. in World War II, and was built (largely in the period March-November, 1942, although some work continued into 1943) by a force of some 10,000 men of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, aided by civilian contractors. Its primary purpose was to provide a wartime road-link between Alaska and supply bases in Canada and the U.S.; some authorities have questioned whether its military use in World War II ever justified its cost of approximately 139 million dollars, but the continuing strategic importance of Alaska makes it more than likely that the road will be a worthwhile long-term investment. The highway was maintained as a military road until April, 1946, when the 1,221-mile section of it that lies in Canada was turned over by the U.S. military authorities to administration by the Canadian government. However, it was not opened for ordinary tourist traffic until 1948, since which time a considerable number of people have driven over all or part of its length (overnight accommodations and gasoline stations are maintained at intervals along its route). Its width is at no point less than 24 ft., and it has no grades of more than four percent. The name "Alcan Highway," which is still used by many people, has had no official status since 1945.

Alaska Peninsula. Peninsula in SW Alaska, extending toward the Aleutians from Iliamna Lake, and partly enclosing the Bering Sea.

Alaska Range. Mountain range in S Alaska. Its highest peak, Mount McKinley (20,300 ft.), is also the highest in North America.

Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (ą.las'ką.ū'kon.pą-sif'ik). Exposition held at Seattle, Wash., from June to October, 1909, for the purpose of exhibiting the resources and demonstrating the progress of northwestern America and the Pacific coast generally. It occupied 250 acres of the campus of the University of Washington.

Alassio (ä.läs'syō). Town and commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Liguria, in the province of Savona, situated on the Gulf of Genoa, ab. 48 mi. SW of Genoa: a fashionable winter health resort and bathing place on the Italian Riviera, favored by English tourists. It is also a fishing port. Buildings of interest to tourists suffered little damage during World War II; the church of San Ambrogio is intact. Pop. of commune, 8,090 (1936); of town, 5,609 (1936).

Alastor (ą.las′tọr). In Greek mythology, a surname of Zeus as the avenger; also applied to any avenging deity or demon.

Alastor. In medieval demonology, a spirit of evil who carries out the sentences of the king of hell.

Alastor. Poem by Shelley, published in 1816, named from its chief character, "Alastor or the Spirit of Solitude."

Alatau or Ala Tau (ä.lä.tou′). Series of mountain ranges located around and near the lake Issyk Kul in C Asia.

Alatheus (ą.lā′thē.us) or Odotheus (ọ.dō′thē.us). d. 386 A.D. Military leader of the East Goths (Ostrogoths).

Alatri (ä.lä′trē). [Ancient name, Alatrium.] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Frosinone, situated on a hillside above the Cosa River, ab. 45 mi. SE of Rome. It has stone quarries and garment factories. There are many important architectural remains from Roman antiquity. The Church of Santa Maria Maggiore is in the Romanesque style of the early Middle Ages. The town was active on the side of the Papacy in the struggle against Emperor Frederick II. Considerable damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest; the Church of San Francesco, however, is intact. Pop. of commune, 18,616 (1936); of town, 4,702 (1936).

Alatyr (ä.lä.tir′). Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Chuvash Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, on the Sura River ab. 125 mi. SW of Kazan: agricultural trade; machinery and lumber industries. Pop. ab. 22,000.

Alausí (ä.lou.sē′). Town in C Ecuador, in Chimborazo province. 12,238 (est. 1944).

Álava (ä′lä.bä). Province in N Spain, bounded on the N by Vizcaya and Guipúzcoa, on the E by Navarra, on the S by Logroño, and on the W by Burgos. It is one of the Basque provinces, preserving Basque language and customs. The terrain is generally mountainous, the climate more humid than in other parts of Spain. Capital, Vitoria; area, 1,175 sq. mi.; pop. 122,334 (1950).

Álava, Miguel Ricardo de. b. at Vitoria, Spain, 1771; d. at Barèges, France, 1843. Spanish politician and general. He fought under Wellington in the Peninsular campaign, attaining the rank of brigadier general; president of the Cortes (1822); fought in the same year under Ballasteros and Murillo in support of the Cortes against the rebels; went into exile (1823) on the restoration of Ferdinand by French intervention; espoused the cause of Maria Christina against Don Carlos on the death of Ferdinand; was ambassador to London (1834) and to Paris (1835); retired to France after the insurrection of La Granja.

Álava y Navarete (ē nä.bä.rā′tā), Ignacio Maria de. b. at Vitoria, Álava, Spain, c1750; d. at Chiclana, near Cádiz, Spain, May 26, 1817. Spanish admiral and explorer. He is best known for his voyage of circumnavigation of the globe, begun in 1794, in which he explored the coasts of South America and the East Indies, and added considerably to the geographical knowledge of his day. He commanded a squadron at Trafalgar, and in 1816 was made grand admiral and chief of marine.

Alaya (ä.lä′yä). See Alanya.

Alayrac (dȧ.lā.rȧk), Nicolas d'. See Dalayrac or d'Alayrac, Nicolas.

Alazan (ä.lä.zän′). River in the U.S.S.R., in the Azerbaijan Soviet Socialist Republic, a northern tributary of the Kura. Length, ab. 150 mi.

Alba (äl′bä). [Ancient name, Alba Pompeia.] Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont, in the province of Cuneo, situated on the Tanaro River, ab. 31 mi. SE of Turin. It is a commercial town, with brickyards, machine factories, distilleries, and a large trade in wine, grain, and cattle; it is one of the wine centers of Piedmont. There are Roman remains and the Cathedral of San Lorenzo in Gothic-Lombard style. A member of the Lombard League in the Middle Ages, Alba became later part of the territory of Monferrato; it was incorporated into Sardinia at the end of the 18th century. Some damage was suffered during World War II by buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune 17,308 (1936); of town, 11,072 (1936).

Alba (al′bą), Duke of. See Berwick and Alba, Duke of.

Albacete (äl.bä.thā′tā). Province in E Spain, bounded by Cuenca on the N, Valencia and Alicante on the E, Murcia on the SE, Granada on the S, and Jaén and Ciudad Real on the W. The province is partly mountainous, arid, and thinly settled. Livestock raising is more important than agriculture; iron and copper are mined. Capital, Albacete; area, 5,739 sq. mi.; pop. 400,821 (1950).

Albacete. [Arabic, Al-basit.] City in E Spain, the capital of the province of Albacete, situated on the Canal de Albacete (or Canal de María Cristina) and the junction of the Júcar and Segura rivers, ab. 138 mi. SE of Madrid. One of the larger towns of Castile, it is a center of the grain trade, manufactures fine cutlery and matches, and is known for its fairs. The irrigation system dates from the period of Charles IV. 71,822 (1950).

Alba de Liste (äl′bä dā lē′stā), Count of. See Henríquez de Guzmán, Luis.

Alba Fucense (äl′bä fö.chen′zā). [Also: Albe; Latin, Alba Fucentia.] Village near Avezzano, in C Italy, in the province of Aquila. It contains an ancient amphitheater of the usual Roman elliptical plan, 114 by 305 ft., estimated to have seated 20,000 people. The arena measures 68 by 159 ft. The Church of San Pietro, damaged in the earthquake of 1915, was not further harmed in World War II, although repairs of the original damage had still not been completed.

Alba Iulia (äl′bä yö′lyä). [Also: Alba Julia; German, Karlsburg, formerly Weissenburg; Hungarian, Gyulafehérvár; Latin, Apulum.] Town in NW Rumania, in the province of Transylvania, situated on the Mureş River, ab. 30 mi. NW of Sibiu. It is a railroad junction, in a wine-growing region. Since the 11th century seat of a bishopric, it is now that of a Roman Catholic bishopric; it was the seat also of the Transylvanian princes from the 16th century. Once a Roman colony, it now has a museum of Roman discoveries. There is a beautiful Romanesque cathedral with the tomb of the Hungarian national hero János Hunyadi, and a college for priests. The citadel, known as the Karlsburg, was built by the emperor Charles VI in 1716–35. The town was long a center of the Rumanian nationalist movement; here, in 1918, the National Committee of Transylvania proclaimed union with Rumania. On Oct. 15, 1922, the coronation of King Ferdinand I and Queen Marie took place here. 14,420 (1948).

Alba Longa (al′bą long′gą). In ancient geography, a town in Latium, Italy, ab. 15 mi. SE of Rome, the ancient center of the Latin League. Its foundation is traditionally ascribed to Ascanius, son of Aeneas, and its destruction (665 B.C.) to Tullus Hostilius.

Alba Marla or Albamarla (al.bą.mär′lą). Medieval Latin name of Aumale.

Albamonte (äl.bä.mōn′tā), Giuseppe. See Abamonti or Albamonte, Giuseppe.

Alban (ôl′bąn, al′-), Saint. Killed at Verulamium (now St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England), c304. Roman soldier and first martyr of Britain, executed for sheltering a Christian priest. He is said to have been a native of the town where he was killed. The famous monastery of Saint Alban was founded in his honor by King Offa c795. His festival is celebrated in the Roman Catholic Church on June 22, and in the Anglican Church on June 17.

Albanenses (al.bą.nen′sēz). Small medieval sect, named from the city of Alba in Piedmont, Italy, which professed Manichaean doctrines. They were closely allied to the Albigenses.

Alban Hills (al′bąn). [Italian, Monti Laziali, Monti Albani.] Mountain group SE of Rome, near Albano Laziale. Its highest point is Monte Cavo.

Albani (äl.bä′nē), Mme. Emma. [Stage name of Marie Louise Cécile Emma Lajeunesse.] b. at Chambly, near Montreal, Nov. 1, 1852; d. at London, 1930. Canadian operatic soprano. She derived her stage name from Albany, N.Y., where she moved with her family in 1864.

Albani or Albano (äl.bä′nō), Francesco. b. at Bologna, Italy, 1578; d. there, 1660. Italian painter. A student with Guido Reni under Calvaert and the Carracci, he produced over 40 altarpieces and a number of frescoes.

Albani, Giovanni Francesco. Original name of Pope Clement XI.

Albani, Giovanni Girolamo. b. at Bergamo, Italy, 1504; d. 1591. Italian soldier, diplomat, and cardinal.

Albani, Mathias. b. 1621; d. at Botzen, 1673. Violin-maker, a pupil of Stainer.

Albani, Villa. Palace in the N part of Rome, celebrated for its art collections.

Albania (al.bā′ni.ą). In ancient geography, a country of W Asia, lying W of the Caspian Sea, N of Armenia, and E of Iberia, and corresponding nearly to the modern Azerbaijan and S Daghestan in the U.S.S.R. It was part of the Assyrian empire, and the theater of some of the wars of Sargon and Sennacherib.

Albania. [Albanian, Shqipni; French Albanie; German, Albanien; Serbo-Croatian, Albanija; Turkish, Arnautlik.] Country in SE Europe, bounded by Yugoslavia on the N and E, Greece and the Ionian Sea on the S, and the Ionian Sea, the Strait of Otranto, and the Adriatric Sea on the W. It corresponds largely to the ancient Illyria and part of Epirus. Occupied by the Turks in the first part of the 15th century, it revolted (1443–67) under Scanderbeg, and was subdued by the Turks in 1478. Several rebellions against the Turks occurred about the beginning of the 19th century. Albania resisted the treaty of Berlin (1878) and the cession of territory to Montenegro in 1880. It was annexed (1939) by Italy, but regained its independence in 1946. The country is largely mountainous or hilly. The inhabitants are almost entirely engaged in agricultural and pastoral activities. Corn and wheat are the chief subsistence crops. The only railroad line in the country runs between the port of Durrës and Tirana. The Moslem religion is predominant, but there is a large Christian minority. Capital, Tirana; area, 10,629 sq. mi.; pop. 1,150,000 (est. 1947).

Albania. Ancient name of Aubagne.

Albaniae Pylae (al.bā′ni.ē pī′lē). See Caspian Gates.

Albanian (al.bā′ni.ąn). Language of the Albanians, a member of the Indo-European family. It shows heavy borrowings from Latin and also from Greek, Turkish, and Slavic. It is supposed to be the descendant of the ancient Illyrian, of which only scanty records are extant. The two chief dialects are Tosk and Geg. Albanian is also called Skipetar, from the native name of the people (Shgipetár, meaning "highlanders").

Albanian Gates. See Caspian Gates.

Albano (äl.bä′nō), Lake. [Italian, Lago di Albano, Lago di Castello; Latin, Albanus Lacus.] Small lake in C Italy, near Albano Laziale, noted for its picturesque scenery, occupying the crater of an extinct volcano and drained by an underground channel constructed in the 4th century B.C.

Albano, Monte (or Mount). See Cavo, Monte.

Albano Laziale (lä.tsyä′lā). [Ancient name, Albanum.] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Roma, situated in the Alban Hills, ab. 13½ mi. SE of Rome. The town, in a beautiful location near Lake Albano, is the center of a wine and olive growing district. It contains a number of churches dating from the Middle Ages and the 18th century, and the palatial country homes of the Roman nobility. There are some architectural remains from ancient times, particularly of the villa of Pompey and a pretorian camp built by Domitian. The papal summer residence at Castel Gandolfo is nearby. The town was incorporated into the Papal States in 1697. Damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 11,469 (1936); of town, 9,414 (1936).

Albanova (äl.bä.nō′vä). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Napoli, N of Naples. It belongs to the metropolitan region of Naples and has a considerable agricultural trade with that city. Pop. of commune, 17,875 (1936); of town, 9,351 (1936).

Albany (ôl′bą.ni). See also Breadalbane.

Albany, Countess of. [Title of Louise Maria Caroline Stuart.] b. 1753; d. at Florence, Italy, Jan. 29, 1824. German princess; daughter of Gustavus Adolphus, prince of Stolberg-Gedern, and wife (married March 28, 1772) of the "Young Pretender," Charles Edward Stuart, Duke of Albany. She was later (1784–1803) the mistress of Vittorio Alfieri.

Albany. Small seaport in SW Australia, in the state of Western Australia, situated on King George Sound, ab. 250 mi. SE of Perth. 4,761 (1947).

Albany. Residential city in C California, in Alameda County, NE of San Francisco. 17,590 (1950).

Albany. City in SW Georgia, capital of Dougherty County, on the Flint River at the head of navigation, ab. 90 mi. SW of Macon: packing center for the pecan orchards of the surrounding region. 31,155 (1950).

Albany. City in E New York, capital of the state and county seat of Albany County: inland seaport and port of entry. It is an important shipping center on the Mohawk route for petroleum, soda ash, and wheat, and has manufactures of automobile accessories, sheet metal, paper, clay products, chemicals, and iron products. It is the seat of the New York State College for Teachers, the College of Saint Rose, the Albany College of Pharmacy, the Albany Law School, and the Dudley Observatory of Union College. Among its notable old houses is the Schuyler Mansion. Albany was settled by the Dutch in 1614, was granted a city charter in 1686, and was the meeting place of the Albany Congress (1754), which approved Benjamin Franklin's plan to form a colonial union; it became the permanent state capital in 1797. Pop. of city, 130,577 (1940), 134,995 (1950); of urbanized area (including Troy), 291,897 (1950).

Albany. City in W Oregon, county seat of Linn County, at the confluence of the Calapooya and Willamette rivers ab. 63 mi. SW of Portland: trading and shipping center for an agricultural region producing chiefly wool, grain, rye-grass, vetch seed, and cascara bark. Manufactures include leather, chairs, boxes, iron, dairy and meat products, and flour. It was founded in 1848. Pop. 10,115 (1950).

Albany, Duke of. Character in Shakespeare's King Lear, the husband of Goneril, Lear's eldest daughter.

Albany Congress. Congress at Albany, N.Y., called in 1754 at the behest of the British government with the aim of winning the confidence of the Iroquois and obtaining their aid in the conflict with France. The chiefs of the Iroquois met with commissioners from Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, but the negotiations with the Indians were inconclusive. The outstanding accomplishment of the congress was its adoption of the so-called Albany Plan of colonial union set forth by Benjamin Franklin. It provided for an improved scheme of colonial defense and a more effective supervision and control of Indian affairs. The plan called for a general government in which each colony would retain its separate identity; the executive would be appointed by the crown, while the delegates would be named by the various colonial legislative bodies. The British crown rejected the plan as an invasion of royal powers; the colonies frowned upon the scheme because it seemed to them a threat to their independence. The Albany Plan, even though never placed in operation, had a genuine value, for it served as a guide to the basis of union in the critical years between 1765 and the beginning of the Revolutionary War.

Albany Convention. Meeting of military and civil officers of Albany which gathered on Aug. 1, 1689, and established an interim regime awaiting the instructions of the British crown. The threat of armed attack by the French led the convention to request support from Jacob Leisler, then in power in lower New York; when Leisler refused, and the French attack materialized, the convention finally agreed to make Leisler commander in chief.

Albany Regency. Name given to a clique of New York politicians who controlled (c1820–54) the machinery of the Democratic Party in the state of New York. It is generally recognized as the first fully developed political machine in the U.S. Among its members were Martin Van Buren, William L. Marcy, Azariah C. Flagg, Silas Wright, John A. Dix, and Benjamin F. Butler.

Albany River. River in N Ontario, Canada, flowing into James Bay. Length, ab. 610 mi.

Alba Pompeia (al′bą pom.pē′ą). Ancient name of Alba.

Albareto di Borgotaro (äl.bä.rā′tō dē bôr.gō.tä′rō). A former name of Borgo Val di Taro.

Albatross (al′bą.tros). New England sailing vessel used by W. P. Hunt of the Pacific Fur Company in withdrawing from the Astoria fur post upon learning of the commencement of hostilities (1812) between the U.S. and Great Britain. It was Hunt's object to prevent seizure by the British of the American-owned furs at Astoria.

Albay (äl.bī'). Province in SE Luzon, Philippine Islands. It is bounded by Camarines Sur on the N, the Pacific Ocean and Sorsogon on the E, Sorsogon on the S, and the Burias Pass on the SW and W. Besides its area in Luzon it includes several islands, among them Catanduanes and Batan. Albay, including Catanduanes, is the largest abacá-producing province of the Philippines. A good quality of coal is mined in Batan. Gold and mercury are reported in other parts of the province. The NE coast is indented by Albay Gulf. Mountains extend from E to W, the eastern extremity being Mayon volcano. The inhabitants are chiefly Bicols. Capital, Legaspi; area, 1,554 sq. mi.; pop., including Catanduanes, 506,815 (1948).

Albay. Former capital of Albay province, SE Luzon, Philippine Islands: now incuded in Legaspi, on the W side of Albay Gulf.

Albay Gulf. Gulf on the NE coast of Albay province, SE Luzon, in the Philippine Islands.

Albazin (äl.bä.zēn'). [Also: Albasin, Yaksa.] Former fortified town in the U.S.S.R., in what is now the Chita oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, on the northern bend and along the gorges of the Amur River: a center of Russian colonization in the 17th century.

Albe (äl'bā). See Alba Fucense.

Albe (dälb), Baron Bacler d'. See Bacler d'Albe, Louis Albert Ghislain, Baron.

Albee (ôl'bē), Edward Franklin. b. at Machias, Me., Oct. 8, 1857; d. at Palm Beach, Fla., March 11, 1930. American theater-chain manager and owner. Organized the Keith-Albee vaudeville circuit of approximately 70 theaters with B. F. Keith; president of the Keith-Albee vaudeville exchange, which at one time handled bookings for vaudeville players in 317 theaters in the U.S. and Canada.

Albee, Ernest. b. at Langdon, N.H., Aug. 8, 1865; d. May 25, 1927. American philosopher and author. He was on the faculty of Cornell's Sage School of Philosophy as an instructor (1892–1902), an assistant professor (1902–07), and professor (1907–27). Author of The History of English Utilitarianism (1902), which was the best and most comprehensive work in that field in its time.

Albee, Fred Houdlett. b. at Alna, Me., April 13, 1876; d. at New York, Feb. 15, 1945. American orthopedic surgeon and specialist in bone grafting. Author of Bone Graft Surgery (1915), Orthopedic and Reconstructional Surgery (1919), Injuries and Diseases of the Hip (1937), and numerous technical pamphlets.

Albeladory (al.bel.ä.dōr'ī). See Beladori, Abul Hassan Ahmed al-.

Albemarle (al'bę.märl). Town in S central North Carolina, county seat of Stanly County: agricultural marketing center; lumber and brickyards; manufactures of textiles, cottonseed oil, and flour. It was incorporated as a town in 1842. Pop. 11,798 (1950).

Albemarle. Confederate ironclad ram, built on the Roanoke River ab. 30 mi. below Weldon, N.C., in 1863. She did much damage to Union shipping during the spring of 1864, but was destroyed by Lieutenant W. B. Cushing during the night of Oct. 27, 1864. He attacked her in a small launch carrying a torpedo. Forcing his way within the chain of logs which formed part of her defense, he exploded the torpedo under the ram's overhang. (Cushing's daring exploit made him a national hero for the rest of his life. Although the feat can hardly be said to have materially hastened the Union victory, it is nevertheless, and quite understandably, one of the most often told stories of individual bravery in the U.S. Navy.) The Albemarle was afterward raised, towed to Norfolk, and in 1867 stripped and sold.

Albemarle, 1st Duke of. See Monck or Monk, George.

Albemarle, 1st Earl of. See Keppel, Arnold Joost van.

Albemarle. English name of Aumale, medieval countship.

Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal. Inland waterway in NE North Carolina, constructed (1856–60) as a link between Albemarle Sound and Chesapeake Bay. It consists of two canals, set 30 mi. from each other; one joins Currituck Sound with the North River, while the other links North Landing River with the Elizabeth River.

Albemarle Point. See under Charleston, S.C.

Albemarle Sound. Shallow body of water in the NE part of North Carolina, separated from the Atlantic by sand beaches, and communicating with Pamlico Sound on the S through Croatan and Roanoke Sounds. It receives the Roanoke, Chowan, and Alligator rivers, and is connected with Chesapeake Bay by the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal and the Dismal Swamp Canal. Length, ab. 55 mi.

Albenga (äl.beng'gä). [Latin: Albium Ingaunum, Albingaunum.] Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Liguria, in the province of Savona, situated near the Cento River on the Riviera di Ponente, between Genoa and San Remo. It contains a Roman bridge and the Gothic Cathedral of San Michele. Some damage was suffered during World War II by buildings of tourist interest; however, the Baptistery, the Duomo (cathedral), the Chapel of Santa Maria in Fontibus, and the Ponte Lungo are intact. Pop. of commune, 10,698 (1936); of town, 5,848 (1936).

Albéniz (äl.bā'nēth), Isaac. b. at Camprodón, Spain, May 29, 1860; d. in the Pyrenees, 1909. Spanish composer and pianist. He studied under Franz Liszt, and was appointed official pianist to the queen of Spain. During his lifetime he made a number of international concert tours, and wrote several operas and zarzuelas (a kind of operetta), but he is now best known for piano works such as Iberia and Catalonia, which are based on Spanish folk melodies.

Albéniz, Pedro. b. at Logroño, Spain, April 14, 1795; d. at Madrid, April 12, 1855. Spanish organist, pianist, and composer. Choirmaster at San Sebastián and subsequently first organist at the Capilla Real, he is noted for his compositions for the pianoforte.

Alberdi (äl.ber'dē), Juan Bautista. b. in Argentina, 1810; d. at Paris, 1884. Argentine political scientist, jurist, and sociologist. Exiled (1839–52) for opposition to the dictator, J. M. de Rosas, he was important as a political adviser and diplomat in the administration of Urquiza that followed the overthrow of Rosas. He published (1852) at Valparaíso, his Base for the Organization of the Argentine Republic (which he wrote in five days), and contributed in great part to the framing of the Argentine constitution.

Alberdingk Thijm (äl'bėr.dingk tīm'), Karel J. L. See Deyssel, Lodewijk van.

Albères Mountains (ál.ber). [French, Monts Albères.] The eastern ramification of the Pyrenees, between Spain and the department of Pyrénées-Orientales, France.

Alberic I (al'bėr.ik). Killed by the Romans at Orta, Italy, c925. Lombard nobleman, patrician (also called senator, consul, and prince) of the Romans and duke of Spoleto; expelled from Rome by Pope John X. He married Marozia, daughter of Theodora.

Alberic II. d. 954. Patrician and senator of the Romans; son of Alberic I and Marozia.

Alberoni (äl.bā.rō'nē), Giulio. b. near Piacenza, Italy, 1664; d. 1752. Statesman and cardinal. Representative of the Duke of Parma at the Spanish court; negotiator of the marriage of Philip V and Elizabeth Farnese; prime minister of Spain (1715–19). His foreign policy led to the Quadruple Alliance and a war disastrous to Spain; exiled from Spain, he spent his last years in Italy.

Albers (äl'bėrs), Johann Friedrich Hermann. b. at Dorsten, Westphalia, Nov. 14, 1805; d. at Bonn, May 12, 1867. German physician and professor at Bonn, author of Atlas der pathologischen Anatomie (1832–62), and others.

Albers, Josef. b. in Westphalia, Germany, 1888—. Abstract painter, glass designer, photographer, and typographer, who has been in recent years a teacher at Black Mountain College, North Carolina, and guest lecturer at Harvard University. He obtained his schooling at Berlin in the Royal Art School. He has painted much of his work on glass and has sandblasted designs on glass surfaces with an original process devised by him.

Albers-Schönberg (äl'bėrs.shėn'berk), Heinrich Ernst. b. at Hamburg, Germany, Jan. 21, 1865; d. there, June 4, 1921. German roentgenologist. He founded (1897) an institute of roentgenology at Hamburg and became the first specialist in this field. He was appointed (1919) professor of roentgenology at the University of Hamburg.

He described (1903–04) a bone-marrow disease (osteopetrosis) causing marmorization of the long bones, called also marble bones or ivory bones, and named after him.

Albert (al'bėrt). Antipope in 1102. He claimed the papacy in opposition to Pascal II.

Albert (ăl.ber). [Called "l'ouvrier Albert," meaning "Albert the Worker"; original name, Alexandre Martin.] b. at Bury, Oise, France, April 27, 1815; d. at Mello, Oise, France, May 28, 1895. French politician and workingman, known chiefly as a member of the provisional government of the Second French Republic (February–May, 1848). He served as vice-president of the so-called "Luxembourg commission." He was sentenced to deportation for complicity in the riot of May 15, 1848, and recovered his liberty by the amnesty of 1859. In 1870 he took a prominent part in the defense of Paris against the Germans.

Albert (al'bėrt), Prince. [Full name, Albert Francis Charles Augustus Emmanuel of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.] b. at the Rosenau, near Coburg, Germany, 1819; d. at Windsor Castle, 1861. Husband of Queen Victoria and prince consort of England; second son of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. He first met Queen Victoria in 1836; after their marriage (1840) he managed to overcome the initial distrust of the English people by his tact and diligent interest in the arts and scientific development; the great Exhibition of 1851 was successful largely through his efforts. He was given the formal title of Prince Consort in 1857; his death (1861) through typhoid fever plunged Victoria into the deepest grief and left a nation of friends to mourn him.

Albert (ăl.ber). [Former name, Ancre.] Town in N France, in the department of Somme, situated on the Ancre River, ab. 28 mi. NE of Amiens. It is a center of the French metallurgical industry. Nearby, in Meaulte, are important airplane factories. The town, including the Church of Notre-Dame-de-Brebières, was almost completely destroyed in World War I and suffered damage again in World War II. The population declined from 7,343 in 1914 to 3,040 in 1924, but has since risen to a point slightly above the level before World War I. 8,900 (1946).

Albert (al'bėrt). In Goethe's Sorrows of Werther, a young farmer who marries Charlotte, with whom Werther is in love. He represents Kestner, one of Goethe's friends.

Albert. [Title, Count of Geierstein (gī'ėr.stīn).] Character in Sir Walter Scott's novel Anne of Geierstein, a restless intriguer and head of the Vehmgericht. Pursued by Charles of Burgundy, he takes refuge in a monastery and is known as the "Black Priest of St. Paul's." By order of the Vehmgericht he kills Charles of Burgundy in battle.

Albert, Blessed. See Albert Avogadro.

Albert (of Austria). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Pious."] b. 1559; d. 1621. Archduke of Austria, sixth son of Emperor Maximilian II; cardinal and diplomat. He was educated for the Church at the Spanish court, and became cardinal (1577) and archbishop (1584) of Toledo. After serving as viceroy of Portugal (1584–96) and governor of the Spanish Netherlands (1596), he forsook the Church in 1598 and married the Infanta Isabella of Spain. In his campaign against the Dutch he was defeated (1600) at Nieuport, in Flanders, by Maurice of Nassau. He subsequently concluded (1609) a 12-year armistice with the Netherlands.

Albert (of Austria). [Full German prename, Friedrich Rudolph Albrecht.] b. at Vienna, 1817; d. at Arco, in the Tirol, 1895. Archduke of Austria; eldest son of Archduke Charles of Austria. He was noted as a soldier, military writer, and proponent of the tactical theories of Radetsky. After serving (1848–49) in Italy, he was an Austrian commander (1860–63) there, and was there promoted to field marshal (1863) and commanded at the victory of Custozza (1866). He was made Austrian commander in chief in the same year, but assumed command too late to alter the outcome of the war with Prussia. He served (1866 et seq.) as inspector general in the reorganization of the Austrian army.

Albert I (of Austria). See Albert I (of Germany).

Albert II (of Austria). [German, Albrecht.] b. 1298; d. 1358. Duke of Austria and son of Albert I of Germany.

Albert III (of Austria). [German, Albrecht.] d. 1395. Son of Albert II of Austria. He ruled alone as duke of Austria (1379 et seq.).

Albert V (of Austria). See Albert II (of Germany).

Albert IV (of Bavaria). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Wise."] b. Dec. 15, 1447; d. March 18, 1508. Duke of Bavaria. In 1465, after the death of his oldest brother John, he became co-regent with his second brother Sigismund, and later (1467) sole ruler of Bavaria.

Albert I (of Belgium). b. at Brussels, April 8, 1875; d. Feb. 17, 1934. King of the Belgians; younger son of Philip, Count of Flanders, and nephew of Leopold II. As a ruler, he was popular and admired for his interest in social reforms in his country. He became heir presumptive to the throne after the death of the king's only son and the death of his own elder brother, Prince Baudouin. He married (Oct. 2, 1900) Elizabeth, daughter of Duke Charles Théodore of Bavaria. They had three children: Leopold, b. Nov. 3, 1901, later King Leopold III; Charles, b. Oct. 10, 1903, later prince regent; and Marie José, b. Aug. 4, 1906 (who married Prince Umberto of Italy, later (1946) for a short time king of Italy after his father's abdication). Albert became king of Belgium on Dec. 23, 1909. Taking command of the Belgian army at the outbreak of World War I, he remained at its head throughout the war, with headquarters at La Panne. He commanded the northern army group of French and Belgian troops in the final offensive of October, 1918, and entered Brussels amid popular enthusiasm on Nov. 22, 1918. Later he visited and worked to rehabilitate devastated areas. Albert traveled widely, visiting the U.S., England, South Africa, and the Belgian Congo. He was killed in an accidental fall while mountain climbing near Namur.

Albert (of Brandenburg). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert Alcibiades."] b. at Ansbach, Germany, March 28, 1522; d. at Pforzheim, Germany, Jan. 8, 1577. Margrave of Brandenburg, partisan and later opponent of the emperor Charles V. He was defeated by Maurice of Saxony at Sievershausen, near Lüneburg, in Hanover, on July 9, 1553.

Albert I (of Brandenburg). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Bear."] b. at Ballenstädt, Germany, c1100; d. there, 1170. Margrave of Brandenburg (1150 et seq.); son of Otto the Rich. He accompanied Emperor Frederick I (Frederick Barbarossa) on the Italian campaign (1162). His territories were divided (1169) among six sons, who carried on the line in his name.

Albert III (of Brandenburg). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert Achilles," "Albert Ulysses."] b. at Tangermünde, Prussia, 1414; d. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, 1486. Elector of Brandenburg, third son of Frederick I, on whose death (1440) he acquired Ansbach. He inherited Bayreuth (1464) from his brother John, and Brandenburg (1470) from his brother Frederick II. He engaged in successful campaigns against Mecklenburg and Pomerania, and resisted the attempt of the Teutonic Knights to repossess Neumark. He was the author of Dispositio Achillea (1473), which some authorities believe to be the original instance in written German law of the custom of primogeniture.

Albert (of Brandenburg-Ansbach). [German, Albrecht.] b. at Ansbach, Germany, 1490; d. 1568. Margrave of Brandenburg-Ansbach, last grand master (1511 et seq.) of the Teutonic Knights, and first duke of Prussia; younger son of Frederick of Ansbach, who was the second son of Albert III of Brandenburg. He carried on war (1519–25) with the king of Poland in a futile attempt to regain the independence of Prussia, but secured, by the Treaty of Cracow (1525), the conversion of Prussia into a secular duchy, hereditary to his family. He championed the policies of Luther and introduced them (1525) to his realm. He was the founder (1544) of the University of Königsberg, Europe's third Protestant university.

Albert (of Brunswick-Lüneburg). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Tall."] b. 1236; d. Aug. 15, 1279. Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg; son of the first duke, Otto the Child. He was captured (Oct. 27, 1263) by the sons of the margrave Henry, in the war of the Thuringian succession, and was released in 1264, on the payment of 8,000 marks in silver and the cession of the Guelph cities and castles on the Werra.

Albert I (of Germany). [German, Albrecht.] b. c1250; killed at Windisch, Switzerland, 1308. Duke of Austria (1282 et seq.) and king of Germany (1298 et seq.), who was murdered by his nephew John, thereafter called "the Parricide." At Göllheim, near Worms, he deposed Adolf of Nassau, his predecessor as king of Germany. Albert obtained Bohemia (1306) for his son, but failed in his campaign (1307) against Thuringia. His abolition of tolls on the Rhine, in existence since 1250, united the archbishops and the leading nobility of the Rhine against him.

Albert II (of Germany). [Also, Albert V (of Austria).] b. 1397; d. 1439. First Hapsburg Holy Roman Emperor; son-in-law of the Emperor Sigismund. His rule of Hungary, Austria, and Bohemia was marked by revolts. He died of dysentery during an unsuccessful war against the Turks.

Albert I (of Mecklenburg and Schwerin). [German, Albrecht.] b. c1317; d. 1379. Founder of the former reigning house of Mecklenburg, created duke of Mecklenburg in 1348 by Emperor Charles IV. He came into possession of the duchy of Schwerin in 1358, and secured the establishment of Albert, his second son by his first wife Euphemia of Sweden, as king of Sweden in 1365.

Albert (of Meissen). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Proud."] b. 1158; d. June 25, 1195. Margrave of Meissen from 1190 to 1195. In attempting to oppress his younger brother Dietrich, who had inherited Weissenfels, he incurred the enmity of Emperor Henry VI of Germany, and died by poison administered, it is said, by an agent of the emperor.

Albert I (of Monaco). [Full name, Honoré Charles Grimaldi, Prince Albert I of Monaco.] b. at Paris, Nov. 13, 1848; d. there, June 26, 1922. Prince of Monaco (1889–1922), notable as an oceanographer.

Albert (of Prussia). [Full German prename, Albrecht Friedrich Heinrich.] b. Oct. 4, 1809; d. Oct. 14, 1872. Prince of Prussia; fourth son of Frederick William III.

Albert (of Saxe-Teschen). [German, Kasimir Albrecht title, Duke of Saxe-Teschen.] b. near Dresden, Germany, 1738; d. at Vienna, 1822. Austrian general; son of Augustus III of Poland. He was defeated (1792) by a French army under Dumouriez.

Albert (of Saxony). [Full German prename, Albrecht Friedrich August.] b. at Dresden, Germany, 1828; d. at the Castle of Sibyllenort, in Silesia, 1902. King of Saxony; son of King John of Saxony, whom he succeeded on Oct. 29, 1873. He commanded an army corps in the Franco-Prussian War and later the army of the Meuse.

Albert III (of Saxony). [German, Albrecht; called "Albert the Bold."] b. 1443; d. at Emden, Prussia, 1500. Duke of Saxony; younger son of Frederick the Gentle, and founder of the Albertine Saxon line. He ruled (1464–85) with his brother Ernest; in the division of the Saxon dominions under the treaty of Leipzig (1485) he received Meissen.

Albert II (of Sweden). [German, Albrecht.] d. 1412. Son of Albert I of Mecklenburg and Schwerin; established as king of Sweden in 1365. He was defeated (Sept. 21, 1389) by Queen Margaret of Denmark and Norway (widow of Haakon) at the battle of Falköping, and taken prisoner. On his release in 1395 he renounced the throne of Sweden.

Albert (of Thuringia and Meissen). [German, Albrecht called "Albert the Bad."] d. 1314. Landgrave of Thuringia after 1265, and margrave of Meissen from 1288 to 1293. His second wife, Cunegonde of Eisenberg, persuaded him to exclude his sons by his first marriage from the succession in Thuringia in favor of Apitz, his son by Cunegonde. A war followed, in which Albert was taken captive by his son Frederick, and forced to sign a disadvantageous treaty at Rochlitz, on Jan. 1, 1289.

Albert (dal'bėrt; German, däl'bėrt), Eugène Francis Charles d'. b. at Glasgow, April 10, 1864; d. at Riga, Latvia, 1932. Pianist and composer, at one time a pupil of Franz Lizt. After a début (1881) at London, he was court conductor (1885) at Weimar and director (1907 et seq.) of the Hochschule at Berlin. He made several concert tours (1889–90, 1892, 1904–04) in the U.S., and was the composer of 16 operas, three concertos, a symphony, and other works.

Albert (äl'bėrt), Heinrich. b. at Lobenstein, Saxony, 1604; d. at Königsberg, Oct. 6, 1651. German composer, organist, and poet; nephew and student of Heinrich Schütz, with whom he helped to create the form of later German opera and lieder.

Albert, Joseph. b. at Munich, 1825; d. there, 1886. German photographer; inventor of Albertype, a gelatine process of photomechanical printing which permits great numbers of copies from a single plate.

Albert (al'bėrt), Lake. [Also, Albert Nyanza.] Lake in E central Africa, on the border between Uganda and the Belgian Congo; one of the main sources of the Nile River. It was discovered by Sir Samuel Baker, on March 14, 1864. Length, ab. 97 mi.; area, ab. 2,064 sq. mi.

Albert (äl.ber), Paul. b. at Thionville, France, Dec. 14, 1827; d. at Paris, June 21, 1880. French literary historian.

Alberta (al.bėr'tą). Westernmost of the prairie provinces of Canada, bounded on the N by the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories; on the W by British Columbia, from which it is separated by the Rocky Mountains; on the S by Montana; and on the E by the province of Manitoba. The province was created on Sept. 1, 1905 from the provisional districts of the Northwest Territories, which had been set up in 1882 and included the former district of Alberta, the W half of Athabaska, and a strip of Assiniboia and Saskatchewan. It is represented in the Dominion Parliament by 6 senators and 57 representatives, and has a legislative assembly of 17 members. Besides extensive areas suitable for grain-growing and ranching, Alberta has valuable reserves of coal and oil, first exploited on a large scale in the 1940's. Capital, Edmonton; area, 255,285 sq. mi. (including 6,485 sq. mi. of fresh water); pop. 939,501 (1951).

"Albert Achilles" (al'bėrt ą.kil'ēz). See Albert III (of Brandenburg).

"Albert Alcibiades" (al.si.bī'ą.dēz). See Albert (of Brandenburg).

Albert Avogadro (ä.vō.gä'drō). [Also, Blessed Albert.] b. at Gualteri, near Parma, Italy, 1149; d. 1215. Italian prelate and diplomat, canon regular of St. Augustine and patriarch of Jerusalem. He founded Carmelite houses at Ptolemais, Tyrus, Sarepta, Sidon, and Tripolis, and drew up a rule for this order which was of such extraordinary asceticism that it was later (1246) mitigated by Innocent IV. He took a prominent part in the attempt to mediate disputes which arose during his lifetime between the Holy See and the emperor Frederick Barbarossa.

Albert Edward Nyanza (ed'wąrd ni.an'zą, nī-). Former name of Edward, Lake.

Albert Hall. A covered amphitheater in London, finished in 1871 and named in honor of Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's husband. Its axes are 270 and 240 ft., those of the arena 100 and 70 ft., and it can seat 8,000 persons.

Alberti (äl.ber'tē), Conrad. [Original surname, Sittenfeld.] b. at Breslau, July 9, 1862; d. at Berlin, June 24, 1918. German writer and editor. He was in business, turned actor, then settled at Berlin, where he joined the young revolutionaries of naturalism. Later he became editor of the Berlin Abendpost. Among his critical works are Herr L'Arronge und das deutsche Theater (1884), Bettina von Arnim (1885), and Der moderne Realismus in der deutschen Literatur (1889). Of his plays, Brot (1888) treats the historical Thomas Münzer, and Im Suff! (1890) is a satire on naturalism. He was tried and fined for his novel Die Alten und die Jungen (1889). This is one of six novels in a series called Der Kampf ums Dasein.

Alberti, Domenico. b. at Venice, c1710; d. at Formio, Italy, 1740. Venetian singer and composer known for sonatas utilizing a broken-chord bass accompaniment, since termed the "Alberti bass."

Alberti, Leon Battista. b. at Florence, 1404; d. at Rome, 1472. Italian poet, musician, painter, sculptor, and architect. His churches of Sant' Andrea at Mantua, San Francesco at Rimini, as well as the Palazzo Strozzi and façade for Santa Maria Novella at Florence, are early Renaissance landmarks; author of De re aedificatoria (1485), and others.

Albertina (äl.ber.tē'nä). Library and gallery at Vienna, built for the Austrian archduke Albert in 1804.

Albertine (ál.ber.tēn). Character in À la recherche du temps perdu (1913–27; Eng. trans., Remembrance of Things Past, 1922–32), by Marcel Proust; object of the pathologically jealous love of Marcel, the narrator.

Albertine Line (al′bėr.tin, -tēn). [Also, Wittenberg Line.] Younger and royal branch of the Saxon house which descended from Albert, duke of Saxony (1443–1500). He ruled jointly with his brother Ernest from 1461 to 1485, when they came into possession of Thuringia by inheritance, and agreed upon a division, Albert taking an eastern and a western portion, with the Ernestine lands intervening.

Albertinelli (äl.ber.tē.nel′lē), Mariotto. b. at Florence, 1474; d. there, 1515. Florentine painter. An admirer and fellow student of Fra Bartolommeo under Piero di Cosimo, he completed Bartolommeo's Last Judgment.

Albertini (äl.ber.tē′nē), Luigi. b. at Ancona, Italy, Oct. 19, 1871; d. at Rome, Dec. 29, 1941. Italian statesman and journalist. After studying at London, where he observed the operation of the Times, he joined (1896) the staff of the Corriere della Sera, becoming its administrator in 1898 and managing editor in 1900. A conservative liberal, he advocated (1914) Italy's entry into World War I; he was appointed (1914) to the senate, where he favored the Italo-Yugoslav accord (1918–20) and opposed the annexation of Dalmatia. Although under his management the Corriere had become a leading European newspaper, his consistently anti-Fascist policy (1922 et seq.) caused him to be relieved (Nov. 29, 1925) of the editorship by the Crespi brothers, owners of the publication. He devoted his later years to historical studies and land conservation.

Albertis (däl.ber′tēs), Luigi Maria d'. b. at Voltri, Italy, Nov. 21, 1841; d. at Sassari, Italy, Sept. 2, 1901. Italian explorer and discoverer of the Fly River. After following (1860) Garibaldi to Sicily, he joined (1871) Odoardo Beccari on a geographical and naturalistic expedition to New Guinea, then still almost unexplored. After its arrival there in 1872, the expedition was cut short by disease; Albertis returned (1874) on a second trip. On a third visit he discovered (1875) and was the first to navigate (1876) the Fly River. He recorded his experiences in Alla Nuova Guinea (1881).

Albert Lea (al′′bėrt lē′). City in S Minnesota, county seat of Freeborn County, ab. 92 mi. S of St. Paul; railroad center; oil and dairy coöperatives. It has meat-packing plants and gas-stove factories, and a fish hatchery. 13,545 (1950).

Albert Memorial. Monument in London, erected to the memory of Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's husband, on the S side of Kensington Gardens, built from the designs of Sir Gilbert Scott. It consists of a colossal bronze statue of the prince, seated, beneath an ornate spired canopy which rises to a height of 175 ft. Statue and canopy rest on a basement bearing reliefs of artists of all countries and times. At the angles four pedestals project with groups of statuary representing Agriculture, Commerce, Engineering, and Manufacture. Steps descend on all sides in pyramidal form, and at the lower angles are placed sculptures personifying Europe, America, Asia, and Africa.

Albert Nyanza (ni.an′zą, nī-). See Albert, Lake.

Albert of Brandenburg. [German, Albrecht.] b. June 28, 1490; d. at Aschaffenburg, Sept. 24, 1545. German prelate; youngest son of the elector Johannes Cicero of Brandenburg. He became archbishop of Magdeburg (1513), archbishop and elector of Mainz (1514), and cardinal (1518). To him was entrusted the sale of indulgences in one district of Germany, with Johann Tetzel acting as his commissioner.

"Albert of Westphalia." See Aldegrever, Heinrich.

Albertrandy (äl.ber.trän′di), John Baptist. [Polish Jan Chrzciciel.] b. at Warsaw, Dec. 7, 1731; d. there Aug. 10, 1808. Polish Jesuit and historian, of Italian parentage, librarian to Bishop Zaluski at Warsaw, and later to Stanislaus Augustus, and a notable collector of manuscripts relating to Polish history. He was appointed bishop of Zenopolis and decorated with the Order of Saint Stanislaus.

Alberts (al′bėrts). A former name of Ashley.

Albert Savarus (äl.ber sȧ.vȧ.rüs). Tale by Honoré de Balzac, published in 1844, one of the Scenes from Private Life. Savarus is said to be a portrait of the author. The book contains many details of his life and work.

"Albert the Bad" (al′bėrt). See Albert (of Thuringia and Meissen).

"Albert the Bear." See Albert I (of Brandenburg).

"Albert the Bold." See Albert III (of Saxony).

"Albert the Pious." See Albert (of Austria), 1559–1621.

"Albert the Proud." See Albert (of Meissen).

"Albert the Tall." See Albert (of Brunswick-Lüneburg).

"Albert the Wise." See Albert IV (of Bavaria).

"Albert Ulysses" (ū.lis′ēz). See Albert III (of Brandenburg).

Albertus Magnus (al.bėr′tus mag′nus), Saint. [Called "Albert the Great," "Doctor Universalis"; hereditary title, Count von Bollstädt.] b. at Lauingen, Swabia, c1193 (or 1205); d. at Cologne, Prussia, 1280. German scholastic philosopher, member (1223 et seq.) of the Dominican order, and teacher at Paris, Cologne, Strasbourg, and elsewhere. He was noted as one of the foremost scholars of his time by Roger Bacon, his contemporary, and was named by later writers the most powerful expositor of the intellectual efforts of the 13th century. Chiefly known for his interest in Aristotle, whose works he endeavored to free from Arabic interpolations, he was excelled in his pioneering efforts to reconcile the study of Aristotelian logic and philosophy with Catholic theology by his favorite pupil, Thomas Aquinas. He was, however, without a rival in his day, preëminently successful as a teacher in interpreting and making comprehensible to his contemporaries the Aristotelian works in natural philosophy. Raised (1260) to the bishopric of Ratisbon, he retired two years later in order to continue his teaching at Cologne. His scientific studies based on the Aristotelian method and plan were supplemented by his own observations of the animal and plant life around him, and by his visits to the mines, mineral deposits, and the laboratories of alchemists in the vicinity of his residence at Cologne. He was canonized (1932) by Pope Pius XI.

Albert Victor Christian Edward (al′bėrt vik′tor kris′-chan ed′ward). [Title, Duke of Clarence and Avondale.] b. Jan. 8, 1864; d. Jan. 14, 1892. Eldest son of Edward VII. He was created Duke of Clarence and Avondale in 1890.

Albertville (al′bėrt.vil). City in N Alabama, in Marshall County, ab. 63 mi. NE of Birmingham: cotton mill, cotton gins, and a cottonseed-oil mill. 5,397 (1950).

Albertville. Town in C Africa, in the Belgian Congo, in Elisabethville province, on the W shore of Lake Tanganyika, ab. 130 mi. from Kigoma, Tanganyika. It is connected by rail with Kabalo, ab. 170 mi. W on the upper Congo (Lualaba River); from Kabalo goods can reach Léopoldville and the sea via rail and river. However, because of the long, roundabout trip necessitated by this route, much trade and commerce are carried on by shipment to Kigoma and from there by rail to Dar es Salaam on the Indian Ocean. The town has railroad offices and a cotton mill; ground nuts are exported. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Albertville (äl.ber.vēl). Town in SE France, in the department of Savoie, situated on the Arly River, near its junction with the Isère River, ab. 23 mi. NE of Chambéry. It consists of the picturesque old quarter of Conflans on the left bank and the new commercial quarter of Hôpital on the right bank. 7,147 (1946).

Alberus (äl′be.rus), Erasmus. b. at Sprendlingen, Germany, 1500; d. at Neubrandenburg, Germany, 1553. German poet and scholar, staunch supporter of the Reformation and a close associate of Luther. The latter wrote the preface to his satire Barfüssermönche Eulenspiegel und Alkoran (1542). His poems and fables are contained in Das Buch von der Tugend und Weisheit (1550). He is best remembered for his hymns, which are still found in hymnals today.

Albery (al′bėr.i), James. b. at London, 1838; d. there, 1889. English dramatist. His play Two Roses was used (1870) as a vehicle by Henry Irving; his other dramas, none of which achieved success to match that of Two Roses, include Pink Dominoes and Oriana.

Albi (äl.bē). [Also: Alby; Latin, Albiga.] Capital of the department of Tarn, S France, situated on the Tarn River, NE of Toulouse. It is one of the most picturesque cities in France. The Cathedral of Sainte Cécile is a unique Gothic monument, massively built of brick, with openings high above the ground and generally constructed in such a way as to serve military as well as ecclesiastical purposes. There is an archiepiscopal palace. The town was the capital of the Celtic tribe of the Albigenses, and in the 12th and 13th centuries gave its name to the Albigensian heretical movement, which was suppressed by the Roman Catholic Church. The modern city has chemical, textile, and food industries; coal mines are in the vicinity. 34,342 (1946).

Albia (al'bi.ą). [Former name, Princeton.] City in S Iowa, county seat of Monroe County. Coal mining is the principal industry. 4,838 (1950).

Albigenses (al.bi.jen'sēz). [Also, Cathari.] Collective name for the members of several anti-sacerdotal sects in the S part of France in the 12th and 13th centuries; so called after Albi, in Languedoc, where they were dominant. They revolted against the established church, were charged with Manichaean errors, and were so vigorously persecuted that, as sects, they had in great part disappeared by the end of the 13th century. A crusade against them was preached by Pope Innocent III in 1208, and was led by Arnold of Citeaux and Simon de Montfort. The war of extermination, which lasted for several years, was one of the bloodiest in history. Their doctrines are now known chiefly from the writings of their orthodox enemies.

Albigeois (äl.bē.zhwȧ). Former district of Languedoc, S France, comprised in the modern department of Tarn.

Albina (al.bī'nạ). Former city in Multnomah County, Oregon, on the Willamette River; now a part of Portland.

Albingaunum (al.bin.gô'num). A Latin name of Albenga.

Albingians (al.bin'ji.ạnz). Saxon tribe living N of the Elbe (whence the name) in what was later to be Holstein.

Albini (äl.bē'nē), Franz Joseph, Baron von. b. May 14, 1748; d. Jan. 8, 1816. German statesman, head of the government of the electorate of Mainz during the French revolutionary period.

Albino (äl.bē'nō). Town and commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Lombardy, in the province of Bergamo, situated on the Serio River, in the foothills of the Alps NE of Milan. It has cotton mills and cement factories. Pop. of commune, 11,048 (1936); of town, 4,256 (1936).

Albinovanus Pedo (al.bin ō.vā'nus pē'dō). fl. 1st century A.D. Roman poet of the Augustan period. A friend of Ovid and praised by Martial, he is known today only through a fragment of his work preserved by Seneca.

Albinus (al.bī'nus; German, äl.bē'nůs). [Original name, Bernhard Siegfried Weiss.] b. at Frankfort on the Oder, Germany, 1697; d. at Leiden, the Netherlands, 1770. German anatomist, professor of medicine and anatomy at Leiden; author of Tabulae sceleti et musculorum corporis humani (1747), and others.

Albinus. See Alcuin.

Albinus. See Brutus, Decimus Junius.

Albinus, Decimus Clodius Ceionius Septimius. Killed after the battle of Lyons, 197 A.D. Roman commander, proclaimed emperor by the armies in Gaul and Britain in 193 A.D., and probably recognized as Caesar by Severus in 194. He was defeated and killed by Severus in 197.

Albinus, Spurius Postumius. fl. late 4th century B.C. Roman consul (334 and 321 B.C.) and commander at the defeat of the Caudine Forks.

Albion (al'bi.on). City in S Lower Michigan, in Calhoun County, on the Kalamazoo River, ab. 38 mi. SW of Lansing; industrial center. It is the seat of Albion College. 10,406 (1950).

Albion. Village in W New York, county seat of Orleans County, ab. 43 mi. NE of Buffalo; canning center for tomatoes and peas. 4,850 (1950).

Albion. Ancient name of Britain, specifically, England. The Romans associated the term with albus, "white," and identified it with the Dover chalk cliffs.

Albion and Albanius (al.bā'ni.us). An operatic entertainment by Dryden, produced in 1685, allegorically representing the chief events of King Charles II's reign.

Albireo (al.bir'ē.ō). Usual name for the third-magnitude double star β Cygni. It is in the beak of the figure of the swan in the northern constellation Cygnus, and consists of a yellow star with a fainter blue companion.

Albis (äl'bis). Low mountain range in the canton of Zurich, Switzerland, W of Lake Zurich. Its best-known summit is the Ütliberg.

Albis (al'bis). Latin name of the Elbe.

Albistan (äl.bi.stän'). See Elbistan.

Albitte (äl.bēt), Antoine Louis. d. 1812. French revolutionist, member (1791) of the Legislative Assembly. He was condemned to death for participation in the revolt of May 20, 1795, against the Convention, but succeeded in avoiding capture. Under the Directory he was appointed mayor of Dieppe. After the 18th Brumaire he was engaged in military affairs, and finally perished in the retreat from Moscow.

Albium Ingaunum (al'bi.um in.gô'num). A Latin name of Albenga.

Albizzi (äl.bēt'tsē). Noted Italian family, originally from Arezzo, which played a conspicuous part in Florentine affairs during the 14th and 15th centuries. They belonged to the democratic Guelph party.

Albizzi, Bartolommeo. [Latinized, Bartholomaeus Albicius Pisanus.] b. at Rivano, in Tuscany; d. at Pisa, Dec. 10, 1401. Franciscan monk and religious writer; author of Liber conformitatum sancti Francisci cum Christo (first ed. folio, Venice, undated).

Albona (äl.bō'nä). Italian name of Labin.

Alboni (äl.bō'nē), Marietta. [Title, by marriage, Contessa Pepoli.] b. at Cittá di Castello, Italy, 1826; d. at Ville d'Avray, France, June 23, 1894. Italian operatic contralto. Student of Rossini at Bologna; made début (1843) at La Scala; sang with great success in Europe, England (1847 et seq.), and the U.S. (1852).

Al Borak (äl bō'räk). [Arabic, al-Boraq.] Legendary animal, white in color, between a mule and an ass in size, with two wings and of great swiftness, on which Mohammed is said to have made a nocturnal journey to the seven heavens, conducted by the angel Gabriel.

Ålborg (ôl'bôrg). See Aalborg.

Albornoz (äl.bôr'nōth), Gil Álvarez Carillo de. b. at Cuenca, Spain, c1300; d. at Viterbo, Italy, Aug. 24, 1367. Spanish prelate (archbishop of Toledo) and soldier.

Albrecht (äl'breċht). fl. c1270. German poet, author of the later Titurel, a continuation of the Titurel of Wolfram von Eschenbach: generally, but probably wrongly, named Albrecht von Scharfenberg.

Albrecht. German form of Albert.

Albrecht, Wilhelm Eduard. b. at Elbing, Prussia, March 4, 1800; d. at Leipzig, Germany, May 22, 1876. German jurist, one of the seven Göttingen professors removed on account of liberalism in 1837.

Albrechtsberger (äl'breċhts.ber.gėr), Johann Georg. b. at Klosterneuburg, Austria, Feb. 3, 1736; d. at Vienna, March 7, 1809. Austrian musician, theorist, and contrapuntist; teacher of Beethoven, Hummel, and others.

Albrecht von Eyb (or Eybe) (äl'breċht fon īp'; ī'bę). b. in Franconia, Germany, 1420; d. at Eichstätt, Germany, 1475. German cleric and author. His witty Ehestandsbuch (1472) debates whether a man should marry or tarry and contains among other things the translations of two Italian stories. Likewise his posthumous Spiegel der Sitten (1511) was accompanied by translations of Ugolini's Philogenia and Plautus's Menaechmi and Bachides. He published an anthology of Latin classics in the original called Margarita poetica (1472).

Albrecht von Halberstadt (fon häl'bėr.shtät). fl. c1210. Middle High German poet. At the suggestion of Landgrave Hermann of Thuringia, he translated Ovid's Metamorphoses directly from the Latin. His version is extant in fragments only, but in the 16th century a complete text was available to Jörg Wickram, who produced from it a popular prose adaptation.

Albret (äl.bre), House of. Gascon family which arose in the 11th century, and derived its name from the Château l'Albret. Its best-known members are Charles d'Albret, count of Dreux, who was killed in the battle of Agincourt in 1415; Louis d'Albret (d. 1465), cardinal bishop of Cahors; Jean d'Albret, who became king of Navarre by his marriage with Catherine of Foix in 1484; Jeanne d'Albret; and César-Phébus d'Albret, marshal of France and the last descendant of the house in the male line.

Albret (dȧl.bre), Jeanne d'. b. at Pau, Jan. 7, 1528; d. at Paris, June 9, 1572. Queen of Navarre; daughter of Henry, king of Navarre, and Margaret of Valois, wife of Antony of Bourbon, and mother of Henry IV of France.

Albright (ôl'brīt), Jacob. b. near Pottstown, Pa., May 1, 1759; d. May 18, 1808. American clergyman, founder of a movement known as the Evangelical Association, now the Evangelical Church.

Albright, Malvin Marr. [Pseudonym (as painter), Zsissly.] b. at Chicago, 1897—. American sculptor. He has exhibited at the Chicago World's Fair (1933–34), Golden Gate Exposition (1939), and New York World's Fair (1939), as well as in numerous museums and private collections.

Albrizzi (äl.brēt'tsē), Isabella Teotochi, Contessa d'. b. on the island of Corfu, in the Ionian Sea, c1763; d. at Venice, 1836. Italian author and patroness, particularly of Canova and Foscolo; called by Byron "The Madame de Staël of Venice." Author of Descrizione delle opere di Canova (1809–25), a biography of Vittoria Colonna (1836), and others.

Albuféira (äl.bö.fā'rą). Town and concelho (commune) on the S coast of Portugal, in the province of Algarve, in the district of Faro, ab. 21 mi. W of Faro: a picturesque seaport with tuna and sardine fisheries. Pop. of concelho, 13,892 (1940); of town, 6,452 (1940).

Albufera (äl.bö.fā'rä). [Full name, Albufera de Valencia.] Lagoon in E Spain, ab. 7 mi. S of Valencia. The rights to it belonged at one time to the Duke of Wellington. Length, ab. 10 mi.

Albufera (ȧl.bü.fā.rä), Duc d'. Title of Suchet, Louis Gabriel.

Albula (äl'bö.lä). Pass in the canton of Graubünden, Switzerland, ab. 25 mi. SE of Coire, connecting the valleys of the Albula and Hinter Rhein rivers with that of the Inn. Elevation, 7,595 ft.

Albula. Town in E Switzerland in the canton of Graubünden. 7,533 (1941).

Albumazar (äl.bö.mä'zär). b. at Balkh, Turkestan, 805; d. at Wasid, in central Asia, 885. Arab astronomer and astrologer at Baghdad, who made important contributions to the study of tides. A prolific writer, he compiled astronomical tabulations based on the Persian system, differentiating it from the Jewish. He predicted the end of the world in his De magnis conjunctionibus. He was used as a prototype of a knavish astrologer in Gian Battista del Porta's play L'Astrologo (1606), on which were based John Tomkis's Albumazar, played (1614) before James I, revived by Dryden (1748) and Garrick, and Ralph's The Astrologer (1734). He was the author of some 50 works including Flores astrologici (Augsburg, 1488), De Magnis conjunctionibus (Augsburg, 1489), and Introductorium in astronomiam (Venice, 1506).

Albuquerque (äl.bö.ker'kā). See also Alburquerque.

Albuquerque (al'bu.kėr.ki, -bū-). City in C New Mexico, county seat of Bernalillo County, on the Rio Grande, ab. 58 mi. SW of Santa Fe: health resort; manufactures of bricks and sheet metal; railway shops and petroleum refineries; trading center for a livestock-raising and irrigated farming area. It is the seat of the University of New Mexico. The modern city comprises two settlements, the old town (founded 1706), and the new town (founded 1880). Pop. of city, 96,815 (1950); of urbanized area, 124,901 (1950).

Albuquerque (äl.bö.ker'kā), Duke of. Title of Fernández de la Cueva, Francisco, and Fernández de la Cueva Henríquez, Francisco.

Albuquerque (äl.bö.ker'kę), Affonso de. b. at Alhandra, Portugal, 1453; d. at sea near Goa, India, 1515. Portuguese navigator and colonial administrator, founder of the Portuguese empire in the East. He was educated at the court of Alfonso V. His first expedition to India was made in 1503–04; on the second, with Tristão da Cunha, he carried secret orders from King Emmanuel to replace Almeida, Portuguese viceroy in India, by whom he was imprisoned (1508) until the grand marshal's fleet came (1509) to his support. He conquered Goa (1510), Malacca, the Malabar coast (1512), Ceylon, the Sunda Islands, and Ormuz (1515), the last of which gave Portugal a foothold in the Red Sea. An able and beneficent colonial administrator, he gained the respect of both Hindus and Moslems Albuquerque, Duarte Coelho de. See Coelho de Albuquerque, Duarte.

Albuquerque, Jeronymo de. b. c1514; d. at Olinda, near Pernambuco, Brazil, c1594. Portuguese soldier, leader in various wars against the Indians in Brazil, whither he went in 1535. In 1548 he was captured by the Cahetes tribe, but gained their good will and married the daughter of a chief.

Albuquerque, José Joaquim de Campos da Costa de Medeiros e. b. at Recife, Brazil, Sept. 4, 1867; d. at Rio de Janeiro, June 9, 1934. Brazilian polygraph, journalist, poet, essayist, novelist, short-story writer, educator, and critic. He was a professor at the National School of Fine Arts and director of the Department of Education of Rio de Janeiro. Among his books are Canções da decadência, poems (1887); Um homem prático (1898) and Contos escolhidos (1907), short stories; Pontos de vista (1913) and Graves e fúteis (1922), essays; Literatura alheia (1914) and Páginas de crítica (1920), criticism; Marta (1920), novel; Homens e coisas da Academia (1933) and Minha vida (1934), memoirs.

Albuquerque, Mathias de. b. probably in Brazil; d. at Lisbon, 1647. Portuguese general. Governor of Pernambuco (1624); after the Dutch capture of Bahia (1624), he was acting governor-general of northern Brazil. Recovered Bahia (1625), and after a visit to Madrid returned to Pernambuco (1629) as governor; abandoned Olinda and Recife (1630) to the Dutch; ordered back to Madrid (1635) and sent to Portugal in disgrace. In the war which followed the Portuguese revolt (1640) against Spain, Albuquerque's victory of Montijo or Campo Mayor (1644) won him the titles of Count of Allegrete and grandee of Portugal.

Albuquerque (däl.bö.ker'kē), Pedro d'. b. at Pernambuco, Brazil, c1575; d. at Belém (Pará), Brazil, Feb. 6, 1644. Brazilian colonial administrator; son of Jeronymo de Albuquerque Maranhão. He was appointed governor of Maranhão and Pará in 1642.

Albuquerque Coelho (äl.bö.ker'kę kwā'lyö), Duarte de. See Coelho, Duarte de Albuquerque.

Albuquerque Coelho, Jorge de. See Coelho, Jorge de Albuquerque.

Albuquerque Maranhão (mą.rą.nyouń'), Jeronymo de. b. at Pernambuco, Brazil, 1548; d. in Maranhão, Brazil, Feb. 11, 1618. Brazilian soldier; son of Jeronymo de Albuquerque and an Indian mother. He conquered Rio Grande do Norte from the Indians (1598–99) and Ceará in 1613. In November, 1615, he took Maranhão from the French, and was made captain-general of that colony.

Alburquerque (äl.bör.ker'kā). [Also, Albuquerque.] Town in W Spain, in the province of Badajoz, situated near the Portuguese border, ab. 24 mi. N of Badajoz: old frontier fortifications. 10,015 (1940).

Albury (al'bėr.i). Town in SE Australia, in the state of New South Wales, situated on the border of Victoria ab. 200 mi. NE of Melbourne: shipping and trading center at the head of steam navigation on the Murray River. 14,419 (1947).

Albus (al'bus), Mons. Latin name of Blanc, Mont.

Albuzdschani (äl.böz.jä'nē). [Also: Abul Wafa (or Wefa).] b. 940; d. 998. Arab astronomer and mathematician. A student of Greek mathematics, he devised the Arabic table of tangents and cotangents. His Almagest suggests that he may have noted those movements of the moon later to be recognized as "variation."

Alby (ȧl.bē). See Albi.

Alcácer do Sal (äl.kä'sėr dō säl'). [Latin, Salacia.] Town and concelho (commune) in S Portugal, in the province of Estremadura, in the district of Setubal, situated at the mouth of the Sado River, ab. 50 mi. SE of Lisbon: manufactures of straw and esparto products, and of salt from sea water. The town, which was the scene of much fighting in the Moslem wars, has the ruins of a Moorish castle. Pop. of concelho, 23,000 (1940); of town, 14,109 (1940).

Alcaeus (al.sē'us) or Alkaios (-kī'os). fl. in Mytilene, c611–580 B.C. Greek poet whose lyrics in Aeolic dialect, known through fragments, are thought to have been a prototype of Sappho's. He was the probable inventor of Alcaics, a meter much used by later classical poets.

Alcaforado (äl''ką.fö.rä'dö), Francisco. Portuguese navigator who took part in the expedition (of which he wrote an account) of João Gonzales Zarco to Madeira in 1420.

Alcalá de Guadaira (äl.kä.lä′ dā gwä.ᴛʜī′rä). [Also: Alcala, Alcala de los Panaderes (pä.nä.ᴛʜä′res).] Town in S Spain, in the province of Sevilla, situated on the Guadaira River, ab. 9 mi. E of Seville: flour mills. There is a Moorish castle of the 12th century, and other Moorish remains. The town was taken (1244) from the Moslems by Ferdinand III of Castile. 20,477 (1940).

Alcalá de Henares (ā.nä′res). [Latin name, Complutum.] Town in C Spain, in the province of Madrid, situated on the Henares River, ab. 20 mi. NE of Madrid: terra cotta, leather, chocolate, and soap factories. There is a 12th-century Magistral Church, rebuilt in the 15th century. The town was formerly a royal Castilian residence, and was the birthplace of Catherine of Aragon and of Cervantes. The university, once second only to that of Salamanca, was founded by Cardinal Francis Ximénes Cisneros in 1508 and moved to Madrid in 1836; here was produced (1513–17) the Complutensian Polyglot Bible. The Church of San Ildefonso contains a collection of more than 60,000 documents. 18,419 (1940).

Alcalá la Real (lä rā.äl′). Commune in Spain, in the province of Jaén, ab. 25 mi. NW of Granada: the center of a wine, vegetable, and wool producing district; thermal springs. The town was taken from the Moslems in 1213, retaken by them in 1219, and again occupied by Ferdinand III in 1249. The French won (1810) a victory here in the Peninsular War. 25,558 (1940).

Alcalá Zamora y Torres (thä.mō′rä ē tôr′res), Niceto. b. in Spain, 1877; d. Feb. 18, 1949. Spanish statesman and politician. Upon completion of the study of law he became an officer of the Spanish council of state in 1899, professor of law at the University of Madrid in 1903, and deputy in the Cortes of 1906. He held various ministerial posts until 1923 when dictator Primo de Rivera took over the government. He subsequently transferred his sympathies to the republican cause and became titular head of the provisional government which was formed upon the fall of the monarchy, and first president of the Spanish republic founded in 1931. He represented Catholic conservative middle-class interests, and was deposed in 1936, before expiration of his legal term, due to the widening gulf between the left and right and the impossibility of further compromise. In Los defectos de la Constitución de 1931 (Madrid, 1936) he gives his political views.

Alcamenes or Alkamenes (al.kam′ẹ.nēz). b. at Lemnos or Athens; fl. c448–c404 B.C. Greek sculptor, according to Pausanius the most skillful pupil of Phidias, whom he probably assisted in the decoration of the Parthenon. He is known to have done Aphrodite of the Gardens (now at Athens), which is considered a masterpiece of his period.

Alcamo (äl′kä.mō). [Arabic, Alqamah.] Town and commune in SW Italy, on the island of Sicily, in the province of Trapani, situated S of the Gulf of Castellammare, between Palermo and Trapani. The town is the center of a wine and grain producing district; the population is largely of Arabic descent. The site of the town was moved by Emperor Frederick II in 1233; later it belonged to the domain of the Peralta family. There are a number of churches, mainly from the 17th and 18th centuries; the ruins of the ancient town of Segesta are nearby. Damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest. Pop. of commune, 38,396 (1936); of town, 38,129 (1936).

Alcandre (äl.käⁿdr). Character in Mademoiselle de Scudéry's romance Clélie; a flattering portrait of Louis XIV, then only about 18 years of age.

"Alcan Highway" (al′kan). See Alaska Highway.

Alcântara (äl.kun′tą.rą). Seaport in N Brazil, in the state of Maranhão. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Alcântara. Western suburb of Lisbon, Portugal, noted for the victory gained there in 1580 by the Duke of Alva over the Portuguese army.

Alcántara (äl.kän′tä.rä), Francisco Martín. b. in what was then the province of Estremadura, Spain, probably c1480; killed at Lima, Peru, June 26, 1541. Spanish soldier; half-brother of Francisco Pizarro on the maternal side. He left Spain with Pizarro in 1529, and was with him during part of the conquest of Peru. He received a large inheritance which was unjustly taken from the younger Almagro. Alcántara was killed with Pizarro.

Alcantarilla (äl.kän.tä.rē′lyä). Town in E Spain, in the province of Murcia, situated in a well-watered plain, ab. 4 mi. W of Murcia: agricultural trade center. 10,744 (1940).

Alcatraz (al′kạ.traz). [Also, Pelican Island.] Small rocky island N of San Francisco, the seat of a federal penitentiary (until 1933, a military prison only), a torpedo station, and a lighthouse.

Alcaudete (äl.kou.ᴛʜä′tā). Town in S Spain, in the province of Jaén, situated on a tributary of the Guadalquivir River, ab. 23 mi. SW of Jaén: agricultural trade center. 18,442 (1940).

Alcázar (äl.kä′thär), Baltasar de. b. 1530; d. 1606. Spanish poet and wit. An edition of his collected poems published in 1910 displays the acid but charming phraseology which brought him his reputation.

Alcázar de San Juan (dā säng hwän). [Also: Alcázar; Arabic, Al-Qaṣr, meaning "the castle"; Latin, Alces.] Town in C Spain, in the province of Ciudad-Real, situated on a dry steppe, ab. 80 mi. SE of Madrid: a center of the local cattle and sheep trade, with small industries; zinc and iron ore are mined in the vicinity. The town was destroyed in the struggle between the Moslems and the Christians, and later rebuilt. 26,141 (1940).

Alcazarquivir (äl.kä″thär.kē.bēr′). [Also: Alcázar, Lxor; Arabic, Al-Qaṣr al-Kabir, El Ksar el Kebir.] City in Spanish Morocco, ab. 60 mi. S of Tangier and 48 mi. from Larache, on the Atlantic coast, connected by rail with both places. The town is almost on the border between Spanish and French Morocco. Here, on Aug. 4, 1578, King Sebastian of Portugal was defeated and slain by the Moslems. The Spanish occupied the town in 1912 and built a European quarter. 33,196 (1940).

Alcazava Sotomayor (äl.kạ.zä′vạ sō″tö.mạ.yōr′), Simão de. [Also: Alcazaba, Alcazova, Alcaçoba.] b. c1490; d. on the coast of Patagonia early in 1536. Portuguese explorer, from 1522 in the service of Spain as a naval officer. In 1534 he fitted out, at his own expense, two vessels and 240 men, with the object of reaching Peru by the Straits of Magellan. Leaving San Lucar on Sept. 21, he touched at the Abrolhos islands, Brazil, and arrived at the Straits in January, 1535; attempting to pass, he was driven back by a storm, and wintered at Puerto de los Lobos (probably St. Joseph's or St. Matthew's Bay). From there he led a land expedition which crossed the country to the Andes and was the first to explore the Patagonian plateau. Alcazava himself was obliged by sickness to return to the ship, where he was shortly after murdered in a mutiny.

Alcedo (äl.thā′ᴛʜō), Antonio de. b. at Quito, in what is now Ecuador, 1735; date of death not recorded. Spanish soldier and geographer. Best known for his Diccionario geográfico-histórico de las Indias occidentales ó América (5 vols., 1786–89), of which an English translation was later (1812–15) published at London.

Alcedo y Herrera (ē er.rā′rä), Dionisio de. b. at Madrid, 1690; d. there, 1777. Spanish administrator. From 1706 to 1752 he was almost constantly in Spanish America in various civil capacities. As president and captain-general of Quito (1728–37), he received the French commission sent to measure an arc of the meridian. He published some works of considerable importance on the geography and history of South America.

Alces (al′sēz). Latin name of Alcázar de San Juan.

Alceste (al.sest′). Tragic opera in three acts, by Gluck, with a libretto by Calzabigi, first presented at Vienna, Dec. 16, 1767.

Alceste (äl.sest). Principal character in Molière's comedy The Misanthrope; an upright but tactless man who scorns the excessive civilities of courtly life and the shams of society. Wycherley took him as the model for his rude and brutal Manly in The Plain Dealer.

Alcester (ôl′stėr, ôs′tėr). Rural district and market town in C England, in Warwickshire, situated at the confluence of the rivers Alne and Arrow, ab. 19 mi. S of Birmingham, ab. 136 mi. NW of London by rail. It is the site of an ancient Roman encampment. 13,264 (1951).

Alcester, 1st Baron. Title of Seymour, Frederick Beauchamp Paget.

Alcestis (al.ses′tis) or Alceste (-tē). In Greek legend, the daughter of Pelias and wife of Admetus, king of Pherae in Thessaly. When her husband was stricken with a mortal sickness she sacrificed her life for him, in accordance with the promise of Apollo that by this means he should be saved. According to one form of the legend she was allowed to return to the upper world by Persephone; according to another she was rescued by Hercules. She is the subject of a play by Euripides.

Alchemb (al.kemb′). A rarely used name for the second-magnitude star α Persei, in the northern constellation Perseus; usually called Mirfak, and sometimes Algenib.

Alchemist, The. Comedy by Ben Jonson, first acted in 1610. It is a satire on the reigning folly of the time, the search for the philosopher's stone. It observes strictly the unities of time and place, and, in point of intellectual power, is regarded by some as the best of Jonson's plays.

Alchevsk (ȧl.chefsk′). Former name of Voroshilovsk.

Alchfrith (älch′frith). Son of Oswui, king of the Northumbrians, and Eanflæd, daughter of Eadwine. He married Cyneburh, daughter of Penda, king of the Mercians. He was created under-king of the Deirans by his father, whom he joined in the defeat (655) of Penda, near the river Winwæd. Later he waged an unsuccessful war against his father, and probably fled to Mercia.

Alchoku (äl.chō′kō). See Acheng.

Alchuine (al′kwin). See Alcuin.

Alchymist (äl.ċhē.mēst′), Der. Opera by Louis Spohr, composed about the end of 1829, and first performed at Kassel, Germany, on July 28, 1830. The libretto is based on a story by Washington Irving.

Alciati (äl.chä′tē), Andrea. b. at Alzano, Italy, 1492; d. 1550. Italian legal scholar. He made a pioneer study of civil law which was based on original classical sources and was not merely a reworking of contemporary glosses; author of Emblems, a collection of aphorisms in Latin which was later published (Padua, 1661) with commentaries.

Alcibiades (al.si.bī′ạ.dēz). b. at Athens, c450 B.C.; killed at Melissa, Phrygia, 404 B.C. Athenian politician and general; member of the Alcmaeonidae; pupil and friend of Socrates. After his father's death, he was brought up by Pericles, a relative. He was leader of the radical party against Nicias (421), commanded the Athenian League (420–418), and was appointed a commander of the expedition against Sicily (415), which he had actively promoted. Accused of profanation in Athens, he fled (415) to Sparta, becoming an open enemy of Athens. Suspected of intrigue in Sparta, with death sentence awaiting him in Athens, he then went over (412) to the Persians. Recalled by the Athenian army, he was commander in the victory over the Spartan fleet at Abydos (411) and Cyzicus (410), which restored Chalcedon, Byzantium, and rule of the sea to Athens. Failure at Andros and defeat of his general at Notium (407) lost him command; after Athenian defeat at Aegospotami, sought refuge with Pharnabazus in Phrygia, where he was murdered on order of Lysander of Sparta. He was celebrated for great charm and military talent, but never fully trusted because of his capricious self-will.

Alcibiades. Tragedy by Thomas Otway, produced in 1675.

Alcida: Greene's Metamorphoses (al′si.dạ). Pamphlet by Robert Greene, licensed in 1588, probably published in 1589. It consists of stories exposing the evils of women's pride and vanity.

Alcidamas (al.sid′ạ.mạs). b. at Elaea, Asia Minor; fl. 4th century B.C.; Greek rhetorician; pupil of Gorgias. He was instructor in eloquence at Athens, last of the purely sophistical school of rhetoricians. Two extant declamations and fragments of other works are ascribed to him.

Alcimona (al.si.mō′nạ). A Latin name of the Altmühl.

Alcimus (al′si.mus). fl. 2nd century B.C. Jewish high priest, whose efforts to Hellenize the Hebrew community and religious customs won him favor at court but infuriated the Maccabees.

Alcina (äl.chē′nä). Fairy, the embodiment of carnal delights, in Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato and Ariosto's Orlando Furioso. She is described as the sister of Logistilla (Reason) and Morgana (Lasciviousness). When tired of her lovers she changed them into trees, beasts, and other objects. She was finally, by means of a magic ring, displayed in her real senility and ugliness.

Alcinous (al.sin′ō.us). In Greek legend, a king of the Phaeacians, in the island of Scheria, mentioned in the Odyssey. A considerable part of the poem (Books VI–XIII) is devoted to the events of Odysseus's stay in his dominions.

Alcionius (al.si.ō′ni.us), Petrus. See Alcyonius, Petrus.

Alciphron (al′si.fron). fl. 2nd century A.D. Greek writer, particularly of imaginary letters which, though models of Attic style, purported to be the work of contemporary lower-class Athenians. The approximately 124 which are extant constitute a valuable description of social conditions and manners of the period; those supposedly written by famous hetaerae reflect the work of New Comedy writers, especially Menander.

Alciphron. Character in Thomas Moore's romance The Epicurean, published in 1827. Moore also wrote a poem with this title, published in 1839.

Alciphron, or the Minute Philosopher. Philosophical dialogue by Bishop Berkeley, written to expose the weakness of infidelity. It was composed while Berkeley was at Newport, R.I., and was published in 1732.

Alcira (äl.thē′rä). Town in E Spain, in the province of Valencia, situated on an island in the Júcar River, ab. 23 mi. S of Valencia: center of a fertile agricultural district; rice, sugar cane, citrus fruit, and silkworms. A Roman bridge across the Júcar River is preserved; there are a number of old churches and monasteries. 24,518 (1940).

Alcmaeon (alk.mē′ọn). In Greek legend, the son of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle and the leader of the Epigoni in the expedition against Thebes. In accordance with the command of his father, given when he joined the first expedition against Thebes, and the advice of the oracle, he slew his mother, and was driven mad and pursued by the Furies in consequence. Having, under false pretenses, obtained from Phegeus the Arcadian the necklace and robe of Harmonia for his wife Callirrhoe, he was waylaid and slain by Phegeus's order.

Alcmaeonidae (alk.mē.on′i.dē). Noble family of Athens, a branch of the family of the Neleidae which came from Pylos in Messenia to Athens about 1100 B.C. Among the more notable members of the family are Alcmaeon, an Athenian general in the Cirrhaean war; Megacles, a son of Alcmaeon, and a rival of Pisistratus; Clisthenes, the legislator, son of Megacles; Pericles, the celebrated Athenian statesman, great-grandson of Megacles; and the scarcely less famous Alcibiades, cousin of Pericles. The family was banished for sacrilege about 596 B.C. on account of the action of the Alcmaeonid archon Megacles who in 612 B.C. put to death the participants in the insurrection of Cylon while they clung for protection to the altars. They returned through an alliance with Lycurgus, carried on with varying fortunes a struggle with Pisistratus and the Pisistratidae, and were finally restored in 510 B.C.

Alcmaeon of Crotona (alk.mē′ọn; krō.tō′nạ). b. at Crotona, Italy; fl. c500 B.C. Greek physician and philosopher; younger contemporary of Pythagoras and perhaps his disciple. He was the most famous of the Greek physicians preceding Hippocrates, and has been called "the father of Greek medicine." His book is lost and only a few fragments of his writings have remained, but it is known that he was the first to make sections, by means of which he discovered the optic nerve, distinguished in the cadaver empty veins and veins carrying blood, and knew the trachea. He gave explanations of sleep, of the origin of sperm, of sense impressions, and made physiological experiments. He was the first to recognize that the brain is the central organ of intellectual activity, and held that health and disease are respectively an equilibrium and a rupture of equilibrium of the organism.

Alcman or Alkman (alk′mạn) or Alcmaeon (alk.mē′ọn). b. at Sardis, Lydia; fl. middle of the 7th century B.C. Greek poet, founder of the Doric school. Formerly a slave, he was freed and made a citizen of Sparta. He is often considered the inventor of lyric poetry; he wrote, especially for choral performance, hymns, paeans, processionals, and parthenia (maidens' songs): one of the latter was discovered (1855) on an Egyptian papyrus.

Alcmene or Alkmene (alk.mē'nē). In Greek mythology, the wife of Amphitryon and mother, by Zeus, of Hercules.

Alcmona (alk.mō'nạ). A Latin name of the Altmühl.

Alcoa (al.kō'ạ). City in E Tennessee, in Blount County, in the Tennessee Valley near the foothills of the Great Smoky Mountains: one of the principal centers in the U.S. for the production of aluminum ingots. It was founded in 1913. Pop. 6,355 (1950).

Alcobaça (äl.kō.bä'sạ). Small town in W Portugal, in the province of Estremadura, ab. 50 mi. N of Lisbon. It contains a Cistercian monastery, founded in 1148, and believed to have been at one time the largest of the order. Pop. of concelho (commune), 42,890 (1940); of town, 3,823 (1940).

Alcock or Alcocke (ôl'kok), John. b. at Beverly, Yorkshire, England, 1430; d. at Wisbeach, England, 1500. English prelate, scholar, and architect. Successively bishop of Rochester, Worcester, and Ely, he restored churches and colleges; founded (1496) and built Jesus College, Cambridge.

Alcock, Sir John William. b. at Manchester, England, 1892; killed in crash at Côte d'Evrard, Normandy, 1919. English aviator. During World War I, as a military aviator, he was captured by the Turks on his return flight from the bombing (1917) of Constantinople. With Lt. A. W. Brown as navigator, he crossed the Atlantic from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Clifden, Ireland, in 16 hours and 12 minutes (June 14, 1919).

Alcock, Sir Rutherford. b. at London, 1809; d. there, 1897. English diplomat and physician. He forsook medicine to become (1844) consul at Foochow, China, which had just (1842) been opened to British trade; consul general (1858) and minister plenipotentiary (1859 et seq.) to Japan; emissary of Great Britain at Peking (1865–71); author of The Capital of the Tycoon (1863), Art in Japan (1878), and others.

Alcoforado (äl''kō.fō.rä'dō), Marianna. b. 1640; d. 1723. Portuguese nun. She entered (c1656) the Franciscan convent at Béja. Her five letters to her lover, Noël Bouton (later the Marquis de Chamilly and a marshal of France), vividly portray the phases of her grief after their separation. The letters were later translated into French and published (Paris, 1669) anonymously.

Alcofribas Nasier (äl.ko.frē.bäs nȧ.zyā). Pseudonym of Rabelais, François.

Alcoholics Anonymous. [Also: Alcoholic Foundation, Inc.; abbreviation, A. A.] Organization incorporated in 1938 to assist alcoholics desiring to break the drinking habit. A nonprofit organization without national officers and supported entirely by voluntary contributions, the Foundation grew out of a group formed in 1935. It holds that the moral support of others is desirable, if not a necessity, for the habitual drunkard who desires to end his addiction to liquor; Alcoholics Anonymous undertakes to strengthen the will, through company and prayer, of the drinker who desires to reform, maintaining that the cure from within is more efficacious than physical cures, such as isolation or "tapering off." Its 4,000 groups had a membership of ab. 120,000 in 1951.

Alcolea (äl.kō.lā'ä). Locality in the province of Córdoba, Spain, on the Guadalquivir River ab. 8 mi. NE of Córdoba, where, on Sept. 28, 1868, the Spanish revolutionists under Serrano defeated the royalists. The battle resulted in the overthrow of Queen Isabella.

Alcools (äl.ko.ol). Collection of French modernist poems (1913) by Guillaume Apollinaire (1880–1918). They were taken as models by the surrealists and members of similar schools after World War I.

Alcor (al'kôr). Fifth-magnitude star very near to Mizar (ζ Ursae Majoris). It is easily seen with the naked eye if the eye is normal, but not otherwise: hence sometimes used as a test of vision. It is called Aliore in the Latin version of the Almagest.

Alcott (ôl'kọt), Amos Bronson. b. at Wolcott, Conn., Nov. 29, 1799; d. at Boston, March 4, 1888. American educator and transcendentalist philosopher; father of Louisa May Alcott. A book-peddler (1808–23) in Virginia and Carolinas, he was inspired chiefly by his reading of and association with Quakers to take up teaching (Connecticut 1823–27; Boston 1828–30; Germantown, Pa., 1831–33) in which he advanced ideas on religion and education shocking to most of his contemporaries, based on learning through pleasure and imagination rather than discipline. On these principles, fortified by Neo-Platonism, he founded (1834) in Boston an "infant-school" where he attempted to develop mind and moral sense through a question-and-answer method. His Record of a School (1835) and Conversations with Children on the Gospels (1836–37), together with his refusal to dismiss a Negro pupil, brought the disapproval of parents and failure (1839) of his school. Founder of Fruitlands (1844–45) and member of Brook Farm Association, coöperative communities; made lecture tours (1853 et seq.); superintendent of Concord schools (1859); conducted Concord Summer School of Philosophy and Literature (1879–88); friend of Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne, Channing. Author of Observations on the Principles and Methods of Infant Instruction (1830), The Doctrine and Discipline of Human Culture (1836), Concord Days (1872), New Connecticut (1881–87), Ralph Waldo Emerson (1865–82), and others.

Alcott, Louisa May. b. at Germantown, Pa., Nov. 29, 1832; d. at Boston, March 6, 1888. American novelist and writer of children's books; daughter of Amos Bronson Alcott, whose financial failures left much of the family support to Louisa. Teaching, dressmaking, and domestic service preceded the publication (1854) of Flower Fables, a book of stories written for Emerson's daughter, and the appearance (1860) of stories in Atlantic Monthly. Letters written while she was a Civil War nurse at Georgetown (Hospital Sketches, 1863) aroused wide interest; her first novel, Moods, appeared in 1864. She was editor (1867) of Merry's Museum, a children's magazine. Little Women (1868–69), enormously successful, was translated into several languages and assured financial independence of family. She championed woman suffrage, abolition, and temperance. Her books for children, largely autobiographical, had wide appeal for their cheerful and sympathetic quality, particularly An Old Fashioned Girl (1870), Little Men (1871), Eight Cousins (1875), Under the Lilacs (1878), Aunt Jo's Scrap-Bag (1872–82), and Jo's Boys (1886).

Alcott, William Andrus. b. at Wolcott, Conn., Aug. 6, 1798; d. at Newton, Mass., March 29, 1859. American educator and writer; cousin and co-worker of Amos Bronson Alcott. Worked for better schools and better teaching in 19th-century America; author of Confessions of a Schoolmaster (1839), Forty Years in the Wilderness of Pills and Powders (1859), and many others.

Alcoy (äl.koi'). City in E Spain, in the province of Alicante, situated above the Molinar River near its junction with the Alcoy River, ab. 22 mi. N of Alicante: important factories for cigarette paper; manufactures of leather, cotton and woolen textiles, garments, and soap; distilleries; agricultural markets. There are a number of old churches and some educational institutions, including an industrial high school. There are health resorts in the vicinity. The city was founded by the Carthaginians in 236 B.C. 45,792 (1940).

Alcudia (äl.kō'ʜyä). Town on the N coast of the island of Majorca, Balearic Islands, in the Spanish province of Baleares, situated on the Bay of Alcudia: formerly the chief fortress of the island; fisheries. Pop. ab. 5,000.

Alcuin (al'kwin). [Also: Albinus, Albinus Flaccus, Alchuine; Anglo-Saxon, Ealhwine.] b. at York (then Eboracum), England, 735; d. at Tours, France, 804. English prelate and scholar, a leader in the medieval revival of learning in Europe. At Charlemagne's invitation, he settled at Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle); he served as abbot of Ferrières and Troyes, as head of the palace school, and as mentor for the Frankish educational and ecclesiastical reform that took place in his day. At the Council of Frankfort (794), he led the opposition to the adoptionist heresy, causing its leader, Felix of Urgel, to recant. As abbot of Tours (796–804), he conducted the foremost school of Carolingian Europe. The value of Alcuin's services can hardly be exaggerated; he was the main instrument in the transmission to the ignorant Franks of the relatively high culture which had been attained in English monasteries under Bede's guidance.

Alcuin: A Dialogue. Tract (1798) by Charles Brockden Brown.

Alcyone (al.sī′o̧.nē). In classical mythology, the daughter of Aeolus and wife of Ceÿx. After the loss of her husband she cast herself into the sea and was changed into a kingfisher.

Alcyone. In classical mythology, a Pleiad, daughter of Atlas and Pleione.

Alcyone. Third-magnitude star, the brightest of the Pleiades; η Tauri.

Alcyonius or Alcionius (al.si.ō′ni.us), Petrus. b. at Venice, 1487; d. at Rome, 1527. Italian scholar, corrector of the press of Aldus Manutius, and professor of Greek at Florence; author of Medicis legatus, sive de Exilio (1522), and other works.

Alda (äl′dą), Frances. [Original name, Frances Davis.] b. in New Zealand, 1883; d. Sept. 18, 1952. Operatic soprano. After studying under Marchesi in Paris, she made her début (1904) at the Opéra Comique. Her first appearance (1908) in New York was at the Metropolitan in the part of Gilda; she continued at the Metropolitan until 1930. She married Giulio Gatti-Casazza in 1910, and divorced him in 1929.

Aldabella (äl.dä.bel′lä). Wife of Orlando in Ariosto's poems, the sister of Oliviero and Brandimarte and daughter of Monodantes; in the old French and Spanish poems she is called "Alda" and "Auda."

Aldabella. Character in Henry Hart Milman's play Fazio, a handsome, shameless woman who beguiles Fazio when he becomes rich, and after his execution is condemned to imprisonment in a nunnery for life through the interposition of Bianca, the wife of Fazio.

Aldabra Islands (al.dab′rą). Group of small coral islands in the W part of the Indian Ocean, ab. 200 mi. NW of the island of Madagascar: part of the British crown colony of Seychelles.

Aldan (ôl′dąn). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Delaware County, near Philadelphia. 3,430 (1950).

Aldana (äl.dä′nä), Lorenzo de. b. in Estremadura, Spain, c1500; d. at Arequipa, Peru, probably in 1556. Spanish soldier who served with Alvarado in Guatemala and Peru, and in 1536 went with Juan de Rada to reinforce Almagro in Chile. In 1554 he was with Alonzo de Alvarado in the campaign against Giron, and shared in the defeat at the Abancay River (May 21, 1554). Authorities are not in accord as to the date of his death, Calancha placing it in 1571.

Aldanov (äl.dä′nọf), M. A. [Pseudonym of Mark Aleksandrovich Landau.] b. at Kiev, Russia, Nov. 7, 1886—. Russian novelist, biographer, and political writer, an émigré since 1919 in France, and more recently in the U.S. His sequence of novels entitled The Thinker has to do with the French revolution and its aftermath. It includes The Ninth Thermidor, The Devil's Bridge, The Conspiracy, and St. Helena. All of them except The Conspiracy were published in English between 1924 and 1929. His anti-communist novel The Fifth Seal was chosen (1943) as a selection in America by the Book of the Month Club. A later work, published in English as Before the Deluge (1947), is an historical novel through the pages of which move Alexander II and many leading Russians and Europeans who flourished in the last years of Alexander's reign. His "philosophical novelette" The Tenth Symphony was published in English in 1948. He is the author of a biography of Lenin, published in English in 1922, and of a fictional life of Byron translated into English as For Thee the Best (1945). To Live as We Wish (1952) is concerned with totalitarianism.

Aldan Plateau (äl.dän′). [Also, Aldan Mountains.] Spur of the Stanovoi Mountains, in E Siberia, U.S.S.R., near the river Aldan, running NE-SW. Gold is mined in these mountains.

Aldan River. River in the U.S.S.R., in the Yakutsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, Siberia; it rises in the Aldan Plateau, E of the Yablonoi Mountains, and joins the Lena. Much gold has been found in this river. Length, ab. 1,393 mi.

Aldborough (ôld′bėr.ō). See also Aldeburgh.

Aldborough (ôld′bėr.ō; locally ô′brọ). [Latin, Isurium.] Civil parish and hamlet in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, ab. 16 mi. NW of York. It is noted for its Roman antiquities, including the pavements, foundations, and other remains of an ancient Roman city. 543 (1931).

Aldebaran (al.deb′a.rąn). Name of the standard first-magnitude orange star α Tauri, in the northern constellation Taurus ("the Bull"), in the eye of the animal; most conspicuous member of the group known as the Hyades. Its diameter is 50 times that of the sun. One of the stars with which Halley discovered the proper motion of stars (1718); known to Hesiod and Homer. It is also often called Palilicium.

Aldeburgh (ôld′bėr.ō). [Also, Aldborough.] Municipal borough and seaport in E England, in East Suffolk, ab. 100 mi. NE of London and ab. 21 mi. NE of Ipswich. 2,684 (1951).

Aldegrever (äl′dę.grā.vėr), Heinrich. [Also: Aldegraf (-gräf); original name, Heinrich Trippenmeker; sometimes called "Albert of Westphalia."] b. at Paderborn, Prussia, 1502; d. at Soest, Prussia, c1562. German engraver and painter; one of a group known as the Little Masters. He is noted particularly for his expert and delicate engravings, influenced by the Italian Renaissance masters and by Albrecht Dürer.

Alden (ôl′dęn). Town in W New York, in Erie County ab. 20 mi. E of Buffalo: resort. 4,899 (1950).

Alden, Ebenezer, b. at Randolph, Mass., March 17, 1788; d. Jan. 26, 1881. American physician, medical historian, bibliophile, and genealogist. He is notable for his research in the history of medicine in Massachusetts, as evidenced by his Historical Sketch of the Origin and Progress of the Massachusetts Medical Society (1838), and others. His library, particularly in connection with medicine, the Civil War, and the ecclesiastical history of New England, was one of the most complete in the U.S. during the 19th century.

Alden, Henry Mills. b. at Mt. Tabor, Vt., Nov. 11, 1836; d. at New York, Oct. 7, 1919. American editor, author, and scholar of the classics. An early intention to enter the ministry was forsaken after graduation (1860) from Andover Theological Seminary; he gained some literary success during next three years with articles in the Atlantic Monthly. He collaborated (1863 et seq.) with Alfred H. Guernsey on Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion, serving also as managing editor (1863–69) of Harper's Weekly, and from 1869 until his death as editor of Harper's Magazine. Under his guidance Harper's Magazine attained the largest magazine circulation in the U.S., never surrendering its policy of printing only those portions of good literature which "could . . . be read aloud in the home."

Alden, Ichabod. b. at Duxbury, Mass., Aug. 11, 1739; killed in massacre at Cherry Valley, N.Y., Nov. 11, 1778. American Revolutionary officer. Appointed (1778) to defend the settlement at Cherry Valley, N.Y., he was led by inexperience in Indian warfare to underestimate the tactical cunning of the Indian force under British and Loyalist leadership and was massacred, with most of his troops and many of the settlers, in a surprise attack on Nov. 11, 1778.

Alden, Isabella Macdonald. [Pseudonym: Pansy.] b. at Rochester, N.Y., Nov. 3, 1841; d. at Palo Alto, Calif., Aug. 5, 1930. American writer of books and stories for children. Editor (1873–96) of the juvenile publication known as Pansy; wrote over 70 "Pansy Books," a life of Christ, and some fiction for adults.

Alden, James. b. at Portland, Me., 1810; d. at San Francisco, Calif., Feb. 6, 1877. American naval officer, appointed rear admiral (1871). He served in the Mexican War; in the Civil War, he commanded the Richmond in the New Orleans campaign of 1862, and the Brooklyn in Mobile Bay (1864).

Alden, John. b. in England, c1599; d. at Duxbury, Mass., 1687. One of the "Pilgrim Fathers," a cooper of Southampton, who was engaged in repairing the Mayflower and became one of the party which sailed in her. He is said to have been the first to step on Plymouth Rock after the arrival (1620) in America, though this honor is also assigned to Mary Chilton. He settled at Duxbury and married (c1623) Priscilla Mullens. The incidents (probably apocryphal) of their courtship form the theme of Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standish. He was an official in the colony for more than 50 years, serving (1633–41, 1650–86) as governor's assistant. He is said to have outlived all the other signers of the Mayflower Compact.

Alden, Raymond Macdonald. b. at New Hartford, N.Y., March 30, 1873; d. at Philadelphia, Sept. 27, 1924. American philologist and Shakespearian scholar, known for his variorum edition of The Sonnets of Shakespeare (1916); author of numerous textbooks and some short fiction.

Alden, Timothy. b. at Yarmouth, Mass., Aug. 28, 1771; d. July 5, 1839. American Congregational minister, founder and first president of Allegheny College. He served (1817–31) as president, and professor of Oriental language and ecclesiastical history, of the college at Meadville, Pa., which was forced to close by poverty, but was reopened under Methodist auspices in 1833.

Aldenham (ôl'dẹn.ạm), 1st Baron. [Title of Henry Hucks Gibbs.] b. at London, 1819; d. at Aldenham, Hertfordshire, 1907. English scholar, merchant, and banker. Director (1853–1901) and governor (1875–77) of the Bank of England; aided Sir James Murray with Oxford English Dictionary (1880 et seq.) and wrote many of its banking and commercial definitions; edited (1868) Romance of the Chevelere Assigne for Early English Text Society; author of numerous pamphlets on banking, including several which argued for bimetallism.

Aldenhoven (äl'dẹn.hō.fẹn). Town in W Germany, in the former Rhine Province, Prussia, ab. 12 mi. NE of Aachen. Here on March 1, 1793, the Austrians under the Prince of Coburg and Archduke Charles defeated the French, and on Oct. 2, 1794, a French army under Jourdan defeated the Austrian forces under Clairfayt. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Alderamin (al.dėr.am'in). Usual name of the 2½-magnitude star α Cephei, in the northern constellation Cepheus.

Alderman (ôl'dėr.mạn), Edwin Anderson. b. at Wilmington, N.C., May 15, 1861; d. April 29, 1931. American educator and historian. Professor of education (1893–96) and president (1896–1900), University of North Carolina; president of Tulane (1900–04) and University of Virginia (1904–31); editor-in-chief of the Library of Southern Literature.

Alderney (ôl'dėr.ni). [French, Aurigny; ancient names, Aurinia, Riduna.] One of the Channel Islands, situated ab. 23 mi. NE of Guernsey and ab. 7 mi. W of the Cap de la Hague, France: noted for its breed of cattle. The island, a British possession, is politically a dependency of the bailiwick of Guernsey, but has its own government, vested in a judge, 6 jurats, and 12 representatives. Both English and Norman-French are spoken, the latter being the official language. Capital, St. Anne; length, ab. 4 mi.; greatest width, ab. 1 mi.; area, ab. 3 sq. mi.; pop. 1,469 (1950).

Alderney, Race of. [French, Ras d'Aurigny.] That part of the English Channel which lies between the island of Alderney and the Cap de la Hague, France. It is a dangerous tidal race. The French fleet escaped here after a defeat (1692) at the battle of La Hogue. Width, ab. 9 mi.

Aldersgate (ôl'dėrz.gāt). Gate in old London wall which stood in the reëntering angle of the old city between Newgate and Cripplegate and at the junction of Aldersgate Street and St. Martin's Lane. It is called Ealdred's gate in the laws of Ethelred.

Aldershot (ôl'dėr.shot). Municipal borough in S England, in Hampshire, near the Hampshire-Surrey border, ab. 34 mi. SW of London: site of the largest military post in Great Britain (est. 1854–55). The Basingstoke Canal divides the camp. 36,184 (1951).

Aldfrith (äld'frith). [Also: Eahfrith, Ealdfrith.] d. 705. King of the Northumbrians, an illegitimate son of Oswiu, and brother of Ecgfrith, whom he succeeded in 685.

Aldgate (ôld'gāt). Eastern gate of old London wall, situated near the junction of Leadenhall Street, Houndsditch, Whitehall, and the Minories. It must have been one of the seven double gates mentioned by Fitz Stephens (who died 1191), not one of the Roman gates. The great road to Essex by which provisions were brought to the Roman city crossed the Lea at Old-ford and entered the city by way of Eormine (Ermine) Street, not at Aldgate but at Bishopsgate. Aldgate may have been opened in the reign of King Eadgar, or that of Edward the Confessor, but probably dates from the first years of Henry I, at which time Bow Bridge across the Lea at Stratford is supposed to have been built by his queen, Matilda.

Aldhelm (ôld'helm). b. c640; d. at Doulting, England, 709. English scholar and cleric; abbot of Malmesbury (675–709) and first bishop of Sherborne (705–709). He settled the controversy between Britons and Rome on the date of Easter. He founded schools and built several churches. A student of the classics, he is believed to have been the first Englishman to write Latin verse. He was also the author of Epistola ad Acircium, a treatise on Latin prosody which included 101 riddles in Latin hexameters; De laude virginitatis sive virginitate sanctorum (c705), a commemorative treatise on the saints; and of Anglo-Saxon poems and songs. Aldhelm was later canonized, his feast falling on May 25.

Aldiborontephoscophornio (al''di.bō.ron''tē.fos''kō.fôr'-ni.ō). Character in Henry Carey's burlesque Chrononhotonthologos. It was given as a nickname to James Ballantyne the printer, on account of the solemn pomposity of his manner, by Sir Walter Scott.

Aldiger (al'di.gėr). In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, a Christian knight and the brother of the enchanter Malagigi.

Aldine (ôl'dēn, al'dīn), The. Journal of art and typography (1868–79), known for the high quality of its technical craftsmanship. Originally a house organ of a New York printing establishment, it became (1871) a magazine aimed at a wider audience.

Aldine Press. The press established at Venice by Aldus Manutius.

Aldingar (al'ding.gär). Prior of St. Cuthbert's Abbey in Sir Walter Scott's poem Harold the Dauntless.

Aldingar, Sir. Ballad concerning a false steward who sought to take away the honor of his queen. In the ballad with this title from the Percy Manuscript the queen's name is Elinore, the wife of Henry II, but the story occurs repeatedly in connection with historical personages of nearly all the European nations.

Aldington (ôl'ding.tọn), Richard. b. in Hampshire, England, 1892—. English poet and novelist; leader of the Imagist school of English verse writing. He was for a short time in 1919 a staff-member of the London Times literary supplement after service (1916–18) in World War I; lived until outbreak of World War II in Switzerland, Italy, France, and elsewhere, becoming in 1939 a resident of the U.S.; married (1913–37) to American poet, Hilda Doolittle ("H.D."), and since 1937 to Netta McCulloch. Author of Images Old and New (1915), War and Love (1918), Images of Desire (1919), A Fool i' the Forest (1925), Collected Poems (1928), and many other volumes of verse; his novels include Death of a Hero (1929), The Colonel's Daughter (1931), All Men Are Enemies (1933), Very Heaven (1937), Rejected Guest (1939), and others; has also written the autobiographical Life for Life's Sake (1941), as well as a play, several short stories, and a number of translations from Greek, Latin, Italian, and French.

Aldini (äl.dē'nē), Count Antonio. b. at Bologna, Italy, 1756; d. at Pavia, Italy, Oct. 5, 1826. Italian statesman, minister of the Italian republic and kingdom under the Napoleonic regime.

Aldini, Giovanni. b. at Bologna, Italy, 1762; d. at Milan, Italy, 1834. Italian physicist, professor of physics at Bologna; brother of Antonio Aldini and nephew of Galvani.

Al-Djesirat-al-hadra (äl.je.sē'rạt.äl.hä'drä). An Arabic name of Algeciras.

Aldo (al'dō), Father. In John Dryden's play Limberham, or the Kind Keeper, an abandoned but kind-hearted old debauchee.

Aldobrandini (äl''dō.brän.dē'nē). Celebrated Florentine family, originally from the village of Lasciano, near Pistoia, established in Florence since the 12th century.

Aldobrandini, Giovanni. b. 1525; d. at Rome, 1573. Italian cardinal; son of Silvestro Aldobrandini.

Aldobrandini, Giovanni Francesco. b. 1546; d. 1601. Papal general; nephew of Pope Clement VIII.

Aldobrandini, Ippolito. Original name of Pope Clement VIII.

Aldobrandini, Pietro. b. 1571; d. 1621. Italian cardinal; grandson of Silvestro Aldobrandini.

Aldobrandini, Silvestro. b. at Florence, Nov. 23, 1499; d. at Rome, Jan. 6, 1558. Italian jurist and opponent of the Medici family.

Aldobrandini, Tommaso. b. c1530; d. 1572. Italian man of letters; son of Silvestro Aldobrandini. He is the author of a Latin translation of Diogenes Laërtius.

Aldred (al'dred). [Also: Alred, Ealdred.] d. at York, England, 1069. English ecclesiastic; bishop of Worcester (1044) and archbishop of York (1060). He was commissioned by Edward the Confessor to negotiate the return to the throne of Edward the Aetheling. Failing in this, he submitted to William I (the Conqueror), whom he crowned in 1066; he later (1068) also crowned Matilda.

Aldrich (ôl'drich), Bess Streeter. b. at Cedar Falls, Iowa, Feb. 17, 1881—. American novelist and short-story writer. Author of A White Bird Flying (1931), Miss Bishop (1933), Spring Came on Forever (1935), Song of Years (1939), The Drum Goes Dead (1941), as well as short-story collections including The Man Who Caught the Weather (1936), and others. Before 1918 she used the pseudonym Margaret Dean Stevens.

Aldrich, Edgar. b. at Pittsburg, N.H., Feb. 5, 1848; d. Sept. 15, 1921. American jurist. His outstanding ability as a lawyer led to an appointment (1891) as U.S. district judge for New Hampshire and to selection (1907) as legal head of the inquiry into the ability of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy to manage her considerable financial interest.

Aldrich, Henry. b. at Westminster, England, 1647; d. at Oxford, 1710. English theologian, musician, and architect; dean of Christ Church, Oxford, from 1689.

Aldrich, Louis. [Original name Louis Lyon; called the "Ohio Roscius."] b. in Ohio, Oct. 1, 1843; d. at Kennebunkport, Me., June 17, 1901. American actor. He began his stage career as a boy, notably in Richard III, and first starred in 1858, when he also adopted the surname Aldrich. He later played with Kate Bateman, Charles Kean, Edwin Forrest, Charlotte Cushman, and others. He was elected president of the American Actors' Fund in 1897; he suggested the establishment of a home for destitute actors, which subsequently came into being as the Staten Island Actors' Home.

Aldrich, Nelson Wilmarth. b. at Foster, R.I., Nov. 6, 1841; d. at New York, April 16, 1915. American politician and financier. As a Republican senator (1881–1911) from Rhode Island, he was a brilliant parliamentarian and political strategist. Senate leader during the McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft administrations, he influenced the passage of the McKinley Tariff Act (1890), the Silver Purchase Act (1890), the Anti-Trust Act (1890), the Gold Standard Act (1900), and the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act (1909) against strong opposition and in spite of party splits. As chairman of the National Monetary Commission, created by the Aldrich-Vreeland Act (1908), he made the study of banking reform (1908–11) later largely embodied in the Federal Reserve Act (1913).

Aldrich, Richard. b. at Providence, R.I., July 31, 1863; d. at Rome, June 2, 1937. American music critic. On staff of Providence Journal (1885–89) and New York Tribune (1891–1902); New York Times music critic (1902–24); contributor to International Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians (1938); author of Guide to Parsifal (1904), Guide to Nibelungen Ring (1905), Musical Discourse (1928), and others.

Aldrich, Thomas Bailey. b. at Portsmouth, N.H., Nov. 11, 1836; d. at Boston, March 19, 1907. American story writer, editor, and poet. Editor of Every Saturday (1865–74) and of the Atlantic Monthly (1881–90) during one of its chief periods as a standard of excellent literary craftsmanship, he is perhaps best known for The Story of a Bad Boy (1870). Author also of volumes of verse, of novels, including Prudence Palfrey (1874), The Queen of Sheba (1877), and Stillwater Tragedy (1880), sketches such as Ponkapog Papers (1903), and of short stories, especially those collected in Marjorie Daw and Other People (1873).

Aldrich, Winthrop Williams. b. at Providence, R.I., Nov. 2, 1885—. American banker and diplomat; son of Nelson W. Aldrich. Chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank of New York, he has served also as director of a number of business and industrial firms and as a trustee of several institutions. He was appointed (1953) U.S. ambassador to Great Britain.

Aldrich Deep. Very deep portion of the Pacific Ocean, lying NE of New Zealand and E of the Kermadec Islands. It is part of the Kermadec Trench. Depth, 30,930 ft.

Aldrich-Vreeland Act (ôl'drich.vrē'land). Act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1908 as an emergency measure following the brief financial panic of 1907. Its chief aims were the encouragement of an elastic currency and the creation of a reform banking policy and structure to serve until more permanent legislation could be devised. It established the National Monetary Commission to study fiscal and banking systems and to report to Congress on the advisability of making changes in the U.S. banking system. This law expired on June 30, 1915, but its chief goals had already been secured by the Federal Reserve Act (1913).

Aldridge (ôl'drij). Urban district in C England, in Staffordshire, ab. 10 mi. E of Wolverhampton, ab. 129 mi. NW of London by rail. 29,167 (1951).

Aldridge, Ira Frederick. [Called the "African Roscius."] b. probably at New York, c1805; d. at Łódź, Poland, Aug. 10, 1867. American Negro tragedian. A protégé of Edmund Kean, whose valet he probably was for a time, he made his début (1826) as Othello at the Royalty Theatre, London. He was poorly received at Baltimore (c1830) but played successfully at London (1833 et seq.) and met with considerable acclaim in Europe (1853–56; 1858–67), particularly for Shakespearian roles such as Othello, Lear, Aaron, and Macbeth. He was honored by the governments of Prussia, Austria, Russia, and others.

Aldringen (äl'dring.ẹn) or Aldringer (-ẹr), Count Johann. [Also, Altringer.] b. at Thionville (Diedenhofen), in Lorraine, Dec. 10, 1588; killed at Landshut, in Bavaria, 1634. Austrian imperial general in the Thirty Years' War. He succeeded Tilly as commander of the army of the League in 1632, and served under Wallenstein at Nuremberg (1632). He was in command of the campaign against the Swedes on the Danube (1634).

Aldrovand (al'drọ.vand), Father. A Dominican friar, the warlike chaplain of Lady Eveline Berenger in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Betrothed.

Aldrovandi (äl.drō.vän'dē), Ulisse. [Latin, Ulysses Aldrovandus.] b. at Bologna, Italy, 1522; d. there, 1605. Italian naturalist; professor of natural history at Bologna (1560); founder (1568) and director of the Bologna botanical gardens. As inspector of drugs, he published Antidotarii Bononiensis Epitome (1574); his chief work, a monumental Natural History (1599–1642) on birds, insects, and mollusks, is profusely illustrated with his own drawings.

Aldstone or Aldstone Moor (ôl'stọn). See Alston.

Aldwych (ôld'wich). Street in W London, in Westminster metropolitan borough. It is a crescent (100 ft. wide) extending ab. ¼ mi. from its intersection with the Strand at St. Clement's to intersect again with the Strand at the S end of Catherine Street. The Gaiety Theatre, Bush House, and Australia House are on Aldwych.

Aleandro (ä.lā.än'drō), Girolamo. [Latinized, Hieronymus Aleander.] b. at Motta, near Venice, Italy, Feb. 13, 1480; d. at Rome, Jan. 31, 1542. Italian cardinal and scholar. He was at various times Vatican librarian, rector of the University of Paris, and papal nuncio to Germany, the Netherlands, and France. He was a determined opponent of the Reformation, and particularly of Luther. He was the author of a Lexicon Graeco-Latinum (1512) and other works.

Aleardi (ä.lā.är'dē), Count Aleardo. [Original surname, Gaetano.] b at Verona, Italy, 1812; d. there, 1878. Italian poet and patriot, an active partisan of the insurrection in Venetia (1848–49); imprisoned by the Austrians in 1852 and 1859. The best edition of his poems is usually considered to have been that published at Florence in 1862 (5th ed., 1878).

Alecsandri (ä.lek.sän'drē), Vasili. [Also, Basile Alexandri.] b. in Moldavia, 1821; d. at Mircesti, Moldavia, 1890. Rumanian poet, politician, and journalist, notable as a collector of Rumanian songs. Active in politics after 1848, he served as foreign minister (1859–60) and minister to France (1885 et seq.). He published lyric and dramatic poems, Despot Voda (1880), Ovidiu (1885), collections of native songs (1844, 1852–53), and others.

Alecto (ạ.lek'tō). In Greek mythology, one of the three Erinyes.

Aledo (ą.lē'dō). City in NW Illinois, county seat of Mercer County, SW of Rock Island: center of an agricultural area. 2,919 (1950).

Alegrete (ä.lę.grā'tę). City in S Brazil, in the state of Rio Grande do Sul. 20,160 (1950).

Alegría (ä.lā.grē'ä), Ciro. b. at Sartimbamba, Peru, 1909—. Peruvian novelist and political journalist. He joined (1930) the Aprista party and was twice jailed (1931, 1933) for political activity; exiled (1934) and for a time resident in Chile; came to the U.S. (1941) and served with the Coördinator of Inter-American Affairs and Office of War Information. Author of the prize-winning La Serpiente de oro (1935), the first great work to depict life in the Peruvian jungle, of Los Perros hambrientos (1938), El Mundo es ancho y ajeno (1941), winner of the first Latin American Prize Novel contest in the U.S., and others.

Alekhine (ä.lye'nin), Aleksandr Aleksandrovich. [Also, Aljechin.] b. at Moscow, Nov. 1, 1892; d. at Lisbon, Portugal, March 24, 1946. Russian chess master and world chess champion (1927–35; 1937–46). He was an eminently successful match and tournament player, chess theoretician, and author, whose principal works were My Best Games of Chess, 1908–1923, New York 1924 Tournament Book, and My Best Games of Chess, 1924–1937. His chief international tournament victories were first prize at Stockholm 1912, Scheveningen 1913, Moscow 1914 (equal first), Budapest 1921, The Hague 1921, Carlsbad 1923 (equal first), Baden-Baden 1925, Kecskemet 1927, San Remo 1930, Berne 1932, and Zurich 1934.

Aleksandr Aleksandrovich (ä.lik.sän'dėr ä.lik.sän'drọ.vich). Russian name of Alexander III (of Russia).

Aleksandr Nikolayevich (nē.ko.lä'yi.vich). Russian name of Alexander II (of Russia).

Aleksandropol (al.ig.zan'drō.pôl; Russian, ä.lik.sän.drô'pọl). Former name of Leninakan.

Aleksandrov (ä.lik.sän'drọf). [Also: Alexandrov, Alexandroff.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Vladimir oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 65 mi. NE of Moscow. Pop. ab. 12,000.

Aleksandrovsk (ä.lik.sän'drọfsk). [Full name, Aleksandrovsk-Sakhalinski.] City and port in Asia, in the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, in the U.S.S.R. Situated on the W coast of Sakhalin, N of Japan, it was until after World War II of little importance in the Russian economy (before the Russian Revolution it was considered so remote and of such small value as to be used as a place of exile), but the discovery in recent years of extensive oil and coal reserves in the vicinity, and the acquisition by Russia from Japan of the S portion of Sakhalin, have given it immense importance since World War II. The last official census estimate gives it a population of only ab. 10,000, but recent unofficial estimates of its size run as high as 100,000.

Aleksandrovsk-Grushevski (ä.lik.sän'drọfsk.grụ.shef'ski). Former name of Shakhty.

Aleksandr Pavlovich (ä.lik.sän'dėr päv'lọ.vich). Russian name of Alexander I (of Russia).

Alekseyev (ä.lik.sā'yif), Mikhail Vasilyevich. b. 1857; d. at Ekaterinodar (now Krasnodar), Russia, 1918. Russian army officer. He entered the army in 1876 and became a general in 1904, during the early part of the Russo-Japanese War. In World War I, he was a commander in the sector of the Galician victory over Austria-Hungary (1914) and later (1915) rescued the Russian armies from defeats on the northwestern front. During the early period of the Russian Revolution, he attempted mediation between Kerensky and Kornilov; later he joined the counter-revolutionary forces, becoming their political head after Kornilov's death, and leaving the military leadership to Denikin.

Alekseyev, Yevgeni Ivanovich. [Also, Eugenii Ivanovitch Alexeief.] b. 1843; d. 1918. Russian admiral, appointed imperial lieutenant with control of both diplomatic and military affairs in the Far East on July 30, 1903, shortly before the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese War. From 1883 to 1893 he was naval attaché of the Russian embassy in Paris. He commanded the Russian squadron during the Chinese-Japanese war of 1894–97, and took possession of Port Arthur. In 1898 he was promoted to vice-admiral, took part in the work of the allies in China during 1900–01, and became chief of the Russian Pacific squadron. His conduct of affairs after his appointment to the imperial lieutenancy did not prevent war, and after the early Japanese successes he was deprived (April, 1904) of most of his power. He retired in November and returned to Russia. Reinstated (1914) as chief of staff, he headed (1915–16) the general staff and actively resisted (1917–18) the new revolutionary regime.

Aleksey Mikhailovich (ä.lik.sā' mē.hī'lọ.vich). [Also, Alexis Mikhailovich.] b. March 19, 1629; d. Feb. 8, 1676. Czar of Russia, son of Michael Féodorovitch, the son of Czar Michael Romanoff, whom he succeeded in 1645. He waged a war (1654–67) with Poland, acquiring possession of Smolensk and the eastern Ukraine. In a war (1655–58) with Sweden he conquered a part of Livonia and Ingermanland, but was forced by domestic troubles to relinquish this territory at the treaty of Cardis (June 21, 1661). He suppressed with difficulty the revolt (1669–71) led by Stenka Razin. He extended his conquests to eastern Siberia, codified the laws of the various provinces of Russia, and, by beginning to introduce European civilization, prepared the way for the later rule of his younger son Peter the Great.

Aleksey Petrovich (pi.trô'vich). [Also, Alexis Petrovich.] b. at Moscow, Feb. 18, 1690; d. in prison at St. Petersburg, July 7, 1718. The eldest son of Peter the Great and father of Peter II. He fled (1717) to Vienna after voicing his disapproval of his father's policies. He returned, however, at Peter's request, and was then condemned for high treason and imprisoned.

Aleksin (ä.lyô'sin). [Also, Alexin.] Town in the U.S.S.R., in the Tula oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Oka River ab. 85 mi. SW of Moscow.

Aleksinac (ä'lek.sē.näts). [German, Alexinatz.] Town in E Yugoslavia, in the federative unit of Serbia, in the former banovina (province) of Moravska, situated near the Morava River, N of Niš: scene of several armed contests between the Serbians and the Turks in 1876. Pop., predominantly Greek-Orthodox, 7,383 (1948).

Alem (ä.lem'), Leandro N. b. at Buenos Aires, c1845; d. 1896. Argentine political reformer, notable as chief organizer (1889) of the Unión Cívica and later (1891) of the Unión Cívica Radical. Both groups aimed at political reform within the country, but failed when Alem's attempt (1892) at a coup d'état was crushed. The Unión Cívica had earlier, however, compelled the resignation of President Juárez Celmán in 1890.

Alemán (ä.lā.män'), Mateo. b. near Seville, Spain, 1547; d. in Mexico, c1610. Spanish novelist and physician, first writer known to have produced a picaresque novel. Controller of finance (1571–88) under Philip II, he emigrated (1608) to Mexico and is thought to have been a printer at Mexico City. Author of La vida y hechos del pícaro Guzmán de Alfarache (1599–1604/5), which went into more than 16 editions in five years and was translated into French (1600), English (The Rouge, 1623), and Latin (1623).

Alemán, Miguel. b. at Sayula, Veracruz, Mexico, Sept. 29, 1903—. Mexican statesman, president of Mexico (1946–52). A noted labor attorney and a justice of the federal court, he was elected (1936) governor of Veracruz, serving until 1940, when he resigned to manage the successful presidential campaign of Manuel Ávila Camacho. He was minister of the interior (1940–45) under Camacho and was elected president to succeed him in 1946. Alemán's presidency was marked by a campaign to industrialize the country and to modernize its agricultural methods, of expanding the educational system, and of attracting foreign capital to Mexico to help build the country's prosperity.

Alemanni (al.ę.man'ī). See Alamanni or Alemanni.

Alemannia (al.ę.man'i.ą). See Alamannia.

Alemannic Federation (al.ę.man'ik). See Alamannic Federation.

Alembert (dà.läṅ.ber), Jean le Rond d'. [Original name, Jean le Rond.] b. at Paris, 1717; d. there, 1783. French mathematician, physicist, and philosopher; cofounder and an editor of Diderot's Encyclopédie; son of Mme. Claudine Alexandrine de Tencin. As secretary (1772–83) of the French Academy, he was the spokesman and, after Voltaire's death (1778), the leader of the parti des philosophes. Author of numerous scientific works, chiefly the Traité de dynamique (1743) in which he proposed what is now called "d'Alembert's principle," Recherches sur différents points importants du système du monde (1754–56), and Histoire des membres de l'Académie française.

Alemquer (ä.lāng.ker'). See Alenquer.

Alencar (ä.lāng.kär'), José (Martiniano) de. b. at Mecejana, Ceará, Brazil, May 1, 1829; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 12, 1877. Brazilian novelist, playwright, essayist, poet, and political writer. The most famous novelist of the romantic period in Brazil, he is best known for his stories of Indian and colonial life, particularly O guarani (1857) and Iracema (1865). An English translation of the latter was published at London (1886). Among his other well-known novels are As minas de prata (1862–65), Diva (1864), O gaucho (1870), A pata da gazela (1870), O tronco do ipê (1871), Ubirajara (1875), O sertanejo (1876), and Guerra dos Mascates (1877).

Alençon (ä.läṅ.sôṅ). Former countship and duchy of France, whose counts and dukes were prominent in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries. The duchy was an appanage of the house of Valois.

Alençon. Town in NW France, the capital of the department of Orne, situated at the junction of the Briante and Sarthe rivers, between Le Mans and Caen. It is an important trade center and has manufactures of lace (renowned as point d'Alençon), linen and woolen goods, and pottery. There is a museum, and a castle of the dukes of Alençon. The Church of Notre Dame dates from the 15th century. The town changed hands frequently in the English and Holy League wars. It was occupied by the Germans in 1871 and in 1940. Pop. 19,715 (1946).

Alençon (dȧ.läṅ.sôṅ), Charles IV, Duc d'. b. 1489; d. April 11, 1525. Prince of the blood and constable of France; husband of Margaret of Valois, sister of Francis I. His cowardice is said to have caused the loss of the battle of Pavia in 1525 and the capture of Francis I.

Alençon, Charles de Valois, Duc d'. d. 1346. French nobleman; brother of Philip VI of France. He was killed in the battle of Crécy.

Alençon, Emmanuel, Duc de Vendôme et d'. [Title of Philippe Emmanuel Maximilien Marie Eudes d'Orléans.] b. at Obermais, near Merano, Italy, Jan. 18, 1872; d. at Cannes, France, Feb. 1, 1931. Member of the house of Bourbon-Orléans; son of Ferdinand Philippe Marie d'Orléans, Duc d'Alençon (1844–1910).

Alençon, Ferdinand Philippe Marie d'Orléans, Duc d'. b. at Château Neuilly, Seine department, France, July 12, 1844; d. at Belmont Castle, England, June 29, 1910. Member of the house of Bourbon-Orléans. He refused (1870) to accept his nomination by the dictator Serrano as king of Spain, and also declined a later proposal (1886) concerning the Bulgarian throne. He campaigned (1865) with the Spanish army in the Philippines and served (1871–83) in the French army.

Alençon, Jean II, Duc d'. d. 1476. He supported the Dauphin against his father Charles VII, and was condemned to death in 1456, the sentence being, however, commuted to life imprisonment, followed by a pardon.

Alenio (ä.lā'nyō), Giulio. b. at Brescia, Italy, 1582; d. in China, c1644. Italian Jesuit, a missionary in China after 1610. He published several theological works in Chinese.

Alenquer (ä.lāng.ker'). [Also, Alemquer.] Town in N Brazil, in the state of Paraná, on the Amazon River opposite the mouth of the Tapajós River. 2,801 (1940).

Alenquer. [Also, Alemquer.] Small town and concelho (commune) in W Portugal, in the province of Estremadura, in Lisboa district, ab. 29 mi. NE of Lisbon. Pop. of concelho, 32,415 (1940); of town 7,553 (1940).

Alentejo (ä.lān.tā'zhö). [Also, Alemtejo.] Former province of Portugal, in the SE part of the country, now included in the provinces of Alto Alentejo and Baixo Alentejo.

Alentejo, Alto. See Alto Alentejo.

Alentejo, Baixo. See Baixo Alentejo.

Alenuihaha Channel (ä.le.nö.ē.hä'hä). Sea passage of the Pacific Ocean separating the islands of Maui and Hawaii, in the Hawaiian Islands. Width, 26 sea mi.

Aleppo (ạ.lep'ō). [French, Alep (ȧ.lep).] Former il (province or vilayet) of the Turkish empire, now mostly in Syria.

Aleppo. [Arabic, Haleb, Haleb-es-Shahba; French, Alep; Greek, Khalepion; ancient name, Beroea.] City in NW Syria, on the Kuweik. The most important trading center of N Syria, it is a major road junction and rail center near the Turkish border. In 638 it was conquered by the Saracens; it was the seat of a Seljuk sultanate in the 11th and 12th centuries. Captured by the Crusaders under Baldwin in 1170, and plundered by the Mongols and by Tamerlane, it was conquered and annexed by the Turks in 1517. The city suffered severely from plagues, and in 1170 and 1822 from earthquakes; it was the scene of an outbreak against the Christians in 1850. Pop. 362,541 (1950).

Aler (ä'lėr), Paul. b. at St.-Guy, Luxembourg, 1656; d. at Düren, Germany, 1727. German Jesuit, author of the school treatise Gradus ad Parnassum (1702), and others.

Alert (ạ.lėrt'). One of the steam vessels of the British polar expedition (1875–76) under Sir George Strong Nares; the other was the Discovery. The Alert passed through Kennedy Channel and wintered at Floeberg Beach, the most northerly point reached by ship up to that date.

Alès (ȧ.les). [Former name, Alais.] Town in S France, in the department of Gard, situated on the Gardon River, ab. 25 mi. NW of Nîmes. It is an industrial town, with silk, leather, chemical, and iron industries. Nearby are coal, iron, silver, zinc, antimony, and asphalt mines. It is also a lumber trade center. A fortification was erected here by Vauban on the site of a medieval castle. 34,731 (1946).

Alesia (ạ.lē'zhạ). In ancient geography, the capital of the Mandubii in C Gaul, usually identified with modern Alise, a small town in the French department of Côte-d'Or.

Alesius (ạ.lē'zhi.us), Alexander. [Also surnamed: ab Ales (äb ä'les), Alane (al'ạn), Ales, Aless, Alesse (ä'les).] b. at Edinburgh, 1500; d. at Leipzig, 1565. Scottish Lutheran controversialist and exegete; canon of Saint Andrew's, Edinburgh. Imprisoned as a result of his reformism, he escaped (1532) to Wittenberg, Germany; there he became the friend of Luther and Melanchthon and signed the Augsburg Confession. He returned to England (1535), and was an intimate associate of Thomas Cranmer, Thomas Cromwell, and other English reformers.

Alessandra (ä.les.sän'drä). Queen of the Amazons in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

Alessandri (ä.les.sän'drē), Alessandro. b. at Naples, Italy, c1461; d. 1523. Italian jurist and antiquarian, author of Dies geniales (1522), and others.

Alessandria (ä.les.sän'drē.ä). Province in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont in NW Italy. Capital, Alessandria; area, ab. 1,376 sq. mi.; pop. 493,698 (1936).

Alessandria. City and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont, the capital of the province of Alessandria, situated at the junction of the Bormida and Tanaro rivers, E of Turin. It is an important railroad junction, has railroad repair shops, metallurgical, cotton textile, and hat manufactures (Borsalino), and trade in agricultural products. In a strategic location, it was a center of liberal movements, aiming at the liberation and unification of Italy, in the 19th century. The churches of San Rocco, Santa Maria di Castello, and San Francesco date from the 13th and 14th centuries; there are a number of palatial houses from the Renaissance period, including the episcopal palace and the town hall, and an art gallery. Little damage was suffered by buildings of tourist interest during World War II. Pop. of commune, 79,327 (1936); of city, 59,372 (1936).

Alessandria, Armistice of. Armistice agreed upon between Napoleon and the Austrian general Melas, on June 16, 1800, after the battle of Marengo. The Austrians retired behind the Mincio, abandoning to the French every fortress in N Italy to the west of that river.

Alessandri Palma (ä.lā.sän'drē päl'mä), Arturo. b. Dec. 20, 1868; d. Aug. 24, 1950. Chilean lawyer and politician, president of Chile (1920–25; 1932–37); father of Arturo Alessandri Rodríguez (1895—). Minister of industry and public works (1908 et seq.); minister of finance (1913 et seq.); minister of interior (1918 et seq.); successful presidential candidate (1920) of the Liberal Alliance, an anti-Conservative coalition party. His efforts to reform the government and to enact socialist legislation brought a reaction, and his government was overthrown (1924) by an army revolt. He was elected president the second time (1932) on a moderate socialist ticket.

Alessandri Rodríguez (rō.ʀʜrē'ges), Arturo. b. at Santiago, Chile, May 8, 1895—. Chilean lawyer and legal scholar; son of Arturo Alessandri Palma (1868—).

Alessandro Stradella (ä.les.sän'drō strä.del'lä). [Original title, Stradella.] Opera by Flotow, first produced as a short lyrical piece at Paris in 1837, and afterward rewritten and produced in its present form at Hamburg, Dec. 30, 1844.

Alessi (ä.les'sē), Galeazzo. b. at Perugia, Italy, c1512; d. 1572. Italian architect, builder of the Church of Santa Maria di Carignano, at Genoa, and of palaces and churches at Genoa, Milan, and elsewhere.

Ålesund (ô'le.sün). [Also, Aalesund.] City in W Norway, in the fylke (county) of Møre og Romsdal, situated on two islands at the mouth of the Stor Fjord, between Bergen and Trondheim: a seaport and headquarters for cod, herring, and seal fishing fleets. Formerly only a landing station by the name of Borgundsund, it was established in 1848; rebuilt after a fire in 1904. Pop. 18,143 (1946).

Alet (ä.lā). Town in the department of Aude, S France, on the Aude River ab. 15 mi. SW of Carcassonne. It contains a ruined cathedral.

Aletsch Glacier (ä'lech). Largest glacier in Switzerland, situated in the canton of Valais, N of Brigue and S of the Jungfrau. Length, ab. 13 mi.

Aletschhorn (ä'lech.hôrn). Peak of the Bernese Alps, in Valais canton, S Switzerland, near the Aletsch Glacier. Elevation, ab. 13,763 ft.

Aleut (al'i.öt). Division of the Eskimo, inhabiting the Alaskan peninsula and the Aleutian Islands. The languages of the various Aleut groups comprise a family related to the Eskimo linguistic family.

Aleutian Islands (ą.lö'shąn). [Also, Catharine Archipelago.] Chain of ab. 150 islands belonging principally to Alaska. It extends W from the peninsula of Alaska, and separates Bering Sea from the Pacific Ocean. The islands were discovered by the Russians in the middle of the 18th century.

Aleutian Range. Mountain range in SW Alaska, extending W into the Aleutian peninsula. It includes a number of large volcanoes.

Aleutians Campaign. American campaign in World War II. Extending over a whole year from August, 1942, to August, 1943, this campaign wrested from Japanese control the islands in the Aleutian chain which Japan had taken almost without resistance earlier in the war, and on which it had sought to construct airfields. The action centered first on Attu, which was invaded in May, and was made more difficult by snowstorms and dense fogs. The ultimate point of attack, however, was Kiska, to the E of Attu. After heavy American bombardment of this island, Japanese troops made a skillful evacuation, aided by the fogs of the Bering Sea, and U.S. troops moved in.

Alexander (al.eg.zan'dėr). [Called Alexander Lyncestes.] fl. 4th century B.C. A native of Lyncestis in Macedonia (whence his surname "Lyncestes"), implicated with his brothers in the murder of Philip II of Macedonia in 336 B.C. Because he was the first to do homage to Alexander the Great, the latter pardoned him and raised him to a high position in the army, but afterward put him to death for a treasonable correspondence with Darius.

Alexander. [Called Alexander Jannaeus.] b. 128 or 129 B.C.; d. 78 B.C. King of the Jews from 104 till 78 B.C. He was a younger son of John Hyrcanus.

Alexander, Saint. d. at Alexandria, 326 A.D. Patriarch of Alexandria (312 et seq.) and opponent of Arius, whom he excluded from the patriarchate. He took a leading part in the General Council at Nicaea, which he attended with his deacon, Saint Athanasius.

Alexander I, Saint. Pope from 105 to 115, successor of Saint Evaristus. He has been identified by some scholars with an Alexander martyred on the Via Nomentana, at Rome.

Alexander II. [Original name, Anselmo Baggio; Latinized, Anselmus Badajus.] d. 1073. Pope from 1061 to 1073. Endeavored to enforce celibacy of clergy; occupancy of papal chair at first threatened by election of an antipope, Honorius II, at Basle, but threat removed when rapprochement reached with German bishops and court, who were Honorius's chief supporters; Alexander formally recognized (1064) as Pope by all parties.

Alexander III. [Original name, Orlando (or Rolando Ranuci) Bandinelli.] b. at Siena, Italy; d. 1181. Pope from 1159 to 1181, successor of Adrian IV. A champion of ecclesiastical independence, he carried out the policy of Hildebrand in opposition to Frederick Barbarossa (whom he excommunicated) and Henry II of England. Three antipopes, Victor IV, Pascal III, and Calixtus III (elected 1159, 1164, and 1168, respectively) were confirmed by Frederick, and disputed the authority of Alexander, who was compelled to take refuge (1162–65) in France and again (1167) at Venice and elsewhere. His struggle with Henry II, who had murdered (1173) Thomas à Becket, most outspoken English supporter of papal claims of supremacy, ended in the penance (1174) of the king and the canonization of Thomas. His contest with the emperor ended in decisive defeat of the latter at the battle of Legnano (1176), reconciliation (1177) at Venice, and the abdication (1178) of antipope Calixtus III. At the third Lateran Council (1179), he established the law of papal succession.

Alexander IV. [Original name, Rinaldo, Conti di Segni.] b. at Anagni, Italy; d. at Viterbo, Italy, 1261. Pope from 1254 to 1261, successor of Innocent IV; nephew of Gregory IX. He established the Inquisition in France and encouraged mendicant friars, especially the Franciscans. He engaged in a long struggle with the Hohenstaufen family, especially Manfred, Ghibelline leader and king (1258) of Naples and Sicily, whose influence in Rome gave rise to factional struggles which drove Alexander to Viterbo, where he spent the last years of his pontificate.

Alexander V. [Earlier name, Pietro Philarghi; original name, Petros Philargos; called Pietro di Candia.] b. at Candia, Crete, c1339; d. at Bologna, Italy, 1410. Antipope. He claimed the papal chair from 1409 to 1410, as a successor to rival popes Benedict XIII and Gregory XII after their deposition by the Council of Pisa. He was elected by this council on a basis of his efforts, as cardinal (1405–10) under Innocent VII, to reconcile the Great Schism (1378–1417). He was prevented from reaching Rome and died at the castle of Balthasar Cossa, who succeeded him as John XXIII and who was accused, though without proof, of having poisoned him. Alexander V has been carried by some sources as a Pope, but is now definitely listed among the antipopes by the Roman Catholic Church. Gregory XII is regarded as having been the rightful Pope, and his deposition unlawful.

Alexander VI. [Original name, Rodrigo Lanzol y Borgia.] b. at Xativa, near Valencia, Spain; d. at Rome, 1503. Pope from 1492 to 1503, successor (probably through bribery) of Innocent VIII. He may be taken as typical of wealthy and corrupt Renaissance popes. He was a nephew of Calixtus III (Alfonso Borgia), who made him a cardinal and vice-chancellor of the church (1456), and whom he succeeded as archbishop of Valencia. Although he was a patron of artists, including Bramante, Michelangelo, Raphael, and others, his complex career, directed toward temporal aggrandizement of the papacy and of his own family, contributed otherwise to an unprecedented degradation of the church and the downfall of powerful families such as Sforza, Orsini, and Colonna which opposed him. Prominent as conspirators in his schemes and profiters by them were his four natural children by Rosa Vanozza, especially Cesare and Lucrezia Borgia. These children he begot between 1474 and 1482, while still a cardinal. He issued a bull (1493) dividing the New World between Spain and Portugal. Unsuccessfully opposed the entrance (1494) of Charles VIII of France into Naples; joined (1495) the league between Maximilian I, Milan, Venice, and Spain which drove Charles from Italy. In 1498 he ordered the execution of Savonarola, outspoken critic of his corruption, intrigues, and secular display; and in 1501 he instituted a censorship of books. His death, popularly attributed to poison, was probably caused by malaria.

Alexander VII. [Original name, Fabio Chigi.] b. at Siena, Italy, 1599; d. at Rome, 1667. Pope from 1655 to 1667, successor of Innocent X. He promulgated the bull against the Jansenists (1665). In a conflict (1662) with Louis XIV of France, he lost Avignon. Though he practiced the nepotism customary at the time, he preferred the arts and philosophy to affairs of state; enlarged the Sapienza and Vatican libraries, improved the plan of Rome, and built Saint Peter's colonnade, designed by Bernini.

Alexander VIII. [Original name, Pietro Ottoboni.] b. at Venice, 1610; d. at Rome, 1691. Pope from 1689 to 1691, successor of Innocent XI. He condemned doctrine of "philosophical sin"; assisted Venice against Turks; enriched Vatican library by purchase of Queen Christina of Sweden's collection of books and manuscripts.

Alexander I (of Bulgaria). [Also, Prince Alexander of Battenberg.] b. April 5, 1857; d. Nov. 17, 1893. A ruler of Bulgaria and titular prince of Battenberg; the second son of Prince Alexander of Hesse-Darmstadt. He served in the Hessian army, and, during the Russo-Turkish war of 1877–78, in the Russian army. Elected (April 29, 1879) prince of Bulgaria, he suspended constitutional government there for the period 1881–83. By the revolution (September, 1885) at Philippopolis he became prince of Eastern Rumelia also; he commanded in the repulse of the consequent Serbian invasion (November, 1885).

Alexander I (of Epirus). d. 326 B.C. King of Epirus, son of Neoptolemus and brother of Olympias, the mother of Alexander the Great. His youth was spent at the court of Philip II of Macedon, who made him king of Epirus.

Alexander II (of Epirus). King of Epirus, son of Pyrrhus and Lanassa, the daughter of Agathocles, tyrant of Syracuse. He succeeded his father in 272 B.C. He was dispossessed of Epirus and Macedonia by Demetrius, whose father, Antigonus Gonatas, he had deprived of Macedonia; but Epirus was recovered by the aid chiefly of the Acarnanians.

Alexander I (of Greece). [Alexander of the Hellenes.] b. at Athens, 1893; d. Oct. 25, 1920. King of Greece (1917–20). He became ruler after the deposition of his father, King Constantine, because the Allies distrusted the sympathies of his elder brother, George (later, King George II). The reins of government were actually in the hands of Venizelos during the greater part of his reign.

Alexander III (of Macedonia). See Alexander the Great.

Alexander I (of Russia). [Russian, Aleksandr Pavlovich.] b. at St. Petersburg, Dec. 23, 1777; d. at Taganrog, Russia, Dec. 1, 1825. Emperor of Russia; son of Paul I of Russia, on whose deposition he succeeded to the throne in 1801. He was influenced by his Swiss tutor to promote liberal ideas and reforms in education and science, and encouraged the introduction to Russia of Western civilization. He carried out many reforms, including the abolition of serfdom in the Baltic provinces, and promoted trade and manufactures. During the last years of his reign, however, he became increasingly reactionary and unpopular. In 1805 he joined the coalition against Napoleon. He was present at the battle of Austerlitz and joined Prussia against Napoleon in 1806. He signed the Treaty of Tilsit in 1807. He conquered Finland in 1808. Under his aegis, a successful war was waged with Turkey in 1806–12. In 1812 Napoleon invaded Russia, and Alexander was thenceforth a leader in the coalition (1813–14) against France. He took part in the battles of Dresden and Leipzig in 1813, entered Paris in 1814, and was present at the Congress of Vienna. He became king of Poland in 1815, again entered Paris in 1815, formed the Holy Alliance in 1815, and took part in the conferences of Aix-la-Chapelle (1818), Troppau (1820), Laibach (1821), and Verona (1822). He married Princess Elizabeth of Baden.

Alexander II (of Russia). [Russian, Aleksandr Nikolayevich.] b. April 29, 1818; d. at St. Petersburg, March 13, 1881. Emperor of Russia; son of Nicholas I, whom he succeeded in 1855. His greatest achievement was the emancipation (1861) of the serfs. He reorganized the army and the departments of administration and justice, and developed commerce and manufactures. In 1856 he concluded the Treaty of Paris which ended the Crimean War. He suppressed the Polish insurrection (1863–64), and carried on war (1877–78) with Turkey. During the latter part of his reign he was closely allied with Germany and Austria. The attacks of the Nihilists led him to enter upon a reactionary policy in 1879, and he was finally assassinated by them. He married Princess Maria of Hesse-Darmstadt.

Alexander III (of Russia). [Russian, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich.] b. March 10, 1845; d. at Livadia, in the Crimea, Nov. 1, 1894. Emperor of Russia; son of Alexander II whom he succeeded on March 13, 1881. He continued the reactionary policy inaugurated late in his father's reign. A meeting of the emperors of Russia, Germany, and Austria, at Skierniewice in Poland, in September, 1884, cemented the personal union of these rulers for the time, but after the formation of the Triple Alliance in 1883, Russia became a virtual ally of France.

Alexander I (of Scotland). b. c1078; d. at Stirling, Scotland, April 27, 1124. King of Scotland; the fourth son of Malcolm Canmore and Margaret of Scotland, and brother of Edgar, whom he succeeded in 1107. He married Sibylla, a natural daughter of Henry I of England. During the early years of his reign he quelled an insurrection in the north of Scotland. He upheld throughout his reign the supremacy of the Scottish church in his country.

Alexander II (of Scotland). [Called "Alexander the Peaceful."] b. at Haddington, Scotland, Aug. 24, 1198; d. in Kerrera, Scotland, July 8, 1249. King of Scotland; son of William the Lion, whom he succeeded in 1214.

Alexander III (of Scotland). b. at Roxburgh, Scotland, Sept. 4, 1241; d. near Kinghorn, Fifeshire, Scotland, March 16, 1285. King of Scotland; son of Alexander II, whom he succeeded in 1249. He aided Henry III of England, his father-in-law, in 1264, but opposed him on the question of the overlordship of Scotland. His army defeated the Norwegians in 1263, finally consolidating the islands near Scotland, including the Isle of Man, with Scotland. He maintained friendly relations with Norway, proposing his granddaughter Margaret, daughter of Eric of Norway, as Scottish heiress-presumptive.

Alexander I (of Serbia). [Also, Alexander Obrenović.] b. at Belgrade, Serbia, Aug. 14, 1876; assassinated there, June 11, 1903. King of Serbia (1889–1903), noted for his attempt to strengthen the position of the Obrenović dynasty at the expense of the national assembly; son of Milan I and Queen Natalie. On March 6, 1889, he was proclaimed ruler, under a regency, upon the abdication of his father. On April 13, 1893, he assumed personal control of affairs; he suspended (April 7, 1903) the liberal constitution and annuled a series of laws passed by the radical government. His marriage to a commoner added to his general unpopularity and on the night of June 10, 1903, he was assassinated, with Queen Draga, in the palace. He was the last ruler of the Obrenović dynasty and was succeeded by Peter Karageorgević, the choice of the military party.

Alexander I (of Yugoslavia). [Also, Alexander Karageorgevich.] b. at Cetinje, Montenegro, 1888; assassinated at Marseilles, France, Oct. 9, 1934. King of Yugoslavia (1921–34), who contributed greatly to the unification of the rival peoples of Serbia, Croatia and Slovenia; son of Peter I, and grandson of Alexander Karageorgević. He was educated at the Russian court at St. Petersburg, and at Geneva; he served (1914–19) as commander in chief of the Serbian army. When party feuds threatened national security, he established a personal dictatorship (1931) under an authoritarian constitution.

Alexander, Albert V. b. at Weston-super-Mare, England, 1885—. British politician, active in the coöperative movement. He was parliamentary secretary to the board of trade (1924); first lord of the Admiralty (1929–31, 1940–45, 1945–46); member of special cabinet delegation to India (1946); and minister of defense (1946 et seq.).

Alexander, Archibald. b. at Lexington, Va., April 17, 1772; d. at Princeton, N.J., Oct. 22, 1851. American Presbyterian minister. He was president (1796–1807) of Hampden Sydney College, Va. He was also the first professor (1812–51) at Princeton Theological Seminary.

Alexander, Barton Stone. b. in Kentucky, Sept. 4, 1819; d. at San Francisco, Dec. 15, 1878. American military engineer and officer in the Civil War. With General Barnard he shared the chief credit for the chain of forts which eventually protected Washington, D. C.

Alexander, Cecil Frances. [Maiden name, Humphreys.] b. in Ireland, 1818; d. at Londonderry, Ireland, 1895. Irish poet and writer of hymns. In 1850 she married Bishop William Alexander. She is the author of hymns including All Things Bright and Beautiful, Once in Royal David's City, and Jesus Calls Us o'er the Tumult, as well as a number of poems.

Alexander, Edmund B. b. at Haymarket, Va., Oct. 6, 1802; d. at Washington, D.C., Jan. 3, 1888. American officer. He served in the Mexican War, commanded the Utah expedition (1857–58), and was brevetted brigadier general on Oct. 18, 1865.

Alexander, Edward Porter. b. at Washington, Ga., May 26, 1835; d. at Savannah, Ga., April 28, 1910. American engineer, author, teacher, and Confederate soldier. He served as artillery commander under Longstreet at Gettysburg and elsewhere. He was president (1887–93) of the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company after serving (1885–87) as a government director of the Union Pacific. His writings include volumes on railroading, a book of verse, and numerous works on the Civil War, including the highly regarded critical work known as Military Memoirs of a Confederate (1907).

Alexander, Francis. b. at Killingly, Conn., 1800; d. (probably) at Florence, Italy, 1881. American painter and lithographer. After studying (1820 et seq.) under Alexander Robertson at New York, he painted portraits at Providence and Boston until 1831, when he left for Italy. His style after his return (1832) to the U.S. was less colorful, but brought him great popularity. His paintings include portraits of Daniel Webster, Benjamin R. Curtis, and Dickens. During his last years, which he spent at Florence, he did virtually no painting.

Alexander, Sir George. [Original name, George Samson.] b. at Reading, England, 1858; d. 1918. English actor. In 1881 he appeared with Sir Henry Irving. From 1891 to his death he was actor-manager at St. James's Theatre at London.

Alexander, Grover Cleveland. [Called "Old Pete."] b. Feb. 26, 1887; d. Nov. 4, 1950. American baseball player, pitcher (1911–30) successively for Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis in the National League. He is famed for 16 shutout games in 1916, and 90 in his entire career. In 1938 he was elected to baseball's Hall of Fame at Cooperstown, N.Y.

Alexander, Harold Rupert Leofric George. [Title, 1st Viscount Alexander of Tunis.] b. in Tyrone, Ireland, Dec. 10, 1891—. British field marshal; son of the 4th earl of Caledon; governor-general of Canada (1946–52). During World War I he was several times decorated for service in France; he later saw action on India's northwest frontier (1935). After commanding the first division (1938–40), he supervised the evacuation from Dunkerque (1940) and had charge of the Burma retreat (1942). As Middle East commander in chief (1942) he was in charge of the successful African campaign. He served as deputy commander in chief (1943) of Allied forces in the Mediterranean, with responsibility for the invasions of Sicily and Italy. In 1944 he was created field marshal and given the supreme Allied command in the Mediterranean. He later served (1944–46) as aide-de-camp general to King George VI. He became minister of defense in 1952.

Alexander, Hartley Burr. b. at Lincoln, Neb., April 9, 1873; d. July 27, 1939. American philosopher and university professor. Staff member of New International Encyclopedia (1903); philosophy professor at Nebraska (1908–27) and at Scripps College (1927 et seq.); president (1919) of the American Philosophical Association; author of God's Drum (1927), Pueblo Indian Painting (1931), God and Man's Destiny (1936), and others.

Alexander, James. b. in Scotland, 1691; d. at Albany, N.Y., April 2, 1756. American lawyer and politician, notable for his efforts on behalf of Peter Zenger. Descendant and heir of the Earls of Stirling (and father of William Alexander, the Revolutionary general), he came to America following the collapse of the Scottish uprising in 1715. His career as lawyer and public official in New York and New Jersey was marked by attacks on misuse of power, culminating in aid to Peter Zenger in the establishment (1733) of his New York Weekly Journal and his subsequent defense (1735) against a suit for criminal libel. The efforts of Alexander, Zenger, and others in this case represented the first great victory for freedom of the press in the American colonies, and set a precedent which tremendously influenced the course of subsequent U.S. law in such matters.

Alexander, Sir James Edward. b. in Scotland, 1803; d. 1885. British general and explorer. Conducted (1836–37) expedition into Namaqualand and Damaraland, Africa; instrumental in transfer to England (1877) of Cleopatra's Needle. Author of Travels through Russia and the Crimea (1830), Expedition of Discovery into the Interior of Africa (1838), and others.

Alexander, James Waddel. b. in Louisa County, Va., March 13, 1804; d. at Red Sweet Springs, Va., July 31, 1859. American Presbyterian clergyman; son of Archibald Alexander. He was professor of rhetoric and belles-lettres (1833–44) at Princeton College, and of ecclesiastical history and church government (1844–51) in Princeton Theological Seminary, and pastor (1851–59) of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Alexander, Jerome. b. at New York, Dec. 21, 1876—. American chemist, specialist in the chemistry of colloids. Author of Colloid Chemistry (1919), and numerous technical articles, as well as the chapter on colloid chemistry in Liddell's Handbook for Chemical Engineers (1920); translated (1909) Zsigmondy's Colloids and the Ultramicroscope.

Alexander, John Henry. b. at Annapolis, Md., June 26, 1812; d. March 2, 1867. American scientist, advocate of a standardized system of weights and measures. He was sent (1857) to Europe by the U.S. government on a mission dealing with unification of coinage. His Universal Dictionary of Weights and Measures, Ancient and Modern (1850) has been termed "one of the most complete . . . ever published."

Alexander, John White. b. at Allegheny, Pa., 1856; d. 1915. American painter, for many years connected with Harper's Magazine.

Alexander, Joshua Willis. b. at Cincinnati, Jan. 22, 1852; d. Feb. 27, 1936. American lawyer and government official. He was secretary of commerce (1919–21).

Alexander (al.eg.zan'dėr), Romance of. One of the most famous romances of the Middle Ages. Callisthenes, a companion of Alexander the Great, wrote an account of the Asiatic expedition of Alexander, but it is lost. His name, however, is attached to a fabulous account which is supposed to have been written in Alexandria in the early part of the 3rd century. There are three Latin translations of this pseudo-Callisthenes: one by Julius Valerius, before 340; the Itinerarium Alexandri; and the Historia de preliis, by Archpresbyter Leo. The later ones are based on these. It was translated into Syriac and Armenian in the 5th century. The Persians and Arabs made use of the myth, and in the 11th century Simeon Seth, keeper of the imperial wardrobe at the Byzantine court, translated it back from the Persian into the Greek. In the 11th century it entered into French literature as a troubadour poem; the earliest extant form of this is in fragments by Aubry or Alberic. Lamprecht, a priest, translated the French of Aubry, or Alberic, of Besançon, into German, and called it the Alexanderlied, in the 12th century. The Alexandreis of the Austrian Siegfried was written c1350. In the 15th century Alexander again appeared as the hero of prose romances in Germany. Alexander myths are to be found in many other of the old French poems, and he becomes a knightly conqueror surrounded by 12 paladins. The poems do not properly form a cycle, as they are quite independent of one another.

Alexander, Stephen. b. at Schenectady, N.Y., Sept. 1, 1806; d. June 25, 1883. American astronomer, professor (1840–77) in astronomy, mechanics, and mathematics at Princeton. The scientific findings of the Labrador party, headed by him to observe the solar eclipse of 1860, were published in the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey Report of that year. In 1862 he was chosen one of the 50 original members of the National Academy of Sciences.

Alexander, Sir William. [Title, Earl of Stirling.] b. c1567; d. at London, Sept. 12, 1640. Scottish poet and statesman, tutor to Prince Henry and adherent of King James I of England. He is the author of Monarchicke Tragedies (1603–07), Paraenesis to the Prince (1604), Doomesday, etc. (first part, 1614), and others. He received on Sept. 21, 1621, the grant of New Scotland (Nova Scotia and New Brunswick), which was transferred to De la Tour in 1630. In 1626 he was appointed secretary of state for Scotland.

Alexander, William. [Called Lord Stirling.] b. at New York, 1726; d. at Albany, N.Y., Jan. 15, 1783. American Revolutionary general. Although his claim of descent from the earls of Stirling was rejected (1762) by the House of Lords, he nevertheless assumed the title. An astronomer, he held political offices in New Jersey and was one of the governors of Kings College (now Columbia University). He was made brigadier general after the capture (1776) of a British transport at Sandy Hook; directed the building of Forts Lee and Washington; was captured after the battle of Long Island; and promoted to major general (1777) after the battle of Trenton. He fought at Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth, and took part in the exposure of the Conway Cabal and in the court of inquiry (1780) on John André.

Alexander, William. b. in Derry, Ireland, 1824; d. at Torquay, England, 1911. Irish Anglican prelate and poet. He was bishop of Derry (1867–93) and archbishop of Armagh (1893–1911). In 1892 he lectured in the U.S.

Alexander, William Dewitt. b. at Honolulu, April 2 1833; d. there, Feb. 22, 1913. American historian, natural scientist, and Hawaiian public official. He graduated (1855) from Yale and returned (1858) to Hawaii after teaching in the U.S. He served as professor of Greek and as president (1864–70) of Punahou School. In 1872 he was appointed surveyor general of the kingdom of Hawaii. He was a founder of the Hawaiian Historical Society, and a member of many other scientific and scholarly groups. The most important of his written works is probably his Brief History of the Hawaiian People (1891).

Alexander and Campaspe (kam.pas'pē). See Campaspe, Alexander and.

Alexander Archipelago. Group of islands off the W coast of SE Alaska, which includes Sitka, Prince of Wales, Admiralty, and other islands.

Alexanderbad (ä.lek.sän'dėr.bät). [Also, Alexandersbad (-dėrs.bät).] Village in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, district of Upper and Middle Franconia, situated in the Fichtelgebirge, ab. 21 mi. NE of Bayreuth: health resort. It has ferruginous thermal springs which are visited by people suffering from nervous and circulatory diseases. 873 (1946).

Alexander Balas (al.eg.zan'dėr bā'lạs). b. at Smyrna; killed in Arabia, 145 B.C. Usurper of the Syrian throne (150–145 B.C.). Of humble origin, he was the self-alleged son of Antiochus Epiphanes. He was the protégé of a coalition including Ptolemy Philometor of Egypt which seized the throne from the Selencid king Demetrius Soter.

Alexander Balus (bā'lus). Oratorio by George Frederick Handel, with words by Thomas Morell, written in 1747 and first performed at Covent Garden, London, on March 9, 1748.

Alexander City. [Former name, Youngville.] City in E Alabama, in Tallapoosa County, ab. 42 mi. NE of Montgomery: textile and knitting mills, and cotton gins. 6,430 (1950).

Alexander Column. Column erected at St. Petersburg in 1832 in honor of Alexander I of Russia. The polished shaft of red granite, 84 ft. high and 14 in diameter, was remarkable for years as the greatest modern monolith.

Alexander Cornelius (kôr.nē'li.us, -nēl'yus). [Called Alexander Polyhistor.] fl. 1st cent. B.C. Greek writer, a native either of Ephesus or Cotiaeum in Lesser Phrygia. He wrote a geographico-historical account in 42 books of nearly all the countries of the ancient world, and many other works, of which only the titles and fragments have been preserved.

Alexander I Island. [Former name, Alexander I Land.] Large island at the SW base of the Palmer Peninsula in Antarctica. Discovered in 1821 by Admiral Thaddeus von Bellingshausen, it was proven to be an island in 1940. Length, ab. 235 mi.; greatest width, 150 mi.

Alexander Jagellon (jạ.gel'ọn, yä.gel'ôn). b. in 1461; d. in 1506. King of Poland and grand duke of Lithuania; second son of Casimir IV of Poland. He succeeded (1492) to the grand duchy at the death of his father, and was elected (1501) king of Poland at the death of his brother.

Alexander John I (of Rumania). [Original name, Alexander John Cuza (or Cusa).] b. at Hush, Moldavia, March 20, 1820; d. at Heidelberg, Baden, May 15, 1873. Prince of Moldavia and Wallachia, 1859. After being arrested as a member of the unsuccessful revolution of Jassy (1848), he was made (1850) prefect of Galati. The Turks recognized him in 1861 as ruler of the united principalities, but he was dethroned in 1866.

Alexander Karageorgevich (kä.rạ.jôr'jẹ.vich). b. at Topola, Serbia, Oct. 11, 1806; d. at Temesvar, Hungary, May 2, 1885. Prince of Serbia (1842–58); son of the Serbian patriot Karageorge. He succeeded Prince Michael Obrenovich of Serbia, but lost the throne in 1858 to Prince Milosh Obrenovich (Michael's father). Alexander vacillated in his policies and allegiances; his allegiance to Austria caused his deposition. He made repeated attempts to regain the throne, and was accused of complicity in the murder (1868) of Prince Michael (who had succeeded his father in 1860) and imprisoned, but was soon pardoned.

Alexander Manette (ma.net'), Doctor. See Manette, Doctor Alexander.

Alexander Nevski (nef'ski, nyef'ski). b. at Vladimir, Russia, c1220; d. 1263. Russian national hero; patron of St. Petersburg. Prince of Novgorod (1238), he fought in defense of Novgorod and Pskov against Germans, Lithuanians, and Swedes, defeating the latter (1240) on the Neva River (whence his surname) and the Teutonic Knights (1242) on the ice of Lake Peipus. As grand duke of Kiev, Novgorod, and Vladimir (1252–63), he was a vassal of the Tartars, whose friendship toward Russia he fostered, securing a reduction in the tribute and abolishment of the military service formerly required by them of Russia. The Order of Alexander Nevski was established (1725) by Peter the Great.

Alexander of Aphrodisias (af.rō.diz'i.as). [Also: Alexander Aphrodisiensis; called "the Exegete" or "the Expositor."] b. at Aphrodisias, in Caria; fl. at Athens 200 A.D. Greek philosopher, notable as the foremost commentator on Aristotle. His commentaries are extensive and very valuable; many are still extant, and others are partly known through later commentaries or Arabic translations. Alexander tried to free the Aristotelian doctrine from Neoplatonic syncretism and Stoic tendencies.

Alexander of Hales (hālz). [Also: Alexander Halensis; called Doctor Irrefragabilis.] b. at Hales, Gloucestershire, c1175; d. 1245. English scholastic philosopher and theologian. He lectured (c1220) at Paris, and in 1222 joined the Franciscan order. He wrote Summae Universae Theologiae (printed, 1475), the first amalgamation of Augustinian Christian doctrine with the Aristotelian system and Arabian thought; this work was much used by Thomas Aquinas and others.

Alexander of the Hellenes. See Alexander I (of Greece).

Alexander of Tralles (tral'ēz). [Also, Alexander Trallianus (tral.i.ā'nus).] b. at Tralles, Lydia; fl. mid-6th century A.D. Greek medical writer. He is the author of De Lumbricis (printed at Venice, 1570), and others.

Alexander Severus (sē.vir'us), Marcus Aurelius. [Original name, Alexianus Bassianus.] b. at Arca Caesarea, Phoenicia, c208; d. near Mainz, Germany, 235. Roman emperor (222–235); son of Gessius Marcianus and Julia Mammaea, and cousin of the emperor Heliogabalus, who adopted him in 221 and whom he succeeded as emperor.

Alexander's Feast. Ode by John Dryden, written in 1697, in honor of Saint Cecilia's day.

Alexander's Feast. Musical setting by George Frederick Handel to the poem by John Dryden, completed in 1736 and first performed at Covent Garden, London, on Feb. 19, 1736.

Alexanderson (al.eg.zan'dėr.sọn), Ernst Frederik Werner. b. at Uppsala, Sweden, Jan. 25, 1878—. American electrical engineer, notable for his inventions in radio and television. He arrived in the U.S. in 1901 and entered (1902) the employ of the General Electric Company at Schenectady, N.Y., as a draftsman. He became a member (1904) of the engineering staff and has since been responsible for more than 200 patents. His high-frequency alternator, plus a magnetic amplifier and multiple tuned antenna, were important in the development of transoceanic radio communication. He developed the use of a high-power vacuum tube which was employed in all radio transmission, and also aided in the development of a selective receiver. He has also done important pioneering work in television, as well as developmental research in electric ship propulsion and railroad electrification.

Alexander's Wall (al.eg.zan'dėrz). See under Derbent.

Alexander the Great. [Also, Alexander III (of Macedonia).] b. at Pella, Macedonia, 356 B.C.; d. at Babylon, June 13, 323 B.C. Macedonian ruler, conqueror of the civilized world. Legend has it that he inherited his military ability from his father, Philip II of Macedonia, a rough mountain king of genius, while from Olympias, the Epirote princess who was his mother, came his mysticism and impetuousness. He was educated by Aristotle. He was a handsome man, whose temper was his greatest enemy; contrary to legend, he rarely drank. With Philip, he defeated (338) the armies of Greek city-states at Chaeronea. In 336 Philip was murdered, and Alexander became king of Macedonia and leader of the Greeks in war against the predatory Persian empire. Two years were spent pacifying tribes to his rear; rebellious Thebes was destroyed. His highly professional army, which was devoted to him, consisted of 30,000 heavy- and light-armed infantry and 5,000 cavalry, with a superior siege train, commissary, and intelligence service. In 334 he crossed to Asia, defeated the Persians at the Granicus River and the following year at Issus. Taking Tyre en route, he continued (332) to Egypt, where he built Alexandria, the first of 70 communities founded by him which became powerful forces for the Hellenization of the non-Greek world. With the eastern Mediterranean coasts now in his possession, he turned inland and at Gaugamela (at the battle sometimes called the Battle of Arbela) overwhelmed (331) the armies of Darius III. Alexander's march next carried him across Iran to India (326). When his men refused to follow him farther, he returned by way of the Indus Valley and Baluchistan to Babylon. Here, not yet 33 years of age, he died from fatigue and disease. Napoleon called him the greatest general in history. Alexander strongly believed in the fusion of races; both of his wives, Roxane and Barsine, were eastern princesses. His life altered the course of history, for he created a new world society based on a common Greek culture. He became after his death a legendary figure to medieval Europe and to the Orient of all periods.

Alexander the Paphlagonian (paf.lą.gō'ni.ąn). b. at Abonuteichos (Ionopolis), Paphlagonia, Asia Minor; fl. c100 A.D. Roman charlatan who set up a false oracle of Aesculapius and pretended Eleusinian mysteries with large financial success. He was exposed by Lucian, whose account of the incident has been preserved.

"Alexander the Peaceful." See Alexander II (of Scotland).

Alexandra (al.eg.zan'drą). See also Cassandra.

Alexandra. [Full prename, Alexandra Caroline Maria Charlotte Louisa Julia.] b. at Copenhagen, Dec. 1, 1844; d. 1925. Queen of England; daughter of Christian IX of Denmark and wife of Edward VII, king of England, whom she married on March 10, 1863. Her second son subsequently became King George V of England. "Alexandra Day" was instituted (1913) in her honor.

Alexandra. The 54th asteroid, discovered by H. Goldschmidt at Paris, Sept. 10, 1858.

Alexandra Fyodorovna (fyô'dọ.rọv.nạ). [Original prename, Victoria Alice (or Alix) Helena Louise Beatrice.] b. at Darmstadt, Germany, 1872; d. 1918. Empress of Russia; fourth daughter of Ludwig IV, Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, and Princess Alice, daughter of Queen Victoria. She married Nicholas II of Russia in 1894.

Alexandra Land. Name at one time given to a vast region of Australia, under the administration of South Australia, regarded as the same as the Northern Territory, or as that part of it which is included between lat. 16°–26° S. and long. 129°–138° E. The name is obsolete.

Alexandrapol (al.eg.zan'drą.pôl) or Alexandropol (-drō-). Former name of Leninakan.

Alexandre (ä.lek.sän'dėr), Aaron. b. at Hohenfeld, Bavaria, c1766; d. at London, Nov. 16, 1850. German chessplayer, author of Encyclopédie des échecs (1837).

Alexandre le Grand (ä.lek.sändr lę grän). Tragedy by Jean Baptiste Racine, produced in 1665. It was the cause of a serious quarrel between Molière and Racine, who both loved the same woman, an actress who played the part of Axiane.

Alexandretta (al"ig.zan.dret'ą). Former name of Hatay, also of Iskenderun.

Alexandretta, Gulf of. See Iskenderun, Gulf of.

Alexandrette (ä.lek.sän.dret). Former French name of Iskenderun.

Alexandri (ä.lek.sän'drē), Basile. See Alecsandri, Vasili.

Alexandria (al.eg.zan'dri.ą). [Arabic, Al-Iskandariyah, Iskanderiyeh.] Seaport in NE Africa, in Egypt, founded (332 B.C.) by Alexander the Great, from whom the city took its name; chief port and second city of Egypt; summer residence of the Egyptian court. It is situated at the NW extremity of the Nile delta on the strip of land which lies between the Mediterranean Sea and Lake Mareotis, ab. 133 mi. NW of Cairo. The modern city occupies what was anciently the island of Pharos, together with the isthmus now connecting it with the mainland where the ancient city stood. Ancient Alexandria was the capital of Egypt during the Ptolemaic period, and became an important seat of Greek culture and learning. In 30 B.C. it was annexed by Rome. It long ranked as the second city of the Roman empire, and continued as the chief commercial city under the Byzantine empire. It was an important center of Christianity, and the seat of a patriarchate. In 641 it was taken by the Moslems, and was entered by the French in 1798, who were defeated near here by the British in 1801. The present city was largely rebuilt under Mehemet Ali. It was bombarded by a British fleet of eight ironclad vessels under Sir Frederick Seymour, July 11, 1882, and was taken by the British on July 12. It is the chief seaport in N Africa and until February, 1947, was the main British naval base in the Middle East. 928,237 (1947).

Alexandria. City in C Indiana, in Madison County, on Pipe Creek, ab. 11 mi. N of Anderson: manufactures rock-wool insulation. 5,147 (1950).

Alexandria. City in C Louisiana, parish seat of Rapides Parish, on the Red River ab. 100 mi. NW of Baton Rouge, in the geographic center of the state: trading center for cotton, sugar cane, and fish. It was invaded (1864) by Union forces under General Nathaniel P. Banks, when the Red River was dammed up at this point to permit passage of a Union squadron. 34,913 (1950).

Alexandria. City in W Minnesota, county seat of Douglas County, ab. 125 mi. NW of St. Paul: rail center for a rich agricultural area; fishing and golf resort. The noted "Kensington Runestone" was found (1898) in the vicinity. 6,319 (1950).

Alexandria. Town in S Rumania, province of Muntenia, ab. 50 mi. SW of Bucharest, on the railroad to Zimnicea: wheat and mill center. It contains six Orthodox churches. 17,840 (1948).

Alexandria. Small manufacturing town comprising three electoral districts of the Vale of Leven District, in C Scotland, in Dunbartonshire, situated on the river Leven, ab. 3 mi. N of Dumbarton, ab. 419 mi. N of London by rail. Pop. of electoral districts, 5,818 (1931).

Alexandria. City in N Virginia, in Arlington (formerly Alexandria) County, on the Potomac River, ab. 7 mi. S of Washington, D.C. It has manufactures of fertilizer, refrigerator cars, chemicals, iron, shirts, bricks, pottery, and automobile assembly plants, but is now best known as a residential suburb of Washington. It was entered by Federal troops during the Civil War on May 24, 1861. It was incorporated in 1779; from 1789 to 1846, it was part of the District of Columbia. 61,787 (1950).

Alexandria Arachosiae (ar.ą.kō'si.ē). Ancient name of Kandahar, city.

Alexandria Arion (ār'i.ọn, ą.rī'ọn). See Herat, city.

Alexandria Bay. Village in N New York, in Jefferson County, on the St. Lawrence River, ab. 32 mi. SW of Ogdensburg: summer resort community for the Thousand Islands region. 1,688 (1950).

Alexandria Conference. In U.S. history, a meeting (March 28, 1785) between Virginia and Maryland for the purpose of dealing with commerce and navigation on the Pocomoke and Potomac rivers and Chesapeake Bay. Although Alexandria, Va., had been designated as the meeting place, the conference actually conducted its business at Mount Vernon, where George Washington acted as its host. The conference proposed a convention of all the states for the purpose of formulating a body of uniform rules governing commercial relations among the states. The resulting Annapolis Convention was the genesis of the Federal Convention.

Alexandria Eschata (es.kā'tą). Ancient name of Leninabad.

Alexandrian Codex (al.eg.zan'dri.an). [Latin, Codex Alexandrinus.] Important manuscript of the Scriptures now in the British Museum, sent to Charles I of England by the Patriarch of Constantinople. It is written in Greek uncials on parchment, and contains the Septuagint version of the Old Testament complete, except parts of the Psalms, and almost all the New Testament. It has been assigned to the 5th century.

Alexandria Troas (al.eg.zan'dri.ą trō'as). [Also, Troas.] Ancient seaport on the NW coast of Turkey, near the island of Tenedos (Bozcaada), ab. 10 mi. S of Troy. It contains archaeologically important ruins of a building that contained a Roman bath.

Alexandrina (al.eg.zan.drē'ną), Lake. [Also, Lake Victoria.] Expansion of the Murray River, Australia, at its mouth, in South Australia state.

Alexandrine War (al.eg.zan'drin, -drēn). A war (48–47 B.C.) between Julius Caesar and the guardians of Ptolemy (elder brother of Cleopatra), in Egypt. It resulted in favor of Caesar, who placed Cleopatra and her younger brother (the elder having died) on the Egyptian throne as joint rulers.

Alexandroúpolis (ä''le.ksän.drö'pô.lēs). [Turkish, Dede Agach.] Town in NE Greece, the capital of the nomos (department) of Evros, situated on the NE coast of the Aegean Sea, 19 mi. W of the Turkish border: seaport. 17,081 (1940).

Alexandrov or Alexandroff (ä.lik.sän'drǫf). See Aleksandrov.

Alexas (ą.lek'sąs). Minor character in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, an attendant of Cleopatra.

Alexeief (ä.lik.sā'yif), Eugenii Ivanovitch. See Alekseyev, Yevgeni Ivanovich.

Alexianus Bassianus (ą.lek.si.ā'nus bas.i.ā'nus). Original name of Alexander Severus, Marcus Aurelius.

Alexin (ä.lyôk'sin). See Aleksin.

Alexinatz (ä.lek'si.näts). German name of Aleksinac.

Alexis (ą.lek'sis). b. at Thurii, Magna Graecia, Italy, fl. 4th and 3rd centuries B.C. Greek dramatist at Athens, a master of the Middle Comedy. A prolific writer, he was the author of about 245 plays, fragments of which are extant.

Alexis (ä.lek.sē), Paul. b. at Aix-en-Provence, France, June 10, 1847; d. at Triel, France, July 29, 1901. French playwright, novelist, essayist, and faithful collaborator of his lifelong friend, Émile Zola, in the development of French naturalism. Although his novels about the demimonde of Paris, including Le Collage (1883), Madame Meuriot (1891), and Vallotra (1901) are still read, he is best remembered for his famous telegram to Zola (when the latter's novel, La Terre, was attacked by the Paris press): "Naturalism not dead, letter follows."

Alexis, Pierre Nord. See Nord Alexis, Pierre.

Alexis (ä.lek'sis), Wilibald. [Pseudonym of Georg Wilhelm Heinrich Häring.] b. at Breslau, in Silesia, June 29, 1798; d. at Arnstadt, in Thuringia, Dec. 16, 1871. German novelist. He introduced to Germany historical fiction in the style of Sir Walter Scott. After establishing his reputation with Walladmor (1823) and Schloss Avalon (1827), which purported to be actually translations of Scott, he wrote several novels dealing with various periods of Brandenburg's history, running from the 14th to the 19th century.

Alexis Mikhailovich (ą.lek'sis mē.HĪ'lǫ.vich). See Aleksey Mikhailovich.

Alexis Petrovich (pi.trô'vich). See Aleksey Petrovich.

Alexius (ą.lek'si.us), Saint. fl. early 5th century. Holy man of the Byzantine empire, believed by some to have been a Roman nobleman who fled to Edessa on the night before his marriage, there to devote his life to asceticism.

Alexius V. [Also, Alexios V; called Dukas Murtzuphlos.] d. 1204. Byzantine emperor. He usurped the throne of Alexius IV Angelus in 1204, but was driven from Constantinople by members of the Fourth Crusade who had resolved on the partition of the empire.

Alexius III Angelus (an'ję.lus). [Also, Alexios III Angelos.] d. 1210. Byzantine emperor from 1195 to 1203. He usurped the throne of his brother Isaac II, but was deposed by an army of Crusaders who besieged Constantinople and reinstated Isaac II with his son Alexius IV Angelus as colleague. Alexius III died in exile.

Alexius IV Angelus. [Also, Alexios IV Angelos.] d. 1204. Byzantine emperor in 1203 and 1204; son of Isaac II Angelus. He was put to death by Alexius V after a reign of six months.

Alexius I Comnenus (kom.nē'nus). [Also, Alexios I Komnenos.] b. at Constantinople, 1048; d. 1118. Byzantine emperor from 1081 to 1118; nephew of Isaac Comnenus. With the aid of the militia he supplanted the emperor Nicephorus III. He defended the empire against the Turks, the Normans, and others. In his reign occurred the First Crusade. His life, the Alexiad, was written by his daughter Anna Comnena.

Alexius II Comnenus. [Also, Alexios II Komnenos.] b. c1168; d. 1183. Byzantine emperor from 1180 to 1183; son of Manuel I, whom he succeeded. He was very unpopular with his subjects, and was deposed and strangled by Andronicus I.

Alexius I Comnenus (of Trebizond). [Also, Alexios Komnenos; called the "Grand Comnenus."] d. 1222. Emperor of Trebizond from 1204 to 1222; grandson of the Byzantine emperor Andronicus I. At the capture of Constantinople by the Crusaders in 1204 he made himself master of Trebizond, later raising it from the position of a province of the Byzantine Empire to that of an independent empire. He also attempted, but failed in, an attack on Theodore I of Nicea.

Alexius II Comnenus (of Trebizond). [Also, Alexios II Komnenos.] d. 1330. Emperor of Trebizond from 1297 to 1330; son of Joannes II, whom he succeeded.

Alexius III Comnenus (of Trebizond). [Also, Alexios III Komnenos.] d. 1390. Emperor of Trebizond from 1349 to 1390; son of Basilius by Irene of Trebizond.

Alexius IV Comnenus (of Trebizond). [Also, Alexios IV Komnenos.] b. ?; d. 1446. Emperor of Trebizond from 1417 to 1446; son of Manuel III and Eudocia of Georgia.

Aleyn (ą.lān'). One of the Cambridge students (clerks of Cantebregge) in Chaucer's Reeve's Tale.

Aleyn. [Also: Alain, Alain le Gros.] In the legendry of the Grail, the twelfth son of Bron who was the brother-in-law of Joseph of Arimathea. Aleyn was selected by Joseph as the keeper of the Holy Grail.

Aleyn (al'in), Charles. d. 1640. Minor English poet, author of The Battailes of Crescey and Poictiers (1631).

Alfadir (äl'fä''dir). [Icelandic, Alfadhir (-ᵺēr).] In Old Norse mythology, one of the many appellations of Odin as the supreme god of all mankind.

Al Falluja (äl fäl.lö'ją). Town in C Iraq, on the Euphrates River, ab. 35 mi. W of Baghdad: an important crossing, since ancient times, on the road between Syria and Persia.

Alfana (äl.fä'nä). Horse of Gradasso in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

Alfano (äl.fä'nō), Franco. b. near Naples, Italy, March 8, 1877—. Italian composer. His opera, Madonna Imperia, was performed (1928) at the Metropolitan, but received an indifferent reception. He completed Puccini's Turandot after that composer's death (1924). He composed numerous other operas, piano pieces, and one symphony.

Alfaro (äl.fä'rō), Eloy. b. at Montecristi, Ecuador, 1864; killed by a Quito mob, in January, 1912. Ecuadorian revolutionist and political leader, president of Ecuador (1895–1901; 1907–11). He led the revolution against President Luis Cordero, declaring himself (1895) president. Though an avowed anti-clerical, he was moderate in his handling of church and state separation, although the law of patronage (enacted 1899) gave the civil authority some control over the church. Having left office in 1901, he returned to power after deposing (1906) Lisardo García. During his second administration a new constitution (lasting 22 years) was put into effect, the authority of the Church was abridged, and the Quito-Guayaquil railway was completed (1908).

Alfaro, Francisco de. b. at Seville, Spain, c1565; d. at Madrid, c1650. Spanish lawyer. He was successively fiscal of the Audience of Panama (1594), member of the Audience of Lima (c1601), president of the Audience of Charcas (1632), and member of the Council of the Indies.

Alfaro, Ricardo Joaquín. b. at Panama City, Panama, Aug. 20, 1882—. Panamanian lawyer, politician, and diplomat. Foreign minister and head of the cabinet (1918–22); minister to the U.S. (1922–30; 1933–36); vice-president (1928–30) and president (1931–32) of Panama; member of the Hague Permanent Court of Arbitration (1929–41); delegate to the San Francisco Conference (1945); foreign minister (1945 et seq.).

Alfeld (äl'felt). Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated on the Leine River, ab. 28 mi. S of Hanover: metallurgical, wooden-ware, paper, shoe, and ceramics industries. The Nikolai Church is in the Gothic style; the town hall (Rathaus), built in 1585, is in the early Renaissance style. Both buildings were undamaged in World War II. The population is predominantly Protestant. 13,323 (1950).

Alfen aan den Rijn (äl'fən än dən rīn). [Also, Alphen aan den Rijn.] Town in the W Netherlands, in the province of South Holland, ab. 19 mi. NE of Rotterdam: agricultural trade center; metallurgical and construction industries; large printing establishment. 18,941 (1939).

Alfeta (al'fe.tä). The name given in the Almagest and Alphonsine tables to the second-magnitude star α Coronae Borealis. The star is also widely known as Alphecca or Gemma.

Alfheim (älf'hīm). [Old Norse, Alfheimr (-hām.ėr).] In Old Norse mythology, the abode of the light elves. It was conceived to be near the sacred well of the Norns, at the foot of the ash Yggdrasil.

Alfieri (äl.fyā'rē), Cesare. [Title, Marchese di Sostegno.] b. at Turin, Italy, Aug. 13, 1796; d. at Florence, Italy, April 17, 1869. Piedmontese politician and Italian nationalist, premier for a short time in 1848.

Alfieri, Conte Vittorio. b. at Asti, Piedmont, Italy, Jan. 16, 1749; d. at Florence, Italy, Oct. 10, 1803. Italian tragic dramatist and satirist, whose works had a strong influence on Italian nationalism. Heir to a large fortune, he wandered (1767–74) over Europe, passing through various adventures and amours before settling for a time at Turin. The success of his first play, Cleopatra (1775), began his career, which he pursued at Florence; there he fell in love (1777) with the Countess of Albany, with whom he lived (1784–1803) in Alsace, Paris, and Florence. His initial enthusiasm for the French Revolution was turned to disgust by its excesses, and in 1799 he published one of his best-known works, the Misogallo, a bitter diatribe against France. He was the author also of some 19 tragedies, including Saul (1782), Antigone (1783), Sophonisba (1788), Maria Stuart (1804), Merope, and Myrrha; six comedies; five odes (1776–83) on American independence; prose works including an autobiography (1804) and Del principe e delle lettere (1801); and others.

Alfinger (äl'fing.ėr), Ambrosio de. d. 1532. German soldier, appointed (1528) agent of the mercantile house of the Welsers (of Augsburg), which held Venezuela as a grant from the Spanish throne on condition of completing the conquest of the country for Castile and colonizing it.

Alföld (ôl'fėld). Name given to the great central plain of Hungary.

Alfonsine (äl.fôn'sē.nā). Town and commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Emilia-Romagna, in the province of Ravenna, situated in the midst of a system of canals near the Po di Primaro River, between Ravenna and Ferrara. It is the center of an agricultural district producing grain, vegetables, hemp, and sugar beets, and has small industries. Pop. of commune, 11,889 (1936); of town, 4,138 (1936).

Alfonso I (of Aragon) (al.fon'sō). See Alfonso I (of Aragon and Navarre).

Alfonso II (of Aragon). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo.] b. 1152; d. 1196. King of Aragon (1162–96); son of Raymondo, count of Barcelona, and Petronilla, daughter of Ramiro II of Aragon. He is especially noted as a patron of Provençal poetry.

Alfonso III (of Aragon). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Magnificent."] b. 1265; d. June 18, 1291. King of Aragon (1285–91); son of Pedro III.

Alfonso IV (of Aragon). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo: called "Alfonso the Good."] b. 1299; d. 1336. King of Aragon (1327–36); son of James II of Aragon. His entire reign was occupied by a war with the Genoese over the possession of Corsica and Sardinia.

Alfonso V (of Aragon). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Magnanimous;" additional title, Alfonso I (of Sicily and Sardinia and of Naples).] b. c1385; d. at Naples, Italy, June 27, 1458. King of Aragon and, as Alfonso I, king of Sicily and Sardinia and of Naples. He was the son of Ferdinand I of Aragon (Ferdinand the Just), whom he succeeded in 1416 as king of Aragon and of Sicily and Sardinia. In 1420 he was adopted as heir and prospective successor by Joanna I of Naples, but was disinherited in 1423 in favor of Louis of Anjou. He captured Naples in 1442, seven years after the death of Joanna, and enforced his claim to the succession. He was a patron of learning and was considered to be a model of chivalric virtues.

Alfonso I (of Aragon and Navarre). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Battler."] d. 1134. King of Aragon and Navarre (1104–34); father of Alfonso VII of León and Castile. In 1109 he married Urraca, daughter and heiress of Alfonso VI of León and Castile. He conquered Saragossa (1118) and Calatayud (1120) from the Moors.

Alfonso I (of Asturias). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Great."] b. c693; d. at Cangas, Spain, 757. King of Asturias (739–757), famous for his zeal in erecting and endowing monasteries and churches.

Alfonso II (of Asturias). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Chaste."] d. at Oviedo, Spain, 842. King of Asturias (791–842). He defeated Mohammed, the Moorish governor of Merida, in 830.

Alfonso III (of Asturias). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Great."] b. 848; d. 912. King of Asturias and (by conquest) León (866–910); eldest son of Ordoño I of Asturias and León. His reign was filled with internal struggles and external conflicts, especially with the Moors, over whom he was almost uniformly victorious. His successes extended his dominions from the Duero (Douro) River to the Guadiana River. In 910 he abdicated in favor of his son Garcia on account of civil wars raised by his sons.

Alfonso I (of Castile). See Alfonso VI (of León and Castile).

Alfonso II (of Castile). See Alfonso VII (of León and Castile).

Alfonso III (of Castile). See Alfonso VIII (of León and Castile).

Alfonso I (of Este). [Also, Alphonso.] b. 1476; d. Oct. 31, 1534. Duke of Ferrara (1505–34). He commanded papal troops in the war of the League of Cambrai in 1509, and fought against Pope Julius II at Ravenna in 1512. In 1501 he married Lucretia Borgia.

Alfonso I (of León and Castile). See Alfonso I (of Asturias).

Alfonso II (of León and Castile). See Alfonso II (of Asturias).

Alfonso III (of León and Castile). See Alfonso III (of Asturias).

Alfonso IV (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Monk."] d. c933. King of León (c924–927); eldest son of Ordoño II of Asturias and León. He abdicated, on the death of his wife, in favor of his brother Ramiro, and retired to a cloister. He was taken prisoner at León in an attempt to regain the throne, was blinded, and was thereafter confined until his death in the monastery of Saint Julian.

Alfonso V (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Noble."] b. c994; d. 1027. King of León and Castile (999–1027); son of Bermudo II, whom he succeeded. He recaptured León, which had been lost during his minority, and was killed at the siege of what is now Viseu, Portugal.

Alfonso VI (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Valiant"; additional title, Alfonso I (of Castile).] b. 1030; d. 1109. King of León and Castile; son of Ferdinand the Great, whom he succeeded in León in 1065. He succeeded his brother Sancho in Castile in 1072. From 1068 until 1072, when Sancho died, the brothers were at war, and in 1071 Alfonso was defeated and taken prisoner. In 1085 he captured Toledo from the Moors but was himself defeated near Zallaka by the Almoravid leader, ibn-Tashfin, in 1086. His reign witnessed the exploits of the Cid.

Alfonso VII (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; additional title, Alfonso II (of Castile).] b. c1106; d. in August, 1157. King of León and, as Alfonso II, king of Castile (1126–57). He extended the frontiers of Castile from the Tagus (Tajo) River to the Sierra Morena Mountains, and proclaimed himself emperor of Spain in 1135.

Alfonso VIII (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Noble" and "Alfonso the Good"; additional title, Alfonso III (of Castile).] b. 1155; d. 1214. King of Castile (1158–1214); son of Sancho III. He was defeated by the Moors at Alarcos in 1195, and in alliance with Aragón and Navarre defeated the Moors at Las Navas de Tolosa in 1212. He established, at Palencia, the first Spanish university.

Alfonso IX (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo.] d. 1230. King of León (1188–1230); son of Ferdinand II of León and Castile. He gained a brilliant victory over Mohammed ibn-Hud at Mérida in 1230. He was married first to Theresa, daughter of Sancho I of Portugal, and later to Berengaria, daughter of the king of Castile. Both marriages were dissolved by the Pope as being within the degree of affinity proscribed by the canon law.

Alfonso X (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Wise" and "Alfonso the Astronomer."] b. in Burgos, Spain, Nov. 23, 1221; d. at Seville, Spain, April 4, 1284. King of León and Castile (1252–82); son of Ferdinand III of León and Castile. He laid claim to the duchy of Swabia, and twice was a candidate for the imperial crown; the first time he was defeated by Richard of Cornwall, and the second by Rudolf I of Hapsburg. From 1261 to 1266 he waged war with the Moors. He was dethroned by his son Sancho in 1282. Alfonso is celebrated as the author of the code Las Siete Partidas, the basis of Spanish jurisprudence, and for the Alphonsine tables, a set of astronomical observations compiled at his command.

Alfonso XI (of León and Castile). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo; called "Alfonso the Avenger."] d. March 26, 1350. King of León and Castile (1312–50), son of Ferdinand IV. He defeated the Moors of Morocco and Granada at the Salado River (Rio Salado) (Oct. 29, 1340); in 1342 he laid successful siege to Algeciras. He was noted for his severity in quelling civil disorder.

Alfonso XII (of León and Castile). See Alfonso XII (of Spain).

Alfonso XIII (of León and Castile). See Alfonso XIII (of Spain).

Alfonso II (of Naples). [Also, Alphonso.] b. 1448; d. Nov. 19, 1495. King of Naples (1494–95); eldest son of Ferdinand I of Naples and Isabella. He defeated the Florentines at Poggio (1479) and the Turks at Otranto (1481); disliked by his subjects, he abdicated (Jan. 23, 1495) in favor of his son, Ferdinand II, when Charles VIII of France threatened Naples.

Alfonso (of Poitou). [French, Alphonse.] d. 1271. Count of Poitou; brother of Louis IX of France, and ruler of Poitou and Toulouse.

Alfonso I (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso.] b. c1110; d. Dec. 6, 1185. First king of Portugal; son of Henry of Burgundy, count of Portugal, and Teresa of Castile. On his father's death in 1112 he became, under his mother's tutelage, count of Portugal, and was declared sole ruler in 1128. In that year he made successful war upon his mother, who refused to yield up the government, and also warred against her ally, Alfonso VIII of León and Castile, from whom he wrested the independence of Portugal. He was proclaimed king by his soldiers, probably after the victory over the Moors at Ourique, on July 26, 1139; took Santarem from the Moors in 1146; captured Lisbon in 1147; and was taken captive near Badajoz in 1167 by the Leonese and made to pay a heavy ransom (the surrender of all his conquests in Galicia).

Alfonso II (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso; called "Alfonso the Fat."] b. April 23, 1185; d. March 25, 1223. King of Portugal (1211–23). He defeated the Moors at Alcácer do Sal, Portugal, in 1217. Pope Honorius III excommunicated him as a result of Alfonso's rulings against the Church.

Alfonso III (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso.] b. May 5, 1210; d. Feb. 16, 1279. King of Portugal (1248–79) and Count of Boulogne. Early in his reign Algarve was incorporated in Portugal. Alfonso encouraged financial reforms and commercial progress, and promoted French culture in his domain.

Alfonso IV (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso; called: "Alfonso the Brave," "Alfonso the Fierce."] b. at Coimbra, Portugal, Feb. 8, 1290; d. May 28, 1357. King of Portugal (1325–57). He consented to the murder of Inés de Castro, secretly married to his son Pedro, who, in consequence, headed a revolt against his father.

Alfonso V (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso; called "Alfonso the African."] b. at Cintra (now Sintra), Portugal, Jan. 15, 1432; d. there, Aug. 28, 1481. King of Portugal (1438–81); son of King Duarte (Edward) of Portugal. He defeated the Moors in Africa in 1458 and 1471, and was defeated at Toto in 1476 by Ferdinand the Catholic. A civil war resulted from the conflict between Alfonso and his uncle, Dom Pedro; the latter assumed the regency while Alfonso was still under age, and was made to relinquish it only by force. His marriage to Juana la Beltraneja of Castile led Alfonso to attempt without success the annexation of Castile to his throne.

Alfonso VI (of Portugal). [Also: Affonso, Alphonso.] b. 1643; d. Sept. 12, 1683. King of Portugal; second son of John IV. He succeeded to the throne in 1656 and was deposed, in 1667, by his younger brother, Pedro II of Portugal. Alfonso was driven into exile.

Alfonso I (of Sicily and Sardinia and of Naples). See Alfonso V (of Aragon).

Alfonso XII (of Spain). [Also: Alphonso, Alonzo.] b. at Madrid, Nov. 28, 1857; d. at Madrid, Nov. 26, 1885 King of Spain (1874–85). The son of Isabella II, he was proclaimed king of Spain in December, 1874. He landed in Spain (January, 1875), and suppressed the Carlist rebellion in 1876. He was respected and liked for the benevolence and justice of his reign.

Alfonso XIII (of Spain). [Also: Alphonso, Alonso; full prename, León Fernando María Isídro Pascual António.] b. at Madrid, 1886; d. at Rome, 1941. King of Spain (1886–1931). Posthumous son of Alfonso XII by his second wife, Maria Christina of Austria, he was proclaimed king under the regency of his mother on the day of his birth. On May 17, 1902, he took over the government and in 1906 married Eugenia Victoria of Battenberg. During the regency of his mother Spain had lost the Philippines and Cuba, and Spanish policy in Morocco had remained unsuccessful and costly, leading to riots in Madrid and Barcelona in 1909 and 1911. Beset by problems in the wake of World War I (in which Spain stayed neutral) and suffering repeated setbacks in Morocco through the activities of Abd-el-Krim, the king sanctioned the establishment of a dictatorship under Primo de Rivera in 1923. At the fall of the dictatorship in 1930 the king was forced to abdicate and went into exile with his family. In 1941, just before his death, General Franco restored Alfonso's civil rights, and he was buried in Spain.

"Alfonso the African." See Alfonso V (of Portugal).

"Alfonso the Astronomer." See Alfonso X (of León and Castile).

"Alfonso the Avenger." See Alfonso XI (of León and Castile).

"Alfonso the Battler." See Alfonso I (of Aragon and Navarre).

"Alfonso the Brave." See Alfonso IV (of Portugal).

"Alfonso the Chaste." See Alfonso II (of Asturias).

"Alfonso the Fat." See Alfonso II (of Portugal).

"Alfonso the Fierce." See Alfonso IV (of Portugal).

"Alfonso the Good." See Alfonso IV (or Aragon); also Alfonso VIII (of León and Castile).

"Alfonso the Great." See Alfonso I (of Asturias) and Alfonso III (of Asturias).

"Alfonso the Magnanimous." See Alfonso V (of Aragon).

"Alfonso the Magnificent." See Alfonso III (of Aragon).

"Alfonso the Monk." See Alfonso IV (of León and Castile).
"Alfonso the Noble." See Alfonso V (of León and Castile); also Alfonso VIII (of León and Castile).
"Alfonso the Valiant." See Alfonso VI (of León and Castile).
"Alfonso the Wise." See Alfonso X (of León and Castile).
Alfonso und Estrella (äl.fōn'sō únt es.trel'ä). Opera in three acts by Franz Schubert, with a libretto by F. von Schober, first performed at Weimar, Germany, on June 24, 1854.
Alfonso y Castro (äl.fôn'sō ē käs'trō). See Castro, Alfonso y.
Alford (ôl'fȯrd), Henry. b. at London, 1810; d. at Canterbury, England, 1871. English Biblical scholar. Graduate (1832) and fellow (1834) of Trinity College, Cambridge; dean of Canterbury (1857–71). He was the first editor (1866–70) of the Contemporary Review. His publications include an important critical edition of the Greek Testament (1849–61), A Plea for the Queen's English (1866), New Testament for English Readers (1867), poems, hymns, and others.
Alford, Michael. [Original surname, Griffith.] b. at London, 1587; d. at St. Omer, 1652. English Jesuit, active in Great Britain during the period of 17th-century anti-Catholic persecution. He is the author of various works on ecclesiastical history.
Alfortville (äl.fôr.vēl). Town in N France, in the department of Seine, situated at the confluence of the Seine and Marne rivers, SE of Paris, of which it is a suburb. It is the seat of a national veterinary school established in 1766. Pop. 27,940 (1946).
Alfred (al'fred). [Also: Ælfred; called Alfred the Great.] b. at Wantage, in Berkshire, England, 849; d. Oct. 28, 899. King of England (871–899); youngest son of Ethelwulf, king of the West Saxons, and his wife Osburh (daughter of Oslac, Ethelwulf's cup-bearer), and brother of Ethelbald, Ethelbert, and Ethelred, the last of whom he succeeded. He fought against the Danes in the defensive campaign of 871, serving under his brother Ethelred at Ashdown, Basing, and Merton, and commanded as king at Wilton. In 878 he withdrew before the Danes to Athelney, but later obtained a decisive victory over them at Ethandun. By the treaty of Wedmore, which followed, the Danish Guthrum consented to receive baptism and to retire north of Watling Street. Alfred fortified London in 886, and carried on a defensive war (892–896) with the Danes, which ended in the withdrawal of the invaders, and in which, by the aid of ships of improved model, the English for the first time gained a decisive naval advantage over the Vikings. His success against the Danes was due largely to his reform of the national fyrd or militia, by which half the force of each shire was always ready for military service. His administration was also marked by judicial and educational reforms. He compiled a code of laws, rebuilt the schools and monasteries, and invited scholars to his court. Himself a man of learning, he translated into English the Epitome of Universal History of Paulus Orosius, the Consolations of Philosophy of Boethius, and the Pastoral Rule of Gregory the Great; and had translations made of the Dialogues of Gregory the Great and the Ecclesiastical History of Bede. The popular accounts of his life abound in legends which are devoid of historical foundation.
Alfred, Prince. [Full prename, Alfred Ernest Albert; titles: Duke of Edinburgh, Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.] b. Aug. 6, 1844; d. July 30, 1900. Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (1893 et seq.); second son of Queen Victoria. He was elected king of Greece in 1862, but declined the offer. He married the Grand Duchess Maria of Russia.
Alfred Club. Club organized at London in 1808.
Alfred Jingle (jing'gl). See Jingle, Alfred.
Alfred of Beverley (bev'ėr.li). [Also: Alured of Beverley; Latin, Alredus (or Aluredus) Beverlacensis.] fl. in the middle of the 12th century. English chronicler.
Alfred the Great. See also Alfred.
Alfred the Great. Historical play by J. Sheridan Knowles, produced in 1831.
Alfreton (ôl'frę.tọn). Urban district and market town in C England, in Derbyshire, ab. 13 mi. NE of Derby, ab. 136 mi. NW of London by rail. There are five townships contained within the civil parish. 23,388 (1951).
Alfvén (äl.vān'), Hugo. b. at Stockholm, Sweden, May 1, 1872—. Swedish composer and violinist. Music director (1910 et seq.) at Upsala University; composer of three symphonies, two symphonic poems, as well as numerous choral and short orchestral pieces.
Algardi (äl.gär'dē), Alessandro. b. at Bologna, Italy, 1602; d. at Rome, June 10, 1654. Italian sculptor and architect. A student of Lodovico Carracci, he collaborated with Borromini on the decoration of St. Peter's Church.
Algarotti (äl.gä.rôt'tē), Conte Francesco. b. at Venice, Italy, Dec. 11, 1712; d. at Pisa, May 3, 1764. Italian littérateur and art connoisseur, a friend of Voltaire and Frederick the Great.
Algarve (äl.gär'vę). [Arabic, Al-Gharb.] Southernmost province of Portugal, bounded by the province of Baixo Alentejo on the N, by Spain, from which it is separated by the Guadiana River, on the E, and by the Atlantic Ocean on the S and W. It forms the district of Faro, with the town of Faro as capital. The province is divided into a mountainous northern belt, a densely populated and fertile southern belt growing wine, figs, olives, bananas, and oranges, and a partly sandy and swampy, partly rocky, coastal area. Shipping and fishing are the chief occupations on the coast. Algarve originally also comprised that part of the Moroccan coast immediately to the southeast, and the neighboring Spanish districts, and was a stronghold of the Islamic Moors in the early Middle Ages; its name is derived from the Arabic al-gharb. It was conquered (1212–51) by the Christians. Portuguese voyages of discovery started from here, chiefly from the ports of Lagos and Sagres. Capital, Faro; area, 1,958 sq. mi.; pop. 317,628 (1940).
Algäu (äl'goi). [Also, Allgäu.] Region in the SW part of Bavaria and the neighboring portions of Württemberg-Hohenzollern, Germany, and the Austrian land of Vorarlberg; the larger part of it is in the Bavarian government district of Swabia. It is rich in pasture land, and is the chief center of the German dairy industry.
Algäu Alps. [Also: Allgäu Alps; German, Algäuer Alpen (äl'goi.ėr äl'pẹn).] Mountain group in Algäu (N Tirol, Austria, and SW Bavaria, Germany). Its highest point is the Parseyer Spitz (ab. 9,960 ft.).
Algazel (äl.gä.zel'). See Gazali, Abu Hamid Mohammed al-.
Algebar (al'je.bär). 1. An Arabic and poetical name of the constellation Orion. 2. Name occasionally used to designate Rigel (β Orionis), the brightest star in that constellation.
Algeciras (al.jẹ.sir'ạs; Spanish, äl.hā.thē'räs). [Arabic, Al-Djesirat-al-hadra, Al-Jazira or Al-Jezira, meaning "the island" or "peninsula"; Latin, Portus Albus.] Commune in S Spain, in the province of Cádiz, on the W shore of the Bay of Algeciras, ab. 6 mi. W of Gibraltar: seaport and railroad terminal; fisheries; exports of wine, liquor, cork, leather, and stone. There is a castle and an aqueduct built by the Moors; the Church of Santa María della Palma dates from the 18th century. The city was founded by the Carthaginians, and later occupied by the Romans. The Moslem invaders of Spain landed on the Bay of Algeciras in 710; Algeciras was the first Spanish town conquered by them, and they held it until 1344. The town was devastated by the Normans in 845 and 859; and besieged by Alfonso X of León and Castile in 1278; the final siege, by Alfonso XI of León and Castile, lasted from 1342 to 1344. A French-Spanish fleet defeated the British near here on July 6, 1801, but was defeated in a second engagement on July 12, 1801. The international conference of Algeciras, dealing with the international problems involved in the administration of Morocco, was held here in 1906. Pop. 25,671 (1940).
Algeciras, Bay of. Inlet of the Strait of Gibraltar, S Spain, situated W of the town of Gibraltar.
Algeciras Conference. Meeting (Jan. 16–April 7, 1906) of the European powers, called largely at the insistence of Germany, to discuss the international status of Morocco, upon whose sultan the French were making further demands for concessions. The results of the conference redounded to Germany's disadvantage, although during the conference she had only the support of Austria-Hungary. Moroccan independence was nominally preserved, its eight ports were put under French and Spanish guard, and France was given general direction over its new international bank, but the completely free hand which France desired in the Moroccan area was for the moment denied. By decision of the delegates, various reforms were urged upon the sultan of Morocco, such as the removal of disabilities placed upon citizens of the U.S. (by the U.S. delegate), the abolition of slavery (Great Britain), the establishment of lighthouses (Germany), the publication of commercial statistics (Austria), and the immediate construction of railways (Spain). The U.S. was represented by Henry White, at that time ambassador to Italy.

Algeiba or Algieba (al.jē′bạ). The second-magnitude double star γ Leonis. By Ulugh Beigh the name Algeiba was applied to three stars, η, γ, and ζ Leonis.

Algemesí (äl″ʜā.mā.sē′). Commune in Spain, in the province of Valencia, situated on the Júcar River, ab. 6 mi. N of Alcira: paper factories; trade in rice, wine, oranges, and olive oil. 17,373 (1940).

Algenib (al′je.nib). The third-magnitude star γ Pegasi, at the extremity of the wing. The same name is also given to α Persei, better known as Mirfak. It is also called Alchemb.

Algenubi (al.je.nō′bi). A name of the third-magnitude star ϵ Leonis.

Alger (äl.zhā). French name of Algiers.

Alger (al′jėr), Cyrus. b. at Bridgewater, Mass., Nov. 11, 1781; d. Feb. 4, 1856. American inventor and iron manufacturer. He established (1809) an iron foundry at South Boston, and was thereafter responsible for production in the U.S. of the first cylinder stoves (1822), the first rifle (1834), a malleable cast-iron plow, and the casting of the first "Columbiad" mortar, the largest weapon of its kind to be produced in the U.S. before 1850.

Alger, Horatio. b. at Revere, Mass., Jan. 13, 1834; d. July 18, 1899. American author of boy's books and Unitarian clergyman. He terminated a brief career as minister (1864–66) to devote himself to writing, which eventually produced 119 works and brought Alger juvenile readers throughout the English-speaking world. Ragged Dick (1867) was the first story in what was to be Alger's typical and most popular series; his later books (one of which was written in two weeks) produced through their similarity of theme a pattern of writing which has indissolubly linked Alger's name to a certain type of "rags to riches" fiction.

Alger, Russell Alexander. b. at Lafayette, Ohio, Feb. 27, 1836; d. at Washington, Jan. 24, 1907. American politician; Secretary of War (1897–99) during the Spanish-American War. During his secretaryship, the War Department was severely criticized for unpreparedness and maladministration; the Dodge report on the conduct of the war, plus that of the "embalmed beef" commission, resulted in Alger's resignation at McKinley's request. He served as a colonel (1864) under Sheridan in the Civil War, and was brevetted a major-general of volunteers (1865). He was governor of Michigan (1885–87) and a senator from Michigan (1902–07).

Alger, William Rounseville. b. at Freetown, Mass., Dec. 28, 1822; d. Feb. 7, 1905. American Unitarian clergyman and author, an outspoken opponent of slavery. He wrote The Poetry of the East (1856), Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life (1864), Life of Edwin Forrest, The American Tragedian (1877), and others.

Algeria (al.jir′i.ạ). [French, Algérie (äl.zhā.rē).] Country in NW Africa (consisting of the ancient Numidia and E Mauritania), organized as a colonial possession of France in 1834 (conquest begun in 1830). In 1870 the northern part of the country was divided into three departments and became part of metropolitan France. Algeria is bounded by the Mediterranean Sea on the N, by Tunisia on the E, by the Sahara on the S, and by French Morocco on the W; it is traversed by the Atlas range. Capital, Algiers; area (including Algiers and the Algerian part of the Sahara), 847,500 sq. mi.; pop., 8,676,016 (1948).

Physical and Economic Geography. It comprises three distinct regions: the Tell, or mountainous and cultivated region, in the north; the steppe region, with various brackish lakes, in the center; and the Sahara, which extends indefinitely southward. Agriculture is the leading occupation, but the country contains considerable mineral wealth (especially iron, lime phosphate, and copper), and exports wheat, barley, oats, wine, olive oil, esparto grass, wool, fruits, and livestock.

Political Divisions. Algeria is organized in two divisions, Territoire du Nord (including the departments of Algiers, Oran, and Constantine) and Territoires du Sud (including Aïn-Sefra, Ghardaïa, Touggourt, and Oasis Sahariennes). Its chief cities include Algiers, Constantine, and Oran. The government is vested in a governor general appointed from France, in the French Corps Législatif, and in a superior council. Each of the three departments sends a senator and three deputies to the French assembly, with the exception of Algiers, which sends four deputies.

Culture and History. The prevailing religion is Mohammedanism, and the inhabitants are chiefly Berbers, Arabs, Europeans (largely French and Spanish), Moors, and the descendants of Turks. The country was annexed by Rome in the first century B.C., was conquered by the Vandals in the 5th century and by the Moslems in the 7th century, passed into the possession of the Turks in 1519, and was a piratical power from the 16th to the 19th century, becoming independent of Turkey in 1710. The office of dey was established in 1600. Defeated by the U.S. in 1815. Conquest by France, begun in 1830 with the taking of Algiers, was continued by the taking of Constantine in 1837, the subduing of the Kabyles, and the capture of Abd-al-Kadir in 1847. In 1871 there was another revolt, but after this was suppressed the French had little trouble in later years. A campaign for control of the Sahara was begun in 1891, and was finally completed in 1919 as far as actual warfare was concerned. Since then the penetration and extension of French control has been carried on with little opposition. Under the Vichy government in World War II, the country was invaded by the Allies in 1942.

Alger of Liége (lē.āzh′, lyezh). b. at Liége, in what is now Belgium, c1055; d. at Cluny, France, 1132. French ecclesiastic. He was for 20 years canon of the Cathedral of St. Lambert, and then (1121 et seq.) monk of Cluny. A well-known ecclesiastical writer, he opposed the error of the Berengarians.

Alghero (äl.ge′rō). [Also, Algheri (-rē).] Town and commune in Italy, on the island of Sardinia, in the province of Sassari, situated on the Rada d'Alghero, on the W coast of the island, SW of Sassari. The fortified town was at various times contested between Venice, Genoa, and Aragon; in 1353 the rebellious inhabitants were expelled by King Pietro IV of Aragon and replaced by settlers from Spain; after preserving Spanish habits for a long time, they fused with the Sardic inhabitants of the surrounding countryside. The population is engaged in seafaring activities and fishing; excellent wines and other agricultural products are grown in the vicinity. Pop. of commune, 15,998 (1936); of town, 14,519 (1936).

Al Ghiraybah (äl gē.rī′bạ). City on the island of Bahrein, in the Persian Gulf, E of Arabia. It is in the center of the rich Bahrein oil fields, and near it is located a large refinery with a capacity of over 10 million barrels a year.

Algieba (al.jē′bạ). See Algeiba.

Algiers (al.jirz′). [French, Alger; Arabic, Al-Jezair.] Middle department of Algeria, in NW Africa, consisting of five arrondissements (administrative divisions). It is headed by a prefect (appointed by the president of France), who is aided by several minor officials. Capital, Algiers; area, 21,052 sq. mi.; pop. 2,765,898 (1948).

Algiers. [French, Alger; Arabic, Al-Jezair; Latin, Icosium.] Seaport, the capital of Algeria and of Algiers department, on the Bay of Algiers, on the NW coast of Africa midway on the Algerian coast; founded by the Arabs c935 on the site of the ancient Roman city of Icosium. It was held by Spain 1509–17, and unsuccessfully attacked by Charles V in 1541. It was a focal point for piracy on American shipping, which ended with the appearance there of Decatur's fleet (1815). It was bombarded by the British in 1816, and occupied by the French in 1830. In World War II, Algiers served as a headquarters for the Allied forces in Africa after the city was taken by the Allies on Nov. 8, 1942. The city, with its suburbs, is the largest urban area in French northern Africa. It is the leading industrial and commercial center of the country, a chief port, and principal coaling station. 266,165 (1948).

Algiers. District of New Orleans, Louisiana, in Orleans Parish: at one time frequented by the pirate, Lafitte.

Algoa Bay (al.gō′ą). Bay on the S coast of Cape of Good Hope province, Union of South Africa. The important harbor of Port Elizabeth is situated on the W side of the bay.

Algol (al′gol). The remarkable second-magnitude variable star β Persei, in the head of Medusa, who is the monster referred to in the name. This is the most celebrated of eclipsing binaries, its faint companion passing in front every two days, 20 hours, 49 minutes, and reducing the brightness to one-third normal. Its variability was noted in 1670 by Montanari, and its periodicity discovered in 1782 by Goodricke, who suggested the eclipse cause.

Algoma (al.gō′mą). City in E Wisconsin, in Kewaunee County: resort community on Lake Michigan. 3,384 (1950).

Algona (al.gō′ną). [Former name, Call's Grove.] City in N Iowa, county seat of Kossuth county, on the Last Fork of the Des Moines River. It was settled in 1854. Pop. 5,415 (1950).

Algonac (al′gō.nak). Village in S Michigan, in St. Clair County, NE of Detroit: resort center. 2,639 (1950).

Algonquian (al.gon′ki.ąn). [Also, Algonkin (-kin).] One of the major North American Indian linguistic families. It covers an area greater than any of the others. It was distributed over large portions of the NE U.S., and C and E Canada, though its continuity of distribution in the E Great Lakes area and the St. Lawrence valley was interrupted by the Iroquoian family of languages.

Algorab (al.gō.rāb′) or Algores (al′gō.rēz). The third-magnitude star δ Corvi.

Algrange (ȧl.grāñzh). [German, Algringen (äl′gring.ęn).] Town in E France, in the department of Moselle, W of Thionville, near the Luxembourg border. It is an industrial town. Iron ore is mined in the vicinity. 7,953 (1946).

Algrind (al′grind). An anagram of Edmund Grindal, archbishop of Canterbury, used in Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar.

Al Habbaniya (äl hāb.bä.nē′yą). Town in C Iraq, on the Euphrates River N of Lake Habbaniya, ab. 50 mi. W of Bagdad: called by some scholars the traditional site of the Garden of Eden; now a small trading center.

Alhama de Murcia (ä.lä′mā dā mör′thyä). [Also, Alhama.] Town in SE Spain, in the province of Murcia, situated at the foot of the Sierra de Espuña, ab. 17 mi. SW of Murcia: center of a fertile, irrigated agricultural district. It is a health resort, with hot sulfur springs. There is a Moorish castle. 10,740 (1940).

Alhamarides (ä.lä.mär′idz). The last Moorish dynasty in Spain. It ruled in Granada from the middle of the 13th century until 1492.

Alhambra (al.ham′brą). City in S California, in Los Angeles County, ab. 7 mi. NE of Los Angeles: residential and manufacturing center, in a fruit-growing region. 51,359 (1950).

Alhambra (al.ham′brą; Spanish, ä.läm′brä). Moslem fortress and palace, with additional buildings, at Granada, Spain, built chiefly (1248–1354) by the king Mohammed Ibn Al Ahmar and his successors; the outstanding example of Moslem architecture and decoration in Spain. Damaged after the expulsion (1492) of the Moslems from Spain and by the emperor Charles V (Charles I of Spain), who replaced part of the old structure with a Renaissance palace in the 16th century, it was extensively restored in the 19th century. Standing on a plateau about 35 acres in area and surrounded by heavy brick walls, the buildings are composed mainly of small rooms laid out around open courtyards which contain the fountains and rich gardens characteristic of Moslem landscape architecture. Most noted of these is the Court of Lions, in which a covered passage, or arcade, of tall arches on 124 paired or grouped white marble columns surrounds a paved patio with the Fountain of Lions in the center. The interior and exterior decoration, in the style known as Arabesque, consists of infinitely varied interwoven patterns of foliage-like forms, Arabic script in gold on blue background, and geometric tracery, done in majolica tiles, carved wood, pressed plaster and stucco, and pierced stone heightened with brilliant colors; ceilings and doorways present the intricate repetition of geometrical forms resulting in what is known as "honeycomb" and "stalactite" vaulting.

Alhambra, The. Series of 41 sketches published in 1832 by Washington Irving. The material for the book was gathered during Irving's residence in the old royal palace of the Moors at Granada. The author's avowed purpose was to describe the half-Spanish, half-Oriental character of the place against the background of its legends, history, and traditions.

Alhaurín el Grande (ä.lou.rēn′ el grän′dā). [Also, Alhaurín.] Town in S Spain, in the province of Málaga, ab. 20 mi. SW of Málaga. The town trades in olive oil; marble quarries are in the vicinity. 10,681 (1940).

Alhazen (äl.hä.zen′). b. at Basra, Iraq, c965; d. at Cairo, c1038. Arabian mathematician and astronomer; important contributor to the science of optics. Called to Egypt by Hakim to control Nile floods, he pretended insanity to avoid carrying out an impracticable plan. Author of works on geometry, philosophy and medicine, particularly his Opticae thesaurus (Latin translation, 1270) and studies of twilight and clouds, the latter three of which were published together in 1572.

Alhena (al.hen′ą). The third-magnitude star γ Geminorum, in the foot or ankle of Pollux. It is sometimes called Almeisam.

Ali (ä′lē). [Called (by members of the Shiite sect) Sher-i-Khuda, meaning "the Lion of God."] b. at Mecca, in Arabia, c600; killed at Kufa, in what is now Iraq, 661. Fourth Moslem caliph (656–661); cousin, adopted son, and son-in-law of Mohammed, one of his earliest converts. His descendants were the Alids who founded the Shiite sect and also, through Fatima (his wife and Mohammed's daughter), the Fatimites. Ali's struggle for succession, first against Abu-Bakr, Mohammed's immediate successor, and Ayesha, Mohammed's widow, and later against Muawiyah, founder of the Ommiads, was the cause of his death and the original source of the great Shiite-Sunnite schism in the Moslem world. Assuming the caliphate on the death (656) of Othman, he defended it against the armies of Ayesha (Battle of the Camel, 656) and Muawiyah (657), with whom he attempted peaceful settlement. He was betrayed (658) by arbitrators and assassinated (661) by Kharijite fanatics. He is venerated as a martyr by the Shiite Moslems of Afghanistan, Iran, and India.

Ali, Asaf. b. 1888—. Indian statesman and nationalist Moslem leader, first ambassador (1947–48) of the Union of India to the U.S. He has served also as governor of Orissa (1948 et seq.). An active participant in the independence movement, he was a member of the Congress Working Committee in 1942 and later deputy leader of the Congress Party in the central assembly.

Ali, Fath (or Feth). See Fath Ali.

Ali, Mohammed. b. in Rampur State, United Provinces, India, 1878; d. at London, Jan. 4, 1931. Indian Moslem leader, an advocate of Indian independence. The son of a small landowner, he was graduated from Allahabad University (1898) and from Oxford (B.A., 1902), but failed (1902) the India Civil Service examination. He took part in the formation (1906) of the All-India Moslem League. Pro-Turkish in World War I and a pan-Islamist until Turkey's abolition (1924) of the caliphate, he was imprisoned (1914 et seq., 1919, 1921) by the British. Long associated with Mohandas K. Gandhi and the noncoöperation movement, he was president (1923) of the India National Congress, but as president (1931) of the All-India Moslem Conference he attacked the policy of Gandhi, fearing loss of freedom for India's Moslems.

Alia (ā′li.ą). See Allia.

Ali Baba (ä′lē bä′bä). Character in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, in the story "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." He is a poor woodcutter who, concealed in a tree, sees a band of robbers enter a secret cavern, and overhears the magic words "open sesame," which open its door. After the departure of the thieves he repeats the spell and the door opens, disclosing a room full of treasures with which he loads his donkeys and returns home. His brother Cassim, who discovers his secret, enters the cave alone, forgets the word "sesame," and is found, killed, and dismembered by the robbers. The thieves, discovering that Ali Baba knows their secret, resolve to kill him, but are outwitted by Morgiana, Ali Baba's slave.

Ali Baba. Opera by Cherubini, founded on his Koukourgi, produced at Paris, July 22, 1833.

Alibaud (ä.lē.bō), Louis. b. at Nîmes, France, May 2, 1810; guillotined at Paris, July 11, 1836. Frenchman who attempted to assassinate Louis Philippe, the king of France, on June 25, 1836.

Alibert (ä.lē.ber), Jean Louis, Baron. b. at Villefranche, Aveyron, France, May 12, 1766; d. at Paris, Nov. 6, 1837. French medical writer; author of Traité complet des maladies de la peau (1806–27), and other works.

Alibert, Paul. b. at Carcassonne, France, March 15, 1873 -. French poet. His reputation as a master of the elegy is based upon his Odes (1922), Églogues (1923), and Élégies romaines (1923).

Ali Bey (ä'lē bā). See also Badía y Leblich, Domingo.

Ali Bey. b. in Abkhazia (in what is now part of the U.S.S.R.), c1728; d. 1773. Mameluke bey (ruler) of Egypt. Originally a slave, he became leader of the Mamelukes (the slave-soldiers who for centuries made up one of the most effective fighting forces in the region of the E Mediterranean) in 1763 and declared himself independent of the Porte (Turkey) in 1768. He made many conquests in Arabia, Syria, and elsewhere; taken prisoner in battle in 1773.

Alibunar Marsh (ä.lē.bö'när). Large morass in NE Yugoslavia, in Vojvodina, NE of Belgrade.

Alicante (ä.lē.kän'tā). Province in SE Spain, bounded by Valencia on the N, the Mediterranean Sea on the E and SE, and Murcia and Albacete on the SW and W. Large parts of the hilly country along the Mediterranean coast are fertile, producing grain, wine, olive oil, almonds, and citrus fruits. The climate is mild, and date palms grow in the subdistrict of Elche. Capital, Alicante; area, 2,267 sq. mi.; pop. 648,435 (1950).

Alicante. [Latin, Lucentum.] Town in SE Spain, capital of the province of Alicante, situated on the Mediterranean Sea, ab. 77 mi. S of Valencia. It has a good harbor, and exports grain, almonds, castor and olive oil, red Alicante wines, and other agricultural products. There are tobacco, textile, ceramics, and food industries in the area, and it has some importance also as a seaside resort. Among the noteworthy buildings of the town are a castle, the town hall, various churches in baroque style and the Gothic church of Santa María (which takes the place of a former mosque). A Roman town in ancient times, Alicante retained some degree of independence under the Moors, but was subject to Moslem overlordship; it was later much contested between Christians and Moslems. Finally taken from the Moors by James I of Aragon in 1296, it was thereafter alternately in the hands of Aragon and Castile. It was besieged by the French in 1709 and was the scene of revolutionary fighting in 1873 and 1936. Pop. 107,596 (1950).

Alice (al'is). City in S Texas, county seat of Jim Wells County, W of Corpus Christi in a petroleum and cotton producing area. 16,449 (1950).

Alice. Wife of Bath in Chaucer's tale of that name. Her "gossib," to whom she alludes, has the same name.

Alice. Lady in attendance on Princess Katherine in Shakespeare's Henry V.

Alice. Principal female character in The Tragedy of Mr. Arden of Feversham, a play of unknown authorship which was first published in 1592. Some scholars have thought that the author might have been Shakespeare.

Alice. Little girl in Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and Through the Looking-Glass by Charles Lutwidge Dodgson (Lewis Carroll). In real life, "Alice" was Alice Liddell, daughter of the classical scholar Henry George Liddell.

Alice Adams. Novel by Booth Tarkington, published in 1921 and awarded a Pulitzer prize in 1922.

Alice Bridgenorth (brij'nôrth"). See Bridgenorth, Alice.

Alice-for-Short. Novel by William De Morgan, published in 1907.

Alice of Old Vincennes (vin.senz'). Novel by Maurice Thompson, published in 1900.

Alice, or The Mysteries. Novel by Edward Bulwer-Lytton, published in 1838 as a sequel to Ernest Maltravers.

Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. Novel by Charles Lutwidge Dodgson (writing under the pseudonym of Lewis Carroll), published in 1865. Alice, the child heroine, falls asleep and dreams that she falls down a rabbit hole. In the world she finds there she has bizarre encounters with such strange characters as the Mad Hatter, the Cheshire Cat, the King and Queen of Hearts and their court, the March Hare, and many others. Although Dodgson wrote the book for children, it has been variously interpreted by 20th-century critics as a satire on Victorian England and as a Freudian allegory.

Alice Springs. [Original name, Stuart.] Town in C Australia, in the Northern Territory, approximately midway between Adelaide and Darwin. In a section of the Macdonnell Ranges, at an elevation of ab. 2,000 ft., it has a very low annual rainfall (ab. 11 inches) and a temperature range that is sometimes as great as 40° within a single 24-hour span. The chief occupation of the inhabitants of the area is the grazing of livestock, although there is some opal mining and the town itself is an administrative center and a major station on the telegraph line across Australia. Railways and highways pass through it to Adelaide and Darwin, and it has become in recent years a focal point for air service throughout the C part of Australia. In World War II (largely because of the completion of the highway to Darwin in 1941), the town became a point of considerable strategic importance for the shipment of both munitions and troops from the S part of Australia to Darwin on the N coast. The first white man known to have reached the site of the present town was John McDouall Stuart, in 1860, and the settlement was named for him until 1931. Pop. 2,078 (1947).

Aliceville (al'is.vil). Town in W Alabama, in Pickens County, ab. 35 mi. SW of Tuscaloosa. 3,170 (1950).

Alicia (a.lish'a). One of the principal female characters in Nicholas Rowe's tragedy Jane Shore, a woman of strong passions who by her jealousy ruins her former friend Jane Shore. The name was given by Lillo in his Arden of Feversham to the Alice of the earlier (and anonymous) The Tragedy of Mr. Arden of Feversham.

Alidor (ä.lē.dôr). Character in Pierre Corneille's comedy La Place Royale. He is the first of a long line of headstrong (usually referred to as "willful") characters in the dramatist's plays.

Alids or Alides (al'idz). Name applied to the descendants of Ali, the fourth Moslem caliph. It was the Alids in Persia who founded the Shiite sect which, in opposition to the Sunnites, has since split the Moslem world. Even today, in modern Afghanistan and Iran most Moslems are members of the Shiite sect and venerate Ali as second only to Mohammed, whereas in Turkey the Sunnite sect is dominant and Ali's name is held in contempt. A revolt of the Alids in the 8th century, some 100 years after Ali's death, was suppressed by the Abbasside caliphs.

Aliena (ā.li.ē'na). Name assumed by Celia in Shakespeare's As You Like It, when, disguised as a shepherdess, she follows Rosalind.

Alien and Sedition Acts. Collective expression now applied to four acts passed (1798) by the U.S. Congress in the administration of President John Adams. The acts came as the climax of almost a decade of political strife between the Federalists and their opponents, who had emerged as the Jeffersonian Republicans; the difficulties with France, which aroused a spirit of nationalism, also played their part, for the publication (April, 1798) of the XYZ correspondence almost obliterated for the moment old party antagonisms. The Federalists, irritated by the assaults of journalists and pamphleteers, and fearing the effects of abuse and misrepresentation when war with France appeared inevitable, passed the legislation despite serious and able opposition. The animus of the acts was directed particularly against a group of anti-Federalist journalists of French and English extraction. The Naturalization Act of June 18, 1798, provided for 14 years' residence before the granting of full U.S. citizenship and required registration of resident aliens as well as new arrivals. The Alien Act of June 25, 1798, authorized the president to order such aliens as he might deem dangerous or to be engaged in "treasonable or secret machinations" against the government to depart from the country. If anyone so ordered should be "found at large" and without a license to remain, he should upon conviction thereof be imprisoned for not more than three years and become ineligible for citizenship. The Alien Enemies Act of July 6, 1798, provided that whenever a proclamation by the president announcing war or predatory invasion was issued, alien enemies should be liable to apprehension and removal. The Sedition Act of July 14, 1798, was directed against unlawful combination or conspiracy with intent to oppose governmental measures or impede their operation. In sweeping terms, it further provided for punishing anyone publishing or causing to be published scandalous and malicious writings against the government, or either house of Congress, or the president, with intent to defame them or to bring them "into contempt or disrepute," or to stir up sedition, or excite unlawful combinations for resisting any law of the U.S. or any act of the president done in pursuance of such laws. The act provided for punishment by a fine of not more than two thousand dollars and by imprisonment not exceeding two years. The Naturalization Act was repealed in 1802, under the administration of Jefferson. The Alien Enemies Act was not repealed. The Alien Act was limited by its terms to two years and was not renewed. Though the Alien Acts were never enforced, a number of French refugees fled the country or went into hiding. The Sedition Act expired in 1801 and was not renewed. Under it some 25 persons were arrested, and ten convicted. The most prominent of these was Dr. Thomas Cooper. The Alien and Sedition Laws excited protests among the several states of the Union, and brought forth the Virginia and Kentucky Resolution in protest.

Alien Contract Labor Laws. Series of national acts (1885–1910) aimed at excluding the entry into the U.S. of dependent immigrant laborers under contract. Their general purpose was the prevention of depressed wage levels for U.S. workers. The initial act of Feb. 26, 1885, was supplemented by legislation enacted in 1891, 1903, 1907, and 1910.

Alien Corn. Play (1933) by Sidney Howard.

Alien Property Custodian, Office of. U.S. government agency set up in 1942 for maintaining control over enemy-alien property in the U.S. during World War II. It was dissolved in October, 1946, and its duties were absorbed by the U.S. Department of Justice.

Alien Registration Act. Act passed by the U.S. Congress on June 29, 1940, requiring all aliens resident in the U.S., except government officials and their families, to be fingerprinted and to submit a statement setting forth their political beliefs and personal and occupational history. The act also requires aliens to notify the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service upon making a change of address. The enforcement of the act applied to approximately five million aliens.

Alifánfaron (ä.lē.fän'fä.rōn). Emperor of the Island of Trapoban, mentioned by Cervantes' Don Quixote. When he sees two flocks of sheep coming toward him Don Quixote says of one of them: "Know, friend Sancho, that yonder army before us is commanded by the Emperor Alifánfaron, sovereign of the Island of Trapoban. . . ."

Aligarh (u.lē.gur', al'i.gär). District of the Agra division, Uttar Pradesh, Union of India, ab. 80 mi. SE of Delhi; barley and rice. Capital, Aligarh; area, 1,946 sq. mi.; pop. 1,372,641 (1941).

Aligarh. [Also, Koil.] City in N central India, capital of the Aligarh district, Agra division, Uttar Pradesh, in the Union of India. It is a trading center for the wheat, corn, millet, and cotton produced in the vicinity, and is assuming steadily greater importance as a processing center for these agricultural products. It is still best known, however, for its Moslem university, which was opened in 1875 and which has become one of the leading educational institutions of the East. 112,655 (1941).

Aligarh, Fort. Fort in the district of Aligarh, India, defended by the Mahrattas and stormed by the British in 1803. It is one of the historic monuments of the city of Aligarh, within the limits of which it is now included.

Ali-Ghez (ä'li.gez'). See Alagez.

Alighieri (ä.lē.gyā'rē), Dante. Full name of Dante.

Ali Gur-Ber (ä'lē gur'ber'). Pseudonym of Cloots or Clootz, Baron de.

Ali ibn-Husein (ä'lē ib''n.hö.sīn'). b. 1878; d. 1935. King of Hejaz; elder brother of Abdullah ibn-Husein (1882–1951), king of Jordan. During World War I he commanded Arab troops against the Turks. In 1924 he became king of Hejaz, succeeding to the throne upon the abdication of his father, Husein ibn-Ali. He resigned (1925) under pressure from ibn-Saud (now king of Saudi Arabia, but at that time sultan of Nejd), and until his death lived at Baghdad. He was the last ruler of the independent kingdom of Hejaz.

Alijos Islands (ä.lē'ʜōs). Group of small islands in the Pacific, W of Lower California.

Ali Khan (ä'lē kän), Liaqat. See Liaqat Ali Khan.

Alima (ä.lē'mą). River in W central Africa, a right (or western) affluent of the Congo River, having its headwaters near those of the Ogooué River, in Middle Congo, French Equatorial Africa. It was discovered by Brazza in 1878, and is navigable for a short distance from its mouth.

Alin (ä.lēn'), Oscar Josef. b. at Falun, Sweden, 1846; d. 1900. Swedish politician and historian; rector of Uppsala University. He was the author of Den svensk-norsk Unionen (1889–91), an outstanding presentation of the Swedish viewpoint on the question of Norwegian-Swedish union, as well as of numerous other books and articles.

Alinda (ą.lin'dą). Daughter of Alphonso in John Fletcher's Pilgrim.

Alinda. Name assumed by young Archas when disguised as a woman, in John Fletcher's Loyal Subject.

Alinda. Character in Thomas Lodge's romance Rosalynde.

Alingsås (ä'lings.ōs). Town in S Sweden, in the län (county) of Älvsborg, situated near the mouth of the Säfvea River into Mjörn Lake, ab. 25 mi. NE of Göteborg. It has textile industries. 12,327 (1949).

Aliore (al'i.ōr). See under Alcor.

Alioth (al'i.oth). Name in the Alphonsine tables, and still in ordinary use, of the bright second-magnitude star ϵ Ursae Majoris. The name is also sometimes (rarely) given to α Serpentis, and even to θ Serpentis.

Ali Pasha (ä'lē pä.shä'). [Called the "Lion of Janina."] b. at Tepeleni, Albania, 1741; assassinated at Janina (now Ioannina, Greece), Feb. 5, 1822. Turkish governor (1788–1820) of Albania. On the death (1755) of his father, governor of S Albania, he joined the mountain brigands. He soon became a leader among them and depended on them for most of his power as pasha. Sent by the Turkish government to put down a rebellion in Albania at Scutari (now Shkodër), he was made governor of Janina (1788) and Rumelia (1803); extended power into Greece and, contemplating further expansion, made a series of alliances with France, Russia, and England. He was deposed (1820) and assassinated (1822) on the order of the Turkish sultan Mahmud II. Accounts of his brigand court at Janina were written by various travelers, including Lord Byron (Childe Harold's Pilgrimage). He is a legendary hero among the Albanian and Greek mountaineers.

Ali Pasha, Mehemet. See Aali Pasha, Mehemet.

Aliquippa (al.i.kwip'ą). Borough in W Pennsylvania, in Beaver County, important for the great amount of steel manufactured in its mills. It was named for "Queen" Aliquippa, an Iroquois Indian. 26,132 (1950).

Alisal (al'i.sal). Unincorporated community in S California. 16,714 (1950).

Aliscans (ä.lēs.käⁿ). [Also, Aleschans.] Chanson of the 12th century, dealing with the contest between "William of Orange," a great Christian hero of the south of France, and the Saracens. It forms, according to custom, the center of a whole group of chansons dealing with the earlier and later adventures of the hero, his ancestors and descendants. Some of these are Le Couronnement Loys, La Prise d'Orange, Le Charroi de Nîmes, Le Moniage Guillaume. The series formed by these and others has been considered to be among the most interesting of these groups.

Alise (ä.lēz). See under Alesia.

Aliso (al'i.sō). Fortress near the river Lippe, in what is now NW Germany, built by the Romans under Drusus, in 11 B.C., as a military center to be used by the Roman legions against the Germanic tribes. It has been variously identified with Elsen (near Paderborn), and localities near Hamm, Dortmund, and elsewhere.

Alison (al'i.sọn), Archibald. b. at Edinburgh, Nov. 13, 1757; d. at Colinton, near Edinburgh, May 17, 1839. Scottish Anglican clergyman in Shropshire (1790–1800) and Edinburgh (1800–31). He was the author of Essays on the Nature and Principles of Taste (1790), which formed the basis of Francis Jeffrey's association theory of esthetics, of collected sermons (1814–15), and others.

Alison, Sir Archibald. b. at Kenley, Shropshire, England, Dec. 29, 1792; d. at Glasgow, May 23, 1867. British historian; son of Archibald Alison (1757–1839).

Alison, Sir Archibald. b. at Edinburgh, Jan. 21, 1826; d. at London, 1907. British general (1887–93); son of Sir Archibald Alison (1792–1867).

Alison, Francis. b. at Leck, Ireland, 1705; d. Nov. 28, 1779. American Presbyterian clergyman and educator. He established (1743) a school at Philadelphia which he later moved to Newark, Del. (where it became a precursor of the modern University of Delaware). Recalled (1752) to serve as rector of the Philadelphia Latin Academy, he remained to the end of his life with this institution, seeing it grow into a college from which later came the University of Pennsylvania.

Alison, William Pulteney. b. near Edinburgh, 1790; d. 1859. Scottish physician. Professor of medical jurisprudence (1820–22) and of physiology (1822 et seq.) at Edinburgh, he sought to reform the archaic Scottish poor-laws, on the grounds that poverty was a prime source of disease. He was the author of numerous medico-sociological pamphlets and technical works in physiology and pathology.

Alison's House (al'i.sǫnz). Play by Susan Glaspell, produced in 1930 and awarded a Pulitzer prize in the following year.

Alithea (al.i.thē'ạ). One of the principal characters in William Wycherley's comedy The Country Wife, a woman of the world, brilliant and cool. She also appears in David Garrick's The Country Girl.

Aliwal (u.lē.wäl'). Village in Punjab state, Union of India, ab. 70 mi. SE of Lahore, near the Sutlej River. It was the scene of a British defeat (Jan. 28, 1846) of the Sikhs.

Aljechin (ä.lye'ʜin), Aleksandr Aleksandrovich. See Alekhine, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich.

Aljubarrota (äl.zhö.bar.rô'ta). Village in W Portugal ab. 63 mi. N of Lisbon. Here, on Aug. 14, 1385, John I of Castile was defeated by John I of Portugal. The battle established the independence of Portugal.

Aljustrel (äl.zhö.strel'). Town and concelho (commune in S Portugal, in the province of Baixo Alentejo, in the district of Beja, SW of Beja: agricultural trade center. Pop. of concelho, 17,239 (1940); of town, 9,397 (1940).

Al Kadhimain (äl kä.ʜi.mīn'). [Also: Kadhimain, Kazemain.] City in C Iraq, near the capital city of Baghdad: a Moslem holy place visited each year by many pilgrims. The domes of its minarets are covered with gold leaf; many of the buildings show signs of cracking from earthquakes.

Alkaid (al.kād'). Second-magnitude star η Ursae Majoris, at the extremity of the bear's tail, or "dipper-handle." It is by many often called Benetnasch.

Alkaios (al.kī'os). See Alcaeus.

Alkalurops (al.ka.lū'rops). A name, now seldom used, for the fourth-magnitude star μ Boötis, situated in the staff which Boötes carries in his right hand.

Alkamenes (al.kam'ẹ.nēz). See Alcamenes.

Alkan (äl.kän). [Original full name, Charles Henri Valentin Morhange.] b. at Paris, Nov. 30, 1813; d. there, March 20, 1888. French pianist, composer, and teacher. He entered the Paris Conservatory in 1819; later visited (1833) London, and settled as a teacher at Paris. His compositions include études, concertos, sonatas, and numerous other works for the piano.

Alkes (al'kẹs). The fourth-magnitude star α Crateris.

al-Khowarizmi (äl.ċhö.wä.rēz'mē), Mohammed ibn-Musa. [Sometimes called the "Father of Algebra."] b. in Khwarizm (now Khiva, in the U.S.S.R.), c780; d. between 835 and 845. Arab mathematician. His most famous work was Al-jabr wa'l muqabalah, from the title of which the word "algebra" arose. English translations of this treatise were published in 1831 and 1915. He wrote also De numero indorum, and it was his authorship of this work that led to the corruptions algorism and algorithm, which at first meant only calculation by the use of the Hindu-Arabic numerals. He is, with the Greek Diophantus, sometimes referred to as the "Father of Algebra."

Alkmaar (älk.mär'). Town in the W Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, situated on the North Holland Canal ab. 20 mi. N of Amsterdam: center of a fertile agricultural district. It has renowned grain, cattle, butter, and cheese markets, particularly for the Edam type of cheese, as well as foodstuff and paper-ware manufactures. The name of the town (meaning "All Sea") occurs first in the 10th century and recalls its original location in the midst of marshes and lakes. The town's charter dates from 1254; the Middle Ages saw many contests between Hollanders, Gelderlanders, and Frisians here; in 1573 it was unsuccessfully besieged by the Spaniards. The prosperity of Alkmaar started after the reclamation of the surrounding swamps at the end of the 17th century. 39,240 (1949).

Alkmaar, Convention of. Convention concluded (October, 1799) at Alkmaar, in the Netherlands, by which the Anglo-Russian army under the Duke of York evacuated the Netherlands.

Alkmaar, Heinrik von. fl. second half 15th century. German translator of the poem Reineke de Vos (Reynard the Fox), published in Low German at Bremen in 1498.

Alkman (älk'mạn). See Alcman.

Alkmene (alk.mē'nē). See Alcmene.

Al Kufa (äl kö'fä). [Also: Cufa, Kufa.] In medieval history, a city on the Euphrates, near Ctesiphon; a leading city of the caliphate in the 7th and 8th centuries.

Alla (al'ạ) or Ella (el'ạ). King in The Man of Law's Tale, one of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. He marries Constance, the heroine of the tale.

Allacci (äl.lät'chē), Leone. [Latinized, Leo Allatius (ạ.lā'shus).] b. on the island of Chios, in the Aegean Sea, 1586; d. 1669. Greek theologian, scholar, author, and librarian. He was librarian at the Vatican (1661 et seq.).

Allagash (al'ạ.gash). [Also: Allegash, Alleguash.] River in N Maine, in Aroostook and Piscataquis counties, a branch of the St. John River.

Allah (al'ạ; Arabic, äl.lä'). The Mohammedan name of God.

Allahabad (al''ạ.ha.bad'). Division of Uttar Pradesh, N central Union of India, in the C and upper Ganges valley: wheat, rice, sugar, barley, cotton, and tobacco. Capital, Allahabad; area, 17,270 sq. mi.; pop. 6,014,813 (1941).

Allahabad. District of the Allahabad division, Uttar Pradesh, Union of India. Capital, Allahabad; area, ab. 2,800 sq. mi.; pop. 1,812,981 (1941).

Allahabad. [Eng. trans., "City of God."] City in N central India, the capital of Allahabad division and district and formerly of the United Provinces, Union of India, situated at the junction of the Jumna River with the Ganges: important railway center with large railway shops. It is the emporium for C India, a celebrated place of Hindu pilgrimage, and the seat of an annual fair. Among its major buildings are the citadel built by Akbar (which was during the period of English rule one of the chief British strongholds in India), the Juma Masjid (mosque), and the serai of Khosru. Allahabad was taken by the British in 1765 and by them granted to the emperor of Delhi and later to the nawab of Oudh; it was ceded to the British in 1801. Pop. 260,630 (1941).

Allah Dagh (ä'lä dāg). See Aladağ.

Allain-Targé (ạ.laṅ.tàr.zhā), François Henri René. b. at Angers, Maine-et-Loire, France, May 7, 1832; d. at Targé château, Maine-et-Loire, France, July 16, 1902. French political leader and jurist. He resigned (1864) his judgeship under Napoleon III and became a prefect after the Third Republic was formed. As a deputy (1876–89), he held the posts of finance minister (1881) and interior minister (1885). He was a friend of Léon Gambetta.

Allaire (ạ.lār'), James Peter. b. 1785; d. May 20, 1858. American master-mechanic and builder of steam engines, particularly for use in ships. The lease (1815) and transfer to New York of Robert Fulton's Jersey City engine-shop made Allaire a key figure in the founding of New York's first steam-engine manufacturing facility. Later he established works in Monmouth County, N.J., near a source of iron ore, but was placed at an economic disadvantage by the discovery of adjoining soft coal and iron-ore fields in Pennsylvania, and the plant was ultimately abandoned.

Prior to this, however, Allaire constructed the first marine compound steam-engine in the world.

Allamand (ȧ.lȧ.mäñ), Jean Nicolas Sébastien. b. at Lausanne, Switzerland, 1713; d. at Leiden, March 2, 1787. Swiss physicist, professor of philosophy (1749) and later of natural history at Leiden. He was the first to explain the phenomena of the Leyden jar.

All-American Canal. Main trunk of the system of irrigation canals carrying water from the Colorado River to the Imperial Valley, in California. The canal, which was completed in 1940, feeds its waters into three subordinate canals, which in turn irrigate the Imperial Valley. Length, ab. 80 mi.

Allan (al'ȧn), Barbara. See under Barbara Allen's Cruelty.

Allan, David. b. at Alloa, Scotland, Feb. 13, 1744; d. at Edinburgh, Aug. 6, 1796. Scottish painter and etcher. He studied (1764 et seq.) at Rome and maintained a portrait studio at London from 1777 to 1780. In 1786 he was named director of the Edinburgh Academy of Arts. His works include illustrations for Ramsay's Gentle Shepherd (1788); humorous genre pictures such as Scotch Wedding, Repentance Stool, and Highland Dance; historical paintings; and others. He has been called the "Scottish Hogarth" for his caricatures and early genre works.

Allan, George. A pseudonym of Kremnitz, Marie.

Allan, Sir Hugh. b. at Saltcoats, Ayrshire, Scotland, Sept. 29, 1810; d. at Edinburgh, Dec. 9, 1882. Scottish merchant, identified (1826 et seq.) with Canadian mercantile interests, and founder (1853) of the Allan Line of steamships. He was one of the original group that planned what is now the Canadian Pacific Railway, but became involved in the "Pacific Scandal" (1873) and was forced to withdraw from the enterprise.

Allan, John. b. at Edinburgh, Scotland, in January, 1746 or 1747; d. Feb. 7, 1805. American Revolutionary soldier and emissary to the Indians. He fled (1776) into Maine from his home in Nova Scotia when his anti-British activity led to a charge of treason; later efforts on behalf of the revolting colonists brought his appointment (1777 as colonel of the garrison at Machias, Me. Despite inadequate supplies and lack of reinforcements, he was able to secure Indian support and to maintain his post throughout the Revolutionary War.

Allan, Sir William. b. at Edinburgh, 1782; d. there, Feb. 23, 1850. Scottish historical and genre painter. After a long tour (1805–14) of Russia, on which were based his many pictures of Russian life, he was launched on a successful career by the patronage of Sir Walter Scott. He was later president (1838) of the Royal Scottish Academy and limner (1841) to Queen Victoria in Scotland.

Allan-a-Dale (al''ȧn.ȧ.dāl'). See Allen-a-Dale.

Allapaha (ȧ.lap'ȧ.hä). See Alapaha.

Allapalli (ȧ.lap'ȧ.li). See Alleppey.

Allardice (al'ȧr.dīs), Robert Barclay. [Called "Captain Barclay."] b. 1779; d. 1854. British army officer and pedestrian, known for his feat of walking one mile in each hour for 1,000 hours in succession, at Newmarket, June 1 to July 12, 1809.

Allatoona (al.ȧ.tō'nȧ). Place in N Georgia, ab. 35 mi. NW of Atlanta. Here, on Oct. 5, 1864, Union forces under John Murray Corse defeated a section of the Confederate forces.

Allauch (ȧ.lōsh). Town in SE France, in the department of Bouches-du-Rhône, NE of Marseilles, of which it is a suburb.

Allbutt (ôl'but), Sir Thomas Clifford. b. at Dewsbury, England, 1836; d. at Cambridge, 1925. English physician; inventor of the short clinical thermometer, and an important contributor to the knowledge of heart disease, ophthalmoscopy, history of medicine, and various diseases affecting the nervous system, especially syphilis. Graduate (1860) and regius professor of physics (1892–1925) at Cambridge, he was also commissioner in lunacy (1889–92). He made studies of tetanus and hydrophobia, described (1868) the effect of syphilis on the arteries of the brain, and wrote The Use of the Ophthalmoscope in Diseases (1871), Diseases of the Heart (1896), Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery (1905), and others. He was an editor of A System of Medicine (1896), and others.

Alle (äl'ę). River in N Poland and W U.S.S.R., which joins the Pregel at Wehlau. Length, ab. 130 mi.

Allectus (ȧ.lek'tus). b. c250; d. c296. Prime minister to Marcus Aurelius Valerius Carausius, a soldier with the Roman legions in Britain who seized control of the province, proclaimed himself emperor, and was actually for a short time (290–292) able to command a degree of acceptance from Rome. Allectus murdered him in 293, and claimed the title for himself, but was himself slain three years later near London by Roman soldiers.

Allée Blanche (ȧ.lā bläñsh). Alpine valley in N Italy, S of Mont Blanc.

Allefonsce (äl.fôńs), Jean. b. at Saintonge, France, c1482; d. c1557. French explorer and navigator; chief pilot to Roberval in the French exploration of Canada (1542 et seq.). His sketch maps pertaining to the search for a northwestern water route to China were published in Cosmographie (1545).

Allegan (al'ę.gan). City in S Lower Michigan, on the Kalamazoo River, county seat of Allegan County: hydroelectric power plant; manufactures of drugs and machine parts. 4,801 (1950).

Allegany (al.ę.gā'ni). Town in S New York, in Cattaraugus county: seat of St. Bonaventure College and Seminary. Allegany State Park and Allegany Indian Reservation are nearby. 1,738 (1950).

Allegash or Alleguash (al'ę.gash). See Allagash.

Allegheny (al.ę.gā'ni). Former city in SW Pennsylvania, in Allegheny County, on the Allegheny River, now a part of the city of Pittsburgh, with which it was incorporated in 1907.

Allegheny Mountains. [Also: Allegany (or Alleghany) Mountains, Alleghenies, Alleghanies.] Name given sometimes to the Appalachian Mountains, and sometimes to that part of this system which lies W and S of the Hudson River, but usually applied, in a restricted sense, to the chain which in Pennsylvania lies E of the Laurel Hill range. This chain crosses the W extremity of Maryland, traverses West Virginia, and forms part of the boundary between Virginia and West Virginia. Elevation, ab. 2,000–4,000 ft.

Allegheny Portage Railway. Railway connecting the eastern and western canals of the Pennsylvania system of canals, built in 1831–35 and covering the 36 mi. between Hollidaysburg and Johnstown, Pa. It was notable for its ten inclined planes, five on each side of Blair's Gap in the Allegheny Mountains. The planes, powered by stationary engines, made possible the ascent of the steep gradient. They were replaced by a continuous roadbed in 1856, and in the following year the Pennsylvania Railroad purchased the portage railway; soon thereafter it fell into disuse.

Allegheny River. Chief headstream of the Ohio River. It rises in Potter County, Pennsylvania, flows NW into Cattaraugus County, New York, reënters Pennsylvania, flows SW, and unites with the Monongahela at Pittsburgh to form the Ohio. Its chief tributaries are French Creek, the Clarion, and the Kiskiminetas. Length, ab. 325 mi.; navigable ab. 200 mi.

Allegri (äl.lā'grē), Gregorio. b. at Rome, 1582; d. there, Feb. 18, 1652. Italian composer of church music, especially of a Miserere for nine voices in two choirs still sung annually in the Sistine Chapel during Holy Week. The composition was at one time so treasured that its transcription was punishable by excommunication; it was copied, nevertheless, by Mozart and others. Allegri also wrote concertos, motets, and other works.

Alleine (al'in), Joseph. b. at Devizes, England, 1634; d. Nov. 17, 1668. English Puritan clergyman, scholar, and popular evangelist; associated with the founders of the Royal Society of London. He was assistant minister (1655–62) at Taunton until his ejection from the Church of England for nonconformity; thereafter he continued evangelical preaching in various parts of England in spite of frequent fines and imprisonment. He was the author of the enormously successful Alarm to the Unconverted (1672, republished as A Sure Guide to Heaven, 1675). He also wrote Remains (1674), and others.

Allemagne (äl.mäny'). French name of Germany.

Allemaine (al.ę.mān'). An early English name of Germany.

Allemand (äl.mäñ), Comte Zacharie Jacques Théodore. b. at Port Louis, Mauritius, 1762; d. at Toulon, France, March 2, 1826. French naval commander.

Allemane (âl.mân), Jean. b. at Sauveterre, Haute-Garonne, France, 1843; d. at Herblay, Seine-et-Oise, France, 1917. French political leader and journalist, known for his advocacy of the general strike as a weapon of the labor and socialist movements. He took part (1871) in the Paris Commune; was deported (1871) to New Caledonia, where he remained until 1880; and formed (1890) his own socialist party, called the Parti ouvrier socialiste-révolutionnaire, which found its principal strength among manual workers.

Allen (al'ẹn), Alexander Viets Griswold. b. at Otis, Mass., May 4, 1841; d. July 1, 1908. American clergyman, educator, and author. Ordained in the Episcopal Church (1866), he was instructor (1867–69) and professor (1869–1908) of church history at Cambridge Theological Seminary. He was the author of Continuity of Christian Thought (1884), and others.

Allen, Andrew. b. at Philadelphia, in June, 1740; d. at London, March 7, 1825. American lawyer and Loyalist during the Revolutionary War. Although elected to the Committee of Safety (1775) and present at the First Continental Congress, he opposed, probably from principle rather than self-gain, the decision to establish a government separate from Great Britain. His subsequent resignation from Congress and flight to Lord Howe at Trenton caused him in 1778 to be declared a traitor. Cooling of tempers after the war brought a pardon in 1792, but when he was unable to recover confiscated property he left for England, where he lived for the rest of his life on a pension of 400 pounds per year from the British government.

Allen, Anthony Benezet. b. in Hampshire County, Mass., June 24, 1802; d. Jan. 12, 1892. American stock-breeder, agricultural writer, and manufacturer of farming equipment. He was cofounder and editor (1842–56) of the American Agriculturist and a dealer in and manufacturer of farm machinery, much of it based on patented improvements developed by him, from 1847 to the end of his life.

Allen, Arabella. In Charles Dickens's Pickwick Papers, a young lady, afterward Mrs. Nathaniel Winkle.

Allen, Arthur Augustus. b. at Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 28, 1885—. American ornithologist, a lecturer and explorer in bird lore since 1912. He was an assistant professor (1915–25) and in 1925 became a professor of ornithology at Cornell. His publications include The Book of Bird Life (1930), The Golden Plover and Other Birds (1939), and others.

Allen, Barbara. See under Barbara Allen's Cruelty.

Allen, Benjamin. In Charles Dickens's Pickwick Papers, "a coarse, stout, thick-set" young surgeon, "with black hair cut rather short and a white face cut rather long."

Allen, Bennet Mills. b. at Greencastle, Ind., July 4, 1877—. American zoölogist and endocrinologist. A professor of zoölogy (1924 et seq.) at the University of California at Los Angeles, he is the author of papers on germ-cell origin, influence of endocrine glands upon growth, and others.

Allen, Bog of. Group of peat bogs of great extent, in Leinster province, in the Irish Republic, Counties Kildare, Westmeath, Offaly, and Laoighis. Specifically, the name applies to the bogs in the E portion of County Offaly and the NW portion of County Kildare. It occupies over 375 sq. mi.

Allen, Charles. b. at Greenfield, Mass., April 17, 1827; d. at Boston, Jan. 13, 1913. American jurist and occasional student of the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. He served (1867–72) as Massachusetts attorney general, after six years as reporter to the Massachusetts supreme court. Selected (1880) to head the commission which revised the Massachusetts general statutes, he was elevated (1882) to the post of associate justice of the state supreme court, which he held until 1898. He published in 1900 Notes on the Bacon-Shakespeare Question, in which he examined, through a lawyer's eyes, the evidence on both sides and concluded that the Baconians were without a case.

Allen, Charles Herbert. b. at Lowell, Mass., April 15, 1848; d. April 20, 1934. American banker and politician. He was a member of Congress (1885–89), assistant secretary of the navy (1898–1900), following Theodore Roosevelt in that post, and governor (1900–02) of Puerto Rico.

Allen, David Oliver. b. at Barre, Mass., Sept. 14, 1799; d. at Lowell, Mass., July 19, 1863. American Congregational missionary in India, notable for his work as translator and chief editor of the Marathi-dialect Bible published in 1855. He was the author also of India, Ancient and Modern (1856), and others.

Allen, Edgar. b. at Canon City, Colo., 1892; d. 1943. American endocrinologist and professor of anatomy. In 1919 he was an investigator for the U.S. Bureau of Fisheries at Woods Hole, Mass. After serving as professor of anatomy (1923–33) and dean of the medical school (1929–33) at Missouri, he became, in 1933, a professor of anatomy at Yale. Contributor of numerous technical papers to endocrinological, anatomical, and physiological journals.

Allen, Elisha Hunt. b. at New Salem, Mass., Jan. 28, 1804; d. at Washington, D.C., Jan. 1, 1883. American lawyer, politician, and diplomat. He was a member of the Maine House of Representatives (1835–40) and a Whig member of Congress (1841–43). In 1850 he was named consul to Hawaii and served later as Hawaiian minister of finance, chancellor, and chief justice until 1876; later he was the Hawaiian minister to the U.S. (1876–83).

Allen, Elizabeth. See Akers, Elizabeth Chase.

Allen, Ethan. b. at Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 10, 1738; d. at Burlington, Vt., Feb. 12, 1789. American Revolutionary commander. After serving (1757) in the French and Indian War, he took up residence (c1769) in the New Hampshire Grants (now Vermont), where, to resist New York's efforts at control, he organized (1770) and was colonel of the militia known as the "Green Mountain Boys"; this unit he used in the capture (1775), with Benedict Arnold, of Fort Ticonderoga from the British. A captive (1775–77) of the British after an unsuccessful attempt to take Montreal, he was, on his return, made a major general of the Vermont militia. In 1778 he presented Vermont's claim for statehood to the Continental Congress, but without success; thereafter, with his brothers Ira and Levi Allen, he negotiated with British forces, but whether to make Vermont a British province or simply to force recognition by Congress has never finally been established. Author of A Narrative of Col. Ethan Allen's Captivity (1779) and of Reason the Only Oracle of Man (1784), a work on deism.

Allen, Florence Ellinwood. b. at Salt Lake City, Utah, March 23, 1884—. American lawyer, the first American woman to be elevated to a state supreme court bench. She was an assistant county prosecutor (1919–20) and common pleas judge (1921 et seq.) in Ohio. After two terms as an Ohio supreme court judge (1922–34), she was in 1934 made a judge of the sixth U.S. circuit court of appeals.

Allen, Francis Richmond. b. at Boston, Mass., 1843; d. 1931. American architect. A student (1877–78) at the École des Beaux-Arts, Paris, he was later a member (1904–26) of the architectural firm of Allen and Collens. He designed twelve buildings at Vassar College and eight at Williams College, as well as many hospitals, churches, and residences, chiefly in the modern Gothic style.

Allen, Frederic De Forest. b. at Oberlin, Ohio, May 25, 1844; d. Aug. 4, 1897. American classical scholar. His teaching at Knoxville's University of East Tennessee (1868–73) was interrupted by two years at Leipzig under Georg Curtius, and followed by posts at the University of Cincinnati (1874–79) and Yale (1879). In 1880 he was appointed professor of classical philology at Harvard, and remained there for the rest of his life. Notable among his works is a revision (1884) of Hadley's Greek Grammar.

Allen, Frederick Lewis. b. at Boston, Mass., July 5, 1890—. American magazine-editor and historian. He served as assistant editor (1914–16) of the Atlantic Monthly, managing editor (1916–17) of the Century, and has been on the staff of Harper's Magazine since 1923, as associate editor (1931–41) and as editor (1941 et seq.). Author of Only Yesterday (1931), The Lords of Creation (1935), Since Yesterday (1940), I Remember Distinctly (1947), The Great Pierpont Morgan (1949), and The Big Change (1952).

Allen, Frederick Madison. b. at Des Moines, Ia., March 16, 1879—. American physician, notable as a specialist in diabetes. Author of Studies Concerning Glycosuria and Diabetes (1913).

Allen, Frederic Sturges. b. at Norwalk, Conn., Oct. 1, 1861; d. Aug. 8, 1920. American lexicographer. He was chief editor of the supplement (1900) to Webster's International Dictionary, a contributor of law material to the supplement of Appleton's Universal Encyclopedia, and general editor of Webster's New International Dictionary (1909). Author of Synonyms and Antonyms (1920), and others.

Allen, Fred Hovey. b. at Lyme, N.H., Oct. 1, 1845; d. Dec. 24, 1926. American Congregational clergyman and writer on fine arts. After ordination (1874) he served (1875–1902) various New England churches, and was also a director of an art gallery. He inaugurated the photogravure reproduction process in the U.S. by using it to produce plates for his Masterpieces of Modern German Art (1884). Author also of Glimpses of Parisian Art (1882), Modern German Masters (1885), Recent German Art (1885), Great Cathedrals of the World (1886), Famous Paintings (1887), and Grand Modern Paintings (1888). In addition to these works on art he wrote Popular History of the Reformation (1887).

Allen, George. b. at Milton, Vt., Dec. 17, 1808; d. May 28, 1876. American educator, author, and one-time Episcopal clergyman. Ordained (1834) and for three years minister at St. Albans, Vt., he returned to teaching (1837) at Delaware College, Newark, Del., from which he was appointed (1845) to the chair of Latin and Greek at the University of Pennsylvania. Two years later, in accord with his convictions as a member of the Oxford group, he joined the Roman Catholic church. His publications in the field of classical literature are negligible, and fail utterly to indicate the remarkable ability which contemporary accounts indicate he must have had as a teacher.

Allen, Glover Morrill. b. at Walpole, N.H., Feb. 8, 1879; d. Feb. 14, 1942. American naturalist and professor of zoölogy. He was a member of expeditions to the Bahamas (1904), to Liberia (1926), to Brazil (1929), and elsewhere. Author of Birds and Their Attributes (1925), Bats (1939), and others.

Allen, Grant. [Full name, Charles Grant Blairfindie Allen; pseudonyms: Cecil Power and J. Arbuthnot Wilson.] b. at Kingston, Ontario, Canada, Feb. 24, 1848; d. at Hindhead, Surrey, England, Oct. 25, 1899. English novelist, poet, essayist, scientist, and philosopher. Author of Strange Stories and Philistia (both 1884), The Devil's Die (1888), The Woman Who Did (1895), his best-known work and a sensation in its day because of its then startlingly frank discussion of freedom in sex, The British Barbarians (1896), An African Millionaire (1897), and other novels; of The Lower Slopes (1894), poetry; Falling in Love (1889) and Postprandial Philosophy (1894), collected essays; and of scientific and philosophical works including Physiological Aesthetics (1877; dedicated to Herbert Spencer), Color Sense (1879), Vignettes from Nature, An Evolutionist at Large, and Anglo-Saxon Britain (all 1881), Colors of Flowers (1882), Colin Clout's Calendar: The Record of a Summer and Flowers and Their Pedigrees (both 1883; the former highly praised by Huxley and Darwin), Force and Energy (1888), and Evolution of the Idea of God (1897).

Allen, Harrison. b. at Philadelphia, April 17, 1841; d. there, Nov. 14, 1897. American anatomist and naturalist. He served as assistant surgeon in the U.S. army (1862–65) and was professor of comparative anatomy and later of physiology at the University of Pennsylvania (1865 et seq.).

Allen, Henry. See Alline, Henry.

Allen, Henry Tureman. b. at Sharpsburg, Ky., April 13, 1859; d. at Buena Vista Spring, Pa., Aug. 30, 1930. American army officer who was commander (1919–23) of the American army of occupation in Germany after World War I. A graduate (1882) and instructor (1888–90) at West Point, he was a military attaché in Russia (1890–95) and Germany (1897–98). After the Spanish-American War, he was governor (1901) of Leyte, and organizer and head (1903) of the Philippine constabulary. He also served with the Mexican punitive expedition (1916). He held the rank of brigadier general in World War I. Author of The Rhineland Occupation (1926) and others.

Allen, Henry Watkins. b. in Prince Edward County, Va., April 29, 1820; d. at Mexico City, April 22, 1866. American soldier and public administrator, with the Confederate army in the Civil War. The early period of his life was marked by idealistic fervor, which led him into the Texan army (1842) and later (1854) into sailing to Europe for service under Garibaldi. He joined the Confederate army at the outset of the Civil War, and rose to brigadier general after displaying great personal courage at Shiloh, the defense of Vicksburg, and elsewhere. Elected (1864) governor of Louisiana, he showed extraordinary ability in organizing the resources of the state. Largely through his efforts, the Trans-Mississippi Department of the Confederacy was actually stronger at the end of the war than during it. Allen wisely counseled against attempting further resistance, however, and fled to Mexico to escape Union imprisonment.

Allen, Hervey. [Full name, William Hervey Allen.] b. at Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 8, 1889; d. at Miami, Fla., Dec. 28, 1949. American novelist, biographer, and poet, author of the tremendously successful Anthony Adverse (1933), a long historical novel. His two-volume Israfel (1926), although never so widely read, is considered to be among the best biographies of Poe. He collaborated with Du Bose Heyward on Carolina Chansons (1922), a volume of verse; among his other novels are Action at Aquila (1937) and It Was Like This (1940), as well as a series of three related novels, The Forest and the Fort (1943), Bedford Village (1944), and Toward the Morning (1948).

Allen, Horace Newton. b. at Delaware, Ohio, April 23, 1858; d. Dec. 11, 1932. American Presbyterian clergyman, medical missionary, and diplomat. Sent to Korea (1884), he became medical consultant to the Korean royal family, and aided the Koreans in setting up a diplomatic service at Washington. He was secretary of the U.S. legation at Seoul (1890 et seq.), and was appointed (1897) U.S. minister to Korea.

Allen, Horatio. b. at Schenectady, N.Y., May 10, 1802; d. near South Orange, N.J., Jan. 1, 1890. American civil engineer and pioneer railroad authority. He was employed (1825–29) by the Delaware and Hudson Company, for whom he purchased (1828) four locomotives in England; his trial operation (Aug. 9, 1829) of the first of these at Honesdale, Pa., made him the first man to operate a steam locomotive in the U.S. As chief engineer (1829–35) for the South Carolina Railroad, he directed the construction of the locomotive "Best Friend of Charleston." For many years consulting engineer to the Erie Railroad, he was at one time (1843) its president; he was retained after his retirement (1870) as consulting engineer for the construction of the Brooklyn Bridge and Panama Railroad.

Allen, Sir Hugh Percy. b. at Reading, England, Dec. 23, 1869; d. at Oxford, England, 1946. English organist; conductor (1907 et seq.) of the London Bach Choir; professor (1918 et seq.) of music at Oxford, and successor (1918) to Sir Hubert Parry as director of the Royal College of Music. He retired from the latter post in 1938.

Allen, Ira. b. at Cornwall, Conn., May 1, 1751; d. at Philadelphia, Jan. 15, 1814. American Revolutionary soldier and politician; brother of Ethan Allen (1738–89). He was a leader in the Windsor Convention (1777) which declared the independence of Vermont and drew up its constitution; thereafter he was, with his brothers, instrumental in maintaining Vermont's independence and working for recognition of its statehood. He served as a member of the governor's council (1777), first state treasurer (1778), and representative of the state in negotiations (1781–91) with other states and with British forces. He was a sponsor and donor of land (1789) in the founding of the University of Vermont. Author of Natural and Political History of the State of Vermont (1798), and others.

Allen, Sir James. b. in South Australia, 1855; d. 1942. New Zealand politician and dominion official. Taken to New Zealand from Australia by his parents in infancy, he was educated in England. After election (1887) to the New Zealand legislature, he became minister of defense (1915–20) and high commissioner from New Zealand at London (1920–26). Author of several pamphlets and articles pertaining to the development and defense of New Zealand.

Allen, James Lane. b. near Lexington, Ky., Dec. 21, 1849; d. at New York, Feb. 18, 1925. American novelist. A schoolmaster (1872 et seq.) and professor of Latin and English (1880–83) at Bethany College, in West Virginia, he published critical essays and poetry in Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, and other journals. Author of such stories and novels on the Old South as Flute and Violin (1891), A Kentucky Cardinal (1894), Aftermath (1895), A Summer in Arcady (1896), The Choir Invisible (1897), The Reign of Law (1900), The Mettle of the Pasture (1903), The Bride of the Mistletoe (1909), The Doctor's Christmas Eve (1910), and The Sword of Youth (1914).

Allen, Jeremiah Mervin. b. at Enfield, Conn., May 18, 1833; d. Dec. 29, 1903. American engineer and businessman, notable as a pioneer in steam-boiler insurance. In 1867 he was selected to head a newly established company at Hartford, Conn., for the inspection and insurance of steam boilers. He remained in this post to the end of his life, serving also at various times as president of Hartford's board of trade, of the Y.M.C.A., and of the board of trustees for what is now the Hartford Theological Seminary.

Allen, Joel Asaph. b. at Springfield, Mass., July 19, 1838; d. at Cornwall-on-Hudson, N.Y., Aug. 29, 1921. American zoölogist, a specialist in mammalogy; student of J. L. R. Agassiz, whom he accompanied (1865) on the expedition to Brazil. He was curator of birds at the Harvard Museum of Comparative Zoölogy (1867–85), and of the department of birds and mammals at the American Museum of Natural History, New York (1885–1921). Author of Mammals and Winter Birds of Eastern Florida (1871), The American Bisons, Living and Extinct (1876), History of North American Pinnipeds (1880), and others.

Allen, John. b. at Colinton, near Edinburgh, Feb. 3, 1771; d. at Dulwich, England, April 10, 1843. British political and historical writer, secretary to Lord Holland; author of Growth of the Royal Prerogative in England (1830), and others.

Allen, John. b. in Broome County, N.Y., Nov. 4, 1810; d. March 8, 1892. American dentist. His invention of a denture employing platinum plate and gum-colored porcelain (patented 1851) involved him in eventually unsuccessful litigation for patent infringement with Dr. W. M. Hunter, but Allen is still regarded as a pioneer in denture development in the U.S. He aided in the establishment (1845) of Ohio College of Dental Surgery, the second dental college to be established in the U.S., and of the New York College of Dentistry (1865).

Allen, John F. b. in England, 1829; d. Oct. 2, 1900. American engineer and inventor. He devised a valve motion which made possible a pioneer high-speed steam engine, developed an inclined-tube vertical water-tube boiler, and originated two kinds of pneumatic riveting, for which he manufactured air compressors and pneumatic hammers.

Allen, John James. b. at Woodstock, Va., Sept. 25, 1797; d. at Botecourt, Va., Sept. 18, 1871. American jurist, an ardent partisan of the Confederacy. Service in the state legislature and one term (1833–35) in Congress were followed by judicial appointments culminating in that of president (1851–65) of the court of appeals. His cogency of thinking was displayed in a striking manner by a statement of Virginia's attitude toward secession which was adopted as the preamble to a resolution (Dec. 10, 1860) urging withdrawal from the Union.

Allen, Joseph Henry. b. at Northboro, Mass., Aug. 21, 1820; d. at Cambridge, Mass., March 20, 1898. American author, editor, Latin scholar, and Unitarian clergyman. He was associate editor (1863–65) of the Christian Examiner and editor (1887–91) of the Unitarian Review; he also prepared a Latin Primer (1870), as well as numerous other once widely used Latin textbooks, in association with his brother, W. F. Allen (1830–89), and with J. B. Greenough.

Allen, Lewis Falley. b. at Westfield, Mass., Jan. 1, 1800; d. May 2, 1890. American stock-breeder and agricultural writer; brother of A. B. Allen (1802–92) and R. L. Allen (1803–69). He was the founder and first editor of the American Shorthorn Herdbook, a contributor to A. B. Allen's American Agriculturist, and author of Rural Architecture (1852), American Cattle (1868), and History of the Shorthorn Cattle (1872).

Allen, Lough. Lake in Connacht province, Irish Republic, in Counties Leitrim and Roscommon. An expansion of the river Shannon, ab. 7 mi. below its headwaters, it is the highest of the numerous lakes on that river. Elevation, 161 ft.; length, ab. 8 mi.; greatest width, ab. 4 mi.

Allen, Nathan. b. at Princeton, Mass., April 25, 1813; d. Jan. 1, 1889. American physician and medical writer, notable for his studies of insanity and birth-rate phenomena. Early service (1839–41) as editor of the American Phrenological Journal and Miscellany (which at that time still attracted reputable scientific attention) was followed by the practice of medicine at Lowell, Mass. His Physiological Laws of Human Increase (1868, 1870) and Changes in the New England Population (1877) dealt, respectively, with the possible adverse effect on fertility of hyperactivity in a single organ, and the theory that the falling birth-rate of native New Englanders as opposed to immigrants might be explained by relatively poorer health.

Allen, Nathan Hale. b. at Marion, Mass., April 14, 1848; d. 1925. American organist and composer. Study (1867–70) in Germany was followed by service as organist at New Bedford and Worcester, Mass., and at Hartford, Conn. Composer of The Apotheosis of Saint Dorothy (1891), The New-Born King (1904), and others.

Allen, Paul. b. at Providence, R.I., Feb. 15, 1775; d. at Baltimore, Md., Aug. 18, 1826. American poet, historical writer, and editor. Graduation (1793) from what is now Brown University was followed by the publication of Original Poems, Serious and Entertaining (1801) and subsequent editorial posts at Philadelphia and Baltimore.

Allen, Philip. b. at Providence, R.I., Sept. 1, 1785; d. Dec. 16, 1865. American politician and textile manufacturer. He was governor of Rhode Island (1851–53) and a U.S. senator (1853–59).

Allen, Ralph. b. 1694; d. at Bath, England, June 20, 1764. English philanthropist, known chiefly as a friend of Fielding, Pope, and the elder Pitt. He acquired a fortune by devising (1720) a postal system for England and Wales. He is said to have been the original of Squire Allworthy in Fielding's Tom Jones.

Allen, Richard. b. at Philadelphia, Feb. 14, 1760; d. March 26, 1831. American clergyman. Born a Negro slave, he obtained his freedom when Methodist religious convictions won over his master; he was accepted as a Methodist preacher and held pulpit as an itinerant minister (1784 et seq.) in numerous churches. Following a display of race prejudice at Philadelphia's Saint George Methodist Church (c1786), he aided in the establishment of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and became its first bishop in 1816.

Allen, Richard Lamb. b. at Westfield, Mass., Oct. 20, 1803; d. at Stockholm, Sweden, Sept. 22, 1869. American stock-breeder, agricultural editor, and manufacturer of farm machinery; cofounder with his brother, A. B. Allen (1802–92), of the American Agriculturist. He was a member (1847 et seq.) of the firm of A. B. Allen and Company, which sold and manufactured various kinds of farm machinery. His Brief Compend of American Agriculture (1846), which was reissued (1869) as the New American Farm Book, was for decades widely used by farmers.

Allen, Robert. b. in Ohio, in July, 1812; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, Aug. 5, 1886. American soldier, member of the Union army during the Civil War. He served in the Mexican War and in California. During most of the Civil War he was chief quartermaster for armies based on St. Louis and, later, Louisville, in support of campaigns against Vicksburg, Atlanta, and elsewhere.

Allen, Samuel. b. in England, c1636; d. at Newcastle, N.H., May 5, 1705. English merchant, proprietor and colonial governor of what is now the state of New Hampshire.

Allen, Thomas. b. at Uttoxeter, England, Dec. 21, 1542; d. at Oxford, England, Sept. 30, 1632. English mathematician, astrologer, and antiquary; collector of manuscripts on history, astronomy, mathematics, and philosophy, some of which are still preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. Patronized by the earls of Northumberland and Leicester, he was popularly considered a magician.

Allen, Thomas. b. at Pittsfield, Mass., Aug. 29, 1813; d. at Washington, D.C., April 8, 1882. American railroad financier, politician, and one-time newspaper editor. He established (1837) the Madisonian at Washington, D.C., to support William Henry Harrison against the Van Buren wing of the Democratic Party, but withdrew on Harrison's death and moved (1842) to St. Louis, where he became a key figure in the 19th-century financing of western railroads, particularly with the founding (1858) of the banking firm of Allen, Copp and Nisbet. He served (1880–82) in Congress.

Allen, Thomas M. b. in Virginia, Oct. 21, 1797; d. Oct. 10, 1871. American minister of the Disciples of Christ, farmer, and philanthropist. Baptized (1823) by B. W. Stone and ordained two years later, he was for many years an influential member of his sect, establishing churches and preaching widely in Kentucky and Missouri. Although himself a slave-owner, he opposed secession. He was active in raising funds for the University of Missouri and was a founder of Missouri's Christian Female College.

Allen, Timothy Field. b. at Westminster, Vt., April 24, 1837; d. Dec. 5, 1902. American homeopathic physician, ophthalmic surgeon, and botanist. Professor (1867 et seq.) of materia medica and therapeutics at New York Homeopathic Medical College; surgeon (1884 et seq.) at New York Ophthalmic Hospital; a founder (1871) of the Torrey Botanical Club, and owner of an outstanding collection of stoneworts. Author of a ten-volume Encyclopedia of Materia Medica (1874 et seq.), Ophthalmic Therapeutics (1876), and others.

Allen, Viola. b. at Huntsville, Ala., Oct. 27, 1869; d. at New York, May 9, 1948. American actress. She made her stage debut at the age of 15 in Esmeralda.

Allen, William. b. at Rossall, Lancashire, England, 1532; d. at Rome, Oct. 16, 1594. English cardinal and controversialist. He was principal of St. Mary's Hall, Oxford (1556); opposed to the accession of Elizabeth, he fled (1561) to Louvain, returning to England to live in hiding (1562–65). He founded the English Catholic seminary at Douai (1568), under Spanish patronage, but was forced by a Flemish uprising to move to Reims (1578), where he began what is now known as the Douay version of the Bible (1582–1609). Created a cardinal (1587) by Pope Sixtus V and commissioned to reorganize English ecclesiastical affairs after Philip II's proposed Spanish conquest of England, he wrote An Admonition to the Nobility and People of England (1588) to stir up sentiment against Elizabeth. After the failure of the Armada, he was made Vatican librarian under Pope Gregory XIV, and a member of the commission to revise the Vulgate.

Allen, William. b. Aug. 5, 1704; d. Sept. 6, 1780. American jurist and merchant, prominent in the pre-Revolutionary development of Pennsylvania. He served (1750–51) on the Pennsylvania-Maryland boundary commission; laid out (1765) the community later to be known as Allentown; urged compromise with England in 1774; and retired to the mother country when these recommendations were refused.

Allen, William. b. at Pittsfield, Mass., Jan. 2, 1784; d. at Northampton, Mass., July 16, 1868. American Congregational clergyman, educator, and author. He sided with New Hampshire in its attempt to reorganize Dartmouth College as Dartmouth University, and headed the latter institution from 1817 until the Supreme Court decision of 1819 put it out of existence. As president of Bowdoin (1819 et seq.), he was once nearly forced out of office by the Maine legislature, and finally resigned (1838) because of unpopularity with both students and trustees.

Allen, William. [Called "Earthquake Allen," "Petticoat Allen," and "the Ohio Gong."] b. at Edenton, N.C., Dec. 18, 1803; d. near Chillicothe, Ohio, July 11, 1879. American politician; Democratic congressman from Ohio (1833–35), U.S. senator (1837–49), and governor of Ohio (1874–76). He was a leading expounder of the "Ohio Idea," a scheme (1868–76) for the payment in greenbacks of U.S. bonds issued during the Civil War and later, and for the general use of greenbacks in place of national-bank notes.

Allen, William Frederick. b. at Bordentown, N.J., Oct. 9, 1846; d. Nov. 9, 1915. American railroad engineer and editor, notable for his efforts on behalf of standard time. His early career (1862–72) on the technical staff of the Camden and Amboy Railroad was followed by work with the Official Guide of the Railways and Steam Navigation Lines, an omnibus volume of travel data. His experience with this publication enabled him to argue effectively for standard time when it was urged by the railroads in the late 19th century, and brought him the post of secretary and treasurer to the American Railway Association.

Allen, William Harvey. b. at Leroy, Minn., Feb. 9, 1874—. American social worker. He studied at Leipzig and Berlin; became the first editor of the New Jersey Review of Charities; acted as general agent of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor (1903–07) and as director of the Bureau of Municipal Research (1908). A member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science and of the American Sociological Society, he has written Civics and Health, Efficient Democracy, and Modern Philanthropy.

Allen, William Henry. b. at Providence, R.I., Oct. 21, 1784; d. in Mill Prison, Plymouth, England, Aug. 18, 1813. American naval officer, commander of the 20-gun sloop-of-war Argus. He was wounded during an engagement in the War of 1812 with the English brig Pelican in the Irish Channel, and died of his wounds in a British prison. He had seen earlier service aboard the frigate Chesapeake, on which he was the man who snatched a hot coal from the galley to fire the only shot of that vessel's ill-fated encounter (1807) with the Leopard.

Allen, William Henry. b. at Manchester, Me., March 27, 1808; d. at Philadelphia, Aug. 29, 1882. American educator. He was professor of natural philosophy and afterward of philosophy and English literature at Dickinson College (1836–49); president (1865–66) of Pennsylvania Agricultural College at Gettysburg; and president (1850–62 and 1867–82) of Girard College.

Allen, William Vincent. b. at Midway, Ohio, Jan. 28, 1847; d. Jan. 12, 1924. American Populist politician, senator from Nebraska (1894–1901). Elected by a coalition of Populists and Democrats, Allen was a vigorous spokesman for free coinage of silver and for other planks in the Populist platform. His 15-hour filibuster against the repeal of the Sherman Silver Purchase Act failed in its purpose, but marked him as a third-party force to be reckoned with. Hailed by some as "the intellectual giant of Populism," he supported a Populist-Democratic merger in 1896, and subsequently joined the Democratic Party.

Allen, Young John. b. in Burke County, Ga., Jan. 3, 1836; d. at Shanghai, May 30, 1907. American Methodist missionary, educator, and Far Eastern journalist. He arrived (1860) in China as Georgia's first "missionary ambassador" to that nation and was forced by the American Civil War to sustain the entire mission establishment for the next 15 years virtually without aid from his American sponsors. He translated upwards of 90 volumes from English into Chinese and, particularly with his Review of the Times (1867 et seq.), advanced the cause of Western journalism in China; founder (1882) of Shanghai's Anglo-Chinese College, which later became part of Soochow University.

Allen, Zachariah. b. at Providence, R.I., Sept. 15, 1795; d. there, March 17, 1882. American scientist and inventor. He was the first to construct (1821) a hot-air furnace for heating dwelling-houses; he also invented the automatic cut-off valve for steam-engines (patented 1834). Author of The Science of Mechanics (1829), Philosophy of the Mechanics of Nature (1852), The Rhode Island System of Treatment of the Indians and of Establishing Civil and Religious Liberty (1876), Solar Light and Heat, the Source and Supply (1881), and others.

Allen-a-Dale (al″ən.ə.dāl′). [Also, Allan-a-Dale.] In the Robin Hood tales, a brave, gaily dressed, and musical youth whom Robin Hood assisted to elope with his bride who was to be married against her will to an old knight. He is usually introduced as "chaunting a round-de-lay." He appears as Robin Hood's minstrel in Scott's Ivanhoe.

Allenburg (äl′ən.bürk). Small town in what was formerly the province of East Prussia, situated on the Alle River ab. 30 mi. SE of Königsberg. This area is now under control of the U.S.S.R.

Allenby (al′ən.bi), Edmund Henry Hynman. [Title, 1st Viscount Allenby of Megiddo and Felixstowe.] b. in Suffolk, England, April 23, 1861; d. at London, May 14, 1936. British field marshal. He served in Bechuanaland (1884–85) and against the Zulus (1888), and fought with cavalry forces in the relief of Kimberley and elsewhere in the Boer War (1899–1902). After entering World War I as commander of a cavalry division, he was cited for the record at Mons, on the Aisne, and at Ypres, and was given command of a cavalry corps, finally becoming (1916) III Army commander. His transfer (1917) to the command of the Egyptian Expeditionary Force led to the invasion of Palestine and capture (Dec. 9, 1917) of Jerusalem; his victory at Megiddo (1918) led to the fall of Damascus and Aleppo, and final Turkish capitulation.

He was subsequently British high commissioner for Egypt (1919–25).

Allendale (al'en.dāl). Civil parish in NE England, in Northumberland, situated on the East Allen River, ab. 27 mi. W of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. In a region where formerly extensive lead mining was carried on, it is now of little importance. 2,218 (1931).

Allendale. Town in S South Carolina, county seat of Allendale County, ab. 67 mi. SW of Columbia, in an agricultural area. 2,474 (1950).

Allende (ä.yen'dā). [Former name, San Bartolomé.] Hamlet and hacienda in N Mexico, in S Chihuahua, the first Spanish establishment in Chihuahua (1570). Pop. ab. 2,000.

Allende, Ignacio José. b. at San Miguel el Grande (now San Miguel de Allende, in his honor), in what is now the state of Guanajuato, Mexico, Jan. 27, 1779; executed at Chihuahua, Mexico, June 26, 1811. Mexican revolutionary patriot, and a captain in the Spanish army; son of a Spaniard, Narciso Allende. With his regiment, he declared for Mexican independence (1810) and joined (with Juan Aldama) the insurrection of Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, whom he succeeded (1811) as actual commander.

Allen Park. Village in S Lower Michigan, in Wayne County: a suburb of Detroit. 12,329 (1950).

Allentown (al'ẹn.toun). Borough in C New Jersey, in Monmouth County, ab. 11 mi. SE of Trenton. 931 (1950).

Allentown. [Former names, Northampton, Northamptontown.] City in E Pennsylvania, county seat of Lehigh County, on the Lehigh River, ab. 50 mi. NW of Philadelphia: the chief trading center of the Lehigh valley. Manufactures include cotton and silk textiles, clothing, steel, barbed wire, and cement. It is the seat of Muhlenberg College and Cedar Crest College. Platted in 1762, it was incorporated in 1811 and renamed (1838) for William Allen. Pop. of city, 96,904 (1940), 106,756 (1950); of urbanized area (including Bethlehem), 225,962 (1950).

Alleppey (ạ.lep'i). [Also: Alapalli, Allapalli, Alleppi.] Seaport in Travancore state, Union of India, ab. 130 mi. below Calicut. Coconuts are shipped from here. 56,333 (1941).

Aller (ä.lyer'). Town in NW Spain, in the province of Oviedo, ab. 20 mi. SE of Oviedo: an agricultural trade center, with small industries. There are coal, iron, and lead mines in the vicinity. 23,600 (1940).

Allerheim on the Ries (äl'ėr.hīm; rēs). [Also, Allersheim (äl'ėrs.hīm).] Village ab. 6 mi. SE of Nördlingen, Bavaria. Here, on Aug. 3, 1645, during the Thirty Years' War, the French under Condé defeated the forces of the Holy Roman Empire under Franz von Mercy (who fell). This encounter is sometimes called the second battle of Nördlingen.

Aller River (äl'ėr). River in N Germany which joins the Weser ab. 18 mi. SE of Bremen. Length, ab. 100 mi.; navigable from Celle.

Allerton (al'ėr.tọn), Isaac. b. probably in England, c1586; d. at New Haven, Conn., 1659. One of the "Pilgrim Fathers" who arrived (1620) in America on the Mayflower. He served as assistant (1621–24) to Governor Bradford; as agent in Europe (1625–31), he secured enough supplies to end the colony's poverty, transportation for the remaining "Leyden Pilgrims" (1629), and the Patent of 1630 giving the colony title to its lands. Deprived of his position (1631) for unauthorized trading, he settled (c1644) at New Haven.

Allerton, Samuel Waters. b. at Amenia Union, N.Y., May 26, 1828; d. at South Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 22, 1914. American meat-packer, banker, and leader in the development of modern Chicago. His early farming and trading ventures were followed (1860) by a coup that cornered the Chicago pork market; later interests in the First National Bank of Chicago (1863 et seq.) and various stockyards increased his wealth. He advocated (1865) the union stockyards which came into being the next year, and which contributed considerably to Chicago's preëminence as a meat-packing center.

Allestree (al'ẹs.trē), Richard. b. at Uppington, Shropshire, England, in March, 1619; d. at London, Jan. 28, 1681. English royalist clergyman and scholar. He was a soldier and emissary for Prince Charles (later to be Charles II) in the English Civil War. After the Restoration, he was made chaplain to Charles II, canon of Christ Church College, and regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1663); in 1665 he became provost of Eton. Author of many tracts, including Privileges of the University of Oxford (1647), sermons, and, at least in part, of The Whole Duty of Man.

Allevard (ål.vàr). Town in SE France, in the department of Isère, situated on the Breda River ab. 23 mi. NE of Grenoble. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Alley (al'i), Rewi. b. at Springfield, New Zealand, Dec. 2, 1899—. New Zealand industrial organizer in China. Of Anglo-Irish parentage, he was named by his father after a Maori chieftain. A sheep farmer (1920–26) in New Zealand, he served as factory inspector (1927–32) and chief factory inspector (1932–37) for the Shanghai Municipal Council. After the fall (1937) of Shanghai to the Japanese, he organized (1937–42), with the sanction of Chiang Kai-shek, a chain of industrial coöperatives for the Chinese National Government throughout China.

Alleyn (al'in), Edward. [Also: Alleyne; called Ned Allen.] b. at London, Sept. 1, 1566; d. Nov. 25, 1626. English actor; son-in-law of John Donne. He was the founder (1613) and director (1619–26) of Dulwich College (the College of God's Gift), at London. Rated by Jonson, Nash, and others as the foremost actor, especially of tragedy, of his time, he was a member of the Earl of Worcester's players (1586 et seq.), head of the Lord Admiral's (Earl of Nottingham's) company (c1592), and owner-manager, with Henslowe, of various London theaters including the Rose and the Fortune (built in 1600), and of a bearbaiting house at Paris Garden (1594–1626). He played leads in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, Tamburlaine, and Doctor Faustus; his last known appearance was at a reception address to James I (c1604).

All Fools' Day. See April Fools' Day.

All Fools, or All Fools but the Fool. Tragi-comedy by George Chapman, printed in 1605. It was first called The World on Wheels, and registered in 1599. It is considered by some to be the best of his comedies.

All for Love, or the World Well Lost. Tragedy by John Dryden, produced in 1678. It is based on Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra. In this play Dryden abandoned rhyme.

Allgäu (äl'goi). See Algäu.

Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U.S. 578 (1897) (ôl'gī''ėr). U.S. Supreme Court decision remembered for Justice Rufus W. Peckham's comprehensive definition of the right to contract as an essential part of liberty guaranteed by due process of law. His interpretaton was repeatedly cited in later decisions holding illegal various types of social and economic legislation.

All God's Chillun Got Wings. Drama by Eugene O'Neill, produced and published in 1924. The plot involves the difficulties arising from the marriage of Jim Harris, a Negro, and Ella Downey, a white girl whose confusions finally manifest themselves in insanity.

All-Hallows Day (ôl''hal'ōz). See All Saints Day.

Allia (al'i.ạ). [Also, Alia; modern name, Aga.] In ancient geography, a small river in Latium, Italy, joining the Tiber ab. 10 mi. N of Rome. On its banks in c390 B.C., the Gauls under Brennus defeated the Romans. The battle was followed by the capture and sack of Rome.

Alliaco (dal.yā'kō), Petrus d'. Latinized name of Ailly, Pierre d'.

Alliance (ạ.lī'ạns). City in NW Nebraska, county seat of Box Butte County: trading center in an agricultural region, one of the chief crops being potatoes. 7,891 (1950).

Alliance. City in NE Ohio, in Stark County, on the Mahoning River, ab. 48 mi. SE of Cleveland: important for the manufacture of steel cranes and heavy mill machinery. Car wheels and twist drills are shipped from here. Manufactures also include pipe organs, safes, cash registers, ceramics, and paints. It is the seat of Mount Union College. The city was formed (1854) by the union of an early 19th-century Quaker settlement with Freedom, Williamsport, and Mount Union, and incorporated in 1889. Pop. 26,161 (1950).

Alliance. Frigate in the American service built in 1778 which saw action until the last naval engagement (March 10, 1783) of the Revolutionary War. It carried 36 guns.

Allibone (al'i.bōn), Samuel Austin. b. at Philadelphia, April 17, 1816; d. at Lucerne, Switzerland, Sept. 2, 1889. American bibliographer; librarian (1879–88) of the Lenox Library, New York. Author of A Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors 1858–71), Poetical Quotations from Chaucer to Tennyson (1873), Prose Quotations from Socrates to Macauley (1876), and others.

Allied Advisory Council for Italy. Advisory body established in accord with agreements reached during World War II by the Allies at the 1943 Moscow Conference. With a membership that included the U.S., the U.S.S.R., Great Britain, France, Greece, and Yugoslavia, it sought to advise the Allied commander in chief in Italy on general political matters. Meeting first at Algiers, it was moved in April, 1944, to Italy.

Allied Airborne Army, First. Anglo-American military force that took part in several major operations during World War II. Its existence under the command of U.S. General Lewis Hyde Brereton was officially revealed on Aug. 10, 1944, although three of its five major fighting units (the British 6th Airborne Division, the U.S. 82nd Airborne Division, and the U.S. 101st Airborne Division) had already participated in the invasion (June 6, 1944) of Normandy. At its peak strength, the First Allied Airborne Army consisted of the U.S. XVIIIth Corps (17th, 82nd, and 101st Airborne divisions), the British Airborne Troops Command (1st and 6th Airborne divisions), three major troop-carrier groups (one from the U.S. Army Air Force and two from the Royal Air Force), and several smaller units of various kinds. Sizable elements of the army took part in the unsuccessful effort (Sept. 17, 1944) to win a bridgehead across the Rhine at Arnhem, in the Netherlands, and in the later (March 24, 1945) successful landing across the Rhine and behind the enemy line, in Germany.

Allied Commission on Reparations. International body established at the Yalta Conference in February, 1945. The commission (which had its seat at Moscow) was charged with the formulation of a common reparations policy for Germany after World War II. It was never truly successful in defining such a policy, partly because of Russia's looting of territory under its control in Germany and partly because of the entanglement of reparations problems with that of German demilitarization. It did, however, advance a general plan calling for (1) the payment of reparations in goods rather than money, and on a basis of loss suffered by the claimant nations; (2) removal of German industrial equipment not required for the minimum economy deemed essential for that country, in order that no surplus might be available for rearmament; and (3) the maintenance of a German economic structure which would enable German self-support. The plan was completed during the first two weeks of July, 1945, and submitted for approval at the Potsdam Conference (July 17–Aug. 2, 1945). With certain qualifications (the chief one being that reparations should be obtained largely on a zonal rather than interzonal basis) it was accepted. However, this qualification, plus the increasing dissension between the U.S.S.R. and the other occupying powers, effectively defeated the avowed purpose of both the Commission and its plan.

Allied Control Commission for Austria. International body formally set up after World War II by Allied agreement on June 28, 1946, with representation from the U.S., Great Britain, the U.S.S.R., and France. Through zonal commands, it was entrusted with maintaining the integrity of the Austrian state, with helping the Austrian government establish a democratic national life, and with eradication of traces of Nazi life. Its avowed chief purpose was to bring into being as soon as possible a full-fledged popular government in Austria. By the terms of its establishment, and until the signing of a peace treaty acceptable to the four occupying powers, the U.S. zone includes the province of Salzburg and most of Upper Austria; the French, the province of Vorarlberg-Tirol other than East Tirol; the British, East Tirol, Carinthia, and Styria; and the Russian, Lower Austria, part of Upper Austria, and Burgenland. The Commission meets in Vienna, which in turn is divided into four zones.

Allied Control Commission for Finland. International body established during World War II by the terms of the armistice agreement signed at Moscow on Sept. 19, 1944, by Finland, Great Britain, and the U.S.S.R. Its purpose was to supervise and ensure the carrying out by Finland of the terms of the armistice. Although the commission included representatives of Great Britain, it was for all practical purposes dominated by its Russian members, whose chief aim was to secure the existence of a Finnish government which could be counted on to coöperate with Moscow.

Allied Control Commission for Germany. Term sometimes applied to the group of deputy Allied commanders in Germany charged with the preparation of drafts of plans and decisions for the Allied Control Council for Germany. The term is also sometimes applied to the Allied Control Council itself.

Allied Control Commission for Italy. Joint commission of Great Britain and the U.S. created on Nov. 10, 1943, by General Eisenhower to regulate and execute the terms of armistice for Italy. It was assimilated in January, 1944, with the formal agency for Allied military government. As time went on, its functions became less and less administrative, taking on a general supervisory character. The word "Control" in its title was dropped in the fall of 1944. It formally ceased to exist after the Italian peace treaty was signed in 1947.

Allied Control Council for Germany. International body which was, at the time of its establishment after World War II, the highest organ of the Allied Military Government organization for Germany. Its plan and scope were worked out by the European Advisory Commission and finally approved by the Potsdam Conference. The Allied Control Council which began to function officially at the beginning of August, 1945, consisted of the four Allied military commanders in Germany (General Eisenhower, for the U.S.; Field Marshal Montgomery, for Great Britain; Marshal Zhukov, for the U.S.S.R.; General Koenig, for France). It was supposed, through its meetings at Berlin, to implement the Potsdam Agreement, but soon proved incapable of reaching agreement on common policies for Germany. It finally broke up in April, 1948.

Allied Council for Japan. International body established (December, 1945) by joint decision at Moscow of the foreign ministers of Great Britain, the U.S., and the U.S.S.R. It was conceived of as an advisory and consultative organization subordinate, for all practical purposes, to the occupying military authorities. Its original membership consisted of a representative of the U.S., a representative of the U.S.S.R., a representative of China, and a joint representative of Great Britain, India, Australia, and New Zealand. Its permanent chairman was General MacArthur, who held that office by virtue of his position as supreme commander of the Allied forces in the Far East. Its permanent seat was at Tokyo.

Allied Military Government. [Abbreviation, AMG; original abbreviation, AMGOT.] Term applied to the various interim governmental structures, usually under military control, established during and immediately following World War II in Japan and various parts of Europe and N Africa. In this sense all the governmental machinery of the occupying powers in Germany, Austria, and Japan may be called Allied Military Government (although in certain cases a particular power may be so dominant as to make the term "Allied" somewhat of a misnomer). In a specific sense, the term is often applied to the military government set up (July, 1943) in Sicily under the overall direction of General Eisenhower, who was at that time supreme commander of Allied forces in the Mediterranean. The functions of this organization, as well as a considerable portion of its Anglo-American staff, were transferred in November, 1943, to the Allied Control Commission for Italy.

Allier (ä.lyā). Department in C France, bounded by the department of Cher on the NW, Nièvre department on the N, Saône-et-Loire department on the E, Loire department on the SE, Puy-de-Dôme department on the S, and Creuse department on the W. It was formed chiefly from part of the old province of Bourbonnais. Vichy, its mineral-water spa, has long been known as a resort, and in World War II became even better known as the seat of the Pétain government. Important for its agricultural products, particularly lumber, cattle, and grain, it also has coal mines, stone quarries, and metallurgical and rubber industries. It contains several notable examples of 11th–15th century medieval architecture. Capital, Moulins; area, 2,848 sq. mi.; pop. 373,381 (1946).

Allier River. [Ancient name, Elaver.] River in C France which rises in the mountains of Lozère, flows N, and joins the Loire ab. 5 mi. W of Nevers. Length, ab. 220 mi.; navigable from Fontanes.

Allies. Term used in World Wars I and II to describe the coalition of nations aligned against various powers, of which Germany was in both wars the most important. In World War I the primary Allies were Great Britain, France, Russia (until 1917), Italy (after 1915), Japan, and the U.S. (after 1917). In World War II the Allies were those nations led by the U.S., the U.S.S.R., and Great Britain in alignment against the three Axis powers (Germany, Italy, and Japan). The term came in this war to be synonymous with the 26 United Nations tentatively formed on Jan. 1, 1942. With the outbreak (June, 1950) of hostilities in Korea the word came to be used more or less interchangeably with the term "UN forces" to describe the various nations contributing to the army there fighting against the forces of North Korea and Communist China.

Allies (al'is), Thomas William. b. near Bristol, England, 1813; d. 1903. English religious writer and classical scholar. In 1850 he left the Anglican church for the Roman Catholic after the publication (1849) of his Journal in France, which urged a reunion of the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches. Author of The See of St. Peter (1850), the eight-volume Formation of Christendom (1861–95), and others.

Alligator Swamp. Large swamp in E North Carolina, between Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds.

Allin (al'in), Norman. b. at Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire, England, 1884—. English operatic and concert basso. A founder of the British National Opera Company, he was for many years a professor at the Royal Academy of Music. In 1918 he became principal basso at Covent Garden opera house.

Allin, Sir Thomas. b. at Lowestoft, England, 1612; d. at Somerleyton, England, 1685. English naval officer. Knighted and appointed admiral (1665) after the victory over the Dutch in the North Sea off Lowestoft, he commanded a squadron in the defeat (1666) of De Ruyter, and led punitive expeditions (1668–70) against the Barbary pirates.

All-India Congress Committee. [Often called the A.I.C.C.] Legislative body of the Congress Party of India, which is charged with the execution of the Congress Party's program, formulated in annual sessions, and which exercises certain rule-making powers. The assemblage varies from three to four hundred members and consists of approximately one eighth of the number of provincial delegates who are elected to attend the annual sessions of Congress.

Alline (al'in), Henry. [Also, Allen.] b. at Newport, R.I., June 14, 1748; d. at North Hampton, N. H., Feb. 2, 1784. American religious leader, notable for the establishment in Nova Scotia of a religious movement not unlike that of the New Light group. The often-made statement that he was founder of a "short-lived religious sect . . . named . . . 'Allenites' " is not untrue, but obscures the more important fact that he started a revivalist spirit which is discernible even to this day in Nova Scotia.

Allingham (al'ing.ạm), William. b. at Ballyshannon, Ireland, 1824; d. at London, 1889. Irish poet. Editor (1874–79) of Fraser's Magazine, he was a friend of Dante Gabriel Rossetti (who illustrated some of his books), Tennyson, Thomas Carlyle, and Leigh Hunt.

All in the Day's Work. Autobiography (1939) by Ida M. Tarbell.

Allis (al'is), Edward Phelps. b. at Cazenovia, N.Y., May 12, 1824; d. April 1, 1889. American manufacturer of industrial machinery. His early career as owner of leather tanneries in Wisconsin terminated in 1854 and was followed in 1861 by his purchase of a small ironworks, which was developed during the next 28 years into one of the largest industrial establishments in the U.S. Such diverse products as the Corliss engines, flour-milling machinery, and heavy pumps were built at Allis's Milwaukee plant and shipped throughout the world. He was said to be worth three million dollars at the time of his death. Allis became a Greenbacker in the 1870's and was nominated by that party for governor of Wisconsin in 1877.

Allison (al'i.sọn), Fred. b. at Glade Spring, Va., 1882—. American physicist. He devised the magneto-optic analytical method which enabled his discovery (in collaboration with others) of Element 87 (francium), in 1930, and Element 85 (astatine), in 1931. He received the Ph.D. (1922) from the University of Virginia and in the same year became professor of physics at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. He received (1933) the Herty research medal.

Allison, William Boyd. b. at Perry, Ohio, March 2, 1829; d. at Dubuque, Ia., Aug. 4, 1908. American politician. He was a Republican congressman from Iowa (1862–71), U.S. senator (1872–1908), and senate chairman of appropriations (1881–1908). A moderationist on tariff questions and Western railroad demands, he worked with N. W. Aldrich against the Silverites, especially in the Bland-Allison Act (1878), limiting silver coinage, and the Gold Standard Act (1900), and against the currency expansion advocated by Theodore Roosevelt.

Allix (ȧ.lēks), Jacques Alexandre François. b. Sept. 21, 1776; d. Jan. 26, 1836. French general and military writer. He served as a colonel at Marengo in 1800; later he was in the service of Jérôme Bonaparte, king of Westphalia. He was exiled from France on July 24, 1815, but was recalled in 1819. Author of Système d'artillerie de campagne (1827).

Allix, Pierre. b. at Alençon, France, 1641; d. at London, March 3, 1717. French Protestant divine and controversialist, an exile at London after 1685.

Allman (ôl'mạn), George James. b. at Cork, Ireland, 1812; d. at Parkstone, England, Nov. 24, 1898. British biologist, a pioneer in marine zoölogy. In 1844 he was appointed professor of botany at Dublin; later he served (1855–70) as regius professor of natural history and curator of natural history at Edinburgh (1855–70). He published a monograph (1871–72) on hydrozoa, and numerous other studies in coelenterate and polyzoan morphology.

All Men Are Brothers. Translation (1933) by Pearl S. Buck of a 13th-century Chinese novel about bandits.

All Men Are Enemies. Satirical novel, a product of his experiences in World War I, by Richard Aldington, published in 1933.

Allmers (äl'mêrs), Hermann. b. at Rechtenfleth, Germany, Feb. 11, 1821; d. there, March 9, 1902. German poet and dramatist. He was the author of Marschenbuch (1858), Dichtungen (1860), Römische Schlendertage (1869), the drama Elektra (1872), and others.

Alloa (al'ō.ạ). Police burgh and seaport in C Scotland, in Clackmannanshire, situated on the N bank of the Firth of Forth, ab. 2 mi. W of Clackmannan, ab. 424 mi. N of London by rail. The largest town in Clackmannanshire, it manufactures tweeds and other items. 14,438 (est. 1948).

Allobriges (ạ.lob'ri.jēz). Germanic tribe situated, at the time of Caesar, between the Menapi and the Batavii.

Allobroges (ạ.lob'rǭ.jēz) or Allobrogi (-jī). In ancient history, a Celtic people of SE Gaul, dwelling between the Rhone and the Isère rivers, northward to Lake Geneva. They occupied also a tract on the W bank of the Rhone. The chief town of the tribe was Vienne. They were made subject to Rome in 121 B.C.

Allori (äl.lō'rē), Agnolo di Cosimo. See Bronzino, Il.

Allori, Alessandro. [Called Alessandro Bronzino.] b. 1535; d. 1607. Florentine painter; student of Il Bronzino, and father of Cristofano Allori. His work is marked by elements of Michelangelo's grand manner; his best-known painting, a portrait of Giuliano de' Medici, is in the collection of the Uffizi, Florence, as are many of his other paintings.

Allori, Cristofano. b. 1577; d. 1621. Florentine painter; son of Alessandro Allori. His best work, Judith and Holofernes, as well as his Saint Julian and Sacrifice of Isaac, are in the collection of the Pitti Palace, Florence.

Allott (al'ọt), Robert. [Also, Allot.] fl. 1600. English anthologist and editor. He is the probable compiler of England's Parnassus (1600), which contains extracts from the works of Spenser, Shakespeare, Michael Drayton, George Chapman, and numerous other writers.

Allouez (al'ọ.wā). Unincorporated community in E Wisconsin, in Brown County, S of Green Bay. 4,094 (1950).

Allouez (ȧ.lō.ā), Claude Jean. b. in St.-Didier, France, 1622; d. in what is now Indiana or Michigan, 1689. French Jesuit missionary in North America, one of the first in the Great Lakes region. He came in 1658 to Canada, and explored (1665 et seq.) the country surrounding Lake Superior and parts of the Mississippi valley.

All Our Yesterdays. Novel by H. M. Tomlinson, published in 1930, dealing with World War I.

Alloway (al'ō.wā). See under Ayr.

Alloway Kirk. Ruined church in the parish of Ayr, Scotland, near the Doon, rendered famous by Robert Burns in Tam o'Shanter.

All Passion Spent. Novel by V. (Victoria Mary) Sackville-West, published in 1931.

Allport (ôl'pōrt), Gordon Willard. b. at Montezuma, Ind., Nov. 11, 1897—. American psychologist. He was appointed (1942) professor of psychology at Harvard.

All Quiet on the Western Front. [German, Im Westen nichts Neues (im ves'tẹn niċhts noi'ẹs).] Novel by Erich Maria Remarque, published in 1929 (both the original German and the first English editions came out in this year). It tells the story of a small group of young German soldiers, with their occasional memories of days before the war, their constant awareness of the perilous and necessarily brutal day-to-day existence thrust upon them by the life of the trenches, and their growing sense of closeness to and dependence upon one another. It imparts to the reader with great clarity Remarque's conviction that war is one of the most horrible and most futile activities of which man is capable, and it had an immediate and overwhelming success in a world which was for the most part as opposed to war as Remarque himself. The novel was translated into virtually every European language, made into a film, and remains even today, in the opinion of most literary historians, one of the outstanding war novels of all time.

All Religions Are One. Critical work (c1789) by William Blake. It was printed in booklet form as an experiment in "illuminated printing" (which means that the text as well as the illustrations were engraved, and that each copy was then colored by hand).

All Saints Bay. [Portuguese, Baía de Todos os Santos.] Arm of the Atlantic Ocean, off the coast of Bahia state, E Brazil. The city of Salvador is located on it. Circumference, ab. 100 mi.

All Saints Day. [Former name, All-Hallows Day.] Christian feast day, falling on November 1. It is marked by church services in memory of all the saints on the various religious calendars. The feast has been celebrated in the Western world since the 9th century.

Allschwil (älsh'vēl). Village in NW Switzerland, in the half-canton of Basel-Land, near the border of Alsace, France. 7,315 (1941).

All's Lost by Lust. Play by William Rowley, a leading English comic actor of his day. Resembling in many ways what is now called melodrama, it was first performed in 1633.

Allsop (ôl'sọp), Thomas. b. near Wirksworth, England, April 10, 1795; d. at Exmouth, England, 1880. English stockbroker and author. He was an intimate friend of Samuel Taylor Coleridge and also shared the theories and was a friend of William Cobbett and Giuseppe Mazzini.

All Souls College. College of Oxford University, England, founded in 1437 by Archbishop Henry Chichele, to provide masses for the souls of the departed, especially those killed in the Hundred Years' War. The first quadrangle, with its fine gate, remains substantially as when first built; the chapel possesses beautiful fan tracery and reredos. The second quadrangle, with its two towers, was built in 1720. The statutes of the college were formally issued on April 2, 1443.

All Souls' Day. Roman Catholic holy day for the liturgical commemoration of the souls of the faithful dead still in Purgatory. It falls on November 2. The observance is believed to date from the 9th century, when it was introduced at the monasteries of Cluny.

Allstedt (äl'shtet). Town in S central Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, situated in the Goldene Aue valley ab. 32 mi. N of Weimar. It was at one time, with its territory, an enclave surrounded by Prussia. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Allston (ôl'stọn), Robert Francis Withers. b. in All Saints' Parish, S.C., April 21, 1801; d. April 7, 1864. American civil engineer, plantation owner, and politician.

Allston, Washington. b. at Waccamaw, S.C., 1779; d. at Cambridge, Mass., 1843. American painter, notably of religious subjects. He was a student of Benjamin West, teacher of S. F. B. Morse, and friend of Washington Irving, Bertel Thorvaldsen, and Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Influenced by Raphael, Michelangelo, and particularly the Venetian school, he is known for a portrait of Coleridge and for such Biblical paintings as Dead Man Revived by Touching the Bones of the Prophet Elisha (Pennsylvania Academy), The Agony of Judas (which he destroyed), Jeremiah (Yale University), Witch of Endor (Gardner Collection, Boston), The Deluge (Metropolitan Museum, N.Y.), and the unfinished Belshazzar's Feast (Boston Athenaeum). Author of The Sylphs of the Seasons with other Poems (1813), Monaldi (1841), and Lectures on Art (1850).

All's Well that Ends Well. Comedy by Shakespeare, played as early as c1596. Portions of this play were written not later than 1593, but the play as we have it was probably written in large part after 1600. It was first printed in the folio of 1623. The plot is from "Giletta of Narbonne" in Painter's Palace of Pleasure who took it in 1566 from the Decameron of Boccaccio. The story is followed closely, but the countess, the clown, Lafeu, and Parolles are Shakespeare's own.

All the Sad Young Men. Collection of short stories (1926) by F. Scott Fitzgerald. It is grouped by most critics of Fitzgerald's writing with the work of his second phase, in which his own personal crack-up paralleled the collapse of the supposedly flamboyant, extravagantly gay life of the 1920's with which he was first identified.

All-the-Talents Administration. Name given ironically to the English ministry of 1806–07. Among the leading members were William Wyndham Grenville (prime minister), Charles James Fox (foreign secretary), Thomas Erskine (1st Baron Erskine of Restormel), William Wentworth Fitzwilliam (2nd Earl Fitzwilliam), Henry Addington (1st Viscount Sidmouth), and Edmund Law (1st Baron Ellenborough).

All the Year Round. Periodical established and conducted by Charles Dickens. Its first issue appeared in 1859. It was a successor to Dickens's earlier family-magazine, Household Words.

Allward (ôl'wạrd), Walter Seymour. b. at Toronto, Canada, 1875—. Canadian sculptor. His works include the Vimy Ridge memorial to Canada's dead in World War I and the symbolic Peace of Toronto's Northwest Rebellion monument.

Allwit (ôl'wit''). Character in Thomas Middleton's Chaste Maid in Cheapside: a dupe.

Allworth (ôl'wėrth), Lady. Rich widow in Philip Massinger's play A New Way to Pay Old Debts.

Allworth, Tom. In Philip Massinger's play A New Way to Pay Old Debts, a young gentleman, page to Lord Lovell.

Allworthy (ôl'wėr''ᴛʜi), Thomas. [Called "Squire Allworthy."] In Henry Fielding's novel Tom Jones, a squire of large fortune, the foster father of the foundling Tom Jones. He is depicted as a man of the most upright and attractive character, a sharp contrast to Squire Western. He is generally considered to have been a portrait of Fielding's friend Ralph Allen.

Allyn (al'in), Robert. b. at Ledyard, Conn., Jan. 25, 1817; d. Jan. 7, 1894. American educator. As Rhode Island commissioner of schools (1854–57) he established the Rhode Island Schoolmaster, which was later (1875) combined with the New England Journal of Education. He was president of Wesleyan Female Academy at Cincinnati (1859 et seq.) and of McKendree College (1863 et seq.), as well as a founder and the first president (1874–92) of Southern Illinois State Normal University.

Alm (älm). See Alp.

Alma (al'mą). City in SE Georgia, county seat of Bacon County. 2,588 (1950).

Alma. City in C Lower Michigan, on the Pine River, in Gratiot County: beet-sugar processing and oil refining. It is the seat of Alma College. 8,341 (1950).

Alma. In Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene, the Queen of Body Castle, the personification of the soul.

Almaach or Almak (al′mak). The second-magnitude triple star γ Andromedae, in the foot of the constellation.

Alma-Ata (äl′mä.ä′tä). [Former name, Verny or Vernyy.] City in the U.S.S.R., capital of the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic. Important for the manufacture of silk and woolen textiles, it is also a junction on the Turkistan-Siberia railroad and for roads to China. 230,528 (1939).

Almack (ôl′mak), William. d. 1781. English valet and gamester; founder of the club (now Brook's) and owner (1764 et seq.) of the assembly rooms both known as Almack's. It has been established that he arrived in London as valet to the Duke of Hamilton, but whether from Yorkshire, Galway, or Atholl is not known; his establishment was for many years a center of London social life, holding its reputation even to the middle of the 19th century.

Almack's (ôl′maks). Gaming club established by William Almack in Pall Mall, London, before 1763, afterward the Whig club known as "Brook's." Among the 27 original members were William Henry Cavendish Bentinck (3rd Duke of Portland) and Charles James Fox; it was later joined by Edward Gibbon and William Pitt, among others.

Almack's. Famous assembly rooms built by William Almack in 1764, and opened on Feb. 20, 1765, in King Street, St. James, London. It remained a popular gathering place until the middle of the 19th century. These rooms were later also called "Willis's," after the next proprietor.

Almada (äl.mä′dą). Town and concelho (commune) in C Portugal, in the province of Estremadura, in the district of Setubal, at the mouth of the Tejo River opposite Lisbon. It has a wine trade, fisheries, and a small port. A medieval castle is situated above the town. Scene of a battle (July 23, 1833) in the Portuguese civil war. Pop. of concelho, 28,976 (1940); of town, 8,578 (1940).

Alma Dagh (or Dağ) (äl′mä däg). Modern name of Amanus.

Almaden (al′mą.dęn). [Former name, New Almaden.] Unincorporated community in C California, ab. 57 mi. SE of San Francisco: resort community. Cinnabar, the mercury ore, was mined here in some quantity from c1853 to the early 1900's. Pop. 250 (1949).

Almadén (äl.mä.ŦHān′). [Also: Almadén del Azogue (del ä.thō′gā); ancient name, Sisapon or Sisapo.] Mining town in C Spain, in the province of Ciudad-Real, situated above the Alcudia River, ab. 50 mi. SW of Ciudad-Real. Some of the richest quicksilver mines of the world are in the vicinity, producing about one third of the world supply of mercury; prior to the opening (1853–57) of new sources of mercury near New Almaden, Calif., they held a near monopoly. There are also lead and sulfur mines, and schools of mining. The mines were exploited by the Romans and later by the Moslems; in the 16th and 17th centuries they were leased to the banking house of Fugger, and in the 19th century to the banking house of Rothschild. The town was of strategic importance in the Spanish Civil War of 1936–39 and remained in Loyalist hands until the end of the conflict. 12,988 (1940).

Almagest (al′mą.jest). Scientific treatise, in 13 books, by Ptolemy. The title, from the Arabic translation of Ptolemy's Greek Syntaxis, means "the greatest synthesis"; the work embodies Ptolemy's astronomic theories, establishing a geocentric universe, and, by his own system of eccentrics and epicycles, fixing the length of the year at 365¼ days. The work also gives a modified list of Hipparchus's catalogue of stars. The translation of this work into Latin was unquestionably one of the most important events in European astronomy before the Renaissance. Actually, there were two translations, both made in the 12th century. The first was made by anonymous scholars in Sicily about 1160 from a Greek manuscript brought to Sicily from the library of one of the Byzantine rulers. The second was made at Toledo, in Spain, from an Arabic manuscript some 15 years after the first. However, the first translation (from the Greek), remained practically unknown (despite the fact that most scholars consider that it was probably the superior of the two), and the Almagest became known in Europe chiefly through the translation from Arabic. In this translation, it remained the standard astronomic authority of Europe until the time of Copernicus.

Almagro (äl.mä′grō), Diego de. b. probably at Aldea del Rey, Spain, c1475 (but according to some accounts a foundling in Almagro, Spain, in 1464); executed on July 10 (or 12), 1538. Spanish soldier, one of the conquerors of Peru; father of Diego de Almagro (1520–42). He went to Panama with Pedrarias in 1514, and in 1525 joined Francisco Pizarro in an enterprise for conquest toward the south. He went down the coast with Pizarro as early as 1526; and when, after his return from Spain, Pizarro sailed for Peru in January, 1531, Almagro followed, late in the same year, with three vessels and 150 men, and joined him at Cajamarca, on the Peruvian slope of the Andes, about the middle of February, 1533, before the death of Atahualpa. Here a violent quarrel (the second) took place between them, but a reconciliation was effected and Almagro took an active part in the march on Cusco. In 1535 he was sent to conquer Chile, of which he was made governor. He went as far south as Coquimbo, but, finding nothing of the coveted riches, turned back, laid claim to Cusco as the territory assigned to him, and seized the city by surprise (April 8, 1537), capturing Hernando and Gonzalo Pizarro. He was attacked by Alonzo Alvarado, who was captured (July 12, 1537) with his whole army. Almagro was finally defeated by Hernando Pizarro at Las Salinas, near Cusco, April 26, 1538, and he was soon after captured, tried, and beheaded.

Almagro, Diego de. b. in Panama, 1520; executed at Cusco, Peru, 1542. Political adventurer; son of Diego de Almagro and an Indian woman. He was with his father in Chile in the period 1535–36 and was proclaimed (1541) governor of Peru on Pizarro's death, although he probably was not an active member of the group which killed him. Defeated (Sept. 16, 1542) at Chupas by royalists under Vaca de Castro, he was beheaded.

Almahide (äl.mä.ēd). Romance by Madeleine de Scudéry, based on the 15th-century feud in Spain between the Moorish family of the Abencerrages and the Zegris. An English translation was made in 1677 by John Phillips.

Almahide (äl.mä.ē′dā). Anonymously composed opera first performed at London in 1710. It is presumed to have been the first work wholly in Italian to be sung in England.

Almahyde (al′mą.hīd). Queen of Granada in John Dryden's Almanzor and Almahyde, or The Conquest of Granada by the Spaniards. The name was taken from Madeleine de Scudéry's novel Almahide.

Almain (al.mān′). An early English name of Germany.

Alma Island (al′mą). Island in the Saguenay River, Quebec, Canada, at the outlet of Lake St. John.

Almali (äl.mä.li′). See Elmali.

Almansa (äl.män′sä). [Also, Almanza.] Town in E Spain, in the province of Albacete, situated on the Rio Grande river, ab. 43 mi. E of Albacete: textile, leather, and soap manufactures; distilleries; railroad junction. On a rock above the town is a picturesque Moorish castle. 16,025 (1940).

Almansa or Almanza, Battle of. Victory gained at Almansa, in E Spain, by the French and Spanish under James Fitzjames, Duke of Berwick, over the allied British, Dutch, and Portuguese under Henri de Massue, 1st Earl of Galway, on April 25, 1707. It established Philip V on the Spanish throne.

Almansa, Martín Henríquez de. See Henríquez de Almansa, Martín.

Almansor (äl.män′sōr). See Mansur, al-.

Almanzor (al.man′zȯr). Caliph of Arabia in George Chapman's Revenge for Honour.

Almanzor and Almahyde, or The Conquest of Granada by the Spaniards. Heroic tragedy in two parts, by John Dryden, produced in 1670. It was partly taken from Madeleine de Scudéry's Almahide, and is usually known as The Conquest of Granada. The character of Almanzor, a knight errant of extravagant egotism, is caricatured as Drawcansir in The Rehearsal.

Alma River (äl′mą). River in the U.S.S.R., in the Crimean oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, which flows into the Black Sea ab. 20 mi. N of Sevastopol. Near its mouth, on Sept. 20, 1854, the Allies (British, French, and Turks) defeated the Russians under Menshikov.

Alma-Tadema (al′mą.tad′ē.mą), Sir Laurence (or Lawrence). b. at Dronrijp, Netherlands, Jan. 8, 1836; d. at Wiesbaden, Germany, June 25, 1912. British painter noted especially for representations of Egyptian, Greek, and Roman life; knighted in 1899. He settled at London in 1870 and became a British citizen in 1873. Among his works are The Vintage, Catullus, The Siesta, Entrance to a Roman Theatre, Tarquinius Superbus, Phidias, and An Audience at Agrippa's.

Almaviva (äl.mä.vē'vä), Count. Brilliant, attractive, and philandering nobleman in Pierre Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais's comedy Le Barbier de Séville. He is the lover of Rosine, and succeeds, with the aid of Figaro the barber, his former valet, in rescuing her from old Bartholo and marrying her himself. He appears in Le Mariage de Figaro, already tired of Rosine his wife, and in La Mère Coupable, as an old and faded beau. He also appears in the operas by Giovanni Paisiello and Gioacchino Antonio Rossini founded on Le Barbier de Séville, as well as in Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro, based on Le Mariage de Figaro.

Almayer's Folly (ôl'mī.ėrz). Novel (1895) by Joseph Conrad.

Almazán (äl.mä.sän'), Juan Andreu. b. in Guerrero, Mexico, 1891—. Mexican army officer and politician.

Almeida (äl.mā'dą). Town and concelho (commune) in E Portugal, in the province of Beira Alta, in Guarda district. It was captured by the French in 1810, and retaken by the Duke of Wellington in 1811. Pop. of concelho, 16,390 (1940); of town, 1,654 (1940).

Almeida, Antônio José de. b. 1866; d. 1929. Portuguese politician and physician. He was elected a republican member of parliament (1906) and became successively minister of the interior and prime minister. From 1919 to 1923 he was president of Portugal.

Almeida, Francisco de. b. at Lisbon, c1450; killed near the Cape of Good Hope, South Africa, March 1, 1510. Portuguese naval commander, notable as the first viceroy (1505–09) of the Portuguese possessions in India. He established forts and trading posts in Africa (at Kilwa and elsewhere) and in the East (at Calicut, India, and elsewhere). His activities so greatly threatened the trade of Egypt with Africa and the East that a fleet was built by Egypt (with the help of Venice) in order to attack him; an initial Egyptian success (1508) was followed (1509) by complete defeat off the coast of India at the hands of a fleet under Almeida.

Almeida, Guilherme de. b. at Campinas, Brazil, July 24, 1890—. Brazilian poet, journalist, and lawyer. Among his books of poetry are Nós (1917), A dança das horas (1919), Messidor (1919), Simplicidade (1929), Você (1931), Cartas a minha noiva (1931), and Cartas que eu não mandei (1932). His prose works include Gente de cinema (1929) and O meu Portugal (1934). He translated into Portuguese the Gitanjali of Rabindranath Tagore.

Almeida, José Américo de. b. at Areia, Paraíba, Brazil, 1887—. Brazilian novelist and lawyer, who has held several important posts in his country. His best known work, A bagaceira (1928), is regarded as a landmark in the history of the regional novel in Brazil. His other two well-known novels are Coiteiros and O boqueirão (1935), which also deal with social problems of the northeast of Brazil.

Almeida, Manuel Antônio de. b. at Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 17, 1831; d. in the shipwreck of the Hermes near Macaé, Brazil, Nov. 28, 1861. Brazilian novelist, journalist, and physician. His well-known novel, Memórias de um sargento de milícias, which first appeared in a newspaper supplement (1852–53) and later (1854–55) in book form, is generally regarded as a forerunner of realism in the literature of Brazil. He also wrote Dois amores (1861), a lyric drama.

Almeida, Miguel Calmón du Pin e. See Calmón du Pin e Almeida, Miguel.

Almeida, Nicolau Tolentino de. See Tolentino de Almeida, Nicolau.

Almeida-Garrett (äl.mā'dą.gą.ret'), João Batista da Silva Leitão de. See Garrett, João Batista da Silva Leitão de Almeida.

Almeirim (äl.mā.rēń'). Town and concelho (commune) in C Portugal, in the province of Ribatejo, in the district of Santarém, situated near the left bank of the Tejo River, opposite Santarém: wine trade. Once a royal residence, it was largely destroyed in the earthquake of 1755. Pop. of concelho, 15,916 (1940); of town, 9,175 (1940).

Almeisam (al.mī'sąm). A name for the star γ Geminorum. It is also often called Alhena.

Almelo (äl'mę.lō). [Also, Almeloo.] Town in E Netherlands, in the province of Overijssel, situated at the junction of the Almelo and Overijssel canals, ab. 22 mi. NE of Deventer. It is connected with the Ems River through the Almelo-Nordhorn Canal. Linen and cotton textiles are important manufactures. Among the notable buildings is a castle of the counts of Rechteren and Limpurg; the town developed, beginning in the Middle Ages, under the overlordship of these two families. 41,308 (1949).

Almendralejo (äl''men.drä.le'hō). Town in W Spain, in the province of Badajoz, ab. 27 mi. SE of Badajoz: agricultural trade center; sheep fair; distilleries. The palace of the Marquis of Monsalad contains a collection of Roman antiquities. 21,276 (1940).

Almería (äl.mä.rē'ä). Province in SE Spain, bounded by Murcia on the NE, the Mediterranean Sea on the E and S, and Granada on the W and NW: a part of the region of Andalusia. The province is mountainous, comprising the E section of the Sierra Nevada. Wine, citrus fruit, and sugar cane are produced; there are iron and lead mines. Capital, Almería; area, 3,388 sq. mi.; pop. 370,635 (1950).

Almería. [Arabic, Al-Merya; ancient names, Urci, Portus Magnus.] City in SE Spain, capital of the province of Almería, situated on the Gulf of Almería, near the mouth of the Almería River, ab. 60 mi. SE of Granada: exports iron, lead, and zinc ores, silver, and agricultural products, particularly esparto grass, citrus fruit, and white grapes. 84,719 (1950).

Almeria (al.mir'i.ą). In Congreve's play The Mourning Bride, the supposedly widowed bride of Alphonso, prince of Valentia. It is she who utters (Act 1, Scene 1) the familiar words: "Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast, To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak."

Almirante (äl.mē.rän'tā). Town and port on the coast of NW Panama. It is important chiefly as a point of export for the bananas produced further inland. Pop. ab. 1,600.

Almodóvar (äl.mō.ŦHŌ'BÄr), Count of. [Title of Ildefonso Díaz de Ribera.] b. at Granada, Spain, 1777; d. at Valencia, Spain, 1846. Spanish statesman. He was imprisoned and exiled in the reign of Ferdinand VII, was afterward minister of war and president of the Cortes, and was minister of foreign affairs (1842–43).

Almodóvar. [Also, Almodóvar del Campo (del käm'pō).] Town in C Spain, in the province of Ciudad-Real, situated above the Alcudia River, ab. 21 mi. SW of Ciudad-Real. The Puertollano coal field and also mines of argentiferous lead are in the vicinity. The Alcudia valley contains pasture land for large flocks of sheep. The town was a Moslem stronghold in the Middle Ages; the castle still stands. 14,633 (1940).

Almogaver (äl''mō.gä.Ber'), Juan Boscán. See Boscán Almogaver, Juan.

Almohades (al'mō.hādz). Moslem dynasty in N Africa and Spain, which superseded the Almoravides about the middle of the 12th century.

Almolonga (äl.mō.lōn'gä). See under Ciudad Vieja.

Almon (al'mon), John. b. at Liverpool, England, Dec. 17, 1737; d. at Boxmoor, England, Dec. 12, 1805. English publisher and Whig political pamphleteer; friend of John Wilkes. His sale (1763 et seq.) of pamphlets against the government then ruling England brought him continual harassment by the attorney general and others.

Almond (ôl'mond), Edward Mallory. b. at Luray, Va., Dec. 12, 1892—. American soldier. A graduate of Virginia Military Institute, he was commissioned (1916) and fought with the American Expeditionary Forces in France during World War I. He served with the army of occupation in Germany and subsequently became a military instructor. In World War II he commanded (1942–45) the 92nd infantry division; he served as deputy chief of staff at Tokyo (1946–49) and chief of staff of the Far East Command (1949–50). With the outbreak of the Korean War, he assumed command (1950) of the U.S. 10th Corps, leading it until 1951, when he became commandant of the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

Almondbury (ä′mənd.ber.i; locally, äm′bri). Civil parish and ward of Huddersfield, in C England, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situated on the river Calder. It is a part of Huddersfield. 8,435 (1931).

Almonde (äl.môn′dẹ), Philippus van. b. at Briel, the Netherlands, 1646; d. near Leiden, Jan. 6, 1711. Dutch naval officer, made commander of the fleet on the death of Michel Adriaanszoon de Ruyter (1676). He accompanied William of Orange to England in 1688. After commanding the Dutch fleet at La Hogue in 1692, he commanded, with Sir George Rooke, the allies at the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the Bay of Vigo (1702).

Almond for a Parrot. Essay (1590) probably by Robert Greene in reply to the Martin Marprelate pamphlets. Some literary historians believe that Thomas Nash may have been its actual author.

Almonte (al′mont). Town in E Ontario, Canada, situated on the Mississippi River (a branch of the Ottawa River), ab. 43 mi. SW of Ottawa: important rail junction on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. 2,672 (1951).

Almonte (äl.mōn′tā), Juan Nepomuceno. b. in Guerrero, Mexico, c1804; d. at Mexico City, 1869. Mexican general and political opportunist; government official under Antonio López de Santa Anna, Paredes, and Maximilian. Part Indian, perhaps a son of Morelos, he was U.S.-educated. He served with Santa Anna in Texas, and was taken prisoner (1836) by Sam Houston at the battle of San Jacinto. As secretary of state and minister to Washington (1841 et seq.) under Santa Anna, he entered a formal protest (1845) against the annexation of Texas and demanded his passport. He was a candidate (1845) for the Mexican presidency, and claimed to have been elected; he then aided in the deposition (1845) of Herrera by Paredes and was the latter's minister of war. In the war against the U.S., he fought at Buenavista, Cerro Gordo, and Churubusco. In Santa Anna's second administration (1854–55), he was again made minister to Washington, retaining that post until 1860 and negotiating the Gadsden Purchase; later, as minister to France, he was involved in the diplomacy which precipitated the French expedition (1862) to Mexico. He was regent and, later, grand marshal under Maximilian who, becoming suspicious of him, sent him (1866) as minister to France.

Almora (äl.mō′rạ). District of Kumaun division, Uttar Pradesh (United Provinces), Union of India, neăr the NW border of Nepal: important silk-producing area. Capital, Almora; pop. 687,281 (1941).

Almora. Capital of Almora district, Kumaun division, Union of India, ab. 160 mi. NE of the city of Delhi: trading center, particularly for silk. 9,688 (1941).

Almoradi (äl.mō.rä′ᴛʜē). Town in E Spain, in the province of Alicante, situated near the Segura River, between Alicante and Murcia: agricultural trade. 10,459 (1940).

Almoravides (al.mō′rạ.vīdz). Moslem sect and dynasty in NW Africa and Spain, founded by Abdallah ibn-Yasin, who was killed in battle c1058. His successor, ibn-Tashfin (who is usually thought of also as a founder of the dynasty), established his capital at Marrakech, in what is now French Morocco, in 1062. The Almoravides under ibn-Tashfin defeated Alfonso VI of León and Castile at Zalaca in 1086, having been invited into Spain by Abbad III. In 1091 they ousted Abbad and their dynasty was established in Spain. It was overthrown (1146–47) by the Almohades. In the course of their domination of NW Africa, the religious leaders of the Almoravides succeeded in converting the Tukulor, Sarakole, Songhai, and other Sudanese peoples to Mohammedanism.

Almqvist (älm′kvist), Karl Jonas Ludwig. [Assumed name, Professor Westermann.] b. at Stockholm, Nov. 28, 1793; d. at Bremen, Sept. 26, 1866. Swedish writer and proponent of socialism. He is best known for his novel collection, The Book of the Thorn-Rose (1832–35); his later activities and writing are linked to the cause of socialism.

Almuñécar (äl.mö.nyā′kär). Town in S Spain, in the province of Granada, situated on the Mediterranean Sea, ab. 35 mi. S of Granada: seaport, chiefly for coastwise shipping. It was the landing place in 755 of Abd-er-Rahman I, Ommiad caliph who became emir with his capital at Córdoba. 11,110 (1940).

Almus Pickerbaugh (al′mus pik′ėr.bô), Dr. See Pickerbaugh, Dr. Almus.

Almy (al′mi), John Jay. b. at Newport, R.I., April 24, 1815; d. at Washington, D.C., May 16, 1895. American naval officer, active in the Union blockade of Southern ports during the Civil War. He was appointed commodore (1869) and rear admiral (1873).

Alnaschar (al.nash′ạr, -nas′kär). The "Barber's Fifth Brother" in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. He invests his inheritance in glassware. While awaiting customers he fancies himself already a millionaire, and an incautious movement upsets his basket, breaking its contents and destroying all his prospects (hence the phrase "visions of Alnaschar," that is, counting one's chickens before they are hatched; daydreams).

Alnilam (al.ni.läm′). The second-magnitude star ε Orionis, in the middle of the giant's belt.

Alnitak (al.ni.tak′). The triple second-magnitude star ζ Orionis, at the SE end of the belt.

Alnwick (an′ik). Urban district and market town in NE England, in Northumberland, situated on the river Alne, ab. 38 mi. N of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, ab. 306 mi. N of London by rail. It is famous for Alnwick Castle (held by the Percy family since 1309), the residence of the dukes of Northumberland. Here, in 1174, an English force defeated the Scots. Near Alnwick are the ruins of Hulne Abbey (1240). Pop. 7,366 (1951).

Alnwick, William of. d. 1449. English ecclesiastic; bishop of Norwich (1426–36) and Lincoln (1436–49). He was a friend of Henry V and confessor to Henry VI, and an opponent of the Lollards. He produced the Novum Registrum (1440), which codified the statutes of Lincoln Cathedral.

Alnwick Castle. Poem by Fitz-Greene Halleck, published in his Alnwick Castle, with Other Poems (1827).

Aloadae (a.lō′ạ.dē). See Aloidae.

Alofi (ä.lō′fē). Seaport and main center on the Pacific island of Niue, owned by New Zealand. It is the site of a wireless and meteorological station.

Alofi. See also under Futuna Islands.

Aloidae (al.ọ.ī′dē). [Also: Aloiadae (-ī′ạ.dē), Aloadae.] In Greek mythology, two giants, Otus and Ephialtes, sons of Poseidon. See under Ephialtes.

Aloisi (ä.lō.ē′zē), Baron Pompeo. b. 1875; d. Jan. 15, 1949. Italian diplomat. He was minister to Denmark (1920–22), Rumania (1923–25), and Albania (1926–27); ambassador to Japan (1928–29) and Turkey (1930–32); cabinet chief in the foreign ministry (1932–36); League of Nations delegate (1932–37); and senator (1939 et seq.).

Alompra (ạ.lom′prạ). [Also, Aloung P'Houra.] b. 1711; d. 1760. Founder of the last dynasty of Burma (named from him). He reigned c1754–60.

Alonesos (ä.lô′nē.sôs). [Also: Alón (a.lôn′), Iliodhromia, Khiliodhromia, Khiliodromia, Khilidromi; ancient name, Halonnesus.] Island in the Sporades, Aegean Sea, belonging to Greece, E of Skopelos and N of Euboea. Length, ab. 13 mi.

Alonso (ạ.lon′sō), Adventures of. See Adventures of Alonso.

Alonzo (ạ.lon′zō). See also under Alfonso.

Alonzo. In Beaumont and Fletcher's The Custom of the Country, a young Portuguese gentleman, the enemy of Duarte.

Alonzo. King of Naples in Shakespeare's The Tempest.

Alonzo. In Richard Brinsley Sheridan's translation of August Friedrich Ferdinand Kotzebue's Pizarro, the commander of the army of Ataliba, king of Quito.

Alonzo of Aguilar (ä.gē.lär′). In Spanish literature, a brave knight who lost his life in trying to plant King Ferdinand's banner on the heights of Granada, in 1501. There are several Spanish ballads on the subject.

Alopeus (ạ.lō′pē.us), Maximilian. b. at Viborg, Finland, Jan. 21, 1748; d. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, May 16, 1822. Russian diplomat. He was accredited as minister plenipotentiary to the court of Prussia in 1790 by Catherine II.

Alor (ä′lôr). [Also: Ombai, Ombay.] One of the Lesser Sunda Islands, situated N of Timor, from which it is separated by Ombai Passage.

Álora (ä′lō.rä). [Ancient name, Iluro.] Town in S Spain, in the province of Málaga, situated on the Guadalhorce River, ab. 17 mi. NW of Málaga: health resort, with hot sulfur springs; distilleries. The irrigated vega (meadow area) is important for oranges, lemons, dates, and other fruits. 13,968 (1940).

Aloros (ą.lō'ros). In ancient mythology, the first of the ten kings who reigned over Babylonia before the Deluge.

Alorton (al'ǫr.tǫn). Town in SW Illinois, in St. Clair County. 2,547 (1950).

Alost (ą.lost). French name of Aalst.

Aloung P'Houra (ä.lōng' pę.hō'rä). See Alompra.

Aloysius (al.ō.ish'us), Saint. [Original name, Luigi Gonzaga.] b. at the castle of Castiglione, near Mantua, Italy, 1568; d. 1591. Italian nobleman and Jesuit. He spent much of his childhood in one of the Medici courts, and in that of the duke of Mantua. Resigning his titles to his brother, he entered the Society of Jesus, despite opposition from his father. He died while still a student in 1591, having caught a fever from hospital patients whom he attended. Known from childhood for the purity of his life, he was declared patron of youth by Pope Benedict XIII three years after his canonization in 1726.

Alp (älp). [Also, Alm.] Local name of the elevated and sparsely inhabited meadow and pasture tracts of Switzerland and the Tirol.

Alp (alp). Principal character in Byron's poem The Siege of Corinth, a renegade shot in the siege.

ALP. See also Anna Livia Plurabelle.

ALP. Abbreviation of American Labor Party.

Alp Arslan (älp ärs.län'). [Earlier name, Mohammed ibn-Daud.] b. 1029; d. 1072. Sultan of the Seljuk Turks, who reigned, as successor to his father, Daud in Khurasan, in what is now Iran, from 1059 to 1072. He also succeeded (1063) his uncle Toghrul Beg as chief ruler of the Seljuk empire in Persia; subdued (c1064) Georgia and Armenia; conquered Aleppo and defeated and took prisoner the Byzantine emperor Romanus Diogenes near the Araxes (now the Araks) River in 1071, a victory which led to the establishment in Asia Minor of the Seljuk empire of Rum.

Alpen (äl'pęn). German name of the Alps.

Alpena (al.pē'nạ). City in N Lower Michigan, on Thunder Bay, Lake Huron, county seat of Alpena County: center for lumber products. 13,135 (1950).

Alpensinfonie (älp'ęn.zin.fo.nē''), Eine. [Eng. trans., "An Alpine Symphony."] Tone poem by Richard Strauss depicting a day of mountain climbing; it was first performed at Berlin on Oct. 28, 1915.

Alpes (al'pēz). Latin name of the Alps.

Alpes (älp). French name of the Alps.

Alpes, Basses-. See Basses-Alpes.

Alpes-Maritimes (älp.mą.rē.tēm). Department in SE France, bounded by Italy on the N and E, by the Mediterranean Sea on the S, and by the departments of Var and Basses-Alpes on the W. It was formed from the territory of Nice (ceded by Italy in 1860), and from part of Var. The department had previously been French from 1793 to 1815. Although severe weather prevails in the mountainous N part, the climate is exceptionally mild along the coast, which forms part of the French Riviera and where world-famous resorts, such as Cannes, Antibes, Cagnes, Nice, and Menton, are situated. The tourist industry is highly developed. Agriculture is hampered by the nature of the terrain, and more than 40 percent of the surface is uncultivated. The commune of Grasse and other places along the coast are centers of intensive cultivation of flowers, both for export and for the production of essential oils which are used in the French perfume industry. It is the largest area in the world devoted to this specialty. Capital, Nice; area, 1,443 sq. mi.; pop. 448,973 (1946). (The territories of Brigue and Tende, ceded to France by Italy in 1947, are not included in these figures.)

Alpes Maritimes (älp mä.rē.tēm). French name of the Maritime Alps.

Alph (alf). Sacred underground river in Xanadu, in Coleridge's poem Kubla Khan.

Alphand (al.fäṅ), Hervé. b. May 31, 1907—. French government official, active (1941–44) in the Free French movement. He served (1940–41) as French commercial attaché at Washington and was a delegate (1945) to the United Nations conference at San Francisco.

Alphard (al.färd'). The second-magnitude star α Hydrae, or Cor Hydrae.

Alphecca (al.fek'ą). See Alfeta.

Alphege (al'fej), Saint. See Ælfheah, Saint.

Alphen (äl'fęn), Hieronymus van. b. at Gouda, the Netherlands, Aug. 8, 1746; d. at The Hague, April 2, 1803. Dutch poet and jurist.

Alphen aan den Rijn (än dęn rīn). See Alfen aan den Rijn.

Alpheratz (al.fę.rats'). The usual name of the second-magnitude star α Andromedae, in the head of the constellation. It is also often called Sirrah.

Alpheus (al.fē'us, al'fę.us) or Alpheius (äl.fyôs'). In Greek mythology, a river god, son of Oceanus and Tethys.

Alpheus River. [Also (for parts of its course): Rouphia, Rufia, Ruphia; Greek, Alpheios (al'fā.ǫs).] River in Greece, in the Peloponnesus, flowing generally NW from S Greece into the Ionian Sea. The plain of Olympia touches its N bank, and its name is mentioned repeatedly in the legend and history of Greece. In more modern times, it occurs in English literature as the original of Coleridge's river Alph, mentioned in Kubla Khan. In Greek mythology, it was the river diverted by Hercules in order to clean the Augean stables. It flows at one point under the ground, and was for this reason believed by the ancient Greeks actually to flow under the sea to Sicily.

Alphirk (al.fêrk'). The third-magnitude double star β Cephei.

Alphonsa (al.fon'sạ), Mother. [Original name, Rose Hawthorne.] b. at Lenox, Mass., May 20, 1851; d. July 9, 1926. American philanthropist and religious superior; youngest child of Nathaniel Hawthorne. She was married (1871) in England to George Parsons Lathrop, with whom she was converted (1891) to Roman Catholicism; after her husband's death (1896) she founded a sisterhood named Servants of Relief for Incurable Cancer. Subsequently she established homes at Hawthorne, N.Y. (1901) and New York City (1912) for destitute victims of incurable cancer.

Alphonse (ȧl.fôṅs) or Alphonso (al.fon'sō). See also under Alfonso.

Alphonsus a Sancta Maria (al.fon'sus ä sangk'tą mą.rē'ą). [Also, Alfonso de Cartagena.] b. at Cartagena, Spain, 1396; d. July 12, 1456. Spanish prelate and historian. He succeeded his father, Paulus, as bishop of Burgos. Deputed in 1431 by John II of Castile to attend the Council of Basle, he succeeded in effecting a reconciliation between Albert V of Austria and Ladislaus, king of Poland. His principal work is a history of Spain to 1496 (printed 1545).

Alphonsus Liguori (lē.gwô'rē), Saint. See Liguori, Saint Alfonso Maria de'.

Alpi (äl'pē). Italian name of the Alps.

Alpiew (al'pū). In Susannah Centlivre's comedy The Basset-Table, Lady Reveller's waiting-woman, a pert, adroit soubrette. The name is taken from "alpieu," a term in the once popular game of basset implying the continuance of the bet on a card that has already won.

Alpi Lepontine (äl'pē lā.pōn.tē'nā). Italian name of the Lepontine Alps.

Alpi Marittime (mä.rēt'tē.mā). Italian name of the Maritime Alps.

Alpine (al'pīn). Town in W Texas, county seat of Brewster County, SE of El Paso, in a region producing copper, lead, gold, silver, marble, zinc, potash, and cinnabar. The area is also important for the raising of Highland Herefords, and is sometimes called "Cow Heaven." It is the seat of Sul Ross State Teachers College. Kokernot State Park is nearby. 5,261 (1950).

Alpini (äl.pē'nē), Prospero. [Latinized, Prosper Alpinus.] b. at Marostica, near Venice, Nov. 23, 1553; d. at Padua, Feb. 6, 1617. Italian botanist and physician. His study of Egyptian palms led him to a theory of sexual reproduction of plants similar to that later established by Linnaeus. He was also notable as the first European scientist to mention the prevalence of trachoma in Egypt, and as the author of De plantis Aegypti liber (1592) and De medicina Aegyptiorum (1591), the latter containing what many believe to be the first European account of the coffee plant.

Alpi Retiche (äl'pē rā'tē.kā). Italian name of the Rhaetian Alps.

Alps (alps). [French, Alpes; German, Alpen; Italian, Alpi; Latin, Alpes.] The most extensive mountain system in Europe, comprising a part of SE France, most of Switzerland, a part of N Italy, a part of S Germany, and parts of Austria and Yugoslavia. It was anciently divided into the Maritime, Cottian, Graian, Pennine, Rhaetian, Noric, Carnic, Venetian, and Julian Alps. The modern division is into the Western, Central, and Eastern Alps. The Western Alps include the Ligurian, Maritime, Cottian, and Graian Alps, Montagnes des Maures and Esterel Mountains, Mountains of Provence (or of Vaucluse, Ventoux group), Alps of Dauphiné, Limestone Alps of Savoie, and the Mountains of Chablais and Faucigny. The Central Alps include the Pennine, Lepontine, Rhaetian, Otzthaler, Bernese, Fribourg, Emmenthal, and Urner and Engelberg Alps, the Tödi range, Schwyzer Alps, St. Gall and Appenzell Alps, Vorarlberg and Allgäu Alps, North Tirolese and Bavarian Alps, and the Luganer, Bergamasker, Ortler, Nonsberg, Adamello, and Tridentine Alps. The Eastern Alps include the Zillerthal Alps, Hohe Tauern, Niedere Tauern, Carinthian and Styrian Alps, Styrian Nieder Alps, and Kitzbühler, Salzburg, Upper Austrian, North Styrian, Lower Austrian, Lessinian, Cadoric (Dolomite), Venetian, Carnic, Karawanken, Bacher, and Santhaler Alps, and Julian Alps. There are also various outliers of the system in Hungary and Yugoslavia, etc. The length of the range from the Pass of Giovi (N of Genoa) to Semmering Pass is over 600 mi., and its width is from 90 to 180 mi. Its highest peak is Mont Blanc (15,781 ft.), on the borders of France and Italy; highest in Switzerland, the Monte Rosa; average height of the range ab. 7,700 ft. Its largest glacier is the Aletsch, ab. 13 mi. long.

Alps, Bernese. See Bernese Oberland.

Alps, Eastern. Division of the Alps which extends from the Brenner Pass eastward to the Semmering Pass, often made to include all the Alps lying E of a line connecting Lake Constance with Lago Maggiore.

Alps, Western. Division of the Alps which is separated from the Apennines by the Pass of Giovi (N of Genoa) and extends to the Pass of Great St. Bernard; often made to include all the Alps lying W of a line connecting Lake Constance with Lago Maggiore.

Alpujarras (äl.pö.нär'räs), Las. Mountainous region in S Spain, in the provinces of Granada and Almería. It contains many picturesque and fertile valleys. After the fall of the Moorish (Moslem) kingdom of Granada in 1492 it was a refuge of the Moriscos in Spain.

Alqamah (äl.kä'mą). Arabic name of Alcamo.

Alred (al'rẹd). See Aldred.

Alredus Beverlacensis (al.rē'dus bev"ėr.lą.sen'sis). See Alfred of Beverley.

Alright Island (ôl'rīt"). One of the Magdalen Islands, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is part of the province of Quebec.

Als (äls). [German, Alsen.] Island belonging to Denmark, in the Little Belt SE of Jutland. The chief town is Sønderborg, capital of the amt (county) of Aabenraa-Sønderborg. Area, ab. 120 sq. mi.; pop. 34,294 (1945).

Alsace (al.sās', al'sas; French, äl.zäs). [German, Elsass; Latin, Alsatia.] Region in NE France, comprising the departments of Haut-Rhin and Bas-Rhin. One of the most bitterly contested regions in Europe, it was long (1871–1919) part (see Alsace-Lorraine) of the German Empire, comprising the Bezirke (districts) of Upper Alsace and Lower Alsace. The Vosges mountains form its W frontier. Its soil is fertile, and it has important iron and coal mines, and considerable manufactures. The chief city is Strasbourg. Both German and French are spoken by most of the inhabitants. Alsace was a part of ancient Gaul and afterward of the Frankish kingdom. In the 9th and 10th centuries it was a part of Lotharingia, and later of the duchy of Swabia, and gradually came to be divided between imperial cities, bishops, and other rulers. Part of it was conquered by France in the Thirty Years' War, and ceded to her in 1648. Strasbourg was seized by Louis XIV in 1681, and the remainder of Alsace was annexed to France in 1791. It was ceded to Germany in 1871 as a result of the Franco-Prussian War. Returned to France (1919) by the treaty of Versailles, it was occupied by German forces in 1940 and held until 1945.

Alsace, Lower. [German, Unter-Elsass.] District of the former German province of Alsace-Lorraine, occupying the N portion of Alsace. The chief city is Strasbourg (German, Strassburg).

Alsace, Upper. [German, Ober-Elsass.] District of the former German province of Alsace-Lorraine, occupying the S portion of Alsace. Its chief city is Mulhouse (German, Mülhausen).

Alsace-Lorraine (al'sās.lǭ.rān', al'sas-; French, äl.zäs.lo.ren). [German, Elsass-Lothringen.] Region in E France, from 1871 to 1918 a Reichsland (imperial territory) of the German Empire, capital Strasbourg, bounded by Luxemburg, Prussia, and the Rhine Palatinate on the N, by Baden (from which it is separated by the Rhine) on the E, by Switzerland and France on the S, and by France on the W. It is traversed by the Vosges mountains; the soil is generally fertile, producing grain, wine, tobacco, and other agricultural products, and it has important iron and coal mines, and large manufactures of iron, cotton, and other items. It was divided under German rule into three districts: Upper Alsace, Lower Alsace, and Lorraine. By the constitution granted in May, 1911, it was ruled by a governor and a Diet of two chambers, and sent 3 members to the Bundesrath and 15 deputies to the Reichstag. The prevailing religion (about 78 percent of the population) is Roman Catholic. Both German and French are spoken. It was ceded by France to Germany in 1871, as a result of the Franco-Prussian War. Restored to France (1919) by the Treaty of Versailles, it was occupied (1940–45) by Germany in World War II. Area, 5,604 sq. mi.

Alsager (al'są.jėr). Urban district in W England, in Cheshire, ab. 6 mi. E of Crewe, ab. 154 mi. NW of London by rail. 5,574 (1951).

Alsatia (al.sā'shą). Formerly a cant name (Alsace being a debatable ground or scene of frequent contests) for Whitefriars, a district in London between the Thames and Fleet Street, and adjoining the Temple, which possessed certain privileges of sanctuary derived from the convent of the Carmelites, or White Friars, founded there in 1241. The locality became the resort of libertines and rascals of every description, whose abuses and outrages, and especially the riot in the reign of Charles II, led in 1697 to the abolition of the privilege and the dispersion of the Alsatians. The term "Alsatia" was later applied offensively to the English stock-exchange, because of the supposedly questionable character of some of its proceedings. The name first occurs in Shadwell's plays The Woman Captain (1680) and The Squire of Alsatia (1688).

Alsatia. Latin name of Alsace.

Alsberg (als'bėrg), Carl Lucas. b. at New York, April 2, 1877; d. at Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 1, 1940. American biochemist, a specialist in the chemistry of foods. He headed (1921–37) the Stanford Food Research Institute, and was director (1937 et seq.) of the Giannini Agricultural Economics Foundation at the University of California.

Alsdorf (äls'dôrf). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated near the Dutch border, ab. 10 mi. N of Aachen. It has chemical and paper manufactures; coal mines are in the vicinity. The town suffered considerable damage during World War II. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 22,205 (1950).

Alsen (äl'zęn). German name of Als.

Alsfeld (äls'felt). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Hessen, American Zone, formerly in the province of Upper Hesse, grand duchy of Hesse, situated on the Schwalm River, ab. 41 mi. SW of Kassel. It has cotton and linen textile industries, considerable lumber trade, and furniture factories. Architectural points of interest include the remains of medieval fortifications and numerous old buildings, among them the Rathaus (town hall; 1512–16), the Wine House (1533), and the Wedding-Hall (1565–71); the Walpurgis Church and Holy Trinity Church are in the Gothic style. There is also a local museum and a library. The population is predominantly Protestant. 8,191 (1946).

Alshain (al.shān'). A seldom-used name for the fourth-magnitude star β Aquilae.

Alshemali (al.shę̄.mä'li). The fourth-magnitude star μ Leonis, in the head of the animal.

Al Sirat (äl si.rät'). Bridge over which must pass all who enter the Mohammedan paradise. It is of inconceivable narrowness, finer than the edge of a razor; hence those burdened by sins are sure to fall off and are dashed into hell, which lies below the bridge. A somewhat similar conception has occurred at various times in other theologies, most notably the Jewish and that of the Zoroastrians.

Alsleben (äls'lā''bẹn). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the Saale River, ab. 30 mi. S of Magdeburg. Before World War II it had important flour mills, sugar refineries, and manufactures of building materials. The population is predominantly Protestant. 5,066 (1946).

Alsop (ôl'sọp), George. b. 1638; date of death not known. English colonist in America, remembered chiefly as the author of an early work about the Maryland colony.

Alsop, Richard. b. at Middletown, Conn., Jan. 23, 1761; d. at Flatbush (now part of Brooklyn), N.Y., Aug. 20, 1815. American writer, particularly of antidemocratic satire; one of the "Hartford Wits," also called "Connecticut Wits," a literary group interested in the growth of indigenous American writing. The author of adaptations from European writers and of eclectic poetry, he is best remembered for The Echo, on which he collaborated with Theodore Dwight (in American Mercury, 1791–1805; published 1807), a satire in verse on John Hancock, Samuel Adams, and others, and The Political Greenhouse (1798), a similar work.

Alsop, Vincent. d. May 8, 1703. English nonconformist divine and controversialist. Author of Antisozzo (1675), Melius Inquirendum (1679), Mischief of Impositions (1680), and others.

Alstaetten (äl'shtet.ẹn). See Altstätten.

Alsted (äl'shtet), Johann Heinrich. b. at Ballersbach, near Herborn, Prussia, 1588; d. at Weissenburg, in Transylvania, Nov. 8, 1638. German Protestant theologian and writer. Professor of philosophy (1615) and theology (1619) at Herborn, and later at Weissenburg. His Encyclopaedia (1630) was highly esteemed for several generations after his death.

Alster (äl'stẽr). River in NW Germany, a small tributary of the Elbe, which traverses Hamburg, forming two basins, one (the larger) outside the town (Aussen Alster), and one within it (Binnen Alster). Before World War II the latter was surrounded with fine buildings and was a favorite pleasure resort.

Alston (ôl'stọn). [Also: Aldstone, Alston (or Aldstone) Moor, Alston with Garrigill (gar'i.gil).] Rural district and market town in NW England, in Cumberland, ab. 20 mi. SE of Carlisle, ab. 319 mi. NW of London by rail. It was formerly a lead-mining center. 2,327 (1951).

Alston, Joseph. b. in South Carolina, c1779; d. Sept. 10, 1816. American politician and rice-planter; son-in-law of Aaron Burr. He was governor (1812–14) of South Carolina, and a strong supporter of the War of 1812.

Alströmer (äl'strẽ''mẽr), Jonas. [Also, Alstroemer.] b. at Alingsås, Sweden, Jan. 7, 1685; d. June 2, 1761. Swedish merchant, philanthropist, and pioneer industrialist. He went (1707) to London as clerk to a Swedish merchant, and later amassed (1710–24) a fortune through independent activity as a London ship-broker. He returned to Alingsås and established successively a woolen factory, a sugar refinery, and a business in sheep importation to improve the breeds in Sweden. He developed improved techniques of potato cultivation, textile dyeing, shipbuilding, tanning, and cutlery manufacture.

Alt (ält). See Olt.

Alta Fjord (äl'tä). See Alten Fjord.

Alta Gracia (grä'syä). City in C Argentina, in Córdoba province: principal resort in the Sierras. 11,570 (1947).

Altai (äl.tī'). Mountain system in E central Asia, which lies partly in the S central Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, and continues SE into Outer Mongolia and the province of Sinkiang, China. The main range is also known as the Ektag Altai. Length, ab. 1,000 mi. The highest known elevation, the Belukha (White Mountain), reaches 14,783 ft.

Altaic (al.tā'ik). Linguistic group inconclusively set up to include Turkic, Mongol, Tungus-Manchu, and, recently, Korean.

Altair (al.tãr') or Atair (a-). The first-magnitude star α Aquilae.

Altai Territory (äl.tī'). [Also, Altai Mining District.] Territory of the U.S.S.R., a krai (subdivision) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, C Asia, ab. 1,000 mi. W of Lake Baikal. It is noted for its mineral wealth. Area, ab. 101,000 sq. mi.; pop. 2,358,653 (1939).

Altamaha (ôl''tạ.mạ.hô'). River in Georgia which is formed by the junction of the Oconee and Ocmulgee rivers, and flows into the Atlantic ab. 55 mi. SW of Savannah. Length, ab. 137 mi.

Altamira (äl.tä.mē'rä). Caverns in N Spain, SW of Santander, in which were discovered (1879) a number of prehistoric drawings of animals (most of which are recognizable as bulls). This was the first discovery of an example of prehistoric art of the cave-dweller period and still ranks as one of the major archaeological findings of all time.

Altamirano (äl''tä.mē.rä'nō), Ignacio Manuel. b. in Guerrero, Mexico, c1834; d. at San Remo, Italy, Feb. 14, 1893. Mexican poet, orator, and journalist, said to have been a descendant of the Aztec monarchs. He was a member of the constituent congress of 1861; joined the army under Juárez during the French invasion, attaining the rank of colonel. Author of Clemencia (1869), Rimas (1871), La Navidad en las montañas (1871), and others. His El Zarco: Episodios de la vida mexicana en 1861–63 was republished (1935) at New York.

Altamira y Crevea (äl.tä.mē'rä ē krā.bā'ä), Rafael. b. 1866—. Spanish jurist and historian. He taught the history of Spanish law at Oviedo (1897–1910) and the history of American political and civil institutions at Madrid (1914–36). He was also on the bench (1922–45) of the Permanent Court of International Justice. Author of numerous works in the fields of Spanish and Spanish-American law and political history.

Altamont (al'tạ.mont). Unincorporated community in S Oregon, in Klamath County. 9,419 (1950).

Altamont. In Nicholas Rowe's play The Fair Penitent, the husband of Calista.

Altamont. In W. M. Thackeray's novel Pendennis, the name assumed by the returned convict Amory. He is the first husband of Lady Clavering and father of the emotional Blanche Amory.

Altamont. In Thomas Wolfe's Look Homeward, Angel, the name of the town in which the chief events of the novel take place. It is used, but less frequently, in Wolfe's later novels as the hero's point of return from the great cities of the world. It is now generally conceded to be, in real life, the city of Asheville, N.C., which was Wolfe's birthplace.

Altamura (äl.tä.mö'rä). [Ancient name, Lupatia.] City and commune in SW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Apulia, in the province of Bari, ab. 28 mi. SW of Bari. It is the center of a rich agricultural district, producing grain, wine, fruit, and livestock. The cathedral, begun by Emperor Frederick II in 1232 and built in Romanesque style, has a beautiful Gothic portal dating from the 16th century. Pop. of commune, 31,431 (1936); of city, 31,099 (1936).

Altan Bulak (äl.tän' bö.läk'). [Also: Altan-Bulag, Kiachta, Kyakhta; former name, Maimachin, Maimaichin, Maimatchin.] Town in the Mongolian People's Republic, ab. 100 mi. S of Lake Baikal, on the Siberian frontier opposite Kyakhta, U.S.S.R. It is one of the most active commercial centers of the nation, being on a main trade route to the U.S.S.R. The chief exports are wool and meat products. Pop. ab. 20,000.

Altar (äl.tär'). [Also: Altar de Collanes (dā kō.yä'nās), Capac-Urcu.] Extinct volcano in the Andes of Ecuador, E of Riobamba. 17,725 ft.

Altaroche (ál.tá.rosh), Marie Michel. b. at Issoire, France, April 18, 1811; d. at Vaux, France, May 14, 1884. French journalist, poet, and dramatist. He edited Charivari.

Altar of Righteousness, The. Poem by Algernon Charles Swinburne. The burden of this poem is Swinburne's belief in his later years that there is no star to guide a man "save his own soul." It is probably now notable not so much for its subject matter as for being Swinburne's last poem before his death in 1909.

Altar of the Dead, The. Short story (1909) by Henry James, one of his stories of the occult.

Altar-Piece, The. Novel by Naomi Royde-Smith, published in 1939.

Altar Steps, The. Novel by Compton Mackenzie, published in 1922. The first of a trilogy, it deals with the spiritual development of Mark Lidderdale, an Anglican minister. His story is continued in The Parson's Progress (1923) and The Heavenly Ladder (1924).

Alt-Aussee (ält'ous'zā). Town in C Austria, in the northernmost part of Styria, in the Salzkammergut region, situated on the lake of Alt-Aussee. It is a summer resort. The author Jakob Wassermann lived here. 2,707 (1946).

Alta Verapaz (äl'tä vā.rä.päs'). Department in C Guatemala. Capital, Cobán; area, 4,472 sq. mi.; pop. 194,321 (1950).

Altavilla (al.tạ.vil'ạ). Roman name of Eltville.

Altavista (al.tạ.vis'tạ). Town in S Virginia, in Campbell County, on the Roanoke River. Manufactures include rayon and cedar chests. 3,332 (1950).

Alt-Breisach (ält''brī'zäċh). See Breisach.

Altdorf (ält'dôrf). [Also, Altorf.] Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Regierungsbezirk (government district) of Middle and Upper Franconia, situated on the Schwarzach River, ab. 13 mi. SE of Nuremberg: seat of an agricultural school. A university located here from 1623 to 1814 was united in the latter year with the University of Erlangen. Wallenstein was among its students. Altdorf belonged to the city of Nuremberg from 1505 to 1806. The population is predominantly Protestant. 5,306 (1946).

Altdorf. [Also, Altorf.] Capital of the canton of Uri, in C Switzerland, situated near the Reuss River and near the SE extremity of the Lake of Lucerne, on the St. Gotthard route, ab. 20 mi. SE of Lucerne, in the center of a fruit-growing district. It is the locale of the legends of William Tell, to whom a statue was erected here in 1861. Friedrich Schiller's dramatic play Wilhelm Tell is performed annually by residents of Altdorf at the William Tell Theater. 5,692 (1941).

Altdorfer (ält'dôr''fêr), Albrecht. b. probably at Regensburg, Bavaria, c1480; d. there, 1538. German engraver, landscape painter, and architect for the city of Regensburg; one of the "Little Masters" (a name given to a group of 16th-century German artists, all of them followers of Dürer). One of his most important paintings is The Battle of Arbela (1529), which is in the collection of the Pinakothek at Munich; a collection of his etchings and engravings is at Regensburg. His style was close to that of Dürer, with whom many scholars believe he may have studied.

Alte Fritz (ält'ę frits), Der. See Frederick II (of Prussia).

Alten (äl'tęn), Count Karl August von. b. at Burgwedel, near Hanover, Germany, Oct. 20, 1764; d. at Bozen, in the Tirol, April 20, 1840. Hanoverian soldier whose service in the British army won him the rank of major general. He served with the "German Legion" against Napoleon Bonaparte; campaigned under Sir John Moore and the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsular campaign; and was wounded at Waterloo. He later returned (1818) to Hanover, where he attained the rank of field marshal, and held posts as minister of war and foreign affairs.

Altena (äl'tę.nä). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated on the Lenne River, ab. 40 mi. NE of Cologne: important iron and steel manufactures, particularly of wire, needles, nails, and screws; also instruments, cotton textiles, shoes, and leather goods. The castle above the town, built in 1122, belonged formerly to the counts of Mark; it contains the local museum of the Sauerland. The important Thomée Collection of medieval paintings and sculptures remained intact during World War II. The population is predominantly Protestant. 22,162 (1950).

Altenahr (äl'tęn.är). Village in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Ahr River, ab. 30 mi. S of Cologne: wine culture; summer resort. The castle, built in the 10th century, was destroyed by the archbishop of Cologne in 1714. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. 1,402 (1946).

Altenberg (äl'tęn.berk). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, situated in the Erzgebirge, ab. 21 mi. S of Dresden: noted for its bismuth mines; in former centuries also a tin-mining center. The population is predominantly Protestant. 1,796 (1946).

Altenberg, Peter. [Pseudonym of Richard Engländer.] b. at Vienna, March 9, 1859; d. there, Jan. 8, 1919. Austrian author and publisher.

Altenburg (äl'tęn.bůrk). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, situated near the Pleisse River, ab. 25 mi. S of Leipzig. Before World War II it had important grain and livestock trade, specialized in the manufacture of playing cards, and also manufactured gloves, hats, brushes, chemicals, and cotton textiles. The Rathaus (town hall) is a Renaissance building built in 1562–64. High above the city is the castle, built in the 15th century, which was until 1919 the residence of the ruling dukes of Saxe-Altenburg; now it is a local and archaeological museum. There is also a museum of natural history and an art museum, a library, and various educational institutions. One of the oldest towns in the region, it was first mentioned in 976, became an imperial city in the 12th century, and came under the house of Wettin in 1329. It was burnt down by the Hussites in 1430; scene of the "robbery of the princes" in 1455, and of the religious disputation of Altenburg between Philippists and Lutherans in 1568–69; twice capital (1603–72 and 1826–1918) of the duchy of Saxe-Altenburg; incorporated into the newly formed state of Thuringia in 1918. Pop. 51,805 (1946).

Alten Fjord (äl'tęn). [Also, Alta Fjord.] Fjord on the N coast of Norway.

Altenkirchen (äl'tęn.kir.ċhęn). [Also, Altenkirchen im Westerwald (im ves'têr.vält).] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the Wied River, ab. 34 mi. SE of Cologne: manufactures wooden and rubber articles; agricultural trade. The French and Austrians twice fought near here in 1796. Pop. 3,567 (1946).

Alten-Ötting (äl'tęn.ėt'ing). See Altötting.

Altenstein (äl'tęn.shtīn). Summer castle of the dukes of Saxe-Meiningen, in the Thuringian forest ab. 10 mi. S of Eisenach, connected with the histories of the English Benedictine missionary, Saint Boniface, and of Luther (1521).

Altenstein, Karl. [Title, Baron von Stein zum Altenstein.] b. at Anspach, Bavaria, Oct. 7, 1770; d. at Berlin, May 14, 1840. Prussian minister of finance (1808–10) and of public worship (1817–38).

Altenzelle (äl'tęn.tsel.ę). Former Cistercian monastery near Nossen, in Saxony, secularized in 1544.

Alter (ôl'têr), David. b. in Westmoreland County, Pa., Dec. 3, 1807; d. Sept. 18, 1881. American physicist and physician, noted for his work in the field of spectrum analysis. His discovery that elemental gases have dissimilar spectra permitted the spectroscopic determination of their chemical nature. This discovery, now incorporated in the second of Kirchhoff's Laws, has led some biographers to make undeserved charges of theft against Kirchhoff, despite the fact that Alter himself never suggested such a possibility and seems to have been at first incompletely aware of the true import of his work.

Alterf (al.têrf'). The seldom-used name of the fourth-magnitude star λ Leonis, in the mouth of the animal.

Altgeld (ält'gelt, ôlt'geld), John Peter. b. at Nieder Selters, Germany, Dec. 30, 1847; d. at Joliet, Ill., March 12, 1902. American politician. He was a judge (1886–91) of the Superior Court of Cook County, Ill. As Democratic governor (1892–96) of Illinois he attracted wide attention by his pardon in 1893 of Neebe, Schwab, and Fielden, anarchists concerned in the Haymarket riot (1886) at Chicago. He protested Cleveland's use of the army in the Pullman strike (1894); was a prominent advocate of free coinage of silver and a supporter of William Jennings Bryan for the Presidency in 1896 and 1900. Author of Our Penal Machinery and its Victims (1884), Live Questions (1890), and others.

Althaea or Althea (al.thē'ạ). In Greek legend, a daughter of Thestius, wife of Oneus, king of Calydon, and mother of Tydeus, Meleager, and Deïaneira.

Altham (ôlt'ham), John. [Original name possibly Gravenor or Grosvenor.] b. 1589; d. in Maryland, 1640. English Jesuit missionary, active in the establishment of the Maryland colony. He sailed (1633) from England with 220 people in Leonard Calvert's Maryland expedition and later served as missionary to the Indians, among whom he achieved great influence.

Althea (al.thē'a). Name by which Richard Lovelace poetically addressed a woman, supposed to have been Lucy Sacheverell, whom he also celebrated by the name of Lucasta.

Althen (French, àl.tăñ), Jehan or Jean. b. in Persia; d. in France, 1774. Persian aristocrat, son of the governor of a Persian province, who introduced the cultivation of madder into France. Captured by the Turks and sold as a slave at Smyrna, he made his escape to France with some seeds of madder, the exportation of which was at that time forbidden under penalty of death.

Althing (äl'thing). Name of the parliament of Iceland. It is notable as the oldest European parliamentary body in existence, dating (although not as a continuously active body) from 930 A.D. Its most important act in recent years, from an international point of view, was to vote the independence of Iceland from Denmark in 1944. Its name (which means "general assembly" in Icelandic) is derived from the same original root as the word "Thing," which still has generic usage as the name of parliaments, assemblies, or diets in Scandinavian-speaking countries.

Althouse (ôlt'hous"), Paul Shearer. b. at Reading, Pa., 1889—. American operatic and concert tenor. He was the first singer trained entirely in the U.S. to obtain leading roles at the Metropolitan Opera, where he made his debut in 1913.

Altichiero da Zevio (äl.tē.kye'rō dä dze'vyō). [Also, Aldighero da Zevio.] b. at Zevio, near Verona, Italy, c1320; d. c1385. Italian painter of the Veronese school.

Altieri (äl.tye'rē), Emilio. Original name of Pope Clement X.

Altilia (äl.tē'lyä). [Ancient name, Saepinum.] Small place in C Italy ab. 20 mi. N of Benevento. The Roman walls of the ancient town (the Samnite Saepinum), ab. 2 mi. from the modern site, remain practically perfect.

Alting (äl'ting), Johann Heinrich. b. at Emden, Prussia, Feb. 17, 1583; d. at Groningen, Aug. 25, 1644. German Protestant theologian, professor of dogmatics (1613) at Heidelberg and later of theology (1627) at Groningen. He opposed the Remonstrants in the synod of Dordrecht.

Altin Tagh (äl'tin täg). See Altyn Tagh.

Altiplano de México (äl.tē.plä'nō dā me'ʜē.kō). Spanish name of the Mexican Plateau.

Altisidora (äl"tē.sē.dō'rä). Character in the "Curious Impertinent," an episode in Cervantes' Don Quixote. An attendant of the duchess, she torments Don Quixote by pretending to be in love with him.

Altkirch (ält'kirch). Town in E France, in the department of Haut-Rhin (formerly Upper Alsace), situated on the Ill River ab. 18 mi. NW of Basel, Switzerland. The chief place in the old Sundgau district, it has remnants of medieval fortifications. Cotton textiles are the principal manufactures. 3,807 (1946).

Altman (ôlt'mạn), Benjamin. b. at New York, July 12, 1840; d. there, Oct. 7, 1913. American merchant, philanthropist, and art patron. Following small independent ventures and partnerships, he opened (1906) a store at the NE corner of Fifth Ave. and 34th St., which is the site of the present-day department store bearing his name. He was characterized by John Wanamaker as the first among New York's retail merchants. He established also the Altman Foundation to aid the welfare of employees, and amassed a collection of works of art which was appraised at 20 million dollars when it was given to the Metropolitan Museum at New York.

Altmark (ält'märk). See under Nordmark.

Altmark Incident. Famous international incident in World War II involving the Altmark, a German auxiliary cruiser, which was discovered by the British in February, 1940, in Norwegian territorial waters. Believed to be carrying British prisoners, the Altmark was boarded on Feb. 19, 1940, by sailors from the British destroyer Cossack despite protests by the Norwegians. The British prisoners found aboard were freed and returned to England on the Cossack.

Altmeyer (ôlt'mī"ėr), Arthur Joseph. b. at De Pere, Wis., May 8, 1891—. American public servant and teacher. A high-school teacher (1914–16) and principal (1916–18), Wisconsin state official (1918–33), and federal government official (1933 et seq.), he became, in 1937, chairman of the Social Security Board.

Altmeyer (ält'mī"ėr), Jean Jacques. b. at Luxembourg, Jan. 24, 1804; d. at Brussels, Sept. 15, 1877. Belgian historian. Among his works are Histoire des relations commerciales et politiques des Pays-Bas, Résumé de l'histoire moderne (1842), and various works on Dutch and Belgian history.

Altmühl (älţ'mül). [Latin, Alcimona, Alcmona.] River in SE Germany, in Bavaria, which joins the Danube at Kelheim ab. 14 mi. SW of Regensburg. It crosses the Franconian Jura and is connected with the Main River system by the Ludwigs-Canal at Dietfurt. Length, ab. 125 mi.

Altmünster (älţ'mün"stėr). [Also, Altmuenster.] Village in C Austria, in the province of Upper Austria, situated on the W side of the Traunsee, SW of Gmunden. It is a summer resort. 7,566 (1946).

Alto Alentejo (äl'tō ä.lān.tā'zhō). Province of Portugal, bounded by Beira Baixa, Ribatejo, and Estremadura on the NW, W, and SW, by Baixo Alentejo on the S, and by Spain on the E. It comprises the districts of Portalegre and Évora. Wine, grain, and cork are among the chief agricultural products; minerals including copper, iron ore, and manganese are also important. Capital, Évora; area, 5,219 sq. mi.; pop. 375,511 (1940).

Alton (ôl'tọn). Urban district and market town in S England, in Southampton (an administrative county of the geographical county of Hampshire), ab. 47 mi. SW of London by rail. 8,636 (1951).

Alton. City in SW Illinois, in Madison County, on the Mississippi River, ab. 21 mi. N of St. Louis. Important manufactures include glass, lead, steel, and chemicals. It is the seat of Shurtleff College. The seventh and final Lincoln-Douglas debate took place at Alton on Oct. 15, 1858. Pop. 32,550 (1950).

Alton (däl'tọn), Johann Wilhelm Eduard d'. b. at Aquileia, Austria-Hungary (now in Italy), Aug. 11, 1772; d. at Bonn, Prussia, May 11, 1840. German naturalist and engraver, author of Naturgeschichte des Pferdes (1810) and Vergleichende Osteologie (1821–31).

Altona (äl'tō.nä). Former city in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Hamburg, British Zone, formerly in Schleswig-Holstein province, Prussia, situated on the right bank of the Elbe River below Hamburg: a part of Hamburg since 1937. It has extensive trade and numerous manufactures, particularly of foodstuffs and textiles, as well as fish and livestock markets. Altona received town privileges through King Frederick III of Denmark (1664), was burned down by the Swedes in 1713, and came under Prussian rule in 1866. Extensive damage was done to the community in World War II.

Altoona (al.tō'nạ). City in S Pennsylvania, in Blair County, at the base of the Allegheny Mountains: important for its railroad shops; manufactures silk and rayon textiles. Horseshoe Curve, where the Pennsylvania Railroad ascends the Allegheny plateau, is nearby. The curve, a noted engineering feat, has a central angle of 220° and is graded 91 ft. to the mile. It was constructed in 1852 and is 2,375 ft. long. Pop. of city, 77,177 (1950); of urbanized area, 86,614 (1950).

Alto Perú (äl'tō pā.rö'). Spanish name of Upper Peru; see Charcas.

Altorf (äl'tôrf). See Altdorf.

Altos (äl'tōs). City in S Paraguay, in Cordillera department. 11,000 (est.).

Altötting (ält'ėt"ing). [Also, Alten-Ötting.] Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Kreis (district) of Upper Bavaria, situated near the Inn River and the Austrian border, ab. 50 mi. NE of Munich: machine industry and agricultural trade. It is a famous place of pilgrimage. The black, wood-carved statue of the Holy Virgin, contained in a silver tabernaculum in the Romanesque Holy Chapel, is considered to have miraculous properties; the hearts of the rulers of Bavaria, since the elector Maximilian I, are preserved in silver vessels. The parish church contains a treasury and the tomb of the field marshal Johann Tserclaes Tilly; the Jesuit Church of Mary Magdalene, built in 1593, is in the baroque style. 8,529 (1946).

Altranstädt (ält'rän''shtet). Village in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony-Anhalt, Russian Zone, formerly in Prussian Saxony, ab. 9 mi. SE of Merseburg. Here a treaty was concluded (1706) between Charles XII of Sweden and Augustus II of Saxony, by which the latter lost Poland. A treaty was also made here in 1707, between Charles XII of Sweden and Emperor Joseph I of Austria, by which religious toleration was secured for the Protestants in Silesia. 1,817 (1946).

Altrincham (ôl'tring.am). [Also, Altringham.] Municipal borough in W England, in Cheshire, ab. 8 mi. SW of Manchester, ab. 185 mi. NW of London by rail. 39,787 (1951).

Altringer (ält'ring.ėr), Count Johann. See Aldringen, Count Johann.

Altruria (al.trö'ri.ą). Imaginary commonwealth, the government and institutions of which are founded upon the principles of altruism. William Dean Howells described such a community in his book A Traveler from Altruria (1894). The practical application of the principles resulted in the abolition of monopoly and competition and the establishing of social and economic equality.

Altschuler (ält'shö''lėr), Modest. b. at Mogilev, Russia, 1873—. Russian cellist and symphony conductor. After studying (1884–86) at the Warsaw Conservatory, he came to the U.S. and organized (1903) the Russian Symphony Orchestra, which gave (1904–20) concerts under his baton at New York and elsewhere.

Altsheler (ôlt'shel'ėr), Joseph Alexander. b. at Three Springs, Ky., April 29, 1862; d. June 5, 1919. American editor and author of six series of historical novels for boys. He was on the staff of the New York World from 1892 on, for which publication he wrote his first adventure story when no other suitable tale could be obtained.

Altstätten (ält'shtet''ęn). [Also: Alstaetten, Altstädten, Altstetten.] Town in NE Switzerland, in the canton of St. Gallen, near the Rhine River, S of Rorschach. It has cotton manufactures. 8,213 (1941).

Altstrelitz (ält'shtrā''lits). [Also, Strelitz.] Town in N Germany, once capital of the duchy of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, situated S of Neustrelitz, which replaced it as capital in the 18th century.

Alturas (al.tůr'ąs). City in NE California, on the Pit River, county seat of Modoc County. It is a trading center for the lumber and agricultural products of the area. 2,819 (1950).

Altus (al'tus). City in SW Oklahoma, in Jackson County: marketing center for a petroleum and cotton producing region. 9,735 (1950).

Altvater Mountains (ält'fä''tėr). [Also, Moravian Snow Mountains.] Group of mountains in the Sudetic system, situated in N Moravia, Czechoslovakia. Highest point, Gross Altvater, ab. 4,850 ft.

Altyn Tagh (äl'tin täg). [Also: Altin Tagh, Astin Tagh.] Mountain system in W China, between Sinkiang and Tibet, running generally E to W and arching N. It forms the S boundary of the Takla Makan desert, extending for 700 mi. and reaching a height of 19,728 ft.

Aludra (al.ö'drą). The third-magnitude star η Canis Majoris.

Alula Borealis and Alula Australis (al'ů.lą bō.rē.al'is; ôs.trā'lis). The two fourth-magnitude stars ν and ξ Ursae Majoris, which mark the S hind foot of the beast. Xi, which is a fine binary star with a period of only 59.8 years, is also known as El Acola.

Alumbagh (ą.lum'bäg). See Alambagh.

Alungu (ä.löng'gö). [Also: Ulungu, Urungu.] District of Northern Rhodesia, C Africa, S and SE of Lake Tanganyika.

Alunno (ä.lön'nō), Niccolò. [Original name, Niccolò di Liberatore.] b. at Foligno, Italy, c1430; d. 1502. Umbrian painter, believed by some scholars to have been the teacher of Perugino and Pinturicchio. His work consisted largely of banners for religious processions, and altarpieces.

Alur (ä.lör'). [Also: Aluri (-lö'rē), Jo Alur, Lur.] Nilotic-speaking people of E Africa, in NW Uganda and NE Belgian Congo, inhabiting an area N of Lake Albert and W of the branch of the Nile deriving from Lake Albert. Their population is estimated at 140,000 (by M. A. Bryan, Distribution of the Nilotic and Nilo-Hamitic Languages of Africa, 1948). Culturally and linguistically they resemble the Lango and Shilluk.

Alured of Beverley (al'ů.red). See Alfred of Beverley.

Aluredus Beverlacensis (al.ů.rē'dus bev''ėr.lą.sen'sis). See Alfred of Beverley.

Aluta (o.lů'to). See Olt.

Alva (äl'vä; Anglicized, al'vą), Duke of. [Also: Duke of Alba; birth name, Fernando Alvarez de Toledo.] b. 1508; d. c1582. Spanish general and governor of the Netherlands (1567–73). He served as an officer under Charles V from the siege of Tunis (1535) through the victory at Mühlberg (1547) over Elector John of Saxony, and as commander in chief (1553 et seq.) in Italy. He was appointed by Philip II of Spain after the abdication of Charles V to suppress the revolt in the Netherlands, which he put down with ruthlessness until checked (1572 et seq.) by the prince of Orange, William I of Nassau ("William the Silent"). His Council of Troubles (known popularly as the Council of Blood) imposed death sentences on leading patriots of the Netherlands, including Counts Egmont, Hoorn, and others, and reaching a total of approximately 18,000 persons by the end of his regime. He fell from favor on his return to Spain, but was recalled (1580) to head the attack on Portugal which resulted in the collapse of the Portuguese government and a massacre of the Lisbon populace.

Alva (al'vą). City in NW Oklahoma, county seat of Woods County. It was designated a land-office town when the Cherokee Strip was opened (1893) for settlement; named for Alva Adams, a governor of Colorado. 6,505 (1950).

Alvan (al'vąn), Sigismund. In George Meredith's novel, The Tragic Comedians (1880), the fictional name of Ferdinand Lassalle.

Alvarado (äl.bä.rä'ᴛʜō), Alonso de. b. at Burgos, Spain, c1490; d. in Peru, c1556. Spanish cavalier who joined (1518) Hernando Cortés in the conquest (1519–21) of Mexico. With Pedro de Alvarado he went (1534) to Peru, where he remained with Francisco Pizarro. Defeated (July 12, 1537) by Pizarro's enemy, Diego de Almagro, at Abancay, he revenged himself (April 26, 1538) when Almagro was in turn defeated by him at Las Salinas.

Alvarado, Diego de. d. in Spain, 1540. Spanish soldier. He is believed to have been either a brother or an uncle of Pedro de Alvarado, who went with him to Peru in 1534.

Alvarado, Juan Bautista. b. at Monterey, California, 1809; d. 1882. Mexican politician. He was governor (1836–42) of California, at a time when that area, although technically still Mexican, was in fact virtually independent of the mother country. His period of authority saw the decay of political power which facilitated acquisition of California by the U.S. a few years later.

Alvarado, Pedro de. [Called by the Indians "Tonatiuh," a Nahuatl word meaning "sun," in allusion to his ruddy complexion and blond hair and beard.] b. in Badajoz, Spain, 1485; d. at Guadalajara, Mexico, June 4, 1541. Spanish cavalier, famous as a companion of Hernando Cortés in the conquest of Mexico. He went to the West Indies in 1510, and in 1511 joined the expedition of Diego Velasquez (c1465–1522) to Cuba, where he received a grant of land. In 1518 he commanded a vessel in the expedition of Grijalva to Yucatán, and in the following year followed Cortés in the Mexican conquest. He was present at the seizure of Montezuma, and when Cortés went to the coast to meet Pánfilo de Narvaez, Alvarado was left in command of the force at what is now Mexico City. During Cortés's absence the Mexicans rose and besieged the Spaniards. In the disastrous nocturnal retreat (the noche triste, of July 1, 1520), Alvarado commanded the rear guard and escaped with difficulty, saving his life, according to the tradition, by leaping across a great gap in the causeway, at the spot later called "Alvarado's Leap." In the subsequent operations and the siege of Mexico he took a prominent part. In December, 1523, he was sent with 420 Spaniards and a large force of Indians to conquer Guatemala; after a desperate battle with the Quiché Indians near Quezaltenango, he marched to Utitlán and burned that town, after conquering the inhabitants, in April, 1524. He defeated another army near Lake Atitlán, and founded the old city of Guatemala, on July 25, 1524. He returned (1527) to Spain to meet charges of defrauding the royal treasury, but was acquitted, and went back to Guatemala in 1530 as governor, with a large number of colonists. In 1534 he headed an expedition of 400 men against Quito, claiming that the region was not included in the grant made to Pizarro, and was thus open to conquest. Landing on the coast, he led his men over the mountains in a terrible march, during which large numbers of them perished. Near Riobamba he met the forces of Almagro and Sebastián de Benalcazar, and was induced to retire, receiving, it is said, a large sum of gold from Pizarro. Returning to Guatemala, he took part in the conquest of Honduras, which was added to the territory under his control as governor. In 1540 he went to Mexico, was engaged in subduing a revolt in Jalisco, and died there from a fall with his horse.

Alvarenga (äl.vą.rāng'gą), Manuel Inácio da Silva. b. at Vila Rica (now Ouro Preto) or at São João del-Rei, Brazil, 1749; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 1, 1814. Brazilian poet, best remembered for his Glaura: poemas eróticos (1799), and considered by some critics to have been a forerunner of romanticism in Brazil. He studied law (1771–76) at the University of Coimbra, Portugal, and taught rhetoric and poetics at Rio de Janeiro.

Alvarenga Peixoto (pā.shō'tō), Ignácio José de. See Peixoto, Ignácio José de Alvarenga.

Alvares (äl'vą.rēsh), Diogo. [Full surname, Alvares Corrêa; Indian name, Caramurú.] d. near Bahia, Brazil, Oct. 5, 1557. Portuguese adventurer who in 1510 was shipwrecked on the coast of Brazil near what was later to be known as Bahia. He succeeded in gaining the friendship of the Tupinambá Indians, and subsequently brought about friendly relations between them and the first Portuguese colonists.

Álvares de Azevedo (äl'vą.rēz dē ă.zę.vā'dō), Manuel Antônio. See Azevedo, Manuel Antônio Álvares de.

Álvarez (äl'bă.reth), Gonzales Melquíades. See Melquíades Álvarez, Gonzales.

Alvarez, José. [Full name, José Álvarez de Pereira y Cubero.] b. 1768; d. 1827. Spanish sculptor, an outstanding member of the classicist school. He aided in the decoration of the Quirinal palace at Rome, and was later made sculptor to Ferdinand VII of Spain, of whom he made a bust. His other works include statues of Charles IV, Maria Louisa, Isabella de Braganza, and other notable Spanish figures.

Álvarez (äl'bă.res), Juan. b. at Concepción de Atoyac (now Ciudad Álvarez), Mexico, c1790; d. Aug. 21, 1867. Mexican Indian revolutionary general and political leader.

Álvarez (äl'bă.reth), Luis. b. at Madrid, 1836; d. there, 1901. Spanish historical painter, also known for his genre and portrait work.

Alvarez (al'vą.rez), Walter Clement. b. at San Francisco, July 22, 1884—. American physician. After serving on the staffs of the medical schools at Stanford (1911–12) and the University of California (1915–26), he joined the staff of the Mayo Clinic in 1926. In 1934 he became professor of medicine at Minnesota's Mayo Foundation.

Álvarez de Arenales (äl'bă.res dā ă.rā.nä'les), Juan Antonio. b. 1774; d. 1831. Argentine general in the war for independence. He served under José de San Martín in the invasion of Chile and Peru, and in the latter country led two expeditions to the interior, in December, 1820, and in May, 1821. In the first of these he defeated and captured (Dec. 6, 1820) the Spanish general, O'Reilly. In 1822 he commanded the garrison of Lima.

Álvarez de Cienfuegos (äl'bă.reth dā thyen.fwā'gōs), Nicasio. See Cienfuegos, Nicasio Álvarez de.

Álvarez de Toledo (dā tō.lā'тнō), Fernando. See Alva, Duke of.

Alvarez Quintero (kēn.tā'rō), Joaquín. b. at Utrera, Spain, 1873; d. 1944. Spanish dramatist who wrote in collaboration with his brother, Serafín Alvarez Quintero.

Álvarez Quintero, Serafín. b. at Utrera, Spain, 1871; d. 1938. Spanish dramatist. He collaborated with his brother Joaquín in writing more than 100 comedies, one-act plays, and satires, almost all of which have an Andalusian setting. Among the most popular are El genio alegre, La buena sombra, El patio, La reja, Puebla de las mujeres, Doña Clarines o Las de Caín, and Los galeotes.

Alvary (äl.vä'rē), Max. Stage name of Achenbach, Max.

Alvear (äl.bā.ăr'), Carlos María. b. in Misiones, Argentina, 1789; d. at Montevideo, Uruguay, c1853. Argentine politician and soldier, prominent in the war for independence. Having joined the party of Posadas, he commanded the besieging army to which Montevideo capitulated in June, 1814, but was worsted in a struggle with the Uruguayan, José Gervasio Artigas. In January, 1815, he succeeded Posadas as dictator, but was soon deposed by the army. He commanded the Argentine forces against the Brazilians in Uruguay in 1826 and won the indecisive victory of Ituzaingó (Feb. 20, 1827). He was minister to the U.S. in 1823. During the dictatorship of Juan Manuel de Rosas he was banished.

Alvear, Marcelo Torcuato de. b. at Buenos Aires, 1868; d. 1942. Argentine politician and diplomat whose administration (1922–28) as president was marked by moderate reforms, chiefly in the field of aid to farmers. Active in the revolutions of 1890, 1893, and 1905, he is believed also to have been a leading figure in the unsuccessful revolt of December, 1932, in company with his successor as president (and erstwhile) political opponent, Hipólito Irigoyen.

Alvensleben (äl'vęns.lā.bęn), Count Albrecht von. b. at Halberstadt, Prussian Saxony, March 23, 1794; d. at Berlin, May 2, 1858. Prussian politician and diplomat. As minister of finance (1836–42), he furthered the development of the Zollverein, the customs union among the German states that preceded political union later in the century.

Alvensleben, Gustav Hermann von. b. at Rathenow, Germany, Jan. 17, 1827; d. at Möckmühl, Germany, Feb. 1, 1905. Prussian lieutenant general. He participated in the Prussian wars against Denmark and Austria in the 1860's, and commanded an Uhlan regiment in the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71).

Alvensleben, Gustav von. b. at Eichenbarleben, Germany, Sept. 30, 1803; d. at Gernrode, Germany, June 30, 1881. Prussian general, chief of staff in the military department of the Rhine provinces and Westphalia. He commanded an army corps in the Franco-Prussian War (1870–71), distinguishing himself at Sedan and elsewhere.

Alvensleben, Konstantin von. b. at Eichenbarleben, Germany, Aug. 26, 1809; d. at Berlin, March 28, 1892. Prussian general; brother of Gustav von Alvensleben.

Alver (äl'ver), Betti. b. in Tartumaa, Estonia, 1906—. Estonian poet and novelist. She is regarded by some critics as the subtlest master of form in Estonian poetry.

Alverdes (äl.ver'des), Paul. b. at Strasbourg, May 6, 1897—. German poet, story writer, and novelist. He deals with young people and their crises, more particularly with their war experiences. Die Pfeiferstube (1929; Eng. trans., The Whistlers' Room, 1930), a story of soldiers wounded in the throat, is considered to be the most effective of these. Reinhold oder die Verwandelten (1931; Eng. trans., Changed Men, 1933) treats a similar theme on a broader canvas. A drama, Die feindlichen Brüder (1923), was less successful. Together with Karl Benno von Mechow he founded (1934) the journal Das Innere Reich.

Alves (äl'vęs), (Antônio de) Castro. [Called the "Poet of the Slaves."] b. on a farm near Curralinho (now Castro Alves), Bahia, Brazil, March 14, 1847; d. at Cidade do Salvador, Brazil, July 6, 1871. Brazilian romantic poet (both lyric and epic) of extraordinary power, regarded by many critics as the greatest poetic genius of Brazil. An apostle of social justice, he used to recite his own poems at rallies and became known as "the poet of the slaves." He studied law at Recife and São Paulo.

Alves Branco (brung'kō), Manoel. [Created in 1854, Visconde de Caravellas.] b. at Bahia, Brazil, June 7, 1797; d. at Nictheroy, Brazil, July 13, 1855. Brazilian lawyer and politician. He entered political life as a deputy in 1830, and soon became a leader of the liberal party.

Alvey (al'vi), Richard Henry. b. in St. Mary's County, Md., March 6, 1826; d. at Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 14, 1906. American jurist and Confederate sympathizer during the Civil War. His advocacy of states' rights was incorporated (January, 1861) in the "Alvey Resolution," produced at a county meeting held to discuss the question of secession; his attitude led to a period of probably unjustified imprisonment (February, 1861–February, 1862) as a Confederate agent.

Alvin (al'vin). City in E Texas, in Brazoria County, S of Houston, in a petroleum-producing region. 3,701 (1950).

Alvinczy (ôl'vin.tsē) or Alvinzi (äl'-), Josef. [Title, Baron von Barberek.] b. at Alvincz, in Transylvania, Feb. 1, 1735; d. at Budapest, Nov. 25, 1810. Austrian field marshal. He served in the Seven Years' War, attaining the rank of colonel; after an unsuccessful attempt to storm Belgrade in 1789, he distinguished himself at Neerwinden in 1793, but later in the same year he was defeated at Hondschooten. As an Austrian commander in Italy (1796–97), he was defeated by Napoleon at Arcole (1796) and at Rivoli (1797).

Alvord (ôl'vȯrd, al'-), Benjamin. b. at Rutland, Vt., Aug. 18, 1813; d. Oct. 16, 1884. American general and military writer, member of the Union forces during the Civil War, serving as commander of volunteers and paymaster in Oregon. He was the author also of numerous articles on mathematics and geography.

Alvord, Clarence Walworth. b. at Greenfield, Mass. May 21, 1868; d. Jan. 24, 1928. American historian.

Alvord, Corydon Alexis. b. at Winchester, Conn., May 12, 1813; d. Nov. 28, 1874. American printer. A printing firm which he established (1845) at New York acquired one of the largest stocks of seldom-used type faces in America, and became for that reason one of the chief 19th-century U.S. printers of special works of all kinds.

Alvord, Henry Elijah. b. at Greenfield, Mass., March 11, 1844; d. Oct. 1, 1904. American educator, specialist in dairy husbandry, and Union soldier in the Civil War. He studied agriculture at Massachusetts Agricultural College, after having been the first U.S. army officer detailed to serve (1869–71) as a military instructor at a land-grant college. A pioneer (1876 et seq.) in the establishment of coöperative creameries in New England, he was head of the Dairy Division of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Animal Husbandry from the time it was set up in 1895 until his death.

Älvsborg (elfs'bôry'). Län (county) of Sweden, in the SW part. Capital, Vänersborg; area, 4,919 sq. mi.; pop. 358,700 (1950).

Alwaid (al.wīd'). The second-magnitude star β Draconis, in the monster's eye. It is called Rastaban on some star-maps.

Alwand (äl.vänd'). [Also: Arwand, Elwend, Elwund; ancient name, Orontes.] Mountain in NW Iran, a few miles S of Hamadan (formerly called Ecbatana). 11,719 ft.

Alwar (ul'wur). [Also, Ulwar.] Former state of Rajputana, now merged with Rajasthan, Union of India, ab. 50 mi. S of Delhi: wheat, barley, and cotton. Capital, Alwar; area, 3,127 sq. mi.; pop. 823,055 (1941).

Alwar. Capital of the former state of Alwar, Union of India, ab. 80 mi. SW of Delhi. 54,143 (1941).

Alyattes (al.i.at'ēz). Reigned c617–560 B.C. King of Lydia; father of Croesus. He made conquests in Asia Minor, carried on war against Cyaxares of Media, and laid the foundation of the Lydian empire. His tomb N of Sardis was an outstanding monument of antiquity.

Alypius (ạ.lip'i.us) or Alypios (-os). fl. c360 A.D. Greek theorist whose Introduction to Music, consisting of vocal and instrumental symbols, is a chief source for the study of the Greek system of musical notation.

Alz (älts). River in SE Germany, a tributary of the Inn, in Upper Bavaria: the outlet of Chiem Lake.

Alzey (äl'tsī). [Also, Alzei.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the department of Rhine Hesse, Hesse, situated on the Selz River, ab. 19 mi. SW of Mainz. A center of the local wine and livestock trade, it also contains machine, shoe, and leather factories. The Nikolaikirche (Church of Saint Nicholas) dates from the 15th century, and the Rathaus (town hall) from the 16th century; there is a museum of antiquities. Founded by the Romans, it is mentioned in the medieval Nibelungenlied. Throughout the Middle Ages it belonged to the Rhenish Palatinate, and was at various times the residence of the electors of the Palatinate. Sacked by the Spaniards in 1620, burned down by the French in 1689, it was ceded to France in 1797, and to Hesse in 1816. Considerable damage was done in World War II. Approximately two thirds of the population are Protestants, one third Roman Catholics. 10,555 (1950).

Alzheimer (älts'hī.mėr), Alois. b. at Marktbreit, Bavaria, Germany, June 14, 1864; d. at Breslau, in Silesia, Dec. 19, 1915. German psychiatrist.

Alzire (ál.zēr). Tragedy, and its titular heroine, by Voltaire, produced on Jan. 27, 1736, in which are contrasted the virtues of the noble natural man with those of Christianized and civilized man. The heroine, Alzire, is a noble Peruvian captive.

Alzog (äl'tsōk), Johann Baptist. b. at Ohlau, in Silesia, June 29, 1808; d. at Freiburg, Baden, Feb. 28, 1878. German Roman Catholic historian, professor at Posen, Hildesheim, and Freiburg. Author of Lehrbuch der Universalkirchengeschichte (1840), and others.

Alzubra (al'zū.brạ). The rarely used name of a star of the fifth magnitude, 72 Leonis, in the animal's hind quarters.

Amabaca (ä.mạ.bä'kạ). See Bhaca.

Amabomvana (ä''mạ.bôm.vä'nạ). See Bomvana.

Amacuro (ä.mä.kö'rō). [Also, Amacura (-rä).] Small river in E Venezuela which enters the delta of the Orinoco ab. 15 mi. W of the mouth of the Barima.

Amadah (ä.mä'dä). Place in NE Africa, in the old region of Nubia, on the bend of the Nile near Derr: noted for the temple of the Egyptian pharaoh Thutmose III.

Amadas (am'a.dạs), Philip. [Also, Amidas.] b. at Hull, England, 1550; d. c1618. English navigator. He was sent (1584) by Raleigh, with Arthur Barlowe, to explore the coast of America from Florida northward. He landed on islands off what is now North Carolina and, with Sir Richard Grenville (c1541–91) and Sir Ralph Lane (c1530–1603), established a colony there in 1585.

Amadeo (ä.mä.dā'ō). [Title, Duke of Aosta; Latinized, Amadeus.] b. May 30, 1845; d. at Turin, Italy, Jan. 18, 1890. King of Spain; the second son of Victor Emmanuel II of Italy. He was elected king of Spain in November, 1870; he entered Madrid on Jan. 2, 1871, and abdicated Feb. 11, 1873.

Amadeo, Giovanni Antonio. [Also: Omodeo; Latinized, Amadeus.] b. near Pavia, in Lombardy, c1447; d. Aug. 27, 1522. Lombard sculptor. He was associated during his early career with the work on the façade of the Certosa at Pavia. With his brother Protasius he also made the tomb of San Lanfranco in the church of that saint near Pavia. He made the monument to Medea Colleoni (or Coleoni) at Basella near Bergamo, and the chapel and tomb of Bartolommeo Colleoni himself at Bergamo, the latter in 1509. In 1490 he was appointed chief architect of the Certosa at Pavia, and made a new design for the façade which was subsequently carried out by his successors. He constructed the cupola of the cathedral at Milan, and two important monuments for the chapel of the Borromeo family at Isola Bella.

Amadeus V (am.ạ.dē'us). [French, Amédée; called "the Great."] b. at Bourge, Savoy, 1249; d. 1323. Count of Savoy, who reigned from 1285 to 1323. He was the ancescestor of the house of Savoy (from which came, until the establishment of the republic in 1946, the kings of modern Italy). He increased the possessions of Savoy by marriage and conquest, and was made a prince of the Holy Roman Empire in 1313.

Amadeus VI. [Called the "Green Count."] b. 1334; d. 1383. Count of Savoy; a grandson of Amadeus V. He reigned 1343–83, and acquired various territories in Piedmont and elsewhere.

Amadeus VII. [Called "Amadeus the Red."] Count of Savoy; a son of Amadeus VI. He reigned 1383–91, and acquired Nice.

Amadeus VIII. b. at Chambéry, Savoy, Sept. 4, 1383; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, Jan. 7, 1451. Count (later duke) of Savoy; son of Amadeus VII. He succeeded to the title of count in 1391, was created duke in 1416, and abdicated in 1434. He was elected Pope in 1439, and ruled (1440–49) as Felix V.

Amadeus, Lake. Salt Lake in W central Australia, in the SW corner of the Northern Territory. Length, ab. 150 mi.

"Amadeus the Red." See Amadeus VII.

Amadis of Gaul (am'ạ.dis). [French, Amadis de Gaule (ạ.mà.dēs dẹ gōl); Spanish Amadís de Gaula (ä.mä-

THĒS' dā gou'lä).] Legendary and titular hero of a famous medieval romance of chivalry, the center of a cycle of romances. He is the oldest of the heroes of chivalry. He is represented as the illegitimate son of Perion, king of Gaul, and Elisena, princess of Brittany. His mother abandoned him soon after his birth, putting him, in his cradle, in the sea. Rescued by a Scottish knight, he was educated at the court of the king of Scotland, and fell in love with, and eventually married, Oriana, daughter of Lisuarte, king of England. After being knighted he returned to Gaul, and during the rest of his life performed there and elsewhere a number of impressive exploits. It is believed that the Amadis was originally translated by the Spaniard Montalvo from a lost Portuguese original of the 14th century. There is no trace of a French original, the existence of which has been assumed by French critics. The first known edition was prepared by Garci Rodríguez de Montalvo in Spanish and published at Saragossa, Spain, in 1508. It contained four books and stated that the first three had not been originally written by him. The authorship of the romance is a controversial matter. It has been ascribed to the Portuguese Vasco de Lobeira (d. c1403) by some scholars; to João de Lobeira (13th century, also a Portuguese, by others; still others have ascribed one part (the third book) to the former and another part (the first two books) to the latter. References to the first three books of the romance are often found in the literature of the 14th century. In 1540, Nicolas d' Herberay des Essarts undertook to give a French version of it. His version, in turn, had sequels, but none which equaled the popularity or power of his work. The book became immensely popular in France. It had, moreover, a great influence on the heroic romances of the early 17th century.

Amadis of Greece. Continuation of the seventh book of Amadis of Gaul. It was in Spanish, and said to be by Feliciano de Silva. It relates the exploits of the son of Lisuarte of Greece who was the son of Esplandian, the son of Amadis of Gaul.

Amado (ą.mä'dō), Jorge. b. at Ilhéus, Brazil, August 12, 1912—. Brazilian novelist, journalist, and lawyer.

Amador de los Ríos (ä.mä.THŌR' dā lōz rē'ōs), José. b. at Baena, Spain, May 1, 1818; d. at Seville, Spain Feb. 17, 1878. Spanish critic and literary historian.

Amador Guerrero (ger.rā'rō), Manuel. b. at Cartagena, Colombia, 1833; d. 1909. First president (1904–08) of the republic of Panama. Having been a leader of the movement by which Panama declared its independence (1903) of Colombia, he was unanimously chosen by the constitutional convention despite a clause in the constitution stipulating that the president must be a native of the area now comprising the republic

Amagasaki (ä.mä.gä.sä.kē). City in Japan, in Hyogo prefecture, in the W part of the island of Honshu, within the metropolitan area of Osaka. It is an important industrial center, most notably in the production of iron, steel, and chemicals, and was heavily bombed by U.S. planes during the latter part of World War II. 279,264 (1950).

Amager (ä'mä.gęr). [Also, Amak.] Island of Denmark, in the Øresund, opposite the main part of Copenhagen and partly within the limits of that city. Area, 25 sq. mi.; pop. 150,775 (1945).

Amaimon (ą.mā'mon). [Also: Amaymon, Amoymon.] In medieval demonology, one of the four kings of hell, of which he governed the eastern portion. Asmodeus was his lieutenant and first prince of his realm. Shakespeare alludes to Amaimon in the Merry Wives of Windsor and in Henry IV.

Amak (ä'mäk). See Amager.

Amakusa Islands (ä.mä.kō.sä). Group of islands off the W coast of the island of Kyushu, Japan. There are two large islands in the group, and some 68 smaller ones.

Amakusa Sea. [Japanese, Amakusa Nada (nä.dä).] Arm of the East China Sea, on the W coast of the island of Kyushu, Japan.

Amalarius (am.ą.lā'ri.us). b. at Metz, France, before 800; d. c850. French ecclesiastic. A disciple of Alcuin, he was a liturgical writer during the period when a fusion of Gallican and Roman rites took place. He was head of the church at Lyons during the deposition of Agobard, in 833–837. His work De ecclesiąsticis officiis describes the order of service observed in the Roman Church in the 9th century.

Amalasontha (am''ą.lą.son'thą), Amalasuentha (-sū-en'thą), Amalasuntha (-sun'thą), or Amalaswintha (-swin'thą). b. 498; killed 535. Daughter of Theodoric, king of the East Goths. After her father's death (526) she became regent for her son Athalaric. In 534, when Athalaric also died, she became co-ruler for a year.

Amalek (am'ą.lek). [In the Douay Version, Amalech.] A grandson of Esau, eponymic of a tribe in the early history of the Hebrews. In Biblical history the Amalekites are represented as nomads, doomed to extermination after the attack on the Israelites under Joshua.

Amalfi (ä.mäl'fē). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Salerno, situated on the Gulf of Salerno, ab. 22 mi. SE of Naples. It has a port, fisheries, and paper and macaroni factories. It is the seat of an archbishopric. The ancient town, picturesquely situated on a hilly slope in the midst of orchards and vineyards, is a major attraction for tourists. The former convent of San Francesco is now used as a hotel. The cathedral was built in the Norman-Saracenic style in the 10th–13th centuries. In the early Middle Ages a leading commercial center, carrying on large-scale trade with the Near East, Amalfi preserved its republican autonomy against Byzantines, Lombards, and Moslems, but succumbed temporarily to the Normans. Its sea power was destroyed by the Pisans who, rivals in commerce, plundered the town in 1135. The maritime law of Amalfi (Tabula Amalfitana) was widely accepted throughout the eastern Mediterranean area in the 10th–16th centuries (see Amalfitan Code). The castle, the Church of Atrani (10th century), and the small town of Ravello are in the vicinity. The town suffered severe damage during World War II prior to the Allied invasion in the summer of 1944. Pop. of commune, 7,654 (1936); of town, 4,259 (1936).

Amalfitan Code or Tables (ą.mal'fi.tąn). Oldest existing code of maritime law, compiled about the time of the first Crusade by the authorities of Amalfi, which then possessed considerable commerce and maritime power.

Amalia (ä.mä'lē.ä), Anna. [Full title, Duchess of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach.] b. at Wolfenbüttel, Germany, Oct. 24, 1739; d. at Weimar, Germany, April 10, 1807. Wife of Duke Ernest, and mother of Duke Karl August, of Saxe-Weimar. She was regent (1759–75), and is known as a patroness of literature and art, especially as the friend of Christoph Martin Wieland, Johann Gottfried von Herder, and Johann Wolfgang von Goethe.

Amalias (ä.mä.lyäs'). Town in S Greece, in the Peloponnesus, in the nomos (department) of Elis, near the W coast, ab. 18 mi. NW of Pyrgos on the Patras-Pyrgos railroad line: wine and currants. 16,031 (1940).

Amalie (ä.mä'lē.ę), Marie Friederike. b. Dec. 21, 1818; d. May 20, 1875. Princess of Oldenburg; eldest daughter of the grand duke Augustus, and wife of Otto I, king of Greece (whom she married on Nov. 22, 1836). Her husband's reign was never popular with the Greeks, and his deposition (1862) is attributable at least partly to his wife's interference in affairs of state.

Amalie Marie Friederike Auguste (mą.rē' frē.dę.rē'kę ou.gūs'tę). [Pseudonym, Amalie Heiter.] b. Aug. 10, 1794; d. Sept. 18, 1870. German dramatist and a duchess of Saxony; sister of King John of Saxony. Author of Der Oheim, Die Fürstenbraut, Vetter Heinrich, and other works.

Amalings (am'ą.lingz) or Amals (-alz). English name of the Amelungen.

Amalric I (ą.mal'rik, am'ąl-). See Amaury I (of Jerusalem).

Amalricians (am.ąl.rish'ąnz). Followers of Amalric (Amaury) of Bena (in the diocese of Chartres), a pantheist who was condemned by the University of Paris (in which he was a professor of logic and exegesis), by the Pope, and by a synod of Paris. Ten of the Amalricians were burned (1209) as heretics.

Amalric of Bena (ą.mal'rik, am'ąl-; bē'ną). [French, Amalric de Bène (ä.mål.rēk dę ben), Amauri (or Amaury) de Chartres; Latin, Amalricus (ą.mal'ri.kus), Amauricus (ą.mô'ri.kus), Almaricus (al.mar'i.kus).] b. at Bène, near Chartres, France; d. c1206. French theologian and mystic philosopher, teacher at the University of Paris. He was the founder of the Amalricians, a pantheistic sect claiming to derive from Aristotle and Erigena. Their belief that sin was impossible, since God was in all men, led to much license and brought down upon it the wrath of university and Church. Amalric was ordered (1204) by Pope Innocent III to recant, ten of his followers were burned (1209) at Paris for heresy, and his doctrines were condemned (1215) by the fourth Lateran Council. Aristotle's works were banned for a time, and Erigena's De divisione naturae was condemned (1225) as Amalric's source.

Amalric of Lusignan (lü.zē.nyäṅ). See Amaury II (of Jerusalem).

Amalthaea or Amalthea (am.al.thē'a). In Greek mythology, the nurse of Zeus, in most versions a goat.

Amalthaea or Amalthea. In Roman legend, the Sibyl who sold the Sibylline books to Tarquin.

Amambara (ä.mäm.bä'rä). River in W Africa, a tributary of the Niger River, S of the Benue River.

Amana (ạ.man'ạ). See also Barada.

Amana. Community in E Iowa, in Iowa County, ab. 20 mi. SW of Cedar Rapids: the oldest of seven villages owned by the Amana Society, the "Community of True Inspiration." The society was founded c1715, in Württemberg, as a revolt against the dogmatism of the Lutheran church. Under the leadership of Christian Metz, its members came to the U.S. in 1843 and settled in the W part of New York. In 1855 the community moved to Amana, since noted for its furniture craftsmanship and wool textile products. The people work for the common good of the community, and the profits are distributed on an equal basis. In 1932, the organization was modified to allow for secular control of economic activities. Pop. ab. 200.

Amanda (a.man'dạ). In Colley Cibber's comedy Love's Last Shift, and in its continuation by Sir John Vanbrugh, The Relapse, a virtuous and charming woman, wife of Loveless. In the Cibber play, she wins Loveless. The Relapse shows her, recently married, already deserted but successful, in the end, in recapturing her husband's affection.

Amandola (ä.män'dō.lä). Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Marche, in the province of Ascoli Piceno, ab. 45 mi. S of Ancona. It is a market for the agricultural products of the district and has an ancient castle and the Gothic Church of San Francesco. Pop. of commune, 6,348 (1936); of town, 1,235 (1936).

Aman-Jean (ä.mäṅ.zhäṅ), Edmond. b. at Chevry-Cossigny, France, c1856; d. 1936. French painter. He won recognition at first by historical and allegorical paintings, but later devoted himself especially to portraiture.

Amann (ä'män), Max. b. at Munich, Germany, Nov. 24, 1891—. German politician. He served in the German army, in the same company as Hitler, during World War I. He became business manager of the Nazi party, and was sentenced with Hitler after the abortive "Beer Hall Putsch" in 1923. Later he became the editor of the Nazi paper Völkischer Beobachter; after 1933 he was Reichsleiter (chief) of the German press and president of the Reichspressekammer (national chamber of the press).

Amants magnifiques (lā zä.mäṅ mä.nyē.fēk), Les. Dramatic work by Molière, written in 1670 at the order of the king.

Amanullah Khan (ä.mạ.nůl'lä kän). b. June 1, 1892—. Amir and king of Afghanistan (1919–29). He was ruler of Afghanistan when, in the early 1920's, that country formally repudiated any British influence over its foreign affairs. In 1924 he announced a new constitution, under which he would serve as a constitutional monarch along Western lines (he actually took the title of king at this time), but certain aspects of the constitution (most notably those relating to education and other advantages for women) aroused great opposition, and he was thereafter, until 1929, when he abdicated, faced with constantly recurring revolts. After 1929 he lived in Europe, and during World War II attempted to enlist German aid in regaining his throne.

Amanus (ạ.mā'nus). [Modern name, Alma Dagh (or Dağ).] In ancient geography, a mountain group, a branch of the Taurus range, on the borders of Cilicia and Syria.

Amapá (ä.mạ.pä'). Territory in NE Brazil. Capital, Macapá; area, 51,659 sq. mi.; pop. 38,374 (1950).

Amapá. [Also, Montenegro.] Town in Amapá territory, in NE Brazil: former capital. 444 (1940).

Amapala (ä.mä.pä'lä). Town in SW Honduras, on the island of Tigre, in the Gulf of Fonseca, near the Pacific Ocean: Honduras' best Pacific port. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Amapala, Gulf of. See Fonseca, Gulf of.

Amara (ä.mä'rä). Liwa (province) in SE Iraq, lying across the Tigris River, ab. 100 mi. NW of the city of Basra. It is a low-lying area of rich farmland and unused swamps; many shallow lakes are formed here by the waters of the Tigris. Capital, Amara; pop. 308,108 (1947).

Amarakantaka (am''ạ.rạ.kan'tạ.kạ). [Eng. trans., "Peak of the Immortals."] Place of pilgrimage in N central India, in the tableland E of the Vindhya Mountains, SW of Allahabad.

Amarakosha (am''ạ.rạ.kō'shạ). See under Amara Sinha.

Amarant (am'ạ.rạnt). In English legend, a giant killed in the Holy Land by Guy of Warwick.

Amaranta (am.ạ.ran'tạ). In Beaumont and Fletcher's Spanish Curate, the wife of Bartolus, "as cunning as she's sweet."

Amarante (ä.mạ.run'tẹ). Small town and concelho (commune) in N Portugal, in Douro Litoral province, N of Oporto. Pop. of concelho, 40,884; of town, 4,427 (1940).

Amarante, Count of. See Chaves, Manoel de Silveira Pinto de Fonseca, Marquis de.

Amaranth (am'ạ.ranth). Verse narrative by Edwin Arlington Robinson, published in 1934.

Amaranth, Lady. Character in John O'Keeffe's farce Wild Oats.

Amarapura (am'ạ.rạ.pö'rạ). Town in N central Burma, near the Irrawaddy River, ab. 25 mi. S of Mandalay. It contains the former royal palace. It was built in 1783, and was for many years a capital of Burma. 8,254 (1931).

Amarar (ä.mä'rär). One of the Cushitic-speaking Beja peoples of NE Africa, inhabiting NE Anglo-Egyptian Sudan E of Port Sudan. Their population is estimated at ab. 50,000 (by G. E. R. Sandars, The Amarar, Sudan Notes, vol. 17, 1935). They are predominantly Caucasoid in physical type.

Amara Sinha (am'ạ.rạ sin'hạ). [Also, Amarasinha.] fl. c550 A.D. Sanskrit lexicographer, poet, and grammarian. He was the author of Amarakosha or Amarakosa (Treasury of Amara), also called Trikanda (Tripartite), a three-volume vocabulary (in 1,500 verses) of Sanskrit roots arranged in meter to facilitate memorizing. It is essentially a dictionary of synonyms, the words being entered according to subject matter.

Amaravati (am.ạ.rä'vạ.tē). Former important city, now in ruins, in the E part of the Union of India, in the state of Madras. It was the capital (c100 B.C. et seq.) of an ancient Buddhist kingdom, and is found, with the same spelling, in Hindu mythology, as the capital of Indra's heaven.

Amargosa (am.är.gō'sạ). [Also, Amargoza.] Small river in E California, which flows into Death Valley.

Amargosa Desert. See Death Valley.

Amari (ä.mä'rē), Emerico. b. at Palermo, Sicily, May 9, 1810; d. there, Sept. 20, 1870. Italian publicist. He was appointed (1841) professor of criminal law at the University of Palermo. Author of Critica di una scienza delle legislazioni comparate (1857).

Amari, Michele. b. at Palermo, Sicily, July 7, 1806; d. at Florence, July 16, 1889. Italian historian, Arabic scholar, and statesman. Opposed to Bourbon rule in Naples, he joined the Carbonari and wrote a book (1842) for which he was forced to leave Italy; returning for the revolution of 1848, he was again forced into exile by the Bourbon restoration. He was professor of Arabic at Pisa (1859 et seq.) and Florence (1864), and minister of education in the Farini and Minghetti cabinets until 1864. Author of important bibliographies on Moslem rule in Sicily, Biblioteca Arabo-Sicula (Rome, 1880) and I diplomi arabi del archivio florentino (1863–67), and of the histories La guerra del Vespro Siciliano (1841) and Storia dei Musulmani in Sicilia (1853–72).

Amarillas (ä.mä.rē'lyäs), Marqués de las. Additional title of Ahumada, Duke of.

Amarillas, Marqués de las. Title of Ahumada y Villalon, Agustín de.

Amarillo (am.ạ.ril'ō). [Former name, Ragtown.] City in NW Texas, in the Panhandle, county seat of Potter County, in Randall and Potter counties; produces helium: center for a cattle and wheat district. Its industries include oil refining, flour milling, zinc smelting, meat packing, and the manufacture of boots, saddles, and ceramic products. 74,246 (1950).

Amarinna (ä.mä.rin'nä). See Amharic.

Amaro (ä.mä'rō), Monte. Highest summit of the Maiella group of the Apennines, C Italy. 9,170 ft.

Amar-Sin (ä.mär'sin'). Babylonian king of the oldest Babylonian period, residing in Ur. His name is found on several archaic cuneiform inscriptions which, however, do not give much information concerning him or his reign.

Amaryllis (am.ạ.ril'is). Shepherdess or country maiden in the Idyls of Theocritus and the Eclogues of Vergil.

Amaryllis. In Edmund Spenser's Colin Clout's Come Home Again, a personage described with adulation, intended to represent Alice Spenser, countess of Derby, with whose family Spenser claimed an alliance. It was for Alice Spenser that Milton wrote his Arcades.

Amaryllis. In John Fletcher's pastoral The Faithful Shepherdess, a shepherdess who is in love with Perigot, and uses foul means to part him from Amoret.

Amaryllis. In The Rehearsal, attributed to George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, a female character intended to cast ridicule on John Dryden. The part was taken by Ann Reeve, whose intrigue with John Dryden was mentioned in the play.

Amasa (am'ạ.sạ, ạ.mā'sạ). In the Old Testament, a son of Abigail, sister of David, and Jether, an Ishmaelite. He joined Absalom in his rebellion and was made commander of his forces. After Absalom's defeat Amasa was pardoned by David and offered the command of the army in place of Joab, who later slew him. 2 Sam. xvii. 25.

Amasis (ạ.mā'sis). [Also: Amosis, Aahmes, Ahmes.] Egyptian captain who fought against the Hyksos in c1700 B.C. and whose tomb was found in the 19th century near ancient Thebes.

Amasis I. [Also: Amosis, Aahmes, Ahmes.] d. c1557 B.C. Egyptian king, conqueror of the Hyksos and founder of the XVIIIth dynasty. The building of the New Empire was begun by his campaigns in the northeastern Delta, Palestine, and Nubia; these gains were consolidated by his son and successor, Amenhotep I, second Diospolite ruler.

Amasis II. [Also: Amosis, Aahmes, Ahmes.] fl. c569–525 B.C. Egyptian king, the fifth of the XXVIth dynasty. Of lowly origin, according to Herodotus, he was made king by the revolting soldiers of his predecessor Apries, whom they suspected of betrayal at Cyrene. He maintained friendly relations with the Greek states, sending gifts in 548 B.C. for rebuilding the burnt temple at Delphi; he also confirmed the Greek commercial settlement at Naucratis, and brought unprecedented prosperity to Egypt. Remains of his monuments in Lower Egypt still exist.

Amasya (ä.mä.syä'). [Also, Amasia.] Il (province or vilayet) in N Turkey, at the W end of the Pontus Mountains: subsistence agriculture and herding. Capital, Amasya; area, 2,142 sq. mi.; pop. 163,494 (1950).

Amasya. [Also, Amasia.] City in N central Turkey, capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Amasya, on the Yeşil Irmak, ab. 350 mi. E of Istanbul: the later residence of the kings of Pontus, and the birthplace of Strabo, the Greek geographer. It is known for its forest products, used for construction and shipbuilding. There are several sawmills in the city. Pop. ab. 12,000.

Amat (ä.mät'), Felix. b. at Sabadell, near Barcelona, Spain, Aug. 10, 1750; d. Sept. 28, 1824. Spanish ecclesiastic and writer, archbishop of Palmyra in partibus infidelium (which means "in infidel parts," and applies to an ecclesiastic whose see, although it has geographical existence, is beyond the immediate physical reach of its bishop. Many such sees formerly existed in Moslem countries.) He became confessor to Charles IV in 1806, and is the author of an ecclesiastical history, Tratado de la Iglesia de Jesu Cristo (1793–1803).

Amat, Manuel de. b. in Catalonia, Spain, c1705; d. at Barcelona, Spain, c1780. Spanish general and administrator. After serving with distinction in Africa, Italy, and on the Peninsula, he was captain-general (1755–61) of Chile, and viceroy (1761–76) of Peru. He carried out (1767) the decree for the expulsion of the Jesuits.

Amateis (ä.mä.tā'ēs), Louis. b. at Turin, Italy, 1855; d. 1913. American sculptor, notable for his work in the architectural field. He came to the U.S. in the early 1880's and was employed on several projects by the architectural firm of McKim, Mead and White. Examples of his work may be found at Washington and in Connecticut, and very widely in Texas, a state for which he did a tremendous amount of work.

Amaterasu (ä.mä.tā.rä.sō). [Full name, Amaterasu-o-mikami.] The Japanese sun goddess and supposed divine ancestress of the Emperor. Born from the left eye of the creator-god Izanagi, she is the most important deity of the Shinto pantheon. There is a great national shrine in her honor at Ise.

Amateur Emigrant, The. Autobiographical narrative by Robert Louis Stevenson, published in 1894.

Amathus (am'ạ.thus). In ancient geography, a city of Phoenician origin on the S coast of Cyprus, near the site of the modern Limassol. It contained a sanctuary of Aphrodite.

Amati (ä.mä'tē), Andrea. b. at Cremona, Italy, c1520; d. there, 1611. Italian violinmaker and first of his family to become internationally known for the quality of his instruments. Few of his instruments are now known to exist, but those that do support the claim that he was the first craftsman to produce a modern violin.

Amati, Antonio. b. at Cremona, Italy, 1550; d. there, 1638. Italian musical-instrument maker, notable for his violins, bass viols, and cellos; son and successor to Andrea Amati (c1520–1611). With his brother, Geronimo Amati, he developed the style toward the peak reached by the house in its next generation.

Amati, Geronimo or Girolamo. b. at Cremona, Italy, 1551; d. there, 1635. Italian musical-instrument maker; son and successor to Andrea Amati (c1520–1611). He is usually considered to have been more talented than his brother and coworker, Antonio Amati (1550–1638); he prepared the way for the brilliant achievements of his son, the second Nicolo Amati.

Amati, Geronimo or Girolamo. b. at Cremona, Italy, 1649; d. there, 1740. Italian violinmaker and son of the second Nicolo Amati (1596–1684). He was the last of the house to achieve distinction in the craft.

Amati, Nicolo or Nicola. fl. 1568–86. Italian maker of violins and bass viols; younger brother of Andrea Amati (c1520–1611).

Amati, Nicolo or Nicola. b. at Cremona, Italy, 1596; d. there, 1684. Italian maker of violins, bass viols, and cellos; son of Geronimo Amati (1551–1635). A teacher of Andrea Guarnieri and Antonio Stradivari, he brought the work of his house to its highest point of quality, in beauty as well as in tone.

Amatitlán (ä.mä.tē.tlän'). Town in S Guatemala in Guatemala department, S of Guatemala City. It is in a cochineal-producing area. 6,683 (1950).

Amatitlán Lake. [Spanish, Lago de Amatitlán.] Lake in S Guatemala, in Guatemala department, near Amatitlán. Length, ab. 9 mi.

Amato (dä.mä'tō), Giovanni Antonio d'. [Called "Il Vecchio," meaning "the Old One."] b. 1475; d. 1555. Neapolitan painter, known chiefly for religious work in the style of Pietro Perugino. His painting of the Holy Family was hung in a chapel of the San Dominico Maggiore church at Naples.

Amato (ä.mä'tō), Pasquale. b. at Naples, 1878; d. 1942. Italian operatic baritone. He studied and made his debut (1900) at Naples, and later sang in leading opera houses on the Continent, at London, and at Buenos Aires. He was introduced to New York audiences by Gatti-Casazza at the Metropolitan Opera House in Traviata (November, 1908). In 1921 he retired from the Metropolitan and spent the rest of his life chiefly as a teacher of operatic singing.

Amatongaland (am.ạ.tong'gạ.land). [Also, Tongaland.] Region in SE Africa, in the Union of South Africa, a former native state, under British rule, on the E coast N of Zululand. In 1897 it was incorporated with the colony (later province) of Natal, along with the Ingwavuma district. It is often included in the larger area of Zululand. Area, ab. 600 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 13,500.

Amatus Lusitanus (ą.mā'tus lo͞o.si.tā'nus). b. 1511; d. 1568. Portuguese physician. He is said to have been the second author to describe the valves in the veins.

Amauri or Amaury de Chartres (ą.mō.rē dẹ shärtr). See Amalric of Bena.

Amaury I (of Jerusalem) (ą.mô'ri; French, ą.mō.rē). [Also, Amalric I.] b. 1135; d. 1174. King of Jerusalem (Count of Joppa); a younger son of Fulc of Jerusalem, and brother of Baldwin III, whom he succeeded in 1162.

Amaury II (of Jerusalem). [Title of Amaury (or Amalric) of Lusignan.] d. 1205. King of Cyprus from 1194, and titular king of Jerusalem from 1197 (through his marriage with Isabella, widow of Henry, count of Champagne). He was unable to maintain himself against the Moslems, and died at Ptolemais.

Amaury, Giles. Grand master of the Knights Templars in Sir Walter Scott's tale The Talisman. He conspired against King Richard and was killed by Saladin.

Amaymon (ą.mā'mon). See Amaimon.

Amaziah (am.ą.zī'ą). King of Judah (c797 B.C. et seq.); son of King Joash of Judah. He conquered Edom and attacked King Joash of Israel, but was defeated and captured. Assassinated at Lachish, he was succeeded by his son, Uzziah.

Amazon (am'ą.zon). [Former name, Orellana. Portuguese, Rio Amazonas; Spanish, Río de las Amazonas; French, Fleuve des Amazones; German, Amazonenstrom; earlier English, Amazone.] The principal river of South America, and the largest in the world, in N Brazil. It has two chief headstreams: one is the Marañón (or Tunguragua) which rises in N Peru; the other is the Ucayali, which has for its southernmost headstream the Apurímac. The Ucayali is formed in C Peru by the junction of the Apurímac and Urubamba rivers. The Marañón (for most of its course taken as the Amazon) flows NW between ranges of the Andes, turns E, enters Brazil, and after discharging water through several narrow channels into the lower Tocantins or Pará River, thus cutting off the island of Marajó, flows into the Atlantic near the equator. It is connected on the N with the Orinoco by the Negro and Casiquiare. The basin of the Amazon comprises ab. 2,700,000 sq. mi. Its leading tributaries are, on the N, the Napo, Içá, Japurá, and Negro; on the S the Huallaga, Javarí, Jutaí, Juruá, Purús, Madeira, Tapajóz, Tocantins, and Xingú. Length: with the Marañón, over 3,000 mi.; with the Ucayali and Apurímac, ab. 3,900 mi. It is navigable ab. 2,300, for steamships ab. 2,200 mi. The width of the main mouth is 50 mi.; and at the Peruvian frontier the river is 1 mi. wide. The mouth was discovered by Pinzón in 1500, and Orellana descended it in 1541. Steamers first plied on it in 1853. In 1867 it was made a free highway to all nations.

Amazonas (ä.mą.zō'nąs). State in NW Brazil, bordering Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia; largest state of Brazil. Capital, Manaus; area, 616,148 sq. mi.; pop. 530,920 (1950).

Amazonas (ä.mä.sō'näs). Intendancy in SE Colombia. Capital, Leticia; area, 48,008 sq. mi.; pop. 6,500 (est. 1950).

Amazonas. Department in N Peru, W of Loreto. Capital, Chachapoyas; area, 13,947 sq. mi.; pop. 103,559 (est. 1950).

Amazonas. [Official name, Territorio Federal (or T.F.) Amazonas; also, Territorio Amazonas (ter.rē.tō'ryō).] Federal territory in S Venezuela, on the Brazilian border; densely forested. Capital, Puerto Ayacucho; area, 67,857 sq. mi.; pop. 6,945 (1950).

Amazone (am.ą.zōn'). An earlier English form of the Portuguese name of the Amazon River.

Amazonia (am.ą.zō'ni.ą). Name sometimes given to the valley of the Amazon.

Amazons (am'ą.zonz). In Greek legend, a race of women supposed to have dwelt on the coast of the Black Sea and in the Caucasus Mountains. The Amazons and their contests were a favorite theme in Grecian art and story. They were represented as forming a state from which men were excluded, as devoting themselves to war and hunting, and as being often in conflict with the Greeks in the heroic age.

Amazons. Fabled tribe of female warriors said to have existed in South America. The report originated in an Indian myth which was found from the West Indies to Paraguay, and still exists among the Caribs and others; it is interesting for its similarity to the Old World myth.

Ambacia (am.bā'shi.ą). Latin name of Amboise.

Ambala (um.bä'lą). [Also, Umballa.] Name of a former division of the Punjab, India. Area, ab. 4,014 sq. mi.

Ambala. District of Punjab state, Union of India, ab. 120 mi. N of Delhi; sugar and wheat. Capital, Ambala; area, 1,851 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 800,000.

Ambala. City in NW India, the capital of the district of Ambala, Punjab state, Union of India, ab. 120 mi. N of Delhi; important station on the North-Western Railway. 62,419 (1941).

Ambalema (äm.bä.lā'mä). Town in W Colombia, on the Magdalena River ab. 55 mi. W of Bogotá; center of an extensive tobacco-producing district. Pop. under 5,000 (1938).

Ambassadors, The. Novel by Henry James, published in 1903. Lambert Strether, a middle-aged American editor, is sent by Mrs. Newsome to reclaim her son Chad from his attachment to Paris. Strether finds that Chad has not only succumbed to the fascination of Continental life but is also presumably the lover of the Countess de Vionnet. Strether himself begins to surrender to the color and tone of Europe, and all but abandons his original mission. A second set of emissaries is sent to secure the return of Strether, who is engaged to Mrs. Newsome. Strether responds to convention as typified in Mrs. Pocock, and returns; Chad, however, remains abroad.

Ambato (äm.bä'tō). Town in C Ecuador, capital of Tungurahua province, ab. 65 mi. S of Quito, on the Ambato River; fruit, textile and flour mills, and tanneries. 21,692 (est. 1944).

Ambatondrazaka (äm''bä.tōn.drä'zä.kä). Town on the island of Madagascar, off SE Africa, in the E central part, near Lake Alaotra. It is connected by rail with Tananarive and Tamatave, via Moramanga. 16,152 (1946).

Ambedkar (äm.bed'kär), Bhimrao Ramji. b. 1892—. Indian politician, lawyer, and educator, best known for his advocacy of the cause of the untouchables of India. He was educated in part at American universities. Minister of law in the government of India (1947 et seq.), he is also one of the principal framers of the Indian constitution. He presided over various provincial and district conferences of the depressed classes, and was a delegate to the Round Table Conferences (1930–32).

Ambelakia (äm.vē.lä'kyä). Small town in E Greece, in the vale of Tempe, Thessaly, ab. 18 mi. NE of Larissa.

Amber (am'bėr). Ancient town near Jaipur, Union of India, the former capital of the state of Jaipur.

Amber, Cape. [French, Cap d'Ambre.] Cape on the Indian Ocean, the northernmost point of the island of Madagascar. The Bay of Diégo-Suarez is on the E side of the headland forming the cape.

Amberg (äm'berk). Town in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Kreis (district) of Lower Bavaria-Upper Palatinate, situated on the Vils River, ab. 32 mi. NW of Regensburg. It is the former capital of the Upper Palatinate; has enamel and ironware, ceramics, garment, shoe, leather, and furniture factories. The population, predominantly Catholic, increased 26.4 percent between 1937 and 1946 largely because of the influx of Sudeten Germans. 37,920 (1950).

Amberger (äm'ber''gėr), Christoph. b. c1500; d. 1562. German portrait painter. He employed a style so close to that of Hans Holbein the Younger that some of his work has been attributed to that painter.

Ambérieu-en-Bugey (äⁿ.bā.ryė.äⁿ.bü.zhe). [Also, Ambérieu.] Town in E France, in the department of Ain, situated at the confluence of the Valsérine and Ain rivers, between Bourg-en-Bresse and Chambéry. It is the site of a ruined castle which belonged to the dukes of Savoy. 7,142 (1946).

Amber Islands (am'bėr). [Also, Electrides.] In ancient geography, a name given by the Greeks in later times to the islands in the North Sea off what is now Denmark, Germany, and the Netherlands. See also Glessariae.

Ambert (äⁿ.ber). Town in C France, in the department of Puy-de-Dôme, situated near the Dore River, ab. 37 mi. SE of Clermont-Ferrand; manufactures cheese, paper, furniture, wooden shoes, and religious articles. The Gothic Church of Saint Jean dates from the 15th and 16th centuries. 7,004 (1946).

Amber Witch, The. Opera in four acts by W. V. Wallace, words by Henry Fothergill Chorley, first produced at London, on Feb. 28, 1861. It was founded on a popular German romance by Johann Wilhelm Meinhold, published in 1843.

Ambianum (am.bi.ā′num). An ancient name of Amiens.

Ambiorix (am.bī′ō.riks). fl. 1st century B.C. Gallic chief, leader of the Eburones. He is famous for his campaigns against the Romans (54–53 B.C.) in which, with Catuvolcus, he twice defeated the Romans in what is now Belgium, but fled across the Rhine at the approach of Julius Caesar.

Ambitious Statesman, or The Loyal Favorite, The. Tragedy by John Crowne, acted in 1679.

Ambitious Stepmother, The. Tragedy by Nicholas Rowe, printed in 1700. It is a drama of palace intrigue, with echoes of the type of heroic play popular during the Restoration a few decades earlier.

Ambler (am′blėr). Borough in SE Pennsylvania, in Montgomery County, near Philadelphia: manufactures include asbestos, chemicals, hosiery, and boilers. It was settled c1728. Pop. 4,565 (1950).

Ambler, James Markham Marshall. b. at Markham, Va., Dec. 30, 1848; d. on Jeannette expedition to the Arctic, Oct. 30, 1881. American explorer, naval surgeon, and Confederate soldier in the Civil War. He enlisted at the age of 16 in the 12th Virginia Cavalry, entered college, and acquired (1865) a medical degree, being appointed (1874) assistant surgeon in the U.S. Navy. He sailed (July 8, 1879) as surgeon of the Jeannette expedition to the Arctic and was subsequently lost with most of his fellow explorers in their effort to regain civilization after the Jeannette sank in the ice fields north of the Arctic Circle.

Ambleside (am′bl.sīd). Town and former urban district in NW England, in Westmorland, situated ab. 1 mi. N of Lake Windermere, ab. 12 mi. NW of Kendal. It has no direct rail connections for passengers, being reached via Windermere, ab. 260 mi. NW of London. Ambleside is in the Lake District, and is noted for its picturesque scenery. Near it are Rydal Mount, Fox How, and Grasmere. It contains Roman antiquities. 2,343 (1931).

Ambleteuse (äṅ.blę.tėz). Beach resort and former seaport in N France, in the department of Pas-de-Calais, ab. 7 mi. N of Boulogne. Pop. ab. 900.

Amboina (am.boi′nạ). [Also: Amboyna; Malay, Ambon, Ambun.] One of the chief islands of the Moluccas, situated between Celebes and New Guinea, in Indonesia. The island consists of two parts connected by a narrow isthmus. Its chief product is cloves. It was settled by the Portuguese in the 16th century, and was taken by the Dutch in 1605. Length, 32 mi.; area, ab. 314 sq. mi.; pop. 66,821.

Amboina. [Also: Amboyna; Malay, Ambon, Ambun.] Seaport in Indonesia, capital of the island of Amboina: Allied naval base, lost to the Japanese in 1942, during World War II. 17,334.

Amboina, Massacre of. Name applied to the execution (1623) of eight Englishmen for an alleged attempt with the aid of Japanese mercenaries to seize this outpost of the Netherlands Indian empire for British rule.

Amboina, Revolt of. One of several uprisings (c1660) in the Moluccas against the oppressive rule of the Netherlands East India Company which, through pressure on local princes, attempted to enforce its monopoly over the trade in cloves and nutmeg and greatly to increase the supply of these spices. This revolt opened a rift between the Moslem majority of the population and a Christianized minority which coöperated with the European colonists. The special position of the Amboinese Christians has continued until recent times, and Amboinese soldiers have remained a strong and reliable nucleus of Netherlands Indian military forces.

Amboise (äṅ.bwäz). [Latin, Ambacia.] Town in W France, in the department of Indre-et-Loire, situated on the Loire River, ab. 14 mi. E of Tours: wine-trade center; manufactures of woolens, shoes, and agricultural machinery; steel and iron foundries. The castle, once a favorite residence of the Valois kings and the scene of the conspiracy of Amboise in 1560, later became the property of the Orléans family. The Algerian rebel leader Abd-al-Kadir was confined here in 1848–52. A large part of the town was destroyed in World War II. 4,443 (1946).

Amboise, Conspiracy of. Unsuccessful conspiracy of the Huguenots to seize the French king (Francis II), first at Blois and afterward at Amboise in 1560, and to remove him from the influence of the Guises. Louis I of Bourbon, the 1st prince of Condé, was the chief of the conspirators.

Amboise, Edict of. Edict of pacification between the French Catholics and Huguenots, authorizing (1563) worship by Huguenots in the houses of the nobility, throughout all the domains of the justiciary nobles, and in one city of each bailiwick. It ended the first war between the two parties.

Amboise (däṅ.bwäz), Georges d'. b. at Chaumont-sur-Loire, France, 1460; d. at Lyons, France, 1510. French cardinal; chief minister (1498–1515) under Louis XII of France, and director of his foreign policy. He was the archbishop of Narbonne and of Rouen (1493–98), and a member of Louis' party before his accession. Directing his efforts toward the increase of French power in Italy and toward a papacy for himself, he organized the campaign of 1500 for the conquest of Milan but, preferring diplomacy, let slip the opportunity to force himself on the papal conclave as the successor of Pope Alexander VI.

Ambon (äm′bôn). Malay name of Amboina.

Ambonese (am.bọ.nēz′), Amboinese, or Amboynese (-boi-). The Christian and Moslem (as distinguished from the pagan) inhabitants of Amboina (Ambon) and neighboring islands in Indonesia; they number 232,000 (1930), 60 percent being Christian (chiefly Protestant).

Ambos Camarines (äm′bōs kä.mä.rē′näs). Former province of the Philippine Islands, now divided between Camarines Norte and Camarines Sur.

Amboyna, or The Cruelties of the Dutch to the English Merchants (am.boi′nạ). Tragedy by John Dryden, produced in 1673. Part of the plot was taken from one of the Italian novels in the Hecatommithi of Giovanni Battista Giraldi (known as Cinthio), and part has reference to occurrences of the time.

Ambracia (am.brā′shi.ạ). An ancient name of Arta, city.

Ambracian Gulf (am.brā′shi.ạn). [Also, Gulf of Amvrakía (or of Arta).] Inlet of the Ionian Sea, in W Greece. Length, ab. 25 mi.; greatest breadth, ab. 10 mi.

Ambre (däṅbr), Cap d'. French name of Amber, Cape.

Ambree (am′brē), Mary. Woman who is said to have fought against the Spanish at the siege of Ghent in 1584 to revenge her lover's death. She is frequently mentioned in old ballads, and is the subject of one preserved by Thomas Percy. Ben Jonson refers to her in the Epicoene, The Tale of a Tub, and in The Fortunate Isles, where he quotes the words of this ballad. John Fletcher also mentions her in The Scornful Lady. The ballad in Percy's Reliques is often quoted by the writers of Jonson's time, and, like him, they frequently gave the name of Mary Ambree to any remarkable woman who adopted man's attire.

Ambridge (am′brij). Borough in W Pennsylvania, in Beaver County, on the Ohio River: manufactures bridge and structural steel, and electrical machinery. It occupies the site of Economy, a communal settlement founded here by the Harmony Society in 1825. It was incorporated from part of Harmony township in 1905. Pop. 16,429 (1950).

Ambriz (äm.brēz′). Coast town in Angola, in SW Africa, capital of the concelho (commune) of the same name. Its chief export is coffee, which is brought down from the mountains. It was occupied by the Portuguese in 1855. Pop. ab. 2,200.

Ambrones (am.brō′nēz). Germanic tribe mentioned by Livy and Strabo in connection with the Teutones, whose near neighbors they seem to have been on the North Sea, and with whom they were allied in the Cimbrian wars. They suffered a crushing defeat by Marius at Aquae Sextiae in 102 B.C. There is no certain record of their subsequent fate.

Ambros (äm′brōs), August Wilhelm. b. at Mauth, in Bohemia, Nov. 17, 1816; d. at Vienna, June 28, 1876. Composer and musicologist. He was a professor at the Prague Conservatory (1869) and the Vienna Conservatory (1872 et seq.). Author of a history of music (1862 et seq.), books of essays on music, and others; composer of Bretislav a Jitka (a Czech opera), orchestral and church music, songs, and others.

Ambrose (am′brōz), Saint. [Latinized, Ambrosius.] b. at what is now Trier, Germany, c340; d. at Milan, Italy, 397. One of the fathers of the Roman Church; bishop of Milan (374–397). As consular prefect (c369) in upper Italy, he demonstrated his interest in public welfare; he was elected (374), though a layman and unbaptized, bishop of Milan. A champion of Catholics against paganism and heresy, he resisted the Arianism of the empress Justina and accomplished the deposition of the Arian prelates Palladius and Secundianus by persuading the emperor Gratian to limit the synod of Aquileia (381) to western bishops. Sent twice under Valentinian II to dissuade Maximus from invading Italy, he succeeded on the first occasion but failed on the second. Remaining in Milan under Gallic occupation, he melted down church vessels for the relief of the poor; after the reconquest by Theodosius, Emperor of the East, Ambrose forced penance on him for the massacre in Thessalonica. Forced to flee at the time of the assassination of Valentinian II, he returned to intercede with Theodosius (who again reconquered the West in 394) for the Arian supporters of the usurper Eugenius. Following the doctrine of Saint Basil of Caesarea and other Greeks, but with a characteristically western emphasis on divine grace and individual faith, he was, with Paul, a main precursor of Augustine. Author of commentaries on early Old Testament narratives of Hexaëmeron, Abraham, and others, of hymns such as Deus Creator Omnium and Veni redemptor gentium, and of treatises including De Spiritu Sanctu, De mysteriis, De officiis ministrorum.

Ambrose, Isaac. b. at Ormskirk, Lancashire, England, 1604; d. at Preston, England, 1664. English Puritan clergyman and devotional writer. He was one of the approximately 2,000 nonconformists deprived of their religious posts by the Uniformity Act of 1662. Author of Looking unto Jesus (1658).

Ambrose and the Emperor Theodosius. Painting by Peter Paul Rubens. The archbishop, in full canonicals, stands with his attendants before the door of the cathedral, and forbids the emperor to enter.

Ambrose Channel. [Former name, East Harbor.] One of the chief points at which vessels entering New York harbor cross Sandy Hook bar. The time of a voyage is reckoned to (or from) Ambrose Channel lightship. Width of channel, ab. 1,800 ft.; depth, ab. 40 ft.

Ambrose of Alexandria. [Latin, Ambrosius (ăm.brō′zi-us).] d. c250. Roman nobleman, a friend of Origen.

Ambrose of Camaldoli (kä.mäl.dō′lē), Saint. [Original name, Ambrose Traversari.] b. at Portico, near Florence, 1386; d. at Florence, 1439. Italian theologian and writer. He entered the order of Camaldoli, and became its general in 1431; sent by Eugene IV to the Council of Basel, he upheld there the primacy of Rome.

Ambrose's Tavern. Old tavern in Edinburgh, now destroyed, the scene of John Wilson's Noctes Ambrosianæ.

Ambrosian Library (am.brō′zhạn). Library at Milan, founded by Cardinal Federigo Borromeo in 1609, and named for Saint Ambrose. It contains over 500,000 printed volumes and more than 30,000 manuscripts. Its early Greek texts and the collection of incunabula are outstanding; it also contains a painting collection.

Ambrosiaster (am.brō′zi.as.tẽr) or Pseudo-Ambrosius (sö″dō.am.brō′zhus). Name usually given to the unknown author of "Commentaria in XIII. Epistolas B. Pauli," which has found its way into the Benedictine edition of the works of Ambrose. The author is sometimes identified with Saint Hilary of Poitiers or Saint Hilary of Pavia.

Ambrosius (am.brō′zhus) or Ambrose (am′brōz), Father. Last abbot of St. Mary's, Edward Glendinning, in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Abbot.

Ambrosius (ăm.brō′zē.ụs), Hermann. b. at Hamburg, Germany, 1897—. German composer. He was a coach (1924) at the Leipzig opera, and a teacher (1926 et seq.) of musical theory at the Leipzig conservatory. His works include symphonies, piano and violin concertos, and a choral opus on the theme of Goethe's Faust, as well as chamber music and songs.

Ambrosius Aurelianus (am.brō′zhus ô.rē.li.ā′nus). [Welsh, Emrys.] fl. c440 A.D. Roman emperor of Britain, Gaul, and Spain under Honorius; leader of the Britons against the Saxon invasion; said by some chroniclers to have been a son of Constantine. He drove back the Saxons, and, as king of Britain, defeated the opposition of Hengist. He was poisoned at Winchester by a Saxon.

Ambrus (ôm′brush), Zoltán. b. at Debrecen, Hungary, 1861; d. at Budapest, 1932. Hungarian novelist, representative of the French influence in Hungarian literature.

Ambun (äm′bön). Malay name of Amboina.

Amchitka (am.chit′kạ). Island off the coast of SW Alaska, one of the Aleutian Islands. It was garrisoned by U.S. forces in World War II, and was the site of a military air base important in the campaign to recapture Attu and Kiska.

Ameca (ä.mā′kä). Town in SW Mexico, in Jalisco state. 13,003 (1940).

Amecameca (ä.mā.kä.mā′kä). [Full name, Amecameca de Juárez.] Town in C Mexico, in México state, SE of Mexico City. The community dates back to the pre-Spanish civilization of Mexico, as a part of which it was an important and highly developed urban center. It is today the site of Sacro Monte, a hillock built over a cave in which lived an early Christian missionary, which has been for generations a shrine visited by thousands of people on Ash Wednesday. The town is also of some importance as a starting point for tourists making ascents of Mexico's two famous mountain peaks, Popocatepetl and Ixtacihuatl. 7,573 (1940).

Amédée V (ä.mā.dā). French name of Amadeus V.

Ameer Ali (ä.mēr′ ä′lē), Syed. [Also, Seyyid Amir Ali.] b. at Cuttack, Orissa, India, April 6, 1849; d. in England, Aug. 3, 1928. Indian Shiite Moslem, jurist, author, and political leader. Educated at Hoogli College, the University of Calcutta, and at the Inner Temple, London, he was called (1873) to the bar, returning at once to India, where he became a lecturer (1873–77) on Mohammedan law at Presidency College, Calcutta. He was a magistrate (1878) and chief magistrate (1879–81) at Calcutta, a member (1878–83) of the Bengal legislative assembly, a professor of law (1884–85) and president (1891–92) of the faculty of law at Calcutta University, and a judge (1890–1904) of the high court of judicature at Fort William, in Bengal. Resident (1904–28) in England, where he had married (1884) into an English family, he was appointed (1909) a privy councillor, the first Indian to be thus honored; he was also at one time chairman of the Woking Mosque committee. A constant friend of Great Britain and of British rule in India, he was an advocate of India's use of English as a common language and a friend of the Caliphate movement, although not himself a pan-Islamist.

Ameghino (ä.mā.gē′nō), Fiorino (or Florentino). b. in Italy, 1854; d. 1911. Argentine paleontologist and anthropologist, prominent in the late 19th century for his theory that South America was the area where man originated.

Ameland (ä′mẹ.länt). Island in the N part of the Netherlands, belonging to the province of Friesland, situated ab. 4 mi. off the N coast of Friesland, from which it is separated by the Wadden Sea, the fourth island from the W of five large islands fringing the NW coast of the Netherlands. It contains four villages. Length, ab. 13 mi.; width ab. 2 mi.; pop. 2,000 (1939).

Amelia (ä.mē′lyä). [Ancient name, Ameria.] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Umbria, in the province of Terni, ab. 45 mi. N of Rome. It is a walled city with a medieval cathedral reconstructed in the 17th century. It suffered from an earthquake in 1832. Pop. of commune, 11,055 (1936); of town, 2,583 (1936).

Amelia (ạ.mēl′yạ, -mē′li.ạ). Opera (1732) in the Italian manner, but written in English. It is presumed to have been written by Henry Carey.

Amelia. Heroine of Henry Fielding's novel of that name (published 1751), a virtuous and devoted wife, said to be a portrait of Fielding's own wife. She is represented as having suffered an injury to her nose (like Mrs. Fielding), which impaired her popularity among Fielding's readers. Thackeray considered her "the most charming character in English fiction."

Amelia Island. Small island off the NE coast of Florida.

Amelia Island Affair. Attempt made by Luis Aury, a former pirate, to establish (1817) a so-called republic on Amelia Island, off the coast of Spanish Florida. Aury appealed to Florida to oust the Spanish tyrants; U.S.

naval forces, in December, 1817, put an end to this flouting of American laws, and the island was handed back to the Spanish.

Amélie-les-Bains (ā.mā.lē.lā.baṅ). [Former name, Arles-les-Bains.] Town in SW France, in the department of Pyrénées-Orientales, situated on the Tech River, N of the Spanish border and ab. 20 mi. SW of Perpignan. It assumed its present name in 1840 in honor of the wife of King Louis Philippe. It is a health resort and a tourist center; its thermal springs are considered useful in the treatment of rheumatism and respiratory ailments; excursions into the surrounding mountainous area are made from the town. It was severely damaged toward the end of World War II. Pop. 3,210 (1946).

Amelot de la Houssaye (ȧm.lō dę lȧ ö.sā), Abraham Nicolas. b. at Orléans, 1634; d. at Paris, 1706. French historian; author of Histoire du gouvernement de Venise (1676), which caused him to be imprisoned, and was widely read in France and England.

Amelotte (ȧm.lot), Denis. [Also: Amelote, Amlote.] b. at Saintes, France, 1609; d. at Paris, Oct. 7, 1678. French theologian, author of a translation of the New Testament (1666–68), and an opponent of Jansenism.

Amelungen (ā′mę.lúng.ęn). [English, Amalings or Amals.] Ruling family of the Ostrogoths (and possibly at an earlier date, before the division of the Goths, of the Visigoths as well) which first came to prominence in the 4th century under their king Ermanric and attained their greatest fame under Theodoric the Great (c454–526).

Amen (ā′męn). [Also: Ammon, Amon, Amun, Hammon.] In Egyptian mythology, a deity variously represented as a ram with large curving horns, as a being with a ram's head and a human body, and as a man enthroned or standing erect. In art his figure is colored blue. On his head he wears the royal symbol and two long feathers, and in one hand he carries a scepter and in the other the sign of life. His chief temple and oracle were on an oasis in the Libyan desert near Memphis. Later he became identified with the sun god Ra and was worshiped as Amen-Ra, the chief deity of Egypt.

Amenemhet (ā.męn.em′het). [Also, Amenemhat.] Egyptian official under Sesostris I. An inscription recording the events of his life was found in a rock-tomb at Beni-Hassan. It contains a reference to a famine which has, by some, been supposed to be that which occurred during Joseph's sojourn in Egypt.

Amenemhet I. [Also: Amenemhat, Ammenemez (am.ę.nē′mēz).] d. 1970 B.C. Egyptian king, the founder of the XIIth dynasty, who reigned 2000–1970 B.C. He was a successful ruler and general, and founded the temple of Amun in Thebes. There is considerable documentary evidence concerning his reign. In 1980 B.C., his son Sesostris I became his co-regent, after Amenemhet had considerably strengthened the royal authority.

Amenemhet II. [Also: Amenemhat, Ammenemes.] d. 1903 B.C. Egyptian king, the third of the XIIth dynasty, who reigned 1938–1903 B.C.; son of Sesostris I with whom he was co-ruler 1938-1935 B.C. He was succeeded by his son, Sesostris II, with whom he reigned from 1906 B.C. until his death. During his reign expeditions were undertaken to Sinai and the Nubian mines.

Amenemhet III. [Also: Amenemhat, Ammenemes.] d. 1801 B.C. Egyptian king, the sixth of the XIIth dynasty, who reigned 1849–1801 B.C.; son of Sesostris III. He constructed Lake Moeris and the Labyrinth. Inscriptions of his time have been found on the rocks in the peninsula of Sinai. There is also a mark (with an inscription) on the rocks of Semneh showing the height of the inundation of the Nile in the 14th year of his reign.

Amenemhet IV. [Also: Amenemhat, Ammenemes.] d. 1792 B.C. Egyptian king, the seventh of the XIIth dynasty, who reigned 1801–1792 B.C.

Amenhotep I (ä.męn.hō′tep). [Also: Amenhotpe (-hōt′pe), Amenophis (am.ę.nō′fis).] Egyptian king, the second of the XVIIIth dynasty, who reigned 1557–1501 B.C. He was successful in campaigns in Cush (in what is now Ethiopia), and Libya.

Amenhotep II. [Also: Amenhotpe, Amenophis.] d. 1420 B.C. Egyptian king, the seventh of the XVIIIth dynasty, who reigned 1448–1420 B.C. He made a successful campaign in Asia, which is commemorated in an inscription in a temple at Amedah in Nubia. There are also inscriptions bearing his name in the temple of Amen at Karnak.

Amenhotep III. [Also: Amenhotpe, Amenophis.] Egyptian king, the ninth of the XVIIIth dynasty, who reigned 1411–1375 B.C. He was a successful warrior and a great builder. The two colossal statues of Memnon, near Thebes, are portrait-statues of him. Amenhotep III was as great in peace as in war. In his reign Egypt lost none of her military prestige, and from some large scarabaei—one of which is in the Giza Palace—we learn that under his rule Egypt stretched from Mesopotamia to the country of Karoy in Ethiopia. At the same time that he consolidated the empire left him by preceding monarchs, Amenhotep raised, along the banks of the Nile, monuments which for their grandeur and the perfection of their workmanship are unsurpassed. The temple at Gebel Barkal, in the Sudan, was erected by this king; so also was that at Soleb, near the third cataract; and further evidence of his reign may be found at Aswan, Elephantine, Gebel Silsileh, El Kab, Turah, the Serapeum at Memphis, and Serabit el Khadim. He added considerably to Karnak, and built that portion of the temple at Luxor that bears his name. He also erected on the left bank of the Nile—opposite to Luxor—a sacred edifice which once must have been one of the most important in Egypt. Destroyed completely by causes unknown to us, all that is now left of it are the two enormous colossi which originally stood at the entrance.

Amenhotep IV. See Ikhnaton.

Amenophis IV (am.ę.nō′fis). See Ikhnaton.

Ament (ā′ment), William Scott. b. at Owosso, Mich., Sept. 14, 1851; d. in China, Jan. 6, 1909. American Congregational clergyman and missionary to China. A preacher of remarkable vigor, Ament carried out hazardous refugee missions during the Boxer Rebellion, and showed great personal courage in aiding the Chinese Christians during and after hostilities. Inaccurate reporting of an interview led to attacks by several papers in the U.S., and accusations by Mark Twain in the North American Review (in February and April, 1901) of extortion and looting, but the charges were later shown to be without foundation.

Amenti (ą.men′tē). In Egyptian mythology, the underworld; the world of the dead.

Amer (ä′mėr). See Amr ibn-al-As.

Amerbach (äm′ėr.bäċh), Johannes. b. c1445; d. at Basel, Switzerland, Dec. 25, 1514. Swiss printer who published, for the most part, religious books, with the coöperation of Erasmus, Johann Reuchlin, Albrecht Dürer, and other leading figures in the early development of humanism.

Ameria (ą.mir′i.ą). Ancient name of Amelia.

America (ą.mer′i.ką). [Portuguese and Spanish, América (ä.mā′rē.kä).] Name often applied specifically to the United States of America, particularly in the U.S. and in parts of the world outside of the Western Hemisphere. The designation is also often (and in the eyes of many, more properly) applied to either of the continents of the Western Hemisphere, i.e., North America or South America. The Americas (a plural form of the name meaning the entire Western Hemisphere, including the West Indies) were probably visited first by the Northmen, who are believed to have reached North America in about 1000 A.D. Christopher Columbus discovered the island of San Salvador, in the Bahamas, on Oct. 12, 1492; in subsequent voyages he visited Central America and South America. The North American mainland was reached by John Cabot in 1497. The name America was proposed by Martin Waldseemüller (a German teacher of geography) who suggested (1507), in a treatise called Cosmographia, that the New World be named after Amerigo Vespucci (Latinized as Americus Vespucius, thus America), the Florentine navigator who is believed by some to have reached North America 18 days before Cabot, and who wrote the earliest extensive account of the New World.

America. Name given in the U.S. to the tune which is used in Great Britain for God Save the King after its adaptation for use in connection with the American hymn My Country 'Tis of Thee, written by Samuel F. Smith in 1832. The author of the hymn stated, "I found the tune in a German music-book, put into my hands by Lowell Mason."

America. American yacht which was awarded a trophy cup in 1851, was placed in service as a Confederate dispatch vessel during the Civil War, and after being seized was converted into a practice craft at the U.S. Naval Academy. After the war she defended (1870) the cup, became the property of Benjamin F. Butler in 1873, was sold (1917) to Charles H. W. Foster, and in 1921 was docked permanently at the Naval Academy. The vessel was broken up during the 1940's.

America Comes of Age. Critical work by André Siegfried, published in 1927. It is an interpretation of American institutions and social life.

America First Committee. Organization established in 1940 with the general object of opposing U.S. involvement in foreign wars. During its existence the committee took a leading part in urging the "Isolationist" viewpoint upon the U.S. It was dissolved shortly after the U.S. entry into World War II.

American (ą.mer'i.kąn), The. Novel by Henry James, published in 1877. Christopher Newman, a wealthy American, falls in love with a Parisian lady, Claire de Cintré. Newman, a fairly direct and sincere individual, is appalled by the subtleties of European life and particularly by the contrivings of Claire's family, who succeed in breaking the couple's engagement. Newman learns that Claire's mother and brother were instrumental in the death of her father, but instead of revealing this information he destroys the evidence and surrenders the opportunity for revenge.

American Academy in Rome. Organization founded in 1894 as the American School of Architecture in Rome which received its present designation in 1897. Since 1913 it has included also the American School of Classical Studies at Rome. It is devoted to the advancement of arts and letters in America, awards annual fellowships in fine arts and classical studies, and maintains a school of fine arts and a school of classical studies. The academy's library contains some 50,000 volumes on art, classics, and archaeology. The organization has headquarters at New York and issues Papers and Monographs and Memoirs of the American Academy in Rome.

American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Society for the encouragement of art and science, founded at Boston in 1780. It has published Memoirs from 1785, and Proceedings from 1848. Its headquarters are at Boston.

American Academy of Political and Social Science. Organization founded in 1889 for the purpose of providing a forum for the discussion of the political, social, and industrial problems affecting the U.S. and other nations. It maintains headquarters at Philadelphia and in addition to its Annals (bimonthly) issues a series of monographs and pamphlets.

American Anthropological Association. Organization incorporated in 1902 at Washington, D.C., for the purpose of advancing the science of anthropology and promoting the professional interests of American anthropologists. It issues the American Anthropologist (quarterly), a quarterly News Bulletin, and a series of Memoirs.

American Antiquarian Society. Organization at Worcester, Mass., founded in 1812 by Isaiah Thomas, which maintains a comprehensive library of Americana (comprising some 700,000 titles) and is devoted to the promotion of research in American history. It possesses the world's best and largest single collection of American colonial newspapers. The society publishes its Proceedings semi-annually.

American Association for the Advancement of Science. Organization founded in 1848 (incorporated in 1874) for the purpose of promoting science and its application to human welfare and the fostering of coöperation among scientists. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C. In 1947 the association had 201 officially associated or affiliated organizations. It publishes Science (weekly) and Scientific Monthly.

American Association of University Professors. Organization founded in 1915 for the purpose of advancing professional standards and ideals and the fostering of more effective coöperation among teachers and scholars in universities, colleges, and professional schools. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and publishes a Bulletin (quarterly).

American Astronomical Society. Organization founded in 1897 as a conference of astronomers, and which received its present designation in 1914. It is devoted to the advancement of astronomy, astrophysics, and related branches of physics. Its headquarters are at the Dearborn Observatory, Evanston, Ill. The society formerly issued (1899–1946) the Publications of the American Astronomical Society and is associated with the publication of the Astrophysical Journal and the Astronomical Journal.

American Automobile Association. Body founded (March 4, 1902) at Chicago by delegates from nine automobile clubs for the purpose of encouraging and advancing the use of the automobile. It conducts racing and endurance contests, seeks the improvement of public roads, and promotes the passage of sound motor-vehicle laws. Its federated membership consists of some 750 motor clubs and branches and state associations; in 1948 the association listed its membership at 2,350,000. National headquarters are maintained at Washington, D.C.

American Bar Association. Nation-wide professional body established (1878) for the purpose of improving legal education and promoting sound judicial and legal standards in the U.S. The creation (1891) of the U.S. circuit court of appeals, and the consolidation (1911) of the U.S. circuit and district courts, was in large measure owing to the proposals of the association. It maintains its headquarters at Chicago; in 1948 its membership was listed at 42,000.

American Bible Society. Organization established (1816) at New York for the purpose of publishing and distributing the Bible in all lands and languages. Up to shortly before World War II it had distributed more than 7,700,000 Bibles, Testaments, or portions thereof, publishing the Bible in 176 separate tongues and the New Testament in 214. It also conducts a service for the blind. The society maintains its headquarters at New York; in 1948 it listed its membership at 150,000.

American Broadcasting Station in Europe. See ABSIE.

American Chemical Society. Organization originally founded in 1876 and incorporated under a federal charter in 1937. It is devoted to the advancement of chemistry in all its branches, to the promotion of research in chemical science and industry, and to the improvement of professional standards. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and has 125 geographic sections. It awards numerous medals and awards for outstanding services in the field, among them the Willard Gibbs Medal and the Eli Lilly and Company Award in biological chemistry. Among its publications are the Journal (monthly), Chemical Abstracts (semi-monthly), Chemical and Engineering News (weekly), and Analytical Chemistry.

American Civil Liberties Union. Organization established in 1920 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting civil liberties endangered by various forms of social and political prejudice. It provides legal counsel and engages in informational activities.

American Claimant, The. Story by Samuel Langhorne Clemens, written under his pseudonym of Mark Twain and published in 1892. It is noted for its matchless description of a typical American boarding-house of the early 1890's.

American Council of Learned Societies. Council established in 1919 and incorporated in 1924 for the purpose of promoting the interests of the humanistic sciences in America and stimulating and carrying out major research projects. It also acts as a clearing house for information relating to scholarly activities. The council comprises 24 constituent societies and maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C.

American Council on Education. Organization founded in 1918 for the advancement of American education through voluntary coöperative action. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and issues the Educational Record (quarterly).

American-Danish Treaty of 1916. Agreement (Aug. 4, 1916) by which Denmark ceded to the U.S. the Virgin Islands for a payment of 25 million dollars. Totaling almost 100 islands, covering 132 sq. mi., with a population of 26,000, the group covered by the treaty was formally taken into U.S. possession on March 31, 1917, with Danish laws temporarily remaining in effect.

American Defense Society. Organization active c1915–17 in disseminating preparedness propaganda shortly before the U.S. entry into World War I.

American Dental Association. Organization founded in 1859 for the purpose of improving professional standards and knowledge in the interests of public health and welfare. It maintains headquarters at Chicago, has a library of more than 6,000 volumes on dental science and practice, and publishes a monthly Journal and the Journal of Oral Surgery (quarterly).

American Ethnology, Bureau of. Bureau established in 1879 for collecting and disseminating information pertaining to American aborigines. It is supported by U.S. Congressional appropriation and is under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution. It maintains a library of more than 34,000 volumes on anthropology and issues an Annual Report and Bulletin.

American Expeditionary Forces. [Abbreviation, AEF.] Official name applied to the entire body of U.S. troops serving in the European theater during World War I. The AEF was under the command (1917–19) of John J. Pershing. From it, the first American troops (of the 1st Division) entered the battle line on the night of Oct. 20, 1917, and took their first ground when the 1st Division captured Cantigny, France, on May 28, 1918. The AEF participated in major engagements including the Aisne defensive, the Montdidier-Noyon defensive, the Champagne-Marne defensive, the Aisne-Marne offensive, the reduction of the St.-Mihiel salient, and the Meuse-Argonne offensive. Overall command of the combat elements of the AEF was initially relinquished to the Allied commander in chief, Marshal Foch, and it was not until Aug. 10, 1918, when 24 U.S. combat divisions were in France, that the First (American) Army was formed with headquarters at Ligny-en-Barrois. By the time the armistice was declared (Nov. 11, 1918) more than 2,000,000 troops, including 29 combat divisions, had been transported to France, of which 1,390,000 saw action against the enemy. The last division of the AEF departed from France in August, 1919.

American Express Company. Shipping concern established in 1850 by the merger of Livingston, Fargo and Company with Wells, Butterfield and Company, and which is now chiefly important for its banking and tourist-service activities. The guiding spirits of the enterprise were Henry Wells, who served as its first president, and William G. Fargo. Its rapid development and penetration into the American West brought about the organization (1852) of Wells, Fargo and Company as an associated body. In 1854 the American Express Company established the United States Express Company, but this subsidiary later emerged as a chief competitor. In 1918 the American Railway Express Company consolidated the shipping activities of the various concerns, and the American Express Company thereafter confined itself to banking and tourist services. In 1929 the American Railway Express Company was taken over by the Railway Express Agency.

American Farm Bureau Federation. National organization formed in 1919 of state and local farm bureaus which were originally established for educational purposes on an extension basis. It soon thereafter became a powerful guardian of farmers' interests in Congress, establishing permanent offices at Washington, D.C.

American Federation of Labor. [Abbreviations: AFL and A. F. of L.] Organization composed of self-governing craft unions which was formed at Columbus, Ohio, in 1886. Its forerunner was the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions of the United States of America, founded at Terre Haute, Ind., in 1881. The traditional policy of the AFL has been oriented towards a firm support of the craft-union principle. Organizationally, the AFL is a loose federation of more than 100 national and international unions with a total of some 39,000 locals. Its first president, Samuel Gompers, who headed the AFL from 1886 to 1924 (with the exception of 1895), was succeeded by William Green. The contest within the AFL between advocates of craft unionism and supporters of industrial unionism was climaxed by the expulsion of several unions and the formation (1938) of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. In 1947 the AFL claimed a membership of some 7,400,000 workers.

American Fur Company. Commercial enterprise incorporated in 1808 under the laws of the state of New York, with John Jacob Astor (1763–1848) as its sole stockholder. Astor's aim in establishing the concern was to compete with British interests in Canada for control of the rich fur-trade of the American West. By 1820 Astor was well on his way toward securing a monopoly of the U.S. fur trade, and in 1827 his company merged with its chief rival, the Columbia Fur Company. Astor's peak years came between 1828 and 1834, when he enjoyed an effective monopoly of the U.S. fur trade. In 1834 Astor sold his interests and withdrew from the company, and a portion of the enterprise continued active under the old title. It suffered a financial failure in 1842 and thereafter had little if anything to do with the fur trade.

American Geographical Society. Organization founded in 1851 (incorporated in 1852) for the purpose of collecting and disseminating geographical information and encouraging exploring expeditions likely to yield valuable discoveries in geography and allied fields. Its headquarters at New York maintain a library containing some 118,000 volumes, 145,000 maps, 2,400 atlases, and 29,600 photographs. It awards the David Livingstone Centenary Medal and the S. F. B. Morse Medal. The society's publications include the Geographical Review (quarterly) and Current Geographical Publications (monthly).

American Geographical Society Bay. See Gardner Bay.

American Historical Association. Organization founded on Sept. 9, 1884 (incorporated on Jan. 4, 1889) for the purpose of promoting professional and public interest in history in the U.S. It awards the Albert J. Beveridge Memorial Fellowship and the George Louis Beer Prize. The chief cultural agency of its kind in the U.S., its activities extend to the organization and promotion of research and the classification of manuscript and archival materials. It maintains committees on various aspects of scholarly endeavor in historical studies. The association maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and publishes the American Historical Review (quarterly), Social Education (issued nine times a year), and an Annual Report. In 1948 it listed its membership at approximately 5,000. The Pacific Coast branch of the association, established in 1902, publishes the Pacific Historical Review.

American Independence, War of. See Revolutionary War.

American Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Peters 511 (1828) (kan'tẽr). [Also called American Insurance Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton.] U.S. Supreme Court decision upholding the right of the U.S. government to acquire and govern territory. The case arose over a suit by the American Insurance Company to recover a cargo of cotton which had been sold by order of the territorial legislature of Florida. The plaintiffs alleged that the territorial court which ordered the sale was not a legally constituted court because the acquisition of Florida by the U.S. was unconstitutional. Chief Justice John Marshall declared that "the Constitution conferred absolutely on the government of the Union the powers of making war and of making treaties; consequently, that government possesses the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or treaty," and also has the constitutional right of making all needful rules and regulations respecting such territory. This is the leading U.S. case on the constitutionality of acquired territory: it gave a constitutional basis to the incorporation of the Louisiana Purchase.

American Iron and Steel Institute. Organization incorporated in 1908 for the purpose of promoting the interests of the iron and steel industry. Its membership is composed of company and personal members. The institute maintains headquarters at New York and issues Steel Facts (six times a year) and Iron and Steel Works Directory of the United States and Canada (irregularly).

Americanization of Edward Bok (bok), The. Autobiographical narrative by Edward W. Bok, published in 1920 and awarded the Pulitzer Prize. The book recounts the author's arrival in America and the progress of his career.

American Labor Party. [Abbreviation, ALP.] Third-party organization set up at New York in 1936 with independent and labor support. It was instrumental in carrying New York state for Franklin D. Roosevelt in the presidential election of 1936. A split in the party in 1944 led to the secession of right-wing elements which subsequently emerged as the Liberal Party. During the latter part of the decade 1940–50 it lost much of the power and support which it had enjoyed during the late 1930's and early 1940's.

American Language, The. Study (1919; revised, 1921; 3rd edition, 1923; 4th edition, 1936; First Supplement, 1946; Second Supplement, 1948) of the English language in the U.S., by Henry Louis Mencken. It is considered by most critics and scholars to be his most lasting monument.

American Legion. National organization composed of honorably discharged veterans who served in the U.S. armed forces during World Wars I and II. It was initially organized at Paris (February–March, 1919) and was chartered by the U.S. Congress on Sept. 16, 1919. The largest single veterans' society in the U.S., it has thousands of local posts at home and abroad and maintains national headquarters at Indianapolis, Ind. The organization has been active in securing veterans' benefits, and in the promotion of patriotic sentiment and community endeavor. In 1949 it claimed 3,272,060 members.

American Liberty League. Organization established in 1934 by conservative Democrats and others with the declared aim of supporting constitutional government and combating radical tendencies in the U.S. A great part of its activity was devoted to attacking the policies of the New Deal. It was dissolved in 1940.

American Library Association. Organization founded in 1876 for the purpose of extending library facilities throughout the U.S. and Canada, elevating standards and ideals of library service, and promoting the interests and welfare of the profession. It is affiliated with more than 50 other library associations. It maintains headquarters at Chicago and publishes a monthly Bulletin, the Booklist (semimonthly), College and Research Libraries (quarterly), Hospital Book Guide (quarterly), and Subscription Books Bulletin (quarterly).

American Medical Association. Organization founded in 1847 for the purpose of promoting professional knowledge and efficiency and improving public health. Its membership is composed of the members of 53 constituent state and territorial medical associations. The association maintains headquarters at Chicago. Among its publications are the Journal (weekly), American Journal of Diseases of Children (monthly), Archives of Dermatology and Syphilology (monthly), Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry (monthly), Occupational Medicine, and Hygeia (monthly).

American Mercury, The. Monthly publication founded by H. L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan, with help from Alfred Knopf, in 1924. Under their editorship the magazine burlesqued national institutions and presented a sharply critical view of contemporary American mores and customs. Contributors included Theodore Dreiser, Eugene O'Neill, Sinclair Lewis, and Edgar Lee Masters. The character of the publication was modified after Mencken resigned in 1934.

American Museum of Natural History. Institution at New York, incorporated in 1869 for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a museum and library of natural history, and of encouraging and developing the study of natural science. Its buildings, including the memorial to Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919) and the Hayden Planetarium, occupy an area lying W of Central Park and extending from 77th Street to 81st Street. The museum is supported in part by an annual appropriation from the city, and in part by the income from a permanent endowment, from membership fees, and from gifts for special purposes. The affairs of the museum are administered by a board of trustees who serve without compensation. The exhibits include extensive collections in anthropology, paleontology, geology, mineralogy, conchology, entomology, mammalogy, ornithology, the lower animals, and forestry. The library contains about 130,000 volumes on natural history. The museum conducts scientific investigations at home and in the field, publishes memoirs, a bulletin, a journal, and anthropological papers, and is a center for the meetings of local scientific societies. It also offers free lectures to the public and to school children, and lends small collections to the public schools.

American National Red Cross. See American Red Cross.

American Party. [Also called Know-nothing Party.] In U.S. politics, a party which advocated the control of the government by native citizens, and fostered anti-Catholic sentiment. Because it was at the outset a secret fraternity and its members refused to give information concerning it, they received the name of "Know-nothings." In 1855 it discarded its secret machinery. The party nominated Millard Fillmore for president in 1856, and soon after its defeat in the election of that year began a rapid decline.

American Philosophical Society. Learned society, the oldest of its kind in America, founded at Philadelphia by Benjamin Franklin in 1743, and united in 1769 with his Junto of 1727, or Society for Promoting Useful Knowledge. Franklin was the first president after the union of the two societies. Incorporated in 1780, it has a library of more than 102,000 volumes, and issues Memoirs, Proceedings, and Transactions. Its headquarters are at Philadelphia. Its membership is limited to 500, and is not restricted to U.S. nationals.

American Political Science Association. Organization founded in 1903 for the purpose of encouraging the study of political science, including political theory, government and politics, public law and administration, and international politics. It maintains headquarters at Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, and issues the American Political Science Review (bimonthly).

American Practical Navigator. [Full title, The New American Practical Navigator; commonly called Bowditch's Navigator.] Work by Nathaniel Bowditch (1773–1838), published under his name in 1802. A revision of Moore's Practical Navigator, it became a standard work on navigation for American seamen. More than 60 editions have been issued since 1802. In 1866 the responsibility for publication and revision was taken over by the U.S. Navy Hydrographic Office.

American Protective Association. [Abbreviation, APA.] Secret nativist organization established (March 13, 1887) by Henry F. Bowers, a lawyer of Clinton, Iowa. The APA fostered prejudice against immigrants and Catholics and circulated propaganda designed to expose the alleged designs of the Papacy for dominating the U.S. It agitated for greater restrictions on immigration and naturalization, the prevention of state aid to parochial schools, and the exclusion of Roman Catholics from political and, as far as possible, from industrial affairs. Its members took secret oaths binding them not to employ or vote for Catholics. The APA's following, which stood at 70,000 in 1895 and rose to 1,000,000 by 1896, was drawn largely from rural areas in the Midwest. Its membership dwindled rapidly after 1896.

American Psychiatric Association. Organization originally founded in 1844 as the Association of Medical Superintendents of American Institutions for the Insane which received its present title in 1921. It is devoted to the advancement of psychiatric knowledge, education, and research, the application of such knowledge to other branches of medicine, and the elevation of standards of institutions for the care of the mentally ill. It maintains headquarters at New York and issues the American Journal of Psychiatry (monthly).

American Psychological Association. Organization founded in 1892 (incorporated 1925) for the purpose of advancing psychology as a science and profession. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and issues publications including Psychological Abstracts (monthly), Psychological Bulletin (bimonthly), Psychological Review (bimonthly), Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology (quarterly), Journal of Applied Psychology (bimonthly), and Journal of Experimental Psychology (bimonthly).

American Public Health Association. Organization founded in 1872 for the purpose of promoting and protecting personal and public health. It maintains headquarters at New York and issues the American Journal of Public Health and The Nation's Health (monthly).

American Railway Association. Body of U.S. railway managers and executive operating officials which had its genesis in the so-called Time Table Conventions held as early as 1872 (and out of which came, among other things, the railroads' decision to establish and apply the four zones of standard time in the U.S.). It was known by the name above after 1891, and was included 1934 in the Association of American Railroads.

American Railway Union. Labor organization in the U.S., adhering to the principles of industrial unionism, established under the leadership of Eugene V. Debs on June 20, 1893. It grew rapidly under Debs's guidance and within a year after its founding had 465 lodges and a membership of 150,000. The union called the Pullman strike of 1894, which became the occasion for a noted antilabor injunction and led to Debs's imprisonment on the charge of contempt of court. The organization is now defunct.

American Red Cross. [Also, American National Red Cross.] Organization organized in 1881 by Clara Barton and others for the purpose of furnishing volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war, and to carry on a system of national and international relief in time of peace to mitigate the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, and natural disasters. It was chartered by the U.S. Congress in 1905. It maintains headquarters at Washington, D.C., and issues the Red Cross Courier (monthly), Junior Red Cross News (monthly), and Junior Red Cross Journal (monthly).

American Republican Party. [Later name, Native American Party.] Nativist political body in the U.S., with an animus against Catholics and immigrants, organized in 1843 at New York. It rose to prominence by winning (1844) the municipal contests at New York and Philadelphia, and held its first national convention in 1845. The party then changed its name to the Native American Party and adopted a program demanding radical reforms in the naturalization laws. The party declined rapidly after the outbreak of the Mexican War.

American Revolution, War of the. See Revolutionary War.

American River. River in N central California, flowing generally SW into the Sacramento River at Sacramento. It rises near Lake Tahoe, in the Sierra Nevada mountains. Several of the gold strikes made in 1848 occurred on its banks, and it was thereafter of considerable importance in the development of California. Length, ab. 30 mi.

American Samoa (sə.mō′ə). [Also, Eastern Samoa.] Term applied to the E half of the Samoan islands, owned by the U.S. In 1872 the harbor of Pago Pago was ceded to the U.S. as a coaling and naval station. In 1899, when Great Britain gave up all her claims to the Samoan islands, the group was divided between Germany and the U.S.; Western Samoa became a League of Nations mandate after World War I and later a trust territory of the United Nations, administered by New Zealand. The American islands comprise Tutuila, Aunuu, Rose Island, and the Manua Islands (Tau, Ofu, and Olosega). In 1925 Swains Island was added to the territory. The commandant of the naval station at Pago Pago is also the governor of American Samoa. There is a native legislature of two houses (one elected), and a high court presided over by an American chief justice. The islands produce copra, coconuts, taro, yams, and fruit. Capital, Pago Pago; area, 76 sq. mi.; pop. 18,937 (1950).

American Scholar, The. Address delivered by Ralph Waldo Emerson before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard on Aug. 31, 1837. It has been described as "our intellectual Declaration of Independence." The author asserts that the scholar's function is to understand and interpret the society of which he is a part, to assume an active as well as a contemplative role, to escape the tyranny of popular opinion, and to consecrate his talents to the highest good of the community. From it was derived the name of the magazine (quarterly) of the Phi Beta Kappa Society.

American School of Classical Studies at Athens. School founded at Athens, Greece, by the Archaeological Institute of America, opened in 1882, and supported by individuals and by leading American colleges and universities. Its main purpose is the study of Greek archaeology.

American School of Classical Studies at Rome. School founded at Rome in 1895 by the Archaeological Institute of America, and supported by individuals and by leading American colleges and universities. In 1913 it was consolidated with the American Academy in Rome.

American's Creed, The. Expression of American political faith written in 1917 by William Tyler Page, at that time clerk of the U.S. House of Representatives. It was chosen to receive an award of one thousand dollars offered in a national contest by the city of Baltimore. On behalf of the American people it was accepted (April 3, 1918) by the House of Representatives. The text is as follows: "I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic: a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect union, one and inseparable: established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its Constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. [Abbreviation, ASCAP.] Non-profit group organized (1914) by Victor Herbert whose voluntary membership includes composers, authors, and music publishers. It represents its members in dealing with entertainment and public-communications establishments, and in matters connected with copyright protection.

American Society of Tropical Medicine. Organization founded in 1903 for the purpose of promoting the knowledge of tropical diseases by means of research and publication. It awards the Walter Reed Medal for meritorious achievement in tropical medicine and publishes the American Journal of Tropical Medicine (bimonthly).

American Sociological Society. Organization established in 1905 for the purpose of encouraging research, discussion, teaching, and publication in the field of sociology. It publishes the American Sociological Review (bimonthly).

American Songbag, The. Collection of folk songs and ballads compiled by Carl Sandburg and published in 1927.

American Speech. Quarterly magazine founded (1925) by Louise Pound, who served as its editor until 1933. It is a scholarly publication devoted to research and discussion in such fields as pronunciation, vocabulary, regional and local dialects, technical definitions, and slang.

American System. Name applied by Henry Clay to the system of protective tariffs and internal improvements advocated by him in a famous speech (March 30–31, 1824) before the U.S. Congress. It looked to the encouragement of agrarian and industrial interests for the development of a domestic market freed from dependence on foreign sources. Clay also advocated as part of his program the distribution by the national government among the states of the revenues from the sale of public lands. In the broader sense, the term "American System" was used by Clay to raise the standard of a hemispherical unity of republican belief against the monarchical rule of Europe.

American Tract Society. Body established (1825) at New York for the purpose of producing and distributing Christian tracts. It was incorporated in 1841. An interdenominational body, it has published well over eight hundred million copies of leaflets and tracts, many of which have been distributed by its colporteurs.

American Tragedy, An. Novel by Theodore Dreiser, published in 1925. Clyde Griffiths, in a desperate attempt to escape the stultifying effects of a poverty-stricken life in a midwest town, seeks a life of wealth and ease. Almost coincident with his love affair with Roberta Alden is his attraction to Sondra Finchley, who exemplifies affluence and social prestige. When Roberta tells Clyde that she is pregnant, he takes her to a lake resort, planning to murder her. Clyde lacks the courage to perform the crime, but when a rowboat carrying them overturns, Clyde swims away, leaving Roberta to drown. He stands trial and is sentenced to death. The novel was dramatized by Patrick Kearney in 1926 and was subsequently filmed.

American Veterans Committee. [Abbreviation, AVC.] National organization of honorably discharged veterans who served in the U.S. armed forces during World War II. Formally organized in 1944 under the leadership of Charles G. Bolté, it declared its general objectives under the slogan, "Citizens First, Veterans Second." It has been active in promoting legislation for veterans' benefits, government housing, and full employment.

American Veterans of World War II. [Abbreviation, Amvets.] National organization of honorably discharged veterans who served in the U.S. armed forces during World War II. The group obtained a national charter in 1947.

American Zone. See under German Federal Republic.

Americus (ə.mer'i.kus). City in W Georgia, county seat of Sumter County, in a kaolin and bauxite mining region. It is the seat of Georgia Southwestern College. 11,389 (1950).

Amerighi (ä.me.rē'gē), Michelangelo. See Caravaggio, Michelangelo Amerighi (or Merighi) da.

Amerling (ä'mėr.ling), Friedrich von. b. 1803; d. 1887. Austrian portrait painter.

Amersfoort (ä'mėrs.fōrt). Town in the C part of the Netherlands, in the province of Utrecht, situated on the Eem River, ab. 12 mi. NE of Utrecht: manufacturing and commercial community, with textile mills producing damask, cotton, and woolen goods, the Erdal chemical works, cigar factories, and breweries. The town has preserved its medieval character; the 13th-century Church of Saint Joris contains the tomb of Jacob van Kampen, a famous Dutch architect. There is a Jansenist church and college. The town was occupied by the Germans in May, 1945. Pop. 57,653 (1949).

Amery (ā'mėr.i), Leopold Charles Maurice Stennett. b. at Gorakhpur, India, 1873—. English politician and journalist. After serving on the staff of the London Times (1899–1909), he was elected (1911) to Parliament on the Unionist ticket from a Birmingham constituency. He served in the army (1914–16) and as War Cabinet secretary (1917–18); thereafter he held numerous cabinet posts, becoming in 1940 secretary of state for India and Burma, which post he surrendered in 1945 after the victory of the Labour party at the polls. Author of the seven-volume Times History of the South African War (1909), as well as of numerous works pertaining to empire and international affairs.

Ames (āmz). [Former name, College Farm.] City in C Iowa, in Story County. Manufactures include canned foods, pottery, and garden tools. It is the seat of Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. It was platted in 1864 and incorporated in 1870. Pop. 22,898 (1950).

Ames, Adelbert. b. at Rockland, Me., Oct. 31, 1835; d. April 13, 1933. American general in the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, Reconstruction governor of Mississippi. He was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for gallantry at the first battle of Manassas (Bull Run). He fought also at Malvern Hill, Antietam, Gettysburg, and other battles, and was brevetted major general of volunteers in 1865 and of the regular army in 1866. Appointed by Grant provisional governor (1868–70) of Mississippi, he served as a Republican U.S. senator (1870–74) from that state, and as its governor (1874–76). His governorship was troubled by the Vicksburg riot (1874) and other disorders. As brigadier general of volunteers, he served in the Santiago campaign (1898) in the Spanish-American War.

Ames, Charles Gordon. b. at Dorchester, Mass., Oct. 3, 1828; d. April 15, 1912. American Baptist and Unitarian clergyman, newspaper editor, and vigorous supporter of the Union in the Civil War. The period (1851–56) he spent as a Baptist pastor at Minneapolis was marked by his editorship (1855–57) of the Minnesota Republican (forerunner of the Minneapolis Tribune) and his activity on behalf of the Minnesota Republican Party, which in 1854 he helped to found. Disillusionment with parishioners led to his withdrawal from the ministry, but he returned in 1859 as a Unitarian. Although rejected for military service for physical reasons, he paid for a substitute and argued for the Union cause and Abraham Lincoln (whom he had met earlier at Bloomington, Ill.).

Ames, Edward Raymond. b. at Amesville, Ohio, May 20, 1806; d. at Baltimore, April 25, 1879. American Methodist bishop and itinerant minister. He traveled upwards of 25,000 miles between Minnesota and Texas as a corresponding secretary for the Methodist Missionary Society in the West. A vigorous supporter of the North during the Civil War, he was the sole Methodist bishop to be appointed chaplain with the army. His selection (1862) as a commissioner to enter Richmond, Va., with comforts for the Union soldiers there imprisoned, led to violent outbursts in the South, where it was felt his mission of mercy would play a secondary role to his Unionist political sympathies, and he was refused a pass into the Confederacy.

Ames, Ezra. b. at Framingham, Mass., 1768; d. 1836. American portrait painter. His early career as a carriage painter was followed by commissions to paint miniature, bust, and full-length portraits of Governor George Clinton of New York, Alexander Hamilton, Charles Genet, and others.

Ames, Fisher. [Pseudonyms, Lucius Junius Brutus, and Camillus.] b. at Dedham, Mass., April 9, 1758; d. there, July 4, 1808. American Federalist leader and political writer; supporter of Hamilton in Congress. He began a law practice at Dedham in 1781, and was a member (1787) of the Massachusetts ratifying committee. As a Federalist member (1788–97) of Congress from Massachusetts, having defeated Samuel Adams, he made memorable speeches opposing (1794) Madison's proposal of commercial war against Britain and in support (1796) of Jay's Treaty. In 1805 he declined the presidency of Harvard College. Author of essays advancing the Hamiltonian theory of selective democracy and opposing Jeffersonian libertarianism, such as The Dangers of American Liberty (written 1805); his works were collected in Works of Fisher Ames (1809, 1854) and Speeches of Fisher Ames in Congress (1871).

Ames, Frederick Lothrop. b. at North Easton, Mass., June 8, 1835; d. Sept. 13, 1893. American banker, railroad official, and Boston real-estate owner, son of Oliver Ames (1807–77). He was nominated and elected (1872) to the Massachusetts senate.

Ames, James Barr. b. at Boston, June 22, 1846; d. at Wilton, N.H., Jan. 8, 1910. American educator and writer on law. A graduate of Harvard (1868) and the Harvard Law School (1872), he replaced Henry Adams at Harvard as teacher of medieval history (1872–73); subsequently he was also professor of law (1877) and dean of the law school (1895–1910). Through his teaching methods and case books, he furthered Christopher Columbus Langdell's system of teaching law by case study; he was also instrumental in founding (1897) the Harvard Law Review. Authority on legal history; author of Lectures on Legal History and Miscellaneous Legal Essays (1913).

Ames, James Tyler. b. at Lowell, Mass., May 13, 1810; d. Feb. 16, 1883. American manufacturer; brother of N. P. Ames (1803–47). As head of the Ames tool-manufacturing concern after the death of his brother, he expanded his works to include textile machinery, water turbines, sewing machines, and bicycles. During the Civil War, the Ames shops turned out sabers, rifles, and cannon for the North, and later executed large munitions contracts for France and Turkey.

Ames, Joseph. b. at Yarmouth, England, Jan. 23, 1689; d. at London, Oct. 7, 1759. English antiquary and bibliographer, publisher of Typographical Antiquities (1749, ed. by Herbert 1785–90), an account of English printing to 1600, called by some the foundation of English bibliography. He was the author also of descriptive catalogs of coins (1746) and old prints (1747), a memoir of Christopher Wren (1750), and others.

Ames, Joseph Alexander. b. at Roxbury, Mass., 1816; d. at New York, 1872. American painter, notable for his portraits of Pope Pius IX, Rufus Choate, William H. Seward, and Emerson. A painting done by him of Daniel Webster in 1852 is believed to have been the last painted of Webster from life.

Ames, Joseph Sweetman. b. at Manchester, Vt., July 3, 1864; d. at Baltimore, Md., June 24, 1943. American physicist and college administrator. He conducted research in aerodynamics and was chairman (1927–39) of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. He served also on the staff of Johns Hopkins' physics department (1888 et seq.), becoming professor in 1899 and director of the physical laboratories in 1901; from 1929-35 he was president of Johns Hopkins.

Ames, Mary Clemmer. See Clemmer, Mary.

Ames, Nathaniel. b. at Bridgewater, Mass., 1708; d. at Dedham, Mass., 1764. American almanac-maker, physician, and one-time tavern-keeper. In 1725 he published the first edition of his Almanac, which preceded Benjamin Franklin's Poor Richard's Almanac by eight years and was destined to be for two generations the best known of New England's almanacs.

Ames, Nathan Peabody. b. at Chelmsford, Mass., Sept. 1, 1803; d. Apr. 3, 1847. American manufacturer, notable for his establishment (1834) of the Ames Manufacturing Company. Ames first specialized in the production of edged tools, which led to the operation of the first U.S. sword-company, and expansion into various industrial fields peculiar to New England. He was sent (1840) with a commission from the U.S. army ordnance department to study arms manufacture in Europe.

Ames, Oakes. b. at Easton, Mass., Jan. 10, 1804; d. at North Easton, Mass., May 8, 1873. American manufacturer, financier, and politician; father of Oliver Ames (1831–95). With his brother, Oliver (1807–77), he managed the Ames shovel-factory, which prospered from gold rushes, development of the Northwest, and the Civil War. As a Republican congressman from Massachusetts (1863–73), he became interested in the building of the Union Pacific Railroad, of which Oliver became president while he obtained control of the Crédit Mobilier. Exposure of its manipulations began in the election year of 1872 with the publication in the New York Sun of his letters to a congressman who claimed Ames had withheld stock from him. He was found guilty by the Poland Committee of bribery, and by the Wilson Committee of defrauding the government, and was publicly condemned by a House resolution for his conduct, which many colleagues and constituents maintained was not intentionally corrupt.

Ames, Oakes. b. at North Easton, Mass., Sept. 26, 1874; d. in Florida, April 28, 1950. American botanist, a specialist in orchidology.

Ames, Oliver. b. at West Bridgewater, Mass., April 11, 1779; d. Sept. 11, 1863. American shovel-manufacturer, notable for his belief (unusual in his day) that the tool was easier to replace than its user, and that shovels should therefore be lighter and easier to use than was the standard of his time. He established shops at North Easton, Mass. (1803), Braintree, Mass. (1823), and Canton, Mass. (1844), which were taken over by his sons Oakes Ames (1804–73) and Oliver Ames (1807–77) during the 1840's.

Ames, Oliver. b. at Plymouth, Mass., Nov. 5, 1807; d. Mar. 9, 1877. American industrialist, railroad official, and banker; son of Oliver Ames (1779–1863) and brother of Oakes Ames (1804–73). His business success was originally based on the shovel factory founded by his father. He was associated (1855 et seq.) with his brother in the construction of the Easton Branch Railroad; subsequently he was acting president (1866–68) and president (1868–71) of the Union Pacific. Though connected with the Crédit Mobilier (which financed the Union Pacific), he was not involved in the scandals that followed the exposure of its manipulations, because he was not connected with the wholesale legislative corruption upon which the scandals were based.

Ames, Oliver. b. at North Easton, Mass., Feb. 4, 1831; d. Oct. 22, 1895. American industrialist, railroad official, and politician; son of Oakes Ames (1804–1873). He was three times (1886, 1887, 1888) elected governor of Massachusetts, despite bitter personal attacks based on his failure to serve in the armed forces during the Civil War.

Ames, Samuel. b. at Providence, R.I., Sept. 6, 1806; d. there, Dec. 20, 1865. American jurist, chief justice of the Rhode Island supreme court (1856 et seq.). His service (1841–51) as a member for Providence in the Rhode Island general assembly was marked by his support of state authority in the "Dorr Rebellion" (1842); later (1861) he represented Rhode Island in unsuccessful peace negotiations between the North and the South in the Civil War.

Ames, William. [Latinized, Amesius.] b. at Ipswich, England, 1576; d. at Rotterdam, 1633. English Puritan theologian who was forced by his controversial preaching to live (c1610–33) in the Netherlands, where he was professor (1622–26) and rector (1626–33) of the university at Franeker. A Calvinist, he was opposed to the strong Arminian doctrines in the English church. Author of Medulla theologiae, De conscientia eius iure et casibus (1632), and others.

Ames, Winthrop. b. at North Easton, Mass., Nov. 25, 1871; d. at Boston, Nov. 3, 1937. American theatrical producer and theater manager at Boston (1905–08) and New York (1909 et seq.). He built the Little Theatre (1912) and the Booth Theatre (1913), both at New York; his production of Snow White was the first New York play designed specially for children. He was active also in the revival of Gilbert and Sullivan and in a variety of other productions, many of which set a high standard of dramatic excellence.

Amesbury (āmz'ber''i, -bėr.i). Town in S England, in Wiltshire, ab. 8 mi. N of Salisbury. It is probably now chiefly known outside of England as being the community closest to Stonehenge, but it is important also as the site of a portion of one of England's largest military training centers.

Amesbury (āmz'ber''i). Name of a town and village in NE Massachusetts, in Essex County, on the Merrimack River, ab. 34 mi. N of Boston: manufactures hats. Pop. of town, 10,851 (1950); of village, 9,711 (1950).

Amestratus (ą.mes'trą.tus). Ancient name of Mistretta.

Amestris (ą.mes'tris). Daughter of Otanes according to Herodotus, of Onophas according to Ctesias, and the favorite wife of Xerxes, whom she bore at least five children. Her crimes and cruelties are related by Ctesias at some length, and are mentioned by Herodotus. She is believed by some to be the Vashti of the Book of Esther.

Ameto (ä.mā'tō). Prose idyl by Boccaccio, with poetical interludes. Seven nymphs over whom Ameto, a young hunter, presides recount the story of their loves. Each story concludes with eclogues, which were among the first in Italian literature.

Amfissa (am.fis'ą). See Amphissa.

Amfiteatrov (äm.fi.tyi.ä'trof), Aleksandr Valentinovich. b. Dec. 26, 1862; d. 1923. Russian man of letters, prolific as a novelist, playwright, and liberal journalist.

AMG. Abbreviation of Allied Military Government.

Amga (äm'gą). River in the U.S.S.R., in the Yakutsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, E Siberia, which joins the Aldan. Length, ab. 500 mi.

AMGOT. Original abbreviation of Allied Military Government.

Amhara (äm'hä.rā, am.har'ą). Former province in N Ethiopia, in E Africa, situated in the vicinity of Lake Tana. This high region, which possesses good soil and climate, was to be the nucleus of the empire of Italian East Africa; because of its altitude it was considered fit for European colonization. It is inhabited by Amharans, who have long been the ruling group in Ethiopia. Capital, Gondar; area, 76,235 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 2,000,000.

Amharic (am.har'ik). [Also, Amarinna.] Semitic language of NE Africa, derived from Geez or Ethiopic. Since the 14th century it has been the official and literary language throughout the Ethiopian state. It is spoken by some 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 people (estimated by E. Ullendorf, Exploration and Study of Abyssinia, 1945).

Amherst (am'érst). District in Tenasserim division, SE Burma, with its center ab. 150 mi. SE of Rangoon. Tungsten is mined in the area. The most important crop is rice. Area, ab. 7,000 sq. mi.

Amherst. Name of a town and village in C Massachusetts, in Hampshire County, ab. 20 mi. N of Springfield: seat of Amherst College and of the University of Massachusetts. Pop. of town, 10,856 (1950); of village, 7,900 (1950).

Amherst. Seaport in Nova Scotia, Canada, the capital of Cumberland County, situated on Cumberland Basin, an arm of Chignecto Bay, near the New Brunswick boundary. It has manufactures and a considerable trade in lumber and shipbuilding, and is a junction point on the main railway line into the province. 9,870 (1951).

Amherst. Village in N Ohio, in Lorain County: sandstone quarries. 3,542 (1950).

Amherst, Jeffrey. [Title, Baron Amherst.] b. at Sevenoaks, Kent, England, Jan. 29, 1717; d. there, Aug. 4, 1797. British field marshal, commander against the French in North America. He served under Ligonier and Cumberland in Europe in the War of the Austrian Succession. Sent (1758) by William Pitt to take Louisburg from the French, he was victorious there, at Crown Point and Ticonderoga (1759), and at Montreal (1760), securing British control of Canada. He was appointed (1761) governor-general of British North America, but returned (1763) to England after an unsuccessful campaign against the Indians. He later acted as an adviser to the British government during the American Revolution. For his services, he was made a baron (1787), commander in chief of the army (1793), and a field marshal (1796).

Amherst, Nicholas. See Amhurst, Nicholas.

Amherst, William Pitt. [Title, Earl Amherst of Arakan.] b. in January, 1773; d. 1857. English government official and diplomat; nephew of Jeffrey Amherst (1717–97). He was ambassador to China (1816–17).

Amherstburg (am'ėrst.bėrg). Town in Essex County, Ontario, Canada, situated at the entrance of the Detroit River into Lake Erie, ab. 20 mi. S of Detroit: agricultural and resort region; several industries. 3,638 (1951).

Amhurst (am'ėrst), Nicholas. [Also: Amherst; pseudonym, Caleb D'Anvers of Gray's Inn.] b. at Marden, Kent, England, Oct. 16, 1697; d. at Twickenham, England, April 12, 1742. English poet and pamphleteer. As editor (1726 et seq.) of the political journal The Craftsman, he published many papers by Henry St. John, 1st viscount Bolingbroke, and William Pulteney, earl of Bath, who apparently abandoned him when their campaign against the Walpole government succeeded. Expelled (1719) from Oxford for irregular conduct or, according to his account, for his liberal opinions, he retaliated by satirizing the university in Terrae filius (1721–26), a prose work, and Oculus Britanniae (1724), a poem.

Ami (ä'mē). Largest of the Malayo-Polynesian-speaking tribes of Formosa, on the E coast of the island.

Amici (ä.mē'chē), Giovanni Battista. b. at Modena, Italy, March 25, 1786; d. at Florence, April 10, 1863. Italian optician and astronomer who developed, besides the dioptric or achromatic microscope which bears his name, important improvements in the mirrors of reflecting telescopes.

Amicis (ä.mē'chēs), Edmondo De. See De Amicis, Edmondo.

Amico Fritz (lä.mē'kō frēts'), L'. Opera in three acts by Pietro Mascagni, with a libretto by P. Suardon, first performed in the Teatro Costanzi at Rome on Oct. 31, 1891.

Amida (ä.mē.dä). Central figure in the most popular Buddhist sect in Japan. Friendly to man, Amida is regarded as a savior; sincere faith in him assures his worshipers a place in paradise.

Amida (am'i.dạ). Ancient name of Diyarbakir, city.

Amidas (am'i.dạs), Philip. See Amadas, Philip.

Amidas and Bracidas (bras'i.dạs). Twin brothers whom Artegall reconciles in Book V of Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene.

Amie (ā'mi). In Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd, a gentle shepherdess.

Amiel (ā'mi.ęl). In John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, a character supposed to have been intended for Edward Seymour, speaker of the House of Commons, who was an adherent of William of Orange and the head of the house of Seymour.

Amiel (ä.myel), Denys. b. at Villegailhenc, near Carcassonne, France, Oct. 5, 1884—. French dramatist, specializing in a form of subtle comedy in which the most important lines are left unsaid, to be inferred by the audience. His plays include La Souriante Madame Obey (1921, in collaboration with André Obey), La Carcasse (1926), Décalage (1931), and L'Age du fer (1932).

Amiel, Henri Frédéric. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 27, 1821; d. there, May 11, 1881. Swiss philosopher and poet. After studying philosophy at Berlin 1844–48, he served as professor of aesthetics and French literature (1849 et seq.) and of moral philosophy (1854) at the academy at Geneva. Author of Fragments d'un journal intime, published after his death (2 volumes, 1883), translated (1885) by Mrs. Humphry Ward and praised by Matthew Arnold.

Amiens (am'i.ęnz; French, ä.myaṅ). [Ancient names, Samarobriva, Ambianum.] City in N France, the capital of the department of Somme, situated at the junction of the Selle and the Somme rivers. It was the capital of the old province of Picardy and is now one of the leading manufacturing and commercial centers of France. Among its various industries are metallurgical, leather-goods, and garment factories, cotton and jute processing plants, and flour mills. The Cathedral of Notre Dame, begun in 1220 and renovated in 1902–03, is considered one of the largest and finest examples of Gothic church architecture in France. The façade is richly sculptured and the choir stalls, dating from 1508–19, are of great beauty. The slender central spire is ab. 370 ft. high. The city suffered severely in World Wars I and II and as a result of the latter, most of the city's ancient buildings, with the exception of the cathedral, and many of its industries were partially or totally destroyed. Among the buildings wholly destroyed were the Church of Saint Germain, the courthouse of the royal bailiff, and the Sagittaire mansion. 84,787 (1946).

Amiens (ä'mi.ęnz). In Shakespeare's As You Like It, a gentleman in attendance on the duke.

Amiens (am'i.ęnz; French, ä.myaṅ), Battle of. Victory gained on Nov. 27, 1870, in the Franco-Prussian War by the Germans under Edwin Hans Karl Manteuffel over the French. It was followed by the taking of Amiens on Nov. 28, and the surrender of its citadel on Nov. 30.

Amiens, Mise of. Award pronounced on Jan. 23, 1264, by Louis IX of France, to whom the question as to the obligation of Henry III to observe the Provisions of Oxford had been referred on Dec. 16, 1263. By this award the King of France entirely annulled the Provisions of Oxford, and all obligations made under them.

Amiens, Treaty of. Peace concluded at Amiens, March 27, 1802, between Great Britain on one side, and France, Spain, and the Batavian republic on the other. England restored all conquests except Ceylon and Trinidad, the Ionian republic was acknowledged, the French were to abandon Rome and Naples, and Malta was to be restored to the Knights of St. John.

Amiet (ä.mye), Cuno. b. at Solothurn, Switzerland, March 28, 1868—. Swiss genre painter and landscape and portrait artist who decorated the City Hall at Basel, Switzerland. He studied in Switzerland (1885–91), and at Paris with Adolphe William Bouguereau. Given a one-man show (1928) at Bern, Switzerland, he has also exhibited his work at Berlin, Munich, and Zurich. Winter Landscape, Mother and Child, and Beauty of the Evening are among his principal paintings.

Amigoni (ä.mē.gō'nē), Jacopo. b. at Venice, 1675; d. at Madrid, 1752. Venetian painter and etcher. He spent a large part of his life in England, where his work was at one time extremely popular. His paintings include numerous portraits and historico-mythological scenes.

Amin (ä.mēn'). Eldest son of Harun al-Rashid in "The Three Ladies of Baghdad" in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. He marries Amine.

Amina (ä.mē'nä). The principal character, a soprano, in Vincenzo Bellini's opera La Sonnambula.

Aminadab (ạ.min'ạ.dab). Name often used by the English dramatists of the 18th century to designate a Quaker.

Amine (ä.mēn'). In the story of "Sidi Nouman" in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, the wife of Sidi Nouman. Her habit of eating only a few grains of rice, at mealtimes, arouses his suspicions, and he discovers her feasting at night with a ghoul.

Amine. In the story of "The Three Ladies of Baghdad" in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments, Zobeide's sister. Without knowing his rank, she marries Amin, eldest son of Harun al-Rashid.

Aminta (ä.mēn'tä). Pastoral drama by Torquato Tasso, produced in 1573. The drama is allegorical, presenting Arcadia as a reflection of the Ferrara court, where the work was acted in 1573.

Aminte (ä.maṅt). Neighbor of Sganarelle in Molière's L'Amour Médecin.

Amintor (ạ.min'tôr). One of the principal male characters in Beaumont and Fletcher's play The Maid's Tragedy. Loyalty to his king is his outstanding trait.

Amiot (ä.myō), Jean Joseph Marie. [Also, Amyot.] b. at Toulon, France, Feb. 8, 1718; d. at Peking, China,

Oct. 8, 1794. French Jesuit missionary, after 1740, in China, whose Mémoires concernant l'histoire, les sciences, et les arts des Chinois (1776–91), and Dictionaire tatar-mantchou-francais (1789, a Manchu dictionary) were notable contributions to the European knowledge of Chinese culture.

Amirabad (ą.mir'ą.bad, ä.mēr''ä.bäd'), Camp. U.S. Army camp in World War II, in N Iran, ab. 15 mi. N of the city of Tehran. Built by the U.S. Army, it was the headquarters of the Persian Gulf Command.

Amir Ali (ä.mēr' ä'lē), Seyyid. See Ameer Ali, Syed.

Amirante Islands (am'i.rant). Group of small islands in the Indian Ocean, SW of the Seychelles Islands and included in the British crown colony of Seychelles.

Amis et Amiles (ä.mēs ā ä.mē.lęs). [Also, Amys and Amyloun.] Middle English metrical romance, dating probably from the 12th century, and probably of French origin. It tells the story of two perfect friends, born the same day and alike in beauty, courage, and devotion. Amiles saves the honor of Amis in a trial by combat, and is punished with leprosy. Amis in true devotion cures Amiles with the blood of his own children. As reward for such perfect friendship the children are restored to life.

Amish (am'ish, ä'mish). Christian sect, formerly Mennonites, in the U.S. whose practices are based upon the teachings of Jacob Amman. They broke off from the main body of Mennonites in Europe toward the close of the 17th century and appeared in Pennsylvania as early as c1714. Among their distinguishing outward characteristics are their simple, old-fashioned attire, their use of hooks and eyes (buttons are forbidden), and the wearing of beards, but not moustaches, by the men. Their code of personal conduct is extremely conservative; in the affairs of daily life, they are highly industrious and frugal. Their individualism is almost proverbial; during the era of the New Deal they scorned, in more than one community, unsolicited aid in the form of public projects.

Amisia (ą.mis'i.ą). Latin name of the Ems River.

Amistad Case (ä.mēs.täʀH'). Case of the U.S. against the Spanish vessel Amistad. This vessel, while coming from Africa in 1839 with a cargo of kidnaped Negroes, was seized by the Negroes near Cuba and taken to the coast of Connecticut, and there captured by a U.S. vessel. On a libel for salvage the U.S. Supreme Court held on appeal that the Negroes were free and not pirates.

Amis the Parson (ä'mis). [German, Der Pfaffe Amis.] Comic poem in Middle High German, composed by the German poet Der Stricker, probably c1230.

Amite City (ą.mēt'). Town in SE Louisiana, parish seat of Tangipahoa Parish: trading center for cotton, dairy products, and corn yielded by the farms in the vicinity. 2,804 (1950).

Amitu (am'i.tö). See Amytis.

Amityville (am'i.ti.vil). Village in SE New York, in Suffolk County, on Long Island: residential community. 6,164 (1950).

Amlet (am'lęt), Dick (or Richard). In Vanbrugh's comedy The Confederacy, a gamester, the son of a garrulous old woman who sells paint, powder, and toilet luxuries to ladies. He attempts with her assistance to pass himself off as a fine gentleman, but fails.

Amlote (äm.lot), Denis. See Amelotte, Denis.

Amlwch (äm'löċh). Urban district and seaport in N Wales, in Anglesey, ab. 24 mi. NW of Bangor, ab. 263 mi. NW of London by rail. During the 19th century, it was noted for its copper mines, once the largest in Europe, and the town was a copper-smelting center. 2,700 (1951).

Amman (äm'män, am'ąn). [Ancient names, Rabboth (or Rabbah or Rabbath) Ammon, Philadelphia.] Capital of Jordan (formerly Transjordan), located ab. 40 mi. NE of Jerusalem. It is linked by a main highway with Jerusalem and Jaffa, and served by the railroad line which runs N to Damascus. It is a trading center for the area, and exports wool. According to Biblical history it was the chief city of the Ammonites. Later it was built up by Ptolemy II Philadelphus, whence it received the name Philadelphia. It contains a number of Roman ruins, including a theater ab. 360 ft. in diameter, in part excavated from a hillside. 170,000 (est. 1950).

Amman (äm'än), Johann Konrad. b. at Schaffhausen, Switzerland, 1669; d. at Warmond, near Leiden, Holland, c1730. Swiss physician, one of the earliest to write on instruction for deaf-mutes, particularly in Surdus loquens (1692) and Dissertatio de loquela (1700).

Amman, Jost. b. at Zurich, Switzerland, June 13, 1539; d. at Nuremberg, Germany, May 17, 1591. Swiss engraver and painter who worked in Nuremberg after 1560; one of the "Little Masters." He was a prolific producer of paintings, drawings, and stained glass as well as of prints (for which he is best remembered). Chief among the latter are a series of copper engravings of kings of France (Frankfort, 1576), woodcuts for Sigmund Feierabend's Bible (1564–71), and 115 woodcuts in a series on the arts and trades (Frankfort, 1586).

Amman or Ammann (äm'än), Paul. b. at Breslau, Aug. 30, 1634; d. Feb. 4, 1691. German physician and botanist. He was appointed professor of botany at Leipzig in 1674, and of physiology in 1682, and was the author of Praxis Vulnerum lethalium (1690), Character naturalis Plantarum (1676), and others.

Ammanati (äm.mä.nä'tē), Bartolommeo. b. at Settignano, near Florence, Italy, June 18, 1511; d. there, April 22, 1592. Italian architect and sculptor who worked with Jacopo Sansovino, Giacomo da Vignola, and Giorgio Vasari; in 1557 he became an architect to Cosimo de' Medici. He designed the Ponte della Trinità at Florence and the court façade of the Pitti Palace at Florence.

Ammanford (am'ąn.fȯrd). Urban district and market town in S Wales, in Carmarthenshire, ab. 7 mi. S of Llandilo, ab. 213 mi. W of London. 6,578 (1951).

Ammen (am'ęn), Daniel. b. in Ohio, May 16, 1819; d. July 11, 1898. American naval officer in the Civil War; friend of Ulysses S. Grant. In 1836 he became a midshipman; he was subsequently in command of the gunboat Seneca at Port Royal in 1861, of the monitor Patapsco at Fort McAllister in 1863, and of the steam sloop Mohican at Fort Fisher in 1864–65. He was made captain (1866) and rear admiral (1878). Author of The Atlantic Coast (1883), The Old Navy and the New (1891), and others.

Ammen, Jacob. b. at Fincastle, Va., Jan. 7, 1807; d. at Lockland, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1894. American soldier and engineer, a general with the Union Army in the Civil War; brother of Daniel Ammen. He was graduated from West Point in 1831, resigned from the army in 1837, and became captain of volunteers on April 18, 1861. He took part in the West Virginia campaign under McClellan, was promoted to brigadier general of volunteers on July 16, 1862, and was in command of the district of east Tennessee from April 10, 1864, to Jan. 14, 1865, when he resigned. He was subsequently (1874) a member of a commission to study possible routes for the Panama Canal.

Ammendorf (äm'ęn.dȯrf). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Saxony, Prussia, situated on the White Elster River, ab. 3 mi. S of Halle: manufacturing community; chemical and dye works, and paper mills. The population is predominantly Protestant. 18,723 (1946).

Ammenemez (am.ę.nē'mēz). See under Amenemhet.

Ammer Lake (äm'ėr). [German, Ammersee (äm'ėr.zā).] Lake in Upper Bavaria, Germany, traversed by the Ammer River. It lies W of Würm Lake (or Starnbergersee). Length, ab. 10 mi.

Ammer River. [Also, Amper.] River in Upper Bavaria, Germany, which rises in the Alps, traverses Ammer Lake (Ammersee), and joins the Isar River ab. 30 mi. NE of Munich. It receives the outlet of Würm Lake (or Starnbergersee). Length, ab. 125 mi.

Ammers-Küller (äm'ėrs.kül'ėr), Mrs. Jo (Johanna) van. b. at Delft, the Netherlands, 1884—. Dutch novelist, playwright, and short-story writer, internationally active in the feminist movement. She first achieved international standing as an author with The Rebel Generation (1925; Eng. trans., 1928), which was widely translated and later dramatized in Dutch. Author also of Tantalus (1930, based on a visit to the U.S.), Jenny Heysten's Career (1930), a suffragette novel, No Surrender (1931), The House of Tavelinck (1938), and others.

Ammianus Marcellinus (am.i.ā'nus mär.sę.lī'nus). b. at Antioch, c330; d. c395. Greek soldier in the Roman army, and a historian of the Roman empire. His work, continuing that of Tacitus, is an account in Latin covering the period from the accession of Nerva (96) to the death of Valens (378), originally in 31 books of which 13 (for the period 96–352) have been lost. Though the language is often faulty and the background of the writer that of a professional soldier rather than a scholar, the observation is impartial and provides a valuable source on the dissolution of the Roman empire.

Ammirato (äm.mē.rä'tō), Scipione. b. at Lecce, Italy, 1531; d. 1601. Italian historian. Aided in his work by the de' Medici duke of Florence, Cosimo I; best known for Istorie Fiorentine (1600), a history of Florence and neighboring areas up to his time.

Ammon (am'ọn, ä'mọn). See also Amen.

Ammon (am'ọn). Eponymic ancestor of a people, the children of Ammon, or Ammonites, frequently mentioned in the Old Testament: according to the account in Genesis, the son of Lot by Ammon's younger daughter was Ben-Ami (Gen. xix. 38).

Ammon, Saint. [Also: Amon, Amun.] b. in Egypt, c285; d. 348. Christian saint. A friend of Saint Anthony, he was bishop of an Egyptian see and founder of a settlement of hermits in Nitria.

Ammon (äm'ōn), Christoph Friedrich von. b. at Bayreuth, Bavaria, Jan. 16, 1766; d. at Dresden, Saxony, May 21, 1850. German Protestant preacher and rationalist theologian, professor at Erlangen (1789–1804) and at Göttingen (1794).

Ammon, Friedrich August von. b. at Göttingen, Hanover, Sept. 10, 1799; d. May 18, 1861. German ophthalmologist; son of Christoph Friedrich von Ammon.

Ammonias (ạ.mō'ni.ạs). fl. late 5th century A.D. Architect who, according to an epigram in the Anthology, restored the Pharos of Alexandria in the time of the emperor Anastasius, about the end of the 5th century A.D. He is also credited with the construction of an aqueduct.

Ammonius (ạ.mō'ni.us). [Called Saccas or Saccophorus, meaning "Sack-bearer."] b. c175; d. 242. Alexandrian philosopher, a former porter. Possibly a Christian, he was a founder of Neoplatonism; according to some accounts, he attempted to reconcile the teachings of Plato and Aristotle. Plotinus, Longinus, and Origen were among his pupils.

Ammonius Hermiae (hėr'mi.ē). fl. 5th century A.D. Greek philosopher at Alexandria, author of commentaries on Plato and Ptolemy, now lost, and on Aristotle. He was the reputed author of a life of Aristotle, which was, in fact, probably the work of his pupil, John Philoponus.

Ammonoosuc (am.ọ.nō'suk). [Also, Lower Ammonoosuc.] River in New Hampshire, which rises near Mount Washington and joins the Connecticut River ab. 7 mi. N of Haverhill, N.H. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Ammons (am'ọnz), Elias Milton. b. in Macon County, N.C., July 28, 1860; d. May 29, 1925. American cattleman and governor (1913–14) of Colorado.

Amol (ä.mōl'). See Amul.

Amometus (am.ọ.mē'tus). Greek writer of uncertain date, author of a poetical description of a nation of "Attacori," supposedly dwelling beyond the Himalayan range, resembling the ancient account of the Hyperboreans.

Amon (ä'mọn, ā'-). See also Amen.

Amon (ā'mọn). In the Old Testament, a governor of Samaria under Ahab. Amos, vii.

Amon. fl. in the middle of the 7th century B.C. Son of Manasseh and king of Judah. He was assassinated through a court conspiracy, and was succeeded by his son Josiah.

Amon, Saint. See Saint Ammon.

Amöneburg (ä.mė'nę.bůrk). Small town in W central Germany, in the former province of Hesse-Nassau, Prussia, situated on the Ohm River, ab. 7 mi. E of Marburg. It was formerly a strong fortress.

Amontons (ä.môn.tôn), Guillaume. b. at Paris, Aug. 31, 1663; d. Oct. 11, 1705. French physicist. He was the inventor of a system of telegraphy which operated by means of manual signals between stations, set up in such a fashion that each one was within eyesight of the one immediately preceding and following it.

Amoor (ä.mör'). See Amur River.

Amore dei tre re (lä.mō'rā dā trā'rā'), L'. Opera in three acts, composed by Italo Montemezzi, with a libretto by Sem Benelli, first performed at La Scala, Milan, on April 10, 1913. The symbolic story centers around Fiora, captive princess of Archibaldo, king of Altura, and his son Manfredo. Fiora rejects Manfredo in favor of Avito, her own countryman.

Amoret (am'ọ.ret). Twin sister of Belphoebe in Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene. Her mother is the nymph Chrysogone.

Amoret. In John Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess, a shepherdess in love with, and loved by, Perigot, and enduring many trials with sweetness and constancy.

Amoretti (am.ọ.ret'i). Group of sonnets (1595) by Edmund Spenser. They are largely autobiographical, and give an account of his wooing of Elizabeth Boyle, who had come to Ireland with her brother and settled in County Cork, near Youghal, on the coast.

Amorgos (ạ.môr'gos; Greek, ä.môr.gôs'). Island in the Aegean Sea, one of the Cyclades, ab. 16 mi. SE of Naxos. It belongs to Greece, in the nomos (department) of Cyclades. Olives are an important crop. It was the birthplace of the Greek poet Simonides. Area, ab. 50 sq. mi.

Amorites (am'ọ.rīts). Name used in the Old Testament in general for the Canaanites as well as for a subdivision of the Canaanites. Biblical critics assert that in the set of documents known as J (Jahvist) all the pre-Israelitish inhabitants of Palestine are called Canaanites, while in the documents known as E (Elohist) (by others R = Redactor) they are called Amorites. This general use of the term "Amorite" finds further confirmation in a suggested reading of a geographical term in the cuneiform inscriptions, mat Amurri, country of the Amorites, which denominates in the inscriptions Phoenicia and Syria in general, particularly Palestine; it was previously read mat Aharri. Even in the restricted sense it is obvious that they were one of the chief races of Canaan. As early as the 13th century B.C., they seem to have been antagonists of the Hittites. They appear on the Egyptian monuments as Amaru; they lived E of the Jordan where Sihon and Og, their kings, were defeated by Moses. The land thus conquered became the territory of the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half of Manasseh. Those W of the Jordan were conquered by Joshua, and their territory was given to the tribe of Judah.

Amorous Bigotte (big'ọt), The. Comedy (1690) by Thomas Shadwell. Many of the incidents and characters of the play were conceived with the deliberate intent of pleasing the Whigs (in his political sympathies, Shadwell was a "true-blue" Whig), and this fact won the work considerable partisan popularity.

Amorous Complaint Made at Windsor, An. Poem attributed to Geoffrey Chaucer.

Amory (ā'mọ.ri). City in NE Mississippi, in Monroe County; shipping point for dairy products, cotton, grain, and timber. 4,990 (1950).

Amory, Blanche. In W. M. Thackeray's novel Pendennis, a pretty, worldly, frivolous, and selfish girl, whose real name is Betsy. She is the daughter of Lady Clavering.

Amory, Thomas. b. at Limerick, Ireland, in May, 1682; d. at Boston, June 20, 1728. American merchant. A successful trader (1706–19) between the Azores and Portugal, Holland, England, and America, he came to South Carolina to settle his father's estate. Having lost his promised wife, and been forced to engage in a lawsuit to acquire his property, he settled (1720) at Boston, where he developed extensive trading enterprises, a shipbuilding business, and a rum and turpentine distillery.

Amory, Thomas. b. c1691; d. Nov. 25, 1788. English writer, author of Memoirs Containing the Lives of Several Ladies of Great Britain (1755), Life of John Buncle, Esq. (1756–66), and others. Likened to Rabelais and Dickens, he included in his books an extraordinary combination of theology, amorous adventure, scenic description, and autobiography.

Amoryus and Cleopes (ạ.môr'yus; klē'ọ.pēz). Verse work (1448–49) by John Metham. A poem of 2,200 lines in rime royal, it deals with a variant of the Pyramus and Thisbe theme loosely associated with the story of Alexander the Great.

Amos (ā'mọs). fl. c750 B.C. Hebrew prophet, contemporary of Isaiah and Hosea, and native of Tekoa, near Bethlehem. Author of the Book of Amos, the third of the Minor Prophets in the Bible, exhorting people to righteousness and warning of the doom that would inevitably follow wickedness.

Amos. Town in W central Quebec, on the main line of the Canadian National Railway, ab. 55 mi. N of Val d'Or. 4,265 (1951).

Amos, Sheldon. b. c1835; d. near Alexandria, Egypt, Jan. 3, 1886. English jurist and publicist, professor of jurisprudence at University College, London (1869–79). He was author of Capital Punishment in England (1864), Codification in England and the State of New York (1867), Difference of Sex as a Topic of Jurisdiction and Legislation (1870), Policy of the Contagious Diseases Acts Tested (1870), A Systematic View of the Science of Jurisprudence (1872), Science of Politics (1883), and others.

Amos Barton (bär'tən). Short story (1857) by George Eliot. Originally published in Blackwood's it was one of her first works of fiction.

Amosis (ą.mō'sis). See Amasis.

Amos Judd (ā'məs jud). Novel by John Ames Mitchell, published in 1895.

Amour Médecin (lą.mör māt.saṅ), L'. Comedy by Molière, produced (1665) at Versailles. In this play the author ridicules pedantry and charlatanism in the medical profession, which he mistrusted.

Amoy (ą.moi'). [Also, Szeming.] Seaport in SE China, in the province of Fukien, situated on the island of Amoy opposite Formosa. It is a former treaty port, and has one of the best harbors in the country; tea is exported. It was captured by the British in 1841, and was opened to British commerce in 1842. One of its largest sources of wealth is money received from Chinese overseas, amounting to about 40 million Chinese dollars a year. 124,075 (est. 1947).

Amoymon (ą.moi'mon). See Amaimon.

Ampato (ăm.pä'tō). Mountain in the Cordillera Blanca of Peru. 21,681 ft.

Ampelius (am.pē'li.us), Lucius. fl. probably sometime before 100 B.C. Roman author. He is best known for a concise history entitled Liber Memorialis, which contains also a number of geographical and mythological entries. Although much of the material is not trustworthy, it includes the only known classical reference to the sculptures at Pergamum.

Amper (ăm'pėr). See Ammer River.

Ampère (äṅ.per), André Marie. b. at Polémieux, near Lyons, France, Jan. 22, 1775; d. at Marseilles, June 10, 1836. French physicist and mathematician, discoverer of the relationship between magnetism and electricity (Ampère's law), which is the basis of the science of electrodynamics; inventor of the astatic needle. The ampere, unit of electric-current flow, is named for him. He was a professor of mathematics at the École Polytechnique (1809) and the Collège de France (1824), at Paris. Author of Recueil d'observations électrodynamiques (1822), Théorie des phénomènes électrodynamiques (1830), Essai sur la philosophie des sciences, and others.

Ampère, Jean Jacques Antoine. b. at Lyons, France, Aug. 12, 1800; d. at Pau, France, March 27, 1864. French literary historian; son of André Marie Ampère. A professor at Marseilles and at the Collège de France at Paris, his lectures on Scandinavian and German epics were among the first of their kind in Europe. One of these was published (1830) as De l'histoire de la poésie; author also of La Grèce, Rome, et Dante (1848), Histoire romaine à Rome (1861–64), and others.

Ampersand Mountain (am'pėr.sand). Peak of the Adirondacks, in N New York, situated S of the Saranac Lakes. Elevation, ab. 3,365 ft.

Ampezzaner Alps (ăm.pe.tsä'nėr). Group of the Dolomite Alps on the borders of the S Austrian Tirol and Italy.

Ampezzo (ăm.pet'tsō). See also Cortina d'Ampezzo.

Ampezzo. Valley in NE Italy, near the Austrian Tirol, ab. 26 mi. SE of Bressanone. Its chief town is Cortina d'Ampezzo.

Ampfing (ämp'fing). Village in SE Germany, in Upper Bavaria, ab. 5 mi. W of Mühldorf.

Ampfing, Battle of. Victory gained at Ampfing by the Austrians over the French, on Dec. 1, 1800.

Amphiale (am.fī'ą.lē). See under Aegaleos.

Amphialus (am.fī'ą.lus). In Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, the valiant and virtuous son of the wicked Cecropea, and the lover of his cousin Philoclea.

Amphiaraus (am"fi.ą.rā'us). In Greek mythology, a seer and hero of Argos, who took part in the Argonautic expedition, the hunt of the Calydonian boar, and the expedition of the Seven against Thebes. He was saved from his enemies by Zeus, who ordered the earth to swallow him, and a sanctuary called the Amphiareion was erected on the supposed spot.

Amphiareion (am"fi.ą.rī'ọn). Sanctuary and oracle of Amphiaraus, near Oropus, in Boeotia, Greece. In Greek legend, Amphiaraus was one of the Seven who marched against Thebes, and was here swallowed up by the earth at the will of Zeus, to save him in his flight. The sanctuary occupies a narrow area on the bank of a torrent; it includes a temple and altar, a large portico, a long range of bases for votive statues, and a theater. All the existing ruins are of Hellenistic date. The oracle enjoyed great renown, and the deified seer had a high reputation for healing sickness. Excavations were made (1884 et seq.) here by the Archaeological Society of Athens.

Amphictyony (am.fik'ti.ọ.ni) or Amphictyonic League (am.fik.ti.on'ik). In Greek history, a league of peoples inhabiting neighboring territories or drawn together by a community of origin or interests, for mutual protection and the guardianship in common of a central sanctuary and its rites. There were several such confederations, but the name is specially appropriated to the most famous of them, that of Delphi. This was composed of 12 tribes, and its deputies met twice each year, alternately at Delphi and at Thermopylae. Its origin dates back to the beginnings of Greek history. It exercised paramount authority over the famous oracular sanctuary of the Pythian Apollo and over the surrounding region, and conducted the Pythian games; and it constituted, though in an imperfect way, a national congress of the many comparatively small and often opposed states into which Greece was divided. The 12 members of the Delphic Amphictyonic League were the Thessalians, the Boeotians, the Dorians, the Ionians, the Perrhabeans, the Magnetes, the Locrians, the Oeteans, the Phtyiots, the Malians, the Phocians, and the Dolopians.

Amphilochus (am.fil'ọ.kus). In Greek legend, a seer, son of Amphiaraus and brother of Alcmaeon; one of the Epigoni.

Amphion (am.fī'on, am'fi.ọn). In Greek mythology, a skillful musician; son of Zeus and Antiope, twin brother of Zethus, and husband of Niobe. The brothers slew Dirce, who had ill-treated their mother, by causing her to be dragged to death by a bull. They took possession of Thebes, and when the walls were building, the stones moved of their own accord to their places under the influence of Amphion's lyre.

Amphipolis (am.fip'ọ.lis). In ancient geography, a city in Macedonia, on the Strymon River, ab. 3 mi. from the Aegean Sea. Originally a Thracian town, it was colonized by Athens in c436 B.C., and was captured (424 B.C.) by Sparta. Near it the Spartans under Brasidas defeated (422 B.C.) the Athenians under Cleon. It later became a Macedonian and then a Roman possession.

Amphissa (am.fis'ą; Greek, ăm'fē.sä). [Also: Salona, Amfissa.] Town in C Greece, capital of the nomos (department) of Phocis, N of the Gulf of Corinth, situated at the foot of the W slope of Mount Parnassus ab. 51 mi. NW of Corinth: large olive plantations. It is the seat of a bishopric. In ancient times it was a Locrian city. 5,546 (1951).

Amphitheater. Unincorporated community in S Arizona, in Pima County, N of Tucson. 12,664 (1950).

Amphitrite (am.fi.trī'tē). In Greek mythology, the goddess of the sea; daughter of Nereus and wife of Poseidon.

Amphitrite. Asteroid (No. 29) discovered by A. Marth, at London, on March 1, 1854.

Amphitryon (am.fit'ri.ọn) or Amphitruo (-rö.ō). In Greek legend, husband of Alcmene and father of Iphicles. To secure Alcmene (who would not wed him until the death of her brothers had been avenged) he undertook, for his uncle Creon, to catch a ravaging fox, which by a decree of fate could not be captured, with the help of an Athenian dog which fate had decreed should catch every animal it might pursue. This conflict was resolved when both animals were turned into stone. He attacked the Taphians, but could not overcome them so long as the chief, Pterelaus, who was rendered immortal by one golden hair, continued to live. Comaetho, daughter of Pterelaus, cut off this hair for love of Amphitryon, and Pterelaus perished. The application, in later literature, of the name Amphitryon to a host is from that part of the story where Jupiter assumes the former's shape in order to visit Alcmene. He gives a feast and is interrupted by the real Amphitryon. This gives rise (in Molière's comedy) to a dispute which is settled by the phrase "Le véritable Amphitryon est l'Amphitryon où l'on dine" (translatable as, "he who gives the feast is the host").

Amphitryon. [Also, Amphitruo.] Play by Plautus. A comedy founded on the fable of Jupiter and Alcmene, it has been adapted or imitated by Molière, John Dryden, and many others. Its source is uncertain, but it is possibly from Archippus, a writer of the old comedy (415 B.C.).

Amphitryon (äⁿ.fē.trē.ôⁿ). Comedy by Molière, produced in 1668; a version of Plautus's play.

Amphitryon. Opera by Michel Jean Sedaine, produced in 1781.

Amphitryon. Comedy by François Guillaume Jean Stanislas Andrieux, produced in 1782.

Amphitryon 38 (French, äⁿ.fē.trē.ôⁿ träⁿt.wēt). Philosophical comedy (1929; Eng. trans., 1938) on the ancient theme, in French, by the French writer Jean Giraudoux (1889–1944). The figure in the title indicates the author's surmise that there have been 37 previous treatments.

Amphitryon, or The Two Socias (am.fit'ri.ən; sō'shaz). Comedy by John Dryden, performed in 1690. It is an altered version of Molière's play.

Ampin (äm'pēn). [Also: Anpei, Anping.] Town in SE China, on the SW coast of the island of Formosa, ab. 20 mi. N of Kaohsiung (Takao).

Amplepuis (äⁿ.plę.pwē). Town in E France, in the department of Rhône, situated on the railroad line from Paris to Lyons, ab. 29 mi. NW of Lyons: manufactures silk, cotton, and linen. 5,290 (1946).

Ampsancti (amp.sangk'tī), Vallis. See Amsancti.

Ampsivarii (amp.si.vā'ri.ī). [Also: Amsivarii, Ansibarii.] German tribe described by Tacitus as originally neighbors, in the region of the Ems River, of the Chauci who had driven them out. In the year 58 A.D. they appeared on the Rhine, whence they were dislodged by the Romans, and were thought to have been annihilated. They reappeared, however, in the 4th century in incursions into Roman territory. They were ultimately merged with the Franks.

Ampthill (amt'il). Urban district and market town in SE England, in Bedfordshire, ab. 42 mi. NW of London by rail. 2,873 (1951).

Ampthill, 2nd Baron. Title of Russell, Arthur Oliver Villiers.

Ampudia (äm.pö'ᵺyä), Pedro de. fl. in the middle of the 19th century. Mexican general, in command of the Mexican army on the Rio Grande at the beginning of the Mexican War (1846). As commander at Monterey he surrendered to General Taylor on Sept. 24, 1846.

Ampurdán (äm.pör.ᵺän'). Valley-plain in the province of Gerona, Spain, in the vicinity of Figueras.

Amraoti (um.rou'tē). [Also, Amrawati.] District of Madhya Pradesh, Union of India, ab. 80 mi. W of Nagpur: wheat and tobacco. 988,524 (1941).

Amraoti. City in Amraoti district, Union of India, ab. 85 mi. W of Nagpur: important trading center. 61,971 (1941).

Amraphel (am'ra.fel, am.rā'fęl). In the Old Testament, a king of Shinar (southern Babylonia) who, allied with Chedorlaomer of Elam and two other kings, marched, in the time of Abraham, against the five kings of the Vale of Siddim. He is tentatively identified by some with Hammurabi. Gen. xiv.

Amr ibn-al-As (äm'ėr ib''ęn.äl.äs'). [Also: Amru ben-el-Ass; sometimes called Amer or Amru.] d. 664 A.D. Arab general, conqueror and first Moslem governor of Egypt. A Koreish tribesman, he was early an opponent of Mohammed, but later (629) became his follower at Mecca. Sent by the caliph Abu-Bakr, Mohammed's successor, he participated (633) in the conquest of Syria; he also headed an expedition (639–42) to Egypt, sent by the caliph Omar I, taking Pelusium, Heliopolis, Babylon, and (by treaty with Cyrus) Alexandria. Replaced, under Omar and Othman, by another commander, he was recalled (645) to put down a revolt in Alexandria. He extended Moslem influence into Tripoli, and sided with Muawiyah in the war which followed Ali's seizure of the caliphate on the death of Othman. He served as Muawiyah's representative during the arbitration with Ali, and as his governor (658–64) after the reconquest of Egypt.

Amrit Kaur (äm'rēt kour'), Rajkumar. b. 1887— Indian social worker and feminist leader, member of the Indian cabinet (1947 et seq.). Secretary (1930) of the All-India Women's Conference, she served as its chairman (1931–33) and president (1938). She had the distinction of being the first woman to be a member (1942) of the advisory board of education to the Indian government. She was head (1950–51) of the World Health Organization.

Amritsar (um.rit'sar). [Also, Umritsir.] District of the division of Lahore, Punjab state, Union of India, NE of the city of Lahore: important wheat and sugar area. It is divided into the three subdistricts Amritsar, Ajnala, and Tarn Taran. Capital, Amritsar; area, ab. 1,600 sq. mi.; pop. 1,413,876 (1941).

Amritsar. [Also, Umritsir.] City in NW India, the capital of the Amritsar district, Punjab state, Union of India, ab. 30 mi. E of Lahore: one of the most important commercial and manufacturing cities in N India. Its carpets are famous all over the world, it has a large hide industry, and is a collecting and distributing center for much of the grain of the area. Founded by Ram Das in the 16th century, it is the religious center for the Sikhs, and contains the Golden Temple, a Sikh temple attended by 500 to 600 priests. 391,010 (1941).

Amritsar Massacre. See under Dyer, Reginald Edward Harry.

Amru-al-Kais (äm'rö.äl.kīs'). [Also, Imru-al-Qays.] fl. early 6th century A.D. Arab poet, one of the greatest included in the anthology known as the Muallaqat. According to legend, he devoted his life to avenging his murdered father, wandering in search of aid and spending a long period at the Byzantine court. He was given troops by the emperor but poisoned on his way back to Arabia for having seduced a Byzantine princess. Technical excellence and beauty of feeling made his work a model for later Arab poets, particularly in the field of erotic verse.

Amru ben-el-Ass (äm'rö ben.el.äs'). See Amr ibn-al-As.

Amrum (äm'rum). Island in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Schleswig-Holstein, British Zone, formerly in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, situated in the North Sea, W of the island of Föhr. It has several seaside resorts. Area, 8 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 3,000.

Amsancti (äm.sängk'tē). [Also, Vallis Amsancti (or Ampsancti).] Valley in the province of Avellino, SW Italy, E of Naples, noted for its sulfurous lake and cave.

Amsdorf (äms'dôrf), Nikolaus von. b. at Torgau, Germany, Dec. 3, 1483; d. at Eisenach, Germany, May 14, 1565. German Protestant reformer; friend of Luther, whom he accompanied to Leipzig (1519) and Worms (1521), and whom he aided in the translation of the Bible. He was instrumental in introducing the Reformation into Magdeburg (1524), Goslar (1528), and elsewhere; consecrated (1542) Bishop of Naumburg by Luther, he was driven (1546) from his see in the Schmalkaldic war. In the adiaphoristic controversy, he opposed Melanchthon.

Amshewitz (am'shę.wits), John Henry. b. at Ramsgate, England, Dec. 19, 1882; d. 1942. English painter and illustrator, noted for his portraits, mural decorations, etchings, and cartoons. He studied at the Royal Academy school, where he won the prize for mural decoration. He exhibited repeatedly at London, and also at Paris, Florence, New York, and Philadelphia, and in South Africa and the Straits Settlements. His paintings are in several royal collections and in museums at London, Cape Town, and other cities in South Africa. Among the books he illustrated are Everyman and Myths and Legends of Ancient Greece. His other works include historical panels in the Liverpool town hall and in the Royal Exchange at London.

Amsivarii (am.si.vā'ri.ī). See Ampsivarii.

Amsler (äms'lėr), Jakob. [Also, Amsler-Laffon (-läf'-ōn).] b. at Stalden, near Brugg, Switzerland, Nov. 16, 1823; d. at Schaffhausen, Switzerland, in January, 1912. Swiss mathematician and scientist who wrote on mechanical integration, magnetism, and thermodynamics. He took his doctorate at Schaffhausen in 1856 and taught there. From 1892 he served as corresponding member of the Paris Académie des Sciences. His works include Ueber die mechanische Bestimmung des Flacheninhaltes and Zur Theorie der Vertheilung des Magnetismus im weichen Eisen.

Amsler, Samuel. b. at Schniznach, Switzerland, Dec. 17, 1791; d. at Munich, May 18, 1849. Swiss engraver at Rome (1816 et seq.) and Munich (from 1829). An admirer of Raphael, he is best known for reproductions of such works of Raphael's as the Entombment of Christ.

Amsteg (äm'shtek). [Also, Amstäg.] Village in C Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, amid magnificent scenery, on the Reuss River: has a power station for the St. Gotthard railway.

Amstel (äm'stel). Small river in the NW part of the Netherlands, which flows through Amsterdam and empties into the Ij. Amsterdam was named for it (formerly Amsteldam).

Amstelland (äm'stel.länt). Formerly, the name given to the region, in the NW Netherlands, which lies near the Amstel River.

Amsterdam (am'stėr.dam). Small uninhabited island in the S Indian Ocean, halfway between Australia and Africa, below the N limit of drift ice. A volcanic island, almost 3,000 ft. high, named by Anton Van Diemen in 1633, it belongs to France.

Amsterdam. [Former name, Amsteldam (äm.stel-däm').] City in the W part of the Netherlands, in the province of North Holland, built on marshy ground at the junction of the Amstel River, the Ij (or Y), and the North Sea Canal, and traversed by numerous small waterways: the largest city and the commercial metropolis of the country. 832,935 (1949).

Commerce and Industry. It has a port serving seagoing as well as river navigation, with extensive quays, warehouse facilities, docks, and shipyards; it is connected with the Rhine River system through the Merwede Canal. The mainstay of Amsterdam's shipping activities is the trade with the East Indies and with the Americas, particularly in tobacco, coffee, tea, cocoa, rice, drugs, spices, and sugar, but also in grain, coal, timber, and petroleum. Among the industries, diamond cutting was predominant until the 20th century, when Antwerp and then Israel began to outrank Amsterdam; other industries include tobacco manufacture, sugar refineries, oil, soap, margarine, glass, and chemical factories, tanneries, distilleries, breweries, and shipyards. Amsterdam is of considerable importance as a banking place; the stock exchange is among the leading institutions of its kind in Europe; it is the seat of the Bank of the Netherlands and of numerous other banking and insurance institutions.

Cultural Institutions. Amsterdam is the cultural center of the Netherlands. It has a municipal university, a Calvinist university, and a People's University, a colonial institute, a zoölogical and a botanical garden, numerous vocational schools, literary societies, newspaper and periodical offices; it is the seat of the Royal Academy of the Sciences. There is a renowned conservatory of music; the performances of the Concertgebouw Orchestra are famous. Amsterdam is an international market for paintings and art objects, and has an academy of arts. It is a city of museums. The Rijks Museum contains the best existing collection of paintings and etchings of Netherlands masters (Rembrandt, Frans Hals, Jan Vermeer, Jan Steen, Jan van Goyen, Pieter de Hooch, Adriaen van Ostade, the Ruysdaals, and others) besides a collection of arts, crafts, and folklore objects. The municipal museum contains a collection of furniture and one of paintings, including works by Vincent van Gogh. The Joseph Fodor Museum contains French and Dutch pictures; the Willet Holthuysen Museum has exhibits of furniture and porcelain. There is an ethnological and a natural history museum. The university library, with more than 100,000 volumes and manuscripts, includes the Rosenthal collection of Jewish literature.

Architecture. The nucleus of the old city of Amsterdam, marking the city limits in the 14th century, lies between the innermost crescent canal (Gracht) and the harbor area on the Ij; the city limits of the 17th century are marked by the outermost crescent canal (Single); toward the outskirts are the newer quarters including model settlements and garden suburbs. The canals divide the old city into numerous islands; the houses are erected on piles because of the swampy ground. Many tree-bordered quays and old-fashioned houses, mostly of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, are preserved. The royal palace, built in the classical style by Jacob van Kampen in 1648–55, served originally as the town hall; the Nieuwe Kerk ("New Church," or Saint Catherine's Church), a Gothic building dating from 1408, contains the monument to Admiral Michel Adrianszoon de Ruyter. The Oude Kerk ("Old Church," or Saint Nicholas) has beautiful stained-glass windows. The North Church was built (1565–1621) by Hendryk de Keyser. The Great Synagogue of the Portuguese Jews dates from 1670. Various important buildings were added in the 19th and 20th centuries.

History. In the 13th century a small sea-fishing settlement, Amsterdam came under the rule of the counts of Holland in 1327; extensive privileges, including freedom from tolls, were granted by Count William IV in 1342. Walls were added in 1482. The city attained commercial importance first as a member of the Hanseatic League and then, during the period of the religious troubles, through the admission of refugees, such as Protestants from Antwerp and Brabant, and Jews from Portugal. Influenced, however, by its trading interests, Amsterdam did not join the other towns of the Netherlands in their revolt against Spain until 1578. The closing of the Schelde River estuary through the treaty of Westphalia in 1648 eliminated Antwerp as a rival; in 1602 the East India Company, in 1621 the West India Company, in 1609 the Bank of Amsterdam were founded; the Edict of Nantes (1681) brought French Huguenots to the city. In this period Amsterdam, thanks to the achievements of Dutch seapower and overseas enterprise, was the leading commercial city of Europe, a center of the arts and sciences, and a citadel of religious freedom. The painter Rembrandt lived here and the philosopher Spinoza was a native of Amsterdam. The city defended itself against William II of Nassau in 1650 and against Louis XIV in 1672 by opening the dikes. A decline set in during the 18th century; Amsterdam was occupied by the Prussians in 1787 and by the French in 1794. In 1810 it was incorporated into the French empire. The new prosperity started with the building of the North Sea Canal, connecting Amsterdam with Ijmuiden, in 1876 and the modernization of the harbor. The city suffered only slight damage during the five-day German attack in May, 1940. However, the harbor area was heavily damaged later in World War II; the Fokker aircraft works near Amsterdam were stripped of their machinery and equipment.

Amsterdam. City in E New York, in Montgomery County, on the Mohawk River, ab. 30 mi. NW of Albany: center for the manufacture of carpets, rugs, knitted goods, and brooms; also produces underwear, gloves, linseed oil, and pearl buttons. 32,240 (1950).

Amstetten (äm'shtet"ėn). Town in E Austria, in the province of Lower Austria, situated on the Ybbs River ab. 28 mi. SE of Linz: a station on the railroad from Linz to Vienna. Nearby is the Benedictine abbey of Seitenstetten, founded in 1112 and rebuilt (1718–47) in the baroque style. The library contains some 80,000 volumes, manuscripts, and incunabula. 11,341 (1951).

Amstutz (am'stuts), Noah Steiner. b. at Milton, in Wayne County, Ohio, Nov. 5, 1864 –. American research engineer and patent attorney who originated the first phototelegraphy system (1891) and the first automatic half-tone engraving machine. He was manager (1903–05) of the British Automatic Photographic Company at London, and was admitted (1903) to the bar of the Supreme Court. Author of Handbook of Photo Engraving (1907), technical serials, Physical Characteristics of Relief Engravings (1906–07), and other works.

Amucú (ä.mö.kö'), Lake. See Amuku, Lake.

Amu Darya (ä.mö' där'yą). [Arabic, Jihun, Jaihun, or Gihon; ancient name (still sometimes used), Oxus.] Principal river in Central Asia, in the U.S.S.R. It rises in the plateau of the E Pamirs, in the Tadzhik Soviet Socialist Republic; flows generally W, separating, in part of its course, Bukhara, in the U.S.S.R., from Afghanistan, flows then NW, and empties by a delta into the S part of the Aral Sea. It is generally thought to have emptied into the Caspian Sea in ancient times. At Chardzhou it is crossed by the Transcaspian Railway. Length, ab. 1,578 mi.; navigable by vessels for ab. 300 mi.

Amuku (ä.mö.kö′), Lake. [Also, Lake Amucú.] Small lake in S central British Guiana, connected with the Essequibo River and, through the Branco River, with the Amazon.

Amul (ä.mül′). [Also, Amol.] City in N Iran, in Mazanderan, situated on the Heraz River, ab. 70 mi. NE of Tehran; an important trading center. It was a flourishing city in the Middle Ages. Pop. ab. 10,000.

Amulree (ā′mul.rē), 1st Baron. [Title of William Warrender Mackenzie.] b. 1860; d. at Winterbourne, Wiltshire, England, May 5, 1942. British jurist and expert on industrial arbitration. He was chairman (1917–18) of a committee on production, a member (1918–19) of a committee of inquiry on women in industry, and joined (1930) the cabinet of Ramsay MacDonald as secretary of state for air. Coauthor of works on highway laws, licensing and education acts, and industrial arbitration.

Amun (am′un), Saint. See Saint Ammon.

Amun (ä′mön). See Amen.

Amunátegui (ä.mö.nä′tā.gē), Miguel Luis. b. Jan. 11, 1828; d. Jan. 22, 1888. Chilean historian. Coauthor of Memoria sobre la reconquista española (1850), Compendio de la historia política y eclesiástica de Chile (1856), Descubrimiento y conquista de Chile (1862), and Los precursores de la independencia de Chile (1872–73).

Amundsen (am′und.sen; Norwegian, ä′mun.sen), Roald. b. in Borge, Norway, July 16, 1872; d. 1928. Norwegian polar explorer. As commander of the Gjöa (1903–06), he navigated the Northwest Passage, and located the exact geographic position of the north magnetic pole. Having bought Fridtjof Nansen's Fram, he altered his plans for further Arctic exploration, and sailed (1910) from Norway for the Antarctic, reaching the South Pole on Dec. 14, 1911. He was ahead of Robert Falcon Scott by 34 days and is thus known as the discoverer of the South Pole. He negotiated (1918–20) the Northeast Passage in the Maud. With Lincoln Ellsworth and others, he undertook a polar exploration by air, using both planes and airships, and flew across the North Pole (1926) in the semi-rigid dirigible Norge, built by Umberto Nobile. On June 17, 1928, he set out from Bergen to rescue Nobile, who had crashed after crossing the pole in the Italia, and was never heard from again. Author of the two-volume North West Passage (1908), the two-volume South Pole (1912), of Our Polar Flight (1925) and First Crossing of the Polar Sea (1927), both with Lincoln Ellsworth, and others.

Amundsen Gulf. Arm of Beaufort Sea, in the Arctic Ocean, separating Victoria and Banks islands of the Canadian Arctic Archipelago from the NW North American mainland. It was named for Roald Amundsen, the Norwegian polar explorer, who traversed it in 1903.

Amur (ä.mör′). Former province in E Siberia, situated N of the Amur River, ceded by China to Russia in 1858; now incorporated in the Khabarovsk Krai (subdivision) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic.

Amurath (ä.mö.rät′). See Murad.

Amur River. [Also: Amoor; Chinese, Heilungkiang.] River in NE Asia, formed by the junction of the Shilka and Argun rivers. It flows generally SE then NE, and then E, and enters the Gulf of Tartary. In part of its course it forms the boundary between the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic and Manchuria. Its chief tributaries are, on the right, the Sungari and Ussuri; on the left, the Zeya, Bureya, Urmi, Gorin, and Amgun. Length, including the Argun, ab. 2,713 mi.; navigable for ab. 2,400 mi.

Amussat (ä.mü.sä), Jean Zuléma. b. at St. Maixent, Deux-Sèvres, France, Nov. 21, 1796; d. May 14, 1856. French surgeon and surgical writer; author of Torsion des artères (1829) and other works. He invented a probe used in lithotrity.

Amuyao (ä.mö.yä′ō). [Also, Anuyao.] Mountain in C Mountain province, Luzon, Philippine Islands. 8,865 ft.

Amvets (am′vets″). See American Veterans of World War II.

Amvrakia (äm.vrä.kē′ä), Gulf of. See Ambracian Gulf.

'Amwas (äm.wäs′). See under Emmaus, Palestine.

Amy (ā′mi), Ernest Valentine. b. at New York, 1892—. American radio engineer. He invented (independently and in collaboration with others) many devices used in the noise-reduction systems of radio networks. He was graduated as an electrical engineer (1917) from Columbia University, served in France with the American army during World War I, was associated (1922–28) with the Radio Corporation of America, and in 1928 became a consulting engineer at New York. He supervised (1922–23) the installation of the first two-way radio telephone, on the transatlantic liner America.

Amyas (am′i.ạs). In Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene, the captive lover of Aemilia, a squire of low degree.

Amyclae (ạ.mī′klē). In ancient geography, a town in Laconia, Greece, ab. 3 mi. S of Sparta, the legendary seat of Tyndareus. It long retained its Achaean population. According to a legend, the inhabitants of Amyclae had been so often alarmed by false reports of the hostile approach of the Spartans that all mention of the subject was forbidden; hence, when they did come, no one dared announce the fact, and the town was captured. "Amyclaen silence" thus became a proverb.

Amynta (ạ.min′tạ). Character in Thomas D'Urfé's romance Astrea.

Amyntas I (ạ.min′tạs). d. c498 B.C. King of Macedonia; son of Alcetas, and fifth in descent from Perdiccas, the founder of the dynasty. He presented earth and water, as a token of his submission, to the Persian commander Megabazus, whom Darius, on returning to Persia, had left at the head of 80,000 men in Europe.

Amyntas II. King of Macedonia (394–370 B.C.); nephew of Perdiccas II. He obtained the crown of Macedonia proper in 394 by the murder of Pausanias, son of the usurper Aëropus. He was driven from Macedonia by Argaeus, the son of Pausanias, supported by Bardylis, an Illyrian chief. He was subsequently restored by the Thessalians, with whom he had taken refuge.

Amyntas III. d. 336 B.C. King of Macedonia (360–359 B.C.); grandson of Amyntas II. He was an infant at the death of his father in 360 B.C., and was excluded (359 B.C.) from the throne by the regent, his uncle Philip of Macedon, at whose court he was brought up, and whose daughter he married. He was executed by Alexander the Great for a conspiracy against the king's life.

Amyntas, or The Impossible Dowry. Pastoral drama of the Italian type by Thomas Randolph, first printed in 1638, and performed before Charles I and Queen Henrietta at Whitehall, in London.

Amyot (ä.myō), Jacques. b. at Melun, France, Oct. 30, 1513; d. at Auxerre, France, Feb. 6, 1593. French prelate and classical scholar whose translations of ancient writers, especially Plutarch, had a great influence on later writers. Tutor to Charles IX and Henry III of France, he was also bishop of Auxerre (1570–93). His version of Plutarch's Lives, entitled Vies des hommes illustres de Plutarque (1559–65), as translated (1579) into English by Sir Thomas North, was the source on which Shakespeare drew for his Roman plays. He also produced Théagène et Chariclée (1547 et seq., after Heliodorus), Daphnis et Chloé (1559, after Longus), Oeuvres morales de Plutarque (1572, from Opera Moralia), and others.

Amyot, Jean Joseph Marie. See Amiot, Jean Joseph Marie.

Amyraut (ä.mē.rō), Moïse. [Also: Moïse Amyrault; Latinized, Moses Amyraldus.] b. in September, 1596; d. 1664. French Protestant theologian, professor (1633–64) at Saumur. He was charged with Arminianism, and although he was acquitted at the synods of Alençon (1637) and Charenton (1644), the Formula Consensus Helvetica (1657) was directed chiefly against him.

Amytis (am′i.tis). [Also, Amitu.] Median wife of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. It was for her that he is said to have built the famous "hanging gardens."

Anabaptists (an.ạ.bap′tists). Christian sect that holds baptism in infancy to be invalid, and requires adults who have received it to be baptized on joining their communion. The name is best known historically as applied to the followers of Thomas Münzer (a leader of the Peasants' War in Germany, who was killed in battle in 1525), and to those of John Matthias and John Bockold, or John of Leiden, who attempted to establish a socialistic kingdom of New Zion or Mount Zion at Münster in Westphalia, and were defeated in 1535, their leaders being killed and hung up in iron cages. The name has also been applied to bodies of very different character in other respects, usually in an approbrious sense, since believers in the sole validity of adult baptism refuse to regard it as rebaptism in the case of persons who have received the rite only in infancy. The Mennonite sect in the U.S. derives originally from an Anabaptist group.

Anabar (ă.nä.bär'). [Also, Anabara (-bä'rạ).] River in the N part of the U.S.S.R., in the Yakutsk Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, in Siberia; it flows into the Arctic Ocean ab. 250 mi. W of the Lena River. Length, ab. 561 mi.

Anabasis (ạ.nab'ạ.sis). Account by Xenophon, in seven books, of the campaign of the Persian prince Cyrus (the Younger) against his brother Artaxerxes II of Persia, and of the retreat (401–399) of the 10,000 Greeks who had fought under Cyrus, after his death at Cunaxa. Xenophon himself, a volunteer soldier, was one of those who led the 10,000 and, after a long and arduous march through Armenia and Georgia, brought them to the sea at Trebizond (now Trabzon).

Anabasis of Alexander. Important historical work by Arrian, in seven books, all of which, with the exception of a few pages, has survived. It begins with the accession of Alexander the Great, and describes his campaigns and victories.

Anacáona (ä.nä.kä'ō.nä). [Eng. trans., "Golden Flower."] d. at Santo Domingo (now Ciudad Trujillo, in the Dominican Republic), c1503. Indian woman; sister of Behechio and wife of Caonabo, caciques (tribal chiefs) of Haiti when it was discovered by Columbus (1492). After the capture and death of Caonabo, she counseled submission to the Spaniards, and herself received Bartholomew, brother of Christopher Columbus, with great hospitality in 1498. She succeeded her brother Behechio as ruler of his tribe, and friendly relations with the Spanish continued until 1503; in that year she entertained Ovando and his forces, but in the midst of a festival in their honor they attacked her village, massacred a great number of Indians, and carried her to the settlement of Santo Domingo, where she was hanged.

Anacapri (ä.nä.kä'prē). The W part of the island of Capri, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, S Italy

Anacharsis (an.ạ.kär'sis). fl. c600 B.C. Scythian prince brother of Saulius, king of Thrace, a contemporary of Solon. He visited Athens, where he obtained a great reputation for wisdom. On returning to Thrace he was slain by his brother. By some he was reckoned among the legendary seven great sages of ancient times.

Anacker (ä'näk.ėr), Heinrich. [Called the "Lyricist of the Brown Front."] b. at Aarau, Switzerland, 1901—. German poet, many of whose poems enjoyed the popularity of true folk songs with the German youth of the Nazi period. His numerous lyrical collections include Die Trommel (The Drum, 1931), Die Fanfare (The Fanfare, 1933), Der Aufbau (The Reconstruction, 1935), and Kämpfen und Singen (Fighting and Singing, 1937).

Anacletus (an.ạ.klē'tus), Saint. [Also: Cletus and (probably) Anencletus.] fl. 1st century A.D. Third Pope (76–88 A.D.), said to have been director, with Linus, of the Church during Saint Peter's lifetime. He is believed by some scholars not to have been identical with Anencletus or Cletus, although he is listed under these names in some sources.

Anacletus II. [Also: Anaclete (an'ạ.klēt); original name, Pietro Pierleone or Pierleoni.] d. 1138. Antipope from 1130 to 1138, in opposition to Innocent II. His popularity in Rome caused Innocent's flight to France and Pisa, but the influence of Saint Bernard healed the schism after Anacletus's death.

Anaconda (an.ạ.kon'dạ). City in W Montana, county seat of Deer Lodge County, ab. 23 mi. W of Butte. It is a major copper-smelting center. 11,254 (1950).

Anacortes (an.ạ.kôr'tēz). City in NW Washington, in Skagit County, on Fidalgo Island: fishing and lumbering center. 6,919 (1950).

Anacostia (an.ạ.kos'ti.ạ). Small river rising in C Maryland and flowing generally S into the Potomac River at Washington, D.C. It has given its name to a section of Washington that lies on its banks, and also to a large U.S. naval air base situated near the point of its junction with the Potomac.

Anacreon (ạ.nak'rē.ọn). b. at Teos, in Asia Minor, c563 B.C.; d. there, c478 B.C. Greek lyric poet, whose work concerns itself chiefly with love and wine. He was widely imitated in the Alexandrian period, and later, in a form of verse called, from him, Anacreontics. He is supposed to have been driven from Teos by the invasion (545) of Cyrus the Great, to have fought briefly in the resisting army, and to have been tutor to Polycrates of Samos, at whose court he became a favorite. He was called to Athens on Polycrates' death by Hipparchus, the patron of Simonides and other literary figures; he probably returned to Teos after Hipparchus was assassinated (514). Pliny's account, probably mythical, of his death by choking on a grape-seed, gives the key to his reputation as a celebrator of the gay and leisurely life, though various writers attest to his sobriety. Although only fragments of his work are now extant, imitations, from the pseudocollection by Stephens (1554) to Thomas Moore (1800), demonstrate the popularity of his short, facile lyrics.

Anacreon (ä.nä.krā.ôn). Ballet-opera in two acts, by Cherubini, produced at Paris on Oct. 4, 1803.

Anadarko (an.ạ.där'kō). See also Nadaaku.

Anadarko. City in W Oklahoma, W of Chickasha, county seat of Caddo County, in a petroleum-producing area. Cotton, wheat, alfalfa, corn, and watermelons are produced nearby and marketed here; there are facilities for processing cotton and cottonseed. It was established in 1901, and named for an Indian tribe. 6,184 (1950).

Anadolu (ä.nä.dō.lö') or Anadoli (-li'). Turkish names of Anatolia.

Anadyomene (an''ạ.dī.om'ẹ.nē). A surname of Aphrodite, in allusion to her origin from the sea.

Anadyr or Anadir (ä.nä.dir'). River in the NE part of the U.S.S.R., in the Khabarovsk Krai (subdivision) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, Siberia; it flows into the Gulf of Anadyr. Length, ab. 694 mi.

Anadyr or Anadir, Gulf of. Arm of the Bering Sea, E of Siberia, in the NE corner of the U.S.S.R.

Anafi (ä.nä'fē). See Anaphi.

Anagni (ä.nä'nyē). [Ancient name, Anagnia (ạ.nag'-ni.ạ).] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Frosinone, ab. 36 mi. SE of Rome. In ancient times the capital of the Hernicians, it owes its continued historical importance to its location high above the Sacco River, dominating the line of communication between Rome and Naples. In spite of frequent devastations by occupying armies, it flourished during the Middle Ages as the residence of a number of popes. It has grandiose architectural works, such as the 11th-century cathedral, the palazzo communale (town hall), built in the 13th century, and the palace of Pope Boniface VIII. Only minor damage was suffered by buildings of tourist interest in World War II. Pop. of commune, 12,396 (1936); of town, 6,590 (1936).

Anagnos (ạ.nag'nos), Michael. [Original name, Michael Anagnostópoulos.] b. at Papingo, Greece, Nov. 7, 1837; d. June 29, 1906. American educator and Greek patriot. He arrived in the U.S. as a protégé of Dr. Samuel G. Howe, whose daughter he later married; he succeeded Howe as head of the Perkins Institution in 1876. His outstanding ability as a fund raiser manifested itself at once, culminating in a one-million-dollar endowment brought together to support a kindergarten for the blind. He retained throughout his life a burning desire for Greek independence and social betterment, and left a will providing that his entire estate should be used for the establishment of schools in Greece.

Anaheim (an'ạ.hīm). City in S California, in Orange County, SE of Los Angeles, in a citrus-growing region: canneries and other industries. It was founded as an experiment in communal living by German settlers in 1857. Pop. 14,556 (1950).

Anaides (ạ.nā'dēz). In Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, an impudent ruffian. Thomas Dekker imagined that in this character he was caricatured. Others, however, think John Marston was intended.

Anaitis (ạ.nī'tis). [Also: Anait (ä.nīt'), 'Anat; Egyptian, Anta.] Syrian goddess whose worship was introduced into Egypt in the 15th century B.C. She was a war goddess, and is usually depicted with helmet, shield, and battle-ax. The Greeks identified her with Athena.

Anak (ā′nak). In the Old Testament, the progenitor of a tribe or race of giants, the Anakim, or a collective name for this tribe itself. Num. xiii. 33.

Anakim (an′a.kim). In the Old Testament, the sons of Anak, a race of giants dwelling in S Palestine. See Anak.

Anak Krakatoa (an′ak krak.ạ.tō′ạ). See under Krakatoa.

Analysis of the Human Mind. Prose work (1829) by James Mill. It was one of the earliest works in English to concern itself explicitly with something approaching what is now called psychology (the word, in its modern sense, was virtually never used in Mill's day, but his theory of "associationism" was nevertheless a pioneering effort in an area of science then still almost unknown).

Anam (a.nam′). See Annam.

Anamabo (ä.nä.mä′bō). See Anomabu.

Anambas Islands (ä.näm′bäs). [Dutch, Anambas Eilanden.] Group of small islands E of the Malay Peninsula and W of Borneo, in the Republic of Indonesia.

Anammelech (ạ.nam′ẹ.lek). Divinity of the Babylonian Sepharvites, whose worship they continued to practice in Samaria. 2 Kings, xvii. 31.

Anamosa (an.ạ.mō′sạ). [Former names: Dartmouth, Lexington.] City in E Iowa, county seat of Jones County. It is the seat of a state reformatory. 3,910 (1950).

Anand (ä′nạnd), Mulk Raj. b. 1905—. Indian novelist and critic, one of the outstanding novelists of India writing in English. Author of The Barbers Trade Union and Other Stories, Untouchable, Coolie, and The Sword and the Sickle.

Ananda (ä′nạn.dạ). fl. 5th century B.C. Cousin and favorite disciple of Buddha. He is believed to have persuaded Buddha to accept women as nuns, and is important in Buddhist religious literature of the early period, some of which he is thought to have written himself.

Ananev (ä.nä′nyif). [Also: Ananiev, Ananieff.] Town in the W part of the U.S.S.R., in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic: center for a grain-producing region. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Anang (ä.näng′). Subgroup of the Semi-Bantu-speaking Ibibio peoples of W Africa, inhabiting SE Nigeria E of Obete. Their population is estimated at more than 250,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926). With the Anang proper, who number ab. 150,000, are included eight related subgroups, the Abak, Afaha, Ibechitt, Ika, Inen, Okana, Okun, and Ukpum.

Ananias (an.ạ.nī′ạs). In the New Testament: 1. An early Christian of Jerusalem who with his wife Sapphira was struck dead for lying. (Acts v.) His name has since become a generally used term for one who lies. 2. Early Damascene Christian and friend of Paul. 3. Jewish high priest (48–59 A.D.) and friend of the Romans before whom Paul was tried.

Ananias. In Ben Jonson's comedy The Alchemist, a hypocritical Puritan deacon of Amsterdam.

Ananias Club. Term in U.S. history applied to a group which had no formal organization or membership save as President Theodore Roosevelt exercised his personal prerogative of "electing" to its ranks those newspaper reporters whom he accused of having diverged from the truth in dispatches covering political developments. The "club" was in existence before the fairly recent regulation which prohibits White House newspapermen from quoting directly informal remarks made by the president. Thus, Roosevelt used nominations to the body as a convenient instrument for repudiating such published quotations of presidential observations as had become politically embarrassing. The record demonstrates that Roosevelt's motives in naming journalists as members of the Ananias Club (a term whose Biblical associations with Ananias, struck dead for lying, made its meaning clear) often were flexible enough to indicate a not entirely unbiased interest on his part.

Ananino (ä.nä′nyi.nọ). Burial ground situated on the left bank of the Toima River, in the Viatka district of C Russia. First excavated in the middle of the 19th century, it gave its name to the culture of the people inhabiting this region in the period 800–400 B.C. No iron objects were found in the Kotlov burial ground, which is the oldest remains of this culture; at the Ananino itself, which belongs to a later date, some iron objects were found, together with copper and bronze. The dead were buried in pits or on a level ground, with mounds built over them; full and partial burials were practiced, with an occasional cremation. A close tie with the Altai cultures of Siberia may be seen in the implements found, especially in hammers, knives, and metal mirrors. It is therefore possible that the Scythian daggers, arrows, and animal-style of some ornaments was influenced not only by the Scythians, but by the Altai cultures as well. Flame-shaped spears, with an oblong core and side slashes, indicate contact with C Asia, and some objects at Ananino resemble the later, local, definitely Finnish cultures. There is a possibility that the people of Ananino were of Finnish origin. The presence of stone arrows in some graves shows that the stone industry had not, as yet, been completely abandoned. Pottery was fairly primitive, consisting mostly of small round-bottom pots, with the horizontal "rope" ornament along the upper edge. Forged iron and cast copper and bronze were also found, sometimes in cases made of birch bark.

Anansi (ạ.nan′si). See under Tar Baby.

Anantnag (ä.nänt.näg′). [Former name, Islamabad.] Town in S central Asia, in Kashmir, situated on the Jhelum River, ab. 35 mi. SE of Srinagar: trading center.

Ananus (an′ạ.nus). See also Annas.

Ananus. High priest of the Jews; son of Seth. He was appointed by Cyrenius and removed by Valerian, and is apparently the Annas mentioned in the gospels.

Ananus. High priest of the Jews; grandson of Seth. He held office for three months in 62 A.D., was removed by King Agrippa at the demand of the Pharisees because of his attempt to revive Sadduceeism, and was put to death in 67 A.D. by the Zealots.

Anapa (ä.nä′pạ). Seaport and naval station in the U.S.S.R., on the Black Sea, in the Krasnodar Territory of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 60 mi. SE of Kerch. It is also a bathing resort. Pop. ab. 13,000.

Anaphi (ä.nä′fē). [Also: Anafi, Anaphe.] Island in the SE Cyclades, in the nomos (department) of Cyclades, Greece, situated ab. 40 mi. SE of Naxos. Length, ab. 7 mi.

Anaquito (ä.nä.kē′tō). Plain about a mile from Quito, Ecuador, where the army of Gonzalo Pizarro defeated that of the viceroy Vasco Nuñez Vela, on Jan. 18, 1546.

Anarchiad (an.är′ki.ad), The. Twelve satirical papers written in mock-heroic verse by the "Connecticut Wits" (David Humphreys, Lemuel Hopkins, Joel Barlow, Timothy Dwight, and John Trumbull) and published (1786–87) in The Connecticut Magazine and the New Haven Gazette. The writings opposed democratic and agrarian tendencies, advocated the establishment of a monetary system on Hamiltonian lines, and supported national allegiance as against state loyalties.

Anarkali (ä.när′kạ.li). Suburb of Lahore, in the West Punjab, Pakistan.

Anarutha the Great (ä.nä.rō′thä). fl. 11th century. King of Pagan, in C Burma. He extended his realm from the Irrawaddy River to the Menam valley of what is modern Thailand and, by defeating the remnant of Khmer power, made possible the infiltration of Thai warrior tribes from the north, and the creation of a powerful Thai state.

Anasazi (ä.nä.sä′zē). One of the major patterns of culture in the American Southwest, including the Basket Maker and Pueblo cultures, which was spread over the plateau area from about the time of Christ on, in what is now NE Arizona, NW New Mexico, SE Utah, and SW Colorado. The name is taken from the Navaho word meaning "ancient ones." In contrast to Hohokam, Mogollon, and Patayan, the other major patterns, the Anasazi is characterized by pit dwellings and masonry pueblos, kivas, inhumation, black-on-white painted pottery, and dry farming.

Añasco (ä.nyäs′kō), Pedro de. b. at Lima, Peru, 1550; d. at Tucumán, in what is now Argentina, April 12, 1605. Peruvian Jesuit. He left several works on the language of the Indians among whom he had worked.

Anastasia (an.ạs.tā′zhạ), Saint. Titular saint of the ancient church below the Palatine Hill at Rome. She is commemorated in the canon of the Roman mass. The "Acts" of her martyrdom are spurious. Her cult first appeared in Sirmium, in Pannonia, where she was martyred.

Anastasia. [Called "the Elder."] Figure in the early church. She is supposed to have been a noble Roman virgin, martyred during the middle of the 3rd century A.D. under Valerian. However, aside from legend, little is known about her, and modern scholars tend to consider even her existence doubtful.

Anastasian Law (an.ạs.tā'zhạn). Law of the emperor Anastasius I (506), directed against usurers.

Anastasius (an.ạs.tā'zhus). [Surnamed Bibliothecarius.] d. 886. Librarian of the Vatican and abbot of Santa Maria Trans-Tiberim at Rome. He was sent to Constantinople to arrange a marriage between the daughter of Louis II and a son of Basil of Macedonia in 869, and while there assisted, by his knowledge of Greek, the papal ambassador in attendance at the eighth ecumenical council. His fame rests upon his numerous translations from the Greek and his supposed connection with the Liber Pontificalis.

Anastasius. Antipope from August to September, 855, in opposition to Benedict III, while the latter was awaiting confirmation by the emperors Lothaire and Louis II.

Anastasius I, Saint. Pope from 399 to 401, successor to Saint Siricius; friend of Augustine, Jerome, and Paulinus. He is remembered for his condemnation of the Donatist heresy and of the errors of Origen.

Anastasius II. Pope from 496 to 498. He sought to end the schism between the sees of Constantinople and Rome, but his manner of doing so met with disapproval among Romans, and he is among those listed as having been consigned to Hell in the works of Dante. He has been supposed, probably erroneously, to have been the author of a letter congratulating Clovis, king of the Franks, on his conversion to Christianity.

Anastasius III. Pope from 911 to 913, successor to Sergius III. He was active in establishing the ecclesiastical division of Germany.

Anastasius IV. [Original name, Conrad.] b. at Rome; d. there, 1154. Pope from 1153 to 1154, successor to Eugenius III. His occupancy of the papal chair was disturbed by the activities of the reformer Arnold of Brescia. He achieved a settlement of long disputes over appointments to the sees of York and Magdeburg, making terms on the latter with Emperor Frederick I (Frederick Barbarossa) of the Holy Roman Empire.

Anastasius I. [Called Anastasius I Dicorus.] b. at Dyrrachium (now Durrës, Albania), c430; d. 518. Byzantine emperor (491–518). He was raised to the throne by an intrigue with the empress Ariadne whom he married after the death of the emperor Zeno. As a Eutychian he opposed the orthodox who rose in arms under Vitalianus but were bought off by the faithless promise of a general council.

Anastasius II. [Original name, Artemius.] Byzantine emperor (713–716). He was deposed by the fleet which he had sent to the coast of Syria to destroy the naval stores of the Arabs, but which was repulsed, mutinied under its commander, John, and proclaimed Theodosius III emperor. He was put to death in 721 (or 719) by Leo III for conspiring against the throne.

'Anat (ā.nät'). See Anaitis.

'Anata (ā.nä'tä). See under Anathoth.

Anathoth (an'ạ.thoth). In Biblical geography, a city of Benjamin in Palestine, the birthplace of Jeremiah. The traditional site is Kenyet-el-'Enat, ab. 10 mi. NW of Jerusalem, but the true site is probably 'Anata, ab. 3 mi. NE of that city.

Anatolia (an.ạ.tō'li.ạ). [Turkish, Anadolu, formerly also Anadoli; Eng. trans., "Eastern Land."] Large region in Asiatic Turkey, nearly identical with Asia Minor. There was a theme (province) of Anatolia in the Byzantine empire situated in the interior of Asia Minor. An area of little rainfall and poor soil, its chief means of livelihood is stock raising, with sheep and goats most important. The chief exports are mohair and Angora wool; others are opium, wheat, and mastic and tragacanth gums. The making of rugs is an important occupation.

Anatomy Lesson, The. See Lesson in Anatomy, The.

Anatomy of Melancholy, The. Famous work by Robert Burton (1577–1640), published in 1621 under the pseudonym "Democritus Junior," and frequently republished and abridged. The sixth edition is the last which contains changes by the author; it was published, shortly after his death, from an annotated copy. The work is the result of many years of humorous study of men and of books, and abounds in quotations from authors of all ages and countries. It is divided into three parts which treat (1) of the causes and symptoms of melancholy, (2) of its cure, and (3) of erotic and religious melancholy.

Anau (ä.nou'). Archaeological site in what is now the Turkmen Soviet Socialist Republic of the U.S.S.R. It shows a transition from late Stone Age culture with the beginnings of agriculture to an early Bronze Age civilization. Its date is uncertain, possibly 5500 to 2500 B.C.

Anaxagoras (an.aks.ag'ō.rạs). b. at Clazomenae, in Ionia, c500 B.C.; d. at Lampsacus, in Mysia, c428 B.C. Greek philosopher, teacher at Athens (c464–c434) of Pericles, Thucydides, Euripides, and perhaps Socrates. His theory of the universe, based on astronomical observation and the teachings of Anaximander, led to a charge of impiety that forced him, in spite of Pericles' defense, into exile. He introduced a dualistic explanation of the universe as deriving from a chaotic and inextricable mass in which infinitely small particles (or "seeds"), existing in larger or smaller numbers, constitute the distinction between different kinds of matter; on these the controlling function of mind (nous) is exercised to bring order via motion. The first half of this concept (which is fundamental to the atomic theory) and his description of the sun as a mass of molten metal, of heavenly bodies as rocks torn from earth, and of men and animals as being born from moist clay, were abhorrent to the pantheism of his time; the second half, through Aristotle and Averroës, became an absorbing topic of medieval speculation.

Anaxarchus (an.aks.är'kus). fl. c350 B.C. Greek philosopher of Abdera, a disciple of Democritus. He attended Alexander in his Asiatic campaigns, and is said to have consoled the king after the murder of Cleitus by maintaining that a king can do no wrong.

Anaxilaus (ạ.nak.si.lā'us) or Anaxilas (-nak'si.lạs). d. 476 B.C. Tyrant of Rhegium (c494 B.C. et seq.).

Anaxilaus. fl. 1st century B.C. Pythagorean philosopher and physician, banished as a magician from Italy by Augustus in 28 B.C.

Anaximander (ạ.nak.si.man'dėr). b. at Miletus, c611 B.C.; d. c547 B.C. Greek philosopher (the second of the Ionian or Milesian school) and mathematician; friend and pupil of Thales. He taught that the principle of all things is a substance of indeterminate quality and limitless quantity, "immortal and imperishable," out of which all things arise and to which all return; eternal motion creates opposites, conflict between which brings about order and destroys it, in a continuing cycle. This substance, according to some accounts, he regarded as having a nature intermediate between that of water and air. He was probably the author of the first philosophical treatise in Greek prose. He is said to have discovered obliquity of the ecliptic, to have introduced the sundial and gnomon to Greece, and to have made the first map. His teachings had, after his death, some considerable influence on the theories of Anaxagoras.

Anaximenes of Lampsacus (an.ak.sim'ē.nēz; lamp'sạ.kus). b. at Lampsacus in Mysia; fl. 4th century B.C. Greek rhetorician, historian, and a companion of Alexander the Great on his Persian campaigns. Author of histories of Greece, and biographies of Philip of Macedon and of Alexander, the latter in epic form, he is also the probable author of a treatise on rhetoric, Rhetorica ad Alexandrum, the only existing work on the subject prior to Aristotle (and formerly attributed to him).

Anaximenes of Miletus (mī.lē'tus, mi-). b. at Miletus, in Asia Minor; fl. 6th century B.C. Greek philosopher, the third of the Ionian or Milesian school, a contemporary and friend of Thales and Anaximander, usually reckoned a disciple of the latter. He regarded air as the principle of all things, various kinds of matter being created by its expansion with heat and contraction with cold.

Anaya (ä.nä'yä), Pedro Maria. b. at Huichapan, Mexico, 1795; d. at Mexico City, March 21, 1854. Mexican general in the war with the U.S. He entered the Spanish army as a cadet in 1811, joined Augustín de Iturbide's independence movement in 1821, and was a captain in Nicaragua in 1823. In 1833 he became brigadier general. Adhering to the federalist party in Mexico, he was forced to leave the country. He invaded Tabasco in November, 1840, with federalist forces from Texas and Yucatán, but was defeated at Comalcalco on May 15, 1841, and fled to Yucatán. Under José Joaquín Herrera in 1845 he was minister of war. He adhered to Antonio Lopéz de Santa Anna, and while the latter was resisting the advance of Winfield Scott, was acting president (April 2–May 20, 1847) of Mexico. He commanded the Mexican force of 800 men which defended the convent of Churubusco, and surrendered (Aug. 20, 1847) only after his ammunition was exhausted. In 1852 he was secretary of war under Mariano Arista, and on Santa Anna's restoration (1853) was made postmaster general, a position which he held until his death.

An Cabhán (ą koun′). Irish name of County Cavan.

Ancaeus (an.sē′us). In Greek classical legend, a son of Poseidon. He was told by a seer that he would not live to enjoy the wine from a vineyard which he had planted. He lived, however, to have wine from his own grapes, and, in scorn of the prophet, raised a cup of it to his mouth. The seer replied, "There is many a slip between the cup and the lip," and at the same instant a tumult arose over a wild boar in the vineyard. Ancaeus put down the cup, and was killed in an attempt to destroy the animal.

Ancaeus. In Greek classical legend, son of the Arcadian Lycurgus, and one of the Argonauts. He was killed in the Calydonian boar hunt.

Ancash (äng.kāsh′). [Former spelling, Ancachs.] Department in W Peru, N of Lima, corresponding to the colonial intendencia of Huailas, or Huaylas. Capital, Huarás; area, 14,705 sq. mi.; pop. 540,845 (est. 1950).

Ancelot (äⁿs.lō), Jacques Arsène François Polycarpe. b. at Le Havre, France, Feb. 9, 1794; d. at Paris, Sept. 7, 1854. French dramatist. His works include Louis IX (1819), Fieque (1824), Le maire du palais (1825), Marie de Brabant (1825), Olga (1828), Elizabeth d'Angleterre (1829), Epîtres familières, and others.

Ancelot, Marguerite Louise Virginie. [Maiden name, Chardon.] b. at Dijon, France, March 15, 1792; d. at Paris, March 21, 1875. French dramatist and novelist; wife of Jacques Arsène F. P. Ancelot (1794–1854). Her Théâtre complet (1848) contains 20 plays.

Ancenis (äⁿ.sę.nē). Town in W France, in the department of Loire-Inférieure, situated on the Loire River, ab. 17 mi. NE of Nantes. It is a river port. A suspension bridge spans the Loire at this point. The town has cattle markets. 4,851 (1946).

Anchieta (uⁿ.shyā′tą), José de. [Called the "Apostle of Brazil."] b. at Tenerife, in the Canary Islands, 1533 or 1534; d. at Reritigbá (now Anchieta), Brazil, June 9, 1597. Jesuit missionary educated in Portugal at the University of Coimbra and sent (1553) to Brazil, where he dedicated his life to the conversion and education of the natives. Besides the first grammar of one of the native languages (1595), he wrote plays, letters, and poems which are generally counted among the beginnings of Brazilian literature.

Anchises (an.kī′sēz, ang-). In Greek legend, a prince of the royal house of Troy, father (by Aphrodite) of Aeneas.

Anchorage (ang′kor.āj). City in S Alaska, in the Third Judicial Division, at the head of Cook Inlet: supply center for the Willow Creek gold district, and for a coal-mining, fishing, canning, and fur-farming area, the Matanuska Valley, and surrounding military bases. It was founded in 1914, and has grown in recent years to become the largest city in Alaska. 3,495 (1939), 11,254 (1950).

Ancient Mariner, The Rime of the. Poem by Samuel Taylor Coleridge, published in the Lyrical Ballads in 1798 as his principal contribution to the book. The narrative of the poem is told for the most part by the Ancient Mariner himself, as he stops a man bound for a wedding. The mariner is doomed by a curse to go through the world teaching universal love through the recounting of his own awful deed, which consisted in the heartless killing of a storm-tossed albatross.

Ancient Music, Academy of. See Academy of Ancient Music.

Ancillon (äⁿ.sē.yôⁿ), Charles. b. at Metz, France, July 28, 1659; d. at Berlin, July 5, 1715. French historian and judge. He was a historian for the Protestant colony at Brandenburg, where he settled after being driven from France by the revocation (1685) of the Edict of Nantes. A historian to the elector of Brandenburg, he was associated with Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibnitz in the founding of the Berlin Academy. Author of a history (1690) of the Brandenburg refugees.

Ancillon, David. b. at Metz, France, March 17, 1617; d. at Berlin, Sept. 3, 1692. French Protestant divine, a refugee in Germany after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685). He was the father of Charles Ancillon.

Ancillon, Jean Pierre Frédéric. [German, Johann Peter Friedrich Ancillon.] b. at Berlin, April 30, 1767; d. April 19, 1837. Prussian minister of foreign affairs (1832 et seq.) to Frederick William IV, whose tutor he had been, and over whom he exerted a strong influence. Great-grandson of Charles Ancillon, French Protestant refugee, he was pastor to the French colony at Berlin and author of a psychological study of European history; he was also a member (1814) of the ministry of state. He used his influence to support Metternich's policy, embodied in the Vienna Final Act (1834), of solidifying Prussian class-distinctions as the basis of the state.

Anckarström (äng′kär.strėm), Johan Jakob. [Also, Ankarström.] b. May 11, 1762; executed at Stockholm, April 27, 1792. Swedish assassin of Gustavus III. A former army officer, who had been tried for sedition, he joined the conspiracy to murder the king in 1792.

Anckarswärd (äng′kārs.verd), Count Karl Henrik. b. April 22, 1782; d. at Stockholm, Jan. 25, 1865. Swedish soldier and statesman. He joined (1809) the revolutionary party, but being opposed to the policy of Jean Baptiste Jules Bernadotte, was retired (1813) from the army, in which he held the post of colonel. In 1817 he became a member of the Riksdag (Swedish parliament), where as leader of the opposition he distinguished himself by the bitterness of his attacks on the government.

Anclam (äng′klām). See Anklam.

An Clár (ą klôr). Irish name of County Clare.

An Cób (ą kōv) or An Cóf (ą kōf). See Cóbh.

Ancohuma (äng.kō.ō′mā). [Full Spanish name, Nevado de Ancohuma.] Mountain in Bolivia NNW of La Paz. It is one of the peaks of the Nevado de Sorata. 21,490 ft.

Ancon (ang′kon). [Spanish, Ancón (äng.kōn′).] Town in the Canal Zone, adjoining Panama City but legally separate from it. It is the site of a U.S. hospital. 1,695 (1950).

Ancon (äng.kōn′). Archaeological site midway of the coast of Peru, representative of an early period in Peruvian Indian archaeology. It is believed to be between 1,950 and 2,450 years old.

Ancona (äng.kō′nā). Medieval march (or mark) of Italy, extending from Tronto on the Adriatic NW to San Marino, and W to the Apennines. It was afterward part of the Papal States, and passed with them to the kingdom of Italy.

Ancona. Province in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Marches. Capital, Ancona; area, 748 sq. mi.; pop. 372,229 (1936).

Ancona. City and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Marches, the capital of the province of Ancona, situated on the Adriatic Sea SE of Ravenna. Along with Venice the chief Adriatic seaport of Italy and the port of call of various steamship lines, it exports grain, hemp, silk, skins, and similar products and imports coal. It has Roman antiquities, including the Arch of Trajan, a cathedral dating from the 12th century, and a number of early medieval churches, such as San Ciriaco, Santa Maria della Piazza, and Santa Maria Maggiore; other churches, such as Santa Maria della Misericordia, date from the Renaissance period. The Church of San Francesco della Scala contains a museum of antiquities. Colonized by the Greeks, it became a naval station under the Romans, and was later ravaged by the Goths and the Moslems. Much contested during the Middle Ages, it was annexed to the Papal States in 1532 and remained with them, except during the Napoleonic era, until the papal army surrendered the town to the Sardinians in 1860. It was bombarded by the Austrian navy in the beginning of World War I. Considerable damage was suffered during World War II by many buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. The Church of San Agostino, the Palazzi Benincasa and Ferretti, and the Arch of Trajan, however, were undamaged. Pop. of commune, 89,198 (1936); of city, 57,068 (1936).

Ancona (däng.kō'nä), Alessandro d'. b. at Pisa, Italy, Feb. 20, 1835; d. at Florence, Italy, Nov. 9, 1914. Italian literary historian; he served as professor (1860 et seq.) at the universities of Pisa and Florence. Author of Origini del teatro in Italia (Origins of the Theater in Italy, 1877).

Anconquija (än.kōng.kē'hä), Sierra de. See Sierra de Aconquija or Anconquija.

Ancre (äṅkr). Former name of Albert, France.

Ancre (däṅkr), Marquis d'. [Also, Baron de Lussigny; original name, Concino Concini.] Assassinated at Paris, April 14, 1617. Florentine adventurer, marshal and chief minister of France at the beginning of the reign of Louis XIII. Though a great favorite of Marie de' Medici, who made him marshal of France in 1613, after her marriage to Henry IV, he was much hated. His wife, Leonora Galigai, was his partner in his intrigues.

Ancren Riwle (angk'ren röl; Middle English, ängk'ren rü'lę). Term meaning the "rule of anchoresses," used as the name of a specific work on the rules and duties of monastic life. It was written, first in English and afterward in Latin, for a society of anchoresses (three in number) at Tarente, or Tarrant-Kaines (Kaineston or Kingston), near Crayford Bridge in Dorsetshire. It is ascribed to Simon of Ghent (died 1315), bishop of Salisbury in 1297. Five manuscripts are extant. It was edited for the Camden Society by James Morton in 1853.

Ancud (äng.kōŦH'). [Also: San Carlos; original name, San Carlos de Ancud.] Seaport in SW Chile, capital of Chiloé province, on the island of Chiloé: trade center for agricultural and lumber products; seat of a bishopric. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Ancus Marcius (ang'kus mär'shi.us, -shus). Fourth king of Rome (c640–616 B.C.); grandson of Numa Pompilius and the reputed founder of Ostia, fortifier of the Janiculum, and builder of a bridge over the Tiber.

Ancy-le-Franc (äṅ.sē.lę.fräṅ). Town in N central France, in the department of Yonne, ab. 29 mi. E of Auxerre. It has a noted château.

Ancyra (an.sī'rą). A Latin name of Ankara.

Andaġoya (än.dä.gō'yä), Pascual de. b. in the province of Alava, Spain, c1495; d. at Manta, Peru, June 18, 1548. Spanish soldier. He went (1514) with Pedrarias to Darien and was engaged in many explorations. In 1522 he was appointed inspector-general of the Indians, and about the same time made an expedition southward into a province called Birú, between the river Atrato and the Pacific. Here he had the first tidings of the Inca empire.

Åndalsnes (ôn'däls.nās''). See under Romsdal.

Andalucía (än.dä.lö.thē'ä), Fuentes de. See Fuentes de Andalucía.

Andalusia (an.dą.lö'zhą, -shą). [Former name, New Site.] City in S Alabama, county seat of Covington County, ab. 75 mi. S of Montgomery. 9,162 (1950).

Andalusia. [Spanish, Andalucía (än.dä.lö.thē'ą).] Region in S Spain, comprising the provinces of Almería, Jaćn, Granada, Córdoba, Málaga, Sevilla, Cádiz, and Huelva. It is traversed by the Sierra Nevada and other mountain ranges, and belongs in large part to the basin of the Guadalquivir River. From the fertility of its soil it has been called the "garden" and "granary" of Spain; it is also rich in minerals. It was a part of the Roman Baetica, was overrun by the Vandals and Visigoths in the 5th century, and became the nucleus of the Moslems' power and their last stronghold in Spain.

Andamanese (an''dą.mąn.ēz', -ēs') or Andaman Islanders (an'dą.mąn). [Also, Mincopies.] The Negrito inhabitants of the Andaman Islands, numbering 460 (est. 1931). They speak a language without known affinities.

Andaman Islands (an'da.mąn). [Also, Andamans.] Group of islands belonging to the Union of India, a penal colony from 1858 to 1942, situated in the E part of the Bay of Bengal, ab. 780 mi. SE of Calcutta. It comprises the Great Andaman group and the Little Andaman group. The chief islands are North, Middle, and South Andaman, and Rutland. Together with the Nicobar Islands, to the S, they comprise the province of Andaman and Nicobar Islands. Capital of the province, Port Blair; area, of the Andamans, 2,508 sq. mi.; of the province, 3,143 sq. mi.; total pop. 30,963 (1951).

Andaman Sea. Arm of the Bay of Bengal, enclosed by the Andaman Islands on the W and Burma on the N and E. Its major arm is the Gulf of Martaban; receives the Irrawaddy River. Length, ab. 800 mi.; width, ab. 350 mi.

Andean Cultures (an.dē'ąn, an'dę-). Native Indian cultures of the highland areas of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, NW Argentina, and Chile, and the W coastal plains of Ecuador, Peru, and Chile. They have now disappeared, or merged with European culture patterns. They were similar in having primary dependence on intensive agriculture for subsistence, with maize, squash, beans, sweet potatoes, peppers, peanuts, manioc, and coca being grown, as well as many varieties of fruits. Irrigation, terracing, crop rotation, and food preservation were practiced. The llama and alpaca were important domesticated animals because of their value for wool, meat, transportation, hides, fertilizer, sinew, and bone. Hunting was secondary to agriculture and herding, as was gathering. Large-scale building, with adobe on the coast and stone in the highlands, was characteristic of the Andes. High standards of skill were attained in such crafts as ceramics, weaving, and metallurgy. A distinctive costume of woven material was worn by both men and women in the Andes, in contrast to the scanty costume usual among most of the South American tribes. The intensity of these diagnostic traits diminished N, S, and E of the central area.

Andecavi (an.dę.kā'vī) or Andegavi (-gā'vī). See under Anjou.

Andechs (än'deks). Village in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, in the Kreis (district) of Upper Bavaria, situated above Ammer Lake, SW of Munich: has a Benedictine abbey, with baroque church and brewery. The counts of Andechs were mentioned in the 9th century. The abbey was secularized in 1803, but restored in 1846 by King Ludwig I. 1,664 (1946).

Andeer (än'dār). Village in SE Switzerland, in the canton of Graubünden, near the S end of the Via Mala. 614 (1941).

Andegavia (an.dę.gā'vi.ą) or Andegavum (-gā'vum). Latin names of Angers.

Andenne (äṅ.den). Town in S central Belgium, in the province of Namur, situated on the Meuse River ab. 10 mi. E of Namur: manufacturing center, particularly of ceramic products. Pop. ab. 8,000.

Anderab (än.dėr.äb'). [Also, Inderab.] Town in Afghanistan, situated on the river Anderab on the N slope of the Hindu Kush, ab. 85 mi. NE of Kabul. Pop. ab. 6,000.

Anderida (an.der'i.dą). Roman encampment in England, generally identified with Pevensey. It was destroyed (491) by the South Saxons.

Anderlecht (än'dėr.leċht). Town in C Belgium, in the province of Brabant, situated on the Senne River, SW of Brussels, of which it is a suburb: has textile spinning, weaving, printing, and dyeing mills. The Church of Saint Peter, built in the 15th century, is in the Gothic style; the town hall is in the Renaissance style. 86,412 (1947).

Anderledy (än.dėr.lā'dē), Anton Maria. b. at Berisal, Switzerland, 1819; d. at Fiesole, Italy, 1892. General of the Society of Jesus (1887–92). He completed his studies for the priesthood in the U.S. after the Jesuits were expelled (1848) from Switzerland; later (1850–70) served as a missionary and teacher in Germany.

Anderlues (äṅ.der.lü). Town in S Belgium, in the province of Hainaut, ab. 60 mi. S of Brussels: coal mining; metal products; breweries. 12,383 (1947).

Andermatt (än'dėr.mät). [Also: Ursern; Italian, Orsera.] Village in S Switzerland, in the canton of Uri, S of Altdorf, at the junction of the St. Gotthard railway, the Furka pass railway, and the Oberalp railway, near the N entrance to the St. Gotthard tunnel. It is a center for summer and winter sports, and the last German-speaking community on this route from N to S. 1,496 (1941).

Andernach (än'dėr.näċh). [Latin, Antunnacum, Castellum Ante Nacum.] Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Rhineland-Palatinate, French Zone, formerly in the Rhine Province, Prussia, situated on the left bank of the Rhine River, ab. 12 mi. NW of Koblenz. Manufactures include millstones, wooden floors, cigars, foodstuffs, chemicals, and paper goods. The town, which was badly damaged in World War II, has walls and fortifications dating from the 12th century, a 12th-century parish church in the Romanesque style, and a Gothic Rathaus (town hall) built in the 16th century. The population is predominantly Catholic. Andernach was founded by Drusus in 12 B.C. as a Roman frontier fortification. Charles the Bald was defeated here by Ludwig III in 876; the dukes of Lorraine and Franconia, by Otto I in 939. Donated by Emperor Frederick I to the archbishop of Cologne in 1167, it was conquered by the Swedes in 1622; in 1688 it was burned down by the French. It was incorporated into France in 1801, into Prussia in 1815. Pop. 15,879 (1950).

Anders (än'ders), Wladyslaw. b. 1892—. Polish general. Imprisoned by the Russians in the early part of World War II when they occupied the eastern half of Poland, he was, after the Sikorski-Maisky pact (1941), nominated commander of a Polish army recruited in the same year from prisoners of war and deportees in Russia. He brought this army through Iran to the Near East and led it in the battles in North Africa and Italy. His name became famous at Monte Cassino, which he helped take from the Germans after a bloody battle. He wrote Bez ostatniego rozdzialu (An Army in Exile, 1949).

Andersen (an'dėr.sẹn; Danish, än'nėr.sẹn), Hans Christian. b. at Odense, Denmark, April 2, 1805; d. at Copenhagen, Aug. 4, 1875. Danish poet and novelist, best known for fairy tales. Son of a poverty-stricken shoemaker, he went (1819) to Copenhagen to become an actor; a failure in the theater, he nevertheless won friends in the musical and dramatic world, and attracted the attention of King Frederick VI, who sent him to school. He achieved his first success with a curious work entitled A Journey on Foot from Holmen's Canal to the East Point of Amager (1829), which was followed by a volume of verse. Critical approval began to come his way with his first novel, Improvisatoren (The Improvisator, 1835), and was further stimulated by the first volume of fairy tales, under the title Eventyr, published the same year. Thereafter, until 1872, he averaged a volume of these tales a year, establishing himself not only as Denmark's best-known author, but as one of the leading story-tellers of history. Included among his best-known fairy tales are The Fir Tree, The Tinder Box, The Ugly Duckling, The Red Shoes, and The Emperor's New Clothes.

Andersen, Karl. b. at Copenhagen, Oct. 26, 1828; d. there, Sept. 1, 1883. Danish lyric and epic poet. He lived (1837–48) in Iceland, returning in the latter year to Denmark, where he became inspector and intendant of Castle Rosenborg at Copenhagen. His works include Strit og Fred (1858), Genrebilleder (1867–81), Romanser og Sanger (1880), and others.

Andersen Nexø (nek'sė), Martin. b. at Christianshavn, near Copenhagen, Denmark, June 26, 1869—. Danish novelist. Son of a fisherman, descended from peasant stock, he worked at manual labor until at the age of 20 he entered a folk high-school. After travels in the U.S.S.R. during the 1920's he produced several works based on the experiment being undertaken there. He was seized (1940) and placed in a concentration camp by the Germans. His early experiences gave him the materials and impulses for his masterpieces of proletarian description, Pelle Erobreren (3 vols., 1906–10; Eng. trans., Pelle The Conqueror, 3 vols., 1914–17) and Ditte Menneskebarn (4 vols., 1917–21; Eng. trans., Ditte, Girl Alive!, 1920–22).

Anderson (an'dėr.sọn). City in C Indiana, county seat of Madison County, on the W fork of White River, ab. 34 mi. NE of Indianapolis: manufactures automotive parts, machinery, glass, wire fencing, and corrugated containers. It was the site of a natural-gas boom during the 1860's. 46,820 (1950).

Anderson. City in NW South Carolina, county seat of Anderson County, ab. 97 mi. NW of Columbia, in the Blue Ridge Mountains, in a grain, cotton, and truck-gardening area. Manufactures include cotton textiles, brooms, mattresses, bricks, tiles, cottonseed products, fertilizer, meal, flour, metal shingles, eyeglasses, monuments, and lumber products. It is the seat of Anderson Junior College. 19,770 (1950).

Anderson, Adam. b. in Scotland, 1692; d. at London, 1765. Scottish economist and commercial historian. He served as clerk for 40 years at South Sea House, London, and is believed to have been a trustee in the establishment of the Georgia colony. His Historical and Chronological Deduction of the Origin of Commerce (1764) was consulted by Adam Smith and, despite possible errors in its earlier chapters, cited by Macpherson for periods after 1492.

Anderson, Alexander. b. at New York, 1775; d. at Jersey City, 1870. American engraver, self-taught. Inspired by Hogarth's work to make copper engravings and by that of Bewick to try wood, he produced (1794) the first American wood-engravings. Also a physician, he illustrated many books, chiefly Bell's Anatomy, Webster's Spelling Book, Emblems of Mortality (1800, after Holbein's Dance of Death), and the first American edition of Bewick's General History of Quadrupeds (1804).

Anderson, Alexander. [Pseudonym, "Surfaceman."] b. at Kirkconnel, Upper Nithsdale, Scotland, April 30, 1845; d. at Edinburgh, July 11, 1909. Scottish railway worker, dialect poet, and librarian. He received a meagre education at the village school of Crocketford, and worked on the Glasgow and Southwestern Railway system as a tracklayer (surfaceman) from the age of 17 to 35, writing dialect verse on labor and child themes in his free time.

Anderson, Benjamin McAlester. b. at Columbia, Mo., May 1, 1886; d. Jan. 19, 1949. American economist.

Anderson, Carl David. b. at New York, Sept. 3, 1905—. American physicist. He shared, with Victor Hess, the 1936 Nobel prize in physics for the discovery of positron. In 1937 he discovered, at the same time as J. C. Street and Edward Stevenson, the presence of heavy electrons in cosmic rays, and photographed (1938) their path with a Wilson cloud chamber. Professor of physics (1939 et seq.) at California Institute of Technology.

Anderson, Carl Thomas. b. at Madison, Wis., Feb. 14, 1865—. American cartoonist and illustrator, noted especially for his cartoon strip Henry. He attended the School of Industrial Art of Philadelphia, and then worked on the staffs of several newspapers in Pennsylvania and New York, drawing cartoons and illustrations. In 1906, he became a free-lance cartoonist, contributing to many widely distributed magazines. His character Henry was created in 1932, and became a syndicated feature in 1934. Other works include Dusty—the Story of a Dog and His Adopted Boy and How to Draw Cartoons Successfully.

Anderson, Chandler Parsons. b. at Lakeville, Conn., Sept. 5, 1866; d. Aug. 2, 1936. American lawyer. He graduated (1887) from Yale, and attended (1888–89) the Harvard Law School; in 1891 he was admitted to the New York bar. Specializing in international arbitration, he served as special counsel (1905–10) to the U.S. Department of State in negotiations with Britain over British North American treaties. Subsequently he was a counselor (1910–13) to the U.S. Department of State, arbitrator (1913–23) for the U.S. in the British-American pecuniary claims arbitration, a counsel (1917–18) to the U.S. War Industries Board, a commissioner (1923 et seq.) for the U.S. on the mixed claims commission (U.S. and Germany), and a commissioner (1933) on the body representing the U.S., Austria, and Hungary. He served also on the editorial staff of the American Journal of International Law.

Anderson, Clinton Presba. b. at Centerville, S.D., Oct. 23, 1895—. American politician and farmer, U.S. secretary of agriculture (1945–48), a Democratic congressman (1941–45) and senator (1948 et seq.) from New Mexico.

Anderson, David. b. July 6, 1880—. English civil engineer, specializing in bridge and tunnel construction. His principal works include the design and execution of Southwark Bridge, Tyne Bridge, Wearmouth Bridge, Tees Bridge, Londonderry Bridge, and the Mersey Tunnel.

Anderson, David Lawrence. b. at Summerhill, S.C., Feb. 4, 1850; d. in China, Feb. 16, 1911. American Methodist missionary in China who founded and was the first president (1901–11) of Soochow University. Sent to Shanghai (1883) and then to Soochow (1884), he was given charge (1886) of the latter district by the Methodist China Mission Conference. Here he found a strong interest in liberal education, established (1894) an Anglo-Chinese school, and planned for the new university despite the anti-Western feeling during the Boxer Rebellion. Under his guidance, Soochow University developed departments of literature, medicine, and theology and an enrollment by 1909 of 350.

Anderson, Sir David Murray. b. April 11, 1874; d. at Sydney, Australia, Oct. 29, 1936. British admiral and government administrator. He served with the Grand Fleet during World War I, was temporary commander in chief of the China station (1925) and commander in chief of the Africa station (1927–29), and was the first governor of and commander in chief (1933–36) at Newfoundland.

Anderson, Sir Edmund. b. at Flixborough or Broughton, England, 1530; d. at Eywroth, England, Aug. 1, 1605. English jurist, lord chief justice of Common Pleas (1582–1605). A bitter opponent of the Puritans and Catholics, he was notorious for his severity in the trials of Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603, of John Udall, and of others, and was one of the commissioners who tried Mary Queen of Scots in 1586.

Anderson, Edwin Hatfield. b. at Zionsville, Ind., Sept. 27, 1861; d. at Evanston, Ill., April 29, 1947. American librarian and director (1913–34) of the New York Public Library. He organized (1895) and directed (1895–1904) the Carnegie Free Library of Pittsburgh, was appointed (1906) director of the New York State Library and Library School, and was made (1908) assistant director of the New York Public Library. He received (1927) the Order of the White Lion from Czechoslovakia for public service.

Anderson, Elizabeth. [Maiden name, Garrett.] b. at Aldeburgh, England, 1836; d. there, 1917. English physician, a pioneer in opening the medical professions in Britain to women, and the first woman mayor in England. She secured her medical training from qualified physicians after surmounting numerous obstacles, and was licensed to practice in 1865; a dispensary, opened in 1866, later became a small hospital staffed by women physicians, and has been known since 1918 as the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Hospital. She was elected (1908) England's first woman mayor by Aldeburgh.

Anderson, Elizabeth. [Maiden name, Milbank.] b. at New York, Dec. 20, 1850; d. Feb. 22, 1921. American philanthropist. A trustee (1894 et seq.) of the board of Barnard College (to which she gave extensive properties), she was the founder (1905) of what became the Milbank Memorial Fund, which after her death reached an endowment of ten million dollars, to be used by the directors as a source of income for humanitarian projects of the widest possible scope.

Anderson, Galusha. b. at Clarendon, N.Y., March 7, 1832; d. July 20, 1918. American Baptist clergyman, president of the University of Chicago (1878–85) and of Denison University (1887–90). Having attracted attention by his able pastorship (1856–58) at Janesville, Wis., he was called (1858) to St. Louis, where he devoted himself to the Union cause in Missouri. He was a pastor at Brooklyn (1873–76), Chicago (1876–78), and Salem, Mass. (1885–87), and a teacher at Newton (1866–73) and Baptist Union (1890–92) seminaries, and at the new University of Chicago (1892–1904). Author of A Border City During the Civil War (1908), Science and Prayer (1915), and others.

Anderson, George Thomas. b. in Georgia, March 3, 1824; d. at Anniston, Ala., April 4, 1901. American soldier, brigadier general (1862) in the Confederate army; often confused with other Civil War generals of the same surname. He was, as of 1863, in Hood's division, Longstreet's corps, Army of Northern Virginia. Serving throughout the war, he was prominent at Antietam, Gettysburg, and Knoxville.

Anderson, Henry Tompkins. b. in Caroline County, Va., Jan. 27, 1812; d. at Washington, Sept. 19, 1872. American clergyman and student of the classics who devoted most of his life to a translation of the New Testament from the Greek into contemporary English. Averse to teaching and administrative work, in both of which fields various positions were offered him, he would have liked to combine farming and study; failing this, he was often dependent on the help of friends to support his family. Besides his New Testament (1864), he made a translation (published in 1918) of the then newly discovered Codex Sinaiticus.

Anderson, Isabel. [Maiden name, Perkins.] b. at Boston, 1876; d. there, Nov. 3, 1948. American author of books and plays for juveniles; wife of Larz Anderson. She served as a Red Cross worker in Europe during World War I and in 1923 was chosen as librarian general of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Author of The Great Sea Horse (1909), Topsy Turvy and the Gold Star (1920), Polly the Pagan (1922), and A Yacht in the Mediterranean Seas (1930). Among her plays are Everyboy (1920), The Witch in the Woods (1925), The Gee Whiz (1933), and Sir Frog Goes A-Traveling (1935).

Anderson, James. b. at Edinburgh, 1662; d. at London, 1728. Scottish genealogist and antiquarian. In 1705 he published An Historical Essay Showing That The Crown, and Kingdom of Scotland Is Imperial and Independent to demonstrate that a pamphlet by William Atwood, chief justice of York, on the supremacy of the English crown over the Scottish, was a forgery. After receiving a reward for the exposé, he devoted himself to his great work, collecting facsimiles of Scottish charters and other muniments, which he published (1729) under the title of Diplomata; he also published Collections Relating to Mary Queen of Scots (1727–28). He served (1715–17) as postmaster general for Scotland.

Anderson, James. b. at Hermiston, near Edinburgh, 1739; d. Oct. 15, 1808. Scottish economist and writer on agriculture. Publisher of The Bee (1790–94), a weekly journal of economics and politics; author of essays, tracts, and pamphlets, particularly An Inquiry into the Nature of the Corn Laws, with a View to the Corn Bill Proposed for Scotland (1777), which contains a statement of the theory of rent generally attributed to David Ricardo. He was the inventor of the "Scotch plow."

Anderson, James Patton. b. in Franklin County, Tenn., Feb. 12, 1822; d. Sept. 1, 1872. American soldier, major general in the Confederate army under Braxton Bragg, who cited him for heroism at the battles of Shiloh and Murfreesboro and sent him to the assistance of John Bell Hood in 1864 after the latter's failure to take Atlanta from W. T. Sherman. Severely wounded at Jonesboro, he returned to duty in North Carolina against medical advice, an act characteristic of the courage which made him a successful commander.

Anderson, John. b. at Roseneath, Scotland, 1726; d. at Glasgow, Jan. 13, 1796. Scottish physicist, professor of Oriental languages (1756) and natural philosophy (1760) at Glasgow, interested particularly in the application of science to industry. He founded, by bequest, Anderson's College at Glasgow, now part of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College. A sympathizer with the French Revolution, he wrote essays on military science, and invented a cannon and a method of smuggling newspapers by means of small balloons. Author of Institutes of Physics (1786).

Anderson, John. b. Oct. 4, 1833; d. Aug. 16, 1900. Scottish zoölogist. He was appointed superintendent of the Indian Museum at Calcutta in 1865, and was scientific officer on expeditions to western China in 1868 and 1874.

Anderson, Sir John. b. 1882—. British politician and civil servant. In 1905 he entered the Colonial Office and held various positions in it prior to World War I; subsequently he was permanent under-secretary of state in the Home Office (1922–32), governor of Bengal (1932–37), and lord privy seal (1938–39). As home secretary and minister of home security (1939–40), he supervised the design and installation of bomb-shelters (one of the best-known types of which was named for him), and was in charge of the interning of enemy aliens. He was also lord president of the council (1940–43) and chancellor of the exchequer (1943–45).

Anderson, John Alexander. b. in Washington County, Pa., June 26, 1834; d. at Liverpool, England, May 18, 1892. American Presbyterian clergyman, president (1873–88) of Kansas State Agricultural College, and congressman (1878–91) from Kansas. An associate of Thomas Starr King in the reform of state institutions in California, Anderson obtained with the former's help a post on the U.S. Sanitary Commission in the Civil War. He reorganized Kansas State from a small liberal arts school into an industrial and agricultural institution according to the intent of the land grant of 1862. As a Kansas representative in Congress, he was responsible for increasing the taxation of railroad land-grants and for giving cabinet status to the Department of Agriculture.

Anderson, John August. b. at Rollag, Minn., 1876—. American astronomer. He was graduated (Ph.D., 1907) from Johns Hopkins, where he served (1908–16) as associate professor of astronomy. In 1916 he was named physicist at the Mount Wilson Observatory in California. Author of Absorption Spectra of Solutions (in collaboration with H. C. Jones, 1908).

Anderson, John Henry. [Called "Professor Anderson, the Wizard of the North."] b. 1815; d. 1874. English conjurer and actor, memorable for his connection with the burning (March 5, 1856) of Covent Garden Theatre, London. He acted in Black-Eyed Susan and Rob Roy. The bal masqué with which he ended his 1855–56 season was the occasion of the fire which destroyed the entire building.

Anderson, Joseph. b. at White Marsh, near Philadelphia, Nov. 5, 1757; d. at Washington, D.C., April 17, 1837. American lawyer, politician, and officer in the Revolutionary War. He was the leader in the Tennessee constitutional convention of 1796, a U.S. senator from Tennessee (1797–1815), and the first comptroller (1815–36), appointed by Madison, of the U.S. Treasury.

Anderson, Joseph Reid. b. near Fincastle, Va., Feb. 6, 1813; d. at Isles of Shoals, N.H., Sept. 7, 1892. American iron manufacturer whose Tredegar Iron Works were a chief source of Confederate munitions and thus a focal point of Confederate strategy during most of the Civil War. Graduated (1836) from West Point, he served (1837) in the Corps of Engineers, but resigned to become an engineer in civilian life, and build (1838–41) the Staunton-Winchester turnpike in Virginia. Acquiring (1848) the Tredegar company, he developed it into a leading supplier to railroads and the government. Brigadier general (1861) in command of the Cape Fear district and later (1862) commander of a brigade in the Peninsular Campaign, he returned (1862) to the management of the ironworks and became its president in 1867.

Anderson, Judith. b. at Adelaide, Australia, 1898—. American actress, noted for her performance of tragic roles, particularly those based on the Greek, as in Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra (1931) and Robinson Jeffers' Medea (1947–48). She has become well known also as a Shakespearian actress, most notably with her performances as Hamlet's mother (1936) and as Lady Macbeth (1937, 1941). She has also played in Strange Interlude (1930), The Old Maid (1935), and others.

Anderson, Karl. b. at Oxford, Ohio, 1874—. American painter; brother of Sherwood Anderson. His work is represented in the permanent collections of the Art Institute of Chicago, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and elsewhere. He has done illustrations for Collier's, The Saturday Evening Post, and numerous books.

Anderson, Kenneth Arthur Noel. b. at Dharwar, India, Dec. 25, 1891—. English army officer. He served in World War I (1914–18), on the northwest frontier of India (1930–31), and in World War II (1939–45), where he took part (1940) in the Dunkerque evacuation operation. After heading (1942–43) the First Army in the African campaign, and holding the Eastern command (1944–45) and the East Africa command (1945–46), he became governor of Gibraltar in 1947. In 1943 he was named lieutenant general.

Anderson, Larz. b. at Paris, France, Aug. 15, 1866; d. April 13, 1937. American diplomat.

Anderson, Marian. b. at Philadelphia, 1902—. American concert contralto. After winning (1925) the first place in a contest with 300 other singers for an appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, she was awarded a scholarship by the National Association of Negro Musicians and sent (1933) to Europe for an extensive and outstandingly successful concert tour. She returned for a concert on Dec. 30, 1935 at New York, and has since made several tours of the U.S. In 1936 she sang at the White House. Her honors include the degree of Mus.D. from Howard University (1938), and the Spingarn medal (1939).

Anderson, Martin Brewer. b. at Brunswick, Me., Feb. 12, 1815; d. at Lake Helen, Fla., Feb. 22, 1890. American Baptist clergyman and scholar, first president (1853–88) of the University of Rochester. Working in a shipyard and then at the college, Anderson made his own way through Waterville (now Colby) College, returning there, after a year of theological study, as instructor of mathematics and the classics, and later (1843–50) professor of rhetoric. The influential position in Baptist affairs which he attained through his editorship (1850–53) of the New York Recorder he maintained during his presidency of Rochester. In the latter capacity he raised funds enabling the establishment of a separate theological department, obtained an enrollment that necessitated a new building within ten years, and fostered the scientific method and historical research. He was a coeditor of Johnson's Cyclopaedia.

Anderson, Mary. b. at Lidköping, Sweden, 1872—. American labor-union leader. She arrived in the U.S. in 1888, and was employed in a garment factory near Chicago; later she worked for 18 years in a shoe factory. She headed Local 94, National Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, before being named, in 1919, the director of the Women's Bureau of the U.S. Department of Labor.

Anderson, Mary Antoinette. b. at Sacramento, Calif., July 28, 1859; d. in England, May 29, 1940. American actress. She made her debut in 1875 as Juliet at Louisville, Ky., and played Rosalind in As You Like It for the opening performance (1877) of the Shakespeare Memorial theater at Stratford-on-Avon. The role of Clarice in W. S. Gilbert's Comedy and Tragedy was written for her. She was also associated with Robert Hichens in the dramatization of his novel, The Garden of Allah. She retired (1889) from the stage and soon after married Antonio de Navarro, a British subject, with whom she settled in England.

Anderson, Mary Reid. [Maiden name, Macarthur.] b. at Glasgow, Scotland, Aug. 13, 1880; d. at Golder's Green, London, Jan. 1, 1921. British organizer of the National Federation of Woman Workers, founded in 1906. She was responsible for the establishment of a minimum wage for women workers, and was one of the authors of the Wages (Temporary Regulation) Act of 1918.

Anderson, Maxwell. b. at Atlantic, Pa., Dec. 15, 1888—. American playwright. He taught school (1911 et seq.) in North Dakota and California, and was on the staff of the San Francisco Chronicle and others prior to 1918, when he became an editorial writer for the New Republic, the New York Evening Globe, and the New York World. He first made his name in the theater when he collaborated with Laurence Stallings on the tremendously successful What Price Glory (1924) and others. His later plays include Saturday's Children (1927), Elizabeth the Queen (1930), Night over Taos (1932), Mary of Scotland (1933), Valley Forge (1934), Star-Wagon (1937), Key Largo (1939), Eve of St. Mark (1942), Anne of The Thousand Days (1948), and Barefoot in Athens (1951). His Both Your Houses (1933) won a Pulitzer prize, while Winterset (1935) and High Tor (1936) both received the Critics' award. He wrote the text for Lost in the Stars (1949), a musical adaptation by Kurt Weill of Alan Paton's Cry, the Beloved Country.

Anderson, Rasmus Björn. b. at Albion, Wis., Jan. 12, 1846; d. March 2, 1936. American scholar and translator of Scandinavian. He was a professor at Wisconsin (1875–83), minister to Denmark (1885–89), and publisher and editor of Amerika (1897–1922). Author of America not Discovered by Columbus (1874), Norse Mythology (1875), and Viking Tales of the North (1877), as well as an autobiography (1915) and numerous translations from the Scandinavian dialects.

Anderson, Richard Clough. b. in Hanover County, Va., Jan. 12, 1750; d. Oct. 16, 1826. American soldier in the Revolutionary War; father of Richard Clough Anderson (1788–1826) and Robert Anderson (1805–71). As a captain, he had, on the eve of the battle of Trenton, an encounter with Hessian sentries which may have led the latter to mistake George Washington's army for a band of scouts. In the attack (1779) on Savannah he cared for the dying Casimir Pulaski, who gave him his sword.

Anderson, Richard Clough. b. at Louisville, Ky., Aug. 4, 1788; d. at Turbaco, Colombia, July 24, 1826. American politician and diplomat; son of Richard Clough Anderson (1750–1826) and half-brother of Robert Anderson (1805–71). After graduating (1804) from William and Mary College, he studied and practiced law, entering politics in 1812 as a member of the Kentucky house of representatives. Elected (1817, 1819) Kentucky representative to Congress, he proved a distinguished speaker and negotiator with a lively interest in South American independence. Selected (1823) by Monroe as minister to Colombia, he was instrumental in the first American treaty with a republic of South America, and was a delegate to the Panama Congress at the time of his death.

Anderson, Richard Heron. b. at Statesburg, S.C., Oct. 7, 1821; d. at Beaufort, S.C., June 26, 1879. American Confederate general under Braxton Bragg and James Longstreet. A graduate (1842) of West Point, he participated in the siege of Veracruz and the capture of Mexico City, under Winfield Scott. A brigadier general (1861) and lieutenant general (1864) in the Confederate army, he fought at Antietam, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Richmond, and elsewhere.

Anderson, Robert. b. near Louisville, Ky., June 14, 1805; d. at Nice, France, Oct. 26, 1871. American army officer who was in command of Fort Sumter during the Confederate attack (1861) at the beginning of the Civil War. A graduate (1825) of West Point, he served in the Black Hawk, Seminole, and Mexican wars. Given command (1860) of troops in Charleston Harbor, he garrisoned Fort Sumter with the intention of keeping peace by establishing an impregnable position. Still hoping to avoid bloodshed and in the absence of definite orders from Washington, he failed to support the Star of the West when it brought reinforcements; faced with the Confederate demand for surrender, he defended the fort until it was untenable. He served as brigadier general (1861) in Kentucky.

Anderson, Robert Bernerd. b. at Burleson, Tex., June 4, 1910—. American administrator. He served (1932–37) in Texas as a legislator, assistant attorney general, tax commissioner, racing commissioner, and director of the state unemployment commission, before returning to the private practice of law. He was named (1953) U.S. secretary of the navy by President Eisenhower.

Anderson, Rudolph Martin. b. near Decorah, Iowa, June 30, 1876—. Canadian zoölogist. He has been assistant (1902–06) in zoölogy at the Museum of Natural History of the University of Iowa, explorer and field agent (1908–13) for the American Museum of Natural History New York, zoölogist (1913–20) for the Geological Survey of Canada, and head (1920–46) of the division of biology at the National Museum of Canada, as well as a consulting zoölogist for the Ottawa Department of Mines and Resources. Author of Birds of Iowa (1907), Recent Explorations on the Canadian Arctic Coast (1917), and Mammals of Quebec (1940).

Anderson, Rufus. b. at North Yarmouth, Me., Aug. 17, 1796; d. at Boston, May 30, 1880. American Congregational clergyman, secretary (1832–66) of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and the author of several works on missions.

Anderson, Sherwood. b. at Camden, Ohio, Sept. 13, 1876; d. at Colón, Panama, March 8, 1941. American novelist, short-story writer, poet, and journalist. His managership of an Elyria, Ohio, paint factory was followed by service in the Spanish-American War, and was terminated by Anderson's characteristically abrupt decision to seek more meaningful employment. He spent a period with his brother Karl Anderson as an advertising copy writer at Chicago, where he became a protegé of the "Chicago Group," then emerging in American letters, and published Windy McPherson's Son (1916), based on the character of his father. He first received general recognition with Winesburg, Ohio (1919). He settled at Marion, Va., where he became editor of two weekly newspapers, one Republican and one Democratic. He is the author also of the verse volume Mid-American Chants (1918). Other works by him include Marching Men (1917), Poor White (1920), The Triumph of the Egg (1921), Horses and Men (1923), Many Marriages (1923), A Story Teller's Story (1924), Tar, a Midwest Childhood (1926), Dark Laughter (1925), Home Town (1940), and Memoirs (1942).

Anderson, Thomas Victor. b. at Ottawa, July 4, 1881—. Canadian soldier. He was graduated (1900) from the Royal Military College at Kingston and granted (1901) the B.Sc. degree from McGill before serving as an instructor (1902–06) of civil engineering at the Royal Military College. In 1905 he joined the Canadian regular army. Wounded while serving (1915–17) in World War I, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Order. Subsequently he was director (1925–29) of military training at the National Defense Headquarters in Canada, quartermaster general (1935–38) and chief (1938–40) of the general staff in Canada, and inspector-general (1940–42) for central Canada.

Anderson, Walter. b. at Minsk, Russia, 1885—. Estonian folklorist. He was a professor (1920–40) at the University of Tartu, and subsequently a political refugee.

Anderson, William. b. probably in Accomack County, Va., in December 1762; d. at Chester, Pa., in December, 1829. American Revolutionary soldier, lawyer, congressman (1808–17) from Pennsylvania, and leader in the affairs of that state. He served on the Marquis de Lafayette's staff in the Revolutionary War, and as a colonel of the Pennsylvania militia. Thereafter he was a resident and prominent figure of Chester and Delaware counties; in the latter, he led the agitation for the election of voting delegates from unrepresented districts to the legislative caucus.

Anderson, William. b. at Edinburgh, Dec. 10, 1805; d. Aug. 2, 1866. Scottish writer, compiler, and editor; his chief works are Poetical Aspirations (1830), Landscape Lyrics (1839), Popular Scottish Biography, being Lives of Eminent Natives of Scotland (1842), The Scottish Nation, or the Surnames, Families, Literature, Honors, and Biographical History of the People of Scotland (3 vols., 1853, 1859–63, and many editions), Treasury of the Animal World (c1859), and Genealogy and Surnames, with some Heraldic and Biographical Notices (1865). He was described (1882) by James Grant, in Old and New Edinburgh, as a "hard-working and industrious literary man who died poor, unpensioned, and neglected."

Andersonville (an'dėr.sən.vil). Village in W Georgia, in Sumter County, ab. 62 mi. SW of Macon. During the Civil War it contained a Confederate military prison, opened in 1864. Pop. ab. 200.

Andersonville Prison. Confederate military prison in Georgia which was used (February, 1864–April, 1865) during the closing phases of the Civil War for the confinement of enlisted men of the Union forces. Of hasty construction, it was a log stockade occupying 16½ and later 26 acres. The slim resources of the Confederacy prevented adequate food and medical care from being furnished to the prisoners, and the suffering and heavy casualties among the Union troops there inflamed Northern feeling against the South. In the summer of 1864 there were as many as 31,678 prisoners inside the stockade. The National Cemetery at Andersonville contains 12,912 graves; some estimates have placed the mortality figures even higher. After the war a military commission tried (August, 1865) Captain Henry Wirz, who had been responsible for the internal management of the prison. He was found guilty and hanged. During the Reconstruction period and shortly thereafter the name of Andersonville was brought up by Republican politicians who desired to reawaken and exploit popular sentiment against the South and the Democratic Party.

Anderssen (än'dėr.sən), Adolf. b. at Breslau, July 6, 1818; d. there, March 13, 1879. German chess master, noted for his brilliant attacking style of play. The winner of the first International Master tournament at London, 1851, he took first prize in tournaments at London in 1862, and at Baden-Baden in 1870.

Andersson (än'dėrs.sôn), Karl Johan. b. in Sweden, 1827; d. in South Africa, July 5, 1867. Swedish explorer in Africa. He made three successful expeditions: to Damaraland (1850, with Francis Galton), to Lake Ngami (alone, 1853–54), and to the Okavango River (1859). He died in an attempt to reach the upper Kunene River. Author of Lake Ngami (1855), The Okavango River (1861), and others.

Andersson, Lars. Original name of Andreä, Laurentius.

Andersson, Nils Johan. b. Feb. 20, 1821; d. at Stockholm, March 27, 1880. Swedish botanist, author of works on the plants of Scandinavia and Lapland.

Andes (an′dēz). [Spanish, Los Andes, Cordillera de los Andes.] Principal mountain system of South America. It extends from Cape Horn to the vicinity of the Isthmus of Panama, and comprises the Patagonian Andes, the Chilean Andes (which lie partly in the Argentine Republic), the Bolivian and Peruvian Andes (each with two ranges nearly parallel), the Ecuadorian Andes, and the Colombian Andes (with three main ranges) branching E into the Venezuelan Andes. The range rises abruptly from the Pacific coast and contains many celebrated volcanoes. Among the chief summits are Aconcagua, Sorata, Illimani, Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Antisana, and Tolima. On its E slope rise the headwaters of the Amazon. It is rich in gold, silver, and other metals. Length, ab. 4,500 mi.; average width, ab. 100 mi.; average elevation, ab. 12,500 ft.

Andes. In ancient geography, a village near Mantua, Italy, famous as the birthplace of Vergil.

Andesians (an.dē′zhạnz) or Antesians (-tē′-). General name for a number of native tribes in the Andes region. Its significance is geographical rather than ethnographical.

And Even Now. Volume of essays (1920) by Max Beerbohm.

Andhaka (än′dạ.kạ). In Hindu mythology, a demon having a thousand arms and heads, two thousand eyes and feet, and called Andhaka because he walked like a blind man, though he saw well. Shiva slew him when he tried to carry off the tree of paradise from heaven.

Andilly (dän.dē.yē), Angélique Arnauld d'. See Arnauld d'Andilly, Angélique.

Andilly, Robert Arnauld d'. See Arnauld d'Andilly, Robert.

Andino (än.dē′nō), Tiburcio Carías. See Carías Andino, Tiburcio.

Andizhan (än.dē.zhän′). [Also, Andijan.] City in the U.S.S.R., in the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic, situated near the Syr Darya ab. 75 mi. NE of Kokand, in a cotton-producing region. 83,691 (1939).

Andkhui (änd.kō′ē). [Also, Andkho (änd.kō′).] Town in Afghanistan, ab. 300 mi. NW of Kabul: former capital of a khanate. It is a trading center near the Russian border. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Andlaw-Birseck (änt′läf.bir′zek), Franz Xaver von. b. at Freiburg, Baden, Oct. 6, 1799; d. Sept. 4, 1876 German diplomat. He was the author of Erinnerungsblätter aus den Papieren eines Diplomaten (1857), Mein Tagebuch 1811–61 (1862), and others.

Andler (änd.ler), Charles. b. at Strasbourg, March 11, 1866; d. at Malesherbes, France, April 1, 1933. French educator and philosopher, active in behalf of Franco-German amity.

Andocides (an.dos′i.dēz). b. at Athens, c440 B.C.; d. c391 B.C. Athenian politician and orator, banished for implication in the mutilation (415) of Hermae, of which Alcibiades was also accused. Readmitted to Athens under the democracy (403), he was later an ambassador to Sparta.

Andoni (än.dō′nē). Small subgroup of the Sudanic-speaking Ibibio peoples of W Africa, inhabiting SE Nigeria to the S of Opobo. Their population is estimated at ab. 10,000 (by P. A. Talbot, The Peoples of Southern Nigeria, 1926).

Andorra (an.dôr′ạ). [French, Andorre (äñ.dôr).] Independent republic in the Pyrenees Mountains, bounded on the N by France (Pyrénées Orientales and Ariège departments), and on the S and W by Spain (province of Lérida). The republic of Andorra has existed uninterruptedly since 1278, and its continued independence is guaranteed jointly by the president of the republic of France and the bishop of Urgel in Spain against a yearly payment of 960 francs and 460 pesetas respectively. The official language of the republic is Catalan. The terrain is mountainous. There are iron-ore and lead mines, thermal springs, pine forests, and pasture lands. There is some agriculture. Capital, Andorra; area, 191 sq. mi.; pop. 5,000 (est. 1946).

Andover (an′dō.vėr). Municipal borough in S England, in Southampton (an administrative county of the geographical county of Hampshire), situated on the Anton River, ab. 67 mi. SW of London by rail. 14,661 (1951).

Andover. Town in NE Massachusetts, in Essex County, ab. 22 mi. NW of Boston: seat of Phillips Academy and the Abbot Academy, and formerly of Andover Theological Seminary (Congregational; founded in 1807). Its factories produce woolen and rubber goods. It was the home of Harriet Beecher Stowe. 12,437 (1950).

Andøy (än′ė″i). [Also: Andö, Andöy.] Northernmost of the Vesterålen islands, NW Norway: cod fisheries. Length, ab. 35 mi.; area, ab. 189 sq. mi.

Andrada (un.drä′dạ), Antônio de. b. at Oleiros, Portugal, c1580; d. at Goa, in India, March 19, 1634. Portuguese Jesuit missionary in the East Indies and Tibet, author of Novo descobrimento do Grão Catayo, ou dos Reynos de Tibet (1626).

Andrada, Diego Payva de. b. at Coimbra, Portugal, 1528; d. at Lisbon, 1575. Portuguese theologian, sent as a delegate by Dom Sebastian to the Council of Trent (1561). He wrote Orthodoxarum Quaestionum libri X. . . contra Kemnitii petulantem audaciam (1564) and others.

Andrada, Gomes Freire de. [Also, Andrade (un.drä′-dē).] b. in Portugal, 1684; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 1, 1763. Portuguese administrator. From 1733 until his death he was governor of Rio de Janeiro, then comprising most of southern Brazil, and the period of his administration was the most prosperous in the colonial history of that country. In 1758 he was made count of Bobadella.

Andrada e Silva (ē sēl′vạ), Antonio de. [Called the "Mirabeau of Brazil"; full name, Antonio Carlos Ribiero de Andrada Machado e Silva.] b. at Santos, Brazil, Nov. 1, 1773; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 5, 1845. Brazilian politician; brother of José Bonifácio and Martim Francisco de Andrada e Silva. He was involved in the rebellion of 1817 at Pernambuco and imprisoned until 1821. In the Brazilian constituent assembly of 1823 he led the radicals and was banished with his two brothers to France. He returned in 1828, was elected deputy (1835), and was one of the liberal leaders. He was one of the first ministers of Pedro II, and in 1845 entered the senate.

Andrada e Silva, José Bonifácio de. See Bonifácio, José.

Andrada e Silva, Martim Francisco de. b. 1776; d. 1844. Brazilian statesman; brother of José Bonifácio and Antonio de Andrada e Silva. He was exiled (1823) to France with his brothers for his advocacy of democratic government under Pedro I.

Andrade (an′drād), Edward Neville da Costa. b. at London, Dec. 27, 1887—. English physicist. He studied at University College, London, the universities of Heidelberg, Cambridge, and Manchester, and was a professor (1920–28) of physics at the Military College of Science at Woolwich, before becoming, in 1928, Quain professor of physics at the University of London. Author of Structure of the Atom (1923), Airs (1924), Engines (1928), Mechanism of Nature (1930), The New Chemistry, and in collaboration with Julian Huxley, Simple Science (1934).

Andrade (un.drä′dē), Manuel de Carvalho Paes de. See Carvalho Paes de Andrade, Manuel de.

Andrade, Mário de. b. at São Paulo, Brazil, Oct. 9, 1893; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Feb. 15, 1945. Brazilian poet, novelist, critic, essayist, folklorist, one of the central figures of the Brazilian modernist movement of the 1920's, and an authority on Brazilian music. Among his books of poems are Há uma gota de sangue em cada poema (1917), Paulicéia desvairada (1922), Lọsango cáqui (1926), Clã de jabotí (1927), and Remate de males (1930). He also wrote Macunaíma (1928), Ensaio sôbre a música brasileira (1928), and Belazarte, short stories (1933). One of his novels, Amar, verbo intransitivo (1927), was translated into English as Fräulein (1933).

Andrade (än.drä′ᴛʜā), Olegario Victor. b. in Entre Ríos province, Argentina, 1841; d. 1882. Argentine poet and editor-in-chief (1880–82) of the government newspaper, La tribuna nacional. He has been compared by some critics to Walt Whitman in the manner and effect of his art as well as his patriotism. Author of El nido de cóndores (c1877), Prometeo (1877), San Martín (1878), Victor Hugo (1881), and Atlántida (1881).

Andrade Neves (un.drä′dē nā′vēs), José Joaquim de. [Created in 1867, Baron of Triumpho.] b. at Rio Pardo, Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, Jan. 22, 1807; d. at Asunción, Paraguay, Jan. 6, 1869. Brazilian general. He distinguished himself in the war in Rio Grande do Sul (1835–45), and especially as a cavalry commander in the Paraguayan war (1867–69).

Andrade y Portugal (ē pōr.tö.gäl'), Pedro Fernández de Castro. See Fernández de Castro Andrade y Portugal, Pedro.

Andrae (än'drā), Walter. b. at Anger, near Leipzig, Germany, Feb. 18, 1875—. German archaeologist, on the faculty (1927 et seq.) of the Technische Hochschule at Charlottenburg. He directed (1894 et seq.) the excavations at Babylon and elsewhere in Mesopotamia. Author of Hatra (1908–12), Die Festungswerke von Assur (The Fortifications of Assur, 1913), and Die Archäischen Ischtar-Tempel in Assur (The Archaic Ishtar-Temples at Assur, 1922).

Andral (äⁿ.dral), Gabriel. b. at Paris, Nov. 6, 1797; d. at Châteauvieux, Loir-et-Cher, France, Feb. 13, 1876. French physician, professor (1828–66) at the University of Paris. Among his works are Clinique médicale (1823 et seq.), Précis d'anatomie pathologique (1829), and Cours de pathologie interne (1836–37).

Andrássy (ôn'drä.shē; Anglicized, an.dras'i), Count Gyula. b. at what is now Košice, Czechoslovakia, March 8, 1823; d. at Volosca, on the Istrian peninsula, Feb. 18, 1890. Hungarian statesman and diplomat; father of Gyula Andrássy (1860–1929). He was a member of the Hungarian diet (1847) and governor of Zemplin (1848). Leader, with Kossuth and Deák, of the Hungarian insurrection (1848–49), he was in exile until 1857. Again in the diet (1861), he engineered with Deák a compromise (1867) creating the Austro-Hungarian dual monarchy, and became the first constitutional premier of Hungary (1867–71). As foreign minister for Austria-Hungary (1871–79) he consolidated a cordial relationship with Bismarck and framed the Andrássy Note (1876) which helped bring on the Russo-Turkish War; as a representative at the Congress of Berlin (1878), he obtained a mandate over Bosnia and Hercegovina, a move which proved unpopular at home and led finally to his resignation. He negotiated a treaty with Bismarck in 1879 which formed the basis of the Triple Alliance.

Andrássy, Count Gyula. b. 1860; d. 1929. Austro-Hungarian politician and government official; son of Gyula Andrássy (1823–90). He was minister of the interior (1906–10) in the coalition cabinet, and an advocate (1915) of a separate peace with the Allies; he succeeded Burian as foreign minister in 1918 and once more sought separate peace, but failed. Imprisoned (1921) for his part in the plot to restore Charles to the throne, he was amnestied and headed the royalist opposition to Horthy and Bethlen. In 1922 he was elected to the national assembly of Hungary.

Andrássy Note. Declaration relating to the disturbed state of Bosnia and Hercegovina, drawn up by the governments of Austria, Russia, and Germany with the approval of England and France, and presented to the government of Turkey on Jan. 31, 1876. It demanded the establishment of religious liberty, the abolition of the farming of taxes, the application of the revenue derived from direct taxation in Bosnia and Hercegovina to the needs of these provinces, the institution of a commission composed equally of Christians and Moslems to control the execution of these reforms, and the improvement of the agrarian population by the sale of surplus lands belonging to the state.

André (äⁿ.drā), Albert. b. at Lyons, May 24, 1869—. French painter, designer of tapestries, and illustrator, who followed the impressionist school. Although he studied with Adolphe William Bouguereau, he was strongly influenced by Renoir and Cezanne; he has been exhibiting in France, the U.S., and Argentina since 1894. As director of the Museum of Bagnols-sur-Cèze, he has encouraged many modern artists of schools more extreme than his own. His work consists mainly of still lifes, interior scenes, and landscapes, many of which have won prizes. Café Interior, Bagatelle, Fruits, Flower Merchant, Portrait of Renoir, Girl Reading, and The Beige Hat are among his more popular works. He illustrated Charles Maurras' L'Étang de Berre, and other books.

André, Bernard. [Also, Andreas (an.drē'ąs).] French poet and historian, poet laureate of England in the reign of Henry VII (the first laureate appointed by an English king), tutor of Arthur, prince of Wales, and royal historiographer. In spite of blindness he attained a high degree of scholarship. He wrote a life of Henry VII.

André (än.drā'), Johann. b. at Offenbach, Germany, March 28, 1741; d. there, June 18, 1799. German composer and music publisher; founder of the publishing firm expanded by his son, Johann Anton André (1775–1842).

André, Johann Anton. b. at Offenbach, Germany, Oct. 6, 1775; d. 1842. German composer, teacher, and publisher, who, with his four sons, developed the publishing firm founded by his father, Johann André. He was a collector of musical memorabilia, especially those connected with Mozart.

André (än'drā, an'dri), John. b. at London, 1751; executed at Tappan, N.Y., Oct. 2, 1780. English officer hanged as a spy by Washington in the Revolutionary War. A lieutenant (1774 et seq.) in the Royal Fusileers, he was aide-de-camp to Grey and Clinton, made by the latter adjutant general with rank of major. As Clinton's representative, he arranged (1780) with Benedict Arnold, near Stony Point, for the surrender of West Point; returning in civilian disguise, he mistook some intercepting soldiers for British and revealed his identity; captured near Tarrytown, he was tried and condemned at Tappan. His charm, talent, and avowed lack of sympathy for his mission aroused strong American sentiment and some censure of George Washington for the execution.

André (äⁿ.drā), Louis. b. at St.-Rémy, France, May 28, 1631 (or 1623); d. at Quebec, Sept. 19, 1715. French Jesuit missionary and student of American Indian languages, particularly (1672–82) in what is now Wisconsin.

Andrea (un.drā'ą), Francisco José Soares de. [Title, Baron of Caçapava.] b. at Lisbon, Portugal, Jan. 29, 1781; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 2, 1858. Portuguese-Brazilian general, a supporter of Brazilian independence. He went to Brazil in 1808; was adjutant-general in the Cisplatine campaign of 1827; commandant of Pará (1831); president and commandant of Pará (1835); and president of Santa Catherina (1839), of Rio Grande do Sul (1841), of Minas Gerais (1843), of Bahia (1845), and again of Rio Grande do Sul (1848). He attained the rank of marshal in the Brazilian army.

Andrea (än.drā'ä), Girolamo. b. at Naples, Italy, April 12, 1812; d. at Rome, May 14, 1868. Italian cardinal and diplomat. His liberalism in religion and politics (especially his leaning toward Italian national unity) led to his suspension (1866) from his dignities by the papal Curia, but he was reinstated after a humble submission in 1867.

Andreä (än.drā'e), Jakob. b. at Waiblingen, Württemberg, March 25, 1528; d. at Tübingen, Württemberg, Jan. 7, 1590. One of the chief Protestant theologians of the 16th century, appointed professor of theology and chancellor of the University of Tübingen in 1562. He was the principal author of the Formula Concordiae, and wrote over 150 works, chiefly polemical.

Andreä, Johann Valentin. b. at Herrenberg, Germany, Aug. 17, 1586; d. at Stuttgart, Germany, June 24, 1654. German Protestant theologian and satirical writer; grandson of Jakob Andreä. Author of Menippus (1648) a satire, and possibly of Chymische Hochaeit Christiani Rosenkreuz (1616), and other works on the Rosicrucians.

Andreä, Laurentius. [Original name, Lars Andersson.] b. 1480; d. 1552. Swedish reformer, chancellor under Gustavus Vasa. Together with Olaus Petri he translated (1536) the Bible into Swedish, and was the principal agent in introducing (1527) the Lutheran Reformation at the diet of Westeras. In 1540 he was charged with having failed to disclose a conspiracy against the king, and was sentence to death, but bought a pardon.

Andrea Chénier (än.drā'ä shā.nyā'). Opera in four acts, by Umberto Giordano, libretto by Luigi Illica, first produced at La Scala, Milan, March 28, 1896.

Andrea del Sarto (än.drā'ä del sär'tō). See Sarto, Andrea del.

Andreae (än.drā'e), Wilhelm Friedrich. b. at Magdeburg, Germany, April 8, 1888—. German political economist, on the faculties (1926 et seq.) of the universities of Graz and Giessen. Author of Bausteine zu einer universalistischen Steuerlehre (Bricks for a Universalistic Science of Taxes, 1927), and Kapitalismus, Bolschevismus, Faschismus (Capitalism, Bolshevism, and Fascism, 1933).

Andreani (än.drā.ä′nē), Andrea. b. at Mantua, Italy, c1540; d. at Rome, 1623. Italian chiaroscuro engraver on wood. His prints (now rare) are valued for their excellent technique, particularly in the handling of light and shade. He is best known for The Deluge and Destruction of Pharaoh's Host (after Titian), The Miraculous Draught of Fishes (after Raphael), and the series entitled Triumph of Julius Caesar (after Mantegna).

Andreanof Islands (än.dri.ä′nof, an.drē.an′of). Group of islands SW of Alaska, midway of the Aleutian archipelago. U.S. bases were established on two of the islands (Adak and Atka) during World War II.

Andreas (än.drā′äs), Willy. b. at Karlsruhe, Germany, Oct. 30, 1884—. German historian. He served as professor (1914 et seq.) at Karlsruhe, Rostock and Heidelberg. His main work is Deutschland vor der Reformation . . . (Germany before the Reformation, 1932). He edited Bismarck's Gespräche (Bismarck's Conversations, 1924–26).

Andreasberg (än.drā′äs.berk). [Also, St. Andreasberg.] Town in NW Germany, in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone, formerly in the province of Hanover, Prussia, situated in the Harz Mountains, ab. 28 mi. NE of Göttingen. Formerly noted for its silver mines, it now produces toys and metallurgical, wooden and paper goods. 4,799 (1946).

Andreas-Salomé (än.drā′äs.zä′lō.mā), Lou. b. at St. Petersburg, Russia, Feb. 13, 1861; d. At Göttingen, Germany, Feb. 11, 1937. German novelist, biographer, and psychoanalyst; intimate friend of Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche and Rainer Maria Rilke. Her international connections (her father, General Salomé, was a Russian of French descent; her German husband, Professor Andreas, was an Orientalist at Göttingen) may account for her liberal and wide interests. She wrote Über Ibsens Frauengestalten (1892) with considerable psychological insight, and her numerous novels (Im Kampf um Gott, 1885; Aus fremder Seele, 1896; Ma, 1901) tend to the psychological. Eventually she came to know Freud, and took up psychoanalysis. She exercised a marked influence on Nietzsche, and her lifelong friendship with Rilke was the most constant factor in his existence. She wrote Nietzsche in seinen Werken (1894) and Rainer Maria Rilke (1928).

Andree (än′drā), Karl Theodor. b. at Brunswick, Germany, Oct. 20, 1808; d. at Wildungen, Germany, Aug. 10, 1875. German geographer and journalist, founder (1862) of Globus, a geographical journal carried on by his son, Richard. Author of geographies of North America (1854) and Argentina (1856), Geographische Wanderungen (1859), Geographie des Welthandels (1859), and others.

Andree, Richard. b. at Brunswick, Germany, Feb. 26, 1835; d. at Munich, 1912. German ethnographer and geographer; son of Karl Theodor Andree, of whose Globus he was editor (1891–1903). Author of a German atlas (1877), Algemeiner Handatlas (1881), and others.

Andrée (än.drā′), Salomon August. b. at Grenna, Sweden, 1854; d. on White Island, near Greenland, 1897. Swedish aeronaut and engineer. He attempted (1897) with two companions to reach the North Pole from Spitzbergen in a balloon equipped with sails and ropes designed to guide a course. His fate was unknown until 1930, when sailors discovered his remains on White Island; his diaries and other material pertaining to the disaster were printed in Andrée's Story (1930).

Andreini (än.drā.ē′nē), Francesco. b. at Pistoia, Italy, 1548; d. 1624. Italian comedian, popular actor, and scenarist in the Gelosi, a troupe of strolling players in Italy and France who improvised their lines from scenarios, summoned to Paris by Henry IV to entertain Marie de' Medici. He was the husband of Isabella Andreini and father of Giovanni Battista Andreini. Author of Le Bravure del Capitano Spavento (1607) and other plays translated into French.

Andreini, Giovanni Battista. [Stage name in Paris, Leylio.] b. at Florence, c1578; d. at Paris, c1650. Italian comedian and poet; son of Francesco and Isabella Andreini. Member of the Gelosi, founder of the Fidele, companies of players; author of L'Adamo (1613), from which Milton was said to have borrowed several scenes for Paradise Lost.

Andreini, Isabella. b. at Padua, Italy, 1562; d. at Lyons, France, 1604. Italian actress and poet, prima donna of the Gelosi, a group of improvising comedians who traveled in Italy and France, of which her husband, Francesco Andreini, and son, Giovanni Battista Andreini, were also members. Playing parts in scenarios by Flaminio Scala, she became one of the most popular actresses in Europe. Author of Mirtilla, a pastoral fable (1588), poems and songs, and letters published (1607, 1647) after her death.

Andreis (än.drās′), Andrew James Felix Bartholomew de. [Called Felix de Andreis.] b. in Italy, Dec. 12, 1778; d. Oct. 15, 1820. Italian priest, rector (c1818–20) of the cathedral at St. Louis, Mo. A teacher of theology (1806 et seq.) at Monte Citorio, Rome, who conducted missions in nearby towns, he attracted by his scholarship and preaching the notice of Pope Pius VII, who made it possible for him to accompany Louis Du Bourg to Louisiana in 1816. He was preparing to extend his missionary work among the Indians in Missouri when he died, probably of typhoid fever.

Andréossy or Andréossi (dän.drā.o.sē), Antoine François, Comte d'. b. at Castelnaudary, France, March 6, 1761; d. at Montauban, France, Sept. 10, 1828. French general and diplomat under Napoleon. He served in the wars of the Revolution, took part in the coup d'état of the 18th Brumaire, and was ambassador at London, Vienna (1808–12), and Constantinople (1812–14). Recalled by Louis XVIII, he wrote on military history and science.

Andrés (än.drās′), Juan. b. at Planes, Spain, Feb. 15, 1740; d. at Rome, Jan. 17, 1817. Spanish Jesuit and scholar. Author of Dell' origine, dei progressi e dello stato attuale d'ogni Letteratura (On the Origin, Progress, and Present Condition of all Literature, 1782–99), and others.

Andreu (än.drā′ö), Mariano. b. at Barcelona, Spain, 1888—. Spanish portraitist, illustrator, and genre painter who has exhibited in France and Spain since 1920. The Artist and His Wife, Portrait of Jean Giraudoux, Bathers, and Woman with Guitar, are among his outstanding works.

Andrew (an′drö), Saint. fl. first half of 1st century A.D. One of the twelve disciples of Jesus, a brother of (Simon) Peter and an apostle to the Gentiles. He is honored by the Scotch as their patron saint, and by the Russian church as its founder. He suffered death by crucifixion. The X-shaped cross of Saint Andrew is named for him.

Andrew I. d. 1060. King of Hungary (1046–60). He carried on wars with the Germans (1046–52) and with his brother Béla. He was killed in the struggle against the latter.

Andrew II. b. 1175; d. 1235. King of Hungary (1205–35); son of Béla III, and father of Béla IV and of Elizabeth of Hungary. He took part in the fifth Crusade in 1217, and in his Golden Bull (1222), urged on him by his nobles and known as the "Hungarian Magna Charta," decreed that royal violation of the privileges of the nobility should be considered as a just cause for resistance by force against the king. Later provisions (1231) established other limits on the royal power, chiefly by strengthening the position of the nobles. He also granted (1224) self-government to Transylvania.

Andrew III. d. 1301. King of Hungary (1290–1301); grandson of Andrew II, and the last of the Árpád dynasty. On the murder of Ladislaus IV the Pope claimed Hungary as a fief of the church, and invested Charles Martel, son of the King of Naples, with its throne. In 1291 however, Andrew defeated him at Agram (now Zagreb).

Andrew, James Osgood. b. in Wilkes County, Ga., May 3, 1794; d. at Mobile, Ala., March 2, 1871. American bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a source of the controversy (1844) which led to the split into northern and southern branches of the church. His ownership, through marriage, of slaves, though he renounced property rights over them, aroused the Northern delegates to a Methodist conference (1844), resulting in the resolution that he desist from office. Southern members, maintaining that the church should wait for national antislavery sentiment, refused to accept this decision and formed (1845) the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Andrew was one of its first bishops (1846).

Andrew, John Albion. b. at Windham, Me., May 31, 1818; d. at Boston, Oct. 30, 1867. American antislavery leader; governor of Massachusetts during the Civil War. He was one of the founders of the Free Soil Party, and a defender of John Brown. As governor (1860–66) he organized the first wartime regiment to reach Washington (6th Massachusetts) and the first Negro regiment (54th Massachusetts).

Andrew, Samuel. b. at Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 29, 1656; d. Jan. 24, 1738. American Congregational clergyman and educator. A founder (1701) of Yale and its rector (1707–19), he taught a class at Milford, Conn., and supervised others at Saybrook, Conn., during the period when the final site of the institution was still undetermined.

Andrew Aguecheek (ā'gū.chēk), Sir. See Aguecheek, Sir Andrew.

Andrewes (an'drōz), Christopher Howard. b. at London, June 7, 1896—. English pathologist, an expert on virus infections. He served as house physician (1921–23, 1925–26) at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and assistant resident physician (1923–25) at the Hospital of the Rockefeller Institution at New York. He became in 1927 a member of the staff of the National Institute for Medical Research at London.

Andrewes, Lancelot. b. at Barking, England, 1555; d. at London, Sept. 25, 1626. English prelate, leader and spokesman of the High Church (Anglican) party against Roman Catholics and Puritans, respected even by his opponents for his scholarship, high principles, and brilliant preaching. He was chaplain to Elizabeth, James I, and Charles I; dean of Westminster (1601); bishop of Chichester (1605), Ely (1609), and Winchester (1619); privy councillor for England (1609) and Scotland (1617); and one of the translators (1607–11) of the Bible into the King James Version. Author of Tortura Torti (1609), an anti-Catholic defense of James I, manuals of devotions and prayers (1648), and others.

Andrew of Crete (an'drō). [Latinized, Andreas Cretensis.] b. at Damascus, in Syria, 660; d. 720 or 740. Archbishop of Crete and writer of religious poetry. He took part in the Monothelite synod of 712, but later returned to orthodoxy. He is regarded by most authorities as the inventor of the musical canon.

Andrews (an'drōz). Town in E South Carolina, in Williamsburg and Georgetown counties NE of Charleston. It contains pulp and lumber mills, and is a trading center for the agricultural products of the vicinity. 2,702 (1950).

Andrews. Town in NW Texas, county seat of Andrews County. 3,294 (1950).

Andrews, Alexander Boyd. b. near Franklinton, N.C., July 23, 1841; d. April 17, 1915. American railroad builder and operator whose part in the expansion of railroads in North Carolina contributed to the building up of the South after the Civil War. Severely wounded and financially ruined in the war, he opened a passenger and freight ferry-service on the Roanoke River; he then became superintendent of the Raleigh and Gaston (1867), the Chatham (1868), and later the North Carolina Railroad, building numerous lines, particularly one through the mountains in the western part of the state. On the formation (1894) of the Southern Railway he became its first vice-president.

Andrews, Avery DeLano. b. at Massena, N.Y., April 4, 1864—. American lawyer and soldier, brigadier general (1918) in World War I. A graduate (1886) of the U.S. Military Academy, he practiced law (1891 et seq.) at New York, where he also served as police commissioner (1895–98). He was assistant chief of staff (1918 et seq.) to General Pershing, about whom he wrote in My Friend and Classmate, John J. Pershing (1939).

Andrews, Charles. b. at Whitestown, N.Y., May 27, 1827; d. Oct. 22, 1918. American lawyer. He was district attorney (1853–56) of Onondaga County, N.Y., mayor (1861, 1862, 1868) of Syracuse, and chief justice (1881, 1892–97) of the New York court of appeals, which he had been instrumental in reëstablishing (1867).

Andrews, Charles Bartlett. b. Nov. 4, 1836; d. Sept. 12, 1902. American lawyer, governor (1879–81) of Connecticut, and judge (1881 et seq.) of the superior court of Connecticut.

Andrews, Charles Freer. [Called (by Gandhi) Dinahandbu, meaning "Friend of the People."] b. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, 1871; d. at Calcutta, India, April 4, 1940. English writer, resident in India for 35 years; a close friend of Mohandas Gandhi and Rabindranath Tagore, and one of the few Englishmen generally trusted by Indian natives. An outstanding authority on India, Indian labor, and the drink and opium problems, he was the author of Indian Independence (1922), The Indian Problem (1922), The Drink and Opium Evil (1923), Mahatma Gandhi's Ideas (1929), The Indian Earthquake (1935), India and Britain (1935), India and the Pacific (1937), and The True India (1939).

Andrews, Charles McLean. b. at Wethersfield, Conn., Feb. 22, 1863; d. at New Haven, Conn., Sept. 9, 1943. American historian. He was professor at Bryn Mawr (1889–1907), Johns Hopkins (1907–10), and Yale (1910–31). Author of the four-volume Colonial Period of American History (1934–38), the first volume of which won a Pulitzer prize in 1935, he also wrote the two-volume Historical Development of Modern Europe (1896–98), The Colonial Background of the American Revolution (1924, 1931), and others.

Andrews, Chauncey Hummason. b. at Vienna, Ohio, Dec. 2, 1823; d. Dec. 25, 1893. American mine and railroat promoter. Having developed coal mines in the Mahoning valley of Ohio and Mercer County, Pa., and needing transportation facilities, he was instrumental in the building of railroads including the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie (1876), the Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Chicago, and the Pittsburgh, Chicago and Toledo; he was the owner also of a farm-machinery factory at Youngstown.

Andrews, Christopher Columbus. b. at Hillsboro, N.H., Oct. 27, 1829; d. at St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 21, 1922. American diplomat, lawyer, author, and Union soldier during the Civil War. He practiced law (1857 et seq.) at St. Cloud, Minn., and in 1859 entered state politics. Having enlisted in the Union army as a private, he was captured, exchanged, and finally reached the brevet rank of major general. Subsequently he served as minister (1869–77) to Sweden and Norway and consul general (1882–85) to Brazil. Author of numerous works pertaining to his military, diplomatic, and legal careers.

Andrews, Edward Gayer. b. Aug. 7, 1825; d. Dec. 31, 1907. American Methodist Episcopal bishop and educator. In 1848 he entered the Methodist ministry and was elected bishop in 1872. He was appointed (1876) by Methodist officials to undertake the coördination of congregations in Sweden, Norway, and India with the church in the U.S.

Andrews, Elisha Benjamin. b. at Hinsdale, N.H., Jan. 10, 1844; d. at Interlachen, Fla., Oct. 30, 1917. American educator and Baptist clergyman. He was a soldier in the Civil War, president of Denison (1875–79) and Brown (1889–98) universities, and a professor at Newton Theological Institution (1879–82), Brown (1882–88), and Cornell (1888–89). He resigned in 1897 from the presidency of Brown (where he had established in 1891 a Women's College) over the issue of freedom of expression, his views on the silver question having differed from those of university officers; on protests from the faculties of other universities, he was asked to remain. He was also superintendent of the Chicago schools (1898–1900), and chancellor of the University of Nebraska (1900–08). Author of An Honest Dollar (1889), Wealth and Moral Law (1894), The United States in Our Own Time (1903), The Call of the Land (1913), and others.

Andrews, Ethan Allen. b. at New Britain, Conn., April 7, 1787; d. there, March 24, 1858. American educator, teacher of classics, and head of female seminaries; editor of Latin textbooks and of A Copious and Critical Latin-English Lexicon (1850).

Andrews, Frank Maxwell. b. at Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 3, 1884; d. in airplane crash in Iceland, in May, 1943. American air-force officer. A graduate (1906) of the U.S. Military Academy, he served in the Philippines and in Hawaii, and later (1917–20) in the aviation section of the signal corps. He was assigned in 1920 to the U.S. army of occupation in Germany. In 1935 he was appointed colonel, after serving as executive officer (1923–25) at Kelly Field, Texas. He was the organizer and first head (1936–39) of General Headquarters Air Force, with the rank of major general; appointed lieutenant general (1941), he headed the U.S. Caribbean defense command (1942) and the Middle East command (November, 1942–February, 1943). He succeeded General Dwight Eisenhower as commander (February, 1943) of U.S. forces in the European theater.

Andrews, Garnett. b. May 15, 1837; d. May 6, 1903. American soldier and lawyer. After graduating (1861) from the University of Georgia law school, he served in the Confederate army, where he was the organizer (1864) and commander of the regiment of foreigners known as the "Galvanized Yankees." He practiced law with distinction at Yazoo City, Miss., and Chattanooga, Tenn., serving one term (1891–93) as mayor of the latter. Author of Andrews' Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of Mississippi (1884).

Andrews, George Leonard. b. at Bridgewater, Mass., Aug. 31, 1828; d. April 4, 1899. American soldier, engineer, law officer, and teacher. Graduated (1851) from West Point, he became an army engineer (1851–55) and a civil engineer (1855–61). Having been commissioned in the Union army, he trained and led the 2nd Massachusetts infantry; he also commanded the Baton Rouge district and trained Negro troops for service with the Union army. He was appointed (1867) U.S. marshal for Massachusetts. Later he served as professor of French (1871–82) and head of the modern language department (1882–92) at West Point.

Andrews, George Pierce. b. at Bridgton, Me., Sept. 29, 1835; d. May 24, 1902. American lawyer, corporation counsel (1882) to the City of New York, and associate justice (1883–97, 1898–1902) of the New York supreme court. After graduating (1858) from Yale, he began the practice of law in the office of the U.S. district attorney for southern New York and gained his reputation as prosecutor of the first slave-trader to be hanged (1862) for piracy under a law of 1820. Retained by Cornelius K. Garrison, he obtained a knowledge of corporation law, in which he was later regarded as a leading authority.

Andrews, Israel Ward. b. at Danbury, Conn., Jan. 3, 1815; d. at Hartford, Conn., April 18, 1888. American educator, teacher (1838–88) at and president (1855–85) of Marietta College, Ohio, during its formative period. After his graduation (1837) from Williams College, he became an instructor in mathematics in 1838 at Marietta on the recommendation of Mark Hopkins, and was professor of mathematics and natural philosophy (1839–55), and professor of political science (1855–88) there. Active in a number of educational associations and in the field of political science, he attracted wide attention with a paper (1863) on allegiance during the Civil War. Author of the college textbook Manual of the Constitution (1874), and others.

Andrews, James Pettit. b. near Newbury, England, c1737; d. at London, Aug. 6, 1797. English antiquary and historian. He was the author of translations, satires, and two histories of Great Britain (1794–95 and 1796).

Andrews, John. b. in Cecil County, Md., April 4, 1746; d. March 29, 1813. American Episcopal clergyman, classical scholar, and provost (1810–12) of the University of Pennsylvania. A graduate (1764) of the College of Philadelphia, he headed classical schools at Lancaster (1765–67) and York (c1776–82), Pa., and the Protestant Episcopal Academy (1785–91), Philadelphia, which became part in 1791 of the University of Pennsylvania. He was active (1784) in the separation of the Maryland Protestant Episcopal Church from the British church, and was an advocate of the merging of the Episcopal with the Methodist church. Author of A Compend of Logick (1801), Elements of Rhetorick and Belles Lettres (1813), and others.

Andrews, John Miller. b. July 17, 1871—. British statesman. He headed the ministry of Labour (1921–37) and that of Finance (1937–40), and was Prime Minister (1940–43) of Northern Ireland, as well as a member (1921–29) from County Down of the Northern Irish Parliament.

Andrews, Joseph. b. at Hingham, Mass., c1805; d. there, or at Boston, May 7, 1873. American engraver, particularly of portraits and other paintings. Besides Plymouth Rock, 1620, on which he worked 14 years, he did portraits of Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, John Quincy Adams, and many others.

Andrews, Launcelot Winchester. b. at London, Canada, June 13, 1856; d. 1938. American chemist. He was a professor of chemistry at the Iowa State College of Agriculture (1884–85) and at the State University of Iowa (1885–1904), a consulting chemist (1904–10) to the Mallinckrodt Chemical Works at St. Louis, and a research chemist (1915–21) at the Victor Chemical Works at Chicago. Author of An Introduction to the Study of Qualitative Analysis (1891).

Andrews, Lorrin. b. at East Windsor (now part of Vernon), Conn., April 29, 1795; d. at Honolulu, Hawaii, Sept. 29, 1868. American missionary, teacher, and official of the Hawaiian government. A missionary (1828 et seq.) to Hawaii, he headed (1831) the teachers college at Lahainaluna and published (1834) the first Hawaiian newspaper; he resigned (1841) as a missionary when the American Board of Missions accepted contributions from slaveholders. Thereafter he was a member (1846 et seq.) of the Hawaiian privy council, and the first associate justice (1852–55) of the Hawaiian supreme court. He was also active in the translation of the Bible into Hawaiian, and published (1865) a Hawaiian-English dictionary of approximately 17,000 words.

Andrews, Mary Raymond. [Maiden name, Shipman.] b. at Mobile, Ala., c1865; d. Aug. 2, 1936. American novelist; wife (1884 et seq.) of William Shankland Andrews. Author of Bob and the Guides (1906), A Good Samaritan (1906), The Perfect Tribute (1906), Enchanted Forest (1909), The Eternal Masculine (1913), Three Things (1915), The Eternal Feminine (1916), His Soul Goes Marching (1922), Yellow Butterflies (1922), and Lost Commander (1929).

Andrews, Roy Chapman. b. at Beloit, Wis., Jan. 26, 1884—. American natural scientist, explorer, and author. He became in 1906 a staff member of the American Museum of Natural History and was its director from 1935 to 1941. He accompanied expeditions to Alaska (1908), Netherlands East Indies (1909–10), and northern Korea (1911–12), and went (1913) again to Alaska with the Borden expedition. After 1914 he specialized in explorations of central Asia to test the validity of H. F. Osborn's theory that this area was the dispersal point of northern mammalian life; his earlier specialization in water mammals, chiefly whales, produced Whale Hunting with Gun and Camera (1916) and others. He also participated in expeditions (1917–30) to SW and N China, Tibet, Burma, and particularly Mongolia, on which he unearthed great fossil-fields, new geological formations, dinosaur eggs, and remains of the Baluchitherium, largest land mammal yet known to have existed. Author of Across Mongolian Plains (1921), On the Trail of Ancient Man (1926), The New Conquest of Central Asia (1932), and others.

Andrews, Stephen Pearl. b. at Templeton, Mass., March 22, 1812; d. at New York, May 21, 1886. American abolitionist and writer on language, law, phonography, and philosophy; uncle of Elisha Benjamin Andrews (1844–1917). Author of Discoveries in Chinese (1854), The Basic Outline Of Universology (1877), and others.

Andrews, Thomas. b. at Belfast, Dec. 19, 1813; d. there, Nov. 26, 1885. Irish physicist and chemist. He was a professor of chemistry (1845–79) at Queen's College, Belfast. His research led to the discovery and naming of the "critical temperature" in gases, i.e., that point beyond which a given gas cannot be liquefied at any pressure.

Andrews, William Loring. b. at New York, Sept. 9, 1837; d. March 19, 1920. American bibliophile and businessman. He was an active member of the Grolier Society, which was so named (1884) at his home, as well as the founder (1895) of the New York Society of Iconophiles. He published (1865–1908) 26 volumes of his own work and ten by others which are outstanding as examples of printing and binding craftsmanship.

Andrews' Raid. Attempt (April 12, 1862) by 22 Union secret agents to demolish the railroad between Chattanooga, Tenn., and Atlanta, Ga. They seized the engine General, but were captured by a party from the locomotive Texas after a breath-taking race. Eight of the Union agents were subsequently hanged as spies.

Andreyev (än.drā'if), Leonid Nikolayevich. b. in Orel, Russia, 1871; d. at Kuokkala, Finland, 1919. Russian playwright and short-story writer. His writings for the stage combine symbolism with melodrama, while his short stories dwell on themes of death and horror, and are marked by an emotionalism verging on hysteria. His early career as a reporter was followed by the publication of the short story They Lived in 1899; his obvious talent brought him to the attention and won him the friendship of Gorki. He is notable for the anti-war story The Red Laugh (1904), and for The Seven Who Were Hanged (1909), which argued against capital punishment; his other works include the plays Life of Man (1906) and He Who Gets Slapped (1916; Eng. trans., 1921). His last work, S.O.S. (1919), was a scathing denunciation of terrorism under the Communists; to escape them he fled to Finland.

Andrézel (äⁿ.drā.zel), Pierre. See under Dinesen, Isak.

Andria (än'drē.ä). City and commune in SE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Apulia, in the province of Bari, W of Bari. It was a residence and one of the strongholds of the emperor Frederick II (Frederick I of Sicily) in his struggle against the Papacy. The cathedral dates in part from the 11th, in part from the 14th century. The surrounding district is fertile; there are a number of agricultural industries. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 56,152 (1936); of city, 51,597 (1936).

Andrian-Werburg (än'drē.än.ver'bůrk), Leopold von. b. at Vienna, May 9, 1875—. Austrian writer, one of the founders of the Jung-Wien (Young-Vienna) group of writers; member of the so-called George-Kreis (or "George Circle," referring to the group of writers influenced by the German poet Stefan George). He is best known for his lyric poetry and prose.

Andrieux (äⁿ.drē.ė), François Guillaume Jean Stanislas. b. at Strasbourg, May 6, 1759; d. at Paris, May 9, 1833. French lawyer and dramatist. As professor of literature at the Collège de France, he championed classicism. He wrote Les Étourdis (1788), Le Meunier sans-souci (1797), Molière avec ses amis (1804), La Comédienne (1816), Lucius Junius Brutus (1830), and others.

Andrieux, Louis. b. at Trévoux, France, July 23, 1840; d. at Paris, Aug. 27, 1931. French politician and government official, whose Souvenirs d'un préfet de police (1885) attracted wide attention. First elected a deputy in 1876, he was Paris police chief (1879–81) and ambassador to Madrid (1882); returned in 1885 to the Chamber of Deputies, he became an "elder statesman" of the Third Republic.

Andriscus (an.dris'kus). Pretended son of Perseus, king of Macedon, and a claimant to the throne. He was defeated and sent captive to Rome in 148 B.C.

Androcles and the Lion (an'drǫ.klēz). Comedy (1912) by George Bernard Shaw. It is a satirical treatment of early Christianity, mingling buffoonery with the serious presentation of different types of Christian faith.

Androclus (an'drǫ.klus) or Androcles (-klēz). fl. 1st century A.D. Roman slave noted for his friendship with a lion, subject of Shaw's play Androcles and the Lion. According to Aelian and Aulus Gellius, Androclus, escaping from his master in Africa, hid in a cave and there removed a thorn from a lion's foot; years later the animal, remembering him, refused to harm him in the arena.

Andromache (an.drom'ą.kē). In Greek legend, the wife of Hector, and, after his death, of Neoptolemus, son of Achilles; later the wife of Helenus, brother of Hector. She was the daughter of the king of Thebae in Cilicia, who, with his seven sons, was slain by Achilles when he captured Thebae.

Andromache. Tragedy by Euripides. It was probably composed during or shortly after the Peloponnesian war, as it shows a considerable bitterness of feeling against Sparta, plausible enough in view of Euripides' probable sentiments as a citizen of Athens.

Andromachus (an.drom'ą.kus). fl. middle of the 1st century A.D. Physician to the emperor Nero, the first to bear the title of "Archiater," or chief physician. He was the inventor of a celebrated medicine and antidote (called from him "theriaca Andromachi").

Andromaque (äⁿ.dro.mȧk). Tragedy by Jean Baptiste Racine, produced in 1667.

Andromaque. Opera by André Ernest Modeste Grétry, produced at Paris in 1780.

Andromeda (an.drom'ē.dą). In Greek legend, the daughter of Cepheus and Cassiopeia. Poseidon, angered by boasts that there were women more beautiful than the Nereids, sent against the country a sea monster which could only be appeased by the sacrifice of the king's daughter. Andromeda was consequently offered to the monster, but was rescued by Perseus. The legend states that Andromeda, Perseus, and the monster were all three changed into constellations upon their deaths.

Andromeda. A northern constellation surrounded by Pegasus, Cassiopeia, Perseus, Pisces, Aries, and others, supposed to represent the figure of a woman chained. The constellation contains three stars of the second magnitude, of which the brightest is Alpheratz.

Andromeda. Poem (1858) by Charles Kingsley. This work, in hexameters, is Kingsley's most ambitious undertaking in verse, although not so well known as his The Sands of Dee.

Andromède (äⁿ.dro.med). Tragedy by Pierre Corneille, produced in 1650.

Andronica (än.drô'nē.kä). One of the handmaids of Logistilla (Reason) in Ariosto's Orlandó Furioso. She represents Fortitude.

Andronicus IV (an.dron'i.kus, an.drǫ.nī'kus). Name sometimes given to the son of John V Palaeologus who usurped the Byzantine throne and held it from 1376 to 1379.

Andronicus, Livius. See Livius Andronicus, Lucius.

Andronicus, Marcus. In Titus Andronicus, attributed to Shakespeare, the brother of Titus and tribune of the people.

Andronicus I Comnenus (kom.nē'nus). b. c1110; d. at Constantinople, Sept. 12, 1185. Byzantine emperor (1183–85); grandson of Alexius I Comnenus. Having contrived to get himself appointed regent during the minority of Alexius II, he put the prince and his mother, the empress Maria, to death, and ascended the throne in 1183. However, his cruelty and debauchery brought about insurrection under Isaac Angelus, who put him to death after subjecting him to torture.

Andronicus of Cyrrhus (sir'us). [Called Cyrrhestes.] b. at Cyrrhus; fl. 1st century B.C. Greek astronomer, builder, at Athens, of the "tower of the winds," still partly standing, an octagonal tower decorated with sculptured figures of the winds, and surmounted by a bronze Triton which turned with the wind. It was perhaps the first weather-vane in history.

Andronicus of Rhodes (rōdz). fl. in the middle of the 1st century B.C. Greek philosopher, head of the peripatetic school at Rome. He was the author of commentaries on, and paraphrases of, Aristotle, and of editions of Aristotle and Theophrastus.

Andronicus II Palaeologus (pā.lē.ol'ǫ.gus). b. c1259; d. 1332. Byzantine emperor (1282–1328); son of Michael Palaeologus. During his reign the empire was ravaged by the revolt (1306–08) of the so-called Catalan Grand Company, a body of Spanish mercenaries employed against the Ottoman Turks, and by a civil war (1321–28) with his grandson Andronicus III, by whom he was finally dethroned and compelled to retire to a cloister.

Andronicus III Palaeologus. b. c1296; d. June 15, 1341. Byzantine emperor (1328–41); grandson of Andronicus II, whose throne he usurped. He carried on war with the Ottoman Turks, who detached (1326–38) nearly the whole of Asia Minor from the Empire.

Andronovo (än.drô'nǫ.vǫ). Culture named after the village of Andronovo, in the Achinsk region of Siberia, and found in W Siberia from the Yenisei River to the Urals, and from Tomsk to Semipalatinsk. It is dated as occurring from 1500 B.C. onward. The graves of the Andronovo culture are situated haphazardly, covered with a low, flat hill, and often surrounded by circular enclosures of stone slabs. The burial chambers, in ground pits, are made of stone or wood slabs. Skeletons were placed on their side, with flexed arms and legs, and oriented to the east. Some additional graves were found, where bodies were cremated. The graves contained mostly flat-bottom pots, some of them crude, with straight sides, often completely covered with deep, pitted or incised ornamentation. The second type of vessels were well made, with concave-convex sides covered with geometrical ornamentation. The latter type is characteristic of the Andronovo culture. Stone scrapers and points were still present, but metal objects were found in greater profusion than in the Afanas'evo culture, and consisted of copper daggers and copper ornaments, sometimes covered with thin gold leaf. The bones of sheep, horses, and bulls show developed animal domestication.

Andros (an′dros). Island in the Atlantic Ocean, largest of the Bahamas, SE of Miami, Fla.: a British possession. It is the only island in the Bahamas traversed by streams. Length, ab. 95 mi.; pop. 6,718 (1943).

Andros. Northernmost island of the Cyclades, E Greece, in the nomos (department) of Cyclades, situated in the Aegean Sea, ab. 6 mi. SE of Euboea, anciently a possession successively of Athens, Macedon, Pergamum, and Rome. It has a silk industry and oil refinery, and produces lemons and wine. The surface is mountainous. The Venetians founded a principality here under Marino Dandolo. In 1566 it became Turkish and in 1829 Greek. It is the seat of a Catholic bishopric. The population on the E coast is in the majority Albanian. Length, 25 mi.; greatest width, 10 mi.; pop. ab. 18,000.

Andros, Sir Edmund. b. at London, Dec. 6, 1637; d. there in February, 1714. English colonial governor of New York (1674 et seq.), the dominion of New England (1686–89), and Virginia (1692–97). He succeeded his father as bailiff of Guernsey in 1674. Chosen for his military background to settle border disputes and maintain defense, first of New York and then of the newly formed dominion of New England, which later (1688) also included New York and the Jerseys, he antagonized the people by his severity. Fired by resentment over the loss of their charters and by the Puritan fanaticism of Cotton Mather and others, the colonists revolted (1689), imprisoning Andros with other officials, and returned to charter government. Acquitted in England of the colonists' charges and considered an able administrator, Andros was made governor of Virginia (1692–97) and lieutenant-governor of Guernsey (1704–06).

Androscoggin (an.dros.kog′in). [Early name, Pejebscot, corrupted to Bishopscote or Bishopscott.] River in the NE part of the U.S., whose headstreams rise in N New Hampshire and N Maine, and which drains Lake Umbagog and the Rangeley Lakes, and joins the Kennebec River ab. 5 mi. N of Bath, Me. Length, 171 mi.

Androtion (an.drō′shi.on). fl. c350 B.C. Athenian orator, a contemporary of Demosthenes and pupil of Isocrates, possibly the chronicler of Attica mentioned by Pausanius. He is known chiefly as a subject of attack by Demosthenes in one of his early orations.

Androuet du Cerceau (äṅ.drö.e dü ser.sō), Baptiste. b. c1544; d. 1602. French architect; son of Jacques Androuet du Cerceau (c1510–84). Designer of the Pont Neuf across the Seine, and successor to Pierre Lescot as superviser of building under the crown in Paris. He collaborated with his brother, Jacques Androuet du Cerceau, on work on the Louvre.

Androuet du Cerceau, Jacques. [Original surname, Androuet.] b. c1510; d. 1584. French architect and founder of the line, better known from his writings and etched drawings than from actual buildings. He was a pioneer of the Italian Renaissance in France. The family name of Androuet du Cerceau derived from the trademark of a circle which marked his place of work.

Androuet du Cerceau, Jacques. d. 1614. French architect; son of Jacques Androuet du Cerceau (c1510–84). He worked on the design and construction of the Tuileries, and was associated with his brother, Baptiste Androuet du Cerceau, in work on the Louvre.

Androuet du Cerceau, Jean. d. sometime after 1649. French architect; son of Baptiste Androuet du Cerceau. Designer of Paris mansions including the Sully, the Bellegarde, and others.

Andrugio (än.drö′jō). In John Marston's Antonio and Mellida, the noble but turbulent Duke of Genoa. He utters the speech beginning, "Why, man, I never was a prince till now."

Andrusovo (än.drö′sọ.vọ). [Also: Andrussof, Andrusov (än.drö′sọf), Andrussovo.] Small village in the U.S.S.R., in the Smolensk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, noted for the treaty (1667) between Russia and Poland, by which the latter ceded Kiev, Smolensk, and the E Ukraine.

Andújar (än.dō′här). [Celtiberian, Illiturgis.] Commune in Spain, in the province of Jaén, situated on the Guadalquivir River, ab. 44 mi. NE of Córdoba. It has hot mineral springs; produces pottery and porous jars (alcarrazas). There is a Moorish castle. Located at a strategic river crossing, the town has been frequently contested. 24,765 (1940).

Anecdotes of Painting in England. Prose work (4 vols., 1762–71) by Horace Walpole. It was based on the notebooks of the engraver George Vertue, which Walpole had purchased from Vertue's widow, and has led many scholars to consider Walpole an authentic pioneer in the history of English painting.

Anécho (ä.nā′kō). [Also, Little Popo.] Seaport and district in the French trust territory of Togo, W Africa, situated on the Bight of Benin, and connected with Lomé, ab. 27 mi. to the W, by rail. Pop. of district 181,936 (1946).

Anegada (an.ẹ.gä′dạ). One of the British Virgin Islands, in the Caribbean Sea, NE of Puerto Rico. The chief occupation is vegetable gardening. During the 17th century, it was used by the Dutch and British as a base for buccaneering expeditions. Length, ab. 10 mi.

Aneho (ä.nā′hō). Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting S French Togo. They form a small group, surrounded by Ewe peoples, but are related culturally and linguistically to the Ga.

Aneirin (ä′nī.rēn). See Aneurin.

Anel (ä.nel), Dominique. b. 1679; d. 1730. French surgeon. He introduced improvements in the operation for aneurysm, and invented a syringe still used in the treatment of fistula lacrymalis.

Anelida and Arcite (ạ.nel′i.dạ; är′sīt). Unfinished poem by Goeffrey Chaucer. It was among those printed by Caxton, and is mentioned in both Lydgate's and Thynne's lists of Chaucer's works. In the latter it is mentioned as "Of Queen Anelida and False Arcite." There are passages in it from Boccaccio's Teseide, and the Thebaid of Statius was also drawn upon. Chaucer himself tells us that he took it from the Latin. Elizabeth Barrett Browning modernized the poem about the middle of the 19th century. Anelida was the Queen of Armenia. In the poem is included "The Complaint of Fair Anelida upon False Arcite," occasioned by the fact that the Theban knight (who is not the true Arcite of the Knight's Tale) deserted her for another. The poem breaks off at the end of her complaint (which is considered to be, by itself, one of the most polished and charming examples of perfect balance of strophe and antistrophe in medieval literature).

Anencletus (an.ẹn.klē′tus). See Saint Anacletus.

Anerio (ä.nā′ryō), Felice. b. at Rome, c1560; d. there, c1614. Italian composer of sacred music who succeeded Giovanni Palestrina, on the latter's death, as composer (1594–1602) to the papal chapel.

Anerio, Giovanni Francesco. b. at Rome, c1567; d. c1620. Italian composer of sacred music, the adapter of Giovanni Palestrina's Papae Marcelli, he became (c1609) maestro di cappella to Sigismund III, king of Poland.

Anesus (ạ.nē′sus). A Latin name of the Enns River.

Anethan (dän.tän), Jules Joseph, Baron d'. b. at Brussels, 1803; d. there, 1888. Belgian politician. He was premier from 1870 to 1871.

Aneto (ä.nā′tō), Pico de. [French, Pic de Néthou.] Peak in NE Spain, in the Maladetta group close to the French border: the highest peak in the Pyrenees. Elevation, ab. 11,170 ft.

Aneurin (an′ū.rin, ạ′nī.rēn). [Also: Aneirin, Neurin.] fl. c600 A.D. Welsh bard, author of Gododin, an epic of the struggle between Britons and Saxons, one of the oldest works in Welsh literature. Son of a chief (Caw ab Geraint or Gildas) of the Otadini or Gododin, a sea-coast tribe living south of the Firth of Forth, he is variously thought to have been Gildas the historian or his son.

Aney (ä.nā′), Madhao Shrihari. b. 1880—. Indian statesman and lawyer, representative (1943) of India in Ceylon and governor (1948) of Bihar, Union of India. Vice-president of the Indian Home Rule League (1916–18), he later became a prominent figure in the civil disobedience campaign. He served as a member (1924–30, 1935) of the legislative assembly of Berar, member (1924–25, 1931–34) of the Congress Working Committee, and acting president (1933) of the Indian National Congress. He was the member (1942–43) for Indians overseas in the viceroy's executive cabinet.

Anfossi (än.fôs′sē), Pasquale. b. at Naples, April 25, 1727; d. at Rome, in February, 1797. Italian operatic composer who served as Lateran maestro (1792 et seq.); studied under Piccinni. He composed L'Incognita perseguitata (1773), and other operas, on two of which Mozart collaborated; he also wrote church music.

Anfu Clique (än'fo͞'). Organization founded (1918) by the Chinese warlord Tuan Ch'i-jui to aid his pro-Japanese group in monopolizing public office. During its control (1918–20) of the capital, the clique made valuable concessions to the Japanese in return for extensive loans.

Angara (än.gä.rä'). [Also, in part of its course, Upper Tunguska.] Chief tributary of the Yenisei River, in the U.S.S.R., in S Siberia. It rises (as the Upper Angara) NE of Lake Baikal, traverses Lake Baikal, flows NW and W, and joins the Yenisei above Krasnoyarsk. Length, ab. 1,152 mi.; navigable for almost its entire course.

Angas (äng'gäs). [Also, Angassawa (äng.gäs.sä'wä).] Sudanic-speaking people of W Africa, inhabiting C Nigeria to the SE of Joa. Their population is estimated at ab. 50,000 (by C. K. Meek, The Northern Tribes of Nigeria, 1925). They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal crop is sorghum.

Angas (ang'gąs), George Fife. b. at Newcastle, England, 1789; d. at Adelaide, South Australia, 1879. English merchant and shipowner; a founder of South Australia.

Angel (ang'gel). Extensive Middle Mississippi site in Vanderburgh County near Evansville, Ind., which dates from the Temple Mound II period (about 1300–1700 A.D.) This site, covering an area of about 100 acres, consisted of a central plaza, houses, and mounds surrounded by a palisade.

Angel (ān'jęl). Novel (1926) by DuBose Heyward. It is a story of life in the mountains of the SE part of the U.S.

Angel, Benjamin Franklin. b. at Burlington, N.Y., Nov. 28, 1815; d. at Geneseo, N.Y., Sept. 11, 1894. American lawyer and diplomat. He was commissioner to China (1855) under President Pierce, and minister to Sweden and Norway (1857–61) under President Buchanan.

Angel, John. b. at Newton Abbot, Devonshire, England, Nov. 1, 1881—. English sculptor who came to the U.S. in 1925 and became especially noted for his religious works and his war memorials. He studied in England, at the Albert Memorial, Lambeth, and Royal Academy art schools, and exhibited (1912–27) at the Royal Academy. He has also lectured at several universities, and illustrated (for The Cathedral Age) an article on cathedral sculpture. His other works include a bronze door and a life-size figure of Saint Patrick, for Saint Patrick's Cathedral, New York; figures on the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine, New York; Statue of William M. Rice, for Rice Institute, Houston, Tex.; War Memorial, Milton Academy, Milton, Mass.; and Madonna and Child.

Angela Merici (än'jā.lä mā.rē'chē), Saint. b. at Desenzano, Italy, 1474; d. at Brescia, Italy, 1540. Italian nun and founder of the Ursuline Order. She became a tertiary of Saint Francis at an early age, and established the Ursuline Order (1535) at Brescia with a group of 12 virgins, serving as their superior until her death.

Angeli (än'jā.lē), Heinrich von. b. in Hungary, July 8, 1840; d. 1925. Genre and portrait painter at Vienna; an Austro-Hungarian historical and portrait painter who was engaged by many of the courts in Europe (Germany, Austria, England, and Russia). He studied at Vienna; from 1859 to 1862 he painted historical subjects there and at Munich. Later he did portraits of Queen Victoria, the Empress Marie of Russia, Emperor William II of Germany, and many persons of lesser rank. His paintings were acquired by galleries at Berlin, Vienna, and London.

Angelica (an.jel'i.kạ). In Matteo Maria Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato and Ludovico Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, a beautiful but coquettish and faithless princess, daughter of Galaphron, king of Cathay. His unrequited love for her was the cause of Orlando's madness.

Angelica. Principal female character in William Congreve's play Love for Love, a witty and piquant woman, and the author's favorite character.

Angelica. Character in George Farquhar's comedy The Constant Couple and also in its sequel Sir Harry Wildair.

"Angelical Salutation." See Ave Maria.

Angelic Brothers (an.jel'ik). Sixteenth-century community of Dutch Pietists, who believed that they had attained that state of angelic purity in which there is "neither marrying nor giving in marriage."

Angelicus (an.jel'i.kus), Doctor. Epithet of Aquinas, Saint Thomas.

Angelina (an.jẹ.lī'nạ). Heroine of Oliver Goldsmith's ballad The Hermit, or Edwin and Angelina.

Angelina. In John Dryden's tragi-comedy The Rival Ladies, a sister of Don Rhodorigo, in love with Gonsalvo. She disguises herself as a man and goes by the name of Amideo.

Angel in the House, The. Poem (1854) by Coventry Patmore. Its theme of wedded love may be traced, for its inspiration, to Patmore's own relationship with his wife (whose beauty was so great as to attract the comment also of many of Patmore's fellow Pre-Raphaelites). It was published in four parts: The Betrothal (published anonymously in 1854), The Espousals (1856), Faithful Forever, a poem of disappointed love (1860), and The Victories of Love, a poem of bereavement (1862).

Angélique (äṅ.zhā.lēk). One of the principal characters in Molière's Le Malade Imaginaire. She is the daughter of Argan, the imaginary invalid, who wishes to marry her to the son of his physician, Diafoirus, but is finally induced to give her to Cléante, the man she loves.

Angélique. Wife of George Dandin, in Molière's comedy George Dandin.

Angélique, Mère. See Arnauld, Jacqueline Marie and Arnauld d'Andilly, Angélique.

Angel Island (ān'jęl). Island in San Francisco Bay, N of San Francisco. It was until 1946 the site of a U.S. Army base.

Angell (ān'jęl), George Thorndike. b. at Southbridge, Mass., June 5, 1823; d. March 16, 1909. American reformer and lawyer; a founder (with Mrs. William Appleton) of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He established the periodical Our Dumb Animals (1868 et seq.), and aided (1869) the British S.P.C.A. to set up its publication, The Animal World. He denounced Theodore Roosevelt for advocating both militarism and hunting.

Angell, James Burrill. b. near Scituate, R.I., Jan. 7, 1829; d. at Ann Arbor, Mich., April 1, 1916. American educator, journalist, and diplomat. A graduate (1849) and professor of modern languages (1853–60) at Brown, he was successor to H. B. Anthony as editor (1860–66) of the Providence Journal. He served also as president of the universities of Vermont (1866–71) and Michigan (1871–1909), at the latter of which he established the first professorships of education (1879) and forestry (1882), and advocated a separate graduate school, which was organized in 1910. As minister to China (1880–81), he negotiated the treaty of 1880 on Chinese immigration; he later (1897–98) was minister to Turkey. Cofounder (1884) and president (1893–94) of the American Historical Association.

Angell, James Rowland. b. at Burlington, Vt., May 8, 1869; d. at Hamden, Conn., March 4, 1949. American psychologist and educator; son of James Burrill Angell. A graduate of Michigan (1890) and Harvard (1892), he studied at Berlin, Halle (1893), Leipzig, and elsewhere abroad. He served in the psychology department at Chicago (1894–1919), and as a professor and head of the department from 1905; later he was dean of the university faculties (1911–19) and acting president (1918–19). Appointed president of Yale in 1921, he left that post in 1937 to become an educational counselor to the National Broadcasting Company. President of the American Psychological Association (1906); chairman of the National Research Council (1919–20); president of the English Speaking Union (1929 et seq.). Author of Chapters from Modern Psychology (1911), American Education (1937), and others; editor of Psychological Monographs (1912–22).

Angell, Joseph Kinnicutt. b. at Providence, R.I., April 30, 1794; d. at Boston, May 1, 1857. American legal writer. He was editor (1829–31) of the United States Law Intelligencer and Review, and author of Common Law in Relation to Watercourses (1824), The Right of Property in Tide Waters (1826), The Law of Private Corporations Aggregate (1832), and other books.

Angell, Sir Norman. [Original name, Ralph Norman Angell Lane.] b. at Holbeach, England, Dec. 26, 1874—.

Anglo-American economist, pacifist, journalist, and author. He received his early education at St.-Omer, France, and Geneva, Switzerland, and lived in the western U.S. as a rancher, prospector, and newspaperman, becoming a citizen before his return (1898) to Europe as a newspaper correspondent. He was general manager of the Paris edition of the London Daily Mail (1905–14) and editor of Foreign Affairs (1928–31). A Labour member of Parliament (1929–31), he was awarded (1934) the Nobel peace prize for 1933. He is also the inventor of "The Money Game" which utilizes cards to teach economic principles of currency and banking. Author of The Great Illusion (1910), The Great Illusion, 1933 (1933), America's Dilemma (1940), Let the People Know (1943), After All (1952, autobiography), and others.

Angellier (äṅ.zhe.lyā), Auguste Jean. b. at Dunkerque, France, 1848; d. at Boulogne-sur-Mer, France, 1911. French poet and critic, expert on English literature. Author of Étude sur la vie et les oeuvres de Robert Burns (1892) and similar studies, as well as of À l'amie perdue (1896), Le Chemin des saisons (1903), and other volumes of verse.

Angeln (äng'ẹln). Small district in N Germany, in the former province of Schleswig-Holstein, Prussia, lying between the Flensburg Fjord on the N, the Baltic Sea on the E, and the Schlei River on the S. It is noted for its fertility, and is supposed to have been the original home of the Angles.

Angelo (an'jẹ.lō). Character in Shakespeare's Measure for Measure. He is the duke's deputy, who unjustly condemns Claudio to death.

Angelo. Character in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors; a goldsmith.

Angelo (än'jā.lō), Castle of Sant'. [Also, Hadrian's Mole.] Remodeled mausoleum of Hadrian in Rome. It is a huge circular tower about 230 ft. in diameter on a basement about 300 ft. square, with medieval chambers and casements excavated in its solid concrete.

Angelus (an'jẹ.lus). Prayer in the Roman Catholic Church, in honor of the Incarnation, repeated three times daily (by tradition, at six a.m., at noon, and at six p.m.). The devotion consists on each occasion of a Hail Mary, with certain introductory and concluding versicles, and is announced by a distinctive tolling of the church bell, usually three units of three strokes each (the units are traditionally separated by "the space of one Pater and one Ave") or two units of three strokes followed by nine strokes.

Angelus, Isaac. See Isaac II.

Angelus Silesius (sī.lē'zhus). [Original name, Johann (or Johannes) Scheffler.] b. at Breslau, 1624; d. there, July 9, 1677. German religious poet. At first a Lutheran and a physician, he became (1661) a Catholic priest. Author of hymns and of Geistreiche Sinn- und Schlussreime (1657), published later as Cherubinischer Wandersmann (1674), a rhymed work on mysticism based on Jakob Böhme, and others.

Angely (äṅ.zhẹ.lē'), Louis. b. at Berlin, c1788; d. there, 1835. German actor and dramatist. Author of Sieben Mädchen in Uniform, Das Fest der Handwerker, and others, mainly adaptations of French plays (collected in 4 vols., Berlin, 1842).

Angerapp (äng'ẹ.räp). River in N Poland and the W part of the U.S.S.R., a headstream of the Pregel River, which drains Mamry Lake.

Ångerman (ōng'ėr.män). River in Sweden, in the län (counties) of Västernorrland and Västerbotten, which flows into the Gulf of Bothnia near Härnösand. It drains several lakes and forms many waterfalls. Length, ab. 280 mi.; navigable in its lower course.

Ångermanland (ōng'ėr.män.länd). District in N Sweden, mainly included in the modern län (counties) of Västerbotten and Västernorrland.

Angermünde (äng.ėr.mün'dẹ). City in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Brandenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Brandenburg, Prussia, situated on the Mündesee (lake), ab. 42 mi. NE of Berlin: railroad junction; agricultural trade. The Church of Mary, in the Gothic style, dates from the 13th century. 10,813 (1946).

Angerona (an.jẹ.rō'nạ) or Angeronia (-ni.ạ). In Roman mythology, a goddess whose attributes and powers are not definitely known. She was, perhaps, the goddess connected with anguish and secret grief. Her statue stood in the temple of Volupia (sensual pleasure), and she was represented with her finger upon her bound and sealed lips.

Angers (äṅ.zhā). [Latin, Andegavia, Andegavum, Juliomagus.] Capital of the department of Maine-et-Loire, W central France, situated on both banks of the Maine River, ab. 5 mi. from its influx into the Loire River, between Nantes and Le Mans. The Gothic cathedral of Saint Maurice, dating mainly from the 12th century but with later additions, is an example of the Angevin pointed style. It contains stained-glass windows from the 13th century and tapestries from the 14th century. The town has collections of tapestries, ceramics, engravings, and paintings. The castle dates from the period of Saint Louis. There is a medical school and a school for arts and crafts. The town has metallurgical and chemical industries; among its manufactures are stained glass for church windows, wines, liqueurs, shoes, rope, and thread. Angers was formerly the capital of the old province of Anjou and suffered severely in the Huguenot and Vendean wars. 94,408 (1946).

Angers (däṅ.zhā), David d'. See David, Pierre Jean.

Angerstein (ang'gėr.stīn), John Julius. b. at St. Petersburg, Russia, 1735; d. at Blackheath, England, Jan. 22, 1823. English merchant, philanthropist, and art amateur. As an underwriter (1756 et seq.) at Lloyd's, he became an influential commercial figure and helped transform the business from the original, more or less unorganized character which had marked it in its coffee-house days to the present highly coördinated system of insurance underwriting represented by Lloyd's. Guided by Benjamin West and Sir Thomas Lawrence, he collected paintings which were acquired (1824) by the British government and formed the nucleus of the National Gallery.

Angevin (an'jẹ.vin). Dynastic name sometimes applied to the Plantagenet rulers of England. The term, taken from French, is a derivative of "Anjou," from which French house the Plantagenets were descended; the first three Plantagenets (Henry II, Richard I, and John) were actually counts of Anjou as well as kings of England, and the Plantagenets (or Angevins) are ordinarily listed as a separate and rightful house under the counts of Anjou.

Angilbert (ang'gil.bêrt), Saint. [Called "Homer" at Charlemagne's court.] b. c740; d. 814. Frankish poet. He was a minister under Charlemagne, and abbot of Centula (now St.-Riquier) from 790; pupil and friend of Alcuin; said to be the father, by Charlemagne's daughter, Bertha, of Nithard, Frankish chronicler. He is the probable author of an epic describing the meeting between Charlemagne and Pope Leo III, of which a part is extant.

Angirases (an'ji.rạs.ẹz). In Hindu mythology, a class of beings standing between gods and men. They are called the sons of heaven, sons of the gods. They appear in company with the gods, with the Asvins, Yama, the gods of the sun and light. Angi is called the first and highest Angiras. At the same time the Angirases are called the fathers of men, and many families trace their descent from them. The hymns of the Atharvaveda are called Angirasas, and the Angirases were especially charged with the protection of sacrifices performed in accordance with the Atharvaveda.

Angkor (ang'kôr). [Also, Angkor Thom (tôm').] Ancient city in Indochina, in NW Cambodia, near Siemréap, ab. 150 mi. NW of Pnompenh. It was the capital of Cambodia from 802 until its capture by the Siamese in 1432, when the court removed to the vicinity of Pnompenh. Discovered by French archaeologists in 1860, it is now one of the greatest tourist attractions in Cambodia. It is believed to have been a city of a million people, with a wall which had five gates. Extensive ruins, including many buildings and several high towers, have been cleared of jungle growth and partly restored. These and the nearby temple, Angkor Wat, all elaborately decorated with basreliefs, constitute one of the world's richest finds for students of archaeology and art history.

Angkor Wat (wät). [Also: Angkor Vat (vät), Nakhon Wat (or Vat).] Temple situated ab. 5 mi. S of Angkor, the ancient capital of Cambodia. It is generally considered to be the finest architectural creation of Cambodia, dating from the 12th century. The plan presents three concentric rectangular enclosures, the exterior one measuring 570 by 650 ft. and each rising above that surrounding it, so that the general form is pyramidal, an effect which is enhanced by the flanking of the great pointed tooth-battlemented central tower by similar smaller side towers. The exterior is colonnaded with coupled square pillars on a raised basement. Above the pillars there is an elaborate entablature with a frieze of projecting serpent-heads and very rich moldings. In the middle of each face there is a large triple portal. The back walls of the porticos which extend from these bear remarkable friezes in low relief, most of the subjects being battle scenes from the Ramayana or Mahabharata, about 6½ ft. high and 2,000 ft. in aggregate length. The entrance-hall contains over 100 square columns. The temple proper, 200 by 213 ft., stands in the central court; it surrounds four large water tanks so disposed that the middle portion of the structure is cruciform. The plan is closely similar to Indian types, but the constructive and decorative details are purely local. The capitals are almost classical in form, and there are no bracket-capitals.

Anglante's Knight (äng.glän'täz). Name given to Orlando, lord of Anglante, in Lodovico Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

Angles (ang'glz). [Latin, Angli.] A Germanic-speaking people which in the earliest period of its recorded history dwelt in the neighborhood of the district now called Angeln, in the region of Schleswig, and which in the 5th century and later, accompanied by kindred tribes, the Saxons, Jutes, and Friesians, crossed over to Britain, and colonized the greater part of it. The Angles were originally the most numerous of these settlers, and founded the three kingdoms of East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria. From them the entire country derived its modern name of England.

Anglesey or Anglesea (ang'gl.si). [Latin, Mona.] Island and county in N Wales, lying NW of the mainland, from which it is separated by Menai Strait; the strait is crossed by a famous suspension bridge, reconstructed in 1940. The surface of Anglesey is generally flat, the highest elevation being Holyhead Hill (703 ft.). The county has much land in permanent pasture, and beef-cattle raising and sheep raising are important. Oats are the principal crop. Copper ore was discovered at Amlwch in 1768 and the mine was once the largest in Europe. By the end of the 19th century, however, the ore was largely exhausted, and the mines are now of negligible value. Anglesey was an ancient seat of the Druids, was conquered by the Romans under Suetonius Paulinus in 61 A.D., and by Agricola in 78, and later became a Welsh stronghold. Length, ab. 28 mi.; width, ab. 20 mi.; area of county, ab. 276 sq. mi.; pop. 50,637 (1951).

Anglesey, 1st Earl of. Title of Annesley, Arthur.

Anglet (äṅ.gle). Town in SW France, in the department of Basses-Pyrénées, situated near the Atlantic coast, between Bayonne and Biarritz. A summer and winter resort, it has an airport. 11,320 (1946).

Angleterre (äṅ.gle.ter). French name of England.

Angleton (ang'gl.tọn). City in SE Texas, county seat of Brazoria County, ab. 40 mi. S of Houston: railroad and marketing center in a region producing oil and farm products. 3,399 (1950).

Angli (ang'glī). See Angles.

Anglia (ang'gli.ạ). Latin name of England; specifically, that part of England which was settled by the Angles.

Anglian (ang'gli.ạn). Name most often used for the dialect spoken by the Angles. It is used also, but less often, as an ethnic term for one of the people who spoke this dialect.

Anglicus (ang'gli.kus), Bartholomaeus. See Bartholomaeus Anglicus.

Anglin (ang'glin), Francis Alexander. b. at St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, April 2, 1865; d. at Ottawa, Canada, March 2, 1933. Canadian supreme court justice. He was a member (1906) of the commission to revise the Ontario statutes, and an associate justice (1909–24) and chief justice (1924–33) of the supreme court of Canada. Author of Trustees' Limitations and Other Relief.

Anglin, Margaret Mary. b. at Ottawa, Canada, April 3, 1876—. American actress. In 1894 she made her debut as Madeline West in Charles Frohman's New York production of Shenandoah; later she played Roxane in Cyrano de Bergerac (1898), appeared with Henry Miller in Camille, and had a part in The Devil's Disciple. In 1906–07, she starred with Miller in The Great Divide. She also played in several Greek tragedies, notably Sophocles' Antigone and Electra, between 1910 and 1927, and headed a cast of 1,200 in As You Like It during the Shakespeare tercentenary (1916) at St. Louis. She was awarded the Laetare medal by Notre Dame University in 1927 and last starred in Fresh Fields (1935–36).

Anglo-American Caribbean Commission (ang'glō.ạmer'i.kạn kar.i.bē'ạn, kạ.rib'ē.ạn). See Caribbean Commission.

Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry. Joint committee established by the governments of Great Britain and the U.S. in 1946 to investigate conditions in Palestine. It was set up after the British Labour Party had affirmed its adherence to the British White Paper of 1939 and President Truman had urged the immediate immigration of 100,000 Jews into Palestine. The chief recommendation of the report it rendered was that the 100,000 immigration should be permitted. This and other recommendations were not accepted by the British government, and later in 1946 the problem of Palestine was submitted to the United Nations.

Anglo-American Oil Agreement. Agreement concluded (Sept. 24, 1945) at London to supersede earlier tentative arrangements which had failed for various reasons to obtain final approval. It was signed by Harold Ickes, for the U.S., and by Emanuel Shinwell, for Great Britain; it was intentionally drafted in such a way as to permit the signatures of other nations which would be affected by its provisions. It called for the establishment of an Anglo-American Petroleum Commission which was to promote the orderly development of the international petroleum trade with the eventual aim of negotiating an oil agreement among all oil-producing and consuming nations. The effect of the agreement was circumscribed by American unwillingness to accept any regulation of its domestic oil industry and British insistence that its control over overseas oil sources not be restricted.

Anglo-Boer War (ang'glō.bör'). See Boer War (1899–1902).

Anglo-Egyptian Sudan (ang'glō.ē.jip'shạn sö.dan'). Anglo-Egyptian condominium occupying a large portion of NE Africa. It is bounded on the N by Egypt, on the W by Libya and French Equatorial Africa, and on the S by the Belgian Congo, Uganda, and Kenya, and on the E by Ethiopia, Eritrea, and the Red Sea. Capital, Khartoum; area, 967,500 sq. mi.; pop., 8,350,000 (est. 1950; a census has never been held).

History. The country was ruled by Egypt until 1882 when a revolt under the Mahdi wrested it from Egyptian control. In 1896 an Anglo-Egyptian army began a campaign to regain control of the area and finally succeeded (1899) in doing so with the defeat of the rebels at the Battle of Omdurman. Great Britain and Egypt signed a convention in the same year, constituting the condominium and providing for its government and administration. This agreement was reaffirmed by the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936. Self-government was granted in 1953, with a guarantee that self-determination would occur in 1956.

Government. There is an appointed governor-general agreed upon by both nations; since 1910 he has been assisted by a governor-general's council, and since 1943 by an advisory council for the northern Sudan. The members of both these bodies are either ex-officio or appointed persons. The country is divided into 8 provinces, each having a governor responsible to the governor-general; and into 46 districts, each in charge of a district commissioner who is responsible to the governor concerned.

Cultural and Economic Geography. The population of the northern provinces is Arabic-speaking, Mohammedan in religion, and accounts for about two-thirds of the total; the population of the southern provinces is largely composed of Negro African tribes. Except for the area on the banks of the Nile River and its main tributaries (Sobat and Atbara rivers) and headstreams (White and Blue Niles), the country is desert and of little value for agriculture or development. The S part is covered by dense tropical forests and swamps. Cotton, cottonseed, gum arabic (in which it leads the world), sesame, ground nuts, and numerous other tropical products are exported. Gold is mined in the Red Sea hills and some is exported.

Anglo-French Entente (ang'glō.french'). Relationship established on April 8, 1904, when Great Britain and France signed a treaty by which they settled their colonial conflicts in Africa, SE Asia, the Pacific, and Newfoundland. Most important was the French recognition of British control in Egypt and the British promise of a free hand for France in Morocco. France agreed in the open treaty not to change the political status of Morocco. In secret clauses, however, the two powers envisaged great modifications of the existing French and British control methods in Egypt and Morocco, with consequent diminution of native autonomy. The opposition of Germany to one-sided changes in Morocco (which was a chief reason for the Algeciras Conference) forced Britain and France into ever closer diplomatic coöperation and the treaty thus became the cornerstone of the Anglo-French alliance of 1914.

Anglo-German Naval Agreement of 1935 (ang'glō.jėr'mạn). Agreement that developed from conversations held between Germany and Great Britain after Hitler's declaration in May, 1935, that the German navy would be in a 35:100 ratio to that of the United Kingdom. The accord recognized a 35:100 ratio between the two navies, though Germany was allowed to build submarines on parity within the overall ratio. At the time, the British were condemned for a unilateral violation of the Versailles Treaty. In April, 1939, Hitler canceled the agreement with the assertion that Great Britain had accepted the inevitability of war and was already "encircling" Germany.

Anglo-German Yangtze Agreement (yang'tsi). Agreement signed on Oct. 16, 1900. stating that the two signatory powers would use all their influence to keep the Yangtze River and the Chinese coastal ports open to international trade. It also gave assurance of no interest in territorial aggrandizement at the expense of China as a result of the Boxer Rebellion and promised joint consultation if another power should attempt territorial acquisitions. Great Britain viewed this agreement as a defense against Russia, Germany as a way of smoothing relations with Russia. The applicability of this agreement to Manchuria later aroused controversy.

Anglo-Italian Mediterranean Agreement (ang'glō.i.tal'yạn med''i.tẹ.rā'nē.ạn). Joint statement of Jan. 2, 1937, made by British Ambassador Sir Eric Drummond and Italian Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano disclaiming any desire to change the status quo in the Mediterranean area. It was made in an effort to dispel the Anglo-Italian friction which existed at that time in that area. Both countries gave assurances of mutual transit rights in the Mediterranean. During the same negotiations Italy and Great Britain settled disputes involving grazing and watering rights of tribes in their adjoining East African colonies and Italian transit rights in British Somaliland.

Anglo-Japanese Alliance (ang'glō.jap.ạ.nēz'). Agreement reached on Jan. 30, 1902, between Japan and Great Britain. Japan had earlier, but without success, sought an understanding with Russia concerning the fluid Far Eastern situation at that time. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance recognized the independence of China and Korea and stipulated that, in the event of a threat to the commercial or industrial interests of either Japan or Great Britain, each could take action with the assurance of the other's neutrality or active support in the case of hostilities. The agreement also disavowed separate arrangements in the Far East without prior consultation.

Anglo-Latin (ang'glō.lat'in). Name applied to medieval Latin as written in England in the Middle Ages, the ordinary language of the church and the courts until the modern period. It is characterized by the liberal inclusion and free Latinizing of technical and vernacular English and Norman or Anglo-French terms.

Anglo-Normandes (äṅ.glo.nôr.mäṅd), Îles. A French name of the Channel Islands.

Anglo-Portuguese Alliance (ang'glō.pôr'ṭū.gēz). Treaty of friendship and alliance between Portugal and Great Britain, notable as the oldest diplomatic instrument still in existence. It was concluded in 1688 when England assisted Portugal in liberating herself from a century of Spanish domination. In World War II it was partly because of this centuries-old relationship that Portugal approved in October, 1943, a British request that the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy be permitted to establish bases in the Azores.

Anglo-Russian Entente (ang'glō.rush'ạn). Relationship established on Aug. 31, 1907, when Great Britain and Russia signed an agreement at St. Petersburg. The immediate motivation for the agreement was provided by certain conflicts between the two powers in the Near and Middle East, especially in Persia and Afghanistan. Complementing the Anglo-French Entente of 1904, it became the basis of Allied coöperation in World War I. By setting up spheres of influence in Persia, it gave protection to the British frontier in India, but gave Russia an almost free hand in the north. The clauses on Afghanistan were never put into effect.

Anglo-Saxon (ang'glō.sak'sọn). Name sometimes applied to one of the Angles or original "English" Saxons. The term is sometimes, however, restricted to the Saxons who dwelt chiefly in the southern districts (Wessex, Essex, Sussex, Middlesex—names which contain the form of Saxon—and Kent) of the country which came to be known as the land of the Angles, now England; more usually, since the 16th century, the term is extended to include the whole people or nation formed by the aggregation of the Angles, Saxons, and other early Germanic settlers in Britain, or the whole people of England before the Norman Conquest.

Anglo-Saxon. A term referring to stereotypic individuals of English nationality and extended to certain sections of the population of the U.S. The term has no validity as a racial classification, despite its widespread use, being essentially a linguistic term; thus a Negro whose native language is English is in fact an Anglo-Saxon.

Anglo-Saxon. The language of the Anglo-Saxons; Saxon; the earliest form of the English language, constituting with Old Saxon, Old Friesic, and other dialects, a group belonging to the West Germanic division of the Teutonic speech.

Anglo-Saxon Chronicle. Name applied to a group of manuscripts that serve as chief source for the history and literature of England during the 10th, 11th, and part of the 12th centuries. The "chronicle" is actually clearly divisible into several distinct units, which are nevertheless ordinarily treated as parts of the same overall series of annals. Work on the earliest portion now known to exist was probably commenced (c892) by monks at Winchester, almost certainly at the behest of (and possibly with the actual editorial aid of) Alfred the Great. Certain parts of the work contain material from Bede's Ecclesiastical History and other earlier records, but the greater portion of the chronicle consists of entries about events that took place at approximately the time of writing. The annals come to a close some years after the Norman conquest, at about the middle of the 12th century.

Anglo-Soviet Treaty (ang'lō.sō.vi.et', -sō.vyet'). Twenty-year treaty signed on May 26, 1942, by Great Britain and the U.S.S.R. It was designed to affirm the unity of the two powers in their opposition to Germany during and after hostilities in World War II, and to express a common desire to work with the United Nations. Stipulating joint military effort against Germany and her European allies, and a promise to forsake separate peace treaties with the Axis, it also provided for common support in the event of aggression by another power in the post-war period. A clause was also inserted assuring economic support and assistance after the war.

Angmagssalik (äng.mäg'sä.lik), [Also, Angmagsalik.] Trading post and meteorological station in E Greenland, just S of the Arctic Circle, established by the Danes. Its weather reports are transmitted by a radio station built in 1925. The settlement is of considerable importance also in the military air strategy of the nations linked by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. During World War II it was the site of a U.S. air base. Pop. ab. 700.

Angol (äng.gōl'). Capital of Malleco province, in C Chile. It was the capital of the former territory of Angol. 12,398 (1940).

Angola (ang.gō'lạ). [Full Portuguese name, Reino e Conquistas de Angola.] Former Portuguese colony in SW Africa, founded within the boundaries of the ancient native kingdom of Angola.

Angola. [Also, Portuguese West Africa.] Modern Portuguese colony in SW Africa which comprises the old kingdoms of Congo, Angola, and Benguela, the district of Mossâmedes, and the later accessions between the Cuangu and Kasai rivers. This colony extends along the W coast of Africa between the mouths of the Congo and Cunene rivers, and inland as far as the Cuango, Kasai, and Zambezi rivers. It is bounded by the Belgian Congo on the N, by the Belgian Congo and Northern Rhodesia on the E, by Bechuanaland and South-West Africa on the S, and by the Atlantic Ocean on the W. Capital, Luanda; area, 481,350 sq. mi.; pop. 4,111,796 (1950).

Government. It is divided into five provinces (since 1946): Luanda, Malange, Benguela, Bie, and Huila. The administration is in the hands of a governor-general, residing at Luanda; in the late 1940's plans were under way to make Nova Lisboa the capital.

Economic Geography. Angola is the only central African possession which has a large white population (ab. 51,363 in 1946) and in which agriculture flourishes on a large scale. There are valuable deposits of diamonds, and some large deposits of copper and lignite, which are as yet not extensively worked. The highlands of the interior are believed to be one of the most favorable regions in C Africa for European settlement. The railway from Benguela to the Katanga region of the Belgian Congo provides the shortest and best route for transporting products of the Katanga to the sea. It has been of great importance in the development of the country and is one of the main revenue-producers.

Angola. City in NE Indiana, county seat of Steuben County: seat of Tri-State College. 5,081 (1950).

Angolalla (äng.gō.läl'ạ). One of the chief towns in Shoa province of Ethiopia, in E Africa, N of the capital, Addis Ababa.

Angora (ang.gō'rạ). See Ankara.

Angostura (äng.gōs.tö'rä). Former name of Ciudad Bolívar.

Angoulême (äñ.gö.lem). [Latin, Inculisma.] City in W France, the capital of the department of Charente situated on the Charente River, W of Rochefort and NE of Bordeaux. It is the seat of highly specialized paper and printing industries, and a great variety of paper articles are produced. The liquor and brandy industry of the region has a world-wide reputation; there are also several smaller industries. The cathedral dates from the 12th century. Other points of interest include an art museum, a statue of the poetess Marguerite of Valois (a sister of the French king Francis I), who was born in Angoulême in 1492, and medieval ramparts. Angoulême became the seat of a bishopric in the 3rd century. The city was ceded to the British in 1360, but they were driven out in 1373. It later suffered greatly during the religious wars. At various times, the houses of Savoy, Valois, and Berry held title to the duchy of Angoulême. 44,244 (1946).

Angoulême (däñ.gö.lem), Duc d'. [Family name, Charles de Valois.] b. April 28, 1573; d. Sept. 24, 1650. French politician and general; illegitimate son of Charles IX and Marie Touchet. He was made Duc d'Angoulême in 1619. He was imprisoned (1605–16) in the Bastille for his intrigues with Henriette de Balzac d'Entragues, Marquise de Verneuil. As a soldier he served with distinction at Arques and Ivry, and directed the sieges of Soissons and La Rochelle. He is the reputed author of Mémoires (1662).

Angoulême, Duc d'. [Family name, Louis Antoine de Bourbon.] b. at Versailles, Aug. 6, 1775; d. in what was then Austria, June 3, 1844. Last dauphin of France; the eldest son of Charles X of France (Comte d'Artois) and Maria Theresa of Savoy, princess of Sardinia. He opposed Napoleon in the south of France on his return from Elba, and was a commander in the French invasion of Spain (1823); he went into exile in 1830.

Angoulême, Duchesse d'. See also Diane de France.

Angoulême, Duchesse d'. [Family name, Marie Thérèse Charlotte de Bourbon.] b. at Versailles, Dec. 19, 1778; d. at Frohsdorf, Austria, Oct. 19, 1851. French noble woman; daughter of Louis XVI, and wife of the Duc d'Angoulême (1775–1844). An active adherent of the ultra-royalists, she was a prisoner (1792–95) during the French Revolution.

Angoumois (äñ.gö.mwà). Former division of W France, which, with Saintonge, formed a subordinate political unit previous to the French Revolution. As a region, it corresponds nearly to the modern department of Charente. It contains numerous vineyards, and is probably best known outside of France for the fact that it produces much of the world's best cognac (the town of Cognac, from which the brandy derives its name, is in Angoumois).

Angra do Heroísmo (ung'grạ dö ē.rö.ēzh'mö). District of Portugal, in the Azores islands. Capital, Angra do Heroísmo; area, 268 sq. mi.; pop. 86,979 (1950).

Angra do Heroísmo. Town and concelho (commune) in the Azores islands, capital of the Portuguese district of Angra do Heroísmo, situated on the S coast of the island of Terceira. It has a protected harbor and exports wine, grain, and pineapples. It is the seat of a bishopric. Founded in 1534, it was the capital of the Azores islands until 1832. Some of the old fortifications remain. The words "do heroísmo" were added to the name of the town for its patriotic opposition (1830–32) to the pretender Dom Miguel. Pop. of concelho, 36,225 (1940); of town, 10,642 (1940).

Angra Pequena (ang'grạ pē.kwē'nạ). Region in the former German protectorate of South West Africa, from the Orange River N to Angola, N of Cape Frio, but excluding Walvis Bay. It passed under German protection in 1884, and was lost by the Germans as a result of World War I.

Angri (äng'grē). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Salerno, situated S of Mount Vesuvius, between Salerno and Torre Annunziata, ab. 19 mi. SE of Naples. It has cotton mills and is a center of the local lumber trade. Pop. of commune, 19,468 (1936); of town, 11,851 (1936).

Ångström (ōng'strėm; Anglicized, ang'strọm), Anders Jöns. b. at Lödgö, Sweden, Aug. 13, 1814; d. at Uppsala, Sweden, June 21, 1874. Swedish physicist, a specialist in spectrum analysis and pioneer in spectroscopy. A graduate, privatdocent (1839 et seq.), and professor of physics (1858 et seq.) at Uppsala, he was also on the staff (1843 et seq.) of the Uppsala Observatory. His Optiska Undersökningar (1853), describing the spectra of the electric spark and of incandescent gases, is one of the fundamental works in spectroscopy. He published a demonstration of the presence of hydrogen in the sun's atmosphere (1862), a map of the solar spectrum (1869), and a description of the spectrum of the aurora borealis (1867), and was the discoverer of the line in the latter now often called the "Ångström line." The Ångström unit, a measure equal to one hundred-millionth of a centimeter, is used in the scientific handling of wave-lengths of light.

Ångström, Knut Johan. b. at Uppsala, Sweden, Dec. 1, 1857; d. March 4, 1910. Swedish physicist; son of Anders Jonas Ångström. A professor of physics (1896–1910) at Uppsala, he invented (1893) the Angström pyrheliometer for measuring solar radiation, and devised (1895) a means of photographing the infrared spectrum.

Anguier (äñ.gyā), François. b. in Normandy, 1604; d. 1669. French sculptor; brother of Michel Anguier. He created the mausoleum of Henry II, the duke of Montmorency, at Moulins.

Anguier, Michel. b. in Normandy, 1614; d. 1686. French sculptor; brother of François Anguier. His Nativity at the church of Val de Grâce has, with his other work, brought him high rank among French sculptors of the Baroque period.

Anguilla (ang.gwil'ạ). [Also: Anguila, Snake Island.] Island in the Caribbean Sea, E of Puerto Rico: part of the British colony of the Leeward Islands, governed under St. Christopher-Nevis (or St. Kitts-Nevis) presidency. The major occupations are fishing, cotton culture, and cattle raising; salt is also produced. Area, 50 sq. mi.; pop. 5,036 (1946).

Anguille (ang.gwil'), Cape. Point of land projecting W from the SW coast of Newfoundland toward the Gulf of St. Lawrence. At its tip it is the westernmost point in Newfoundland.

Anguisciola (än.gwē'shō.lä) or Angussola (-gös'sō-), Sofonisba. [Also, Angussciola.] b. at Cremona, Italy, c1535; d. at Genoa, 1626. Italian portrait-painter; a pupil of Bernardino Campi. At the invitation of Philip II (1560), she painted portraits of members of the royal family of Spain; she is known also for several self-portraits.

Angus (ang'gus). [Former name, Forfarshire.] Maritime county, in E central Scotland. It is bounded on the N by Aberdeenshire, on the NE by Kincardineshire, on the E by the North Sea, and on the S and SW by the Firth of Tay and Perthshire. The coastline is sandy S of Arbroath, and rises to cliffs N of it. The county is mountainous in the NW, where the Braes of Angus reach an altitude of 3,077 ft. in Mount Keen. The Sidlaw Hills are in the SW portion. Strathmore (or the Howe of Angus), a lowland running generally SW-NE, separates these two ranges. E and S of the Sidlaw Hills to the coast the land is level and well-cultivated. The NW region is sheep pasture, deer forests, or moorland. Principal crops of the county are oats, potatoes, wheat, turnips, barley, and hay. Angus is the chief seat of Scottish linen manufacture, and the city of Dundee is the most important center of jute manufacture in the British Isles. There are shipyards and fisheries. County seat, Forfar; area, ab. 874 sq. mi.; pop. 247,870 (1951).

Angus, Earl of. Title held by various members of the Douglas family of Scotland, within the branch of the family sometimes called the "Red Douglases." The title came into being in 1389, when it was granted to George Douglas, and passed out of existence in 1660, with the death of William Douglas, 11th Earl of Angus and 1st Marquis of Douglas. For information about particular holders of the title, see under Douglas.

Angus. In Shakespeare's Macbeth, a thane of Scotland.

Angussola (än.gös'sō.lä) or Angussciola (-shō-), Sofonisba. See Anguisciola, Sofonisba.

Anhalt (än'hält). Former duchy in N Germany, later a Land (state) of the German Empire, now part of Saxony-Anhalt, in that part of Germany under Russian occupation. It was surrounded by Prussia and consisted of two chief portions, an eastern (Dessau-Köthen-Bernburg), which is level, and a western (Ballenstedt), which is hilly and mountainous. It had also several enclaves. Its capital was Dessau, and its government a hereditary constitutional monarchy under a duke and Landtag (parliament). It sent one member to the Bundesrat and two members to the Reichstag. It became an independent principality in the first part of the 13th century and was often divided and reunited. The last duchy was formed in 1863 by the union of the duchies of Anhalt-Dessau-Köthen and Anhalt-Bernburg. Area, 888 sq. mi.; pop. (of the region), less than 450,000 (1939).

Anhanguera (u.nyung.gä'rạ). See Bueno de Silva, Bartholomeu.

Anholt (än'hôlt). Island belonging to Denmark, part of the amt (county) of Randers, situated in the Kattegat ab. 47 mi. N of Zealand. Length, ab. 7 mi.

Anholt (än'holt). Small town in W Germany, in the former province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated on the Ijssel River, on the Dutch frontier, ab. 16 mi. NW of Wesel. The town suffered considerable damage during World War II; however, the Schloss (castle) still stands and repairs are under way, and the Salm-Salm Archives are reasonably well preserved.

Anhwei (än'hwā'). [Also: Anhui (-hwā'), Nganhui, Nganhwei.] Province in E China, bounded by Kiangsu on the NE, by Kiangsu and Chekiang on the E, by Kiangsi on the S, by Hupeh and Honan on the W, and by Honan on the NW. It contains part of the green-tea district, and also grows much rice and has considerable trade on the Yangtze-Kiang. Capitals, Hofei and Wuhu; area, ab. 56,500 sq. mi.; pop. 24,473,693 (1950).

Ani (ä'nē). See Anni.

Aniakchak (an.i.ak'chak). Volcano in SW Alaska, in the Aleutian Range, with a crater ab. 6 mi. across at its widest point (and thus the largest known crater of its kind in the world). Its last eruption took place in 1931.

Anian (ā'ni.ạn), Straits of. Early name of Bering Strait.

Anicet-Bourgeois (à.nē.se.bör.zhwà), Auguste. b. at Paris, Dec. 25, 1806; d. at Pau, France, Jan. 12, 1871. French dramatist and author of vaudevilles, melodramas, and other works for the stage.

Anicetus (an.i.sē'tus). fl. c60 A.D. Roman freedman. He was a tutor of Nero.

Anicetus, Saint. Pope from 155 to 166, successor to Pius I. He was visited by Saint Polycarp for an indecisive conference on the Paschal controversy.

Aniche or Aniches (à.nēsh). Town in N France, in the department of Nord, between Douai and Valenciennes. It has coal mines, glass manufactures, and other industries. 9,037 (1946).

Aniene (ä.nyā'nā). [Also (in its lower course), Teverone; Latin, Anio.] River in C Italy that flows into the Tiber just above Rome. It is the source of a famous waterfall, ab. 330 ft. high, at a point just below Tivoli. It has been since ancient times a source of water for the city of Rome, and is now used also to produce hydroelectric power. Length, ab. 70 mi.

Animal Kingdom, The. Play by Philip Barry, produced in 1932.

Animuccia (ä.nē.möt'chä), Giovanni. [Called "Father of the Oratorio."] b. at Florence, c1500; d. at Rome, 1571. Italian composer of sacred music; predecessor (1555 et seq.) of Palestrina as maestro di cappela at Saint Peter's and source of some of the latter's ideas. He has been called "Father of the Oratorio" for his dramatic laudi, which were sung at the Oratorio of San Filippo, and which have been considered predecessors of the later form.

Animuccia, Paolo. d. 1563. Italian composer, who was for three years (1550–52) maestro di cappella at the Lateran. He composed chiefly religious music, most of which survives only in manuscript.

Animula (ạ.nim'ū.lạ). Poem by T. S. Eliot, usually grouped with the six-poem sequence Ash-Wednesday (1930), and dealing, like it, primarily with the difficulty and cost of attaining the religious life, and also with its paradoxical nature. The poem Animula specifically expresses the perplexities of the soul projected into an existence from which it shrinks.

Anio (an'yō). Latin name of the Aniene.

Anisfeld (ä'nis.felt), Boris Israelevich. b. at Bieltsy, in Bessarabia, Oct. 2, 1879—. Painter and stage decorator, resident since 1917 in the U.S. He is noted for his mystical, decorative paintings, and for his sets and décor for the ballet and opera. He studied at the Odessa Art School, and then at the Petrograd Imperial Academy of Art. Later, he went to Paris, and thence to the U.S. His work has been influenced by the impressionists, and has been exhibited in Russia, France, and the U.S. Among his better known works are Flowers and Woman, The Garden of Eden, The Blue Statue, September, Self-Portrait with Sunflower and Cat, The Dream, and décor for Boris Godounov, Les Sylphides, Le Coq d'Or, and many other ballets and operas.

Anisius (ạ.nis'i.us). A Latin name of the Enns River.

Anjala (än.yä'lä). In Swedish history, a name sometimes given to an unsuccessful league of noblemen against Gustavus III, in 1788.

Anjar (än.jär'). Small town in Kutch, Union of India, ab. 180 mi. W of Ahmedabad: trading center and rail junction. Pop. ab. 18,000.

Anjengo (än.jeng'gō). [Also, Anjutenga.] Village in Travancore, Union of India, ab. 70 mi. NW of Cape Comorin. Once an important seaport, it is now a local trading center, with a small export of coconuts.

Anjer Lor (an'jėr lôr'). [Also, Anjer.] Small seaport in Indonesia, at the NW corner of Java, on the Sunda Strait. It was overwhelmed by a tidal wave following the eruption of Krakatoa in 1883.

Anjin Sama (än.jēn sä.mä). Japanese title of Adams, William (d. 1620).

Anjos (uñ'zhös), Augusto (de Carvalho Rodrigues) dos. b. in the state of Paraíba, Brazil, April 20, 1884; d. at Leopoldina, Minas Gerais, Brazil, Nov. 12, 1914. Brazilian poet, author of the book Eu (1912), whose poems are characterized by a scientific terminology and sad tone. He was a bachelor of law and taught social sciences at several schools in Brazil.

Anjou (an'jö; French, äñ.zhö). Medieval countship and duchy of France. It was bounded by Maine in the N, by Touraine on the E, by Poitou on the S, and by Brittany on the W. It comprised a territory approximating what is now the department of Maine-et-Loire and small portions of adjoining departments. The name is derived from the Andecavi, or Andegavi, a Gallic tribe in that region. Anjou was united with Touraine in 1044, and with Maine in 1110. By the marriage of Geoffrey IV (Geoffrey Plantagenet) with Matilda, heiress of Henry I of England, the way was opened for the eventual joining of Anjou, England, and Normandy under an English ruler. This step took place in 1154 when Geoffrey's son, Henry, already in possession of the French territories, ascended the English throne as Henry II, and founded the Plantagenet (or Angevin) house of English rulers. Anjou was conquered (c1204) by Philip Augustus of France and was subsequently united with Naples and Provence. It was annexed finally and formally to the French crown in 1480 by Louis XI. Capital, Angers.

Anjou, Counts and Dukes of. The origin of the countship has been referred to Ingelger, seneschal of Gâtinais, who in 870 received from Charles the Bald that portion of what was later to be the province of Anjou which lies between the Maine and the Mayenne rivers. Among his descendants were Fulke, count of Anjou, a Crusader, who became king of Jerusalem in 1131, and Fulke's son, Geoffrey IV (Geoffrey Plantagenet), who married Matilda, the daughter and heiress of Henry I of England, and is usually considered for this reason to have been not only the progenitor of the English royal house of Plantagenet, but also of the second house of Anjou, which was thus a branch of the royal family of France. However. King John of England lost (1204) his French fiefs to Philip II of France, and in 1246 Anjou passed into the hands of Charles, the brother of Louis IX. Charles established the house of Anjou on the throne of Naples in 1266. His son, Charles II of Naples, gave Anjou and Maine to his son-in-law, Charles de Valois, and from 1290 the counts of Valois took the title of duke of Anjou and count of Maine. The son of Charles de Valois became (1328) king of France as Philip VI, thus putting Anjou for the moment under the French crown. John II of France bestowed it, as a duchy, on his son Louis in 1356. This third house of Anjou became extinct in the direct line on the death (1480) of Charles, nephew of René. The title of duke of Anjou has also been borne, without implying territorial sovereignty, by Charles VIII of France, by the four sons of Henry II, by the second son of Henry IV, by the two sons of Louis XIV, by Louis XV, and by Philip V of Spain.

Anjouan (äṅ.zhwäṅ). [Also: Anzuan, Johanna.] One of the Comoro Islands, in Mozambique Channel, E of Africa and W of Madagascar, to which it is attached as an autonomous territory. Until 1912 it was governed by a sultan residing at Johanna, the main town; in that year the entire archipelago was made a French colony with Anjouan included. Area, 89 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 20,000.

Anju (än.jo͞o'). [Japanese, Anshu.] Town in NW Korea, situated near the coast at the head of Korea Bay, in the province of Pyongan-namdo, ab. 45 mi. N of Pyongyang. Pop. ab. 25,000.

Anjutenga (an.ju.teng'gą). See Anjengo.

Ankara (äng'kä.rä; Anglicized, ang'ką.rą). [Also: Angora, Engüri; Greek, Ankyra; Latin, Ancyra, Sebaste Tectosagum.] Capital of Turkey, situated on a headstream of the Sakarya River, in the geographic center of Turkey and on what have been in history the main overland trade routes from Europe to the East. The city has a commanding position on top of a hill of volcanic origin. A cosmopolitan city, it is the seat of a university (founded 1934) and of a British institute of archaeology (opened 1948). It was an ancient Galatian town, the capital of the Roman province of Galatia, and an important commercial center on the route between Byzantium and Syria, and it is still one of the chief commercial places in Asia Minor. The district is celebrated for its breed of goats, commonly called Angora goats. The ancient town was founded, according to the legends, by Midas, son of Gordius. It became the chief town of the Tectosages, a Gallic tribe which settled (c277 B.C.) in Galatia, and passed (25 B.C.) into the possession of Rome, when it received the name of Sebaste Tectosagum, and under which it had an important trade. The temple of Augustus, built by the Romans in the town, contained a famous inscription in Latin and Greek (Monumentum, or Marmor, Ancyranum; discovered in 1554), a transcript of the record of his deeds which Augustus ordered in his will to be cut on bronze tablets for his mausoleum. An ecclesiastical council held (c314) here passed 25 canons relating chiefly to the treatment of those who had betrayed their faith or delivered up the sacred books during the Diocletian persecution. A battle was fought here, on June 16, 1402, between Bajazet and Tamerlane, in which Bajazet was defeated. As a result, Asia Minor fell into the hands of Tamerlane and the Mongols. (An interesting historical sidelight of this conquest is that Bajazet, as a prisoner, was carried in a barred litter in Tamerlane's victory processions, and it was thus that the legend arose that he had been kept in an iron cage). Since 1923, when the seat of government was transferred from Istanbul, it has been the political center of Turkey. 286,781 (1950).

Ankarström (äng'kär.strėm), Johan Jakob. See Anckarström, Johan Jakob.

Anker Larsen (äng'kėr lär'sęn), Johannes. b. on the island of Langeland, Denmark, 1874—. Danish novelist. He is the author of The Philosopher's Stone (Eng. trans., 1924) which won the Danish Gyldendal prize in 1923.

Anklam (äng'kläm). [Also, Anclam.] City in NE Germany, in the Land (state) of Mecklenburg, Russian Zone, formerly in the province of Pomerania, Prussia, situated on the Peene River, ab. 45 mi. NW of Stettin. Before World War II it had an important sugar refinery, machine factory, iron foundries, and woolen and cotton spinning mills. Its Gothic churches of Saint Mary and Saint Nicholas, of the 13th and 14th centuries, are impressive monuments, as are the city's medieval walls. Anklam was founded in the 11th century, joined the Hanseatic League in 1244, suffered gravely in the Thirty Years' War, was sacked by the Russians in 1713, and came under Prussian rule in 1720. The population is predominantly Protestant. 19,449 (1946).

Ankober (än.kō'bėr). [Also, Ankobar (-bär).] Former capital of Shoa province, Ethiopia, in E Africa, situated in the highlands ab. 70 mi. NE of Addis Ababa. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Ankogel (än'kō.gęl). Mountain peak in the Hohe Tauern in Austria, on the borders of Salzburg and Carinthia, SE of Gastein. Elevation, ab. 10,700 ft.

Ankole (äng.kō'lā). [Also, Ankori (-rē).] Highland region in E Africa, in Uganda, W of Lake Victoria. The area is, for this part of Africa, densely populated; the bulk of the native inhabitants are of Galla stock. Elevation, ab. 6,000–7,000 ft.

Ankyra (äng'gē.rä). Greek name of Ankara.

Ann (an), Cape. Peninsula in E Massachusetts, projecting E into the Atlantic Ocean, N of Massachusetts Bay. It contains Gloucester and several other communities long important for their fishing fleets, and now important also as resort centers.

Anna (an'ą). In the New Testament, a prophetess of Jerusalem noted for her piety. Luke, ii. 36.

Anna. City in S Illinois, in Union County: center for fruit shipments; seat of a state hospital for the insane. 4,380 (1950).

Anna. One of the principal female characters in John Home's play Douglas.

Anna, Saint. See Anne or Anna, Saint.

Anna (än'nä), Donna. One of the principal characters, a soprano, in Mozart's opera Don Giovanni.

Anna Amalia (än'ä ä.mä'lē.ä). See Amalia, Anna.

Annabel (an'ą.bel). Character in John Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, intended as a satirical portrait of the Duchess of Monmouth.

Annabella (an.ą.bel'ą), Queen. In Sir Walter Scott's novel The Fair Maid of Perth, the wife of King Robert III and mother of Rothsay.

Annabel Lee (an''ą.bel lē'). Lyrical ballad in six stanzas by Edgar Allan Poe, posthumously published (Oct. 9, 1849) in the New York Tribune. The work has the theme, frequently employed by Poe, of separation by death from a loved one.

Annaberg (än'ä.berk). Town in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Saxony, Russian Zone, situated in the Erzgebirge mountains near the border of Czechoslovakia, ab. 18 mi. SE of Chemnitz. Before World War II it was one of the foremost centers in Germany for the manufacture of lace and ribbons, largely in the form of home industries: the lace-making industry was introduced by Barbara Uttmann in 1550, in order to provide employment for the poor population; the making of ribbon was introduced by Protestant refugees from Belgium in 1590. Originally a mining town, Annaberg was famed for its cobalt, bismuth, tin, and silver mines in the 16th century; the last mines were exhausted in 1892. The exact character of the town's present industrial activities cannot be determined, but it is in a region from which the Russians are known to derive considerable quantities of low-grade radioactive ores, and it is believed that this may considerably have altered the industrial pattern of the community. 19,584 (1946).

Anna Christie (an″ạ kris′ti). Play by Eugene O'Neill, produced in 1921 and published in 1922, rewritten from his play Chris Christopherson (1920). It was awarded a Pulitzer prize in 1922. In it, Chris Christopherson, a Swedish-American captain, is reunited with his daughter, Anna, ignorant of the fact that she has turned to prostitution. Chris and Mat Burke, a sailor who loves Anna, leave her when she discloses her past. The three are eventually reunited, however, and Anna promises to provide a home for them. The sea is used throughout the play as a symbol of undefined longing. Pauline Lord created the title part on the stage; it was played in the motion-picture version by Greta Garbo.

Anna Comnena (kom.nē′nạ). b. at Constantinople, Dec. 1, 1083; d. c1150. Byzantine princess and historian; daughter of Alexius I Comnenus. Having unsuccessfully conspired against her brother, John II, she retired to a convent where she wrote the Alexiad.

Anna Ivanovna (än′nạ ē.vä′nọv.nạ). b. Jan. 25, 1693; d. Oct. 28, 1740. Empress of Russia (1730–40); daughter of Ivan V and niece of Peter the Great. She was elected by the secret high council, consisting of eight of the chief nobles, in preference to other claimants, after having promised important concessions to the nobility. However, she frustrated the attempt of the council to limit her power, exiled or executed its members, and surrounded herself with German favorites, of whom Biron was the leader. Allying herself with Austria, she waged (1736–39) successful war against the Turks, gaining Azov for Russia; earlier (1735) she had gained ascendancy over Poland as a result of the War of the Polish Succession.

An Najaf (än nä′jäf). [Also: Meshhed-Ali, Nedjef, Nejef.] City in S central Iraq, near the Euphrates River, ab. 90 mi. S of Baghdad, on several major highways. It is a holy city of the Shiite Moslems, by great numbers of whom pilgrimages are made each year to the tomb of Ali, son-in-law of Mohammed. Pop. ab. 25,000.

Anna Karenina (än′nạ kä.rā′nyi.nạ). Novel by Leo Tolstoy, published in 1855–57. The book, which has as its theme the nature of marriage, is set in the Russian society of the middle 19th century. The titular heroine unhappy in her marriage to the much older Alexis Karenin, finds an affinity in Count Vronski; the rules of society, however, so far prevent the two from enjoying any happiness together that Anna, driven to desperation, commits suicide by throwing herself under a train after Vronski has rejoined his regiment.

Anna Leopoldovna (li.o.pôl′dọv.nạ) or Anna Karlovna (kär′lọv.nạ). [Original full prename, Elizabeth Catherine Christine.] b. Dec. 18, 1718; d. March 18, 1746. Grand duchess and regent (1740–41) of Russia; daughter of Charles Leopold, duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and wife of Anton Ulric, duke of Brunswick. On the death (Oct. 28, 1740) of her aunt, the czarina Anna Ivanovna, she became regent for her son, Ivan VI, who had been appointed her successor by Anna, but was deprived of this post on Dec. 6, 1741, by a conspiracy which deposed Ivan and placed Elizabeth, daughter of Peter the Great, on the throne.

Anna Livia Plurabelle (an′ạ liv′i.ạ plö′rạ.bel). Heroine of James Joyce's Finnegan's Wake. She exemplifies, on a local scale, the River Liffey, and, on a broader scale, the whole female principle; concretely, she appears as Maggie Earwicker, the publican's wife. Her initials, ALP, are woven through the narrative, juxtaposed against those of the hero (HCE, for Humphrey Chimpden Earwicker).

Annals of Cuauhtitlan (kwou.tē.tlän′). Name given to an early post-conquest Indian manuscript, written in the Nahuatl language, with the Spanish alphabet, in which is recorded in incomplete and confusing form the history of the Toltecs. The work appears to be made up of interpretations of the pre-conquest native pictographic writings.

Annals of the Cakchiquel (käk.chē.kel′). Name given to several manuscript books, written in the Cakchiquel dialect of the Quiche Indian language, but with a modified Spanish alphabet. They contain records of Cakchiquel history during the Spanish conquest and early post-conquest times.

Annam (ạ.nam′, an′am). [Also: Anam; official name since 1949, Central Viet-Nam.] Former French protectorate in SE Asia, in the E part of the Indochinese peninsula: now largely included in the state of Viet-Nam as part of the federation of French Indochina. It lies between Tonkin (North Viet-Nam) on the N, the China Sea on the E, Cochin-China (South Viet-Nam) on the S, and Laos and Cambodia on the W. It is rich in agricultural and natural resources, having oil wells, and gold, copper, iron, coal, and zinc mines. The chief product of the region is rice, but sugar, cinnamon, paper, and tea are also exported. The government was until 1949 a monarchy, with a French resident; it is now administered by a governor under the Viet-Namese chief of state. The inhabitants are Annamites (in the towns and along the coasts) and Moïs (in the hill districts), and the prevailing religions are Buddhism, Confucianism, spirit-worship, and Christianity. It was formerly a Chinese possession, and gained its independence in 1428. It became a French protectorate by a treaty signed in 1884. Capital, Hué; area, 56,973 sq. mi.; pop. 7,183,827 (1943).

Annamaboe (ăn.nä.mä.bō′). See Anomabu.

Anna Matilda (an′ạ mạ.til′dạ). Name adopted by Mrs. Hannah Cowley, dramatist and poet, in a poetical correspondence with Robert Merry (who called himself "Della Crusca"). With two others of her school (the "Della Cruscans") she was held up to scorn by the critic William Gifford in his Baviad and Maeviad, and the name "Anna Matilda" acquired considerable usage as a synonym for namby-pamby verse and sentimental fiction.

Annamese (an.ạ.mēz′, -mēs′) or Annamites (an′ạ.mīts). Name sometimes applied to the Vietnamese people of Indochina. Vietnamese is the name which they themselves prefer.

Annamese. [Also: Annamite, Vietnamese, Viet-Namese.] Language spoken by ab. 16 million people in Indochina.

Annan (an′ạn). Royal burgh, seaport, and market town in S Scotland, in Dumfriesshire, situated near the entrance of the river Annan into Solway Firth, ab. 15 mi. SE of Dumfries, ab. 317 mi. N of London by rail. The town possesses salmon-fishing rights to a considerable portion of Solway Firth. Annan was the birthplace (1792) of Edward Irving. 4,562 (est. 1948).

Annandale (an′an.dāl). Valley of the river Annan, in S Scotland, in Dumfriesshire. It forms the middle one of the three divisions of Dumfriesshire. Length, ab. 30 mi.; width, ab. 15 mi.

Annan River (an′ạn). River in S Scotland, in Dumfriesshire. It rises on the Dumfriesshire-Peeblesshire boundary, ab. 5 mi. N of Moffat and flows southward into the Solway Firth ab. 2 mi. S of Annan. Length, ab. 49 mi.

Anna of the Five Towns (an′ạ). Novel by Arnold Bennett, published in 1902. A study of a young middle-class woman, it is the first volume in the first "Five Towns" trilogy, which also contains Leonora (1903) and Sacred and Profane Love (1905; revised, 1911, as The Book of Carlotta). The "Five Towns" comprised a district in Staffordshire known as "the Potteries," a grimy and unlovely locality. Bennett himself came from one of the towns and his affectionate knowledge of it made him one of the foremost of the regionalists.

Anna Petrovna (än′nạ pi.trôv′nạ). b. 1708; d. 1728. Russian grand duchess; eldest daughter of Peter the Great and Catherine I, wife of Charles Frederick, duke of Holstein-Gottorp, and mother of Peter III of Russia.

Annapolis (ạ.nap′ọ.lis). [Former names, Providence, Anne Arundel Town.] City in C Maryland, capital of the state and county seat of Anne Arundel County, on the Severn River, ab. 2 mi. from Chesapeake Bay: the seat of the U.S. Naval Academy and St. John's College. The town was founded in 1649 and became a city in 1696; it was one of the meeting places (November, 1783 to June, 1784) of the Continental Congress, and Washington here resigned his commission as commander in chief, in December, 1783. It was the seat of the Annapolis Convention (1786), predecessor of the Federal Convention of 1787. Pop. 10,047 (1950).

Annapolis Basin. Arm of the Bay of Fundy, on the W coast of Nova Scotia, in Canada. The Annapolis River flows into it, and it reaches the bay through an opening (ab. ½ mi. wide) known as Digby Gut. Both the basin as a whole, and Digby Gut in particular, are known for their extremely high tides.

Annapolis Convention. Convention of 12 delegates from the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Virginia, which met at Annapolis, on Sept. 11, 1786, to promote commercial interests. It recommended calling another convention at Philadelphia in 1787, which became the Federal Convention.

Annapolis River. River in W Nova Scotia, in Canada, flowing generally W into Annapolis Basin at the town of Annapolis Royal. Its valley is famous for fruit farms. Length, ab. 75 mi.

Annapolis Royal. [Former name, Port Royal.] Seaport in Nova Scotia, Canada, near the Bay of Fundy, on the W side of the peninsula that forms the major portion of the province. It was founded by the French in 1604, and was ceded to the British in 1713. It is one of the main commercial centers for the famous Annapolis valley apple-growing region. Pop. ab. 800.

Ann Arbor (an′ är′bọr). City in S Lower Michigan, on the Huron River, ab. 38 mi. W of Detroit, county seat of Washtenaw County: seat of the University of Michigan. Its factories produce radios, cameras, and steel articles; trading center for an agricultural and fruit-growing region. 48,251 (1950).

Annas (an′ạs). [Also, Ananus.] A high priest of the Jews, called Ananus by Josephus, according to whom he was appointed high priest by Quirinus, proconsul of Syria, in c7 A.D., and deposed by Valerius Gratus, procurator of Judea, in 14 A.D. He was followed by Ishmael, the son of Phabaeus; Eleazar, the son of Annas; and Simon, the son of Camithus, when Joseph, surnamed Caiaphas, the son-in-law of Annas, was elevated to the office c27 A.D. In the New Testament (Luke, iii. 2, John, xviii. 13, Acts, iv. 6) Annas is mentioned as high priest conjointly with Caiaphas. The first hearing of Jesus was before Annas, who sent him bound to Caiaphas.

An Nasiriya (än nä.sē.rē′yạ). See Nasiriya.

Anna St. Ives (an′ạ sānt īvz′). Novel (1792) by Thomas Holcroft. In it the revolutionary program of "perfectibility" is put into the form of fiction. The idealistic hero confounds the machinations of the aristocratic villain and in the end converts him to a better view of life.

Anne (an) or Anna (an′ạ), Saint. According to tradition, the mother of the Virgin Mary. Her life and the birth of the Virgin are recorded in several of the apocryphal gospels. In art she is often represented wearing a veil.

Anne (of England). b. at London, Feb. 6, 1665; d. at Kensington, England, Aug. 1, 1714. Queen of Great Britain and Ireland (1702–14); daughter of James II of England and Anne Hyde, and wife of Prince George of Denmark (married 1683). She was for much of her reign under the influence of the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, and later of Mrs Abigail Masham. She sided with William of Orange (who, as William III, was king of England from 1689 to 1702) in the English revolution that unseated her father, James II. Among the notable events of her reign were the War of the Spanish Succession and the union of England and Scotland. Her name is given to the graceful style of interior decoration associated with the early 18th century.

Anne (of England), Princess. [Full name, Anne Elizabeth Alice Louise.] b. at London, Aug. 15, 1950—. English princess; second child of Elizabeth II and Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, and younger sister of Prince Charles.

Anne, Fort. See under Fort Anne National Park.

Anne, Mount. Mountain in Antarctica, in the Queen Alexandra Range, rising on the S side of the Socks Glacier and W of the Beardmore Glacier, at the head of the Ross Shelf Ice, in ab. 83°56′ S., 169°20′ E. It was discovered and named by the British Antarctic Expedition (1908–09) under the leadership of Sir Ernest Shackleton. Elevation, ab. 10,270 ft.

Anne, Sister. Sister of Bluebeard's last wife, Fatima. She watched for the cloud of dust which was to indicate the arrival of their brothers to rescue Fatima and herself.

Anne Arundel Town (ạ.run′dẹl). A former name of Annapolis.

Anne Boleyn (bůl′in, bů.lēn′). Tragedy by Henry Hart Milman, produced in 1821.

Annecy (än.sē). [Latin, Anneciacum (an.ē.sī′ạ.kum).] Capital of the department of Haute-Savoie, E France, beautifully situated on the Lake of Annecy, between Geneva and Grenoble. It has an old castle, a cathedral dating from the 16th century, and a bishop's palace. Industries include textile, metal, chemical, and shoe manufactures. A fair is held annually at which the agricultural and industrial products of the region are exhibited; the town is a summer resort and tourist center. It was formerly the seat of the counts of Geneva but fell later to the dukes of Savoy. In 1535 it became, and was for many years thereafter, the seat of the diocese of Geneva. It was taken by Henry IV in 1600, by Louis XIII in 1630, and by the troops of Louis XIV in 1703. Annecy was annexed to France during the French Revolution, was returned to Sardinia, but was ceded to France in 1860. Pop. 26,122 (1946).

Annecy, Lake. Lake in the department of Haute-Savoie, E France, near Annecy. Its outlet is through the Fier River to the Rhône River. Length, ab. 9 mi.

Anne de France (än dẹ frāns). [Also, Anne de Beaujeu.] b. c1460; d. 1522. Regent of France (1483–90); daughter of Louis XI. She served as regent for her brother, Charles VIII.

Annemasse (än.mâs). Town in E France, in the department of Haute-Savoie, E of Geneva. It is an important railroad junction, and a tourist center in the French Alps. 8,831 (1946).

Annen (än′ẹn). Manufacturing town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated ab. 6 mi. SW of Dortmund. It has coal mines, chemical and glass factories and steelworks. It is incorporated into the community of Witten-Annen. Pop. ab. 18,000.

Annenkov (än′nyin.kọf), Mikhail. b. April 30, 1835; d. 1899. Russian general and engineer who projected and superintended the construction of the Russian Transcaspian Railway.

Annensky (än′nyin.ski), Innokenty Fyodorovich. b. 1856; d. 1909. Russian classical scholar and symbolist poet. He wrote poems and plays, after having made a name for himself with a translation into Russian of the works of Euripides.

Anne of Austria (an). b. at Madrid, Sept. 22, 1601; d. Jan. 20, 1666. Queen of France; daughter of Philip III of Spain, and wife of Louis XIII of France. She was regent (1643–61) for her son Louis XIV, with Jules Mazarin as her principal adviser.

Anne of Bohemia. b. at Prague, Bohemia (in what is now Czechoslovakia), May 11, 1366; d. June 7, 1394. Queen of England; daughter of the emperor Charles IV and wife of Richard II of England. It was while she was queen that Richard, infuriated because its bankers refused his request for a loan, revoked the rights of the City of London, and it was largely through the persuasive efforts of Anne that Richard was prevailed upon to restore them.

Anne of Brittany. [French, Anne de Bretagne (brẹ.tány′).] b. at Nantes, France, 1476; d. at Blois, France, 1514. Queen of France; the daughter and heiress of Francis II, duke of Brittany. She married (1491) Charles VIII of France and, after his death, became (1499) the wife of his successor, Louis XII. Through her, Brittany, the last of the great fiefs of France, was permanently united to the French crown.

Anne of Cleves (klēvz). b. at Cleves, Germany, 1515; d. in England, 1557. Queen of England; daughter of the Duke of Cleves and fourth wife of Henry VIII. She was selected for Henry by Thomas Cromwell, for political reasons. She was married in January, 1540, and divorced in July of the same year. Having agreed to live in England for the rest of her life, she died there, and is buried in Westminster Abbey.

Anne of Denmark. b. at Skanderborg, Denmark, Dec. 12, 1574; d. March 2, 1619. Queen of England and Scotland; daughter of Frederick II of Denmark and wife of James VI of Scotland (James I of England). She was interested in elaborate entertainments, personally taking part in masques by Ben Jonson and Thomas Dekker.

Anne of Geierstein (gī'ėr.shtīn, -stīn). Romance by Sir Walter Scott, published in 1829. The scene is laid mainly in the Switzerland of the 15th century. This is one of the works that Scott wrote during the last seven years of his life, when he was burdened by debt and forced himself to unremitting toil to satisfy his creditors.

Anne of Savoy (sạ.voi'). b. 1320; d. 1359. Empress-regent of the Byzantine empire; daughter of Amadeus V, duke of Savoy. She was married (1337) to the emperor Andronicus III, and, after his death (1341), served as regent during the minority of her son John V Palaeologus.

Anne of the Thousand Days. Historical play (1948) by Maxwell Anderson. Considered by many critics to be among Anderson's best plays, it centers upon the brief passion of Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn.

Anne Severn and the Fieldings (sev'ėrn; fēl'dingz). Novel by May Sinclair, published in 1922.

Annesley (anz'li), Arthur. [Title, 1st Earl of Anglesey (or Anglesea).] b. at Dublin, July 10, 1614; d. at Bletchingdon, England, April 26, 1686. British politician and government official under Charles II. He was member for Dublin in Richard Cromwell's parliament (1658); as president of the council of state (1660), he aided in the restoration of Charles II. He also served as vice-treasurer and receiver-general for Ireland (1660–67), and as lord privy seal (1673–82). He was dismissed (1682) from office for criticism of the government in a paper (1681) on Irish affairs and another addressed to Charles II, entitled The Account of Arthur, Earl of Anglesea, to your Most Excellent Majesty on the true state of your Majesty's government and kingdom (1682).

Annesley, James. b. 1715; d. Jan. 5, 1760. English claimant to nobility, the subject of Charles Reade's Wandering Heir. His legitimacy as son of Lord Altham (d. 1727) being disputed, he was sent into slavery (1728–40) in America by his uncle who also claimed the title. His subsequent lawsuit to establish his claim was used in part in Smollett's Peregrine Pickle and Scott's Guy Mannering.

Annesley Bay. See Zula, Gulf of.

Annett (an'ẹt), Henry Edward. b. June 5, 1871—. English pathologist. Educated at University College at Liverpool and Victoria University at Manchester, he was professor (1906–11) of comparative pathology, lecturer (1922–28) in animal pathology, and cancer researcher (1923–30) at the University of Liverpool. He served as Turner Research Fellow (1930–38) in cancer, after having been superintendent (1911–22) of the research laboratories at Higher Runcorn. He took part in the first (1891) and led the second (1900) expedition to West Africa of the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, and headed subsequent expeditions to Uruguay (1905) and the West Indies (1906–07).

Anni (än'nē). [Also, Ani.] Ruined medieval city in the S part of the U.S.S.R., in the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic, situated on the Arpachai River ab. 28 mi. SE of Kars, Turkey: the ancient capital of Armenia.

Annie Kilburn (an'i kil'bėrn). Novel by William Dean Howells, published in 1888. After an 11-year residence in Italy, Annie returns to New England receptive to liberal ideas and interested in philanthropic activities. With the help of a local Unitarian minister, Mr. Peck, she performs beneficent deeds. Rejecting the conventional and, in their eyes, ineffectual type of New England charity, Annie and Mr. Peck organize a progressive "Social Union." Upon the death of the clergyman, Annie adopts his daughter, Idella, and marries Dr. Morrell, who has been her adviser.

Annie Laurie (lô'ri). Song written by William Douglas of Kirkcudbright and widely popular in Great Britain, the U.S., and other English-speaking countries.

Anning (an'ing), Mary. b. at Lyme Regis, England, 1799; d. 1847. English collector of fossils. While still a child of 12, she found the first fossil specimen of Icthyosaurus known to scientists; later she found the remains of Plesiosaurus (1821) and of a pterodactyl, which was identified (1828) as Dimorphodon.

Anniston (an'is.tọn). City in NE Alabama, county seat of Calhoun County, ab. 60 mi. E of Birmingham: center of a great iron-mining region. Iron and steel products, textiles, and chemicals are manufactured in this city. Fort McClellan is nearby. 31,066 (1950).

Annius of Viterbo (an'i.us; vē.ter'bō). [Original name, Giovanni Nanni.] b. at Viterbo, Italy, 1432; d. Nov. 13, 1502. Italian Dominican monk and scholar. He published a collection of spurious lost classics.

Anno (an'ō) or Hanno (han'ō), Saint. b. 1010; d. 1075. Archbishop of Cologne (1056 et seq.); son of the Swabian count, Walter of Pfullingen. He is said to have headed a group of princes in revolt (1062) against the regent, Agnes of Poitou, kidnaping the youthful King Henry IV and usurping the regency. He obtained recognition of Alexander II as Pope at the Council of Mantua (1064). He was canonized in 1183.

Annobón (än.ọ̄.bōn'). Small island off the W coast of Africa, belonging to Spain and forming part of the colony of Spanish Guinea. It is S of the Portuguese island São Tomé and ab. 200 mi. W of Cape Lopez, French Equatorial Africa. The island was uninhabited when given to Spain by Portugal in 1778. Length, 4 mi.; width, 2 mi.; area, 7 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 1,200.

Annœullin (à.nė.laṅ). Town in N France, in the department of Nord, ab. 11 mi. S of Lille. It has a number of industries. 6,283 (1946).

Annolied (än'ō.lēt). Early Middle High German narrative poem (c1090), a chronicle of creation culminating in the life and works of Saint Anno (or Hanno), archbishop of Cologne. It is known to us through Martin Opitz' edition (1639).

Annonay (à.no.ne). [Ancient name, Annoniacum (an.ō.nī'ạ.kum).] Town in S France, in the department of Ardèche, situated near the N border of the department, ab. 37 mi. SW of Lyons. It is located between two ravines. Manufactures include paper, paperware, silk goods, and glove leather; it is a skin and hide trade center. The town has a monument to the Montgolfier brothers, who were born nearby, and who are remembered for their pioneer efforts as balloonists. 15,462 (1946).

Annonce faite à Marie (là.nôṅs fet à mà.rē), L'. Poetic drama (1910) by Paul Claudel, French poet, dramatist, and diplomat, on the theme of human weakness and divine compassion. It is called by some critics one of the few masterpieces of drama since Shakespeare and Racine. An earlier version was entitled La Jeune Fille Violaine.

Annual, Battle of. Battle in Morocco between the Spanish and the Rif leader, Abd-el-Krim, on June 23, 1921, one of the greatest disasters ever suffered by a Spanish army. As a result of it, control of Spanish Morocco was for several years in doubt. The fatal offensive move made by Spanish forces under General Silvestre was unknown to his superior, General Berenguer, but was probably encouraged by King Alfonso XIII. The terrible loss of life and prestige for Spain (10,000 killed, 4,000 prisoners), brought down the Maura government and very much enhanced the stature of Abd-el-Krim.

Annual Register, The. Periodical founded in 1758 and published by Robert Dodsley, a fashionable bookseller of the time and the leading publisher of English poetry. Edmund Burke was the first contributor. Each annual volume contained a retrospective account of the year, even including reviews of a few chosen books. Somewhat imitative in concept of early registers, such as John Meres's Historical Register for the years 1714–38, it surpassed its predecessors by being more inclusive and more literary. Burke remained the principal conductor of this undertaking, of which he made an enormous success, for over 31 years.

Annunciation, Feast of the. [Also, Lady Day.] Roman Catholic holy day observed on March 25. It commemorates the Annunciation (the announcement to the Virgin Mary by the angel Gabriel that she was to be the mother of Christ).

Annunciation, The. Subject of many paintings important in the history of art, particularly by artists of the Italian Renaissance and those influenced by the work of that period. Some of the best known are: 1. Fresco painting by Fra Angelico, in the Convent of San Marco at Florence. 2. Painting by Andrea del Sarto, belonging to the collection of the Galleria Pitti at Florence. 3. Painting by Lucca Signorelli, painted in the San Carlo Chapel of the Duomo (cathedral) at Volterra, Italy; one of this master's best works. 4. Painting by Titian, in the collection of the Scuola di San Rocco at Venice. 5. Characteristic Pre-Raphaelite painting by Dante Gabriel Rossetti, in the National Gallery at London. The model for the Virgin was Christina Rossetti.

Annunzio (dän.nön'tsyō), Gabriele D'. See D'Annunzio, Gabriele.

Annus Mirabilis (an'us mi.rab'i.lis). [Eng. trans., "The Year of Wonders."] Poem (published 1667) by John Dryden, descriptive of the Dutch war and the London fire of 1666. Dryden regards his material as historical rather than epic, but insists on the lofty heroic quality of the events, and he makes them majestic both by the sound of the verse and by the use of grandiose imagery. Many critics feel that the poem is on the whole less interesting than its preface, in which Dryden sets forth his notion of poetic imagination.

Ann Veronica: A Modern Love Story (an' vē.ron'i.ka). Novel by H. G. Wells, published in 1909. It is a realistic story of a middle-class heroine and of her struggle to be free and independent.

Annville (an'vil). [Former name, Millerstown.] Unincorporated community in SE Pennsylvania, in Lebanon County, on Quitapahilla Creek, in a dairying and quarrying region: manufactures shoes and hosiery. It is the seat of Lebanon Valley College. The town was platted in 1762. 3,564 (1950).

Ano (ä'nō). [Also, Mango.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Anyi peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SE part of the Ivory Coast.

Anoka (ą.nō'ką). City in SE Minnesota, county seat of Anoka County, at the confluence of the Rum and Mississippi rivers: flour milling. 7,396 (1950).

Anomabu (ä.nō.mä'bō). [Also: Anamabo, Annamaboe.] Town in the Gold Coast colony, W Africa, ab. 10 mi. E of Cape Coast: formerly of some importance as a seaport.

Anomoeans (an.ō.mē'ąnz). [Also: Aëtians, Eudoxians, Eunomians.] Sect of extreme Arians in the 4th century A.D. They held that the Son is of an essence not even similar to that of the Father (whence their name), while the more moderate Arians held that the essence of the Son is similar to that of the Father, though not identical with it. The sect was founded at Antioch, and was first led by Aëtius, and after him by Eunomius and by Eudoxius, whence its members were also called Aëtians, Eunomians, and Eudoxians. Its beliefs were finally condemned at the Council of Constantinople (381).

Anpei (än'pā') or Anping (-ping'). See Ampin.

Anpu and Bata (än'pö; bä'tą). See Tale of the Two Brothers.

Anquetil (äṅk.tēl), Louis Pierre. b. at Paris, Jan. 21, 1723; d. there, Sept. 6, 1808. French historian. He collaborated on Histoire de France (1805), and was the author of Esprit de la ligue (1767), Précis de l'histoire universelle (1797), and others.

Anquetil-Duperron (äṅk.tēl.dü.pe.rôṅ), Abraham Hyacinthe. b. at Paris, Dec. 7, 1731; d. there, Jan. 17, 1805. French Orientalist; brother of Louis Pierre Anquetil. He is best known for his three-volume Zend-Avesta (1771), which was the first translation in Europe of Zoroastrian scripture. He was the author also of Législation orientale (1778) and others, including a Latin translation of the Upanishads.

Ans (äṅs). Town in E Belgium, in the province of Liége, situated on a branch of the Meuse River NW of Liége, of which it is a suburb: coal mines; railroad-equipment works; manufactures mine cables and bricks. 15,476 (1947).

Ansarii (an.sār'i.ī). [Also, Nossarii.] Members of an Arabic-speaking religious sect in Syria, dwelling in the mountains between the Orontes River to the N and Tripoli, in Lebanon, to the S.

Ansbach (äns'bäch). [Also: Anspach, Onolzbach.] City in S Germany, in the Land (state) of Bavaria, American Zone, the capital of the Kreis (district) of Middle and Upper Franconia, situated on the Franconian Rezat River, ab. 25 mi. SW of Nuremberg. Manufactures include shoes, gloves, combs, paper, motors, and stoves; the city is an agricultural trade center, with important livestock markets. There is a library, historical museum, and various educational institutions. Formerly the residence of the margraves of Ansbach-Bayreuth, it took on the delightful character of the rococo style of the period; the castle (1713–32) is one of the finest examples of 18th-century architecture in S Germany. 33,170 (1950).

Anschar (ans'kär), Saint. [Also: Ansgar, Anskar; Latinized, Anscharius, Ansgarius; called the "Apostle of the North."] b. near Amiens, France, 801; d. at Bremen, Germany, 865. Frankish Benedictine missionary to Denmark, Sweden, and northern Germany. He was appointed (831) bishop of Hamburg and later (857) first archbishop of the newly formed see of Hamburg and Bremen.

Anschluss (än'shlüs''). German word, meaning union (literally, connection), and especially the union (1938) of Germany and Austria. Historically, the desire for union between Austria and Germany has long existed in the German-speaking world, but it became especially acute immediately after the collapse and partition of the Hapsburg empire of Austria-Hungary in 1918. The Austrian constituent assembly declared the country a part of Germany, and the Weimar republic responded with similar declarations. However, the Allied powers prevented the union by imposing upon Austria, through Article 88 of the peace treaty of St.-Germain, the obligation to maintain her full sovereignty. The propaganda in favor of union flared up again in 1921 when plebiscites aiming at the union with Germany were held in some Austrian provinces. Austria, nevertheless, reaffirmed Article 88 by the Geneva Convention of November, 1922, through which she received economic and financial assistance from the League of Nations. The European powers saw in the German-Austrian customs union treaty of March, 1931, another attempt at the achievement of union. Their strong opposition induced Germany and Austria to renounce the project before the League of Nations a day before the International Court at The Hague declared the treaty to be in violation of Article 88 and the Geneva Convention. Hitler tried to bring about an Anschluss in July, 1934, by an abortive coup which culminated in the assassination of the Austrian chancellor Dollfuss. With Italian support the Austrians thereafter maintained their independence until March, 1938, when Hitler marched troops into an Austria prepared by propaganda, a resurgence of pan-German feeling, and native fascist elements to accept him without resistance.

Anschütz-Kämpfe (än'shüts.kemp'fę), Hermann. b. at Zweibrücken, Germany, Oct. 3, 1872; d. at Munich, Germany, May 6, 1931. He invented (1908) a gyrocompass employing the flotation method.

Ansdell (anz'del), Richard. b. at Liverpool, England, 1815; d. at Farnborough, England, April 20, 1885. English painter, chiefly of animal life. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1840 and became a member of that body in 1870. His works include Stag at Bay, Combat of Red Stags, and Hunting the Boar.

Anse (äṅs). Small community in E central France, in the department of Rhône, situated on the Azergue River near the Saône River, ab. 14 mi. NW of Lyons. It was an important place in the Middle Ages.

Ansedonia (än.sā.dō'nyä). [Ancient name, Cosa.] Small town in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Tuscany, on the coast near Orbetello. Its remains of Etruscan fortifications, the most perfect in Italy, are in plan an approximate square of about a mile in circuit. The lower part of the walls is of huge polygonal blocks so exactly fitted that a knifeblade cannot be inserted in the joints.

Anseel (än'sāl), Edward. b. at Ghent, 1856—. Belgian publicist and politician. He was minister of railroads in the period 1925–27.

Ansegis (an'sę.jis) or Ansegisus (an.sę.jī'sus), Saint. b. c770; d. July 20, 833. Abbot of Fontanelle (823 et seq.). He enlarged the library at Fontanelle until it was among the greatest of its time in Europe. He also compiled the laws and decrees of Charlemagne and his son, Louis le Debonnaire, in a four-volume work (826) entitled Quatuor Libri Capitularium Regum Francorum, sometimes known as Capitularies from the general name applied to the collective laws of the Carolingian and Merovingian kings.

Anselm (an'selm), Saint. b. at Aosta, Italy, 1033; d. at Canterbury, England, 1109. Burgundian prelate who became archbishop of Canterbury; forerunner of the great medieval scholastic philosophers. In 1060 he became a monk at Bec, in Normandy; he studied under Lanfranc and succeeded him as prior (1063–78) of Bec, in the latter year becoming abbot. Made archbishop of Canterbury in 1093 by William II of England (William Rufus), he accepted reluctantly, with the stipulation that church rule of prelates, rather than royal sanction (inaugurated by Gregory VII), be observed, thus beginning a long struggle with William (1087–1100) and with Henry I (1100–35) over the right of investiture, ending in compromise (1107) with Henry. An expositor of Augustinian doctrine and of the priority of faith over reason, he anticipated the thought of later scholastics, though he was not accepted by them because he wrote tracts and dialogues (as distinguished from treatises) on separate questions. He is now most noted for his ontological proof of the existence of God, which states that the concept of perfection encompasses all desirable traits, including real existence. Immanuel Kant, among others, attempted a refutation of this reasoning, but it remains nevertheless one of the most often cited of arguments in support of the existence of God. He was the author of Monologion and Proslogion (on God) and Cur Deus Homo (on atonement). He was canonized (1494) by Pope Alexander VI.

Anselme (äⁿ.selm). Character in the drama L'Avare, by Molière.

Anselme (däⁿ.selm), Jacques Bernard Modeste d'. b. at Apt, France, July 22, 1740; d. 1812. French general, commander of the army of the Var in 1792.

Anselm of Laon (an'selm; läⁿ). [French, Anselme de Laon (äⁿ.selm dẹ läⁿ); Latinized, Anselmus Laudinensis.] b. at Laon, France, c1030; d. July 15, 1117. French theologian, author of Glossa interlinearis (Antwerp, 1634), an interlinear gloss of the Vulgate Bible.

Anselm of Lucca (lōk'kä), Saint. b. at Mantua, Italy, c1036; d. 1086. Italian Benedictine ecclesiastic and reformer; nephew of Pope Alexander II.

Ansermet (äⁿ.ser.me), Ernest. b. at Vevey, Switzerland, Nov. 11, 1883—. Swiss conductor of music. A former professor of mathematics, he is the composer of the symphonic poem Feuilles de Printemps. He was the conductor (1915 et seq.) for the Ballet Russe under Diaghilev, and came to be highly regarded as an interpreter of Stravinsky and other moderns. He was the founder (1918) and permanent conductor of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande.

Ansgar (ans'gär), Saint. See Anschar, Saint.

Anshan (än'shän'). City in NE China, in the province of Liaotung, Manchuria, on the railroad halfway between Mukden and Yingkow. There is coal and some low-grade iron ore in the vicinity; the principal iron and steel works of Manchuria are located here. Area of municipality, ab. 140 sq. mi.; pop. 185,159 (1950).

Anshu (än.shö). Japanese name of Anju.

Ansibarii (an.si.bār'i.ī). See Ampsivarii.

Anskar (ans'kär), Saint. See Anschar, Saint.

Ansley (ānz'li), Clarke Fisher. b. at Swedona, Ill., Dec. 29, 1869; d. Feb. 14, 1939. American editor and teacher. He was on the staff (1894–99) of the University of Nebraska, head (1899–1917) of the English department at the State University of Iowa, and director (1922–23) of the New School for Social Research at New York. After serving as editor (1921–22) of The New State at Lincoln, Neb., he was editor-in-chief (1927 et seq.) of the Columbia University Press and the Columbia Encyclopedia.

Anslo (äns'lō), Reinier. b. at Amsterdam, 1626; d. at Perugia, Italy, May 10, 1669. Dutch poet. He wrote The Martyr Crown of Saint Stephen, The Plague at Naples, and The Paris Wedding (on the subject of the massacre of Saint Bartholomew's Eve).

Anson (an'sọn). City in W central Texas, county seat of Jones County, ab. 24 mi. N of Abilene: cotton processing and shipping. Once a cattle town, it still holds an annual Cowboys' Christmas Ball. 2,708 (1950).

Anson, Adrian Constantine. [Called "Cap" Anson.] b. at Marshalltown, Iowa, April 17, 1852; d. April 14, 1922. American baseball player. He was employed by the Philadelphia Athletics (1872–76) and the Chicago National League team (1876–97); as captain and manager, he led the latter to pennants in 1880, 1881, 1882, 1885, and 1886. Best known for his hitting prowess, he attained an overall average of .331 in his 22 years with Chicago.

Anson, George. [Title, Baron Anson.] b. at Shugborough, England, April 23, 1697; d. at Moor Park, England, June 6, 1762. English admiral, notable for his successes against the Spanish and the French. He circumnavigated the globe, and made important reforms in the British navy. As a captain, he was assigned (1724) to protect South Carolina from pirates and Spaniards. He was the commodore of a squadron of six ships sent (1740) to attack Spanish holdings on the Pacific coast of South America; although his fleet was finally reduced by storms to one ship, the Centurion, he harassed the enemy's commerce and captured (1743) the Spanish treasure-ship, Nuestra Señora de Covadonga, on its way from Manila to Acapulco, taking booty valued at 500,000 pounds, and returned (1744) to England via the Cape of Good Hope. Made rear admiral (1745) and vice-admiral (1746) with command of the Channel fleet, he defeated (1747) a French convoy off Cape Finisterre. As first lord of the admiralty (1751–56 and 1757–62), he reorganized naval administration, supply, and discipline, creating (1755) the corps of marines. He was in office during the conquest of Canada; in 1761 he was named admiral of the fleet.

Anson, Sir William Reynell. b. at Walberton, Sussex, England, 1843; d. 1914. English jurist, university official, and member of Parliament. He was vice-chancellor of Oxford (1898–99) and Liberal Unionist member of Parliament (1899 et seq.). Author of Principles of the English Law of Contract (1879), the two-volume Law and Custom of the Constitution (1886, 1892), and others.

Ansonia (an.sō'ni.ạ). City in SW Connecticut, in New Haven County, on the Naugatuck River, ab. 10 mi. NW of New Haven: manufactures include copper, brass, and electrical goods. 18,706 (1950).

Anspach (äns'päch). See Ansbach.

Anspach, Caroline of. See Caroline of Anspach.

Anspacher (äns'pä.kẻr), Louis Kaufman. b. at Cincinnati, Ohio, March 1, 1878; d. at Nashville, Tenn., May 10, 1947. American writer. Author of Tristan and Isolde (1904), Embarrassment of Riches (1906), Anne and the Archduke John (1907), All the King's Horses (1920), A Way of Life (1937), They Saw the Light (1941), The Story of Liberty (1944), Study of the Master Race Mentality (1945), and others.

Ansted (an'sted), David Thomas. b. at London, Feb. 5, 1814; d. May 20, 1880. English geologist, professor of geology (1840–53) at King's College, London. He was a consultant (1850 et seq.) in mining and other fields. Author of Geology (1844), Great Stone Book of Nature (1863), and others.

Anster (an'stẻr). Local name of Anstruther, Easter and Wester.

Anster, John. b. at Charleville, County Cork, Ireland, 1793; d. at Dublin, June 9, 1867. Irish scholar and poet, regius professor of civil law at Dublin (1850–67). He translated Goethe's Faust (1835, 1864), works by Schiller, La Motte-Fouqué, and others. Author of biographies (in the North British Review, 1847 et seq.) of Shelley, Swift, and others.

Anster Fair. Poem (1812) by William Tennant. It is notable chiefly for the fact that it served to introduce the Italian mock-heroic style into English literature.

Anstett (än'shtet), Johann Protasius von. b. at Strasbourg, 1766; d. at Frankfort on the Main, May 14, 1835. Russian diplomat. He represented Russia with plenary powers at the congress of Prague (1813). From 1815 to his death he was ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the German Confederation.

Anstey (an'sti), Christopher. b. at Brinkley, England, Oct. 31, 1724; d. at Chippenham, England, Aug. 3, 1805. English satirical poet. He was a fellow (1745) of King's College, Cambridge, where he wrote Latin verses and was refused the degree of master of arts because of his opposition to regulations. Author of New Bath Guide (1766) and The Election Ball (1776), letters in varied verse poking fun at Bath society, the first of which was in its day enormously popular.

Anstey, F. Pseudonym of Guthrie, Thomas Anstey.

Anstruther (an'struтн''ẻr), Easter and Wester. [Locally called Anster.] Two civil parishes in Kilrenny and Anstruther, royal burgh, in C Scotland, in Fifeshire, situated on the Firth of Forth, ab. 9 mi. SE of St. Andrews, ab. 443 mi. N of London by rail. Anstruther is a seaport and market town. Pop. of Kilrenny and Anstruther, 3,184 (est. 1948).

Anta (ăn'tä). An Egyptian name of Anaitis.

Antaeus (an.tē'us). In Greek mythology, a Libyan giant and wrestler, son of Poseidon, god of the sea, and Gaea, the earth. He was invincible so long as he remained in contact with his mother. He compelled strangers in his country to wrestle with him, and built a house to Poseidon of their skulls. Hercules discovered the source of his strength, and, lifting him into the air, crushed him.

Antakia (ăn.tä.kē'ạ), Antakiya (-yạ), or Antakya (-kyä'). See Antioch, Turkey.

Antalcidas (an.tal'si.dạs). fl. in the first half of the 4th century B.C. Spartan diplomat, politician, and warrior. Dispatched (c393 B.C.) to undermine Athenian relations with the Persian satrap in Asia Minor, he proceeded (388 B.C.) to the Persian court, where aid against Athens was finally obtained, and shortly thereafter he defeated the Athenian fleet near the Hellespont. He exacted the "Peace of Antalcidas" (or "King's Peace") in 386, which provided that all of Asia Minor, as well as Cyprus and Clazomenae, would become Persian, while all remaining Greek city-states would be independent, except for Imbros, Lemnos, and Skyros, which remained Athenian.

Antalya (ăn.täl.yä'). Il (province or vilayet) in SW Turkey, bordering on the Gulf of Antalya (or Adalia). It consists of a flat plain where dates, figs, grapes, and other fruit are grown and a very hilly hinterland where subsistence agriculture is the main occupation. Capital, Antalya; area, 7,519 sq. mi.; pop. 312,102 (1950).

Antalya. [Also: Antaliyeh; former name, Adalia; in the Crusades, Satali, Satalia, Sataliah, Satalieh; in the Bible, Attalia; ancient name, Attaleia.] City in S Turkey, situated on the Gulf of Antalya, capital of the il (province or vilayet) of Antalya: flour mills, and macaroni, canning, and spirit factories. The city was built by Attalus II of Pergamum, and was a leading city of ancient Pamphylia. Louis VII of France launched the second Crusade from here. Pop. ab. 25,000.

Antalya, Gulf of. [Former name, Gulf of Adalia; ancient name, Pamphylian Gulf; Latin, Pamphylicus Sinus.] Arm of the Mediterranean Sea, on the S coast of Turkey, on which the city of Antalya is located. Length, ab. 100 mi.; width, ab. 40 mi.

Antara (ăn.tä'rạ). [Also, Antar (-tär').] fl. 6th century. Arab poet and warrior. His part in a war between two related Arab tribes has become the basis of a folk romance in which he is the hero and ideal of Arab chivalry. The only poem now extant known to have come from his pen is in the Muallaqat. He is supposed by some scholars to have been, by birth, a Christian slave.

Antarctica (ant.ärk'ti.kạ). [Also: Antarctic Continent, the Antarctic (ant.ärk'tik, -är'tik, ant'är''tik).] All that portion of land in the Southern Hemisphere which lies close to the Antarctic Circle and the South Pole. Explorations on the continent started as early as 1800 and have continued to the present day. Various countries have sponsored expeditions but Great Britain, the U.S., and Norway have been the most active. Voyages were made by James Cook (1772–75), James Weddell (1822–24, penetrating to 74°15′ S.), Dumont D'Urville (1837–40), Charles Wilkes (1838–42), James C. Ross (1839–43), the Challenger expedition (1874), the Belgica expedition (1897–99), C. E. Borchgrevink (1898–1900), and the Discovery expedition under Captain R. F. Scott (1901–04, to lat. 82°17′ S., the farthest point reached up to that date). Sir Ernest Shackleton penetrated (1908–09), to 88°23′ S. A notable scientific result of this last expedition was the location of the S magnetic pole at lat. 72°25′ S., long. 155°16′ E. Antarctic expeditions were led by Jean B. Charcot in 1903–05 and 1908–10, and by R. F. Scott and Roald Amundsen between 1910 and 1913, Amundsen attaining the South Pole on Dec. 17, 1911, and Scott reaching it Jan. 17, 1912. Valuable work was done by the Argentine government in establishing a number of meteorological stations. Since 1912 there have been numerous expeditions to Antarctic waters. Sir Ernest Shackleton and Sir Hubert Wilkins both made two trips to the continent. Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd and Lincoln Ellsworth, both Americans, have made numerous expeditions and have brought back valuable information. Various countries that sent expeditions have laid claim to sections of Antarctica. Great Britain (Falkland Islands) and New Zealand (Ross Dependency) have actually annexed areas, while Australia, Norway, France, and the U.S. have merely laid claims. In late years, some South American nations have challenged certain of these claims and even some actual territorial holdings (perhaps most notably the British rights to the Falkland Islands, which have never been recognized by Argentina) and the situation is in a state of flux and indecision. No trace of animal life belonging to the land surface has yet been discovered in the Antarctic tract. Nearly all of the land is covered with ice and snow, but there are occasional bare mountain peaks. The climate is severely cold and windy. Peaks include Mount Erebus, an active volcano (13,200 ft.), and Mount Melbourne (ab. 8,500 ft.). Area, ab. 5,450,000 sq. mi.

Antarctic Circle (ant.ärk'tik, -är'tik, ant'är''tik). Line (shown as broken on most globes) hypothesized by geographers as the N extreme of Antarctica. It circles the globe (and parallels the equator) ab. 23½ degrees N of the South Pole.

Antarctic Ocean. That part of the ocean which is included between the South Pole and the Antarctic Circle.

Antares (an.tãr'ēz). A red star of the first magnitude, the middle one of three in the body of the Scorpion; α Scorpii.

Antelope Island (an'tẹ.lōp). [Also, Church Island.] Largest island in Great Salt Lake, Utah. Length, ab. 18 mi.

Antenor (an.tē'nọr). fl. 6th century B.C. Athenian sculptor who executed the first bronze statues of Harmodius and Aristogiton which the Athenians set up in the Agora and which were carried off to Susa by Xerxes. After his conquest of Persia, Alexander the Great sent the statues back to Athens. He is also believed to be the creator of a statue of a woman in marble, which is still extant.

Antenor. In Greek legend, a Trojan, according to Homer the wisest of the elders. He was the host of Menelaus and Odysseus when they visited Troy, and strongly advised the Trojans to surrender Helen. His friendliness toward the Greeks in the end amounted, from the Trojan point of view, to treason.

Antequera (ăn.tä.kā'rä). [Latin, Antiquaria.] City in S Spain, in the province of Málaga, situated on the Guadalhorce River, ab. 20 mi. N of Málaga: center of a rich agricultural district; trades in olive oil, sugar, and grain; woolen, silk, and leather manufactures; marble quarries. Numerous caves and prehistoric monuments are in the vicinity. The town was captured from the Moslems in 1410. Pop. 37,531 (1940).

Anteros (an'tėr.os), Saint. [Also, Anterus (-us).] b. in Greece. Pope from 235 to 236, successor to Saint Pontianus. His tomb was discovered in the catacombs at Rome by De Rossi in 1854.

Anteros. In Greek mythology, a son of Aphrodite and Ares, and brother of Eros. He was the god of unhappy love, the avenger of unrequited affection: the opposite of Eros.

Antesians (an.tē'zhạnz). Name sometimes applied to several Andean Indian tribes. See Andesians.

Antevs (an'tevz; Swedish, än.tefs'), Ernst Valdemar. b. at Vartofta, Sweden, Nov. 20, 1888—. American geologist notable for research on glacial history, tree growth in relation to climate, and early American anthropology. A graduate (1917) of the University of Stockholm, he has been associated at Washington, D.C., with the Carnegie Institution (1922–23, 1928–29, 1934–40).

Antheil (an'tīl), George. b. at Trenton, N.J., 1900—. American pianist and composer. He studied at the Sternberg Conservatory, Philadelphia, and with Ernest Bloch, and received (1931) a Guggenheim award. He first attracted attention in the U.S. with his Ballet Mécanique (1925), which shocked conservative music listeners by its use of mechanical pianos and various electrical devices. His other compositions include Zingareska (first performed 1922), American Symphony (1937), Symphony No. 4 (1943), and Symphony No. 5 (1945); the operas Transatlantic (1929), and, with John Erskine, Helen Retires (1932); and musical scores for the films Once in a Blue Moon, The Scoundrel, and others. Composer also of much chamber music, a piano work, and several violin sonatas. He is the author of Bad Boy of Music (1945).

Anthemius (an.thē′mi.us). d. 472. Emperor of the West (467–472); son of Procopius and son-in-law of the eastern emperor Marcian. He was nominated emperor of the West by the eastern emperor Leo, on the application of Ricimer for a successor to Majorian, and was confirmed at Rome.

Anthemius. b. at Tralles, in Lydia; fl. 6th century. Greek mathematician and architect. He was one of the architects employed by the emperor Justinian in building (532–37) the church of Saint Sophia (or Hagia Sophia) at Constantinople. Author of a treatise on burning-glasses which contains the first recorded instance of the practical use of the directrix.

Anthology, The. Collection of several thousand short Greek poems by many authors, written for the most part in the elegiac meter. In it every period of Greek literature is represented, from the Persian war to the decadence of Byzantium. The first Anthology was compiled by Meleager of Gadara in the 1st century B.C., and to this additions were made by Philippus of Thessalonica about 40 A.D. In the collection by Agathias of Myrina (6th century) the poems are (for the first time) arranged by subjects. The so-called Palatinate Anthology, a version compiled probably in the 10th century by Constantius Cephalas, is the oldest one still extant.

Anthon (an′thọn), Charles. b. at New York, Nov. 19, 1797; d. there, July 29, 1867. American classical scholar, leader in his time of Greek and Latin study based on German scholarship. He was a professor (1820–67) at Columbia College, and an editor of classical dictionaries including Lemprière's (2nd ed., 1833), and Smith's. Author of textbooks, including A System of Latin Prosody and Metre (1838) and A System of Ancient and Medieval Geography (1850), and of Horatii Poemata (1830), the first critical and interpretative edition of a classical author to appear in America.

Anthony (an′thọ.ni, -tọ̄-), Saint. [Also: Antony; called "the Great."] b. at Coma, Egypt, c251; d. c350. Egyptian hermit and early monastic founder. He withdrew (285) completely from society, after having already passed 15 years as a hermit; his solitary life on a mountain near the Nile River was, by his own statements, tormented by constant pressure from the Devil in a variety of forms. His sanctity attracted numerous disciples, whom he gathered (c300) into an ascetic community near Fayum, thus establishing the first monastery in Christian history. He emerged into society only twice, once to encourage martyrs (311), and again a few years before his death in order to attack Arianism. Saint Anthony and his temptations have been a favorite theme in literature and art since the Renaissance.

Anthony (an′thọ.ni). City in S Kansas, county seat of Harper County. 2,792 (1950).

Anthony, Henry Bowen. b. at Coventry, R.I., April 1, 1815; d. at Providence, Sept. 2, 1884. American journalist and politician. He was editor (1838–60) of the Providence Journal, and served as a U.S. senator (1858–84).

Anthony, Katherine Susan. b. at Roseville, Ark., Nov. 27, 1877—. American biographical writer. She is the author of Margaret Fuller (1920), Catherine the Great (1925), Queen Elizabeth (1929), Marie Antoinette (1932), Louisa May Alcott (1938), The Lambs (1945), and Dolly Madison, Her Life and Times (1949). She attended Peabody College of Teachers, graduated (1905) from the University of Chicago, and studied at the universities of Heidelberg and Freiburg. Author also of Feminism in Germany and Scandinavia (1915), Labor Laws of New York (1917), and Mothers Who Must Earn.

Anthony, Susan Brownell. b. at Adams, Mass., Feb. 15, 1820; d. at Rochester, N.Y., March 13, 1906. American abolitionist and militant agitator for female and Negro suffrage, temperance, and women's civil rights. Her father's house was a gathering place for reformers such as William Ellery Channing, William Lloyd Garrison, and Frederick Douglass; she was associated with Amelia Bloomer, Lucy Stone, and others, especially with Elizabeth Cady Stanton, with whom she lectured and wrote. She was an organizer of the Woman's State Temperance Society of New York (c1852) and of the National Woman Suffrage Association (1869); after the latter merged (1890) with the American Woman Suffrage Association, she served (1892–1900) as president of the larger group. Arrested (1872) and tried for voting at Rochester, she refused to pay the fine. Coauthor of History of Woman Suffrage (1881–1900).

Anthony Absolute (ab′sọ.lōt), Sir. See Absolute, Sir Anthony.

Anthony Adverse (ad′vėrs). Historical novel by Hervey Allen, published in 1933, which had a sale of some 500,000 copies within two years after its appearance. Written in a romantic vein, it is set against a background of the Napoleonic era.

Anthony Branville (bran′vil), Sir. See Branville, Sir Anthony.

Anthony Chuzzlewit (chuz′l.wit). See Chuzzlewit, Anthony.

Anthony of Bourbon (bör′bọn). English name of Antoine de Bourbon.

Anthony of Padua (pad′ū.ạ), Saint. [Also, Antony.] b. at Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 15, 1195; d. near Padua, Italy, June 13, 1231. Franciscan friar, theologian, and preacher in France and Italy. He taught at Montpellier, Toulouse, and Padua. According to the legend, he one day preached to a school of fish and was heard with attention. There is a noted painting of him by Bartolomé Esteban Murillo in the cathedral at Seville. The figure of the saint was cut from the painting in 1874, but was recovered at New York and replaced. There is another painting of Anthony, also by Murillo, in the museum at Seville. In this painting, the saint is shown as kneeling, with one arm about the infant Christ, who is seated before him on an open book. Anthony was canonized by Pope Gregory IX in 1232.

Anthonys Nose (an′thō.niz). Promontory near the S entrance of the Highlands, in Westchester County, New York, projecting into the Hudson River from its E shore, near Peekskill.

Anti (ān′tē). Province of the Inca empire of Peru, at the base of the eastern mountains, bordering the Ucayale valley: so called from the Indians who inhabited it. By some it has been supposed that the Andes took their name from this province.

Anti. [Also, Chuncho.] Collective term applied by the Inca to several Indian tribes in the lowlands of E Peru who spoke languages of the Arawakan stock. Principal tribes included in the Anti were the Campa, Piro, and Machiguenga.

Antibes (ān.tēb). [Ancient name, Antipolis.] Town in SE France, in the department of Alpes-Maritimes, situated on the Mediterranean Sea between the Gulf of Juan and the Gulf of Nice, ab. 13 mi. SW of Nice. It is a seaport and winter resort on the French Riviera, and one of the foremost horticultural centers in the region, shipping flowers to Paris and to foreign markets. It also has trade in such items as wine, fish, olives, and oil. In the vicinity is the beautiful Cap d'Antibes, an internationally popular resort. The town was founded by the Greeks. 23,574 (1946).

Antic Hay. Novel (1923) by Aldous Huxley.

Anti-Comintern Pact (an.ti.kom′in.tėrn, -tī-). Treaty signed on Nov. 25, 1936, by Germany and Japan. It denounced the Communist International and bound the signatory powers to take certain joint steps against its subversive activities. By design, the Pact left room for further signatures, and among the nations that later added their names were Italy in 1937, Spain and Hungary in 1939, and the Japanese-sponsored Nanking government of China in 1941.

Anti-Corn Law League. Association formed in 1839, with headquarters at Manchester, England, to further the repeal of the British corn laws. Among its leaders were Richard Cobden, John Bright, George William Frederick Villiers, Joseph Hume, and John Arthur Roebuck.

Anticosti (an.ti.kos′ti). Thinly inhabited island in the province of Quebec, Canada, situated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, NE of the Gaspé Peninsula. It is swampy, rocky, and unfruitful. The chief settlement is Port Menier. Length, ab. 135 mi.; greatest width, ab. 35 mi.; area, ab. 3,043 sq. mi.

Anticyra (an.tis′i.rạ). In ancient geography, a city in Locris, Greece, situated near Naupactus.

Anticyra. In ancient geography, a city in Phocis, Greece, situated on the Corinthian Gulf. It was noted for the hellebore (the ancient remedy for madness) obtained in its neighborhood.

Anticyra. In ancient geography, a city in Thessaly, Greece, situated on the Sperchius. Like Anticyra in Phocis, it was noted for hellebore, the ancient remedy for madness.

Antietam (an.tē'tạm). Creek in S Pennsylvania and W Maryland, which joins the Potomac River ab. 6 mi. N of Harpers Ferry. On its banks near Sharpsburg, Sept. 17, 1862, a battle (called by the Confederates the battle of Sharpsburg) was fought between Union forces (87,164, of whom about 60,000 bore the brunt of the battle) under George Brinton McClellan, and Confederates (40,000 according to Robert E. Lee, 45,000 to 70,000 according to Edward Alfred Pollard, 97,000 according to McClellan) under Lee. The total loss of the Union army was 12,410 (2,108 killed); of the Confederates, 11,172. Other estimates of the Confederate loss are 8,000 to 26,000. Lee retreated across the Potomac on the 18th. The battle has been variously described as a Union victory and as too indecisive to be considered either a victory or a defeat for either side.

Anti-Federalist Party. [Also, Anti-Federal Party.] In U.S. history, the name given to those elements which opposed the adoption and ratification of the Constitution of the U.S., and which, failing in this, strongly favored the strict construction of the Constitution. Its fundamental principle was opposition to the strengthening of the national government at the expense of the states. Soon after the close of Washington's first administration (1793) the name Anti-Federalist went out of use, Republican and afterward Democratic-Republican taking its place.

Antigo (an'ti.gō). City in C Wisconsin, county seat of Langlade County: manufactures of wood products and processed cheese; marketing center for potatoes. 9,902 (1950).

Antigone (an.tig'ọ̄.nē). In Greek legend, a daughter of Oedipus by his mother Jocasta. She accompanied Oedipus, as a faithful daughter, in his wanderings until his death at Colonus; she then returned to Thebes. According to Sophocles, Haemon, the son of Creon (who in other accounts was then dead), fell in love with her. Contrary to the edict of Creon, she buried the body of her brother Polynices, who had been slain in single combat with his brother Eteocles, and (according to Sophocles) was shut up in a cave where she perished by her own hand. Haemon also slew himself. Various other accounts of her life and death are given.

Antigone. Tragedy by Sophocles, of uncertain date.

Antigone (äñ.tē.gon). Tragedy by Robert Garnier, published in 1580.

Antigone. Tragedy by Jean de Rotrou, produced in 1637.

Antigone (ān.tē'gō.nā). Tragedy by Count Vittorio Alfieri, a sequel to Polynices, published in 1783.

Antigonidae (an.ti.gon'i.dē). The descendants of Antigonus I of Macedonia, one of the generals of Alexander the Great. The principal members of the family were Demetrius I (Poliorcetes), king of Macedonia (d. 283 B.C.), son of Antigonus I; Antigonus II (Gonatas), king of Macedonia (d. 239 B.C.), son of Demetrius I; Demetrius of Cyrene (d. 250 B.C.), son of Demetrius I; Demetrius II, king of Macedonia (d. 229 B.C.), son of Antigonus II; Antigonus III (Doson), king of Macedonia (d. 220 B.C.), son of Demetrius of Cyrene; Philip V, king of Macedonia (d. 179 B.C.), son of Demetrius II; and Perseus, king of Macedonia, conquered by the Romans in 168 B.C.

Antigonish (an"ti.gọ̄.nish'). Seaport, capital of Antigonish County, Nova Scotia, Canada, situated on George Bay ab. 38 mi. E of Pictou, on the E end of the peninsula. It is the seat of St. Francis Xavier University. 3,196 (1951).

Antigonus (an.tig'ọ̄.nus). b. c80 B.C.; executed at Antioch, 37 B.C. King of Judea who reigned in the period 40–37 B.C.; the last Maccabean king. He was defeated by Herod, the son of Antipater, and put to death by Mark Antony as a common criminal.

Antigonus. Character in Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale; a lord of Sicilia.

Antigonus. In John Fletcher's Humorous Lieutenant, an old and licentious king.

Antigonus I (of Macedonia). [Surnamed Cyclops or Monophthalmos, meaning the "One-Eyed."] b. c382 B.C.; killed at the battle of Ipsus, 301 B.C. King of Macedonia (306–301); one of the generals of Alexander the Great. After the death of Alexander he received the provinces of Greater Phrygia, Lycia, and Pamphylia. He carried on war against Perdiccas and Eumenes, made extensive conquests in Asia, assumed the title of king in 306, and was overthrown at Ipsus by a coalition of his enemies.

Antigonus II (of Macedonia). [Called Antigonus Gonatas.] b. c320 B.C.; d. 239 B.C. King of Macedonia (283–239); son of Demetrius Poliorcetes. He assumed the title in 283, after the death of his father, but did not actually reign until 276. He suppressed the Celtic invasion and was temporarily driven from his land by Pyrrhus in 273.

Antigonus III (of Macedonia). [Called Antigonus Doson.] d. 220 B.C. King of Macedonia (229–220); nephew of Antigonus II and a great-grandson of Antigonus I, Alexander's general. He was appointed guardian of Philip, son of Demetrius II, and on the death of Demetrius (229 B.C.) he married his widow, and ascended the throne. He successfully supported Aratus and the Achaean League against Cleomenes, king of Sparta, and the Aetolians, and defeated the former at Sellasia in 221. He is said to have been dubbed "Doson" because "he was always about to give, and never did."

Antigonus of Carystus (kạ.ris'tus) or Antigonus Carystius (-ti.us). b. at Carystus, Euboea; fl. c250 B.C. Greek writer, chiefly at Pergamum. Author of biographical works on the philosophers and of a natural-history work entitled Collection of Wonderful Tales, portions of which are still extant.

Antigua (an.tē'gạ). One of the Leeward Islands in the Caribbean Sea, SE of Puerto Rico: a British possession. The chief products are sugar, molasses, and rum. It is also the site of U.S. military and naval bases, and a major stop for Caribbean air flights. It was discovered in 1493 by Columbus and settled in 1632. Capital, St. Johns; area, 108 sq. mi.; pop. 40,777 (1946), 43,504 (est. 1948).

Antigua (än.tē'gwä). [Also: Antigua (or Old) Guatemala, Guatemala Antigua.] Town in S Guatemala, capital of Sacatepéquez department, ab. 24 mi. SW of Guatemala City. The original city of Guatemala, founded 1527, was destroyed (1541) by a flood, apparently from the Volcán de Agua; refounded (1542) on a new site, it was almost completely destroyed by the great earthquake of July 29, 1773; the capital was then removed to its present site, but the town of Antigua grew up about the ruins of the second city. 10,691 (1950).

Antihuenó (än.tē.wā.nō') or Antigüenú (-gwā.nō'). d. 1564. Araucanian Indian of Chile who, in 1559, was made toqui (war-chief) of his tribe. In 1563 he defeated and killed a son of the Spanish governor Villagra at Mariguenu, attempted to take Concepción but failed, and drove the Spaniards from Cañete and Arauco, but was defeated and killed in an attack on Angol the following year.

Anti-Lebanon (an.ti.leb'ạ.nọn). [French, Anti-Liban (äñ.tē.lē.bäñ); ancient name, Anti-Libanus (an.ti.lib'ạ.nus).] Mountain range in E Lebanon and SW Syria, E of the Lebanon range, and separated from it by the valleys of the Orontes and Litani rivers. Its highest peak is Mount Hermon (9,232 ft.).

Antilles (an.til'ēz; French, äñ.tēy'). [Spanish, Antillas (än.tē'yäs).] General name for the West Indies, in the Caribbean Sea SE of the U.S., excluding the Bahamas. The Greater Antilles comprise Cuba, Jamaica, Hispaniola, and Puerto Rico; the Lesser Antilles (sometimes also called the Caribbees) comprise four chief groups: the Virgin Islands (U.S. and Great Britain), the Leeward Islands (Great Britain and France), the Windward Islands (Great Britain and France), and the islands off the N coast of Venezuela (Netherlands and Venezuela).

Antilochus (an.til'ọ̄.kus). In Greek legend, a son of Nestor conspicuous in the Trojan War. He was a close friend of Achilles and was chosen to break to him the news of Patroclus's death. Memnon (or, in another account, Hector) slew him and Achilles avenged his death, as he did that of Patroclus. The three friends were buried in the same mound, and were seen by Odysseus walking together over the asphodel meadows of the lower world.

Antimachus (an.tim'ạ.kus). [Called "the Colophonian."] fl. c410 B.C. Greek epic and elegiac poet of Claros, a part of the dominion of Colophon. His chief work was the Thebais, a voluminous epic poem. His elegy on Lyde, his wife (or mistress), was highly praised in antiquity. He also published a critical edition of Homer.

Anti-Masonic Party (an″ti.ma.son′ik). In U.S. politics, a political party which opposed the alleged influence of freemasonry in civil affairs. It originated in W New York after the kidnaping, in 1826, of William Morgan, who had threatened, it was said, to disclose the secrets of the order. A national convention nominated William Wirt for the presidency in 1831, thus making it the first "third party" in U.S. political history. The organization was soon after absorbed by the Whigs.

Anti-Matrimony. Comedy (1910) by the American dramatist Percy MacKaye. It satirizes the effect of Ibsen and other Continental dramatists on American would-be intellectuals.

Anti-Monopoly parties. [Also called Independent or Reform parties.] In U.S. history, political organizations (1873–76) which drew their following from agrarian elements in the Midwest and parts of the Far West and called for government reforms similar to those advocated by the Granger movement. These organizations vanished after the national elections of 1876.

Antin (dăn.tañ), Duc d'. [Original name, Louis-Antoine de Pardaillan de Gondrin.] b. 1665; d. at Paris, Dec. 2, 1736. French courtier; son of Madame de Montespan. He gained the favor of Louis XIV and the dauphin, and was a member of the regency under the duke of Orleans.

Antin (an′tin), Mary. b. at Polotsk (or Polotzk), Russia, 1881; d. 1949. American author and authority on the immigrant. She came to the U.S. in 1894, and studied at Columbia University. She is best known for The Promised Land (1912). Author also of From Polotzk to Boston (1899), and They Who Knock at Our Gates (1914).

Antinomian Controversy (an.ti.nō′mi.ạn). In American colonial history, a celebrated theological controversy in the Massachusetts Bay colony which involved Mistress Anne Hutchinson and her interpretation of the doctrine of the Covenant of Grace. It had its inception (1636) at Boston, where her lectures created alarm among the New England clergy; perhaps the central point of her theological differences with the established clergy was her insistence that they stressed too much the doctrine of salvation by works and neglected the basic Protestant principle of salvation by faith. Her teachings threatened a revolution in the prevailing concept of moral law, and finally became an issue of high policy in Massachusetts. Mrs. Hutchinson's movement was suppressed; she was examined by a synod, which found her guilty of 80 theological errors, and was brought before the General Court, where she asserted that she had been in communication with the Holy Ghost. In punishment, she was excommunicated (March, 1638) and banished from the Massachusetts Bay colony.

Antinori (ăn.tē.nō′rē), Marchese Orazio. b. at Perugia, Italy, Oct. 28, 1811; d. at Marefia, Africa, Aug. 26, 1882. Italian explorer and scientist; a founder of the Italian Geographical Society. He explored the Upper Nile (1860–61) and later (1869) the territory N of Abyssinia. In 1876 he led a scientific expedition into the Shoa region and established the station Marefia, where he died.

Antinoüs (an.tin′ō.us). b. in Bithynia, Asia Minor; fl. c110–130 A.D. Page, attendant, and favorite of the emperor Hadrian. After he was drowned in the Nile during a trip to Egypt, Hadrian established a cult to deify him, named cities in his honor, and commissioned statues which portray him as an ideal of youthful beauty.

Antioch (an′ti.ok). Town in C California, in Contra Costa County, NE of San Francisco: shipping point for industrial and agricultural products; canneries. 11,051 (1950).

Antioch. [Turkish and Arabic, Antakya; Arabic, also, Antakia, Antakiya; Greek, Antiokheia (an″ti.ō.kē′ạ); Latin, Caesarea, or Antiochia (-kī′ạ).] City in S Turkey, in the il (province or vilayet) of Hatay (formerly Alexandretta), on the Orontes River ab. 15 mi. from the Mediterranean Sea: site of Saint Paul's first ministry. It was founded by Seleucus c300 B.C., at that time at a point on the borders of Pisidia and Pamphylia, was the capital of Syria until 65 B.C., and rose to great splendor. It was called "the Crown of the East," and "Antioch the Beautiful." Under the early Roman Empire it was a famous market town, the most important after Rome and Alexandria, and one of the earliest and most influential seats of Christianity, the center of a patriarchate. It was the scene of a serious riot in 387 A.D., suppressed by Theodosius. It was often ravaged by earthquakes (especially in 115, 341, 458, 507–508, and 525–526), was destroyed by Chosroes in 538 and by the Moslems in 635, and was besieged and taken by the Crusaders in 1098. From 1099 until its capture by the Egyptian sultan in 1268 it was the seat of a Christian principality. It passed to the Turks in 1516. It is now an unimportant town with few relics of antiquity. In 1872 it was devastated by an earthquake. Pop. ab. 28,000.

Antioche (ăñ.tyosh). Chanson de geste of the group entitled Le Chevalier au Cygne. It narrates the exploits of the Christian host during the Crusades in attacking and then defending Antioch.

Antiochus (an.tī′ō.kus). In the drama Pericles, Prince of Tyre, attributed to Shakespeare, the king of Antioch.

Antiochus. In Philip Massinger's Believe as You List, the king of Lower Asia, a fugitive; the son of a daughter of Charles V of Portugal.

Antiochus I (of Commagene). d. c30 B.C. King of Commagene, a petty principality between the Euphrates and Mount Taurus, capital Samosata, at one time a part of the Syrian kingdom of the Seleucidae. He concluded (64 B.C.) a peace with Pompey, and later (49 B.C.) supported him in the civil war with Caesar.

Antiochus II (of Commagene). fl. late 1st century B.C. King of Commagene, successor to Mithridates I. He was summoned to Rome and executed (29 B.C.) for having caused the murder of an ambassador sent to Rome by his brother.

Antiochus III (of Commagene). fl. early 1st century A.D.; d. 17 A.D. King of Commagene; probably the father of Antiochus IV of Commagene. Very little is known about either his accomplishments or dates of rule.

Antiochus IV (of Commagene). [Called Antiochus IV Epiphanes.] fl. middle of 1st century A.D. King of Commagene; probably a son of Antiochus III of Commagene. He was a friend of Caligula, who restored (38 A.D.) to him the kingdom of Commagene, which had been made a Roman province at the death of his father in 17 A.D. Subsequently, however, he was deposed by Caligula, but was restored (41 A.D.) on the accession of Claudius. He was finally deprived (72 A.D.) of his kingdom.

Antiochus I (of Syria). [Called Antiochus I Soter.] b. 324 B.C.; killed c261 B.C. King of Syria (280–261); son of Seleucus I Nicator. It is said that when he fell sick, from love of Stratonice, the young wife of his father, the latter, on the advice of the physician Erasistratus, allowed Stratonice to marry his son, and invested him with the government of Upper Asia, allowing him the title of king. On the death of his father, Antiochus succeeded to the whole of his dominions, but relinquished his claims to Macedonia on the marriage of Antigonus II of Macedonia to Phila, the daughter of Seleucus and Stratonice.

Antiochus II (of Syria). [Called Antiochus II Theos.] killed 247 B.C. King of Syria; son of Antiochus I, whom he succeeded in 261 B.C. He became involved in a ruinous war with Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, during which Syria was further weakened by the revolt of the provinces of Parthia and Bactria, Arsaces establishing the Parthian empire in c250 B.C., and Theodotus the independent kingdom of Bactria about the same time. Peace was concluded with Egypt in 250 B.C., Antiochus being obliged to reject his wife Laodicę, and to marry Berenice, the daughter of Ptolemy. On the death of Ptolemy (247 B.C.), he recalled Laodice (who, it is thought, caused his murder) and also Berenice and her son. The connection between Syria and Egypt is referred to in Daniel, xi. 6.

Antiochus III (of Syria). [Called Antiochus the Great.] b. c241 B.C.; d. 187 B.C. King of Syria (223–187 B.C.), the most famous of the Seleucidae. He was the son of Seleucus II, and grandson of Antiochus II, and succeeded his brother Seleucus Ceraunus at the age of 15. His epithet "the Great" was earned by the magnitude of his enterprises rather than by what he accomplished. He subdued (220 B.C.) his rebellious brothers Molo and Alexander, satraps of Media and Persia, and was forced (after having undertaken an aggressive war against Ptolemy Philopator) by the battle of Raphia, near Gaza, to relinquish (217 B.C.) his claims to Coele-Syria and Palestine. He defeated and killed (214 B.C.) Achaeus, the rebellious governor of Asia Minor; attempted (212–205 B.C.) to regain the former provinces Parthia and Bactria; and was compelled to recognize (205 B.C.) the independence of Parthia. The victory of Paneas (198 B.C.) gave him back the Egyptian provinces of Coele-Syria and Palestine. He made peace, however, with Ptolemy Epiphanes, to whom he betrothed his daughter Cleopatra, promising Coele-Syria and Palestine as a dowry. He conquered (196 B.C.) the Thracian Chersonese from Macedonia; received (195 B.C.) Hannibal at his court; carried on (192–189 B.C.) a war with the Romans who demanded the restoration of the Egyptian provinces and the Thracian Chersonese; was defeated at Thermopylae in 191, and at Magnesia in 190; and sustained naval losses at Chios (191) and at Myonnesus (190). He purchased peace by consenting to the surrender of all his European possessions, and his Asiatic possessions as far as the Taurus, the payment of 15,000 Euboean talents within 12 years, and the surrender of Hannibal, who escaped, and by giving up his elephants and ships of war. Antiochus was killed by his subjects in an attempt to plunder the rich temple of Elymais to pay the Romans, an event which, like his defeat by the Romans, is supposed by some to be referred to in Daniel, xi. 18, 19.

Antiochus IV (of Syria). [Called Antiochus IV Epiphanes.] d. 163 B.C. King of Syria (175–c163 B.C.); son of Antiochus III. He reconquered Armenia, which had been lost by his father, and made war on Egypt in the period 171–168 B.C., recovering Coele-Syria and Palestine. His policy of destroying the Jewish religion, in pursuance of which he took Jerusalem by storm in 170 B.C. (when he desecrated the temple), and again in 168 B.C., led to the successful revolt under Mattathias, the father of the Maccabees (167 B.C.).

Antiochus V (of Syria). [Called Antiochus V Eupator.] b. c173 B.C.; d. 162 B.C. King of Syria (163–162 B.C.); son of Antiochus IV, whom he succeeded at the age of nine years, under the guardianship of Lysias. He concluded a peace with the Jews, who had revolted under his father, and was defeated and killed by Demetrius Soter (the son of Seleucus Philopator) who laid claim to the throne.

Antiochus VII (of Syria). [Called Antiochus VII Sidetes.] b. c159 B.C.; d. c129 B.C. King of Syria (c139–c129 B.C.); second son of Demetrius Soter. He carried on war with the Jews, taking Jerusalem in 133 B.C., after which he concluded peace with them on favorable terms. He was killed in a war with the Parthians.

Antiochus VIII (of Syria). [Called Antiochus VIII Grypus, meaning "the Hook-nosed."] d. 96 B.C. King of Syria (125–96 B.C.); second son of Demetrius Nicator.

Antiochus XIII (of Syria). [Called Antiochus XIII Asiaticus.] King of Syria, the last of the Seleucidae. He took refuge in Rome during the mastery of Tigranes in Syria, in the period 83–69 B.C. Given (69 B.C.) possession of the kingdom by Lucullus, he was deprived (64 B.C.) of it by Pompey.

Antiochus of Ascalon (as'kā.lon). b. in Palestine; fl. early in the 1st century B.C. Greek eclectic philosopher, founder of the so-called Fifth Academy. He sought to reconcile the philosophies of the stoic Mnesarchus and the skeptic Philo, each of whom had been his teacher.

Antiochus of Syracuse (sir'ą.kūs). fl. 5th century B.C. Greek historian. His History of Syracuse provided a record to 424 B.C. and was used as source by Thucydides. He also wrote an account of the Greek colonization of Italy which is referred to by Strabo and Dionysius of Halicarnassus.

Antiope (an.tī'ō.pē). In Greek legend, daughter of the Boeotian river-god Asopus, and mother, by Zeus, of Amphio and Zethus.

Antiope. In Greek legend, sister or daughter of Hippolyte, queen of the Amazons, and wife of Theseus.

Antioquia (än.tyō'kyä). Department in NW Colombia: chiefly a mining region. Capital, Medellín; area, 25,402 sq. mi.; pop. 1,486,300 (est. 1950).

Antioquia. Town in NW Colombia, in Antioquia department, on the Cauca River, at an altitude of ab. 2,000 ft. Pop. under 5,000 (1938).

Antiparos (an.tip'ą.ros). [Ancient name, Oliaros.] Island in the Cyclades, SW of Paros, celebrated for a stalactite grotto. Length, ab. 8 mi.

Antipater (an.tip'ą.tėr). b. c398 B.C.; d. 319 B.C. Macedonian general and diplomat. He was appointed (334) regent of Macedonia by Alexander during the expedition to the east. Earlier service, partly under Philip, included a mission (346) to Athens as ambassador, and negotiations for peace after the battle at Chaeroneia (338). As regent, he suppressed Spartan revolt through a victory at Megalopolis (331). On Alexander's death (323) the partition of the empire left Macedonia under his control as joint ruler with Craterus; he defeated a Greek attempt (322) to throw off Macedonian rule in the Lamian war. He is believed by some scholars to have died of illness and by others to have been killed in battle.

Antipater. [Surnamed "the Idumean."] d. 43 B.C. Procurator of Judea, governor of Idumea, and the father of Herod the Great. He secured, by his participation in the Alexandrine war (48 B.C.), the confirmation by Caesar of his political tool Hyrcanus as high priest in 47 B.C., and was himself appointed procurator of Judea in c46 B.C.

Antipater. d. 4 B.C. Son of Herod the Great by his first wife, Doris. He is described by Josephus as a "mystery of wickedness," and was put to death for conspiring against the life of his father, after having previously succeeded, by arousing his father's suspicions, in bringing about the death of Alexander and Aristobulos, Herod's sons by Mariamne, his second wife.

Antipater, Lucius Coelius. fl. 123 B.C. Roman jurist and historian. He wrote a history of the second Punic war, fragments of which are extant.

Antipatrea or Antipatria (an.ti.pat'ri.ą, -pā'tri.ą). Ancient name of Berat.

Antiphanes (an.tif'ą.nēz). b. c408 B.C.; d. c334 B.C. Greek comic poet, outstanding writer of the so-called Middle Comedy. He is believed not to have been a native Athenian, but he settled there and began writing in c387 B.C. Titles of more than 200 of his plays are known, as well as fragments of text from a smaller number.

Antiphellos (an.ti.fel'os). In ancient geography, a town on the SW coast of Lycia, Asia Minor. Its site contains a Lycian necropolis of rock-cut tombs, which are architecturally important because the façades are in exact reproduction of a framed construction of square wooden beams, with doors and windows of paneled work, and ceilings of round poles laid closely together. These tombs evidently represent ancient dwellings, and the imitation is carried out in some of the interiors. There is also an ancient theater, the cavea of which is well preserved, with 26 tiers of seats.

Antiphilus (an.tif'i.lus). fl. 2nd half of 4th century B.C. Greek painter. His work included portraits of Philip of Macedonia, Alexander the Great, and others.

Antipholus of Ephesus (an.tif'ō.lus; ef'ę.sus) and Antipholus of Syracuse (sir'ą.kūs). In Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, twin brothers, the first of a violent and the latter of a mild nature. They are the sons of Aegeon, a merchant of Syracuse.

Antiphon (an'ti.fon). b. at Rhamnus, Attica, c480 B.C.; executed at Athens, 411 B.C. Athenian orator and politician, the oldest of the "ten Attic orators." A member of the aristocratic party, he was condemned to death (411 B.C.) for his share in establishing government by the Four Hundred. A professional writer of speeches, his work was sold to litigants; his own trial is the only instance of public delivery by him of one of his own speeches.

Antipodes (an.tip'ō.dēz). Cluster of small uninhabited islands in the South Pacific, ab. 450 mi. SE of New Zealand, to which they belong. They are so called from their nearly antipodal position to Greenwich (near London), from which longitude is counted. Area, ab. 24 sq. mi.

Antipolis (an.tip'ō.lis). Ancient name of Antibes.

Antipsara (an.tip'są.rą). Small island in the E Aegean Sea, just W of Psara.

Antiquaria (an.ti.kwār'i.ą). Latin name of Antequera.

Antiquary, The. Novel by Sir Walter Scott, published in 1816. It is so named after its principal character, Jonathan Oldbuck the Antiquary, and repeats the missing-heir plot which Scott had already used in Guy Mannering.

Antique (ān.tē'kā). Province of the Philippine Republic, occupying most of the W coast of Panay island and several offshore islands. It is bordered on the W by Sulu Sea, on the S by the Gulf of Panay, on the E by Cápiz and Iloilo provinces, and on the N by Cápiz and the Sibuyan Sea. It is separated from the E portion of the island by a mountain range with peaks as high as 6,000 ft. Capital, San José de Buenavista; area, 1,034 sq. mi.; pop. 233,506 (1948).

Antiquity of Freedom, The. Poem by William Cullen Bryant, inspired by his fight against oligarchy at home and by his outspoken sympathy with struggles for freedom abroad. It is included in a volume of poems published in 1842. Its theme may be most clearly expressed in Bryant's own words:

O Freedom! thou are not, as poets dream,
A fair young girl, with light and delicate limbs. . .
A bearded man,
Armed to the teeth, art thou: one mailed hand
Grasps the broad shield, and one the sword; thy brow,
Glorious in beauty though it be, is scarred
With tokens of old wars. . . .

Anti-Rent Party. In U.S. politics, a party in the state of New York which had its origin in dissatisfaction among the tenants under the patroon system which then prevailed in the E part of the state. The tenants refused to pay rent in 1839, resisted force, and a few years later carried their opposition into politics. The matter was settled by compromise in 1850.

Anti-Saloon League. Organization established at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1893, for the purpose of preventing the liquor traffic by legislative means. This original unit, progenitor of the "Ohio plan," served as the model for similar local units. The Anti-Saloon League of America, founded at Washington, D.C., in 1895, was one of the major forces in securing the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment establishing national prohibition in 1919. However, the social evils prevailing during the following decade, which saw the rise of bootlegging and gangsterism, contributed toward lowering the League's prestige in the eyes of many voters. After the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment in 1933, the League reverted to operations on a local basis.

Antisana (ān.tē.sä'nä). Village in N Ecuador, on the slope of Mount Antisana; one of the highest inhabited spots in the world (ab. 13,350 ft.). Pop. under 5,000 (est. 1944).

Antisana, Mount. [Spanish, Cerro Antisana.] Volcano of the Ecuadorian Andes, ab. 35 mi. SE of Quito. It was formerly believed to be the only great mountain in the world almost immediately upon the equator. 19,335 ft.

Antistates (an.tis'tā.tēz). fl. middle of 6th century B.C. Greek architect, associated with Callaeschrus and Porinus in planning and beginning the great temple of Zeus at Athens in the time of Pisistratus (c560 B.C.). This work was interrupted by the downfall of Pisistratus, resumed by the Roman architect Cossutius in the time of Antiochus IV of Syria (Antiochus Epiphanes; 175–163 B.C.), and finished by the emperor Hadrian. The unfinished building was compared by Aristotle with the pyramids of Egypt.

Antisthenes (an.tis'the.nēz). b. at Athens, c444 B.C.; d. there after 371 B.C. Athenian philosopher, founder of the school of the Cynics. He was a pupil of Socrates and taught in a gymnasium at Athens.

Anti-Taurus (an.ti.tô'rus). Range of mountains in C Turkey, lying NE of and parallel to the Taurus, regarded as a continuation of the Ala-Dagh range. They run roughly E and W for a distance of ab. 150 mi. and reach a height of 12,481 ft.

Antium (an'shum, -shi.um). Ancient name of Anzio.

Antivari (ān.tē'vä.rē). Italian name of Bar, Yugoslavia.

Antlers (ant'lėrz). Town in SE Oklahoma, county seat of Pushmataha County, in a lumbering region: processing center for lumber. It was the site of the "Locke War" (1892–93). Pop. 2,506 (1950).

Antofagasta (ān''tō.fä.gäs'tä). Province in N Chile, acquired from Bolivia by treaty (1884). Capital, Antofagasta; area, 47,502 sq. mi.; pop. 196,585 (est. 1950).

Antofagasta. Seaport in NW Chile, the capital of Antofagasta province and principal commercial center of N Chile; chief port for Bolivian commerce: minerals; rail and air service. Ceded to Chile by Bolivia in 1884. Pop. 49,106 (est. 1950).

Antofalla (ān.tō.fä'yä). [Spanish, Volcán Antofalla.] Volcanic mountain in NW Argentina. Elevation, ab. 20,900 ft.

Antogast (ān'tō.gäst). Small town in SW Germany, in the Land (state) of Baden, French Zone, on the slope of the Kniebis near Oberkirch: tourist resort.

Antoine (äṅ.twän), Père. [Original name, Antonio de Sedilla.] b. in Granada, Spain, 1748; d. at New Orleans, La., 1829. Spanish Capuchin priest at New Orleans. He arrived (1780) in Louisiana, where he became curé (1785) and auxiliary vicar (1787) of St. Louis parish. The governor, fearing that he intended to establish an Inquisition in the colony, had Antoine sent back to Spain in 1790, ostensibly for "canonical reasons" but nonetheless bound in irons. Antoine returned (1795) to his parish at the order of the Spanish king, who supported him (1805) in his dispute with superior ecclesiastics in Louisiana. The transfer of the colony to France and later to the U.S. found him loyal to Spain and acting (1813–16) as Spanish secret agent. In relations with parishioners, he invariably showed remarkable devotion, and his death was mourned by the entire city.

Antoine, André Léonard. b. at Limoges, France, 1858; d. at Camaret, in Brittany, France, in October, 1943. French actor, stage director, manager, and dramatic critic, who founded (1887) the Théâtre Libre, France's first naturalistic theater. For eight years Antoine managed to maintain his theater with meager means, producing 124 plays, among them many naturalistic dramas by Eugène Brieux, François de Curel, Tolstoy, Ibsen, and Hauptman. In 1894, worn out by his duties, he withdrew from the Théâtre Libre, which was a small subscription theater and always suffered financial difficulties. Three years later, after a season (1896) with the Odéon, he opened his own popular theater, the Théâtre Antoine (1897–1906), where he gave a memorable production of Henri François Becque's La Parisienne (1897), playing the main male role to Mme. Réjane's Clotilde. After the first World War, he became a drama critic, and was honored as the dean of the French theater.

Antoine de Bourbon (äṅ.twän dę bōr.bôṅ). [English, Anthony of Bourbon.] b. in Picardy, April 22, 1518; d. Nov. 17, 1562. French nobleman; son of Charles de Bourbon, duke of Vendôme; husband (1548 et seq.) of Jeanne d'Albret. He became king of Navarre in 1555.

Antommarchi (än.tōm.mär'kē), Francesco. b. in Corsica, c1780; d. April 3, 1838. Italian surgeon, physician (1818 et seq.) to Napoleon at St. Helena. He wrote Les Derniers moments de Napoléon (1823).

Antonelli (än.tō.nel'lē), Giacomo. b. at Sonnino, Italy, April 2, 1806; d. at Rome, Nov. 6, 1876. Italian prelate and diplomat. He became a cardinal in 1847 and was selected by Pope Pius IX to be premier of the papal states' first constitutional ministry (1848).

Antonello da Messina (än.tō.nel'lō dä mes.sē'nä). [Original name, Antonello di Giovanni degli Antonj.] b. at Messina, Sicily, c1430; d. there, in February, 1479. Italian painter, said to have introduced oil painting from Flanders into Italy. Having studied with the followers of Jan van Eyck, he certainly brought, on his return to Italy, a Flemish sense of design expressed through detail. He worked a good deal at Venice. His works include Saint Jerome in his Study and Christ on the Cross (National Gallery, London), Saint Sebastian (Dresden), Calvary (Antwerp), Madonna del Rosario (Messina), and others.

Antonescu (än.tō.nes'kō), Ion. b. in Rumania, 1882; executed there, 1946. Rumanian military and political leader. A member of the fascist Iron Guard organization, he was prime minister (1940–44) until arrested (1944) and sentenced to death for treason.

Antongil Bay (äṅ.tôṅ.zhēl). [French, Baie d'Antongil.] Bay in Madagascar, on the E coast of the N part of the island.

Antoniadi (äṅ.to.nyä.dē), Eugen. b. at Constantinople, March 10, 1870—. French astronomer, of Greek parentage. He has devoted his life to planetary studies at Mendon Observatory. Author of La Planète Mars (1930) and La Planète Mercure (1934).

Ántonia Shimerda (ăn'tō.nyä shē'mer.dä). Pioneer heroine of My Ántonia (1918), novel by Willa Cather.

Antonina (an.tǫ.nī'nạ). The wife of Belisarius.

Antonine Column (an'tǫ.nīn). See Column of Marcus Aurelius.

Antonines (an'tǫ.nīnz), Age of the. In Roman history, the period of the reigns of Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius (who was surnamed Antoninus). It was generally characterized by domestic tranquility.

Antoninus (an.tǫ.nī'nus), Saint. [Original name, Antonio Pierozzi; called Antonio de' Forciglioni.] b. at Florence, 1389; d. 1459. Italian Dominican friar (1405 et seq.) and archbishop of Florence (1446 et seq.). He took part as theologian in the Council of Florence (1439). Author of Summa Theologica Moralis (Venice, 1477), which was printed in 15 editions during the succeeding 50 years. He was canonized by Pope Adrian VI in 1523.

Antoninus, Marcus Aurelius. See Caracalla.

Antoninus Liberalis (lib.ẹ.rā'lis). fl. c150 A.D. Greek grammarian, author of a collection of mythical metamorphoses.

Antoninus Pius (pī'us). [Full name, Titus Aurelius Fulvus Boionius Arrius.] b. near Lanuvium, Italy, Sept. 19, 86 A.D.; d. at Lorium, Italy, March 7, 161 A.D. Emperor of Rome (138–161 A.D.). He was consul and proconsul in Asia under Hadrian, and was adopted by Hadrian in 138. His reign was marked by general internal peace and prosperity.

Antonio (an.tō'ni.ō). In Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice, the princely merchant who gives the play its name. He is of a sensitive, susceptible, melancholy nature, with a presentiment of evil and danger. Being obliged to borrow money from Shylock to meet the needs of Bassanio, his friend, he is induced to sign a bond agreeing to forfeit a pound of flesh if he does not repay the money within a specified time. Not being able to pay, he nearly loses his life to satisfy the demands of Shylock, but is saved by Portia who, disguised as a lawyer, points out to Shylock the impossibility of taking the flesh—his legal right—without spilling a drop of blood—a criminal act.

Antonio. Brother of Leonato, governor of Messina, in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing.

Antonio. In Shakespeare's The Tempest, the usurping duke of Milan.

Antonio. Sea captain devoted to Sebastian, in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Antonio. In Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona, the father of Proteus.

Antonio. One of the principal characters in John Marston's Antonio and Mellida and Antonio's Revenge; the son of Andrugio, in love with Mellida.

Antonio. In John Webster's tragedy The Duchess of Malfi, the steward of the household of the duchess, and, secretly, her husband. He is killed by Bosola, henchman of the Duchess' two vengeful brothers.

Antonio. In Thomas Tomkis's comedy Albumazar, an old gentleman, supposedly drowned, who returns in time to frustrate the schemes of the thievish Albumazar.

Antonio. In Thomas Middleton's play The Changeling, a secondary character who pretends for his own purposes to be an idiot or a changeling; it is from this that the play takes its name.

Antonio. In Thomas Otway's play Venice Preserved, a foolish speechmaker and senator whose buffooneries were intended to ridicule the first earl of Shaftesbury. The part is usually omitted from the acting version on account of its indecency.

Antonio. In John Dryden's tragedy Don Sebastian, a young Portuguese nobleman, a slave at the time the play begins. Dorax, another character in the same play, calls him "The amorous airy spark, Antonio."

Antonio (sänt.ăn.tô'nyō), Church of Sant'. Remarkable church in Padua, Italy, built by Niccola Pisano in the 13th century, and combining pointed forms with Byzantine domes modeled after those of the church of San Marco (St. Mark) at Venice. The aisles and chapels have groined vaults, and pointed and round arches are used together. The church contains fine paintings and tombs, and several magnificent chapels, among them the Cappella del Santo, whose marble reliefs are among the most notable of the Renaissance, and the Cappella San Felice.

Antonio (ăn.tō'nyō), Nicolás. [Latinized, Nicolaus Antonius.] b. at Seville, 1617; d. 1684. Spanish bibliographer and critic. He was the author of the Bibliotheca Hispanica, an index of Spanish authors from the time of Augustus. It is in two parts, each of two folio volumes.

Antonio and Mellida (an.tō'ni.ō; mel'i.dạ). Tragedy in two parts by John Marston, printed in 1602. It uses the conventional Italian setting which Marston liked and had been played in 1601 prior to its printing. This play was ridiculed by Ben Jonson in The Poetaster and in Cynthia's Revels. The second part is also known as Antonio's Revenge.

Antonio Balladino (ăn.tô'nyō bäl.lä.dē'nō). See Balladino, Antonio.

Antonio's Revenge (an.tō'ni.ōz). See under Antonio and Mellida.

Antonius (an.tō'ni.us), Marcus. b. 143 B.C.; killed at Rome, 87 B.C. Roman orator, consul (99 B.C.), and censor (97). He was put to death by the Marian party.

Antonj (ăn.tô'nē), Antonello di Giovanni degli. Original name of Antonello da Messina.

Anton Ulrich (ăn'tōn ůl'riċh). [Title, Duke of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.] b. at Hitzacker, in Lüneburg, Germany, Oct. 4, 1633; d. March 27, 1714. German novelist and poet. He was the author of the romances Die durchlauchtige Syrerinn Aramena (1699–73) and Römische Octavia (1677).

Antony (ăñ.to.nē). Town in N France, a suburb of Paris, in the department of Seine, situated on the Bièvre River, S of Sceaux. 21,233 (1946).

Antony. Tragedy by the elder Alexandre Dumas, produced in 1831.

Antony (an'tǫ.ni), Saint. See Anthony, Saint (c251–c350).

Antony, Mark. [Also: Marc Antony; Latin, Marcus Antonius.] b. c83 B.C.; d. at Alexandria, in August, 30 B.C. Roman triumvir and general; grandson of Marcus Antonius the orator. He served in Palestine and Egypt, and was quaestor in 52 and tribune in 50 B.C. He became a prominent adherent of Caesar, and when he was expelled from Rome he fled to Caesar, who thereupon commenced the civil war. He commanded the left wing at the battle of Pharsalus, was master of the horse in 47, and became consul in 44. He engaged in intrigues after Caesar's death, and was denounced by Cicero; after having fled from Rome, he formed with Octavian and Lepidus the 2nd triumvirate in 43. He defeated Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in 42, summoned Cleopatra to Asia, and later followed her to Alexandria, and renewed the triumvirate in 40 and 37. From c40 he lived chiefly at Alexandria with Cleopatra. He conducted an unsuccessful expedition against Parthia, during which he was defeated by Octavian at Actium in 31. Returned to Egypt, he committed suicide.

Antony and Cleopatra (klē.ọ.pā'trạ, -pat'rạ, -pā'trạ). Tragedy by Shakespeare, written and produced c1607, entered on the Stationers' Register in 1608 and printed in 1623. It was founded on North's translation of Plutarch's Lives and in it Shakespeare followed history more closely than in any other of his plays. The subject was used by John Dryden in All for Love (1678), and by John Fletcher and Philip Massinger in The False One. The character of Mark Antony is incomparably stronger in Shakespeare's play than in the others. Dryden makes him a weak voluptuary entirely given up to his passion for Cleopatra, whereas Shakespeare shows him as brave and noble.

Antony of Padua (paḍ'ū.ạ), Saint. See Anthony of Padua, Saint.

Antraigues (dāñ.treg), Emmanuel Louis Henri de Launay, Comte d'. b. at Ville-Neuve, France, 1755; assassinated near London, July 22, 1812. French politician, author of Mémoires sur les États-Généraux (1788).

Antrim (an'trim). Maritime county of Ulster province, in Northern Ireland. It is bounded on the N by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E by the North Channel, on the SE by Belfast Lough, on the S by County Down, on the SW by Lough Neagh, and on the W by County Londonderry. The county includes Rathlin Island and the Skerries off the N coast. The coastline is largely hilly, especially along the North Channel. The greatest elevation is Trostan (1,817 ft.), in the Mountains of Antrim, in the NE portion of the county. Antrim is notable for its unusual basaltic formations, among them the Giant's Causeway on the N coast. Farming, including sheep raising, dairying, and extensive potato growing, is the chief occupation; there are important fisheries along the coast. Minerals found include rock salt, limestone, and bauxite, the bauxite being mainly exported to Scotland. Belfast is the chief city. Various industries, including shipbuilding, are carried on there. County Antrim was largely colonized from Scotland. County seat, Belfast; area, ab. 1,098 sq. mi.; pop. 213,761 (est. 1947).

Antrim. Town in Ulster province, Northern Ireland, in County Antrim, situated on Six-Mile-Water, near its influx to Lough Neagh, ab. 14 mi. NW of Belfast. Antrim is a market town. Near it are Antrim Castle, founded in 1662, Shane's Castle, and an ancient round tower, an unusually fine example of this characteristic type of medieval Irish structure. It is ab. 95 ft. high and 18 ft. in diameter at the base, and tapers to the top, which is covered with a conical block replacing the original one, which was destroyed by lightning. The small, low door is raised ab. 10 ft. above the ground, and has monolithic jambs and lintel. Antrim was the scene of a royalist victory over the Irish insurgents, on June 7, 1798. Pop. 1,628 (1937).

Antsirabé (änt.sē.rä'bā). Town on the island of Madagascar, off SE Africa, situated at the terminus of the railway from Tananarive, ab. 99 mi. to the N: noted for its thermal springs. 14,222 (1946).

Antsirane (ant.si.rän'). See Diégo-Suarez.

Antuco (än.tö'kō). Volcano in Chile, SE of Concepción. Elevation, ab. 9,000 ft.

Antung (än'tûng'). Former province of Manchuria, created from the SE portion of Liaoning province in 1934. It was abolished in 1949. The capital was Tunghwa; area, 22,468 sq. mi.; pop. 3,214,000 (est. 1947).

Antung. City in NE China, in the province of Liaotung, Manchuria, situated near the mouth of the Yalu River: a seaport, rail terminal, and lumber center. It was opened to foreign trade, by agreement between China and the U.S., in January, 1904, and after the Russo-Japanese War was reopened by Japan in 1906. The Japanese left approached it on the N on May 1, 1904, during the Battle of the Yalu River. The city is on the border of Korea, with which it is linked by a railroad bridge. Most of the overland traffic between China and Korea passes through Antung. 315,242 (est. 1947).

Antunnacum (an.tun'ą.kum). A Latin name of Andernach.

Antura (an.tū'rą). An ancient name of the Eure River.

Antwerp (ant'wėrp). [Flemish and German, Antwerpen (änt'ver''pen); French, Anvers.] Province of Belgium, bounded by the Netherlands on the N, by Limbourg on the E, by Brabant on the S, and by East Flanders on the W. The border toward East Flanders is marked by the Schelde River, Belgium's chief outlet to the sea. The capital city, situated on the Schelde River, is the principal commercial city of Belgium and one of the largest seaports of the European continent. Almost the entire province is a fertile plain; both agriculture and manufacturing are important occupations. Apart from the Schelde, the principal rivers are the Rupel, Nèthe, and Dyle, all tributaries of the Schelde; it is traversed by the Albert, Schelde-Meuse, and Antwerpen-Turnhout canals. The population is Flemish. Capital, Antwerp; area, 1,104 sq. mi.; pop. 1,281,333 (1947).

Antwerp. [Flemish and German, Antwerpen; French, Anvers.] City in N Belgium, the capital of the province of Antwerp, situated on the Schelde River, ab. 60 mi. from the North Sea and ab. 23 mi. N of Brussels: the chief commercial city of Belgium and one of the principal seaports of the European continent. 263,233 (1947).

Commerce and Industry. It is the terminus of the Belgian canal system, and has extensive docks and quays lined with cranes and warehouses; ship-repairing is done, and river boats are constructed for export to Africa. The commercial activities of the harbor of Antwerp come largely under the heading of transport; it exports the iron and steel, metallurgical, chemical, and other products not only of Belgium and Luxembourg but also of Germany, Switzerland, Alsace, and Lorraine, and imports grain, raw materials, and colonial products destined for these countries; grain has long been the predominant commodity in the import trade. There is a stock exchange, established in the 15th century. Antwerp is one of the principal seats of the world diamond industry; it also has sugar refineries and distilleries, and other industries which are only of local importance.

Art and Architecture. The inner city of Antwerp, in the area between the former town walls, contains a number of historical monuments, such as the cathedral (with one unfinished tower), a notable example of the late Gothic style of Flanders; the town hall, built (1561–65) in the Renaissance style by Cornelius de Vriendt; the Vleeschhuis (meat market), dating back to the Middle Ages; numerous guild houses; and the 16th-century Church of Saint Paul (with paintings by Peter Paul Rubens, Jacob Jordaens, and David Teniers), the 15th-century Church of Saint Jacob (with Rubens's tomb), the 17th-century Church of the Augustines, now the academy of arts, and others.

Cultural and Educational Institutions. Masterworks of old Dutch and Flemish and of modern Belgian painters are exhibited in the museum of fine arts. There is also a museum of antiquities and the Museum Platin-Moretus, the latter containing a unique collection pertaining to the early history of printing. Antwerp is a center of Flemish culture in Belgium; it has a Flemish opera house as well as a French theater, a museum of Flemish folklore, and similar institutions. There are a famous academy of art, an academy of commerce, a music conservatory, a nautical college, and other vocational schools.

History. Antwerp, of little importance in the early Middle Ages, was incorporated into Brabant in the 11th century; it became a member of the Hanseatic League in 1315. In the 14th century, the city began to attract the English cloth and woolen trade; in the 15th century the foreign trades-guilds were transferred from Bruges to Antwerp; the stock exchange was founded in 1460. High prosperity was reached in the 16th century, particularly in the reign of Emperor Charles V, who was himself a native of Flanders; at this time it was the center of the transit trade for the Spanish and Portuguese colonies in the New World and harbored business firms of all European nationalities. In the same period, Antwerp was the seat of a famous school of painting (Quentin Massys, Rubens, Jordaens, and others). The decline of the city began with the religious wars; it was plundered by the Spanish soldiery in 1576; conquered, after a long siege, by Alexander Farnese in 1585; all Protestant citizens were then exiled. The heaviest blow came when Holland stipulated in the peace of Münster (1648) that the Schelde River should be closed to shipping. Freedom of navigation was restored only after 1794, when the city was under French sovereignty. Napoleon I, using Antwerp against England, had the first modern docks and quays built. In 1863 the Dutch rights to levy a toll on the Schelde were redeemed and the port from then on grew rapidly in shipping tonnage, ushering in the second period of prosperity in the history of the city. It became the second largest port on the European continent. At the same time it was heavily fortified, yet unable to resist for long the German onslaught at the start of World War I; it fell on Oct. 9, 1914. During World War II, Antwerp was again occupied (May 18, 1940) by the Germans in the course of their drive against the Channel ports. Subsequently, it was for months under the destructive fire of the V-bombs; about one third of all buildings suffered damage. After its liberation (August, 1944) by the Allies, Antwerp served as an important supply base during the remainder of World War II.

Anu (ä'nö). In Assyro-Babylonian mythology, the supreme god of the pantheon. He was especially the god of heaven, and his consort, earth, was the "mother of the gods." His ancient seat of worship was in Uruk and later in Ur. In the time of the Assyrian ascendancy his cult fell into the background, though theoretically he maintained the first place in the hierarchy of the Assyro-Babylonian divinities.

Anuak (an'ū.ak). [Also: Anywa, Anywak.] Nilotic-speaking people of W Ethiopia and SE Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, living SE of Malakal in NE Africa. Their population is estimated at ab. 45,000 (by Cranzzolara, Uganda Journal, vol. 5, 1937). Political authority is divided among hereditary village headmen. Although among the southeastern Anuak a circulating hereditary king is recognized, he has no political authority beyond the particular village in which he resides. The Anuak have patrilineal clans composed of exogamous lineages, and age grades, but circumcision is not performed. The Anuak practice agriculture, and their principal food is millet.

Anubis (ą.nū'bis). In Egyptian mythology, the son of Osiris, often identified by the Greeks with Hermes. He is represented with a jackal's head, and was the ruler of graves and supervisor of the burial of the dead.

Anunaki (ä.nō.nä'kē). In Assyro-Babylonian mythology, the spirits of the earth. With the Igigi, spirits of heaven, they constituted the "host of heaven and earth," subordinate to the higher gods, especially to Anu, the supreme god of heaven.

Anuradhapura (ą.nō"rä.dą.pō'rą). [Also, Anuradhpura (-räd"pō'rą).] Sacred city in N Ceylon, ab. 60 mi. SW of Trincomalee: noted for extensive ruins dating from its period as capital of Ceylon (4th century B.C. to about the 8th century A.D.). 8,975 (1931).

Anuyao (ä.nō.yä'ō). See Amuyao.

Anvers (äṅ.ver). French name of Antwerp.

Anville (däṅ.vēl), Jean Baptiste Bourguignon d'. b. at Paris, July 11,'1697; d. there, Jan. 28, 1782. French geographer and cartographer. He revolutionized mapmaking by insisting on adequate sources and refusing to accept without proof positions indicated on earlier maps.

Anxanum (anks'ą.num). Ancient name of Lanciano.

Anyang (än'yäng'). Town in Honan province, China, some 150 mi. NE of Loyang; it was the site of the last capital of the Shang dynasty from ab. the 14th century B.C. down to the Chou conquest. Excavations conducted there intermittently since 1929 have yielded rich materials for the study of Shang culture and history.

Anyi (än'yē). [Also: Agni, Agnyi.] Group of Sudanic-speaking peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SE part of the Ivory Coast. The Anyi include the Afema, Ano, Baule, Betie, Bonda, Bini, Diabe, Moronu, and Ndenie. Culturally and linguistically they are related to the Akan peoples of the S Gold Coast, but they are divided into smaller kingdoms. Like the Akan, they have exogamous matrilineal clans, and do not perform circumcision. They practice hoe agriculture, and their principal crops are yams and maize.

Anything for a Quiet Life. Play by Thomas Middleton, printed in 1662.

Anywa (an'i.wä) or Anywak (-wäk). See Anuak.

Anza (än'sä), Juan Bautista de. b. at Fronteras, Mexico, 1735; d. 1788 or later. Spanish explorer in SW North America and founder (1776) of San Francisco. He was leader (1775–76) of the Anza Expedition to Alta California. Appointed (1777) governor of New Mexico, he lost favor after the colonies established (1780) by him on the Colorado River were wiped out (1781) by Yuma Indians; he was relieved (1788) of the governorship and disappears thereafter from written records of the time.

Anzac (an'zak). Australian-New Zealand term formed from the initial letters of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps in World War I. Originally, it was applied only to men who fought at Gallipoli; it was gradually extended to all Australian and New Zealand soldiers, no matter where they had served, and applied also to such soldiers in World War II.

Anzac Pact. Agreement between Australia and New Zealand, signed at Canberra, Australia, on Jan. 21, 1944, whereby the two dominions agreed to collaborate in promoting and advancing certain regional and international policies; it provides for a permanent consultation machinery.

Anza Expedition (än'sä). Expedition dispatched (1775) to Alta California by Antonio Bucareli, viceroy of New Spain, for the purpose of preserving Spanish interests in that region against Russian and English designs. Consisting of 244 persons, it was led by Juan Bautista de Anza, and extended from Oct. 23, 1775, to Jan. 4, 1776.

Anzasca Valley (än.tsäs'kä). [Italian, Val d' Anzasca (däṅ-).] Alpine valley in the province of Novara, N Italy, near the Swiss border.

Anzengruber (än'tsęṅ.grō.bėr), Ludwig. b. at Vienna, Nov. 29, 1839; d. there, Dec. 10, 1889. Austrian playwright and novelist, best known for his dramas of peasant life. He eked out a living as a journalist and police clerk until the success of Der Pfarrer von Kirchfeld (1870), after which he wrote a novel, several short stories, and a number of other plays, including Der Meineidbauer (1872; English trans., The Farmer Forsworn, 1913–15).

Anzhero-Sudzhensk (än.zhe'rọ.sō.jensk'). City in the U.S.S.R., in the Novosibirsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, ab. 85 mi. W of Marinsk on the Trans-Siberian railroad: coal-mining center. 71,079 (1939).

Anzin (äṅ.zaṅ). Town in N France, in the department of Nord, ab. 1 mi. W of Valenciennes. It is the center of a rich coal-mining region; the Compagnie d'Anzin, founded in 1717, still holds large mining concessions here. The town was destroyed in World War I, rebuilt after 1919, and in World War II again severely damaged. 14,235 (1946).

Anzio (än'tsyō; Anglicized, an'zi.ō). [Former name, Porto d'Anzio; ancient name, Antium.] Town in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Latina (formerly Littoria), situated on the Tyrrhenian Sea, ab. 32 mi. S of Rome, at one time part of the nearby community of Nettuno: a seaside resort, already known to the Romans, now also a seaport and fishing town. In ancient times a Volscian stronghold, it was incorporated into Rome in 338 B.C., and colonized by the emperor Nero, who also improved the harbor. It was sacked by the Moslems in the 9th and 10th centuries. The harbor was restored by Pope Innocent XII in 1698 and a new settlement created at the same time; excavations of ancient remains were made near here, including the so-called Maiden of Anzio. The statue known as the Apollo Belvedere was discovered here in 1485. Anzio was the birthplace of Nero and possibly of Caligula. In World War II an amphibious landing was made here by American forces on Jan. 22, 1944; severe fighting took place, with large-scale destruction, before the drive on Rome could be started (May 25, 1944). Pop. 7,025 (1936).

Anzoátegui (än.sō.ä'tā.gē). State in NE Venezuela, on the Caribbean coast: oil, and agricultural and forest products. It was the site of some of the earliest Spanish settlements in South America. Capital, Barcelona; area, 16,718 sq. mi.; pop. 238,082 (1950).

Anzuan (än.zō.än'). See Anjouan.

Aoki (ä.ō.kē), Viscount Shuzo. b. in Choshu, Japan, in January, 1844; d. at Tokyo, Feb. 16, 1914. Japanese statesman and diplomat. He studied in Germany and was appointed secretary of the Japanese legation at Berlin in 1873 and minister in 1875, was vice-minister of foreign affairs in 1886–89, and was minister of foreign affairs in 1889–91 and 1898–1900. In 1906 he was appointed first Japanese ambassador to the U.S., retiring in 1907. He was a member of the privy council of the empire.

Aomori (ä.ō.mō.rē). Prefecture of Japan, in N Honshu. It produces some timber and a quantity of foodstuffs. Capital, Aomori; area, 3,716 sq. mi.; pop. 1,282,867 (1950).

Aomori. City and seaport in Japan, in N Honshu, capital of Aomori prefecture. 106,417 (1950).

Aonia (ā.ō'ni.ą). In ancient geography, a district in Boeotia, Greece. The name is often used as synonymous with Boeotia.

Aorangi (ä.ō.räng'gē). See Cook, Mount.

Aornus (ā.ôr'nus). [Also, Aornos (-nos).] In ancient geography, a rock stronghold, situated near the Indus (or possibly near the Kabul) river, taken (c327 B.C.) by Alexander the Great from native defenders.

Aosta (ä.ôs'tä). Province in the compartimento (region) of Valle d'Aosta, NW Italy, bordering on France and Switzerland and including the S slopes of Mont Blanc, Monte Rosa, and the Matterhorn. Capital, Aosta; pop. 227,500 (1936).

Aosta. [French, Aoste (ą.ost); ancient name, Augusta Praetoria.] Town and commune in NW Italy, the capital of the autonomous region of Valle d'Aosta, and of the province of Aosta, situated on the Dora Baltea River at the terminus of the Great St. Bernard and Little St. Bernard passes: tourist center; has an important hydroelectric plant. The ancient capital of the Gallic tribe of the Salassi, it became a Roman colony under Augustus; Roman walls, towers, gates, arches, and theaters are preserved. The cathedral dates from the 11th century with later additions; the Church of SS. Pietro and Orso is chiefly in the Gothic style. Except for short intervals, the town was under the house of Savoy from the 11th century on. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 23,641 (1936); of town, 13,466 (1936).

Aosta, Duke of. Title of Amadeo (1845–90).

Aowin (ä′ō.wēn). [Also: Awowin, Brissa, Brussa.] One of the Sudanic-speaking Akan peoples of W Africa, inhabiting the SW part of the Gold Coast.

A.P. or AP. Abbreviation of Associated Press.

Apa (ä′pä). River in South America that constitutes for most of its course part of the boundary between Paraguay (to the W) and Brazil (to the E). Length, ab. 125 mi.

Apaches (ạ.pach′ēz). Collective term for a number of North American Indian tribes, speaking closely related languages of the Athabaskan family, who ranged during historic times over large areas of N Mexico, SW Texas, nearly all of New Mexico (where they surrounded the settled Pueblo tribes), and E Arizona. All were mainly hunting peoples and after the introduction of the horse, which was eagerly adopted by them, they became aggressive raiders and a threat to the white settlement of the area.

Apafi (ô′bô.fi), Michael. [Also: Apaffy, Abafi.] b. Sept. 25, 1632; d. April 15, 1690. Prince of Transylvania, under protection of Turkey until 1686, when he made a treaty with Leopold I, the reigning Hapsburg emperor. He was succeeded by his son, Michael II, who died in 1713.

Apalachee (ap.ạ.lach′ē). [Also, Apalachi.] North American Indian tribe, now extinct, which formerly inhabited the Gulf coast area of N central Florida. The language was of the Muskogean language family.

Apalachee Bay. [Also, Appalachee Bay.] Arm of the Gulf of Mexico, on the W coast of Florida.

Apalachicola (ap″ạ.lach.i.kō′lạ). [Also, Appalachicola.] City in NW Florida, county seat of Franklin County, at the mouth of the Apalachicola River, W of Jacksonville: important for oyster beds. It was a leading cotton-shipping port before the Civil War. 3,222 (1950).

Apalachicola Bay. [Also, Appalachicola Bay.] Arm of St. George's Sound, NW Florida, in Franklin County, at the mouth of the Apalachicola River.

Apalachicola River. [Also, Appalachicola River.] River in W Florida, formed by the union of the Flint and Chattahoochee rivers, which flows into St. George's Sound, Gulf of Mexico. Length, ab. 90 mi.; navigable.

Apamea (ap.ạ.mē′ạ). [Also, Apamea Cibotus (si.bō′tus).] In ancient geography, a city in Phrygia, Asia Minor, near the modern Dinar, Turkey.

Apamea. [Also, Apamea ad Orontem (ad ō.ron′tem).] In ancient geography, a city in Syria, situated on the Orontes River ab. 50 mi. SE of Antioch; the medieval Famieh, and the modern Qal'at el Mudiq, originally called Pharnake.

Apappus (ạ.pap′us). In Egyptian mythology, a giant, traditionally described as being nine cubits high (approximately 15 feet). His name has been found on many ancient inscriptions.

Aparri (ä.pär′rē). Town and seaport in Cagayan province, in the N part of Luzon, Philippine Islands, at the mouth of the Rio Grande de Cagayan. 10,125 (1948).

Apatin (ä′pä.tēn). Town in N Yugoslavia, in the region of Bačka, autonomous province of Vojvodina, federative unit of Serbia, former banovina (province) of Dunavska, situated near the Danube River NE of Osijek. It is an important marketing town in the center of one of the richest agricultural regions of Yugoslavia. 13,537 (1948).

Apaturia (ap.ạ.tū′ri.ạ). In Greek antiquity, the solemn annual meeting of the phratries (family brotherhoods) for the purpose of registering the children of the preceding year whose birth entitled them to citizenship. It took place in the month Pyanopsion (falling variously in October or November), and lasted three days. The registration took place on the third day.

Apel (ä′pẹl), Johann August. b. at Leipzig, Germany, 1771; d. 1816. German writer. Author of Gespensterbuch (1810–14), a collection of ghost stories, including one upon which Weber based his opera Der Freischütz.

Apeldoorn (ä′pẹl.dōrn). City in the E part of the Netherlands, in the province of Gelderland, situated on the Grift and Dieren canals, ab. 17 mi. N of Arnhem: a garden city; has paper mills, chemical, pharmaceutical, and metallurgical industries, and cigar factories; it is a railroad junction. In the vicinity is Loo (Dutch, Het Loo), the summer palace of the royal family. 85,841 (1949).

Apellas (ạ.pel′ạs). fl. c400 B.C. Greek sculptor.

Apelles (ạ.pel′ēz). b. in Ionia; fl. 4th century B.C. Greek painter, considered one of the great ancient artists. He is said to have been a pupil first of an otherwise unknown Ephoros of Ephesus, later of Pamphilos of Sicyon, and his style is described as a blend of Ionian and Dorian elements. He was celebrated particularly for his portraits, including one of Alexander with the thunderbolts of Zeus, and those of such other Macedonian notables as Archelaus, Clitus, and Antigonus. He also painted a procession of the high priest of Artemis, Artemis and her nymphs, and the Aphrodite Anadyomene (Aphrodite wringing out her hair as she rises from the sea), painted for the temple of Aesculapius at Cos. This last was probably his most noted work. None of his pictures are preserved. The nearest to a copy remaining is Raphael's drawing (now in the collection of the Louvre), from Lucian's description, of the allegory Calumny.

Ap Ellis (ap el′is), Augustine. b. 1886—. British military aviator. Having entered (1915) the Royal Flying Corps from the Royal Engineers, he served with the air ministry and the Royal Air Force after World War I, and headed (1931–44) air training centers.

Apelt (ä′pẹlt), Ernst Friedrich. b. at Reichenau, Saxony, March 3, 1812; d. Oct. 27, 1859. German philosophical writer, professor of philosophy at Jena. He was the author of Epochen der Geschichte der Menschheit (1845; 2nd ed. 1852), Theorie der Induktion (1854), Religionsphilosophie (1860), and others.

Apemantus (ap.ẹ.man′tus). In Shakespeare's Timon of Athens, a cynical and churlish philosopher.

Apennines (ap′ẹ.nīnz). [Italian, Appennino; French, Apennins (ä.pe.nañ); German, Apenninen (ä′pẹ.nē′nẹn); Latin, Appenninus.] Central mountain system of Italy. It forms the backbone of the peninsula and extends from the Ligurian Alps in the neighborhood of Savona SE to the extremity of the peninsula. The highest point is Monte Corno (9,585 ft.), in the Gran Sasso d'Italia. Length, ab. 800 mi.; average elevation, ab. 4,000 ft.

Apenrade (ä′pẹn.rä.dẹ). German name of Aabenraa.

Apepi (ä′pe.pē). See also Apophis.

Apepi. In ancient Egyptian mythology, the great serpent, the embodiment of evil.

Aper (ä′per) or Aperiu (ä.per′yö). See Apiru.

Apfelstedt (äp′fẹl.shtet). Small river in C Germany, in Thuringia, which joins the Gera River S of Erfurt.

Aphraates (af.rā′tēz), Jacob. [Called the "Persian Sage."] fl. 4th century A.D. Christian convert and a bishop of the Syrian Church. He was an opponent of Arianism, and was the author of a collection of homilies.

Aphrodisias (af.rō.diz′i.ạs). In ancient geography, a town in Caria, Asia Minor, situated on the Maeander River (modern, Menderes) in what is now SW Turkey. The site contains the remains of an ancient hippodrome which coincide on one side with the city walls. Both ends are semicircular. The length is 919 ft., the breadth 270; the arena is 747 by 98 ft. There are 26 tiers of seats, divided into sections by flights of steps and bordered above by an arcaded gallery. There is also a comparatively well preserved Roman temple of Venus. It is Ionic, octastyle, pseudodipteral, with 15 columns on the flanks, in plan 60 by 119 ft. The peristyle columns are 35¾ ft. high.

Aphrodisias, Chariton of. See Chariton of Aphrodisias.

Aphrodite (af.rō.dī′tē). In Greek mythology, the goddess of love and wedlock, according to one legend daughter of Zeus and Dione (a female Titan), according to another risen from the foam of the sea at Cyprus, whence she is called Kypris. Many scholars give her an Asiatic origin and connect her with the Phoenician Astarte (the Assyro-Babylonian Ishtar) who corresponds to her. She was originally conceived of as a power of nature, and later specifically as the deity of reproduction and love. She sometimes appears as the wife of Hephaestus, and in her train are her son Eros and the Graces. The chief seats of her worship were Paphos, Amathus, and Idalion on the island of Cyprus, Cnidus in Asia Minor, Corinth, and Eryx in Sicily. Among plants the myrtle, rose, and apple were specially sacred to her; among animals the ram, he-goat, dove, and swan. Of her representations in classical art the most famous are the replica of her statue of Cnidus by Praxiteles, the original statues of Melos in the Louvre, of Capua at Naples, the Medicean at Florence, and the Capitoline at Rome. The Romans identified Aphrodite with Venus, who was originally a Latin goddess of spring.

Aphrodite against Artemis (ăr'tẹ.mis). Play (1901) by Thomas Sturge Moore.

Aphroditopolis (af"rō.di.top'ō.lis). Name of several cities in ancient Egypt.

Aphthartodocetae (af.thär"tō.dō.sē'tē). [Sometimes called Phantasiasts.] Monophysite sect which existed from the 6th to the 9th century A.D. or later. They held that the body of Christ was incorruptible even before the resurrection, and that he suffered death only in a phantasmal appearance. From this they are sometimes called Phantasiasts, a name more properly belonging to the Docetae, who denied even the reality of Christ's body.

Aphthonius (af.thō'ni.us), Aelius Festus. fl. at Antioch, c4th century A.D. Greek rhetorician, author of a textbook on rhetoric and a collection of fables.

Apia (ä.pē'ä). Seaport and chief town of Upolu island, Samoa: capital of Western Samoa territory; site of a high-power wireless station. It was the center of German commerce in the W Pacific, under German rule from 1899 to 1920, when it became part of the mandated territory of Western Samoa, assigned by the League of Nations to New Zealand. On March 15, 1889, a hurricane struck the harbor of Apia, destroying the American men-of-war Vandalia and Trenton, and the German men-of-war Adler and Eber, with several merchant vessels. The American Nipsic and the German Olga were beached, and many lives were lost. Pop. ab. 2,000.

Apiacá (ä"pi.ạ.kä'). South American Indian tribe, now extinct, once centered in the area between the Arinos and Juruena rivers, S and C Brazil. Their language belonged to the Tupí-Guaraní stock.

Apianus (ap.i.ā'nus, ä.pi-; German, ä.pē.ä'nùs), Petrus. [Also: Peter Apian (ā'pi.ạn); original name, Peter Bienewitz or Bennewitz.] b. at Leisnig, Saxony, 1501; d. April 21, 1552. German mathematician and cosmographer. A professor of mathematics at Ingolstadt, he was knighted by Charles V. Author of an astronomical work and Cosmographicus liber (1524; published later as Cosmographia), a mathematical geography containing some of the earliest known maps of America.

Apicata (ap.i.kā'tạ). In Ben Jonson's play The Fall of Sejanus, the wife of Sejanus.

Apicius (ạ.pish'i.us, ạ.pish'us), Marcus Gabius or Gavius. fl. 1st century A.D. Roman epicure during the reigns of Augustus and Tiberius. He is said to have committed suicide rather than economize, after having spent most of his fortune inventing and procuring rare foods.

Apion (ā'pi.on, ap'i-). b. in Libya; fl. at Alexandria and Rome, 1st century A.D. Greek grammarian and commentator on Homer, whose complaints against Jews, as head of a deputation (38) of Alexandrians to Caligula, and books on the same theme were dealt with in Josephus's Contra Apioneum. Aulus Gellius's story of Androclus was taken from Apion.

Apiru (ä.pē'rō). [Also: Aper, Aperiu, Apuirai.] Egyptian variant of the Akkadian word habiru, a word which probably meant "wanderer." For the most part the Apiru were soldiers of fortune, mercenaries, and wandering craftsmen.

Apis (ā'pēs). See also Dimitrijević, Dragutin.

Apis (ā'pis). In Egyptian mythology, the sacred bull of Memphis, worshiped by the ancient Egyptians. He was believed to be the incarnation of Osiris, and was the sacred emblem of that god. Sometimes he is portrayed as a man with a bull's head.

Apo (ä'pō), Mount. Volcano in the S part of Mindanao, Philippines: an active volcano, and highest mountain in the Philippines. 9,690 ft.

Apocalypse. Autobiographical work (1932) by D. H. Lawrence. It was published posthumously.

Apocrypha (ạ.pok'ri.fạ). Collection of 14 books subjoined to the canonical books of the Old Testament in the authorized version of the Bible, as originally issued, but now generally omitted. They do not exist in the Hebrew Bible, but are found with others of the same character scattered through the Septuagint and Vulgate versions of the Old Testament. They are: First and Second Esdras (otherwise Third and Fourth Esdras, reckoning Nehemiah as Second Ezra or Esdras), Tobit or Tobias, Judith, the Rest of Esther, Wisdom of Solomon, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch (as joined to Jeremiah), parts of Daniel (namely, Song of the Three Children, the History of Susanna, the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon), the Prayer of Manasses, and First and Second Maccabees. Most of these are recognized by the Roman Catholic Church as canonical, though theologians of that church often distinguish them as deutero-canonical, on the ground that their place in the canon was decided later than that of the other books, limiting the name Apocrypha to the two books of the Esdras and the Prayer of Manasses, and other books not in the above collection, namely, Third and Fourth Maccabees, a book of Enoch, an additional or 151st Psalm of David, and 18 Psalms of Solomon. With these sometimes are included certain pseudepigraphic books, such as the Apocalypse of Baruch and the Assumption of Moses. The name Apocrypha is also occasionally made to embrace the Antilegomena of the New Testament. The Greek Church makes no distinction among the books contained in the Septuagint.

Apodaca (ä.pō.ŦHä'kä), Juan Ruiz de. [Title, Count of Venadito; called "the Unfortunate."] b. at Cádiz, Spain, Feb. 3, 1754; d. at Madrid, Jan. 11, 1835. Spanish naval officer and administrator. He fought against England, and in the Napoleonic and French Revolutionary wars. In 1808 he was sent as ambassador to England. He was captain-general (1812–16) of Cuba, and viceroy (1816–22) of New Spain (Mexico). He repressed the revolutionists, defeating Mina, who was captured and executed (1817), and drove Vicente Guerrero to the mountains. When Iturbide rebelled (1821), Apodaca was obliged to temporize, and was replaced by Novella, leader of the Masonic insurgents.

Apolda (ä.pol'dä). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, ab. 9 mi. NE of Weimar: before World War II a manufacturing center for hosiery, woolen goods, and knitwear; there were various metallurgical industries. It has a library and vocational schools. The population is predominantly Protestant. 33,439 (1946).

Apollinaire (ä.po.lē.ner), Guillaume. [Original name, Guillaume de Kostrowitski.] b. at either Monaco or Rome, Aug. 26, 1880; d. at Paris, Nov. 9, 1918. French poet. Son of a Polish mother and an unidentified father, he came to Paris in 1898 and emerged shortly after 1900 as a modernist poet, art theorist, editor of Curiosa, and friend and apologist of the cubists and similar schools. Among his works are the manifestoes Les Peintres cubistes (1913) and "L'Esprit nouveau" (in the Mercure de France, December, 1918); novels, Le Poète assassiné (1916) and La Femme assise (1920); plays, Les Mamelles de Tirésias (1917) and Couleur du temps (1920); and two important collections of poems, Alcools (1913) and Calligrammes (1918).

Apollinare in Classe (sänt.ä.pōl.lē.nä'rā ēn kläs'sā), Sant'. Church at Ravenna, Italy, begun in 534, the most important existing early-Christian basilica in Italy. In plan it is 93 by 173 ft., measuring inside, with nave and aisles separated by 24 gray marble columns with round arches, and a raised semicircular tribune. There is a clerestory of double round-arched windows, and the wooden roofs are open. The narthex, now walled up, originally had open arcades. Nave and aisles have painted medallion-friezes of busts of the bishops and archbishops of Ravenna. The vault and walls of the tribune are covered with splendid mosaics of the 6th and 7th centuries. The picturesque circular campanile is of brick, 120 ft. high, with many round-arched windows.

Apollinare Nuovo (nwô′vō), Sant'. Church at Ravenna, Italy, built by Theodoric in the 6th century. In plan it is 115 by 315 ft., with a single raised apse (bema), and a handsome narthex with a portico. The nave, 51 ft. wide, with fine coffered ceiling, has 24 columns brought from Constantinople; the Corinthian capitals are surmounted by heavy Byzantine abaci. Above the arcades of the nave the walls are covered with very beautiful 6th-century mosaics.

Apollinarians (ą.pol.i.nār′i.ąnz). Religious sect deriving their name from Apollinaris the Younger, bishop of Laodicea in the 4th century. Apollinaris denied the proper humanity of Christ, attributing to him a human body and a human soul, or vital principle, but teaching that the Divine Reason (or Logos) took in him the place which in man is occupied by the rational principle.

Apollinaris (ą.pol.i.nār′is), Saint. Early Antiochian, presumed in tradition to be the founder and bishop of the Church of Ravenna whither he had been sent by Saint Peter, who had ordained him at Rome. He is venerated as a martyr.

Apollinaris Fountain. Mineral spring near Neuenahr, ab. 25 mi. NW of Koblenz, Germany, discovered in 1853. Its waters are largely exported.

Apollinaris Sidonius (sī.dō′ni.us, si-), Gaius Sollius. b. at Lyons, France, c430; d. c487. Christian writer, bishop, and politician. Appointed (472) bishop of Clermont after a period as prefect of Rome, he was active in resistance to and mediation with the Huns and Goths. Author of Panegyrics on various emperors of Rome, as well as nine books of letters and poems which are important to historians of the 5th century.

Apollinaris the Younger. [Also, Apollinaris of Laodicea (lā.od.i.sē′ą).] d. c390 A.D. Bishop of Laodicea who with his father, Apollinaris the Elder, rewrote and taught parts of the Bible after the manner of Euripides, Menander, Pindar, and Plato in order to preserve Greek literature, after the edict (362) by Emperor Julian (the Apostate) against teaching of the classics by Christians. He was the founder of Appollinarianism, a theory advanced to combat Arianism but condemned as heresy by the Council of Constantinople (381) and others. In writings formerly ascribed to Gregory Thaumaturgus, whose name he probably used, he gained wide circulation for his beliefs (chiefly, that Christ possessed the Logos, or holy principle, in place of a rational human mind), later espoused by the Vitalians and Polemeans, and a probable source of Monophysitism.

Apollino (ä.pōl.lē′nō). Statue in the collection of the Uffizi, Florence. It is an antique copy from a Greek original, probably of the 4th century B.C., representing a delicately built type of the youthful Apollo, standing easily and gracefully.

Apollinopolis Magna (ą.pol.i.nop′ō.lis mag′nạ). See Edfu.

Apollo (ą.pol′ō). [Former name, Warren.] Borough in W Pennsylvania, in Armstrong County: manufactures of sheet steel. It was renamed in 1848. Pop. 3,015 (1950).

Apollo. In Greek and later in Roman mythology, one of the great Olympian gods, the son of Zeus and Leto, representing the light- and life-giving influence, as well as the deadly power, of the sun, and often identified with the sun-god Helios. He was the leader of the Muses, god of music, poetry, and healing, and patron of these arts; a mighty protector from evil, all-seeing, and hence the master of prophecy; also the destroyer of the unjust and insolent, and ruler of pestilence. In art he was represented in the full majesty of youthful manhood, usually unclothed or only lightly draped, and usually characterized by the bow and arrows, the laurel, the lyre, the oracular tripod, the serpent, or the dolphin. He was the father of Aesculapius, to whom he granted his art of healing. Apollo was honored, both locally and generally, under many special titles, of which each had its particular type in art and literature: as, Apollo Citharoedus (Apollo who sings to the accompaniment of the lyre), equivalent to Apollo Musagetes, the conductor of the Muses; Apollo Chresterios (the Apollo of oracles), Apollo Sauroktonos (the lizard-killer), and others. In Roman mythology he was primarily a god of healing.

Apollo Belvedere (bel.vę.dir′; Italian, ä.pôl′lō bel.vā.dā′rā). Most famous extant statue of Apollo, a marble figure carved during the early Roman empire, now in the collection of the Belvedere, Vatican, Rome, discovered (1485) at Antium (now Anzio, Italy). It was copied from a Greek original in bronze. Just over life size, it depicts a vigorous, youthful god wearing a chlamys around the neck and over the extended left arm. The left hand, one of the parts restored by Montorsoli, a pupil of Michelangelo, holds part of an object variously thought to have been an aegis, a bow from which he has shot an arrow, or another weapon. The original may have been a commemorative figure erected at Delphi to celebrate the expulsion of the Gauls (279 B.C.) from the temple of Apollo.

Apollodorus (ą.pol.ō.dō′rus). [Surnamed Skiagraphas, meaning "Shadow Painter" or "Shadower."] b. at Athens; fl. late 5th century B.C. Greek painter, contemporary of Zeuxis and Parrhasius. He seems to have been the first important painter to abandon the old schematic arrangements for chiaroscuro and foreshortening observed from nature.

Apollodorus. fl. 2nd century B.C. Athenian grammarian and historian, author of an extant Bibliotheca, an important work on Greek mythology; probably an abridgment.

Apollodorus of Carystus (kạ.ris′tus). b. at Carystus, in Euboea; fl. at Athens 300–260 B.C. Greek comic poet of the new Attic comedy, author of 47 plays, and five times a prize-winner. He supplied Terence with models for his Hecyra and Phormio.

Apollodorus of Damascus. b. at Damascus; fl. 2nd cent. A.D. Greek architect in Rome under Trajan; designer of the Forum and Column of Trajan at Rome, a stone bridge over the Danube (c105), triumphal arches at Ancona and Beneventum, and public buildings. He was banished and put to death by Hadrian, presumably for criticizing a design by Hadrian for a temple.

Apollonia (ap.ọ.lō′ni.ą). [Modern name, Marsa Susa.] In ancient geography, the port of Cyrene, a Greek city in N Africa, in what is now E Libya.

Apollonia. In ancient geography, a city in Illyria, in what is now W Yugoslavia.

Apollonia. [Modern name, Arsuf.] In ancient geography, a town in Palestine, situated on the Mediterranean between Joppa (modern Jaffa) and Caesarea.

Apollonia. [Modern name, Sozopol.] In ancient geography, a city in Thrace, situated on the Black Sea. It is now only a small village, in Bulgaria.

Apollonia. Former station on the Gold Coast, West Africa.

Apollonia, Diogenes of. See Diogenes of Apollonia.

Apollonius (ap.ọ.lō′ni.us). [Called "the Sophist."] fl. late 1st century A.D. Alexandrian grammarian, author of a Homeric lexicon (still extant) based on Aristarchus and Apion.

Apollonius Dyscolus (dis′kō.lus). b. at Alexandria. fl. 2nd century A.D. Alexandrian grammarian, first critical student of Greek syntax. His only extant works are On Syntax and three treatises on adverbs, pronouns, and conjunctions.

Apollonius Molon (mō′lon). b. at Alabanda, Caria; fl. 1st century B.C. Greek rhetorician at Rhodes; instructor of Cicero and Caesar. He advocated "Atticizing," or moderating, the florid Asiatic style.

Apollonius of Perga (pėr′gą). [Also, Apollonius Pergaeus (pėr′jē.us).] b. at Perga, Asia Minor; fl. 247–205 B.C. Greek geometrician educated at Alexandria, author of a treatise on Conic Sections in eight books, of which four are extant in Greek and three others in Arabic; it includes the theories of Euclid and others, as well as new deductions.

Apollonius of Tralles (tra.lēz′). b. at Tralles, in Caria; fl. probably in the 1st century B.C. Greek sculptor who with his brother, Tauriscus, carved the so-called Farnese Bull.

Apollonius of Tyana (tī′ą.nạ). [Also, Apollonius Tyanaeus (tī.ā′ni.us, tī.ą.nē′us.] b. at Tyana, Asia Minor; fl. 1st century A.D. Greek Neo-Pythagorean philosopher and reputed magician and wonder-worker. He studied in Greek schools at Tarsus, traveled in Babylonia, Persia, and India, where he absorbed Eastern mysticism, and set up a school at Ephesus. A life of him by Philostratus, largely fabulous and no doubt written for a controversial purpose, presents similarities with that of Jesus. He was considered divine by some for his supposed miracles, and his bust was placed by Alexander Severus in his lararium with those of Abraham, Orpheus, and Christ.

Apollonius of Tyre (tīr). Stoic philosopher living in the reign of Ptolemy Auletes, mentioned by Diogenes Laërtius as the author of a work on Zeno, and by Strabo as the author of another work which seems to have been a résumé of the philosophers and their writings from the time of Zeno.

Apollonius Rhodius (ap.ọ.lō'ni.us rō'di.us). [Also, Apollonius of Rhodes (rōdz).] fl. at Alexandria and Rhodes 3rd century B.C. Greek epic poet, author of Argonautica, on the legend of the Golden Fleece, an imitation of Homer which was in turn used by Vergil, Marianus, and others. He is known to have been, for a time, librarian at Alexandria.

Apollos (ạ.pol'ọs). fl. middle of 1st century A.D. Alexandrian Jew and early Christian missionary, converted (c49 A.D.) by Aquila and Priscilla at Ephesus (Acts, xviii). He was renowned for his preaching at Corinth, which later led a group in the Corinthian church to claim him as their founder (1 Cor. i. 10–12). He is thought by some scholars to have been the author of the Epistle to Hebrews, although evidence for this is at best questionable.

Apollo Sauroktonos (ạ.pol'ō sô.rok'tọ.nos). [Also, Sauroctonus (-nus); Eng. trans., "the Lizard-slayer."] Name of two copies, one in bronze (Vatican, Rome) and one in marble (Paris), of a lost bronze statue by the Greek sculptor Praxiteles. The god leans against a tree and is apparently about to strike with an arrow, possibly as a method of divination, the lizard which climbs up the trunk. The relaxed, curving figure is typical of Praxiteles' choice of youthful subjects and his graceful, humanizing treatment of the gods.

Apollyon (ạ.pol'yọn). Angel of destruction. The name is a Greek rendering of Abaddon, the Hebrew term which originally meant the bottomless pit of which Apollyon is the keeper (Rev. ix. 11); introduced by Bunyan as antagonist of Christian in Pilgrim's Progress.

Apology for Actors, An. Work in three books by Thomas Heywood, published in 1612, and reprinted in 1658 by William Cartwright, with some alterations, under the title of The Actors' Vindication. It is one of the most successful apologias in English, and, though it opens with a sharp rebuke of "the sundry exclamations of many seditious sectists in this age, who in the fatness and rankness of a peaceable commonwealth grow up like unsavory tufts of grass," it proceeds with modesty and common sense.

Apology of Socrates (sok'rạ.tēz). Plato's version of the defense of Socrates before his judges. A similar work attributed to Xenophon is spurious.

Aponensis (ap.ọ.nen'sis) or Aponus (ap'ọ.nus), Petrus. Latinized name of Abano, Pietro d'.

Aponi Fons (ap'ọ.nī fonz). See under Abano, Italy.

Apono (ä'pō.nō), Pietro di. See Abano, Pietro d'.

Apophis (ap'ō.fis). [Also: Apopi, Apopy (ä.pô'pē), Apepi.] Hyksos king of Egypt who ruled at Avaris (Zoan) c1600 B.C.: probably the Aphobis of Manetho, and perhaps a contemporary of Joseph.

Apopka, Lake (ạ.pop'kạ). Lake in C Florida, much frequented by tourists for the fish in its waters.

Apostle Islands. Group of islands in the SW part of Lake Superior, belonging to Ashland and Bayfield counties, Wisconsin.

"Apostle of Andalusia." See Ávila, Juan de.

"Apostle of Brazil." See Anchieta, José de.

"Apostle of Caledonia." See Saint Columba.

"Apostle of Germany." See Saint Boniface.

"Apostle of Livonia." See Berthold of Lokkum (or Loccum).

"Apostle of the English." See Augustine of Canterbury, Saint.

"Apostle of the Franks." See Saint Remi or Remy.

"Apostle of the Frisians." See Saint Willibrod.

"Apostle of the North." See Saint Anschar; also Saint Hyacinth; also Macdonald, John (1779–1849).

"Apostle of the Prussians." See Saint Adalbert; also Saint Methodius.

"Apostle of the Slavs." See Saint Adalbert (d. 981).

Apostles' Creed, The. Primitive creed of the Christian Church, not of apostolic origin, but a product of the Western Church during the first four centuries, not now assignable to any individual author. It was originally a baptismal confession, and was intended to be a popular summary of apostolic teaching.

"Apostle to the Prussians." See Saint Bruno.

"Apostle to the Sioux." See Hare, William Hobart.

Apostolic Canons. Certain ordinances and regulations, usually reckoned as 85 in number, belonging to the first centuries of the Christian Church, and incorrectly ascribed to the apostles.

Apostolic Constitutions. Collection of diffuse instructions, relating to the duties of the clergy and laity, to ecclesiastical discipline, and to ceremonies. It is divided into eight books. They profess to be the words of the apostles, written down by Clement of Rome, but are considerably later than apostolic times. It is believed that the major portion of the first six books was composed in Syria or Asia Minor at the end of the 3rd century, and that the seventh and eighth books were later additions, dating possibly from the 4th century.

Apostolic Council, The. First conference or synod of the Christian Church. It was held (c50 A.D.) at Jerusalem by the churches of Jerusalem and Antioch to settle the personal relation between the Jewish and gentile apostles, to divide the field of labor between them, to decide the question of circumcision, and to define the relation between the Jewish and gentile Christians. Acts, xv.

Apostolic Delegation, The. Papal representation established (Jan. 24, 1893) at Washington, D.C., by Pope Leo XIII, and accredited to the Catholic Church of the U.S. The first apostolic delegate was Archbishop Satolli.

Apostolic Fathers, The. Those fathers of the church who were during any part of their lives contemporary with the apostles. They are six: Barnabas (lived c70–100 A.D.), Clement of Rome (d. c100), Hermas (lived probably about the beginning of the 2nd century), Ignatius (d. probably 107), Papias (lived probably c130), and Polycarp (d. 155).

Apostolius (ap.ọs.tō'li.us), Michael. d. in Crete, c1480. Greek scholar of Constantinople, who fled (1453) to Italy at the time of the Turkish invasion.

Apostool (ä.pôs.tōl'), Samuel. b. 1638; d. c1700. Dutch Mennonite preacher at Amsterdam. He became involved in a dispute in 1662 with his colleague Hans Galenus, who maintained that Christianity is not so much a body of dogma as a practical way of life. The formation of two parties, Galenists and Apostoolians or Apostoolists, resulted. The two groups were reunited in 1801.

Appalachee Bay (ap.ạ.lach'ē). See Apalachee Bay.

Appalachia (ap.ạ.lach'i.ạ, -lā'chi.ạ, -lach'ạ, -lā'chạ). Region in the W part of Virginia, lying W of the valley of Virginia. Area, ab. 4,500 sq. mi.

Appalachia (ap.ạ.lach'i.ạ). Town in SW Virginia, in Wise County. Coal mining is the principal industry. 2,915 (1950).

Appalachian Mountain Club (ap.ạ.lach'i.ạn, -lā'chi.ạn, -lach'ạn, -lā'chạn). Organization founded in 1876 (incorporated 1878) for the purpose of exploring the mountains of New England and adjacent regions. It maintains headquarters at Boston and issues Appalachia (semiannual).

Appalachian Mountains. Great mountain system, named from the Apalachee (or Apalachi) Indians, in the E part of North America, which extends (according to the definition of the U.S. Geographic Board) from N Maine to Alabama; often, but less properly, called the Allegheny Mountains, from its chief division. The system is sometimes considered as including also the mountains of Gaspé Peninsula (St. Anne Mountains, Shickshock Mountains). In the U.S., the principal ranges are: the White Mountains, the Green Mountains, the Hoosac Range, the Taconic Range, The Helderberg Mountains, the Shawangunk Mountains, the Blue Ridge, the Alleghenies proper, the Blue Mountains (Pa.), the Laurel Hill and Chestnut Ridge ranges, the Black Mountains, the Stone Mountains, the Bald Mountains, the Cumberland Mountains, the Great Smoky Mountains, the Unaka Mountains, and some lesser groups. It contains large deposits of coal and iron. It is cut by the Connecticut, Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, Kanawha, Tennessee, and other rivers. Length, ab. 1,500 mi.; greatest width (in Pennsylvania), ab. 130 mi.; highest point, Mount Mitchell (6,684 ft.), in North Carolina.

Appalachian Plateau. Name defined (1907) by the U.S. Geographic Board as including the entire plateau forming the western member of the Appalachian system, known in the north as the Allegheny plateau and in the south as the Cumberland plateau.

Appalachian Trail. Hikers' trail extending from Mount Katahdin, in C Maine, to Mount Oglethorpe, in N Georgia. It passes over or near every major peak in the Appalachian system (the highest peak it actually traverses is Clingman's Dome (6,642 ft.) in the Great Smoky Mountains, in E Tennessee, but from this point easy access is had to Mount Mitchell (6,684 ft.) in W North Carolina, the highest point in the Appalachians). Length, ab. 2,050 mi.

Appalachicola (ap″ạ.lach.i.kō′lạ). See Apalachicola.

Appassionata (ä̆p.päs.syō.nä′tä). [Also, Sonata Appassionata.] Name commonly applied to Beethoven's piano sonata opus 57, although the composer himself did not use it.

Appeasement, Period of. Phrase applied to the era in the 1930's which culminated in Neville Chamberlain's efforts to achieve a settlement with Germany in 1938. In a political sense, the term "appeasement" has from this gained meaning as a general expression for callous submission to naked or aggressive power. Many English leaders, some of whom believed that Hitler was merely seeking the redress of rightful grievances, followed a course of successive concessions culminating in the Munich Conference.

Appel (ap′ẹl), Benjamin. b. at New York, Sept. 13, 1907—. American novelist. He was graduated (1929) from Lafayette College and during World War II served with the Office of Civilian Defense and the War Manpower Commission at Washington, D.C. His novels include Brain Guy (1934), Four Roads to Death (1935), Runaround (1937), The Powerhouse (1939), The Dark Stain (1943), and Fortress in the Rice (1951). He is the author of a documentary report, The People Talk (1940).

Appendini (ä̆p.pen.dē′nē), Francesco Maria. b. near Turin, Italy, Nov. 4, 1768; d. in January, 1837. Italian historian and critic.

Appennino (ä̆p.pen.nē′nō). Italian name of the Apennines.

Appenninus (ap.ẹ.nī′nus). Latin name of the Apennines.

Appenzell (ä̆p′ẹn.tsel). Canton of Switzerland, surrounded by the canton of St. Gallen and divided into two half-cantons, Appenzell Inner Rhoden and Appenzell Ausser (outer) Rhoden. It has manufactures of muslin, silk, and embroidery. The prevailing language is German. At one time under the control of the abbots of St. Gallen, Appenzell won its independence in the beginning of the 15th century; it was allied with the confederated cantons in 1452, was admitted into the Swiss Confederation in 1513, and was divided into the half-cantons in 1597. Appenzell sends three representatives to the Swiss national council. Capital of Appenzell Inner Rhoden, Appenzell; of Appenzell Ausser Rhoden, Herisau; total area, 161 sq. mi.; pop. 61,474 (1950).

Appenzell. City in NE Switzerland, the capital of the half-canton of Appenzell Inner Rhoden: manufactures of hand and machine embroideries. All burghers entitled to vote meet on the "Landsgemeinde Platz" on the last Sunday in April to elect officers and to enact laws. 4,756 (1941).

Appenzell Ausser Rhoden (ous′ėr rō′dẹn). [English, Appenzell Outer Rhodes.] Half-canton of Switzerland, which occupies the N and W parts of the canton of Appenzell. The religion is predominantly Protestant, and the language German. It sends two representatives to the Swiss national council. Capital, Herisau; area, 94 sq. mi.; pop. 48,026 (1950).

Appenzeller (ap′ẹn.zel.ėr), Henry Gerhard. b. at Suderton, Pa., Feb. 6, 1858; drowned in shipwreck off Korean coast, June 11, 1902. American Methodist missionary to Korea. He translated a portion of the New Testament into Korean, and established (1886) the Pai Chai school for boys. His daughter, Alice Appenzeller, was the first white child ever born (1885) in Korea.

Appenzell Inner Rhoden (ä̆p′ẹn.tsel in′ėr rō′dẹn). [English, Appenzell Inner Rhodes.] Half-canton of Switzerland, occupying the SE portion of the canton of Appenzell. The religion is predominantly Roman Catholic and the language German. It sends one representative to the Swiss national council. Capital, Appenzell; area, 67 sq. mi.; pop. 13,448 (1950).

Apperley (ap′ėr.li), Charles James. [Pseudonym, Nimrod.] b. at Plasgronow, Wales, 1777; d. at London, May 19, 1843. English writer on sporting matters, author of The Life of a Sportsman (1842), and others, popular with collectors, as well as sportsmen, for their illustrations by Henry Alken and others.

Appert (ȧ.per), François. [Original prename, Nicolas.] b. 1750; d. c1840. French scientist and chef. He devised a method of food preservation without chemicals by heating and sealing in a container; the technique, which is basically similar to that still used in home canning, is explained in his Art of Preserving Animal and Vegetable Substances (1811).

Appia (ä.pyȧ), Adolphe. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 1, 1862; d. at Nyon, Switzerland, Feb. 29, 1928. Swiss stage designer and producer. He made notable contributions to the art of the theater, chiefly through his concepts of stage lighting and scenery construction. He was associated with the festivals of the Dalcroze school at Hellerau. Author of Mise en scène du drame wagnérien (1895) and Musik und Inszenierung (1899).

Appian (ap′i.ạn). [Latin, Appianus (ap.i.ā′nus); Greek, Appianos (-nos).] b. at Alexandria; fl. at Rome 2nd century A.D. Roman historian, author of a history of Rome (in Greek) in 24 books, of which 11 are extant, together with a few fragments. Chiefly a compilation from earlier writers, it is nevertheless a valuable source, especially on the civil wars.

Appiani (ä̆p.pyä′nē), Andrea. [Surnamed, "the Elder"; called "Painter of the Graces."] b. at Milan, May 23, 1754; d. there, Nov. 18, 1817. Italian painter, pupil and imitator of Correggio, pensioned by Napoleon (until 1814) as artist for the kingdom of Italy. His frescoes include those in the royal palace and church of Santa Maria presso San Celso, Milan; among his oils are Venus and Cupid and Rinaldo in the Garden of Armida.

Appiano (ä̆p.pyä′nō). Italian family, rulers of Piombino from the 14th to the 17th century. Its founder was Jacopo I, lord of Pisa (1392–98).

Appian Way. [Latin, Via Appia (vī′ạ ap′i.ạ).] Most famous of the ancient Roman highways. It ran from Rome to Brundisium (now called Brindisi), and is probably the first great Roman road which was formally undertaken as a public work. It was begun in 312 B.C. by Appius Claudius Caecus, the censor, who carried it as far as Capua. The next stage of the work extended it to Beneventum (Benevento), and it probably did not reach Brundisium until 244 B.C., when a Roman colony was inaugurated there. At present the Appian Way, for a long distance after it leaves Rome, forms one of the most notable memorials of antiquity in or near Rome, bordered as it is by tombs and the ruins of monumental buildings. Long stretches of the pavement remain perfect, and show that the width of the roadway proper was only 15 ft. Length, ab. 350 mi.

Appii Forum (ap′i.ī fō′rum). In ancient geography, a station on the Appian Way, ab. 40 mi. SE of Rome.

Appin (ap′in). Registration district, village, and seaport in Lismore and Appin civil parish, in C Scotland, in Argyllshire, extending ab. 18 mi. along the E coast of Loch Linnhe, ab. 12 mi. NE of Oban, ab. 512 mi. N of London by rail. 529 (1931).

Appius and Virginia (ap′i.us; vėr.jin′yạ). Tragedy attributed to John Webster and Thomas Heywood, printed in 1654 as by Webster alone. The story, originally told by Livy, forms the first novel of the 19th day in the Pecorone di Giovanni Fiorentino (1378), and was reproduced in Painter's Palace of Pleasure (1st ed., 1566) two centuries later. There is a version of it in the Roman de la Rose. Chaucer tells it in The Doctor's Tale, and Gower embodied it in his Confessio Amantis. There was an earlier play, The Tragical Comedy of Apius and Virginia, by an unknown author whose initials were R.B. It was probably acted as early as 1563, though not printed till 1575. John Dennis also wrote a tragedy with this name in 1709.

Appleby (ap'l.bi). Municipal borough in NW England, county seat of Westmorland, situated on the river Eden, ab. 28 mi. SE of Carlisle, ab. 280 mi. NW of London by rail: noted for Saint Michael's Church, which has a Norman doorway, the lintel of which is a Saxon tombstone. Appleby Castle occupies the site of an old Roman encampment. 1,704 (1951).

Appleby, John Francis. b. at Westmoreland, N.Y., May 23, 1840; d. Nov. 8, 1917. American inventor. He constructed (1859) the first model of what was later (1878 et seq.) to be the Appleby knotter, a basic component of most of the world's grain binders; he also worked out a rifle-cartridge magazine and automatic feeder while in the trenches before Vicksburg during the Civil War as a member of the 23rd Wisconsin Infantry.

Apple Cart, The. Play (1930) by George Bernard Shaw.

Applegarth (ap'l.gärth), Robert. b. in England, 1834; d. there, 1924. English trade-union leader. As general secretary (1862 et seq.) of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, he became the leader of the aggressive cadre within the British labor movement which secured the legislative acceptance of unions and their right to amass funds for benefit payments and other purposes. In 1872 he retired from active participation in union activities to enter private business.

Applegate (ap'l.gāt), Jesse. b. in Kentucky, July 5, 1811; d. April 2, 1888. American surveyor, legislator, and pioneer to Oregon. In 1843 he emigrated to Oregon, where he became at once influential in public affairs, becoming (1845) a member of the provisional government which lasted until the territory was attached (1849) to the U.S. A member (1857) of the state constitutional convention, he withdrew when his leadership was challenged. First a Whig and then a Republican, he had much to do with upholding Lincoln and the cause of the North in Oregon. He is thought to have been refused a seat in the U.S. Senate because acceptance would have required a degree of subservience to the railroads which he had himself helped to develop. He is important as the author of documents and newspaper articles pertaining to the settlement of Oregon.

Appleton (ap'l.ṭon). City in E Wisconsin, county seat of Outagamie County, at the falls of the Fox River: center of a livestock-raising and dairying region; manufactures pulp and paper. It is the seat of Lawrence College. The magician Harry Houdini was born here. 34,010 (1950).

Appleton, Charles Edward Cutts Birch. b. at Reading, England, March 16, 1841; d. at Luxor, Egypt, Feb. 1, 1879. English journalist and man of letters; founder (1869) of the Academy and its editor until 1879.

Appleton, Daniel. b. at Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 10, 1785; d. at New York, March 27, 1849. American bookseller and publisher, at first a merchant of "English goods," including books. With his son, W. H. Appleton, he founded (1831) the publishing house which became (1838 D. Appleton and Company, New York.

Appleton, Sir Edward Victor. b. 1892—. English physicist, notable for discovery in the upper atmosphere of a conducting layer since known as the "Appleton layer," and important in the development of radar. He was awarded a Nobel prize in physics in 1947.

Appleton, Jesse. b. at New Ipswich, N.H., Nov. 17, 1772; d. at Brunswick, Me., Nov. 12, 1819. American clergyman and educator, president of Bowdoin College (1807–19); father-in-law of President Franklin Pierce.

Appleton, John. b. at Beverly, Mass., Feb. 11, 1815; d. at Portland, Me., Aug. 22, 1864. American politician, and diplomat. He practiced law at Portland (1837 et seq.), and was a Democratic member of Congress (1851–53 . Appointed minister to Russia by President Buchanan in 1860, he resigned upon the election of Lincoln.

Appleton, John Howard. b. at Portland, Me., Feb. 3, 1844; d. Feb. 18, 1930. American chemist. He was an instructor (1863–68) and professor of chemistry applied to the arts (1868–72), and professor of chemistry (1872–1914) at Brown University, as well as a member (1891 of the U.S. Mint Commission. Author of numerous textbooks and technical articles.

Appleton, Nathan. b. at New Ipswich, N.H., Oct. 6, 1779; d. at Boston, July 14, 1861. American cotton-manufacturer and politician. With his brother Samuel and other pioneers in the textile industry, he developed cotton-producing centers at Waltham and Lawrence, Mass., and Manchester, N.H. He was also one of the founders of Lowell, Mass. As a congressman from Massachusetts (1830–33 and 1842), he supported Adams and Jackson on the protective tariff, and wrote Currency and Banking (1841) on the Bank of the United States controversy. He was one of the organizers of the Boston Athenaeum.

Appleton, Samuel. b. at New Ipswich, N.H., June 22, 1766; d. at Boston, July 12, 1853. American merchant and philanthropist. Established (1794) an importing business at Boston with his brother Nathan; later he was profitably engaged in cotton manufacture at Waltham and Lowell, Mass., and in real estate and railroads. He gave generously to various institutions, including Harvard, which built the Appleton Chapel with his bequest.

Appleton, William Henry. b. at Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 27, 1814; d. Oct. 19, 1899. American publisher; son of Daniel Appleton. He formed a partnership (1838) with his father under the name of D. Appleton and Company; the enterprise expanded prodigiously after the retirement (1848) of his father, publishing the scientific volumes which first acquainted the American public with the theories of Charles Darwin, Thomas Huxley, and Herbert Spencer. The sale of the Webster Spelling Book is said to have reached 1,596,000 in a single year (1866), while scientific interest brought in 1872 the first issue of what is now the Popular Science Monthly. He also published the Appleton Cyclopedia of Biography (1856). He urged international copyright laws and served as president (1887) of the American Publishers' Copyright League.

Apple-Tree Table and Other Sketches, The. Ten prose sketches by Herman Melville, first published in 1922.

Appold (ap'ōld), John George. b. at London, April 14, 1800; d. at Clifton, England, Aug. 31, 1865. English inventor who devised a form of centrifugal pump and a break used in laying the first Atlantic cable.

Appomattox (ap.ō.mat'ǫks). [Also, Appomattox Courthouse.] Town in C Virginia, county seat of Appomattox County, situated ab. 25 mi. E of Lynchburg. Here, on April 9, 1865, General Robert E. Lee surrendered the Confederate army of Northern Virginia to General Ulysses S. Grant, virtually ending the Civil War. 1,094 (1950).

Appomattox River. River in Virginia, joining the James River ab. 20 mi. SE of Richmond. Length, ab. 150 mi.; navigable for ab. 15 mi.

Apponyi (ô'pō.nyē), Count Albert György. b. at Vienna, May 29, 1846; d. at Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 7, 1933. Hungarian political leader; son of Count György Apponyi (1808–99). He was a member of the Hungarian parliament (1872–1933) first, with Gyula Andrássy, as a Deák follower, and later as a conservative leader and successor to Kossuth as president of the party for Hungarian independence. A delegate to the World Peace Conference at St. Louis (1904), and minister of education (1906–10) in Sándor Wekerle's cabinet, he was appointed (1919) head of the Hungarian peace delegation to Paris, and served as Hungarian representative (1926 et seq.) in the League of Nations. Author of Aesthetics and Politics (1905), A Brief Sketch of the Hungarian Constitution and of the Relation Between Austria and Hungary (1908), and others.

Apponyi, Count Antal. b. Sept. 7, 1782; d. Oct. 17, 1852. Hungarian diplomat; son of Antal György, Count Apponyi (1751–1817).

Apponyi, Count Antal György. b. 1751; d. 1817. Hungarian founder of the Apponyi Library at Bratislava.

Apponyi, Count György. b. 1808; d. 1899. Hungarian statesman; grandson of Count Antal György Apponyi (1751–1817). Court chancellor (1847) and conservative leader before the insurrection of 1848–49, he was later (1859 et seq.) a nationalist leader instrumental in securing the Austro-Hungarian compromise (Ausgleich) with Ferenc Deák and Gyula Andrássy, and in the restoration of the Hungarian constitution.

Apponyi, Count Rudolph. b. Aug. 1, 1812; d. at Venice, May 31, 1876. Hungarian diplomat; son of Count Antal Apponyi (1782–1852). He was appointed Austrian minister (1856) and ambassador (1860) at the court of St. James, was relieved in 1871, and was transferred to Paris, in 1872.

Apprentice, The. Play (1756) by Arthur Murphy. His own brief career as an actor contributed to this farce, his first play.

Apprenti sorcier (là.präṅ.tē sôr.syā), L'. French title of Sorcerer's Apprentice, The.

Appuleia gens (ap.ū.lē'ạ jenz). In ancient Rome, a plebeian clan or house whose family names are Decianus, Pansa, and Saturninus.

Appuleius (ap.ū.lē'us), Lucius. See Apuleius, Lucius.

Apraksin (ä.präk'sin), Count Fyodor Matveyevich. [Also, Apraxin.] b. 1671; d. Nov. 10, 1728. Russian admiral, chief collaborator of Peter the Great in the founding of the Russian navy. A page at the court under Czar Fyodor III and his half-brother Peter, he became a lifelong friend of the latter. He began his career of building ships as governor of Arkhangelsk (1692), served at the siege of Azov (1696), and was chief of the admiralty (1700–06). In the war between Peter the Great and Charles XII of Sweden, he built fleets, fortifications, and harbors, defended St. Petersburg (1708), and followed up the Russian victory at Poltava (1709) by capturing Viborg (1710), Helsingfors, and Borgo (1713), securing Finland and the Baltic States (by the Treaty of Nystad, 1721) for Russia.

Apraksin, Stefan. [Also, Apraxin.] d. in prison, Aug. 31, 1758. Russian general; nephew of F. M. Apraksin. He defeated (1757) the Prussian army of Frederick the Great at Gross-Jägerndorf. He was arrested for a court conspiracy and died in prison.

Après-midi d'un faune (là.pre.mē.dē dėṅ fōn), L'. [Full title, Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune; English title, The Afternoon of a Faun.] Eclogue, or tone-poem, for orchestra by Claude Debussy, composed (1892–94) after a poem of the same title by Stéphane Mallarmé. It is one of the pieces which established Debussy's reputation as an innovator in impressionist technique and composition. It was performed (1912) at Paris as a ballet with Nijinsky.

Apries (ap'ri.ēz). [Called in the Bible, Hophra.] Egyptian ruler, fourth king of the XXVIth dynasty; reigned c588–c569 B.C. as successor to his father, Psamtik II. Rivalry with Babylon's Nebuchadnezzar led him to attack Tyre and Sidon, as well as to attempt the relief of Jerusalem, which was besieged by the Babylonians. He failed (586 B.C.) to save Jerusalem or to overthrow Babylonian rule in Syria, despite a series of military and naval victories, and was finally himself overthrown and killed by his erstwhile ally, Amasis II.

April (ā'pril). The fourth month of the year, containing 30 days. Among poets April has traditionally symbolized inconstancy, because of the changeableness of its weather.

April Fools' Day. [Also, All Fools' Day.] April 1, the day for playing practical jokes on unsuspecting victims.

Apsheron (ăp.shi.rôn'). Peninsula in the S part of the U.S.S.R., in the Azerbaijan Soviet Socialist Republic, which projects into the Caspian Sea and terminates in Cape Apsheron. It is noted for its petroleum wells (in the vicinity of Baku) and its mud volcanoes.

Apsley (aps'li), Baron. See Bathurst, Henry (1714–94).

Apsley House. Name of what was at one time the residence of the Duke of Wellington, at Hyde Park Corner in London. It was built for Lord Bathurst (whose family name was Apsley) in 1785, purchased by the government in 1820, and presented to the Duke of Wellington as part of the national reward for his services.

Apsyrtos (ap.sėr'tọs). b. at Prusa (now Bursa) or Nicomedia (now Izmit), in Bithynia; fl. at Constantinople, c332–334. Greek veterinary surgeon. He wrote a treatise (in two books) on the veterinary art, which was used considerably by later authors.

Apt (ápt). [Ancient name, Apta Julia (ap'tạ jöl'yạ, jö'li.ạ).] Town in SE France, in the department of Vaucluse, situated on the Calavon River, ab. 30 mi. E of Avignon. It has an annual fair, marble quarries, sulfur and ocher mines, and small industries. The Church of Saint Anne is in the Romanesque style. 6,259 (1946).

Apuan Alps (ap'ū.ạn). Chain of the N Apennines, situated near Carrara, Italy.

Apuania (ä.pwä'nyä). Former commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Tuscany, formed (1938) from the communities of Massa, Carrara, and Montignoso. It was abolished after World War II. 106,378 (1936).

Apuania. Former name of Massa e Carrara.

Apuirai (ạ.pwē'rā). See Apiru.

Apuleius (ap.ū.lē'us), Lucius. [Also, Lucius Appuleius.] b. in Numidia (or, according to some authorities, at what is now Bône, Algeria), c125 A.D.; fl. chiefly at Carthage. Roman rhetorician and Platonic sophist, notable as a clever and versatile writer with an encyclopedic range of interests. He is probably now best known for his Metamorphoses, or The Golden Ass, one of the few Latin romances still extant. The extraordinary adventures (including metamorphosis into the shape of an ass) attributed by Apuleius to the hero of this fictional work were later freely adapted and used by Fielding, Smollett, Boccaccio, and Cervantes. However, Apuleius is also of some considerable importance, although less well known, for his scientific writings. His most important work in this field (particularly for the historian of medicine) was his book on magic (De magia or Apologia), which dealt with various matters not unrelated to those which were the concern of the first alchemists, and thus historically linked to what was later to emerge as modern science. All of his other scientific writings, including a translation of an early text on arithmetic, have now been lost, except for De mundo (On the World), and some scholars have even questioned the authenticity of extant copies of this.

Apulia (ạ.pū'li.ạ). [Italian, Puglia, Puglie.] Compartimento (region) in SE Italy, containing the provinces of Bari, Brindisi, Foggia, Lecce, and Ionio. It is the heel of the Italian boot, lying between the Adriatic Sea on the N and E and the E slope of the Apennines and the Gulf of Taranto on the S and W. The coastal plain produces rich harvests of olives, wine, grain, fruits, almonds, and tobacco. There are fisheries, livestock farms, salt works, and flourishing agricultural industries. Ancient Apulia lay S of the Frentani and E of Samnium; it was conquered by Rome in the 4th century B.C. Later it included the Messapian Peninsula. The ancient inhabitants were the Dauni, Peucetii, and Salentini or Messapians. After the dissolution of the Roman Empire, the district was under Lombard, Byzantine, Norman, and Hohenstaufen rule until it was incorporated into the Kingdom of Naples and the Two Sicilies. The region saw bitter fighting in the Punic Wars and in the struggle between Emperor Frederick II and Pope Gregory IX; many architectural works from this time still stand. Throughout the centuries, Apulia was a place of entrance for Greek and Oriental influences. It was joined to Italy in 1860. Area, 7,470 sq. mi.; pop. 2,642,076 (1936), 3,210,411 (1951).

Apulum (ap'ū.lum). Latin name of Alba Iulia.

Apure (ä.pö'rā). State in W Venezuela, at the Colombian border. Capital, San Fernando de Apure; area, 29,537 sq. mi.; pop. 84,806 (1950).

Apure River. River in W Venezuela, one of the principal tributaries of the Orinoco. Length, ab. 600 mi.; navigable in its lower part.

Apurímac (ä.pö.rē'mäk). Department in S Peru. Capital, Abancay; area 8,189 sq. mi.; pop. 280,213 (1940), 336,379 (est. 1950).

Apurímac River. River in W South America, the S headstream of the Ucayali River, and hence of the Amazon, rising in S Peru and flowing N. From the confluence of the Montaro River it is called the Ené to its junction with the Perené River; thence to the Urubamba River, which it joins to form the Ucayali, it is known as the Tambó. Length to the Ucayali, ab. 600 mi.

Apus (ā'pus). One of the southern constellations formed in the 16th century, probably first classified by Petrus Theodori; the Bird of Paradise. It is situated S of the Triangulum Australe, and its brightest star is of the fourth magnitude.

Aqaba (ä'kä.bä). [Also: Akaba, Akabah, 'Aqaba; ancient names, Aelana, Elath, Eloth.] Village in SW Jordan, at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba. It is a minor seaport. Near it was the ancient Ezion Geber.

Aqaba, Gulf of. [Also: Akaba, Akabah; Arabic, Bahr el 'Aqaba.] One of the northward extensions of the Red Sea, separating the Sinai Peninsula from the Arabian Peninsula, and Africa from Asia. Israel and Jordan meet at its N end.

Aquae (ak'wē). Latin name of Ax.

Aquae Augustae (ô.gus'tē). A Latin name of Dax.

Aquae Bigerrionum Balneariae (bi.ger.i.ō'num bal.nē.ār'i.ē). Latin name of Bagnères-de-Bigorre.

Aquae Bormonis (bôr.mō'nis). Latin name of Bourbon-l'Archambault.

Aquae Borvonis (bôr.vō'nis). Latin name of Bourbonne-les-Bains.

Aquae Calidae (kal'i.dē). [Eng. trans., "Hot Springs."] In ancient geography, a place in Mauretania Caesariensis, S of Caesarea.

Aquae Calidae. Latin name of Vichy; see also Bath, England.

Aquae Domitianae (dǫ.mish.i.ā'nē). A Latin name of Aix-les-Bains.

Aquae Flaviae (flā'vi.ē). Latin name of Chaves.

Aquae Grani (grā'nī). A Latin name of Aachen.

Aquae Gratianae (grā.shi.ā'nē). A Latin name of Aix-les-Bains.

Aquae Helveticae (hel.vē'ti.sē). Latin name of Baden, Switzerland.

Aquae Mattiacae (ma.tī'a.sē). Latin name of Wiesbaden.

Aquae Mortuae (môr'tū.ē). Latin name of Aigues-mortes.

Aquae Nisinei (ni.sī'nē.ī). Latin name of Bourbon-Lancy.

Aquae Pannonicae (pa.non'i.sē). Latin name of Baden, Austria.

Aquae Patavinae (pat.a.vī'nē). See under Abano, Italy.

Aquae Sextiae (seks'ti.ē). Latin name of Aix.

Aquae Statiellae (stā.shi.el'ē). Latin name of Acqui.

Aquae Solis (sō'lis) or Sulis (sō'lis). A Latin name of Bath, England.

Aquae Tarbellicae (tär.bel'i.sē). A Latin name of Dax.

Aquambo (ä.kwäm'bō). Name applied at one time to a region on the Gold Coast, W Africa.

Aquapim (ä.kwä.pēm'). District of the Eastern province, Gold Coast, W Africa; at one time the name applied to a whole region.

Aquarium (a.kwār'i.um). See Castle Garden.

Aquarius (a.kwār'i.us). A zodiacal constellation supposed to represent a man standing with his left hand extended upward, and with his right pouring out of a vase a stream of water which flows into the mouth of the Southern Fish. Its symbol is designed to represent a stream of water.

Aquaviva (ä.kwä.vē'vä), Claudio or Claudius. [Also, Acquaviva.] b. at Naples, Italy, 1543; d. at Rome, 1615 Italian ecclesiastic, fifth general (1581–1615) of the Society of Jesus. He was substantially the author of Ratio Studiorum, a basic Jesuit educational work.

Aqueduct of Valens (vā'lęns). Aqueduct in Istanbul (Constantinople), finished 378 A.D., and still in use. The main bridge is 2,000 ft. long and 75 high, and consists of two tiers of arches of about 30 ft. span.

Aquila (ak'wi.la). See also Arno.

Aquila. fl. 1st century A.D. Early Christian who shares with his wife Priscilla (or Prisca) fame for their devoted companionship with Paul and for the conversion of Apollos at Ephesus. Probably originally from Pontus, the couple settled at Rome, were driven out by edict of Claudius, and took up the trade of tent-making at Corinth, where they met and sheltered Paul (Acts, xviii. 2–3), with whom they later journeyed to Ephesus.

Aquila. [Full name, Aquila et Antinoüs.] Northern constellation situated in the Milky Way nearly south of Lyra, and containing the bright star Altair. It has for its outline the figure of a flying eagle carrying in its talons the boy Antinoüs, the page of the emperor Hadrian.

Aquila (ak'wi.la; German, ä'kvē.lä), Kaspar. [Original name, Kaspar Adler.] b. at Augsburg, Bavaria, Aug. 7, 1488; d. at Saalfeld, Thuringia, Nov. 12, 1560. German Protestant theologian, an assistant of Luther in the translation of the Old Testament. He became (1527) pastor at Saalfeld, and was outlawed (1548) by Charles V for his violent opposition to the Interim; he saved himself by flight, returning after the treaty of Passau (1552) to his pastorate at Saalfeld.

Aquilante (ä.kwē.län'tā). Brother of Gryphon, descended from Olivero, a character in works by Matteo Maria Boiardo and Lodovico Ariosto. The brothers were brought up by two fairies.

Aquileia (ä.kwē.lā'yä). Town and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Friuli-Venezia Giulia, in the province of Udine, situated near the head of the Adriatic Sea, S of Udine. Founded by the Romans in 181 B.C., it was one of the chief cities of the Empire, the key to Italy on the NE. Destroyed by the Huns under Attila in 452 A.D., it was rebuilt and became the seat of one of the most important patriarchates of the early Christian church and the scene of a number of church councils. The cathedral, in basilica style, dates from the 11th century, with Gothic additions from the 14th century. The town became less important as the Adriatic Sea retreated, but excavations on the site of the Roman town have yielded a great variety of antiquities. Pop. of commune, 9,495 (1936); of town, 1,116 (1936).

Aquilino (ä.kwē.lē'nō). Horse of Raymond, in Jerusalem Delivered, by Torquato Tasso. His sire was the wind.

Aquillia gens (a.kwil'i.a jenz). In ancient Rome, a patrician and plebeian clan or house of great antiquity, whose family names under the Republic were Corvus, Crassus, Flourus, Gallus, and Tuscus.

Aquin (dȧ.kaṅ), Louis Claude d'. See Daquin or d'Aquin, Louis Claude.

Aquinas (a.kwī'nas), Saint Thomas. [Called Doctor Angelicus, "Father of Moral Philosophy," and (in fun by his schoolmates) the "Dumb Ox."] b. at Rocca Secca, near Aquino, Italy, c1225; d. at Fossanuova, Italy, 1274. Italian theologian, leading scholastic philosopher, ranked with the fathers of the Latin Church. He was educated at Monte Cassino and Naples, and joined (c1243) the Dominican order. A student at Paris (1245–48) under Albertus Magnus, he followed him to Cologne (1248), where he began teaching. His great fame was attained at Paris (1252–56 and 1268–72) and Rome (1259–68). At Paris he engaged in a great controversy with Siger de Brabant and the Averroists over the interpretation of Aristotle, which ended in a triumph for scholasticism. Founder of the philosophical system now called Thomism, and synthesizer of the theology which was pronounced (1879) as official for the Roman Catholic Church, he was a great medieval scholar in breadth of scope and brilliance of logic. He was the author of a Mass for Corpus Christi (1264), containing hymns considered among the finest in the Christian church and examples of masterful Latin prosody; also of a body of writing leading up to his Summa Theologica, chiefly a commentary (1254–56) on the Sentences of Peter Lombard, a work following Albertus Magnus and Augustinianism; commentaries (1265–73) on the Physics, Metaphysics, De anima, Ethics, and other works of Aristotle; and the Summa de Veritate Catholicae Fidei contra Gentiles (1258–60), an attempt to persuade non-Christians by distinguishing and reconciling reason and faith. The Summa Theologica (1267–73) a three-part work dealing with God, Man, and Christ, and intended to summarize all learning and to demonstrate his fundamental belief in the compatibility of faith and intellect, is still studied as one of the greatest philosophical works of all time. It was not, however, completed by him.

Aquincum (a.kwing'kum). Latin name of Budapest.

Aquino (ä.kwē'nō). [Ancient name, Aquinum (a.kwī'num).] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Frosinone, ab. 55 mi. NW of Naples. It has Roman antiquities and the ruins of the early medieval Church of Santa Maria della Libera. It was the birthplace of Saint Thomas Aquinas, the leading philosopher of the medieval church. Pop. of commune, 3,359 (1936); of town, 1,697 (1936).

Aquiry River (ä.kē.rē'). Former name of the Acre River.

Aquisgranum (ak.wis.grā'num). A Latin name of Aachen.

Aquitaine (ak.wi.tān', ak'wi.tān; French, à.kē.ten). Medieval division of SW France, lying between the Garonne and Loire rivers. A Visigothic kingdom was founded there in the first part of the 5th century. It was conquered (507) by Clovis, became (c700) a duchy, and was conquered by Charlemagne and made a kingdom (including all S Gaul and the Spanish March) for his son Louis. In 838 Neustria was united to it, and it became soon after a duchy and one of the great fiefs of the French crown. Gascony was united to it in 1052. In 1137 it passed temporarily to France, by the marriage of Eleanor of Aquitaine with Louis VII of France, but in 1152 was united (by the marriage of Eleanor with Henry II of England) to Normandy and Anjou, and in 1154 to England, which retained it under John. It became (c1258) nominally a French fief, but was freed from French vassalage and granted to Edward III of England in 1360. Part of it was recovered from the English in the reign of Charles V of France, but was won back for England by Henry V. It was finally conquered by the French in 1451–53. It included (as Guienne) properly Bordelais, Rouergue, Périgord, Quercy, Agénois, and Bazadois, and comprised nearly the modern departments of Gironde, Dordogne, Lot, Lot-et-Garonne, and Aveyron.

Aquitaine, Prince of. A title of Edward, the Black Prince.

Aquitania (ak.wi.tā′ni.ạ). In ancient geography, the SW division of Gaul, as described by Julius Caesar, comprising the region between the Pyrenees and the Garonne River. It was extended by Augustus northward to the Loire River, and made a Roman province.

Aquitanian Sea (ak.wi.tā′ni.ạn). Occasional name of Biscay, Bay of.

Aquitania Tertia (ak.wi.tā′ni.ạ tėr′shi.ạ). See under Gascony.

Aquitanicus Sinus (ak.wi.tan′i.kus sī′nus). A Latin name of Biscay, Bay of.

Ara (ā′rạ). One of the 15 ancient southern constellations; the Altar. It is situated S of the Scorpion. Its two brightest stars are of the third magnitude.

'Arab (ä′rạb), Bahr al. Arabic name of the Arabian Sea.

Araba (ä′rạ.bạ). [Also: Arabah; Arabic, Wadi el 'Araba.] Valley, or wadi, between Israel and Jordan, running from the Dead Sea S to the Gulf of Aqaba. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Arabah (ä′rạ.bạ), Sea of the. See under Dead Sea.

Arabat (ä.rä.bät′). Small place in the S part of the U.S.S.R., in the Crimea, at the head of the Tongue of Arabat.

Arabat, Tongue of. [Also: Arabat; Russian, Arabatskaya Strelka (ä.rä.bät′ska.yạ strel′kạ).] Long and narrow, sandy peninsula in the S U.S.S.R., in the Crimean oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, separating the Sea of Azov from the Sivash.

Arabat Bay. Arm of the Sea of Azov, in the S part of the U.S.S.R., in the Crimean oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic.

Arabat-el-Madfuneh (ä.rä′bät.el.mäd.fö′ne). See under Abydos, Egypt.

Arabella (ar.ạ.bel′ạ). Character in David Garrick's play The Male Coquette.

Arabella. Romantic heroine of Charlotte Lennox's novel The Female Quixote; or, the Adventures of Arabella (2 vols., 1752).

Arabella Allen (al′ẹn). See Allen, Arabella.

Arabġir (ä.räb.gēr′) or Arabkir (-kēr′). See Arapkir.

Arabia (ạ.rā′bi.ạ). Turkish and Persian, Arabistan (ä.rä.bē.stän′).] Peninsula in SW Asia, with the shape of an irregular triangle, between Iran and Egypt, bounded on the W by the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba, on the S by the Gulf of Aden and the Arabian Sea, on the E by the Gulf of Oman and the Persian Gulf, and on the N by Iraq and Jordan. Area, 1,200,000 sq. mi.; pop. 12,000,000 (est. 1950).

Main Divisions. The Greeks and Romans divided Arabia into Arabia Petraea (the "stony"), Arabia Deserta (the "desert"), and Arabia Felix (the "flourishing" or "happy"). Modern geographers recognize from 8 to 12 districts: the Hejaz, along the coast of the Red Sea, including the Haram (i.e., the sacred territory of Mecca and Medina); Yemen (the Sheba of Biblical geography), on the S coast of the Red Sea; Aden, a British protectorate including Hadhramaut, situated toward the Indian Ocean; Muscat and Oman on the SE coast; Nejd, or Central Arabia; the Trucial Oman, Qatar, and Kuwait on the Persian Gulf; and the Syrian desert. The Hejaz, Nejd, and the N desert region are included in the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Physical and Economic Geography. The peninsula averages 700 mi. in width and 1,200 mi. in length. Countless wadis (river valleys), which carry rain water, take the place of ordinary rivers, which Arabia lacks. One third of Arabia is a sandy desert. Intense heat during the day is followed by cool nights. The deserts of the interior hold wide oases which support large numbers of men and animals, which move to other locations only after a succession of adverse seasons. Dates and coffee are major products, followed by gums, hides, and wool. Nomads raise the famous Arab horses near the Syrian desert. Nomadic pastoral tribes also raise small cattle, fat-tailed sheep, and black goats. The principal seaports are Jedda, in Hejaz, Muscat, the key to the Persian Gulf, and Aden, the key to the Red Sea. Other important cities are Mecca, Medina, and Riyadh. The chief commercial product is petroleum, obtained from oil fields in the E part of the peninsula.

Early History; Mohammed. The period preceding the era of Mohammed was characterized by the formation of local monarchies and federal governments of a rude form. The religion of that period had elements of fetishism, and animal and ancestor worship. The Koran enumerates ten idols of pre-Islamitic times. But in the midst of the old idolatry there had arisen some perception of a supreme god, Allah, the other gods being termed his children. Mecca with its Kaaba was the center of Arab worship under the guardianship of the noble tribe of Koreish. Out of Mecca and the Koreishites came Mohammed (570–632), who by his new religion consolidated the Arabs into a theocracy, so that on his death the Arab peninsula was, with a few exceptions, under one scepter and one creed. He was succeeded (632) by Abu-Bakr, the father of his favorite wife, Ayesha, his title being caliph, or successor. Abu-Bakr was followed by Omar (634–644), who conquered Syria, Persia, and Egypt. He was followed by Othman (644–656), who in turn was succeeded by Ali, the prophet's nephew and son-in-law. All of these except Abu-Bakr died at the hands of assassins.

Ommiad Dynasty. Next came the dynasty of the Ommiads (661–750), with 14 princes, having their capital at Damascus. During the reign of Yezid I, the second prince (679–683), a rebellion took place which split the Mohammedan world into two great sects, the Sunnites and Shiites. The Ommiads conquered other portions of Asia and Africa, and even invaded (732) France. Their most important military achievement was the conquest of Spain in 711. Spain soon became independent of the main Arab realm (but a part remained for centuries under the Moors). In the Orient the Ommiads succumbed to Ibrahim and his brother, Abu al-Abbas, who founded the dynasty of the Abbassides (q.v.).

Modern History. Before World War I, Arab Asia was part of the Ottoman Empire; parts of this were divided between Syria, Palestine, and Iraq, leaving the present Arab kingdom. Hejaz in the W and Yemen in the S were for a time Turkish provinces. Nejd and other districts came under the influence of the Wahhabees, a politico-religious faction named after Mohammed ibn-Abdul Wahhab, who arose (c1740) as a reformer. In a revival of this nationalistic movement ibn-Saud began (1913) the unification of the country by driving the Turks out of Hasa, on the Persian Gulf. The end of World War I saw the Turks completely ejected from the peninsula. Unification was practically completed by 1926, when ibn-Saud, then sultan of Nejd, was proclaimed king of Hejaz; he became king of Nejd also, in 1927, and the name of his domain was changed to Saudi Arabia in 1932. Only comparatively small units remain outside the kingdom, chief among them Yemen and Oman, which are independent, and Aden and Kuwait, which are British protectorates.

Arabia Deserta (dē.zėr′tạ). [Eng. trans., "desert," or "uninhabited," Arabia.] In ancient geography, the N and C portions of Arabia.

Arabia Felix. (fē′liks). [Eng. trans., "flourishing," or "happy," Arabia.] In ancient geography, the region in the SE and S parts of Arabia, or perhaps the peninsula proper.

Arabia Felix. Prose work (1932) by Bertram Thomas.

Arabian Nights' Entertainments, The. [Also, A Thousand and One Nights.] Collection of tales, originally in Arabic, of which the plan and name are very ancient. The source of some of the stories has been traced, others are traditional. In 943 al-Masudi speaks of a Persian work A Thousand Nights and a Night In the course of centuries it was added to and taken from to a great extent, and in 1450 it was reduced to its present form in Egypt, probably at Cairo. The tales show their Persian, Indian, and Arabian origin. The stories are separate from each other in plot and the work as a whole is held together by the device of Scheherazade, the supposed teller of the tales. She is supposedly under sentence of death from her husband, but postpones her execution night after night by telling him a story almost to the end, but withholding the climax until the following night. The modern editions are Antoine Galland's, from the oldest known manuscript (1548), published in French at Paris, in 1704–17, in 12 volumes, an inaccurate translation; E. W. Lane's English scholarly translation, published in 1840; Payne's English translation, 1882–84; and Sir Richard Burton's English translation, printed (1885 et seq.) by the Kamashastra Society, for subscribers only, at Benares. Lady Burton issued an expurgated edition for popular reading, at London, 1886–88, in six volumes. One of the most recent editions is that by Pourys Mathers, from the French (4 vols., 1937).

Arabian Sea. [Arabic, Bahr al 'Arab.] Part of the Indian Ocean, nearly corresponding to the ancient Mare Erythraeum, which is bounded by Africa on the W, Arabia on the NW, Iran and Pakistan on the N, and India on the E, and is connected with the Red Sea by the strait of Bab el Mandeb, and with the Persian Gulf by the Strait of Oman. Its chief arms are the Gulfs of Aden, Oman, Kutch, and Cambay; its islands, Socotra, and the Laccadive Islands. Length, ab. 1,000 mi.; width, ab. 600 mi.

Arabia Petraea (ą.rā'bi.ą pē.trē'ą). [Eng. trans., "stony" Arabia.] In ancient geography, the NW part of Arabia

Arabic (ar'ą.bik). A language of the Semitic family. It is the language of the Koran, and with Arab conquests and the spreading of Islam from the 7th and 8th centuries it came to be spoken in many countries outside of Arabia In Iraq, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Malta, North Africa the Sudan, Nigeria, the western Sahara, and Zanzibar and even in Arabia itself, various Arabic dialects are spoken. The written language, however, has almost everywhere conformed to the type known as classical Arabic Arabicus (ą.rab'i.kus), Sinus. Latin name of the Red Sea.

Arabi Pasha (ä.rä'bē pä.shä'), Ahmed. b. in Egypt, c1839; d. at Cairo, Sept. 21, 1911. Egyptian officer and revolutionary leader. A conscript in the army, he was commissioned in 1862; having been charged (1875) with peculation, he was reduced to half pay. He joined a movement against the government, serving as its spokesman against Anglo-French control of the Tewfik Pasha government and as a participant in military demonstrations which forced Tewfik to reorganize his cabinet and finally to make Arabi minister of war (1882). His influence was alarming to the British (who feared for the Suez Canal) and incited anti-European feeling, leading to bloody riots in Alexandria and a British punitive expedition. Defeated by Garnet Joseph Wolseley at Tell el-Kebir on Sept. 11, 1882, he surrendered and was tried at Cairo, receiving a death sentence which was commuted to banishment to Ceylon. Pardoned by Abbas II, he returned (1901) to Egypt.

Arabistan (ä.rä.bē.stän'). See Arabia; see also Khuzistan.

Arab League. Name applied to a loosely organized federation that formally came into existence between the states within the general area of the old Turkish empire during the latter part of World War II. Though movements for Arab unity were strong after the dissolution of the Turkish (or Ottoman) empire in 1923, this drive did not take concrete shape until March 22, 1945, when the Arab League was formed at Cairo. Signatories to the pact were Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Syria and Transjordan (now Jordan), with Yemen becoming an associate state. A League Council representing all members was set up with the primary purpose of seeking measures to deter aggressors in disputes affecting two member states, or a member state and a third power, and to develop common military and economic policies. In the sense that it is used by the League members, the term "Arab" is applied to the entire body of people in W Asia and N Africa who share a common religious tradition of Islam, but it is an avowed principle of the Arab League that its members shall permit complete religious freedom within their boundaries.

Aracajú (ä"rą.ką.zhö'). Capital of the state of Sergipe, in E Brazil: a river port for cotton, hides, oils, and sugar. 68 686 (1950).

Aracan (ä.rä.kän'). See Arakan.

Aracatí (ä"rą.ką.tē'). [Also, Aracaty.] Seaport in the state of Ceará, in NE Brazil, on the Juaguaribe River near its mouth on the Atlantic. 6,803 (1940).

Araçatuba (ä"rą są.tö'bą). City in S Brazil, in the state of São Paulo. 27 692 (1950).

Arachne (ą.rak'nē). In Greek legend, a Lydian maiden who challenged Athena to a contest in weaving, and was changed by her into a spider.

Arachosia (ar.ą.kō'zhą, -zhi.ą). In ancient geography, a region in ancient Persia corresponding to part of the modern Afghanistan.

Aracthus (ą.rak'thus). Latin name of the Arakhthos.

Aracthus. Latin name of Arta, city.

Arad (ä.räd'). [Also, Old Arad.] City in NW Rumania, in the region of Crişana, situated on the Mureş River, ab. 30 mi. E of the Hungarian border: one of the most beautiful cities in Rumania, and a cultural center. It has a large trade in grain, wine, tobacco, spirits, and cattle; manufactures textiles, soap, shoes, furniture, automobiles, and railway carriages; railroad junction. It was a fortress in the 17th century and belonged after 1699 to Hungary; previously it had belonged to Turkey (1551 et seq.) and Austria (1685 et seq.). In the revolution of 1849 it played an important part; it was taken from the Austrians after a long siege, was surrendered by the Hungarians in August, 1849, and was the scene of the military executions by Julius von Haynau, in October, 1849. It became Rumanian in 1920 by the Peace of Trianon. 87,291 (1948).

Aradus (ar'ą.dus). [Old Testament name, Arvad; modern names, Arwad, Rouad, Ruad.] In ancient geography, a Phoenician city, situated on a rocky island, ab. 3 mi. from the coast of what is now Syria, N of Sidon; founded by fugitives from that place, according to Strabo. It is mentioned in Ezek. xxvii. 11 and 1 Mac. xv. 23. After Tyre and Sidon it was the most important city in Phoenicia. Remains of its walls still exist.

Araf (ä'räf), Al. See Al Araf.

Arafat (ä.rä.fät'). Sacred mountain of the Mohammedans in W Arabia, situated ab. 15 mi. SE of Mecca. 1,980 ft.

Arafura Sea (ä.rä.fö'rä). That part of the Pacific Ocean which lies N of Australia, E of Timor, Indonesia, and SE of the island of New Guinea.

Aragats (ä.rä.gäts'). See Alagez.

Arago (ą.rą.gō), Étienne Vincent. b. at Perpignan, France, Feb. 9, 1802; d. at Paris, March 6, 1892. French dramatist, journalist, politician, and poet; brother of François Arago. Author of Les Aristocrates (1847), and others.

Arago, François. [Full name, Dominique François Jean Arago.] b. at Estagel, near Perpignan, France, Feb. 26, 1786; d. at Paris, Oct. 2, 1853. French astronomer and physicist who made important contributions to modern optics and electromagnetism. He was engaged (1806–08), with Biot, in geodetic surveys in the Pyrenees and Balearic Islands when the French invaded Spain, and was imprisoned by the Spanish. On his release (1809) he was elected to the Academy of Sciences and appointed professor of analytical geometry at the École Polytechnique, Paris, at the age of 23. He was also director of the Royal Observatory. In 1830 he became a member of the Chamber of Deputies. As minister of war and marine under the provisional government (after 1848), he improved conditions for sailors and abolished Negro slavery in the French colonies; he withheld his allegiance to Louis Napoleon in 1852. He made discoveries in the magnetic properties of nonferruginous substances and the magnetism of rotation, and traced the connection between the aurora borealis and magnetic elements. With Alexander von Humboldt, he supported Augustin

Jean Fresnel's undulatory theory of light against the emission theory of Pierre Simonde Laplace and others. his experiments with Fresnel led to the formulation of the laws of polarization. His final experiment (1832–50) on the velocity of light in media of varying density was completed by A. H. L. Fizeau and J. B. L. Foucault, and established the undulatory theory. Founder (1816), with Joseph Louis Gay-Lussac, of Annales de chimie et de physique; author of Astronomie populaire (published in his collected works, 1854–62), and others.

Arago, Jacques Étienne Victor. b. at Estagel, near Perpignan, France, March 10, 1799; d. in Brazil, in January, 1855. French traveler, journalist, and playwright; brother of François Arago. Author of Voyage autour du monde (1843), and others.

Aragon (ar'ą.gon). [Spanish, Aragón (ä.rä.gōn').] Medieval kingdom, subsequently a province of Spain, bounded by France on the N, by Catalonia on the E, by Valencia on the S, and by New Castile, Old Castile, and Navarre on the W, comprising the modern provinces of Huesca Zaragoza, and Teruel. It is traversed by mountains and intersected by the Ebro River. During the Middle Ages it was one of the two chief Christian powers in the peninsula. In 1035 it became a kingdom; it was united to Catalonia in 1137, rose to great influence through its acquisitions, in the 13th and 14th centuries, of Valencia the Balearic Islands, Sardinia, and the Sicilies, and was united with Castile in 1469 through the marriage of Ferdinand of Aragon with Isabella of Castile. Capital Saragossa; area, 18,294 sq. mi.

Aragon (ä.rą.gôn), Louis. b. Oct. 3, 1897—. French poet, novelist, journalist, and essayist. He was in turn a member of the cubist and dadaist movements, and subsequently (1924) a surrealist. He joined the Communist Party in 1930 and was several times an editor or staff member of Commune, L'Humanité, and Ce Soir. Sentenced to five years imprisonment for his poem Front rouge (1931; Eng. trans., The Red Front, 1933), he emerged during World War II as a great poet of patriotism and love, as well as a leader (1940–44) in the French Resistance movement. His work includes the novels Les Cloches de Bâle (1934; Eng. trans., The Bells of Basel, 1936), Les Beaux Quartiers (1936; Eng. trans., Residential Quarter, 1938), Les Voyageurs de l'impériale (1941; Eng. trans., The Century Was Young, 1941), and Aurélien (1944); representative of his early poetry is Feu de joie (1920), of his more recent mood, Le Crève-coeur (1941) and Les Yeux d'Elsa (1942); Louis Aragon, Poet of the French Resistance (1945) is an anthology of work written during World War II.

Aragona (ä.rä.gō'nä). Town and commune in SW Italy on the island of Sicily, in the province of Agrigento, situated on the Platani River, ab. 8 mi. N of Agrigento. Most of the buildings date from the 17th century. The surrounding district has rich almond orchards; sulfur is mined in the vicinity. Pop. of commune, 14,839 (1936); of town, 10,840 (1936).

Aragon River (ar'ą.gon). [Spanish, Río Aragón (rē'ō ä.rä.gōn').] River in N Spain, which rises in the Pyrenees flows W and SW through Huesca, Zaragoza, and Navarra, and joins the Ebro River near Milagro. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Aragua (ä.rä'gwä). State in N Venezuela, bounded on the NW by the Caribbean Sea. Agriculture is the principal occupation. Capital, Maracay; area, 2,162 sq. mi.; pop. 192,555 (1950).

Aragua. Valley in N Venezuela, E of Lake Valencia. It gave its name to the state of Aragua.

Araguaia (ä.rą.gwī'ą). [Also, Araguaya.] River in C Brazil which flows N, is separated in its middle course for a long distance into two arms, and joins the Tocantins River. The upper part of the Araguaia is sometimes called Rio Grande. Length, ab. 1,100 mi.; navigable for ab. 750 mi.

Araguarí (ä''rą.gwą.rē'). [Also, Araguary.] City in C Brazil, in the state of Minas Gerais. 25,789 (1950).

Araguarí River. [Also, Araguary.] River in NE Brazil, which flows into the Atlantic N of the Amazon.

Aragua River (ä.rä'gwä). Short river in N Venezuela, emptying into the Lake of Valencia.

Arahal (ä.rä.äl'), El. See El Arahal.

Araja (ä.rä'yä), Francesco. b. at Naples, c1700; d. there, c1770. Italian composer: maestro di cappella (c1734–59) at St. Petersburg. Composer of several operas, including Cephalus and Procris, which some scholars believe to have been the first ever sung in Russian.

Ara Jovis (ār'ą jō'vis). Ancient name of Aranjuez.

Arakan (ä.rä.kän'). [Also, Aracan.] Division in the W part of Burma, ab. 200 mi. NW of Rangoon. Rice is the most important crop; teakwood is of secondary importance. Capital, Akyab; area, 16,001 sq. mi.; pop. 1,008,535 (1931).

Arakan Hill District (or Tracts). Northernmost district of the division of Arakan, W Burma, ab. 230 mi. NW of Rangoon.

Arakcheyev (ä.räk.chā'yif), Count Aleksey Andreyevich. b. Oct. 4, 1769; d. at Gruzina, Russia, May 3, 1834. Russian army officer and minister of war under Paul I and Alexander I. His organization of Paul's Gatchina corps and imperial forces, though so severe as to arouse strong opposition and to lead twice (1798, 1799) to his dismissal, contributed to reforms in hygiene and discipline. As inspector-general of artillery (1803) and war minister (1808) under Alexander, he played important roles in the Napoleonic wars and the war with Sweden. He later became chief counsellor to Alexander, and organized (1822–25) military colonies in Russia.

Arakhthos (ä'räċh.thôs). [Also: Arta; Latin, Aracthus.] River in NW Greece, in Epirus, which flows into the Ambracian Gulf, ab. 8 mi. below Arta.

Arakhthos. An ancient name of Arta, city.

Araki (ä.rä.kē), Sadao. b. at Tokyo, 1877—. Japanese general. He was war minister (1931–33) and education minister (1937–39), and author of Japan's Mission in Showa. Indicted as a war criminal after World War II, he was found guilty of conspiracy and of aggressive-war charges, and sentenced to life imprisonment. He was a chief exponent of the Japanese ambition to dominate the world.

Araks (ä.räks'). See Aras.

Aral Sea (ar'ąl). [Also: Lake (or Lake of) Aral; Russian, Aralskoe More (ä.räl'sko.yę mô'ryę).] Brackish inland sea in the U.S.S.R., between the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic and the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic, in C Asia. It receives the waters of the Amu Darya and Syr Darya (rivers), but has no outlet and is thought to have been formerly dry, the Amu Darya and Syr Darya then emptying into the Caspian Sea. The Aral is generally shallow (maximum depth, ab. 222 ft.), and is subject to storms. It is now important for the water it provides for cotton irrigation in the Uzbek and Kazakh Republics. Length, ab. 225 mi.; greatest width, ab. 185 mi.; area, 24,650 sq. mi.; elevation, ab. 174 ft.

Aram (ā'ram; ār'ąm). [Also: Aramaea, Aramea (ar.ą.mē'ą).] Biblical name of the country extending from the W frontiers of Babylonia to the highlands of W Asia. The inhabitants of this country were called Arameans. The Septuagint and Vulgate refer to it as Syria. The Old Testament mentions six divisions of the country, among them being Aram Naharaïm (Gen. xxiv. 10), i.e., of the two rivers: Mesopotamia, probably the territory between the Euphrates and the Chabor where the Judean exiles were settled (2 Kings, xvii. 6); Paddanaram, probably the designation for the flat country in N Mesopotamia; and Damascus. In the Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions the names Aramu, Arimu, and Arumu are used, but only of Mesopotamia and the peoples on the W bank of the Euphrates. The principal river of Aram was the Orontes. The Arameans were Semitic in race, language (Aramaic), and religion. As early as the period of the Judges an Aramean king extended his conquests to Palestine (Judges, iii. 8, 10). David took Damascus from them, but Solomon was obliged to restore it. The last king of Damascus, Rezin, allied himself with Pekah, king of Israel, against Judah, but succumbed to Tiglath-pileser of Assyria (745–727 B.C.). Aram Naharaïm appears on Egyptian monuments and in the Tel-el-Amarna tablets under the form Naharina. Thothmes I, Thothmes III and Amenhotep III conquered it several times but after repeated attacks it finally fell to the Assyrians. The Arameans became an important component of the Assyrian state; their language seems to have become the common speech of trade and diplomacy, and gradually to have supplanted Assyrian in Assyria and Hebrew in Palestine.

Aram (ār'ąm), Eugene. b. at Ramsgill, Yorkshire, England, 1704; executed Aug. 6, 1759. English scholar, executed for murder. A schoolmaster at Knaresborough, which he left (1745) under suspicion of fraud in company with a certain Daniel Clark (who subsequently disappeared), he taught at various places until arrested (1758) at Lynn Regis. He was convicted of Clark's murder on testimony by an admitted accomplice, in spite of a brilliant defense in which he accused Clark of seducing his wife; he was executed and his body hanged in chains at Knaresborough. A self-taught authority on French, Arabic, and other languages, he was among the first to point out the affinity of Celtic to Indo-European, and disputed the derivation of Latin from Greek. His life is the subject of a novel (1832) by Bulwer-Lytton, a poem, The Dream of Eugene Aram, by Thomas Hood, and a play, Eugene Aram, by W. G. Wills produced (1873) by Henry Irving.

Aramaic (ar.ą.mā'ik). Name applied as a general term to a group of Semitic languages, and also sometimes specifically to certain dialects within the group, spoken (c300 B.C. et seq.) in Mesopotamia, Palestine, and Syria. It includes Syriac as one of its important subdivisions, and was for many centuries the language of trade and commerce throughout that portion of the world which now comprises Lebanon, Syria, Israel, Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Jordan. It is notable also as having been the language spoken by Jesus Christ.

Aramanik (ā.rā.mä'nēk). [Also, Laramanik.] Subgroup of the Nilo-Hamitic-speaking Dorobo people of E Africa, living among the Masai in N Tanganyika.

Araminta (ar.ą.min'tą). The principal female character in William Congreve's comedy The Old Bachelor.

Araminta. In John Vanbrugh's comedy The Confederacy, the wife of Moneytrap, an extravagant, luxurious woman with a marked leaning toward "the quality."

Aramis (ā.rā.mēs). One of the "Three Musketeers," in the novel The Three Musketeers, by the elder Alexandre Dumas.

Aram Naharaïm (ā'ram nā.hā.rā'im). See Mesopotamia; see also under Aram.

Arana (ā.rä'nä), Diego Barros. See Barros Arana, Diego.

Aranda (ā.rän'dä), Conde de. [Title of Pedro Pablo Abarca y Bolea.] b. at Saragossa, in Aragon, 1719; d. at Epila, in Aragon, 1798. Spanish officer and diplomat. He introduced Prussian drill in the Spanish army, resigned under Ferdinand VI, and was recalled by Charles III to put down riots at Madrid in 1766; as president of the Council of Castile (to 1773), he effected the expulsion (1767) of the Jesuits from Spain and South America. An erratic and outspoken minister, he was generally held responsible for a diplomatic error involving the Falkland Islands; he was thereupon immediately sent (1773) to Paris, where he served as ambassador until 1787. As prime minister (1792) under Charles IV, he was involved in the intrigues of Maria Louisa and Godoy, and was dismissed and imprisoned by the king.

Aranda Memorial. Document said to have been sent (c1783) to Charles III of Spain by the Spanish statesman Pedro Pablo Abarca y Bolea, Conde de Aranda, expressing regret that Spain and France were aiding the American colonies against Great Britain and predicting that the American republic would emerge as an "irresistible colossus" threatening Spanish possessions in the New World.

Arango y Parreno (ä.räng'gō ē pär.rā'nō), Francisco de. b. at Havana, Cuba, May 22, 1765; d. at Güines, Cuba, March 21, 1837. Cuban lawyer, best known for his numerous works on economic questions connected with Cuba. He was twice the representative of Cuba in the Spanish Cortes, was councilor of state, and held other public offices.

Aranha (ą.ru'nyą), José Pereira da Graça. See Graça Aranha, José Pereira da.

Aranha (ą.ru'nyą), Oswaldo. b. at Alegrete, Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, Feb. 15, 1894—. Brazilian lawyer and diplomat. A leader during the Vargas revolution (1930), he served as minister of justice (1930–31), finance (1931–34), and foreign affairs (1938–44). After a term as ambassador (1934–38) to the U.S., he was the Brazilian representative (1946–47) to the United Nations, and served as president (1947) of the United Nations Assembly.

Aran Islands (ar'ąn). [Also: Arran Islands, South Aran.] Three islands at the entrance of Galway Bay, in Connacht province, in the Irish Republic, included in County Galway. The islands form a chain ab. 15 mi. long, stretching from NW to SE. The largest, Inishmore (also called Aran-na-naomh), is ab. 9 mi. long; the others are Inishmaan and Inisheer.

Aran Islands, The. Prose work (1907) by John Millington Synge.

Aranjuez (ä.räng.ʜweth'). [Ancient name, Ara Jovis.] Commune in Spain, in the province of Madrid, situated ab. 25 mi. S of Madrid: center of a fertile plain, providing vegetables and fruit (particularly asparagus and strawberries) for the Madrid markets. The hippodrome attracts visitors from the capital. The fame of Aranjuez rests on its castle, long a favorite summer residence of the Spanish court. A number of wings were erected under Philip II and Charles III, in the 16th and 18th centuries. There is a park and gardens. The town was built (1746–59) according to a plan drawn up by Ferdinand VI. 23,646 (1940).

Aranjuez, Convention of. Agreement (April 12, 1779) providing for Spain's entry as an ally of France into the war against Great Britain undertaken by the American colonies. Spain was to participate in the war in the event that Great Britain should turn down the Spanish offer of mediation. Upon British rejection of the offer, Spain joined the conflict. One of the provisions of the convention called for the cession of Gibraltar to Spain in any future peace negotiations.

Aran Mawddwy (ä'rän mouᵀʜ'wi). Mountain in N Wales, in Merionethshire, situated ab. 8 mi. NE of Dolgelley. 2,970 ft.

Aransas Bay (ą.ran'sąs). Arm of the Gulf of Mexico, in Texas, NE of Corpus Christi Bay.

Aransas Pass. City in S Texas, in Aransas and San Patricio counties, NE of Corpus Christi: processing and shipping point for petroleum; shrimp and oyster fisheries. 5,396 (1950).

Aransas Pass. Strait of the Gulf of Mexico, off the coast of S Texas, the entrance to Aransas Bay.

Aranta (ą.ran'tą). A language of central Australia.

Arán Valley (ä.rän'). [Spanish, Valle de Arán (bä'lyā ʜā).] Valley in the Pyrenees, in the province of Lérida, Spain, NE of the Maladetta range: the source of the Garonne River.

Arany (ô'rôny'), János. b. at Nagyszalonta (now Salonta, Rumania), March 2, 1817; d. at Budapest, Oct. 22, 1882. Hungarian epic poet and writer of ballads.

Arany, László. b. at Nagyszalontá (now Salonta, Rumania), March 24, 1844; d. at Budapest, Aug. 1, 1898. Hungarian poet; son of János Arany, whose correspondence and later works he published (1887–89).

Aranyos (ô'rô.nyōsh). River in Hungary which flows generally E to join the Mureş (Hungarian, Maros) River. Length, ab. 80–90 mi.

Arapaho (ą.rap'ą.hō). North American Indian tribe formerly centered in the headwaters area of the Platte and Arkansas rivers, but which also ranged widely from the Yellowstone River to the Rio Grande. Remnants of the tribe are now on the Wind River reservation, Wyoming. The language was of the Algonquian family.

Arapahoe Peak (ą.rap'ą.hō). Mountain in N central Colorado, in the Front Range of the Rocky Mountains. 13,506 ft.

Arapkir (ä.räp.kēr'). [Also: Arabgir, Arabkir.] Town in E central Turkey, ab. 40 mi. N of Malátya: a trading center in the Anatolian plateau; exports wool, rugs, and opium. Pop. ab. 7,000.

Araraquara (ą.rā.rą.kwä'rą). City in S Brazil, in the state of São Paulo. 34,671 (1950).

Ararat (ar'ą.rat). [Also: Van; Assyrian, Urartu.] Ancient name of a district in E Armenia between the river Araxes (modern Aras) and lakes Van and Urmia; also used for all of Armenia, and for the mountain ridge in the S part of that region. The usual statement that Noah's ark rested on Mount Ararat has no foundation in the Hebrew text, which reads "on the mountains of Ararat." In the Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions the country is mentioned under the name Urartu, and many expeditions of the Assyrian kings against it are enumerated.

Ararat. Town in SE Australia, in the state of Victoria, on the Hopkins River, ab. 120 mi. NW of Melbourne, in a gold-mining region. 5,960 (1947).

Araripe Junior (ą.rą.rē'pę zhö'nyōr), Tristão de Alencar. b. at Fortaleza, Brazil, June 27, 1848; d. at Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 29, 1911. Brazilian critic, novelist, journalist, and jurist, author of many articles and books about some of the leading Brazilian writers. Among his novels and stories are Contos brasileiros (1868), O ninho do beija-flor (1874), Jacina, a marabá (1875), Um motim na aldeia (1877), O reino encantado (1878), Luizinha (1878), and Miss Kate (1909).

Araros (ar'ą.ros). fl. early 4th century B.C. Athenian comic poet; son of Aristophanes. He brought out his father's Plutus in 388 B.C. and appeared as an original poet in 375 B.C.

Aras (ä.räs'). [Also: Araks; ancient name, Araxes.] River which rises in Turkey, NW of Lake Van, flows E to the border of the U.S.S.R., turns SE and forms part of the boundary between Turkey and the U.S.S.R., and of Iran and the U.S.S.R., and empties into the Kura River. Length, 666 mi.

Aras, Tevfik Rüştü or Tewfik Rushdi. b. at Çannakkale, Turkey, 1883—. Turkish statesman and diplomat. A physician (1908–09) at Smyrna, he served (1909–10) as inspector general of public health at Salonika and became inspector general of public health of the Ottoman empire. He was a medical officer in the Turkish army during World War I. He took an active role in the Turkish revolution of 1908 and in the Turkish war of independence (1918–22), served as minister of public health and minister for foreign affairs (1925–38) in the republic of Turkey, and was delegate and president in the League of Nations council and assembly. He was Turkish ambassador (1939–42) to Great Britain.

Arason (ä'rä.sôn), Jón. [Also: Areson, Aresson.] b. 1484; d. 1550. Icelandic poet and last Roman Catholic bishop of Iceland before the Reformation. Consecrated bishop of Holar in 1524, he was a man of great sagacity and courage, but openly in disagreement with the rule concerning the celibacy of the clergy. Outlawed by the king, chiefly because of his forthright opposition to the Reformation, he was executed by Danish soldiers. He is said to have established the first printing press in Iceland.

Arator of Liguria (ą.rā'tọr, -tôr; li.gū'ri.ą). fl. 6th century A.D. Christian poet and historian. Author of De actibus apostolorum, which was widely used during the Middle Ages as an apostolic history.

Aratus of Sicyon (ą.rā'tus; sish'i.on, sis'i-). b. at Sicyon, near Corinth, Greece, 271 B.C.; d. 213 B.C. Greek general, leader of the second Achaean League. He liberated (251) Sicyon from the usurper Nicocles, and set up a democracy; elected (245) strategus (military leader) of the Achaean League, he took the citadel of Corinth in 243, and brought Athens and Argos into the League. Defeated in a succession of campaigns by the Spartans under Cleomenes III, he formed an alliance with Antigonus III of Macedonia (Antigonus Doson), who defeated Cleomenes at the battle of Sellasia, near the city of Sparta, in 221, but thus brought the League under Macedonian domination. He carried on an unsuccessful defensive war (221–219) against the Aetolians.

Aratus of Soli (sō'lī). b. at Soli, in Cilicia, c315 B.C.; d. in Macedonia, c240 B.C. Greek didactic poet at the court of Antigonus II of Macedonia (Antigonus Gonatas) and Antiochus I of Syria. He was the author of Phenomena (or Phaenomena or Phainomena), a work in 1,154 verses on astronomy, later very popular with Roman writers. It contained a section on weather signs (Prognostica or Diosemeia) used by Cicero, Vergil, and others, and an invocation to Zeus quoted by Saint Paul in his address to the Athenians on the Areopagus (Mars' Hill). Acts, xvii. 28.

Arauca (ä.rou'kä). Commissary in NE Colombia. Capital, Arauca; area, 9,970 sq. mi.; pop. 11,300 (est. 1950).

Arauca. Town in E Colombia, capital of Arauca commissary, on the Arauca River at the Venezuelan border. Pop. under 5,000 (1938).

Araucana (ä.rou.kä'nä), La. Heroic poem, in 37 cantos, by the Spanish poet Alonso de Ercilla y Zúñiga. It is partly a geographical and statistical account of the region of Araucania and partly the story of the expedition for the Spanish conquest of the territory of the Araucanian Indian tribes in South America in which the author took part.

Araucania (ä.rou.kä'nyä). Region in S Chile which included the territory S of the Bío-Bío River to the Gulf of Ancud, i.e., approximately the modern provinces of Bío-Bío, Arauco, Malleco, Cautín, and Valdivia.

Araucanian (ar.ô.kā'ni.ąn). [Also: Araucanos (-nōz), Aucas, Oucas, Aucanos, Proaucas, Pampeans.] Term applied to a number of more or less independent tribes who formed an independent linguistic family in the main valley of C Chile. They are now to be found mainly in S middle Chile, S of the Maule River and, since c1700, in the Andean foothills and W pampas of Argentina. They resisted fiercely both the Incas in the 15th century, forcing the Inca boundary to be fixed at the Maule River, and the Spaniards, who first began invasion under Pedro de Valdivia in 1541. He was killed by them in 1553, as was one of his successors, Martin Garcia Oñez de Loyola, in 1598, when the Spanish settlements in Araucanian territory were almost totally destroyed. The last uprising of the Araucanians was put down in 1883 and reservation privileges were given by Chile in 1887. The name of one of the chief Araucanian tribal groups, the Mapuche, is sometimes used for the linguistic family as a whole. Maize and potatoes were important in their economy. Many, especially in the Argentine pampas, became nomadic hunters and raiders after the introduction of the horse by the Spaniards. It is estimated that there are about 300,000 Araucanians in Chile today. For Argentina the estimates run from a few hundred to 4,000. The main tribal divisions are the Picunche, Mapuche, and Huilliche in Chile, Pehuenche in the highland region on the boundary between Chile and Argentina, and Ranquel in the Argentine pampas. The Spanish conquest of the Araucanians is the chief subject of the epic poem La Araucana by Ercilla y Zúñiga.

Arauca River (ä.rou'kä). River in NE Colombia, flowing E through Venezuela to join the Orinoco River.

Arauco (ä.rou'kō). Province in S central Chile. Capital, Lebú; area, 2,222 sq. mi.; pop. 65 504 (est. 1950).

Arauco. Fort and city in C Chile, S of Concepción, and originally ab. 6 mi. from the sea: founded by Pedro de Valdivia in 1552. During the early Araucanian wars it was a post of great importance. Besieged by the Indians, it was abandoned and destroyed in 1553, rebuilt (1559) by Mendoza, again abandoned (1563) when attacked by Antihueno, rebuilt in 1566, and withstood what might be called a continuous siege from 1559 to 1590, when it was removed to the present site on the coast. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Araújo (ä.rą.ö'zhö), Joaquim Aurélio Barreto Nabuco de. See Nabuco, Joaquim.

Araujo de Azevedo (ä.rą.ö'zhö dę ä.zę.vā'dö), Antônio de. [Title, Conde de Barca.] b. at Sa, near Ponte de Lima, Portugal, 1754; d. at Rio de Janeiro, 1817. Portuguese politician and diplomat. He was made minister of war and foreign affairs (1804), and prime minister (1807). It was by his advice that the Portuguese court fled to Brazil in 1807. Arrived at Rio de Janeiro (1808), he resigned (but remained a member of the council of state), and in 1815 was created Conde de Barca. In 1814 he was minister of marine, and in 1817 was again called to be prime minister, holding the position until his death.

Araujo Jorge (zhôr'zhē), Arthur Guimarães de. b. at Paulo Affonso, Alagôas, Brazil, Sept. 29, 1884—. Brazilian writer, editor, and diplomat. He entered the diplomatic service in 1905, and held posts in Bolivia, Panama, Cuba (1927–29), Uruguay (1931–33), Germany (1933–35), and other countries, and was ambassador to Chile (1935–36) and Portugal (1936–43). Editor (1909–20) of Revista americana. Author of Problemas de philosophia biológica (1905), História diplomática do Brasil colonial (1915), and other books.

Araujo Lima (lē'mą), Pedro de. [Titles: Viscount (1841) and Marquis (1854) of Olinda.] b. at Antas, Pernambuco, Brazil, Dec. 22, 1793; d. at Rio de Janeiro, June 7, 1870. Brazilian statesman, regent of Brazil during the minority of the emperor Pedro II, from April 22, 1838, to July 23, 1840. He was a senator, and several times prime minister (1848–49, 1857–59, 1862–64, 1865–66).

Araújo Pôrto Alegre (ä.rą.ō'zhö pōr'tō.ą.le'grē), Manuel de. See Pôrto-Alegre, Manuel de Araújo.

Aravalli Range (ar.a.vä'lē). [Also, Aravali or Aravulli Range (or Hills).] Range of mountains in Rajputana. W central Union of India, ab. 300 mi. in length, extending from NE to SW. Its highest point is Mount Abu (ab. 5,650 ft.).

Ara Vos Prec (ar'ą vōs prek). Volume of poems (1919) by T. S. Eliot.

Arawak (ä'rä.wäk). Term sometimes incorrectly applied to the extinct Arhuaco Indian tribes of N Colombia.

Arawak. [Also: Arrawac, Arrua.] Collective term for a large number of Indian tribes distributed widely, but discontinuously, in the tropical forested portion of South America and the Antilles, and speaking languages of the Arawakan linguistic stock. Culturally the Arawak tribes are quite diverse, sharing details of custom with other tribes of various language groups in the several regions of lowland South America, rather than possessing a body of practices setting them apart from all others. Among characteristic traits possessed by the Arawak tribes in one or another degree, depending upon circumstances, have been cultivating manioc, corn, sweet potatoes, beans, and cotton; hunting with traps, bows and arrows, and blowguns; fishing with poisons, bows and arrows, and weirs; use of dugout and bark canoes; and manufacture of a great variety of basketry objects, pottery, and cloth woven on vertical looms. Socially and politically the Arawak tribes were limited to small villages or towns, headed by a chief of restricted power, and never banded together. Religion was for the most part animistic, with the principal power of rapport with the supernatural being vested in medicine men. Among the main ceremonial activities were harvest festivals, puberty ordeals, and mourning rites. Some of the Arawak tribes also practiced forms of cannibalism. The broken distribution of the Arawak tribes suggests an early establishment in the tropical forests of South America and subsequent widespread movement along the various rivers, often after displacement by the more aggressive Carib.

Arawakan (ä.rä.wä'kąn). One of the major South American linguistic stocks, widely but discontinuously distributed throughout the tropical-forest areas of W Brazil lowland Colombia, Venezuela, the Guianas, Ecuador Bolivia, and Paraguay, as well as at one time through the Antilles. A small representation probably once existed in S Florida, and thus Arawakan may be said to be the only American Indian language stock to have representation on both of the American continents.

Araxá (ä.rą.shä'). City in SE Brazil, in the state of Minas Gerais. 14,997 (1950).

Araxes (a.rak'sēz). Ancient name of the Aras.

Arayat (ä.rä'yät), Mount. See under Pampanga.

Arbaces (är'bą.sēz, är.bā'-). Founder of the Median empire. He reigned from c876 to 848 B.C.

Arbaces. In Beaumont and Fletcher's King and No King, the king of Iberia, whose nature is a compound of vainglory and violence.

Arbaces. In Byron's Sardanapalus, the governor of Media, who became, in place of Sardanapalus, the king of Nineveh and Assyria.

Arbaïlu (är.bī'lö). See Arbela.

Arbasto, the Anatomie of Fortune (är.bas'tō). Prose narrative (1584) by Robert Greene. It is a romantic tale about Arbasto, king of Denmark, who, while warring against the French king, fell in love with his daughter, Doralicia. She scorned him, but her sister Myrania loved him, released him from prison, fled with him to Denmark, and there died of a broken heart because of his indifference. Doralicia then repented and offered love, but was rebuffed and she too died. Arbasto's subjects revolted and banished him, and he found content as a hermit.

Arbate (ár.bät). Character in Jean Baptiste Racine's play Mithridate.

Arbate. Character in Molière's comedy La Princesse d'Élide.

Arbaud (dár.bō), Louis d'. b. at Meyrargues, in Provence, France, 1874—. French poet, novelist, and editor writing in French and modern Provençal. His poems, collected in Lou Lausié d'Arle (The Laurel of Arles, 1913) and others published only in pamphlet form, with his novel La Bèstio dóu Vacarès (The Beast of the Vacares, 1924), are frequently cited as samples of modern French regional literature. He has, at recurrent intervals, edited the regionalist review Le Feu and has been instrumental in prolonging the Provençal local-culture movement.

Arbedo Castione (är.bā'dō käs.tyō'nā). Village in S Switzerland, in the canton of Ticino, situated at the junction of the Arbedo and Ticino valleys, NE of Bellinzona. It was the scene of a Swiss victory (1422) over the much larger army of the Milanese. 1,302 (1941).

Arbela (är.bē'lą). [Also: Arbaïlu; modern name, Erbil.] In ancient geography, a town in Assyria. It was an early seat of the worship of Ishtar, and a place of considerable importance. Near here, at Gaugamela, a Macedonian force (said to have numbered 47,000) under Alexander the Great defeated a much larger Persian army (some estimates have run as high as one million) under Darius, in 331 B.C. This battle led to the final overthrow of the Persian empire.

Arbella (är.bel'ą). Flagship of the fleet which, between April 8 and June 12, 1630, transported John Winthrop and other members of the Massachusetts Bay Company from England to Salem, thus inaugurating the so-called "Great Migration" which provided the basis for the settlement of Massachusetts.

Arbenz Guzmán (är'bāns gös.män'), Jacobo. b. at Quezaltenango, Guatemala, Sept. 14, 1913—. Guatemalan politician, president of Guatemala (1951 et seq.). An army officer, he became minister of national defense in 1945 after acting as one of the leaders of the revolt of 1944.

Arber (är'bėr). Mountain group in E Germany, the highest group of the Böhmerwald (Bohemian Forest), situated in Bavaria ab. 50 mi. E of Regensburg. Elevation of the Grosser Arber, ab. 4,780 ft.

Arber, Edward. b. at London, Dec. 4, 1836; killed by a London taxicab, Nov. 23, 1912. English admiralty clerk, professor, and research scholar. He edited a series of works of tremendous value to students and scholars, including Arber's English Reprints (14 vols., 1868–71), An English Garner: Ingatherings from Our History and Literature (10 vols., 1877–96, usually called Arber's English Garner), English Scholar's Library (16 vols., 1878–84), Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers of London, 1554–1640 (5 vols., 1875–94), Term Catalogues 1668–1709 (3 vols., 1903–06).

Arbères (dár.ber), Bernard de Bluet d'. See Bluet d'Arbères, Bernard de.

Arbil (är'bil). See Erbil.

Arblastier (är.blas'tyėr), William. See Alabaster, William.

Arblay (där'blā), Madame d'. See Burney, Fanny.

Arboga (är.bō'gä). Town in the län (county) of Västmanland, Sweden, ab. 76 mi. NW of Stockholm. It was formerly of great importance, the seat of many councils and diets. 9,262 (1950).

Arbogast (är'bō.gast). [Also, Arbogastes (är.bō gas'tēz).] d. 394 A.D. Frankish general in Roman service under Theodosius I (the Great). He fought the Goths in Thrace, and defeated (388) Maximus, usurper of the western empire. He was made minister to Theodosius' brother-in-law, Valentinian II, who died (392) suddenly, probably murdered by Arbogast in order to install Eugenius as western emperor. Defeated (394) by Theodosius at the battle of Frigidus, he committed suicide.

Arbois (är.bwä). Town in E France, in the department of Jura, situated on the Cuisance River, between Lons-le-Saunier and Besançon. It is famous for its wines. The chemist Louis Pasteur spent his youth here; the town has a Pasteur museum. 3,457 (1946).

Arbois de Jubainville (dár.bwä dę zhü.baṅ.vēl), Marie Henri d'. b. at Nancy, France, Dec. 5, 1827; d. in February, 1910. French archaeologist and Celtic scholar. He was archivist (until 1880) for the Aube department, and a professor of Celtic at the Collège de France (1882 et seq.). Founder of Revue Celtique; author of Cours de littérature celtique, and other important works on ancient Celtic literature and law.

Arboleda (är.bō.lā'тнä), Julio. b. at Barbacoas, Colombia, 1817; assassinated Nov. 12, 1862. Colombian poet and revolutionist. He early took his place among the first poets of Spanish America, but the manuscript of his greatest work, Gonzalo de Ouón, was destroyed by a personal enemy, and only portions which had been copied were published. In 1856 he joined the conservative revolt in Antioquia, became its leader, and in alliance with the president of Ecuador, carried on a war against Tomás Cipriano de Mosquera and the federalists. The states of western Colombia adhered to him, and he was elected president, but only a few months later he was assassinated.

Arbon (är'bōn). Town in NE Switzerland, in the canton of Thurgau, situated on Lake Constance between Rorschach and Egnach. 7,897 (1941).

Arbor Day. American holiday dedicated to the planting of new trees. Although observed in almost every state and territory, its dates vary from one locality to another. It is a legal holiday in a few states.

Arbor of Amorous Devices, The. Anthology of poetry (1597) issued by Richard Jones under Nicholas Breton's name. Breton is not the sole author of these poems, although a good many are his. There was an edition of the Arbor in 1594, but no copy is known still to exist.

Arbós (är.bōs'), Enrique Fernández. b. at Madrid, Spain, Dec. 25, 1863; d. at San Sebastián, Spain, June 3, 1939. Spanish violinist, conductor, and composer. He taught at the Hamburg Conservatory, the Madrid Conservatory, and at the Royal College of Music, London (1894 to 1916); he also served as concert master of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Madrid Symphony Orchestra. His compositions include El Centro de la Tierra (1895), a comic opera.

Arbroath (är.brōтн'). [Former names, Aberbrothock, Aberbrothwick.] Royal burgh and seaport, in E Scotland, in Angus, situated on the North Sea, at the mouth of the river Brothock, ab. 17 mi. NE of Dundee, ab. 469 mi. N of London by rail. The town is scenically situated near some cliffs, and has a fine sandy beach. The ruins of Arbroath Abbey, founded in 1178, are nearby. 19,584 (est. 1948).

Arbuckle (är'buk''l), John. b. at Pittsburgh, 1839; d. March 27, 1912. American coffee merchant, sugar refiner, and inventor. He was a leader in the development (1871 et seq.) of machinery to weigh, pack, and seal ground coffee, which was adapted to use with sugar; his success led to the termination (1896) by the Havemeyers' American Sugar Company of an agreement whereby Arbuckle shared in the profits derived from packaging their sugar. A five-year fight took Arbuckle into sugar refining and the Havemeyers into the coffee trade; the end result saw Arbuckle in the sugar business and eliminated the Havemeyers as competitors in coffee. He subsequently expanded his merchant-vessel holdings until it was believed that he was the largest individual American owner of seagoing vessels.

Arbuckle Mountains. Range of low mountains, of very great geological age, in S Oklahoma. The range has now, by process of erosion, been so leveled off as to have an overall average height of less than 800 ft., but it remains, because of its age and unusual rock formations, an area of great interest to geologists.

Arbuthnot (är.buth'not, är'buth.not), Alexander. b. in Kincardineshire, Scotland, 1538; d. 1583. Scottish Protestant poet, divine, and lawyer. Author of three short poems (The Praises of Women, The Miseries of a Pure Scholar, and On Love), a Latin work on the origin and dignity of the law, and a manuscript history, also in Latin, of his family.

Arbuthnot, John. b. at Arbuthnot, Scotland, 1667; d. at London, 1735. British physician, wit, and man of letters. He was physician extraordinary (1705), and later (1709) in ordinary to Queen Anne. The Tory ministry employed him as a political writer. He joined Jonathan Swift, Alexander Pope, John Gay, and Thomas Parnell to form (c1713) the Scriblerus Club, and was a friend of Philip Dormer Stanhope, 4th Earl of Chesterfield, William Congreve, Swift, who mentions him frequently in Journal to Stella, and Pope, who dedicated to him the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot (1735). Author of satirical pamphlets, chiefly Law is a Bottomless Pit, exemplified in the case of Lord Strutt, John Bull, Nicholas Frog, and Lewis Baboon, who spent all they had in a lawsuit (1712), later known as The History of John Bull, a lively attack on Whig war policy which established (though it did not invent) the popular character of John Bull as the symbol personified of Great Britain; Memoirs of Martinus Scriblerus, published (1741) in Pope's works but mainly written by Arbuthnot, is a satire of contemporary pedantry and antiquarianism.

Arc (ärk). River in E France, in the department of Savoie, which joins the Isère River at Chamousset. Length, ab. 90 mi.

Arcachon (är.ka.shôn'). Town in SW France, in the department of Gironde, situated on the Bassin d'Arcachon, a vast inlet on the Atlantic coast, ab. 35 mi. SW of Bordeaux. It is surrounded by sand dunes and pine forests; has fisheries and is a noted summer and winter resort. It has a port which is connected with the open ocean. 14,603 (1946).

Arcadelt (är'kä.delt), Jacob. [Also: Archadelt, Archadet, Arcadet (är'kä.det), Harcadelt.] b. in the Netherlands, c1514; d. at Paris, c1570. Dutch composer, active (c1539–49) at Rome in the papal choir, and in the service (after 1557) of the duke of Guise at Paris. He composed masses and other church music, but is best known for secular contrapuntal pieces, especially madrigals.

Arcades (är'ka.dēz). Masque by John Milton, acted shortly after Comus in 1634, and printed in 1645.

Arcadia (är.kā'di.a). City in S California, in Los Angeles County, NE of Los Angeles, of which it is a suburb. In the decade between the last two U.S. censuses its population more than doubled. 9,122 (1940); 23,066 (1950).

Arcadia. City in C Florida, county seat of De Soto County, SE of Tampa. 4,764 (1950).

Arcadia. In ancient geography, a region in Greece, in the heart of the Peloponnesus, bounded by Achaea on the N, by Argolis on the E, by Laconia and Messenia on the S, and by Elis on the W. All but isolated by mountains and intersected by them, it was proverbial for its rural simplicity. Its cities Tegea, Mantinea, and others formed a confederation c370–360 B.C.

Arcadia. [Also, Arkadia.] Nomos (department) in S Greece, situated on the Peloponnesus. It includes the provinces of Gortynia, Cynouria, Mantinea, and Megalopolis. Capital, Tripolis; area, ab. 1,600 sq. mi.; pop. 154,318 (1951).

Arcadia. Unincorporated community in NW South Carolina, in Spartanburg County: a suburb of Spartanburg. 2,554 (1950).

Arcadia. Description of shepherd life, in prose and verse, by Jacopo Sannazaro, written toward the end of the 15th century, but not published until 1504. Although it is not a pastoral romance, it appears to have first opened the field to that species of composition.

Arcadia. [Full title, The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia.] Pastoral romance by Sir Philip Sidney, published in 1590, but written in 1580–81.

Arcadia. Romance by Robert Greene, published in 1589. It is modeled on Sir Philip Sidney's celebrated pastoral of the same name, which, although not printed until after the publication of Greene's Arcadia, had actually been written several years before it.

Arcadia. Pastoral romance by Lope de Vega, modeled on the Arcadia by Jacopo Sannazaro. It was not printed until 1598, although written many years before that date.

Arcadia. Pastoral play by James Shirley, printed in 1640, although presented on the stage some time previously. This is a dramatization of Sir Philip Sidney's romance of the same name.

Arcadians (är.kā'di.anz), Academy (or Society) of. See Academy of Arcadians.

Arcadius (är.kā'di.us). b. in Spain, c377 A.D.; d. May 1, 408. Byzantine emperor (395–408); the elder of the two sons of Theodosius I and Flaccilla. He succeeded, under the guardianship of Rufinus, to the eastern half of the empire on the death of his father and the permanent division of the Roman Empire. Rufinus claimed the civil government also of the western Roman empire, and was murdered (395) by Gainas, commander of the Gothic mercenaries at Constantinople, who acted under the instructions of Stilicho, the guardian of Arcadius's brother Honorius, emperor in the west. Arcadius then fell under the influence of the eunuch Eutropius, supported by Gainas. After the death of Eutropius (399) and of Gainas (401) he was governed entirely by his wife Eudoxia. In this reign Alaric settled with his Visigoths (West Goths) in Illyria, and was appointed governor there.

Arcae Remorum (ärʹsē rē.mōʹrum). A medieval name of Charleville.

Arcagnolo (är.kä.nyôʹlō). See Orcagna, Andrea.

Arcata (är.käʹtą). [Former name, Union Town.] City in NW California, in Humboldt County, on Humboldt Bay, ab. 6 mi. N of Eureka, in a lumbering and dairy-farming region: seat of a state teachers college. Bret Harte worked here as a newspaper man and Wells Fargo agent. 3,729 (1950).

Arc de Triomphe (ärk dę trē.ôⁿf). [English, Arch of Triumph; full name, Arc de Triomphe de l'Étoile.] Triumphal arch at the head of the Champs Élysées, Paris. It was begun in 1806 by Napoleon I, but not finished until 1836. The structure is 146 ft. wide, 160 high, and 72 deep. Its chief fronts are pierced with a single archway 67 ft. high and 46 wide, and the ends have smaller archways. The spandrels of the large archway are adorned with Victories by James Pradier, and flanked by large rectangular panels representing military episodes, as do the reliefs of the frieze. Above the heavy cornice there is an attic with shields bearing titles of French victories. Against the four piers of the fronts are placed pedestals, upon which are colossal high reliefs representing (east front) triumph of Napoleon and Peace of Vienna (1810), by Jean Pierre Cortot, departure of troops for the frontier in 1792, by François Rude; (west front) blessings of peace (1815), and resistance of France to invasion (1814), both by Antoine Etex. The vaults are inscribed with the names of battles won by France, and of officers of the French army during the Napoleonic and first republican periods. The tomb of the unknown soldier of World War I was placed under the arch. The arch has long been a symbol of French military achievement, and has been so recognized by non-Frenchmen; significantly (to emphasize the completeness of German victory), Hitler marched his troops under the arch in 1940, while on a happier occasion, after the liberation of France in 1944, French and other Allied troops also marched under it.

Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel (dü kä.rō.zel). Triumphal arch built by Napoleon I at Paris, in commemoration of his victories of 1805–06, in the square enclosed by the Tuileries and the Louvre. It imitates, on a smaller scale, the Arch of Constantine at Rome. It has a large archway between two small ones, flanked by Corinthian columns, an entablature, and a high attic. Reliefs over the small archways represent incidents of the campaigns; over the columns are placed statues of soldiers of the empire, and in the spandrels of the large archway are sculptured Victories. On the summit is a group in bronze representing a four-horse chariot. The height is 48 ft., the width 63½.

Arce (ärʹsā), Manuel José. b. at San Salvador, in what is now El Salvador, c1783; d. 1847. Central American politician. He was elected (1825) first president of the Central American confederation after the break with Spain because of his known opposition to absorption by Mexico. Having repudiated his liberal following, he was replaced (1829) by Francisco Morazán. His later attempts at coups d'état were uniformly unsuccessful.

Arcesilaus (är.ses.i.lāʹus) or Arcesilas (är.sesʹi ląs). b. at Pitane, in Aeolis, c315 B.C.; d. c241 B.C. Greek skeptic philosopher, founder of the so-called second Academy, an opponent of Stoicism and exponent of the Socratic method. Holding that both senses and reason are untrustworthy, he based his system of ethics on assumption of probability.

Arcesilaus (of Cyrene). See under Battiadae.

Arcevia (är.chāʹvyā). Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Marches, in the province of Ancona, situated on the slopes of the Apennines, W of Ancona. Its religious buildings, which were undamaged in World War II, contain art treasures by Giovanni della Robbia, Luca Signorelli, and others. Pop. of commune, 12,478 (1936); of town, 1,145 (1936).

Arch (ärch), Joseph. b. at Barford, England, Nov. 10, 1826; d. there, 1919. English politician and reformer; founder (1872) and president of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union, which was broken up by farmers 18 months later. He studied labor problems in the U.S. and Canada. As a member of Parliament from northwest Norfolk (1885–86, 1892–1900), he was one of the first workingmen to hold a seat in the House of Commons.

Archadelt (ärʹchȧ.delt) or Archadet (-det), Jacob. See Arcadelt, Jacob.

Archaeological Institute of America. Society for the promotion of archaeological research, founded at Boston in 1879, and incorporated in 1906. It has since established affiliated societies in different cities. The Institute founded the American School of Classical Studies at Athens (opened 1882), the American School of Classical Studies at Rome (1895), the American Schools of Oriental Research in Palestine (1900), School of American Research (1907), and American School of Prehistoric Research (1921). Its official organ is the American Journal of Archaeology. It also issues reports and special publications relating to archaeology. Its headquarters are at Cambridge, Mass.

Archaic. Term applied to the preagricultural peoples and cultures of the eastern U.S., particularly to those late groups which are transitional between the Paleo- and Neo-Indians. These are often assumed to constitute a single pattern, contrasting with the Woodland and Mississippi patterns which made their appearance with the introduction of agriculture. Shell middens without accompanying mounds and earthworks are characteristic.

Archambault (ärʹshăm'bō), Anna Margaretta. b. at Philadelphia—. American portrait painter, director of the Philadelphia School of Miniature Painting, lecturer and writer, noted for her miniature portraits of such dignitaries as Presidents Warren G. Harding and Calvin Coolidge.

Archangel (ärk'ānʺjęl). English name of Arkhangelsk.

Archangel Bay or Gulf of Archangel. Former names of Dvina Gulf.

Archas (ärʹkąs). Person in John Fletcher's The Loyal Subject whose character gives the play its name. He is a general of the Muscovites whose loyalty is pictured as being of the kind that bears all kinds of outrage from an unworthy king. Young Archas, the son of the general, disguises himself as a woman, and takes the name of Alinda.

Archbald (ärchʹbôld). [Former name, White Oak Run.] Borough in NE Pennsylvania, in Lackawanna County, ab. 6 mi. NE of Scranton; coal mining; manufactures of textiles. 6,304 (1950).

Archbold (ärchʹbōld), John Dustin. b. at Leesburg, Ohio, July 26, 1848; d. Dec. 5, 1916. American oil-company executive. He led the resistance of Titusville, Pa., oil men to the restrictive schemes of John D. Rockefeller's South Improvement Company, and was thereupon taken into the growing Standard Oil empire; prominent (1882 et seq.) in Standard Oil policy-making, he was a company spokesman in numerous Congressional and state investigations. He became president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey when the parent company was dissolved (1911) by a Supreme Court decision.

Archdale (ärchʹdāl), John. b. in England, 1642; d. 1717. English governor of Carolina (1694–98). He was the emissary of Charles II in the dispute (1664) with Massachusetts over the Maine colony.

Archean Era (är.kēʹan). The Pre-Cambrian Era. See table at end of Vol. III.

Archelais (är.kę.lāʹis). Ancient name of Aksaray.

Archelaus (är.kę.lāʹus). In ancient Greek history, one of the Heraclidae, the traditional founder of the Macedonian royal house.

Archelaus. fl. c1st century A.D. Greek sculptor. A bas-relief, the Apotheosis of Homer, carved by him, is in the British Museum.

Archelaus (of Athens). [Surnamed Physicus, meaning "the Physicist."] fl. c450 B.C. Greek philosopher of the Ionian (or Milesian) school, a pupil of Anaxagoras, and said to have been an instructor of Socrates and Euripides. He regarded heat and cold, derived by condensation and rarefaction of "primitive matter" or "original substance" (which he took to be air) mixed with mind, as the basic principles of generation.

Archelaus (of Cappadocia). fl. 1st century B.C. Cappadocian general under Mithridates II in Parthian campaigns against Rome. Sent to Greece (87) with a large force, he occupied Piraeus; defeated by Sulla at Chaeronea (86) and at Orchomenus (85), and incurring Mithridates' distrust, he deserted to the Romans in 81.

Archelaus (of Cappadocia). King of Cappadocia from c34 B.C. to 17 A.D.; a grandson of Archelaus (of Egypt). He owed his elevation to Mark Antony, who was captivated by the charms of Archelaus's mother, Glaphyra. He sided with Antony in the war with Octavian, but was permitted, after the defeat of Antony, to retain his kingdom, to which was subsequently added part of Cilicia and Lesser Armenia. He was, finally, summoned to Rome by Tiberius, where he was held prisoner until his death. Cappadocia became, after his death, a Roman province.

Archelaus (of Egypt). King of Egypt in 56 B.C.; a son of the general Archelaus (of Cappadocia). He became high priest at Comana in 63 B.C., and secured the hand of Berenice, queen of Egypt, by representing himself to be the son of Mithridates VI Eupator. He was defeated and slain by the Romans after a reign of six months.

Archelaus (of Macedonia). d. 399 B.C. King of Macedonia (c413–399 B.C.); son of Perdiccas II. He was a patron of Hellenic art and literature, and attracted to his court Zeuxis, Euripides, and Agathon, and invited Socrates, who declined.

Archenholz (är'chĕn.holts), Baron Johann Wilhelm von. b. near Danzig, Sept. 3, 1743; d. near Hamburg, Germany, Feb. 28, 1812. German historian. He served in the Seven Years' War, and lived (1769–79) in England. Author of England und Italien (1785) and Geschichte des siebenjährigen Krieges (1793); editor (1792–1812) of Minerva, a literary and historical journal.

Archeozoic Period (är''kē.ō.zō'ik). That part of the Pre-Cambrian Era in which life arose. See table at end of Vol. III.

Archer (är'chĕr). River in NE Australia, in Cape York Peninsula, Queensland, which flows generally W into the Gulf of Carpentaria.

Archer. In George Farquhar's comedy The Beaux' Stratagem, a friend of Aimwell who pretends to be his servant in order to further the success of the stratagem. He carries on various lively adventures on his own account.

Archer, Branch Tanner. b. in Virginia, 1790; d. Sept. 22, 1856. American leader in the Texas revolution. After moving to Texas in 1831, he presided over the conference (1835) on Santa Anna's changes in the constitution which adopted a resolution to fight for republican principles; as a commissioner to New Orleans (1836) to obtain a loan, he helped arouse sympathy for the Texas declaration of independence. He was a supporter of Stephen Fuller Austin for the presidency of Texas, a member of its first congress, and President Lamar's secretary of war.

Archer, Frederic. b. at Oxford, England, June 16, 1838; d. at Pittsburgh, Oct. 22, 1901. Organist and conductor. After studying at Oxford, London, and Leipzig, he gave organ recitals at Alexandra Palace, London, and elsewhere. He came (1881) to the U.S., becoming church organist at Brooklyn, New York, and Chicago, conductor (1887–88) of the Boston Oratorio Society, organist and music director (1895 et seq.) at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, and conductor (1896–98) of the Pittsburgh Orchestra. He was a leader in removing the organ recital from its narrow field and popularizing it in the U.S.

Archer, Frederick J. b. at Cheltenham, England, 1857; shot himself at Newmarket, England, 1886. English jockey. He competed in 2,746 races, and was five times winner of the Derby and several times winner of virtually every other important English stake race of his day.

Archer, Frederick Scott. b. at Bishop's Stortford, England, 1813; d. 1857. English photographer and one-time sculptor who invented (1850) the collodion process of making photographic plates. He also developed a version of the liquid-filled lens and was the first in England to use the so-called triplet lens.

Archer, Isabel. Heroine of The Portrait of a Lady (1881), a novel by Henry James.

Archer, James. b. at Edinburgh, 1823; d. 1904. British portrait painter. His early work includes a number of Biblical and classical studies, as well as several scenes from the Arthurian legend, but his reputation is based on his later portraits of children, and on costume pictures, most of which were exhibited at the Royal Academy.

Archer, James J. b. at Stafford, Md., Dec. 19, 1817; d. Oct. 24, 1864. American soldier, Confederate general in the Civil War. Educated at Princeton and at Bacon College in Kentucky, he achieved the brevet rank of brigadier general for service at Chapultepec in the Mexican War, but left the army in 1848. He returned (1855) with the rank of captain, and aligned himself with the Confederacy (1861). He commanded a brigade in the Army of Northern Virginia in every notable battle of 1862–63; captured at Gettysburg, he died soon after his exchange (1864).

Archer, John. b. near Churchville, Md., May 5, 1741; d. Sept. 28, 1810. American physician, teacher, Revolutionary soldier, and one-time theologian. He gave up theology for medicine after preaching a trial sermon, began to practice medicine while still a student at the Philadelphia College of Medicine, and received (1868) the first medical degree involving attendance at lectures to be awarded in America. He became a major in January, 1776, in the Revolutionary army and was later a member of the Maryland state constitutional convention. He was also a member of Congress (1801–07), and an examiner and founder (1799) of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland.

Archer, Newland. Hero of The Age of Innocence (1920), novel by Edith Wharton.

Archer, William. b. at Perth, Scotland, 1856; d. 1924. British drama critic and playwright; translator and popularizer of Ibsen in England. Newspaper work in Scotland, Australia, and London was followed by the translation of Ibsen's Pillars of Society, the production of which (1880) at the Gaiety Theatre gave the London public its first taste of Ibsen. He edited Ibsen's Prose Dramas (5 vols., 1890–91). His own works included the prose volume God and Mr. Wells (1917), as well as several plays, including The Green Goddess (1921), a melodrama successful on both sides of the Atlantic.

Archers, The. [Full title, The Archers: or, The Mountaineers of Switzerland.] Opera by Benjamin Carr, with libretto by William Dunlap, first performed at New York on April 18, 1796. One of the earliest American operas, the work is based on the William Tell legend.

Archibald (är'chi.bôld), Sir Adams George. b. at Truro, Nova Scotia, May 18, 1814; d. there, Dec. 14, 1892. Canadian politician and jurist, active in conferences (1857, 1864, 1866) on the union of the Canadian provinces, and secretary of state (1867–68) for the new Dominion of Canada. He was also the first lieutenant governor (1870–72) of Manitoba under dominion status.

Archibald, Jules François. [Original name, John Feltman.] b. at Kildare, Victoria, Australia, Jan. 14, 1856; d. at Sydney, Australia, Sept. 10, 1919. Australian journalist and editor, founder (1880) with John Haynes of the Bulletin of Sydney, one of the most influential political, financial, and literary weeklies in Australia's history.

Archibald, Raymond Clare. b. at South Branch, Nova Scotia, Oct. 7, 1875—. American mathematician and historian, author of works on the history of mathematics. He held numerous offices in mathematical and scientific organizations, and served on the editorial boards of many periodicals. He was educated at Harvard, Berlin, and Strasbourg, at the last of which he received his doctorate in 1900. From 1908 on he taught at Brown University. Besides bio-bibliographical studies, especially of Simon Newcomb (1905, 1924), Benjamin Peirce (1925), J. J. Sylvester (1936), and mathematical table-makers (c1948), his books include The Cardioid and Some of Its Related Curves (1900) and an Outline of the History of Mathematics which has gone through many editions since its original publication in 1932.

Archidamus (är.ki.dā'mus). Bohemian lord in Shakespeare's A Winter's Tale.

Archidamus II. King of Sparta from c469 to c427 B.C. He led the army under Sparta against Athens in the beginning of the Peloponnesian War.

Archidamus III. King of Sparta from c361 to 338 B.C. He defeated the Arcadians and Argives in the "Tearless Battle" (367), and was killed in battle in 338.

Archigenes (är.kij'ē.nēz). b. at Apamea, in Syria; fl. at Rome, 98–117 A.D. Greek physician, who practiced at Rome in the time of Trajan. A celebrated eclectic, he was the author of a treatise on the pulse (the most elaborate of ancient times) to which Galen added a commentary. He distinguished four stages in the development of disease, and established a classification system for fevers. In addition to this, he made considerable refinement in diagnostic technique, and also produced descriptions of leprosy (then little understood) and Hindu therapeutics (then almost completely unknown in Europe).

Archilochus (är.kil'ọ.kus). b. at Paros, in the Cyclades: fl. c700–650 B.C. Greek lyric poet, probable inventor of iambic and trochaic meters. Embittered by poverty and by the refusal of a fellow townsman to give him his daughter in marriage, he became a wanderer and soldier, being eventually killed in battle. He used iambics in satires praised by Horace and Hadrian, among others. Author also of hymns (one of which was sung in the Olympics), elegies, and lampoons; he used the trochee in his serious works, and was the first to alternate long and short verses in the form called epode.

Archimage (är'ki.māj). [Also, Archimago (är.ki.mā'gō).] Personification of Hypocrisy in Edmund Spenser's Faerie Queene, a magician and a compound of deceit and credulity. He deceives Una by assuming the appearance of the Red Cross Knight, but his falsehood is exposed. The whole story is taken from Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

Archimage. [Also, Archimago.] Personification of Indolence in James Thomson's Castle of Indolence.

Archimedes (är.ki.mē'dēz). b. at Syracuse, Sicily, c287 B.C.; killed there, 212 B.C. Greek mathematician, engineer, and physicist, now usually considered to have been in each of these fields the outstanding figure of the ancient world. He was the discoverer of principles and the author of treatises basic to the subsequent study of geometry and calculus, particularly on the dimensions of the circle, sphere, cylinder, and parabola; in physics, developer of the displacement theory known as Archimedes' principle, and supposedly also of that of the lever (of which, according to tradition, he said, "Give me the place to stand, and I will move the world"); in mechanics he was the inventor of the Archimedean screw and various machines of war. The son of an astronomer, he was a student at Alexandria, and was probably associated with Conon of Samos. He spent much of his life at the court of Hiero II of Syracuse (who is said to have been his relative). Given the problem of analyzing the gold content of Hiero's crown, he is supposed to have cried "Eureka!" ("I have found [it]"), as, stepping into his bath, he discovered the relationship between weight and displacement of water, the principle now applied to determining the displacement of ships and specific gravity. His engines of war, which struck terror among the Romans and held them off for three years in their siege of Syracuse (214–212 B.C.), were considered unimportant by him. According to one tradition he was killed at the fall of Syracuse while drawing geometrical figures in the sand, though the Roman commander had ordered him spared for his great learning.

Archipelago (är.ki.pel'ạ.gō). [Also: Greek Archipelago; Turkish, Jezairi-Bahri-Sefid.] In ancient geography, a name for the various islands in the Aegean Sea, or for the sea itself; in recent times, a former vilayet of Turkey including some of the Aegean islands.

Archipel des Comores (är.shē.pel dā ko.mor). A French name of Comoro Islands.

Archipenko (Anglicized, är.ki.peng'kō; Russian, är-hē'pin.kọ), Aleksandr. b. at Kiev, Ukraine, May 30, 1887—. Russian sculptor and painter, resident (since 1924) in the U.S. A leader of modernists in the field of sculpture, he is best known for his abstractions based on the female nude figure; the use of unusual materials characterizes much of his work.

Archipiélago (är.chē.pyā'lä.gō). Spanish word for "archipelago": for entries not listed here, see the specific element of the name

Archipiélago de Colón (är.chē.pyā'lä.gō тнā kō.lōn'). [Also called Galápagos Islands.] Civil division of Ecuador, comprising the Galápagos Islands. Capital, San Cristóbal; area, 3,029 sq. mi.; pop. 661 (est. 1944).

Archipropheta (är.ki.prof'ẹ.tạ). Tragedy (1547) written in Latin by Nicholas Grimald.

Archive War. Incident (1842) involving a struggle between Houston and Austin, Tex., over the possession of the state archives. In 1839 Austin was named as the capital of Texas. A raid conducted by the Mexicans against San Antonio in 1842 created fears that the archives might be destroyed, and President Houston, of the Texan republic, ordered the records moved to Houston. However, the residents of Austin pursued the wagons bearing the archives and compelled them to turn back to Austin.

Arch of Augustus. [Also, Porta Romana.] Roman triumphal arch at Rimini, Italy, built in 27 B.C., in honor of the restoration of the Flaminian Way. It is of white travertine, 45.9 ft. high and 28.8 thick, with a single arch 29.5 ft. high and 26.9 wide. A Corinthian fluted column on each side of the archway supports an entablature, above which there is a low pediment.

Arch of Constantine. Roman arch built in 312 A.D. in honor of Constantine's triumph over Maxentius. It has a large central archway between two smaller ones, and four Corinthian columns on each front. The attic bears a long inscription.

Arch of Drusus. Roman arch (wrongly named) built by Caracalla to carry an aqueduct for the supply of his thermae over the Appian Way near the gate of San Sebastiano. It is built of travertine, faced with white marble, and decorated with composite columns, and originally had on each side an entablature and a pediment. The style is usually considered to be very poor.

Arch of Hadrian. Triumphal gateway at Athens, probably built by Hadrian, between the old city and his new quarter. It is 59 ft. high, with a single arch 20 ft. high. Above the arch there is an attic with three large openings, originally closed. Above the central opening there is a pediment. The arch was decorated on each side with Corinthian columns.

Arch of Janus Quadrifrons. Roman arch at the NE extremity of the Forum Boarium. It is a four-way arch of marble, largely built of older architectural fragments. The interior is covered with a simple groined vault. The four fronts bear 32 niches for statues of divinities, and on the massive piers there are 16 blind niches flanking the archways. The structure was used in antiquity as a kind of financial exchange.

Arch of Septimius Severus. Roman arch in the Forum, dedicated 203 A.D., in commemoration of victories over the Parthians. It is of Pentelic marble, with a central arch and two side arches, flanked by four Corinthian columns on each face. There are panels over the side arches and a frieze above all with reliefs of Roman triumphs. The attic bears inscriptions.

Arch of Titus. Roman arch in the Forum, built in commemoration of the taking of Jerusalem. It has a single archway, the opening flanked on each face by four composite columns. The spandrels bear Victories in relief, and on the high attic is the dedicatory inscription. The vault is richly coffered and sculptured, and the interior faces of the piers display reliefs of Titus in triumph, with the plunder of the temple at Jerusalem, in which the seven-branched candlesticks are conspicuous.

Arch of Trajan. Arch over the Appian Way at Benevento, Italy, dedicated in 114 A.D., and one of the finest of ancient arches. It is of white marble, 48 ft. high and 30½ wide, with a single arch measuring 27 by 16½ ft. On each face there are four engaged Corinthian columns, with an entablature, above which is a paneled attic. The arch is profusely sculptured with reliefs illustrating Trajan's life and his Dacian triumphs. There are Victories in the spandrels and dedicatory inscriptions on the central panels of the attic.

Arch of Trajan. Arch erected at Ancona, Italy, in 115 A.D. It is of white marble, and stands at the end of the breakwater built by Trajan, and is perhaps the best-proportioned of all Roman triumphal arches. It has a single opening 46 by 29½ ft., two engaged Corinthian columns on the face of each pier, and a high attic above the entablature.

Arch of Triumph. See Arc de Triomphe.

Archon (är'kon). In John Dryden's poem Albion and Albanius, a character intended to represent George Monck.

archy and mehitabel (är'chi; mē.hit'ạ.bel). Collection of verse by Don Marquis, published in 1927. A cockroach in whom resides the soul of a poet, archy uses a typewriter to compose free verse, all of which is unencumbered with capital letters because of his inability to operate the shift key; mehitabel is a cat, archy's occasional companion and conversational foil, with a soul which belonged in an earlier incarnation, by her own claim, to Cleopatra.

Archytas of Tarentum (är.kī'tąs; tą.ren'tųm). fl. c400–350 B.C. Greek Pythagorean philosopher, mathematician, statesman, and general; a friend of Plato. Believed by some to have furnished certain ideas used by Plato and Aristotle, he is known to have been the first to set up a system of analytical geometry and to distinguish harmonic progression. He was a notable contributor to the theory of proportion and the study of acoustics and music. Finally, he was the inventor of a method of doubling the cube, supposedly also of the pulley, and even, according to Aulus Gellius, of a flying machine.

Arcignano (är.chē.nyä'nō). [Also, Arzignano.] Town and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region of Veneto, in the province of Vicenza, situated in the foothills of the Alps, W of Vicenza. Pop. of commune, 13,382 (1936); of town, 4,597 (1936).

Arciniegas (är.sē.nyä'gäs), Germán. b. at Bogotá, Colombia, Dec. 6, 1900—. Colombian historian and diplomat. He has served as vice-consul (1930 et seq.) at London, counsellor (1940) at Buenos Aires, minister of education (1941, 1946), and a visiting professor at Columbia (1942, 1948 et seq.), the University of Chicago (1943), and the University of California (1944). Editor of Revista de America, and author of The Knight of El Dorado (1943), Germans in the Conquest of America (1943), The Green Continent (1944), and The Caribbean (1946).

Arcis-sur-Aube (är.sēs.sür.ōb). Town in the department of Aube, France, situated on the Aube River ab. 17 mi. N of Troyes. It was the birthplace of Georges Jacques Danton. Here a battle was fought, on March 20 and 21, 1814, between the French under Napoleon I and the Allies under Karl Phillip Schwarzenberg. Napoleon was unsuccessful in his attempt to prevent the junction of Schwarzenberg and Blücher, and retreated, leaving the route to Paris open, with the intention of attacking the Allies in the rear. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Arciszewski (är.chē.shef'skē), Crestofle d'Artischau. See Artichofsky, Crestofle d'Artischau.

Arciszewski, Tomasz. b. Sept. 14, 1877—. Polish socialist. Active in secret political organizations under the Czarist regime, he was later a member (1919–35) of the Polish parliament. During the German occupation (1939 et seq.) he belonged to the underground council of national unity, and was flown (1944) to London, where he served (1944–45) as premier of the Polish government-in-exile.

Arcite (är'sīt). Theban knight. An account of him is given in Geoffrey Chaucer's Knight's Tale, and John Dryden's Palamon and Arcite. The name was also given by Chaucer to a false knight in his Anelida and Arcite.

Arco (är'kō). Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Trentino-Alto Adige, in the province of Trento, situated on the Sarca River, near Lake Garda, ab. 16 mi. SW of Trent. It is a health resort, with a generally mild climate. There is a castle of the counts of Arco; seat of the Arco family, of Bavarian origin, from the 12th century. Pop. of commune, 9,215 (1936); of town, 3,448 (1936).

Arcole (är'kō.lā). [Also, Arcola (-lä).] Village and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Veneto, in the province of Verona, situated on the Alpone River, ab. 15 mi. SE of Verona. Here a victory was gained by the French under Napoleon I over the Austrians under Josef Alvinczy, on Nov. 15, 16, and 17, 1796. It was fought largely in the swamps near Arcole, laying the foundation of Napoleon's reputation as a strategist and military leader. Pop. of village, 1,945 (1936); of commune, 4,480 (1936).

Arçon (dȧr.sôṅ), Jean Claude Eléonore Le Michaud d'. b. at Pontarlier, France, 1733; d. July 1, 1800. French military engineer and writer. He was the inventor of floating batteries used at the siege of Gibraltar (1782), and the author of Considérations militaires et politiques sur les fortifications (1795).

Arcos (är.kos), René. b. at Clichy-la-Garenne, near Paris, Nov. 16, 1880—. French poet, author of L'Âme essentielle (1903), L'Île perdue (1913), and others. He is known as a member, with Georges Duhamel, Jules Romains, and others, of the "Abbaye de Créteil," a unanimist group.

Arcos de la Frontera (är'kōs dā lä frōn.tā'rä). City in S Spain, in the province of Cádiz, situated on the Guadalete River, ab. 30 mi. NE of Cádiz: agricultural trade center. The city is located on a high rock, which is surmounted by a Gothic church. A Roman town in ancient times, it preserves remains of the ancient fortifications. Under Moslem rule in the early Middle Ages, the town was captured by Ferdinand III of Castile and León in 1250, and served subsequently as a fortified frontier stronghold in the wars between Castile and Granada. 18,146 (1940).

Arcot (är.kot'). [Tamil, Arkat or Arucati, meaning "Six Forests."] Town in the district of North Arcot, Madras state, Union of India, situated on the Palar River ab. 67 mi. W of the city of Madras: once the capital of the Carnatic. It was taken by Robert Clive in August, 1751, and defended by him from September to November of that year against the French and natives. Later it was successively held by the French, British, and Hyder Ali, and was ceded to the British in 1801. Pop. ab. 15,000.

Arctedius (ärk.tē'di.us), Petrus. Latinized name of Artedi, Peter.

Arctic (ärk'tik). Passenger steamship belonging to the Collins Line (the first American line of steamships), which was sunk by collision in the Atlantic Ocean in 1854.

Arctic Archipelago. [Also, Canadian Arctic Islands.] Island group in the Arctic Ocean, N of Canada and included within the political jurisdiction of the Northwest Territories of Canada. The chief islands of the group are Baffin Island, Banks Island, Ellesmere Island, Melville Island, and Victoria Island. The archipelago has been formally under Canadian control since 1880. Area, ab. 550,000 sq. mi.

Arctic Circle. Hypothetical line shown on most globes to separate the Arctic region from the rest of the world to the S. It is at every point in its circumference ab. 23½° S of the North Pole, and represents the latitude at which the sun is tangent to the horizon at midnight on June 22. Everywhere N of the Arctic Circle there is continuous sunshine (during clear weather) for a period in midsummer, and during the same period continuous daylight or twilight prevails in a zone several degrees S of the Arctic Circle.

Arctic Ocean. Part of the ocean which lies about the North Pole. Partially enclosed by Europe, Asia, North America, and Greenland, it communicates with the Pacific Ocean by Bering Strait, and is open to the Atlantic. It is generally regarded as extending S to the Norwegian Sea. Among the lands in it are Greenland, Novaya Zemlya, Severnaya Zemlya, Svalbard, Franz Josef Land, Jan Mayen, New Siberia, Wrangel Island, Banks Island, Prince Patrick Island, Melville Island, Victoria Island, King William Island, Prince of Wales Island, Bathurst Island, Somerset Island, Devon Island, Baffin Island, and Ellesmere Island. Among its arms or divisions are Kotzebue Sound, Beaufort Sea, Viscount Melville Sound, McClintock Channel, Gulf of Boothia, Lancaster Sound, Baffin Bay, Smith Sound, Lincoln Sea, Kara Sea, Barents Sea, Gulf of Ob, Yenisei Gulf, White Sea, Laptev Sea, East Siberian Sea, and Chuckchee Sea. Area, ab. 5,440,000 sq. mi.

Arctic Red River. River in NW Canada, in the Northwest Territories, flowing generally NW to the Mackenzie River. There is a Hudson's Bay Company post, and also a station of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, at the point of its junction with the Mackenzie. Length, ab. 230 mi.

Arctinus (ärk.tī'nus). fl. c776 B.C. Greek poet of Miletus, believed to have been a pupil of Homer. Author of Aethiopis, an epic poem which picks up the narrative at the point where it is dropped by the Iliad.

Arcturus (ärk.tū'rus). An orange star, α Boötis, sixth brightest in the sky. It is situated between the thighs of Boötes, behind the Great Bear, and is easily found by following out the curve of the bear's tail. It may be recognized by its forming a nearly equilateral triangle with Spica and Denebola.

Arcueil (ȧr.kèy'). [Latin, Arculi (är'kų.lī), Arcus Julianus (är'kus jō.li.ā'nus).] Town in N France, in the department of Seine: southern suburb of Paris. Nearby are the ruins of a Roman aqueduct on the site of which another was built (1613–24) to convey water to the gardens of the Luxembourg. A new aqueduct was built in 1868–72. Arcueil has been known for its quarries, and has had some popularity as a resort. 16,340 (1946).

Ardabil (är.dą.bēl′). See Ardebil.

Ardahan (är.dä.hän′). [Also, Ardagan (-gän′).] Fortress in NE Turkey, situated on the Kura River ab. 41 mi. NW of Kars: stormed by the Russians in May, 1877, and ceded to Russia by Turkey in 1878, but later returned. Pop. ab. 3,000.

Ardashir (är.dä.shēr′). [Called "Ardashir i Papakau," meaning "Ardashir the son of Papak"; Old Persian, Artaxerxes.] Founder of the Sassanid dynasty. He reigned c226–c241 A.D. From Papak's capital at Istakhr, near Persepolis, he subdued Kerman and Susiana. In 224 he defeated and killed Ardavan, the last Parthian emperor, and from that time he called himself "king of kings." Alexander Severus led a large force against him. While Istakhr was in theory the capital, his real capital consisted of Ctesiphon and Veh-Ardashir (Seleucia), on the opposite bank of the Tigris. He established the Zoroastrian religion as the official religion of the state.

Ardea (är′dē.ą). In ancient geography, a town in Latium, Italy, ab. 24 mi. S of Rome. It was the chief town of the Rutulians, and later a Roman colony.

Ardebil (är.dę.bēl′). [Also, Ardabil.] City in NW Iran, in Azerbaijan region, ab. 30 mi. W of the Caspian Sea. It is situated on the chief trade route between Iran and the U.S.S.R. (the S boundary of the latter is only a few miles to the N of Ardebil), and has been at various times under Russian political control. It is the historical capital of the Azerbaijan nation, and remains a chief cultural center of the Azerbaijan people in both Iran and the U.S.S.R. It was at one time also a residence of the court of Persia. Pop. ab. 63,500.

Ardèche (ȧr.desh). Department in S France, bounded by the department of Loire on the N, the department of Drôme (separated by the Rhone River) on the E, the department of Gard on the S, and the departments of Lozère and Haute-Loire on the W; formed chiefly from the ancient district of Vivarais. The territory slopes down from the Cévennes mountains to the valley of the Rhone; agricultural products are consequently of great variety. Grain and pasture lands prevail in the W, and vineyards, orchards, and mulberry groves in the Rhone valley and the valleys leading to it. There are various industries, the silk and paper manufactures of Aubenas, Tournon, and Annonay being the most important. Capital, Privas; area, 2,144 sq. mi.; pop. 254,958 (1946).

Ardèche River. Small river in S France, in the department of Ardèche, which joins the Rhone River ab. 26 mi. NW of Avignon.

Ardelan (är.de.län′). District in W Iran, ab. 150 mi. NE of the city of Baghdad, Iraq: oil wells and herds of sheep are the principal sources of revenue.

Arden (är′dęn), Forest of. English forest which in former times extended through Warwickshire and other midland counties of England. Many scholars of Shakespeare have held that the Forest of Arden of As You Like It was the Forest of Ardennes in French Flanders. Wherever the scene of the play was laid, it is likely from the allusions to Robin Hood and the bits of description that it is the English forest that Shakespeare meant, though some of the characters have French names. A comparatively small wooded area in N Warwickshire is all that remains today of the original forest.

Ardennes (är.den′; French, ȧr.den). Department in NE France, bounded by Belgium on the N and NE, the department of Meuse on the E, the department of Marne on the S, and the department of Aisne on the W. It is formed largely from part of the old provinces of Champagne and Sédannais, and smaller territories. It lies in a heavily forested region sometimes called "the Forest of Ardennes," which falls within France, Belgium, and Luxembourg. It was the scene of decisive battles in the wars following the French Revolution, in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870–71, and in the two World Wars. In 1870, the French army under Marshal Marie Edme Patrice Maurice de MacMahon capitulated to the Germans near Sedan, and it was likewise near Sedan that the German Panzer divisions made their major break through the French lines in 1940. Later in World War II the Ardennes region saw severe fighting in the "Battle of the Bulge" (December, 1944–January, 1945). Many of its cities, industries, and architectural masterpieces were destroyed in the course of these disasters, and the population has dropped. The soil is generally poor. Among the industries, the metallurgical and textile industries are outstanding. Capital, Mézières; area, 2,027 sq. mi.; pop. 245,335 (1946).

Ardennes (dā.zȧr.den), Charles Baudin des. See Baudin des Ardennes, Charles.

Ardennes (är.den′; French, ȧr.den), Forest of. [French, Forêt des Ardennes; Latin, Arduenna Silva.] In ancient geography, a large forest in Gaul which extended from the Rhine River at Koblenz to the Sambre River; now restricted to S Belgium and a part of NE France, the present department of Ardennes (q.v.), a plateau rich in minerals and timber.

Ardennes Offensive. See Battle of the Bulge.

Arden of Feversham (är′dęn; fev′ėr.shąm). Tragedy, published by George Lillo in 1736, founded on the earlier Tragedy of Mr. Arden of Feversham, and played first in 1759. It was unfinished when Lillo died in 1739, and was thereafter completed by other hands. It was considerably altered and revised by Dr. John Hoadley in 1762, and was produced in this form in 1790.

Arden of Feversham, The Tragedy of Mr. Tragedy first printed (anonymously) in 1592, sometimes attributed to Shakespeare, and dramatized from Raphael Holinshed's account of the murder of a leading citizen of Faversham in Kent in 1551. According to Frederick Gard Fleay, who dates it 1585, there is some ground for attributing it to Thomas Kyd. Ludwig Tieck translated it into German as Shakespeare's work.

Arderne (är′dėrn), John. fl. c1370. English surgeon who performed an operation for fistula believed by most medieval European surgeons to be impossible, although not unknown to Arab medical men. His patients probably included Edward the Black Prince and other leading men of the time. He derived his surgical precepts largely from actual practice rather than from written sources, although his Liber de fistulis and De arte medicinae indicate an awareness of Galen's works.

Ardigò (är.dē.gô′), Roberto. b. at Casteldidone, Italy, Jan. 28, 1828; d. at Mantua, Italy, Sept. 15, 1920. Italian philosopher, outstanding in the Italian positivistic philosophical movement. He served (1881 et seq.) as professor at the University of Padua.

Arditi (är.dē′tē), Luigi. b. in Piedmont, Italy, in July, 1822; d. in England, May 1, 1903. Italian violinist and conductor of opera at Vercelli (1843), New York (1852–56, c1880), London (1857–78), St. Petersburg, Vienna, and elsewhere. He was a composer of songs, particularly Il Bacio, overtures, and operas such as I Briganti (1841), Il Corsaro (1846), and La Spia (1856, based on Cooper's The Spy).

Ardmeanach (ärd.men′ąċh). See Black Isle.

Ardmore (ärd′mōr). City in S Oklahoma, county seat of Carter County, ab. 120 mi. SE of Guthrie, in a petroleum-producing area. Manufactures include automobile tires, refined petroleum, guns, cigars, stoves; processing center for cotton and pecans. It was settled in 1887 and named after a suburb of Philadelphia. 17,890 (1950).

Ardnamurchan (ärd.ną.mėr′ċhąn). Peninsula in W Scotland, in Argyllshire, ab. 25 mi. NW of Oban. It forms a parish of Argyllshire. Length, ab. 17 mi.; greatest width, ab. 8 mi.; area, ab. 171 sq. mi.

Ardnamurchan Point. Promontory in W Scotland, in Argyllshire, situated at the W extremity of the Ardnamurchan peninsula. It is the most westerly point of the mainland of Scotland.

Ardoch (är′doċh). Parish in S Perthshire, Scotland, ab. 12 mi. N of Stirling. It has noted Roman military antiquities (the best-preserved Roman camp in Great Britain), and is the probable site of the victory of Agricola over the North Britons in 84 A.D.

Ardoin (är′doin, -dǭ.in) or Ardoino (är.dō.ē′nō). See Arduin.

Ardres (är′dėr; French, ȧrdr). Town in N France, in the department of Pas-de-Calais, situated ab. 9 mi. SE of Calais. Near here was the meeting on the "Field of the Cloth of Gold" between Francis I of France and Henry VIII of England in 1520.

Ardrossan (är.dros'an). Police burgh, seaport, and holiday resort in S Scotland, in Ayrshire, situated on the Firth of Clyde, ab. 26 mi. SW of Glasgow, ab. 407 mi. N of London by rail. The town is situated on the Ayrshire coal field; it imports iron ore and exports coal and iron. Ardrossan formerly had a shipbuilding industry, but the shipyards have now been closed. 8,783 (est. 1948).

Arduenna Silva (är.dū.en'ạ sil'vạ). Latin name of Ardennes, Forest of.

Arduin (är'dụ̄.in), Ardoin (är'doin, -dō.in), or Ardoino (är.dō.ē'nō). d. c1015. King of Italy or Lombardy (1002–13), and marquis of Ivrea. He was proclaimed king of Italy in Pavia on the death of Otto III, but was overthrown by the emperor Henry II.

Ardven (ärd'ven). In the poems of Ossian, a name given to a region on the W coast of Scotland.

Ardys (är'dis). Son of Gyges, king of Lydia. Assurbanipal, king of Assyria (668–626 B.C.), relates in his annals that Gyges rebelled against him, but that his son Ardys, as a result of the invasion of Lydia by the Cimmerians, submitted to him and invoked his help.

Are (ä'rẹ). Ruined castle near Altenahr, W Germany, in the former Rhine Province of Prussia.

Arecibo (ä.rā.sē'bō). [Full name, San Felipe de Arecibo.] City on the N coast of Puerto Rico, on the Grande de Arecibo River. 22,134 (1940).

Areius (ạ.rī'us) or Areios (-os). See also Arius.

Areius. fl. c30 B.C. Stoic or Pythagorean philosopher of Alexandria, the friend and preceptor of Augustus Caesar. He is said to have overcome the latter's hesitation to put to death Caesarion, the reputed son of Julius Caesar and Cleopatra, by the following parody of Homer's famous praise of monarchy: "'Tis no good thing, a multitude of Caesars."

Arel (ä'rẹl). German name of Arlon.

Arelate (ar.ẹ.lā'tē). A Latin name of Arles.

Aremberg (ä'rẹm.berk), Prince August Marie Raymond von. See Arenberg, Prince August Marie Raymond von.

Aremorica (ar.ẹ.môr'i.kạ). See Armorica.

Arena Chapel. [Italian, Cappella degli Scovegni (käp.pel'lä de'lyē skrō.vā'nyē), Cappella Annunziata dell' Arena (än.nōn.tsyā'tä del.lä.rā'nä).] Chapel at Padua, Italy. It is a plain vaulted building without aisles, stands in the precincts of the ancient amphitheater, and is famous for its series of frescoes by Giotto, which were begun in 1303, and cover all the interior walls except those of the choir.

Arenacum (ar.ẹ.nā'kum). See Arnhem.

Arenales (ä.rā.nä'lās), Juan Antonio Álvarez de. See Álvarez de Arenales, Juan Antonio.

Arenberg (ä'rẹn.berk; French, ȧ.raṅ.ber) or Aremberg (ä'rẹm.berk; French, ȧ.raṅ.ber), Prince August Marie Raymond von. [Also, Comte de La Marck.] b. at Brussels, Aug. 30, 1753; d. there, Sept. 26, 1833. Austrian general and French political figure. He was elected to the French States-General (1789), and was a friend of Mirabeau, upon whose death he emigrated to Austria. He obtained the rank of major general in the Austrian army, and was employed by the Austrian government in negotiations with the French.

Arenberg, Duke Engelbert Ludwig von. b. July 3, 1750; d. at Brussels, March 7, 1820. Austrian landholder. He lost his possessions west of the Rhine by the Peace of Lunéville (1801), receiving Meppen and Recklinghausen in compensation (1803).

Arenberg, Duke Karl Leopold von. b. 1721; d. 1775. Commander in the Austrian service; son of Leopold Philipp Karl Arenberg (1690–1754). During the Seven Years' War he led the right wing of the Austrians at Hochkirch, in Saxony, where, on Oct. 14, 1758, a Prussian army under Frederick the Great was defeated by the Austrians. He was himself defeated by the Prussians in 1759.

Arenberg, Duke Leopold Philipp Karl von. b. 1690; d. 1754. Commander in the Austrian service. He fought under Prince Eugene at Belgrade in 1717, and obtained the rank of field marshal in 1737, with command of the army in Flanders.

Arenberg-Meppen (ä'rẹn.berk.mep'ẹn). Former German duchy, later forming the Kreis (district) of Meppen, province of Hanover, Prussia; now in the Land (state) of Lower Saxony, British Zone.

Arenberg-Meppen, Duke Prosper Ludwig von. b. April 28, 1785; d. Feb. 27, 1861. Austrian landholder; son of Engelbert Ludwig von Arenberg (1750–1820). He became duke von Arenberg in 1803, was deprived of his sovereignty by Napoleon in 1810 (receiving in 1813, as an indemnification, a rental of 240,800 francs), and was reinstated in 1815.

Arendal (ä'rẹn.dāl). City in S Norway, capital of the fylke (county) of Aust-Agder, situated on the Skagerrak near the mouth of the Nid River, SW of Oslo. It is connected with Oslo by rail. It is a seaport, and has important shipyards, lumber trade, and fisheries. 11,570 (1946).

Arène (ȧ.ren), Paul Auguste. b. at Sisteron, France, June 26, 1843; d. at Antibes, France, Dec. 18, 1896. French journalist, dramatist, novelist, and Provençal poet, a member of the group known as "Les Félibres."

Arensky or Arenski (ä.ren'ski), Anton Stepanovich. b. at Novgorod, Russia, Aug. 11, 1861; d. at Terijoki, Finland, Feb. 25, 1906. Russian composer and conductor. A student of Rimsky-Korsakov, he was professor (1882 et seq.) of harmony and counterpoint at the Moscow Conservatory. He is chiefly remembered for his piano pieces, including a trio in D minor and three suites for two pianos, and his songs. Composer also of church music, two symphonies, and the operas A Dream on the Volga (1892), Raphael (1894), and Nal and Damayanti (1899).

Arensville (ar'ẹnz.vil). A former name of Tottenville.

Arents (ä'rents), Albert. b. at Clausthal, Germany, March 14, 1840; d. May 15, 1914. American metallurgist and inventor. Arrived in the U.S. in 1865, he soon after entered the employ of a lead-mining company at Eureka, Nevada. He was the designer of a "siphon lead-well" (sometimes called "Arent's lead-well") which permitted the continuous withdrawal of molten lead from the furnace in place of the periodic tapping previously required; he also contributed to the improvement of silver smelting and cement manufacturing.

Areopagite (ar.ē.op'ạ.jīt), Dionysius the. See Dionysius the Areopagite.

Areopagitica (ar"ē.ō.pạ.jit'i.kạ). [Full title, Areopagitica, or Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.] Pamphlet by John Milton, published in 1644. It is an argument in behalf of liberty of conscience and freedom of the press. It is one of the first and most famous of English works on this subject.

Areopagus (ar.ē.op'ạ.gus). [Eng. trans., "Hill of Mars" (Ares).] Low rocky hill at Athens, Greece, continuing westward the line of the Acropolis, from which it is separated by a depression of ground. On the S side near the top there is a flight of 15 rock-cut steps, and portions of the summit are hewn smooth to form platforms, doubtless for altars. Upon this hill sat the famous court of the same name, which originally exercised supreme authority in all matters, and under the developed Athenian constitution retained jurisdiction in cases of life and death and in religious concerns, and exercised a general censorship. From the slopes of the Areopagus Saint Paul delivered his address to the Athenians (Acts, xvii.), who were probably assembled on the border of the Agora below.

Arequipa (ä.rā.kē'pä). Department in S Peru. Capital, Arequipa; area, 21,952 sq. mi.; pop. 319,896 (est. 1950).

Arequipa. City in SW Peru, capital of Arequipa department, on a plain near the foot of the Misti volcano 7,611 ft. above the sea. It is connected by rail with the port of Mollendo, ab. 107 mi. distant, with Lake Titicaca, ab. 218 mi., and with Cusco. The plain, watered by irrigation, is very fertile, and the city has a large trade. The major industrial products are textiles and soap. It is an episcopal town, and the seat of a university and three collegios (schools). It was founded by Francisco Pizarro in 1540. It has frequently suffered from earthquakes, and was almost entirely destroyed by that of Aug. 13, 1868. In 1856 and 1857 the city was in rebellion against the government of President Castilla. 97,110 (est. 1950).

Ares (ār'ēz). In Greek mythology, the god of war (son of Zeus and Hera), typical particularly of the violence, brutality, confusion, and destruction it calls forth. The corresponding Roman deity was Mars.

Areson or Aresson (ā'rẹ.sôn), Jón. See Arason, Jón.

Aretaeus of Cappadocia (ar.ē.tē'us). b. in Cappadocia; fl. sometime between 120–200 A.D. Greek physician and medical writer of the eclectic school.

Arete (ą.rē'tē). In the Odyssey, the wife of Alcinous, king of the Phaeacians, "a noble and active superintendent of the household of her husband."

Arete. Companion of Cynthia, in Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, a dignified, grave lady, personifying Virtue or Reasonableness.

Arethusa (ar.ē.thū'są). Name of various springs in ancient Greece, especially of one on the island of Ortygia in the harbor of Syracuse. With it was connected the legend that Arethusa, a nymph of Elis, while bathing in the Alpheus, was surprised by a lover, the river god, and fled from him to Ortygia; he followed under the sea and overtook her.

Arethusa. In Beaumont and Fletcher's play Philaster, a princess, a woman of the greatest self-abnegation and womanly devotion.

Aretin (ā.re.tēn'), Baron Christoph von. b. at Ingolstadt, Germany, Dec. 2, 1773; d. at Munich, Dec. 24, 1824. Bavarian political and legal writer. He was appointed (1806) librarian of the Centralbibliothek at Munich, but was forced to resign on account of the sensation caused by his treatise Die Plāne Napoleons und seiner Gegner in Deutschland (The Plans of Napoleon and his Opponents in Germany, 1809).

Aretin, Baron Karl Maria von. b. at Wetzlar, Germany, July 4, 1796; d. at Berlin, April 29, 1868. Bavarian historical writer; son of Christoph von Aretin.

Aretino (ā.rā.tē'nō), Guido. See Guido d'Arezzo.

Aretino, Leonardo. See Bruni, Leonardo.

Aretino, Pietro. [Called the "Scourge of Princes"; original surname, Bacci.] b. at Arezzo, Italy, April 20, 1492; d. at Venice, Oct. 21, 1556. Italian writer of poems, satires, comedies, letters, and dialogues. Born of plebeian parents, he left home at 14 to become an art student and then a vagabond. In 1516, he took a menial position with the Roman banker, Agostino Chigi, whence he attracted the attention of Pope Leo X with a mordant satire. Thereafter, as a hired wit and literary bravo, he served Leo, the marquis of Mantua, Pope Clement VII, and the Medici warrior, Giovanni delle Bande Nere, until a threat against his life caused him, in 1527, to take refuge at Venice, where he remained until his death. There, living like a magnifico in a palace filled with great art and rowdy hangers-on, he discovered that by having many employers, he could dispense with subservience to one patron. By 1537, his pen had earned him 10,000 crowns, and he had become friend and adviser to Titian (whose portrait of Aretino is now in the Metropolitan Museum at New York). The Emperor Charles V was but one of many who paid him tribute money. Most of his voluminous writings were published during his Venetian stay, including his lively comedy La Cortegiana, his vivid, but pornographic Ragionamenti, and the six volumes of his "Letters." Once neglected, the latter are now widely regarded as his most important work. With their variety of subject matter and their colorful, informal style, they have established his present-day reputation as the father of journalism.

Aretinus (ar.ẹ.tī'nus), Guido. See Guido d'Arezzo.

Arévalo Bermejo (ā.rā'bä.lō ber.mā'hō), Juan José. b. at Taxisco, Guatemala, Sept. 10, 1904—. Guatemalan statesman and professor, president (1945 et seq.) of Guatemala. He received the Ph.D. (1934) from the University of La Plata, and was a member (1924, 1934) of the ministry of education. An exile in Argentina during the Ubico regime, he served on university staffs at Tucumán (1936), La Plata (1937), Buenos Aires (1939), and Mendoza (1943), and founded and directed (1941–42) the Institute of Pedagogy at San Luis, Argentina. A member of the Partido Acción Revolucionaria, he was elected (1944) president of Guatemala after the downfall of Ubico.

Arévalo Martínez (ā.rā'bä.lō mär.tē'nes), Rafael. b. at Guatemala City, Guatemala, July 25, 1884—. Guatemalan poet and novelist, whose poetry is akin to the classical Spanish, while his prose is considered by some to be in the forefront of contemporary American fiction. He was director (1926–44) of the Guatemalan national library. His verse works include Maya (1911) and Los Atormentados (1914). His outstanding work is the novelette El Hombre que parecía un caballo (1915).

Arezzo (ā.rät'tsō). Province in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Tuscany. Capital, Arezzo; area, ab. 1,250 sq. mi.; pop. 316,380 (1936).

Arezzo. [Ancient name, Arretium.] City and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Tuscany, the capital of the province of Arezzo, situated in the Chiana Valley, near the junction of the Arno and Chiana rivers, ab. 38 mi. SE of Florence. It is the center of the local trade in grain, wine, olive oil, and silk; has railroad shops, and metallurgical and textile industries. It was the birthplace of Maecenas, Petrarch, Guido and Pietro Aretino, and Vasari. The city contains many art treasures, from the Etruscan, Roman, medieval, and Renaissance periods, and has interesting churches, palaces, and art collections. The Gothic cathedral dates from the 13th, Santa Maria delle Pieve from the 11th and 13th centuries, San Francesco, containing frescoes by Piero della Francesca, from the 15th century. An ancient Etruscan city called Arretium, it was colonized by the Romans and became the terminus of the Via Flaminia. Arretium refused to take part in an Italian coalition against Rome (285–282 B.C.) and was besieged by the whole force of the confederacy, including paid hordes of Gallic Semones. Lucius Caecilius Metellus went to the relief of the city, but was defeated and slain, with seven military tribunes and 13,000 men, the rest of the army being made prisoners. Adhering to the Ghibelline party in the Middle Ages, Arezzo contested the power of Florence among the cities of Tuscany. Considerable damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 60,284 (1936); of city, 24,411 (1936).

Arfak (är'fäk). Mountain group in the NW part of the island of New Guinea.

Arfe y Villafañe (är'fā ē vē.lyä.fä'nyā), Juan de. b. 1535; d. c1603. Spanish silversmith and sculptor.

Arga (är'gä). Small river in Navarra, N Spain, a tributary of the Aragon River.

Argaeus (är.jē'us). Ancient name of Erciyas Dağı.

Argalia (är.gā.lē'ä). Brother of Angelica in Matteo Maria Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato. He was killed by the Spanish knight Ferraù, and his ghost reappears in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso. He had an enchanted lance which overthrew everyone whom it touched, and which finally came into the possession of Astolfo.

Argall (är'gôl, -gąl), Sir Samuel. b. at Bristol, England, c1572; d. 1626. English adventurer, deputy governor (1617–19) of the Virginia colony.

Argalus (är'gą.lus). In Sir Philip Sidney's romance Arcadia, the husband of Parthenia. He was killed by Amphialus in single combat.

Argalus and Parthenia (pär.thē'ni.ą). Tragedy (1629) by Francis Quarles. It was based on Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia and attained equal popularity in its day.

Argan (är.gäṅ). Principal character in Molière's Le Malade Imaginaire, a hypochondriac whose mind is divided between his diseases, his remedies, and his desire to reduce his apothecary's bill.

Argand (är.gäṅ), Aimé. b. at Geneva, Switzerland, 1755; d. Oct. 24, 1803. Swiss physician and chemist, inventor of the "Argand lamp," introducing the circular wick which, by admitting a current of air in the center, made for faster combustion and thus a brighter light. A modification of such a wick is used in many modern gas and oil burners.

Argandab (är.gän.däb'). River in Afghanistan, which flows from NE to SW and joins the Helmand River W of Kandahar. Length, ab. 200 mi.

Argante (är.gan'tē). Giantess in Spenser's Faerie Queene, the personification of Licentiousness.

Argante (är.gän'tā). In Torquato Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, the bravest of the infidel knights.

Argante (är.gäṅt). Father of Octavia and Zerbinetta, in Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin. He is fooled by Scapin into giving up his plans and falling in with those of his son and daughter.

Arganthonius (ăr.gan.thō'nĭ.us). In ancient geography, a mountain ridge in Bithynia, Asia Minor, near the Propontis.

Argao (ăr.gä'ō). City in the E part of Cebu province, Cebu island, Philippine Islands. 3,706 (1948).

Argelander (ăr'gę.län.dẽr), Friedrich Wilhelm August. b. at Memel, on the Baltic Sea, March 22, 1799; d. at Bonn, Germany, Feb. 17, 1875. German astronomer, noted for his research on the motion of the solar system in space (1837) and on changes of light in variable stars. He was a student and assistant (1820) to Friedrich Wilhelm Bessel at Königsberg; director of the Åbo Observatory (1823) and of that at Helsingfors (1832); and professor (1837) of astronomy at Bonn. He wrote various astronomical works, including Über die eigene Bewegung des Sonnensystems (1837) and Untersuchungen über die Eigenbewegung von 250 Sternen (1869); with Schönfeld, he published Durchmusterung (1859–63), a work which included a celestial atlas and charted the positions and magnitudes of over 324,000 stars in the northern hemisphere.

Argenlieu (dăr.zhăn.lyė), Georges Thierry d'. b. at Brest, France, Aug. 8, 1889—. French naval officer and ecclesiastical figure, commander of the Free French naval forces during World War II. After a period (1912–20) of naval service, he joined the Carmelite order, becoming a provincial in 1939. He returned (1939) to military service, escaped (1940) from German captivity, joined the Free French régime at London, and was high commissioner (1941–42) for French Pacific territories. He was commander in chief (1943–45) of Free French naval forces in England, and vice-president of the supreme naval council and naval inspector-general (1945 et seq.). He campaigned (1946 et seq.) against a revolt in Annam.

Argensola (ăr.hen.sō'lä), Bartolomé (or Bartolomeo) Leonardo de. [Called, with his brother Lupercio, one of the "Spanish Horaces."] b. at Barbastro, in Aragon, Aug. 26, 1562; d. at Saragossa, Feb. 4, 1631. Spanish poet and historian, closely associated with his brother, Lupercio Leonardo de Argensola (1559–1613), whom he succeeded (1613) as historiographer for Aragon. He served as rector of Villahermosa (1588), chaplain to the empress Maria of Austria, and at the court of the viceroy of Naples (1610). Author of Conquista de las Islas Molucas (1609), a supplement to Zurita's Anales de Aragón (1630), and poems published with those of his brother in Rimas (1634).

Argensola, Lupercio Leonardo de. [Called, with his brother Bartolomé, one of the "Spanish Horaces."] b. at Barbastro, in Aragon, Dec. 14, 1559; d. at Naples, Italy, in March, 1613. Spanish poet and historian, brother of Bartolomé Leonardo de Argensola (1562–1631), with whom he was a protégé of Maria of Austria. Both were at the court of the viceroy of Naples, Lupercio as state secretary (1610–13). Lupercio preceded (1599–1613) his brother as historiographer of Aragon. Besides satires and translations of Latin poems, published with Bartolomé's works in Rimas (1634), the elder brother was author of tragedies in the classical manner, notably Filis (now lost), and Isabela and Alejandra (printed in 1772).

Argenson (dăr.zhăn.sôn), Marc Antoine René de Voyer, Marquis de Paulmy d'. b. 1722; d. 1787. French diplomat and man of letters; son of René Louis de Voyer d'Argenson (1694–1757). He was minister of war (1757–58), and ambassador to Poland (1762–64) and Venice (1766–70). The Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal was formed from his collection of 150,000 volumes, which he sold (1785) to the Comte d'Artois. Author of Mélanges tirés d'une grande bibliothèque (1779–88), and others.

Argenson, Marc Pierre de Voyer de Paulmy, Comte d'. b. at Paris, 1696; d. there, 1764. French government official; brother of René Louis de Voyer d'Argenson (1694–1757). In 1740 he was intendant of Paris. As secretary of state for war (1743–57) he shared with René virtual control of the government during the War of the Austrian Succession; thereafter he instituted army reforms and founded (1751) the École Militaire. He was a friend of Voltaire, to whom he furnished material for Siècle de Louis XIV, and of Denis Diderot and Jean le Rond d'Alembert, who dedicated their encyclopedia to him.

Argenson, Marc René de Voyer, Marquis de Paulmy et Marquis d'. b. at Venice, 1652; d. at Paris, 1721. French lawyer and politician. As lieutenant-general of police (1697–1718) under Louis XIV he became an intimate of the king. It was he who ordered the destruction (1709) of the Jansenist monastery, Port Royal. Keeper of seals and president of the council of finance (1718–20), he was involved in the confused schemes of John Law to reorganize the treasury. He was an academician (1718), and patron of letters.

Argenson, René Louis de Voyer de Paulmy, Marquis d'. [Called "d'Argenson la Bête."] b. Oct. 18, 1694; d. Jan. 26, 1757. French lawyer and government official; son of Marc René de Voyer d'Argenson (1652–1721); friend of Voltaire. As secretary of state for foreign affairs (1744–47) under Louis XV, he attempted to bring about international arbitration in the War of the Austrian Succession, but was thwarted by military opposition, intrigue, and the influence of the Spanish Court. President of the Académie des Inscriptions (1747); author of Considérations sur le gouvernement ancien et présent de la France (1764), memoirs, and others.

Argenta (ăr.jen'tä). Town and commune in N Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Emilia-Romagna, in the province of Ferrara, between Ferrara and Ravenna. It is the center of a rich agricultural district, producing grain, hemp, and tobacco; it has many canals. Severe damage was suffered during World War II by buildings of tourist interest, some of which are beyond repair. Pop. of commune, 28,032 (1936); of town, 3,684 (1936).

Argentan (ăr.zhăn.tăn). Town in NW France, in the department of Orne, situated on the Orne River, ab. 21 mi. N of Alençon. It is an agricultural trade center for the surrounding region; has stained-glass, linen, leather goods, lace, and glove manufactures. There is a castle dating from the 15th and 16th centuries. Most of the town, including the Church of Saint Germain, built (1421–1641) in flamboyant Gothic style, is in ruins as a result of the heavy fighting that occurred here in the wake of the Normandy invasion. In August, 1944, the gap between Argentan and Falaise was closed by the Allied armies, but part of the German forces escaped eastward toward the valley of the Seine. 6,711 (1946).

Argentario (ăr.jen.tä'ryō), Monte. [Also, Monte Argentaro (-tä'rō).] Promontory on the coast of Tuscany, Italy, near Orbetello. Elevation, ab. 2,090 ft.

Argenteuil (ăr.zhăn.tėy'). City in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, situated on the Seine River, ab. 6 mi. NW of Paris: a river port belonging to the suburban region of Paris. It has various industries, particularly chemical, metallurgical, and construction works; other manufactures include automobiles, bicycles, hosiery, and paper. Fruits and vegetables are grown in the area, which is famous for its asparagus. The ruined priory, founded in 656, was at one time a nunnery of which Héloïse was an abbess. The city suffered large-scale destruction in World War II. 53,543 (1946).

Argentière (dăr.zhăn.tyer), Aiguille d'. See Aiguille d'Argentière.

Argentina (ăr.jęn.tē'nạ; Spanish, ăr.hen.tē'nä) or Argentine Republic (ăr'jen.tēn, -tīn). [Sometimes called "the Argentine"; official Spanish name, Republica Argentina; former name, Argentine Confederation.] Nation in SE and C South America, the continent's second largest in population and area, bounded on the W by Chile, on the E by Uruguay, Brazil, and the Atlantic Ocean, on the S by the arc of the Chilean boundary and the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by Bolivia and Paraguay.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. Argentina is divided for administrative purposes into 16 provinces, 8 territories, and a Federal District. Capital, Buenos Aires; area, 1,084,360 sq. mi. (exclusive of the disputed Falkland Islands); pop. 15,893,827 (1947).

Terrain and Climate. The Andes range in the west includes some of the highest peaks in the world, notably Mount Aconcagua (22,834 ft.); the Pampa region in C Argentina is a virtually treeless plain of enormous fertility; the Gran Chaco is a heavily forested, lowland area in the north; Patagonia in the south is for much of its area mountainous, cold, and without rainfall comparable to the rest of the country. The chief river system is that of the Río de la Plata, which is itself actually a bay into which such true rivers as the Uruguay and the Paraná empty. Because of its position below the equator, Argentina has its warm season in the winter and its cold season in the summer. The climate ranges from the extreme heat of the subtropical north to the cold of S Patagonia.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. One of the world's first three wheat-exporting nations and the top corn exporter, Argentina's chief industry is meat-packing, which makes it a leading producer also of hides, tallow, wool, and other animal products. Its agricultural industries also produce flax, linseed, sugar, maté (Paraguay tea), and hardwood lumber. Oil, copper, lead, and some precious metals are produced, but manufacturing and mining are secondary to agriculture in the national economy, despite vigorous government efforts to stimulate them.

History. The country was colonized by Spain in the middle of the 16th century and remained under Spanish rule until 1810, when Buenos Aires established an autonomous governmental junta. National independence of the territory adjoining Buenos Aires was declared in 1816 under the name United Provinces of La Plata, which subsequently became (1825) the Argentine Confederation. Recurrent political chaos and an extended dictatorship (1835–52) under Juan Manuel de Rosas were followed by the adoption (1853) of a national constitution and the presidency of Justo José de Urquiza. Unwilling to accept Urquiza, the people of Buenos Aires established a separate government under Bartolomé Mitre, and Argentina had two governments until 1862, when Mitre defeated Urquiza and became president. The next 25 years were the great period of Argentine expansion and development: a depression in 1890 halted economic growth momentarily, but gave birth to the Radical Party, which provided leadership against the hitherto absolute control of Argentine government by the great landowners and ultimately (1912) compelled passage of a law ensuring free elections. Argentina maintained neutrality throughout World War I and during World War II until March, 1945, when war was declared against the Axis Powers. The present government, which purports to seek the support of all groups except the Left, is conservative and intensely nationalistic. It is headed by President Juan Domingo Perón.

Culture. The Argentine people are still predominantly Spanish, despite heavy immigration from Italy, Great Britain, and Germany during the latter part of the 19th century and the early 20th century. A considerable Indian population exists in the areas outside of the great cities. The dominant religious group is Roman Catholic. Under President Perón and his immediate predecessors close cultural relationships with the Spanish regime of General Franco have been encouraged.

Argentina, La. [Stage name of Antonia Mercé.] b. at Buenos Aires, c1890; d. 1936. Argentine dancer who headed a company of dancers that toured (1927 et seq.) the U.S. and Europe. She specialized in modern Spanish dances, for many of which she used music composed by Manuel de Falla.

Argentine (är'jən.tēn). Former city in NE Kansas, in Wyandotte County, on the Kansas River; noted for silver and lead smelting. It was annexed to Kansas City by petition in 1909.

Argentine Confederation (är'jən.tēn, -tīn). Name formerly used (1825 et seq.) for Argentina. Except for the period from 1852 to 1859, when Buenos Aires withdrew, the Confederation included all the important subdivisions of modern Argentina.

Argentine Mesopotamia (mes"ō.pō.tā'mi.ą). See Mesopotamia, Argentine.

Argentino (är.hen.tē'nō), Lake. [Spanish, Lago Argentino.] Lake in SW Argentina, in Santa Cruz territory, near the border of Chile. It is the southernmost of the marginal lakes. Area ab. 570 sq. mi.

Argentoratum (är.jen.tō.rā'tum). Latin name of Strasbourg.

Arginusae (är.ji.nū'sē). In ancient geography, a group of small islands off the coast of Asia Minor, SE of Lesbos. Near here the Athenian fleet under Conon defeated (406 B.C.) the Spartans under Callicratidas.

Argives (är'jīvz). Name often used for the Greeks of Argolis. As a result of the important part they played under their king Agamemnon in the Trojan War, their name is extended by Homer in the Iliad to all the Greeks.

Argo (är'gō). Island in the Nile River, between Dongola and the third cataract, in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

Argo. In Greek legend, the ship which bore the Argonauts.

Argolis (är'gō.lis). In ancient geography, a division of the Peloponnesus, Greece, surrounded by Sicyonia, Corinthia, the Aegean (with the Saronic and Argolic gulfs), Laconia, and Arcadia, and containing the plain of Argos and the cities of Argos and Mycenae.

Argolis. Nomos (department) in SE Greece, situated on the Peloponnesus, including Spetsai and other islands. Argolis and Corinthia, formerly combined, were separated after World War II. Capital, Nauplia; pop. 85,264 (1951).

Argonautica (är.gō.nô'ti.ką). Epic poem by Apollonius of Rhodes. It deals with Jason's legendary voyage in search of the Golden Fleece.

Argonauts (är'gō.nôts). In Greek legend, the heroes who sailed to Colchis in the ship Argo to carry off the Golden Fleece. The expedition took place not long after the Trojan War. Jason was its leader, and it included demigods and heroes from all parts of Greece.

Argo Navis (är'gō nā'vis). Ancient southern constellation, the largest in the heavens. It contains Canopus, after Sirius the brightest of the fixed stars. By modern astronomers it is commonly divided into parts: Carina, Puppis, Pyxis, and Vela, meaning keel, stern, compass, and sail.

Argonne Forest (är.gon', är'gon; French, ar.gon). [Also: Argonne, Forest of Argonne.] Rocky plateau in NE France, on the borders of Lorraine and Champagne, containing several difficult defiles which lead from the basin of the Meuse River to that of the Seine River, famous in the "Argonne Campaign" of Charles François Dumouriez in 1792. During World War I the section was the scene of heavy fighting.

Argos (är'gos, -gos). Town in S Greece, on the Peloponnesus, in the nomos (department) of Argolis and Corinthia, situated ab. 9 mi. NW of Nauplia and the coast: the leading Dorian city prior to the middle of the 8th century B.C. It remained an important town in later times, was often in conflict with Sparta, and flourished under the Romans. It was ruled by the legendary dynasties of Inachus, Danaus, and Pelops. It produced many noted sculptors. The modern town is a railroad junction. 13,440 (1940).

Ancient Architecture. Argos contains the remains of an ancient theater. The upper tiers of seats of the cavea are rock-hewn; below these are tiers of masonry. Twenty tiers in all survive, the lowest consisting of thrones of honor. There are remains of a Roman stage, and of several modifications of the Greek stage structure. An underground passage ran from behind the proscenium to the middle of the orchestra, as at Eretria and others. There are important remnants of the Heraion, or sanctuary of Hera, the national shrine of Argolis, which lay at some distance from the city. The temple was rebuilt after a fire in the 5th century B.C., a little below the old site, as a Doric hexastyle peripteros about 65½ by 130 ft. The cult statue was an admirable chryselephantine work by Polycleitus. The Heraion was excavated (1892 et seq.) by the American School at Athens, to which is due nearly all our knowledge of the architectural and sculptural remains of both temples and their peribolos, as well as a very valuable collection of archaic terra cottas.

History. Argos was a city-state under King Phaedon in 680 B.C. Under Rome it was the headquarters of the Achaean powers. From 1261 to 1460 it was under Byzantine rule and from 1460 to 1830 under the Ottoman Empire. In 1822 it was the seat of the national assembly in the movement for Greek independence. It was destroyed by Ibrahim Pasha in 1825 and later rebuilt.

Argostolion (är.gô.stô'lyôn). [Also, Argostoli (är.gôs-tô'lē).] Town in W Greece, the capital of the nomos (department) of Cephalonia, one of the Ionian Islands, situated on the SW coast. It is a flourishing trade center and mill town, and the seat of a bishopric. 8,711 (1951).

Argout (dȧr.gō), Antoine Maurice Apollinaire, Comte d'. b. at Isère, France, Aug. 27, 1782; d. Jan. 15, 1858. French politician and financier. In 1830 he was mediator between Charles X and the popular leaders. Appointed (1834) governor of the Bank of France, he became minister of finance in 1836. Reappointed governor of the Bank of France in 1836, he continued in that post under the republic of 1848.

Argovie (är.gō.vē). French name of Aargau.

Argüedas (är.gwā′ᴛʜäs), Alcides. b. at La Paz, Bolivia, July 15, 1879—. Bolivian novelist, sociologist, and historian, considered by many to be Bolivia's foremost contemporary writer. His Wuatu-Wuaru (1904), Pueblo enfermo (1900), and Raza de bronce (1919) are outstanding for their understanding of the problems of the Indian. Besides serving in several government positions at home, he has represented his country in England, France, Spain, Colombia, and Venezuela.

Argüelles (är.gwā′lyās), Agustín (or Augustin). [Called "the Spanish Cicero."] b. at Ribadesella, Spain, Aug. 28, 1776; d. at Madrid, March 23, 1844. Spanish revolutionist and liberal politician. He was a member of the patriotic party in the war for independence (1808 et seq.) and was prominent in the Cortes (1812–14), where he gained a reputation as an orator. Upon the restoration of Ferdinand VII, he was imprisoned (1814–20). He served as minister of the interior after the revolution of 1820, resigned (1821) in protest against the narrowness of the court, and on the fall of the constitution (1823) was exiled to England. He returned under the amnesty of deputies; as president and vice-president of the Cortes, he was a consistent reformer; he was guardian of Isabella during Espartero's regency.

Argüelles, José Canga. See Canga Argüelles, José.

Argüello (är.gwā′lyō), Luis Antonio. b. at San Francisco, 1784; d. there, 1830. Spanish commandante (1806–22) and governor (1822–25), under the short-lived Mexican empire, of California; first native-born Californian to hold either post. In 1821 he conducted an exploratory expedition to the Columbia River.

Argüello (är.gwā′yō), Octavio Béeche. See Béeche Argüello, Octavio.

Arguin (är.gwēn′). [Also, Banc d'Arguin.] Small island in the Atlantic Ocean W of Africa, S of Cape Blanc. It is sometimes shown on maps as a reef or bank.

Argun (är.gön′). River in N China, one of the two chief headstreams of the Amur River. It rises as the Kerulen River in Outer Mongolia, traverses Dalai Nor (or Hulun Nor) lake, flows along the boundary between Manchuria and the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, and unites with the Shilka River to form the Amur on the N border of China, in the province of Heilungkiang. Length, ab. 945 mi.

Arguri (är.gö′rē). Former village in what was known as Russian Armenia, on the N slope of Ararat, buried by an earthquake and landslide from Ararat in 1840.

Argurion (är.gū′ri.ọn). Semiallegorical personification of Money, in Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels. The character is afterward expanded in The Staple of News as Lady Pecunia.

Argus (är′gus). In Greek legend, the guardian of Io. Slain by Hermes, he is said to have had one hundred eyes, which were rendered useless when Hermes, through a charm, caused him to fall asleep.

Argyll (är.gīl′), Dukes, Earls, and Marquises of. Titles held by various members of the Campbell family of Scotland. The first Campbell to hold title as Argyll was Colin Campbell, who was created 1st Earl of Argyll in 1457. For entries on the particular holders of the title, see Campbell.

Argyllshire (är.gīl′shir) or Argyll (är.gīl′). Maritime county, partly mainland and partly insular, in W Scotland. It is bounded on the N by Inverness-shire, on the E by Perthshire, Dunbartonshire, and the Firth of Clyde, on the S by Buteshire and the North Channel, and on the W by the North Channel and the Atlantic Ocean. The mainland is deeply indented by sea lochs and firths, which form Kintyre and other peninsulas. Argyllshire includes the islands Mull, Iona, Colonsay, Staffa, Ulva, Rum, Coll, Tiree, Jura, Islay, Gigha, and others (virtually the entire Inner Hebrides group). The surface is generally mountainous. Within the county are Lochs Awe, Eil, Etive, Fyne, Goil, Leven, Linnhe, Long, Shiel, and Striven. Ben Cruachan (3,611 ft.) is in the NW portion of the county on the mainland. The leading industries are the rearing of cattle and sheep, the quarrying of building stone (especially slate for export), lead mining, and fishing (herring, salmon, and trout). Loch Fyne is fished for herring. There are distilleries at Campbeltown and on the island of Islay. Argyllshire is the second largest county in Scotland. County seat, Inveraray; area, ab. 3,110 sq. mi.; pop. 63,270 (1951).

Argyrippa (är.ji.rip′ạ). See Arpi.

Argyrocastro (är″gē.rō.käs′trō) or Argyrokastron (är.yē.rô′käs.trôn). See Gjinokastër.

Argyropoulos (är″ji.rō.pō′lọs), Johannes. [Also: Argyropulus (-pū′lus) or Argyropulo (-pō′lō).] b. at Constantinople, c1416; d. at Rome, c1486. Greek scholar, one of the earliest humanist teachers in the West. He was a teacher at Constantinople, Padua (1434 et seq.), the University of Florence (c1456–71) (to which he was invited by Cosimo de' Medici and where he taught Piero and Lorenzo de' Medici), and at Rome (1471 et seq.). Among his pupils were Angelus Politianus and Johann Reuchlin. Author of a work on Aristotle's Ethics and Latin translations of various works of Aristotle.

Argyropoulos, Perikles. [Also, Argyropulos.] b. at Constantinople, Sept. 17, 1809; d. at Athens, Dec. 22, 1860. Greek politician and publicist. He was professor of law at Athens in 1837, and foreign minister in 1854–55.

Arhuaco (är.wä′kō). Collective name for Indian tribes that spoke a Chibchan language in the mountains of Santa Marta in N Colombia. The most important of these tribes were the Cagaba and, very likely, the Tairona. They are sometimes incorrectly termed Arawak.

Århus (ôr′hös). See Aarhus.

Aria (ār′i.ạ, ạ.rī′ạ). In ancient geography, a region in Asia corresponding nearly to W Afghanistan and E Khurasan, Iran; often confused with Ariana.

Aria. Ancient name of Herat.

Ariadne (ar.i.ad′nē). d. 515 A.D. Byzantine empress; daughter of Leo I. She was married to Zeno, who became emperor in 474, and after his death (491) she became the wife of Anastasius I.

Ariadne. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Minos, king of Crete. She gave Theseus the unwinding strand by means of which he retraced his steps out of the Labyrinth after killing the Minotaur. She then went with Theseus to the island of Naxos, where, according to the common account, she was abandoned by him, and became the wife of Dionysus.

Ariadne. An asteroid (No. 43) discovered by Pogson at Oxford, April 15, 1857.

Ariadne auf Naxos (ä.rē.äd′nę ouf näk′sōs). Opera in one act composed by Richard Strauss as an interlude to Molière's Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, with a libretto by Hugo von Hofmannsthal; first performed at Stuttgart in 1912. Revised (1916) to full length, the new version was first presented at London in 1924. The opera, based on the old Greek legend, is presented as a play-within-a-play, the prologue taking place in the 18th-century setting appropriate to the Molière comedy. The prologue itself has been arranged as an orchestral suite under the title of Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme.

Ariana (ar.i.ā′nạ, ar.i.an′ạ). In ancient geography, a region in Asia, of vague boundaries, extending from Media on the W to the Indus River on the E, and from Hyrcania and Bactriana on the N to the Persian Gulf and Arabian Sea on the S.

Ariane (ä.ryän). Tragedy by Thomas Corneille, composed in 1672.

Ariano Irpino (ä.ryä′nō ēr.pē′nō). [Also, Ariano di Puglia (dē pō′lyä).] Town and commune in SE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Avellino, situated in the Apennines, ab. 50 mi. NE of Naples: textile and pasta factories. In a dominating position near the Appian Way, the town changed hands at various times during the Middle Ages. Its rulers were Byzantines, Normans, Frederick of Swabia, Charles of Anjou, and a number of feudal lords. The Castello, a medieval castle, was undamaged during World War II. Pop. of commune, 24,357 (1936); of town, 9,473 (1936).

Ariano nel Polesine (nel pō.lā′zē.nā). Town and commune in NE Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Veneto, in the province of Rovigo, situated in the Polesine region of the Po Delta, on the Po di Goro River, S of Venice. It is the center of a rich agricultural district in the formerly swampy delta area, producing grain, rice, tobacco, and vegetables. Pop. of commune, 12,372 (1936); of town, 2,552 (1936).

Arians (ār′i.ạnz). Followers of Arius, a deacon of Alexandria, who in the 4th century A.D. maintained, in opposition to both Sabellianism and Tritheism, that the Son is of a nature similar to (not the same as) the Father, and is subordinate to him. The tendency of these doctrines, in the eyes of orthodox theologians, was toward the denial of the divinity of Christ. The Arian discussion raged fiercely in the 4th century, and though Arianism was condemned by the Council of Nicaea (325), the heresy long retained great importance, both theological and political. The strongholds of the Arians were in the East and among the Goths and other barbarians who were converted by Arian missionaries.

Arias (ä'ryäs), Arnulfo. b. 1897—. Panamanian politician, president (1940–41, 1949–51) of Panama. Educated in Panama and at the University of Chicago, he received an M.D. degree from Harvard. He retired from medical practice to enter the diplomatic service, holding posts as minister to Italy, France, and Great Britain, and serving as Panamanian delegate to the League of Nations. As president of Panama (October, 1940–October, 1941), he was the author of a new constitution (adopted 1941) providing for government regulation of monopolies, exempting church property from taxation, and terminating the U.S. protectorate. Exiled as a Fascist sympathizer, he returned in October, 1945. Claiming to have won the 1948 election to the presidency, he was placed in that office by a military coup in 1949; in 1951 he was overthrown and barred from public office for life.

Arias, Harmodio. b. at Penonomé, Panama, July 3, 1886—. Panamanian politician, lawyer, and diplomat, president of Panama (1932–36). Educated in England as a lawyer, he thereafter held various government posts, including those of minister to the U.S. and Argentina, and delegate to the first League of Nations assembly. During his presidency a treaty was signed (March 2, 1936) with the U.S. providing joint responsibility for the security of the republic and the canal. Author of The Non-Responsibility of States for Damages Suffered by Foreigners (1912), and other legal works.

Arias de Avila (ä'ryäs dā ä'ʙē.lä), Pedro. See Pedrarias.

Arias de Saavedra (sä.ä.bā'ᴛʜrä), Hernando. [Also, Hernandarias.] b. at Asunción, Paraguay, c1561; d. c1634. Spanish governor (1597–99, 1602–09, 1615–18) of Río de la Plata province, which was at first part of, then (1617) separated from, Paraguay (at that time Guairá). He encouraged settlement by the Jesuits, made expeditions to Chaco, the Straits of Magellan, and elsewhere, and built up cities such as Buenos Aires and Santa Fé.

Arias Montanus (ā'ri.ạs mon.tā'nus), Benedictus. [Spanish, Benito Arias Montano (bā.nē'tō ä'ryäs mōn.tä'nō).] b. at Frejenal de la Sierra, Spain, 1527; d. at Seville, May 22, 1598. Spanish Benedictine Orientalist and linguist. He was the author of Jewish Antiquities and other works, and editor (appointed by Philip II) of the Antwerp Polyglot Bible (1568–73).

Arica (ä.rē'kä). Northernmost seaport in Chile, in Tarapacá province. It is also a rail center, important principally for trade with Bolivia in minerals and agricultural produce. The harbor is a roadstead protected by a point of land and a small island. The town was nearly destroyed by earthquakes in 1868, 1877, and 1906. Possession of the port became a matter of armed dispute between Chile and Peru in 1879–80. In the latter year it became a part of Chile, having previously belonged to Peru. The city has, in recorded history, never been known to have a rainfall. 14,064 (1940).

Ariccia (ä.rēt'chä). [Latin, Aricia (ạ.rish'ạ).] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Roma, situated in the Alban Hills, SE of Rome. An ancient Latin town, the site of which has been excavated, it belonged in later centuries to the States of the Church. It has buildings from this period, among others the Church of Santa Maria dell'Assunta, built by Giovanni Lorenzo Bernini in 1664. Damage was suffered during World War II by some buildings of tourist interest, but repairs have now been completed or are being carried out. Pop. of commune, 5,596; of town, 4,854 (1936).

Arichat (ar'i.shat). Small seaport on Madame Island, off the S coast of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, Canada. Pop. ab. 800.

Arici (ä.rē'chē), Cesare. b. at Brescia, Italy, July 2, 1782; d. there, July 2, 1836. Italian didactic poet. He was appointed (1810) professor of history and literature at the Brescia lyceum, and became professor of Latin in 1824.

Arided (ar'i.ded). The first-magnitude star α Cygni, often called Deneb Cygni.

Ariège (ä.ryezh). [Also, La Riège.] Department in S France, bounded by the department of Haute-Garonne on the W and N, the department of Aude on the E, and the department of Pyrénées-Orientales, Andorra, and Spain on the S. It generally corresponds to the medieval countship of Foix, which went to the French crown under Henry IV. The climate is mild and warm in the north but characterized by strong contrasts in the mountainous south. The N region is fertile and produces grains, vegetables, and fruits, while the inhabitants of the S part depend mainly on forest culture and pastures. There is an active trade in sheep and goats with places across the Pyrenees. There are stone quarries and iron deposits, iron and steel mills, and construction, textile, and other industries. Capital, Foix; area, 1,892 sq. mi.; pop. 145,956 (1946).

Ariège River. [Latin, Aurigera.] River in S France which rises in the Pyrenees, flows past Tarascon and Foix, and joins the Garonne River near Toulouse. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Ariel (ār'i.ẹl, ā'ri.el). In the Old Testament: 1. One of the chief men sent by Ezra to procure ministers for the sanctuary. Ezra, viii. 16. 2. A Moabite whose sons were killed by Benaiah. 2 Sam. xxiii; 1 Chron. xi. 22. 3. Name used symbolically to mean Jerusalem. Isa. xxix.

Ariel. In cabalistic demonology, one of the seven princes of angels, or spirits who preside over the waters, under the archangel Michael. In medieval European folklore, a spirit of the air.

Ariel. "An ayrie spirit" in Shakespeare's The Tempest, employed by Prospero.

Ariel. Sylph, guardian of Belinda, in Alexander Pope's Rape of the Lock. This particular spirit was the chief of those whose > "Humbler province is to tend the fair . . .

> To save the powder from too rude a gale,
> Nor let the imprison'd essences exhale . . .
> . . . to curl their waving hairs,
> Assist their blushes and inspire their airs."

Ariel. One of the rebel angels in John Milton's Paradise Lost.

Arienzo San Felice (ä.ryen'tsō sän fā.lē'chä). Town and commune in S Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Campania, in the province of Caserta, situated between Caserta and Avellino, NE of Naples. It is the center of an agricultural district. Pop. of commune, 13,682 (1936); of town, 3,126 (1936).

Aries (ār'ēz, -i.ēz). One of the zodiacal constellations.

Aries. The first sign of the zodiac, which the sun enters at the vernal equinox, March 21, and leaves April 20. Owing to the precession of the equinoxes, the constellation Aries has moved completely out of the sign of the same name, which is now occupied by the constellation Pisces.

Ari Frodi Thorgilsson (ä'rē frō'ᴛʜē thôr'gils.sōn). [Also, Ari Fróði Thorgilsson.] b. c1067; d. 1148. Icelandic historian whose works, compiled from oral report, poetry, and tradition, are by some called the foundation of Icelandic prose style and of Icelandic history, later developed by Snorri Sturluson and others. Author of Konungabók (Book of Kings), a history of the kings of Norway comparable to the English Domesday Book; also of Landnámabók (Land-taking Book, or book of settlements), describing the discovery of Iceland and the genealogy and history of each settler and his descendants, and of Islendingabók (Book of Icelanders, c1127), a history from c870 to 1120, containing an epitome of the other two plus the constitutional history of Iceland.

Arika (ạ.rē'kạ), Abba. See Abba Arika.

Arikara (ạ.rē'kạ.rạ). North American Indian tribe formerly inhabiting NW South Dakota and SW North Dakota. The language was of the Caddoan family.

Arimaspians (ar.i.mas'pi.ạnz). In classical mythology, a one-eyed people of Scythia. They were at war with the Griffins, whose gold they sought.

Arimathea (ar"i.mạ.thē'ạ). In the New Testament, a town in Judea, Palestine, of undetermined location; probably the Ramah of 1 Sam. i. 1, 19. It was the home of Joseph of Arimathea, the Israelite who placed the body of Jesus in his own tomb. Mat. xxvii. 57–60.

Arimu (ar'i.mō). See under Aram.

Arinos (a.rē'nōs). River in C Brazil, which flows NW to join the Juruena River, forming the Tapajós. Length, ab. 400 mi.

Arinos, Afonso. [Full name, Afonso Arinos de Melo Franco.] b. at Paracatú, Minas Gerais, Brazil, May 1, 1868; d. at Barcelona, Spain, Feb. 19, 1916. Brazilian short-story writer, novelist, and journalist, one of the creators of regional literature in the south of Brazil, chiefly remembered for his Pelo sertão (1898), a book of short stories. Among his other works are Jagunços (1898), Lendas e tradições brasileiras (1917), Histórias e paisagens (1921), and his historical drama, O contratador de diamantes (1917).

Ariobarzanes (ar"i.ō.bär.zā'nēz). Soldier and satrap of the Persian empire in Persis (now Fars) who, after the battle of Gaugamela (331 B.C.), secured the pass through the so-called "Persian Gates." Alexander was able to force the pass and continue to the east only by stratagem.

Ariobarzanes I (of Cappadocia). [Also, Ariobarzanes I Philoromaeus (fil"o.rō.mē'us).] fl. about the beginning of the 1st century B.C. King of Cappadocia. He was several times expelled by Mithridates II of Parthia and restored by the Romans.

Ariobarzanes II (of Cappadocia). [Also, Ariobarzanes II Philopator (fi.lop'a.tôr).] King of Cappadocia; son of Ariobarzanes I, whom he succeeded c63 B.C.

Ariobarzanes III (of Cappadocia). [Also: Ariobarzanes III Eusebes (ū.sē'bēz), Ariobarzanes III Philoromaeus (fil"o.rō.mē'us).] d. 42 B.C. King of Cappadocia; son of Ariobarzanes II, whom he succeeded c51 B.C. He aided Pompey against Julius Caesar in the civil war, but was pardoned by Caesar. He was put to death by Cassius.

Ariobarzanes I (of Pontus). fl. 5th century B.C. Satrap of Pontus; father of Mithridates I of Pontus.

Ariobarzanes II (of Pontus). King of Pontus (363–337 B.C.); son and successor of Mithridates I of Pontus. He revolted (362 B.C.) against Artaxerxes II of Persia, and founded the independent kingdom of Pontus.

Ariobarzanes III (of Pontus). King of Pontus (266–c240 B.C.); son of Mithridates III of Pontus.

Arioch (ar'i.ok). In the Old Testament: 1. A king of Ellasar, one of four kings who at the time of Abraham made an attack on the cities in the valley of Siddim. Gen. xiv. 2. Captain of the guard of Nebuchadnezzar. Dan. ii. 14 et seq.

Arioch. In Milton's Paradise Lost, one of the rebellious angels overthrown by Abdiel.

Ariodante (ä.ryō.dän'tā). In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, the lover of Ginevra, princess of Scotland.

Arioi (ä'rō.ō.ē). Society of strolling players that flourished in the Society Islands in pre-missionary times. The members traveled in flotillas of canoes from island to island, enacting mythical and legendary stories in song and dance. They were regarded as sacred, were feasted and honored, and their performances, voyages, and initiation or promotion ceremonies were attended with elaborate ritual. Special buildings were maintained for them. Membership was divided into a series of ranks or grades, each distinguished by special tattooing. Members were forbidden to have children and were required to kill any born to them. Apparently, their performances, which were dedicated to the god Oro, were thought to stimulate the fertility of man and nature; these performances ended in sexual orgies. The Arioi was the peak development of an institution found in simpler form elsewhere in Polynesia: the Karioi of New Zealand, the Kaioi of the Marquesas, perhaps also the hula dancing of Hawaii and the merrymaking in the young men's houses of W Polynesia.

Arion (a.rī'on). b. on the island of Lesbos, in the Aegean Sea; fl. c700–625 B.C. Greek musician and poet at the court of Periander of Corinth, subject of a legend made famous by Herodotus. He is represented among constellations by his lyre and the dolphin which, according to tradition, saved him from robbers at sea. He has been credited with the first literary use of the dithyramb.

Arion. In Greek legend, a fabulous horse. It was said to be the offspring of Poseidon by Demeter (or, in other accounts, Gaea or a harpy) who to escape him had metamorphosed herself into a mare. It was successively owned by Coureus, Oncus, Hercules, and Adrastus. It possessed marvelous powers of speech, and its right feet were those of a man.

Ariosti (ä.rē.ôs'tē), Attilio. b. at Bologna, Italy, c1660; d. c1740. Italian operatic composer. After serving as maestro di cappella (1698 et seq.) at Berlin, he was one of the first directors (1720), with George Frederick Handel and Giovanni Battista Bononcini, of the London Academy of Music. Composer of Dafne (1686), Atys (1700), La Festa d'Imeneo (1700), Nabucodonosor (1706), Amor tra Nemici (1708), Ciro (1721), Coriolanus (1723), and Tenzone (1727).

Ariosto (ä.rē.ôs'tō), Lodovico or Ludovico. [Called "Divino Lodovico."] b. at Reggio, Italy, Sept. 8, 1474; d. at Ferrara, Italy, June 6, 1533. Italian poet, author of Orlando Furioso, an epic of Roland considered one of the masterpieces of Renaissance literature. A student of law, then of the classics, he was early connected with the court at Ferrara. He began (c1495) to write comedies, among which La Cassaria and I Suppositi (performed c1512) found him a patron in Cardinal Ippolito d'Este. He was poorly paid for missions to Pope Julius II and other diplomatic services, and for his epic, which he had begun (1503) with the aim of completing Matteo Maria Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato. He dedicated the first version (1516) to Cardinal Ippolito. Ariosto left (c1517) the cardinal's service for that of his brother Alfonso d'Este, duke of Ferrara. Rewarded only with the governorship (1522–25) of the bandit-ridden Italian district of Garfagnana, he retired (1525) to write comedies and revise Orlando (final version, 1532). Besides those mentioned, his works include comedies such as Il Negromante, satires in the manner of Horace, Latin poems, and sonnets; only his Italian lyrics and his epic receive unmixed acclaim; Orlando Furioso has been widely translated, and was used by Cervantes, Spenser, Scott, Byron, and others.

Ariovistus (ar"i.ō.vis'tus). fl. c71–58 B.C. Germanic leader, chief of the Suevi, who crossed the Rhine and invaded Gaul c71 B.C. to aid the Sequani, conquering the Aedui in 61. He was made an ally of Rome by Julius Caesar, but on an appeal by the Gauls Caesar engaged him in battle at Vesontio (now Besançon, France) and finally defeated him near what is now Mulhouse, France, in 58.

'Arish (ä.rēsh'), El. See El 'Arish.

Arispe (ä.rēs'pā). See Arizpe.

Arista (ä.rēs'tä), Mariano. b. in San Luis Potosí, Mexico, July 26, 1802; d. at sea near Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 7, 1855. Mexican general and politician, president (1851–53) of Mexico. He was an officer in the Mexican army which was defeated (1836) in the Texan revolution, and commanded the Mexican Army of the North which was defeated (1846) by General Zachary Taylor at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. After serving (1848–50) as minister of war under Herrera, he was elected (Jan. 8, 1851) president of Mexico, but resigned (1853) to avoid civil war.

Aristabulus Bragg (ar'is.tab'ū.lus brag). See Bragg, Aristabulus.

Aristaeus (ar.is.tē'us). In Greek mythology, a beneficent deity, protector of husbandmen and shepherds. He is especially considered the patron of beekeeping. According to Vergil, his swarms of bees were destroyed by the nymphs after he had unintentionally brought death on Euridyce, but on his offering a penitential sacrifice, his bees were restored to him.

Aristagoras (ar.is.tag'ō.ras). d. 497 B.C. Persian governor of Miletus, and leader in the Ionian revolt (500 B.C. et seq.) against Persia.

Aristander (ar.is.tan'dėr). Lycian soothsayer, a favorite of Alexander the Great.

Aristarchus (ar.is.tär'kus) or Aristarchos (-kos). fl. 51–57 A.D. Macedonian associate of the apostle Paul, whom he accompanied on several of his missionary journeys, and with whom he was imprisoned at Rome. Acts, xix, xx, xxvii. He is represented by the Greek Church as a bishop of Apamea in Phrygia, and by the Roman as a bishop of Thessalonica.

Aristarchus of Samos (sā′mos). [Also, Aristarchos.] fl. c280–264 B.C. Greek astronomer and mathematician of the Alexandrian school. According to Archimedes and Copernicus, he was the first to maintain the heliocentric theory of the universe and the rotation of the earth on its axis. In order to reconcile the apparent immobility of the fixed stars with the revolution of the earth around the sun, he assumed that the sphere of the fixed stars was incomparably greater than that containing the earth's orbit. That is, the universe conceived by him was incomparably greater than that conceived by his predecessors. In his only extant treatise, "on the sizes and distances of the sun and moon," he gave a scientific method to make these measurements. His results were grossly inaccurate, but the method was sound. This treatise is also of great mathematical interest because of its containing the calculation of ratios which are in fact trigonometrical ratios. Aristarchos added $\frac{1}{1623}$ of a day to the existing estimate of 365¼ days for the solar year; he estimated the length of the "great year" (luni-solar cycle) to be 2.484 years (he probably meant 2.434 years). The discovery of an improved sun dial (a concave hemispherical surface with a gnomon in the center) was ascribed to him. He also wrote on vision, light, and colors.

Aristarchus of Samothrace (sam′ō.thrās). [Also: Aristarchos; called "Coryphaeus of Grammarians."] fl. at Alexandria, c217–c145 B.C.; d. on Cyprus. Greek grammarian and critic, a leading Homeric scholar of antiquity, now considered to have been one of the greatest philologists of the ancient world. A student of Aristophanes of Byzantium, and his successor (c180) as librarian at Alexandria, he was the founder of a school of philology known as Aristarcheans. A prolific commentator on and editor of Hesiod, Pindar, Aeschylus, Sophocles, and other Greeks, his version of the Homeric language and the arrangement into 24 books of the Iliad and Odyssey is a basis of many modern texts.

Ariste (a.rēst). Brother of Chrysale, in Les Femmes Savantes by Molière.

Aristeas (a.ris′tē.as). [Sometimes called the "Wandering Jew."] Greek poet, assigned to various periods, from the 6th century B.C. to the time of Homer; reputed author of an epic poem, Arimaspea, in three books. The accounts of his life are legendary; he is represented as a magician who rose after death, and whose soul could occupy or abandon his body at will.

Aristeas or Aristaeos. [Surnamed "the Elder."] fl. about the end of the 4th century B.C. Greek mathematician who collaborated with Euclid in the composition of the "treasury of analysis," a geometrical method for advanced students. He wrote on the "comparison of the five figures" (i.e., the five regular solids) and proved that "the same circle circumscribes both the pentagon of the dodecahedron and the triangle of the icosahedron when both solids are inscribed in the same sphere." He also wrote five books of solid loci connected with the conics (that is, a treatise on conics regarded as loci). This treatise is now usually considered by historians of science to be more important and more original than the one written later by Euclid on the same subject, although its object and point of view were different. Aristeas called the conics, respectively, sections of right-angled, acute-angled, and obtuse-angled cones, and he discussed the three-line and four-line locus.

Aristeus, Aristaeus (ar.is.tē′us), or Aristeas (a.ris′tē.as). fl. 3rd century B.C. Official at the court of Ptolemy II (of Egypt) who was formerly believed to have obtained from Eleazar, Jewish high priest at Jerusalem, a copy of the Pentateuch for translation into Greek. The Letter of Aristeus which bears this out is now known to be false in this respect, but is nonetheless of use to scholars as a historical source for the period.

Aristides (ar.is.tī′dēz). [Also: Aristeides; surnamed "the Just."] b. c530 B.C.; d. probably at Athens, c468 B.C. Athenian statesman and general. One of the ten Greek generals at Marathon (490), he is said to have ensured victory over the Persians by persuading his colleagues to give full command to Miltiades. He served (489–488) as chief archon of Athens. A conservative, he advocated land power for Athens in opposition to the naval policy of Themistocles; he was ostracized in c483 as a result of this conflict. Returning under the amnesty of 480 to help the defense of Athens against the Persians under Xerxes, he served (480–479 and 479–478) as strategus, took part in the victory of Salamis (480) by capturing Psyttaleia from the Persians, was a commander at Plataea (479) and Byzantium (c478), and succeeded Pausanius as admiral after the Ionian revolt. He was in charge of taxation for the Delian League (c477) and thereafter influential in Athenian affairs. An administrator of ability and integrity, he was probably not the great democrat he has been called.

Aristides. [Also, Aristeides.] fl. 2nd century A.D. Greek Christian and theologian, author of what is believed by most scholars to be Christianity's earliest apology. Written on the occasion of Christian persecution after Hadrian's initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries, the Apology of Aristides was long known to exist but no complete manuscript of it was available until J. R. Harris discovered a Syriac copy of it on Mount Sinai in 1889.

Aristides, Publius Aelius. [Also: Aristeides; surnamed Theodorus.] b. in Mysia, Asia Minor, c120 A.D.; d. at Smyrna, c180 A.D. Greek rhetorician, author of treatises on speech, declamations, sacred discourses, and others, used as models of Attic style. His account to Marcus Aurelius of the destruction (178) of Smyrna by earthquake is said to have induced that emperor to rebuild the city.

Aristides, Quintilianus. [Also, Aristeides.] fl. between 1st and 4th centuries A.D. Greek author of a treatise on music (printed in a collection in 1652), considered by some as the most important ancient book on the subject.

Aristides of Miletus. [Also, Aristeides.] fl. c150–100 B.C. Greek author of the Milesiaca or Milesian Tales, considered to have been the first Greek prose romance.

Aristides of Thebes. [Also, Aristeides.] fl. 4th century B.C. Greek painter. He did battle scenes, hunting scenes, and other works, prized by Alexander and others for their expression of the mind and passions of man.

Aristippus (ar.is.tip′us). b. at Cyrene, Africa; fl. c435–386 B.C. Greek philosopher; pupil of Socrates, and founder of the Cyrenaic school. Starting with the Socratic principles of virtue and happiness, he based his ethics on the pursuit of pleasure, tempered with prudence in order to avoid pain. Little is known of his life, and it is uncertain how much of his theory actually originated with him, and how much was developed by his followers.

Aristo (a.rēs.tō). Brother of Sganarelle, in Molière's École des Maris.

Aristobulus (a.ris.tō.bū′lus, ar″is.tō-). fl. 4th century B.C. Greek historian from Cassandreia who was a companion of Alexander the Great on the Asiatic expedition. His account of Alexander's campaigns was later used by Plutarch, Arrian, and others.

Aristobulus. b. at Paneas (now Baniyas), in ancient Palestine; fl. at Alexandria c180–160 B.C. Greek Peripatetic philosopher and Jewish scholar who attempted to reconcile the Jewish and Greek philosophies. Author of a commentary on Moses which sought to trace certain Greek writings to scriptural origin; the authenticity of his quotations is a subject of controversy among scholars.

Aristobulus I (of Judea). [Called Judah.] b. c140 B.C.; d. 103 B.C. King and high priest of Judea (c104–103 B.C.); son of John Hyrcanus. He is said to have been the first of the Maccabees (or Hasmoneans) to assume the title of king. During his brief reign he extended Judea in the regions of Iturea and Trachonitis.

Aristobulus II (of Judea). d. c48 B.C. King and high priest of Judea; son of Alexander Jannaeus. He was designated high priest by his mother, the queen-regent Alexandra, while the throne was bequeathed to his elder brother Hyrcanus II. After her death a contest took place between the two brothers which brought Pompey for the first time to Jerusalem (63 B.C.); he defeated Aristobulus and led him captive to Rome. Like Aristobulus I, he was a member of the priestly family of the Maccabees (or Hasmoneans).

Aristobulus III (of Judea). Prince and high priest of Judea; grandson of Aristobulus II, brother of Mariamne, and thus brother-in-law of Herod I. In 36 B.C. he was made high priest with the approval of Herod, but, fearing his great popularity, Herod had him assassinated (c35

B.C.). He was the last representative of the Maccabees (or Hasmoneans) to be high priest.

Aristodemus (ą.ris.tō.dē'mus). fl. 8th century B.C. King of Messenia (c731–724 B.C.). A hero in the first war (c727) against the Spartans, he committed suicide because he feared eventual defeat. His life has been the subject of various legends.

Aristomenes (ar.is.tom'ē.nēz). fl. 7th century B.C. Messenian national hero in the second war against Sparta (c650–630 B.C.). According to the account of Pausanius, based on the epic Messeniaca (c230 B.C.), he was the instigator and leader of the revolt against Sparta (which ended in disaster for the Messenians, but has been remembered as a valiant struggle against tyranny).

Ariston (a.ris'ton) or Aristo (-tō). b. on the island of Chios, in the Aegean Sea; d. c250 B.C. Greek Stoic philosopher, a disciple of Zeno and later, according to Diogenes Laertius, of the Platonist Polemo. Of the various branches of philosophy he recognized only ethics as a legitimate study.

Aristonicus (ą.ris.tō.nī'kus). d. c130 B.C. Natural son of Eumenes II (of Pergamum). When Attalus II, the brother and successor of Eumenes, died, he was succeeded by Attalus III, his nephew, who bequeathed the kingdom on his death (133 B.C.) to the Romans. Aristonicus disputed the inheritance with the latter, defeating (131 B.C.) and taking prisoner the Roman commander sent to oppose him. He was himself defeated and taken prisoner in 130 B.C., carried to Rome, and beheaded.

Aristophanes (ar.is.tof'ą.nēz). b. between c450 and 446 B.C.; d. c380 B.C. Athenian writer of Greek comedies. Out of the buffoonery of Greek comic plays Aristophanes created an artistic comedy. A conservative and passionate believer in the good old days of Marathon, he attacked with triumphant vigor "progressive" education (Socrates), new ideas in philosophy (the Sophists), melodrama, rhetorical claptrap, and bizarre musical innovations in contemporary tragedy (Euripides), and above all demagoguery and corruption in politics (Cleon and Hyperbolus). His criticism of the tragedies of Aeschylus and Euripides in The Frogs is the earliest and one of the best pieces of literary criticism in existence. His comedies are characterized by a wealth of imagination, a freshness of wit, a pungency of satire, and bursts of pure lyric poetry that can be found in no other comedies except perhaps those of Shakespeare. He took the role of public critic seriously and his political satire was so effective that he was awarded by the Athenian state a crown of wild olive for the good advice he had given the city. Of his many comedies these eleven survive: The Acharnians (425), The Knights (424), The Clouds (423), The Wasps (422), The Peace (421), The Birds (414), Lysistrata (411), The Thesmophoriazusae (411), The Frogs (405), The Ecclesiazusae (c393), and The Plutus (388).

Aristophanes' Apology. Poem by Robert Browning, published in 1875. It is the sequel to Balaustion's Adventure and sets forth a defense of Euripides against the detraction current at the time, as well as a statement of Browning's own poetic faith and practice.

Aristophanes of Byzantium. b. c257 B.C.; d. c180 B.C. Greek grammarian, critic, and lexicographer, now considered to have been perhaps the greatest philologist of the ancient world. He was for many years librarian at the Alexandria museum. A pupil of Zenodotus and Callimachus, he was an instructor of Aristarchus of Samothrace, who succeeded him both as librarian at Alexandria and as the leading Homeric scholar of the day. Besides Homer, he edited Hesiod, Alcaeus, Anacreon, Pindar, Plato, and the Greek dramatists, wrote commentaries on Aristophanes (the playwright) and on Callimachus's literary history (Pinakes), compiled word lists, and introduced diacritical marks in an effort to systematize the pronunciation and accentuation of Greek. The invention of punctuation is sometimes ascribed to Aristophanes, but systematization is perhaps a more exact description of his contribution.

Aristotle (ar'is.tot.l). [Sometimes called the "Stagirite."] b. at Stagira (whence the name above), on the NW Aegean coast, 384 B.C.; d. at Chalcis, in Euboea, 322 B.C. Greek philosopher, one of the greatest thinkers of antiquity, and a continuing influence on philosophic speculation. He was the son of Nicomachus, the personal physician of Amyntas II of Macedonia, and probably spent part of his childhood at the Macedonian court. When he was 17 he went to Athens and attended the academy of Plato, where he remained until Plato's death. He then went to Assos as the guest (348–347) of Hermias, the ruler of Atarneus and Assos, and married Hermias's niece, Pythias. After the death of Hermias in 345, he went to Mytilene, and there carried on zoölogical studies. In 343–42 Philip of Macedonia invited him to Pella to act as the tutor of his son, Alexander. In 335, after Philip's death, he returned to Athens and founded outside the city a school which took its name (the Peripatetic School) from a covered court, or peripatos, in the garden of the school. The school had a communal life and an extensive library, and was a center of research in every field of contemporary knowledge. When Alexander died there was an outbreak of feeling against the Macedonians, and Aristotle was charged with impiety. He left Athens and went to Chalcis, and there died in 322 of a digestive disease.

Written Works. His works were of three kinds: (1) early writings in the form of Platonic dialogues, and Platonic in spirit, which survive only in fragments, e.g. the Protrepticus; (2) later didactic works in which he moved away from Platonism towards his more mature views, and which also survive only in fragments, e.g. the Theodectea; and (3) the works of his maturity, many of which still survive. The body of his surviving works does contain some which are spurious, but for the most part the works are genuine. The extant writings may be conveniently divided into the classes used by the ancient editors: (1) the Organon, or group of logical writings, which includes the Prior and Posterior Analytics; (2) the works on natural science which include the Physics, On the Soul, and the History of Animals; (3) miscellaneous writings, which include the Problems; (4) the work on primary philosophy, called the Metaphysics; (5) the works on moral philosophy, which include the Nicomachean Ethics and the Politics; and (6) the works on art, the Rhetoric, and the Poetics. To these must be added one historical work, the Constitution of Athens, written on papyrus and discovered in Egypt in the latter part of the 19th century.

Influence as Philosopher. Aristotle has been the philosopher par excellence of the western world, and his influence is still significant. He was primarily a philosopher of moderation and common sense. In metaphysics he believed in both matter and mind, in both the natural and the supernatural. In ethics he believed in both physical well-being and spiritual contemplation. In political theory he believed in both constitutional government and a leadership of merit. Aristotle's philosophy is an inspired common sense governed by a critical insight into the meaning of human experience.

Aristotle and the History of Science. Aristotle was one of the founders of the inductive method. He was the first to conceive the idea of organized research, and himself contributed considerably to the organization of science by his systematic survey and classification of the knowledge of his time. He took pains to make as clear as possible the fundamental principles of each science in particular, and of science in general. He may be called the founder of logic, and his systematization of it in the Organon was so masterful that it still dominates much of the teaching of today. He prepared the systematization of geometry by his investigations of its more fundamental and philosophical aspect, in particular by his introduction of new or better definitions and his discussion of the concepts of continuity and infinity. He completed the system of homocentric spheres of Eudoxus and Callippus, using a total of 55 spheres to account for all the celestial motions. His is the oldest attempt to estimate the size of the earth. To the four elements he added the quintessence called aether, the natural movement of which was circular. The celestial bodies are made of aether and are perfect and incorruptible (this theory stood until 1610). If the mechanical writings be genuine, Aristotle had done much profound thinking on the subject, but whether he was fundamentally right or fundamentally wrong depends entirely upon one's interpretation of his thought. He is said to have discovered the law of the lever, and that sound is transmitted by vibrations of the air. He made the first systematic study (and wrote the first textbook) of meteorology, as well as the first treatise on chemistry.

Contributions to the Natural Sciences. Aristotle carried on immense botanical, zoölogical, and anatomical investigations. He clearly recognized the fundamental problems of biology: sex, heredity, nutrition, growth, adaptation. He outlined both a theory of evolution (scala naturae) and a scientific classification of animals. He proposed theories of generation and heredity. He may be called the founder of comparative anatomy (e.g., comparative study of the womb). Many of his anatomical descriptions are admirable (e.g., reproduction of selachians, especially placental development of the dog-fish, embryonic development of the chick, stomach of ruminants, and others). Some of Aristotle's errors are extremely important, however, because of their far-reaching influence. Thus his denial of the sexuality of plants (he assimilated their reproduction to nutrition and growth) was the main cause of the enormous delay in its discovery (Camerarius, 1694). In spite of earlier Hippocratic views, he considered the heart as the seat of intelligence, the function of the brain being then simply to cool the heart by the secretion of phlegm and to prevent its overheating. He realized that the arterial system duplicates the venous system, but failed to understand the real difference between arteries and veins; he believed that arteries contain air as well as blood. Here again Aristotle's views were the main cause of the extraordinary tardiness of the discovery of the circulation of the blood (Harvey, 1628).

Other Contributions and Summary. He attempted an inductive study of politics, and wrote a history and critical account of Greek constitutional law. One of the modern definitions of psychology as "the positive science of the behavior of living things" is a return to the standpoint of Aristotle. His theory of dreams was far more rational than that of Democritus (he tried to explain them by the persistence of sense impressions, having observed the exaggerated excitement caused by slight stimuli if they interrupt a dream). Aristotle's influence, for good or evil, in every department of knowledge, was so tremendous that a good history of Aristotelianism would include a large part of the history of science and of thought down to the 18th century. The prodigious activity of Aristotle marks the climax of the golden age of Greece. The very existence of his works proves not simply that he had an encyclopedic mind of the highest order, but also that a large amount of scientific research had already been accomplished by his time. Unlike his teacher Plato, Aristotle was not essentially a mathematician. He had a deep mathematical knowledge, but that knowledge was happily balanced by a very extensive acquaintance with every branch of natural history.

Aristoxenus (ar.is.tok'sē.nus). b. at Tarentum (now Taranto), Italy; fl. 4th century B.C. Greek music theorist and philosopher of the Peripatetic School; student of Aristotle. Now usually considered to have been the greatest music theoretician of ancient times, he was the founder of the school of musicians known as Aristoxeneans; his Elements of Harmony (which exists in its entirety) is of value to music historians. Author also of Elements of Rhythm (which exists in fragments), and of more than 430 other works, which have been lost.

Arita (ä.rē.tä), Hachiro. b. in Japan, in September, 1884—. Japanese diplomat, foreign minister from 1936 to 1939.

Arius (a.rī'ụs, ār'i.us). [Also: Areius, Arelos, Arios.] b. in Libya or at Alexandria, c256 (or, according to some authorities, c280) A.D.; d. at Constantinople, 336. Presbyter of Alexandria, a pupil of Lucian of Antioch, from whom he derived the beginnings of the doctrine known as Arianism or the Arian heresy. This, which maintained that Christ, a combination of divine Logos and created body, was neither perfect God nor perfect man, i.e., less divine than God, was the subject of a controversy in the Christian church for three centuries. Excommunicated by the provincial synod at Alexandria (321), he defended his views, which were nevertheless condemned, before the Council of Nicaea (325); he was banished, but was possibly about to be reinstated by Constantine when he (Arius) died. The Arians, especially in the Eastern empire, then split into several groups, and disputes raged between these groups and others in the church, chiefly between adherents of Athanasius (who supported the essential Nicene doctrine of consubstantiality, i.e., that God and Christ are of one substance) and the heretic emperor Valens. Indeed, after the death (337) of Constantine, the new emperor reversed the decision of the council of Nicaea and a kind of Arianism became for a time (until 378) the orthodox doctrine. A point of interest here is that Ulfilas, apostle of the Goths, was consecrated bishop by Eusebius in 341, during this Arian supremacy, and because of this initial accident, the Goths were, and remained, Arians, as did other Teutonic tribes—Suevi, Vandals, Burgundians, Lombards—which were either Arian from the beginning or became so because of the Gothic example. Thus, for a time, Teutonic Christianity was Arian, while Latin Christianity was Catholic. Both religions were essentially the same, but there was enough theological difference to add some religious rancor to racial enmities. No international hatred is truly perfect unless the selfrighteousness of both parties is enhanced by a feeling of religious superiority. In this case, the theologians of Nicaea had provided the necessary touch of perfection; a single iota (identical essence vs. similar essence) made the whole difference between good people and others. This state of affairs lasted until the 6th century. The Franks were the first Germanic tribe to become Catholic, in 496, and by the middle of the sixth century, the greatest part of Gaul was Catholic.

Arius. Ancient name of the Hari Rud.

Arizona (ar.i.zō'nạ). [Called the "Grand Canyon State."] State of the SW United States, bounded by Utah on the N, New Mexico on the E, Mexico on the S, and California and Nevada (partly separated by the Colorado River) on the W.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. Arizona is divided for administrative purposes into 14 counties. It sends two representatives to Congress and has 18 electoral votes. Capital, Phoenix; area, 113,580 sq. mi. (113,909 sq. mi., including water); pop. 499,261 (1940), 749,587 (1950). The state ranks fifth in area, and 38th (on the basis of the 1950 census) in population. The chief cities are Phoenix and Tucson.

Terrain and Climate. Arizona's surface consists of a high plateau traversed by mountain ranges and cut by deep canyons, which occupies the N, C, and E parts, and a dry desertlike lowland, traversed by jagged mountain ranges, which occupies the SW and S central parts. The highest mountain is Mount Humphreys (12,665 ft.), in the San Francisco range, in the N part of the state. Other principal ranges are the Bradshaws, in the C part, the White Mountains and the Grahams, in the E part, and the Santa Catalina Mountains, the Chiricahua Mountains, and the Santa Rita Mountains, in the S part of the state. The chief river system is that of the Colorado, which flows into the state from the N and along its W boundary, draining into the Gulf of California. Where the river turns S, in the NW part of the state, and partly in SE Nevada, is Lake Mead, the largest artificial lake in the world, a reservoir formed by Hoover Dam (formerly Boulder Dam) and utilized for power, irrigation, and control of flood waters. In the NW is the Grand Canyon, formed by the Colorado's course; more than 200 mi. in length, it lies within a plateau ranging in height from 5,000 to 7,000 ft. above sea level. Grand Canyon National Park (established 1919), including part of the canyon and the surrounding area, comprises ab. 1,009 sq. mi. West of the park is the Grand Canyon National Monument (established 1932) consisting of 196,051 acres. Principal tributaries of the Colorado are the Little Colorado, flowing NW into it, and the Gila, flowing SW into it. The Salt River, flowing W into the Gila, has been made a valuable source of power and irrigation by means of Roosevelt Dam, Mormon Flat Dam, Horse Mesa Dam, Stewart Mountain Dam, and the lakes formed by these dams. The Verde River flows S into the Salt at a point somewhat E of Phoenix. The Petrified Forest National Monument in NE Arizona consists of 85,304 acres of cedar and pine forests turned into stone by the action of mineral-laden waters flowing toward the Colorado. Also in the NE part of the state is the Painted Desert, a stretch of ab. 200 mi. of colored rock surfaces. Arizona's clear air attracts many invalids as winter visitors or year-round residents. The climate of the S lowland is dry, with hot summers and mild winters. The plateau has warm summers and cold winters, with snow common above ab. 5,000 ft. elevation.

There is enough rainfall in the high regions of the plateau to permit a fine forest growth of pine, juniper, and cedar.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. Although Arizona ranks as the nation's leading copper-producing state, agriculture (including stock raising) is its chief industry. Extensive irrigation has redeemed great stretches of arid land for general farming. Alfalfa, cotton, truck vegetables, fruits (including semitropical fruits), dairy products, and hay are important crops. Mining since 1858 has produced more than three billion dollars in metals, of which 87 percent was in copper. Minerals found in addition to copper are gold, silver, lead, zinc, mercury, and tungsten. Manufacturing centers primarily on the smelting and refining of copper and on meat products. Annual income in the state from agriculture ranges as high as $176,000,000; from mining, as high as $115,000,000; from manufacturing, as high as $127,000,000. The tourist industry is also important.

History. Vast ruins testify to the existence of a prehistoric culture in Arizona; they include canals, cities, and fortifications. The first Europeans to explore the state were the Spaniards, the Franciscan friar Marcos de Niza reaching it in 1539 and leading a second expedition into the region the following year. The region was governed by Spain as a part of Mexico; the N part was acquired (1848) by the U.S., with New Mexico, as the result of the Mexican War; that part S of the Gila was retained by Mexico as part of the Mexican state of Sonora until the Gadsden Purchase in 1853. Arizona was not separated from New Mexico until 1863 when it became a separate territory. It refused (1906) statehood when Congress proposed that it join with New Mexico as one state, and was admitted to the Union (as the 48th state) on Feb. 14, 1912.

Culture. Indian arts, crafts, and architecture, as well as Spanish architecture, still maintain a dominant influence in Arizona. The state has proven a rich field for the investigation of anthropologists and archaeologists. Indian reservations make up ab. 27,000 sq. mi. The inhabitants of the state are about equally divided between rural and urban areas (on the basis of the 1950 census urban population constituted 55.5 percent of the total). Arizona's institutions of higher learning include the state-supported University of Arizona, at Tucson, and state colleges at Flagstaff and Tempe. The state motto is Ditat Deus, meaning "God Enriches." The state flower is the blossom of the Cereus Giganteus (giant cactus) or saguaro.

Arizpe (ä.rēs′pā). [Also, Arispe.] Town in NW Mexico, in Sonora state, on the Sonora River; formerly the state capital. It was probably the site of an Opata village as early as 1540. The Mission of Arizpe dates from about 1640, and is one of the oldest in the Sonora River valley. Pop. under 5,000 (1940).

Ariish Dağh (är.ĭēsh′ däğ′). See Erciyas Dağı.

Ariish Lake. See Ercis Lake.

Ariona (är.hō′nä). City in NW Colombia, in Bolívar department. 10,416 (1938).

Ariona. Town in S Spain, in the province of Jaén, ab. 20 mi. NW of Jaén; center of an agricultural district. 11,111 (1940).

Arjuna (är′jö.na). In Hindu mythology, one of the chief heroes of the Mahabharata.

Arkab (är′kab). Name occasionally used for the third-magnitude star β Sagittarii.

Arkadelphia (är.ka.del′fi.a). City in SW Arkansas, on the Ouachita River, county seat of Clark County, ab. 63 mi. SW of Little Rock; seat of Ouachita College and Henderson State Teachers College. 6,819 (1950).

Arkadia (är.kā.тнē′ä). See Arcadia, department, Greece.

Ark and the Dove. Sailing vessels which transported (Nov. 22, 1633–March 27, 1634) the first permanent English settlers to Maryland. The vessels left from Cowes on the Isle of Wight, and anchored off the site of what is now St. Mary's (and which was so named by the settlers), near the mouth of the Potomac River.

Arkansas (är′kan.sô). [Official nickname, the "Wonder State."] State of the S and C United States, bounded by Missouri on the N, Tennessee and Mississippi (separated by the Mississippi River) on the E, Louisiana on the S, and Oklahoma and Texas on the W.

Population, Area, and Political Divisions. Arkansas is divided for administrative purposes into 75 counties. The state sends 7 representatives to Congress and has 18 electoral votes. Capital, Little Rock; area, 52,725 sq. mi. (53,102 sq. mi., including water); pop. 1,909,511 (1950). The state ranks 26th in area, and 30th (on the basis of the 1950 census) in population. Leading cities are Little Rock, Fort Smith, Hot Springs, Helena, North Little Rock, Pine Bluff, and El Dorado.

Terrain and Climate. Arkansas' surface is about equally divided between lowlands and highlands, with the Ozark Mountains (including the Boston Mountains) in the NW and the Ouachita Mountains slightly S of them. Highest spots in the state are Magazine Mountain (2,800 ft.) in the Boston Mountains and Rich Mountain (formerly Blue Mountain, 2,750 ft.) in the Ouachita Mountains. At Hot Springs National Park in the Ouachitas are 47 thermal springs, ranging from 95° to 147° in temperature, which have made the surrounding area a popular tourist and health resort. Traversing the state, the Arkansas River flows from W to E, joining the Mississippi ab. 30 mi. N of Greenville, Miss. The Mississippi forms the state's E boundary and provides an important commercial passage. Flowing SE from Missouri is the White River, which is joined by the Black and Cache Rivers before it discharges into the Arkansas near the point where that river joins the Mississippi. The Red River in the SW corner of the state flows E and S. The Ouachita rises in the W and flows SE into Louisiana. The state is extensively forested. It has hot summers and cool winters, with occasional cold waves in winter.

Industry, Agriculture, and Trade. One of the top cotton and rice producing states, Arkansas is heavily agricultural. Corn, hay, fruits, and soybeans are other major crops, and livestock raising is important. The state is rich in minerals, supplying about 95 percent of the country's bauxite, and having abundant deposits of bituminous coal, petroleum, and natural gas. Titanium (containing uranium and thorium), clay, limestone, and manganese are also found. In 1906 the first and only deposit of diamonds in North America was found near Murfreesboro. The manufacture of lumber products, cotton products, machinery, and pottery are leading occupations. Annual income in the state from agriculture ranges as high as $539,818,000; from industrial output, as high as $719,000,000.

History. Spanish explorers led by De Soto were the first Europeans to visit (1641) Arkansas. Later explorations were undertaken by Joliet and Marquette, La Salle, de Tonti, and the missionary Hennepin. The first permanent settlement was made (1686) by the French under de Tonti at Arkansas Post. The territory went (1762) from France to Spain, was returned (1780) to France, and was included (1803) in the Louisiana Purchase. Arkansas was part of the territory of Louisiana and later of the territory of Missouri before becoming (1819) a state (the 25th) of the Union on June 15, 1836. The state seceded (1861) to join the Confederate States; adopted (1863) a constitution prohibiting slavery and was readmitted to the Union in the same year.

Culture. Arkansas has a preponderantly rural population (urban population, on the basis of the 1950 census, constituted 33 percent of the total). Among its institutions of higher learning are the state-supported University of Arkansas, at Fayetteville, and teachers' colleges at Conway and Arkadelphia. State motto: Regnat Populus ("The People Rule"); state flower, apple blossom; state bird, mocking bird; state song, The Arkansas Traveler.

Arkansas City (är.kan′zas). City in SE Kansas, in Cowley County, on the Arkansas River; important for petroleum refining. During the 1870's, when horse thieves made the community their headquarters, "Buffalo Bill" Cody was U.S. marshal here. 12,903 (1950).

Arkansas Post (är′kan.sô). Village in SE Arkansas, on the Arkansas River, in Arkansas County, ab. 73 mi. SE of Little Rock. Established in 1686, it was the first permanent white settlement in the lower Mississippi valley. It was captured by Union forces on Jan. 11, 1863. Pop. under 100.

Arkansas Post, Battle of. Engagement (January, 1863) in SE Arkansas, between besieged Confederate forces at Arkansas Post (Fort Hindman) under General Thomas J.

Churchill and attacking Union forces (30,000 troops) under General John A. McClernand. The Union assault was aided by a fleet of ironclads on the Arkansas River under Admiral David D. Porter. The Confederates surrendered on Jan. 11, 1863.

Arkansas River (ăr.kan'zəs, ăr'kan.sô). River in the W central U.S., a major tributary of the Mississippi River. It rises in Lake County, Colo., in the Rocky Mountains, flows E through Colorado and Kansas, and SE through Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, and joins the Mississippi ab. 30 mi. N of Greenville, Miss. Length, ab. 1,450 mi.; greatest width, ab. 1 mi.; navigable for ab. 800 mi.

Arkansas Traveler (ăr'kan.sô). American folk dialogue and fiddle tune. It is a dialogue between a lost traveler and an Arkansas squatter whom he finds fiddling in front of his cabin. The tune was first published in 1847 as The Arkansas Traveler and Rackinsac Waltz.

Arkat (ăr'kät). A Tamil name of Arcot.

Arkell (ăr'kel, ăr.kel'), Reginald. b. at Lechlade, Gloucestershire, England, 1882—. English journalist, librettist, and playwright. His musical comedies include an adaptation (1935) of 1066 and All That; among his other works are Colombine and Other Verses (1912), Tragedy of Mr. Punch (1920), Green Fingers (1934), War Rumours (1939), Green Fingers Again (1942), and Old Herbaceous (1951). Editor (1946 et seq.) of Men Only and London Opinion.

Arkhangelsk (ăr.hän'gilsk). [English, Archangel (ärk'-ān''jel).] Oblast (region) in the NE part of the U.S.S.R. in Europe, in the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, S of the White Sea and the Arctic Ocean, centered ab. 500 mi. NE of Leningrad. The greater portion of its area is a plain, but it is traversed SE to NW by a narrow range of low hills. The land is sparsely settled, and is covered in the N by frozen tundra and in the S by coniferous forests. There is little farming and the production of minerals is negligible. Prior to the Russian Revolution it was the largest of the governments of Russia, but its area was considerably reduced in 1919. Capital, Arkhangelsk; area, 252,397 sq. mi.; pop. 1,199,178 (1939)

Arkhangelsk. [English, Archangel.] Seaport in the N part of the U.S.S.R., in the Arkhangelsk oblast (region) of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, situated on the Dvina River near the White Sea; the chief commercial town in the N region of Russia, and long the only Russian seaport. It was an important receiving point for materials from the U.S. during World War II. The harbor is open from May to September. Exports from Arkhangelsk include grain, flax, linseed, pitch, skins, and tar. It has sawmills, woodworking plants, fish canneries, and shipyards. A Russian fort was built there in 1584. Pop. 281,000 (1939).

Arkhangelsky (ăr.hän'gil.ski), Aleksandr Andreyevich. b. in Pensa, Russia, 1846; d. at Prague, 1924. Russian composer and choral conductor. He was the first to replace boy choristers with women in Russian churches. Composer of several masses and other religious works.

Arklow (ärk'lō). [Irish, Inbhear Mor.] Market town and seaport in Leinster province, Irish Republic, in County Wicklow, situated at the mouth of the river Avoca, ab. 39 mi. S of Dublin. It is the largest fishing port in the country, fishing being virtually the only industry of the town. Coal and general cargo are also landed here. A force of Irish insurgents, numbering about 30,000, was defeated by the royal troops near here on June 10, 1798. Pop. 5,193 (1951).

Arkona (ăr.kō'na), Cape. [German, Kap Arkon.] Northernmost point of the island of Rügen, Germany, projecting into the Baltic Sea. It contained a Wendish sanctuary.

Ark Royal. British aircraft carrier. The vessel played a decisive part in the successful hunt for and sinking of the German battleship Bismarck on May 26–27, 1941, some 400 mi. off the French coast. The 22,000-ton carrier was herself torpedoed by a German submarine during the early evening of Nov. 12, 1941, at a point ab. 25 mi. E of Gibraltar, and sank early the next morning.

Arkwright (ärk'rīt), Sir Richard. b. at Preston, England, Dec. 23, 1732; d. at Cromford, England, Aug. 3, 1792. English inventor of a cotton-spinning frame (patented 1769), and manufacturer of cotton cloth. His frame, using rollers for the first time and producing hard thread particularly suitable for warp (which Hargreaves's jenny (1770) could not do) was nevertheless not used at first by manufacturers. He established his first mill, horse-driven, at Nottingham in 1768, established water-powered stocking factories at Cromford and elsewhere, used (1790 et seq.) a steam engine at Nottingham, was among the first to employ machinery on a large scale as a substitute for hand labor in textile manufacture, and was thus a contributor to the industrial revolution. His calico made with cotton warp (1773) was the first all-cotton textile produced in England. He added improvements in carding, roving, and spinning (patented 1775), and defended his patent against other claims in a long lawsuit (1781 et seq.).

Arland (ăr.lăñ), Marcel. b. at Varennes, France, July 5, 1899—. French novelist and essayist; awarded (1929) the Goncourt prize for L'Ordre. Other works by him include Terres étrangères (1924), Antarès (1932), La Vigie (1935), and Zélie dans le désert (1944). Among his essays are La Route obscure (1925), Essais critiques (1931), Le Promeneur (1944), and Les Échanges (1945).

Arlanibäus (ăr''lā.nē.bā'ùs), Philipp. A pseudonym of Abelin, Johann Philipp.

Arlanza (ăr.lăn'thä). Small river in N Spain, a tributary of the Arlanzón River.

Arlanzón (ăr.lăn.thôn'). Small river in N Spain, a tributary of the Pisuerga River and subtributary of the Douro River.

Arlberg (ärl'berk; Anglicized, ärl'bėrg). Pass on the border of Tirol and Vorarlberg, Austria, 5,895 ft. high. A railroad tunnel ab. 6½ mi. long passes under it ab. 1,600 ft. below its highest point.

Arlberg Tunnel. Tunnel under the Arlberg, in W Austria, forming part of the railway which runs from Bludenz in Vorarlberg via Landeck to Innsbruck. It is ab. 6½ mi. long, and was opened in 1884.

Arlen (ăr'lęn), Michael. [Original name, Dikran Kouyoumdjian.] b. at Roustchouk, Bulgaria, 1895—. British novelist recently resident in the U.S. He became a British citizen in 1922 and served (1940 et seq.) as a public relations officer for the west Midlands area during World War II. His novel The Green Hat (1924), with its boyish, unconventional heroine, was a huge success, and was subsequently dramatized and filmed. Among Arlen's other works are Man's Mortality (1933), The Crooked Coronet (1937), and The Flying Dutchman (1939).

Arles (ărl; Anglicized, ărlz). [Latin, Arelate, (under Constantine) Constantia.] City in SE France, in the department of Bouches-du-Rhône, situated on the left bank of the E arm of the Rhone River, near its mouth, S of Avignon. It is a river port accessible to seagoing vessels through the canal from Arles to Bouc. There are various industries, particularly stone quarrying, and manufactures of paper and of sausage. Arles is of considerable importance to archaeologists and art historians. It has the largest Roman amphitheater in France, another Roman theater where the Venus of Arles was found, a Roman obelisk, the Roman cemetery of Aliscamps, two museums (Musée Lapidaire and Musée Arlatin), and the cathedral of Saint Trophime, one of the most beautiful Romanesque churches in Provence. The city was colonized by the Phoenicians and prospered under Roman rule to such an extent that it was called "the little Gallic Rome." The emperors Constantine and Honorius favored the city. In 480 it fell victim to the Visigothic invasion. From 1150 to 1251 it was a republic, but then submitted to Charles of Anjou, count of Provence. It was united with France in 1481. The city was in the invasion path of the Seventh U.S. Army and a French army in the fall of 1944 and suffered severe damage. 35,017 (1946).

Arles, Kingdom of. In medieval history, a kingdom which was formed by the union of the kingdoms of Transjurane Burgundy and Cisjurane Burgundy in 933. In 1032 its territories were annexed to the Holy Roman Empire. Cisjurane Burgundy, formed in 879, is sometimes called the kingdom of Arles.

Arlésienne (lăr.lā.zyen), L'. Two orchestral suites by Georges Bizet arranged from his incidental music to Alphonse Daudet's play of the same name.

Arles-les-Bains (ărl.lā.bañ). Former name of Amélie-les-Bains.

Arlincourt (dăr.lañ.kōr), Charles Victor Prévot, Vicomte d'. b. at the Château de Mérantris, near Versailles, Sept. 28, 1789; d. at Paris, Jan. 23, 1856. French poet and novelist. Author of Le Solitaire (1821), and others.

Arline (är.lēn'). The "Bohemian Girl," in Michael William Balfe's opera of that name.

Arlington (är'ling.ton), 1st Earl of. [Title of Henry Bennet.] b. at Arlington, Middlesex, England, 1618; d. July 28, 1685. English politician and diplomat, created earl of Arlington by Charles II in 1672. A member of the Royalist army during the English Civil War, he was, after the Restoration, made (1661) keeper of the privy purse, and served (1662–74) as secretary of state, with charge of foreign affairs during the "Cabal ministry" after the fall (1667) of Edward Hyde, 1st earl of Clarendon. He opposed Sir William Temple's triple alliance with Holland and Sweden, and was confidential adviser to Charles II in the negotiation of the secret Treaty of Dover (1670). Impeachment proceedings were initiated (1674) against him in the House of Commons on charges of his being linked to the papacy, of being the king's chief instrument in corruption, and for breach of trust; even though the charges were not sustained, Arlington's power waned and his only further office was that of lord chamberlain (1674–85).

Arlington. Town in E Massachusetts, in Middlesex County, ab. 6 mi. NW of Boston: residential suburb. 44,353 (1950).

Arlington. Unincorporated community in SE New York, in Dutchess County. 5,374 (1950).

Arlington. Unincorporated community in SW North Carolina, in Gaston County. 5,085 (1950).

Arlington. City in C Texas, in Tarrant County, W of Dallas: marketing and shipping center for roses; processing of medicinal crystals. It is the seat of the North Texas Agricultural College. 7,692 (1950).

Arlington. Village in N Virginia, in Arlington County, opposite Washington, D.C. It contains a national cemetery in which many famous Americans are buried, and which is the site of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Arlington Heights. Village in NE Illinois, in Cook County: horse races. 8,768 (1950).

Arlington House. Mansion on the heights opposite Washington, D.C., in the midst of the Arlington National Cemetery (which is often popularly called Arlington Cemetery). It was once the property of George Washington, and descended through George Washington Parke Custis to Robert E. Lee. It was occupied as a headquarters in the Civil War by the Union army, the estate being a camp of the troops. It is now the property of the U.S. government.

Arlington National Cemetery. Cemetery at Arlington, Va., ab. 3 mi. from Washington, D.C. It is the site of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. In it are also buried the bodies of American soldiers from every war since the Civil War, as well as many American citizens whose contributions to the national welfare were of a less explicitly military nature.

Arliss (är'lis), George. b. at London, 1868; d. there, 1946. English actor. He made his stage debut (1887) as an extra at the Elephant and Castle, London, after a short career in his father's printing and publishing office; in 1901 he arrived in the U.S. with Mrs. Patrick Campbell for an appearance in Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. Thereafter he appeared in a series of plays including Disraeli (1911), which was written particularly for him, and in which he toured the U.S. from 1912 to 1915. He began his film career in 1920, and after 1929 completely forsook the legitimate stage. His films include many of his earlier stage successes as well as such biographical productions as Voltaire, Cardinal Richelieu, and others. His autobiography, Up the Years from Bloomsbury, was published in 1927.

Arlon (är.lôⁿ). [Flemish, Aarlen; German, Arel; Latin, Orolaunum.] Town in SE Belgium, the capital of the province of Luxembourg, situated near the border of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, SE of Namur. There are iron mines in the vicinity; the town has iron foundries, woolen and pottery manufactures, and grain and livestock markets. There is a German-speaking minority. Arlon was fortified in 1671, and occupied by the French in 1684–97. The French under Jean Baptiste Jourdan defeated the Austrian imperial forces here in 1794. In World War II it was reached by the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge (December, 1944, to January, 1945). 11,180 (1947).

Armada (är.mä'dą, -mā'-), Spanish. [Also, Invincible Armada.] A great fleet sent by Philip II of Spain against England in 1588. It consisted of 129 (or more) vessels, with an estimated 19,295 soldiers and 8,460 sailors, and was commanded by the Duke of Medina Sidonia. It was met and defeated by an English fleet of about 80 vessels, under Charles Howard, in the English Channel and Strait of Dover, in August, 1588. The best-known English captains serving under Howard were Sir Francis Drake, Sir Martin Frobisher, and Sir John Hawkins.

Armadale (är'mą.dāl). Police burgh in S Scotland, in West Lothian, ab. 7 mi. SW of Linlithgow, ab. 414 mi. N of London by rail. The town has a paraffin factory. 5,831 (est. 1948).

Armadale. Novel by Wilkie Collins, published in 1866.

Armado (är.mä'dō), Don Adriano de. In Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost, a bragging Spanish soldier. His prototype is found in old Italian comedy.

Armageddon (är.mą.ged'ọn). [Also, Har-Magedon.] Name used in Rev. xvi. 16, and signifying "the mountain of Megiddo." The reference in the passage in Revelation is probably to Megiddo, but some refer it to the plain of Esdraelon in Galilee and Samaria, famous as a battlefield.

Armagh (är.mä'). [Called the "Orchard of Ireland."] Inland county of Ulster province, in Northern Ireland. It is bounded on the N by Lough Neagh, on the E by County Down, on the S by County Louth (Irish Republic), on the SW by County Monaghan (Irish Republic), and on the NW by County Tyrone. The surface is low and undulating in the north and south, becoming hilly in the southeast, where Slieve Gullion rises to 1,893 ft. Beef cattle are raised on the lowlands, and sheep on the uplands. The county is noted for its pleasant farming country and orchards. There are linen and cotton mills. County seat, Armagh; area, ab. 489 sq. mi.; pop. 112,457 (1947).

Armagh. Urban district of Ulster province, Northern Ireland, county seat of County Armagh, situated near the river Callan, ab. 33 mi. SW of Belfast: customs station. It is the seat of an Anglican archbishop (primate of Ireland) and a Roman Catholic archbishop. Armagh was the ancient metropolis of Ireland and a center of learning. Saint Patrick founded his church here in 432 A.D. The cathedral (Protestant) of Armagh, the metropolitan church of the primate of Ireland, is a late Gothic structure which was well restored some years ago. The town was sacked by Shane O'Neill in 1564. Pop. 8,540 (est. 1947).

Armagh. Township in C Pennsylvania, in Mifflin County. It was settled in 1792. Pop. 2,953 (1950).

Armagnac (är.mä.nyäk). In medieval history, a district in S France corresponding in general to the modern department of Gers. It was made a countship in the 10th century, and was united to the crown in the 16th century.

Armagnac (där.mä.nyäk), Bernard VII, Comte d'. d. 1418. French politician and soldier, leader of the Orléanist faction (known, from him, as Armagnacs) in the war against the Burgundians. Military victories made the Armagnacs virtual rulers of France, and Bernard held office (1415–18) as constable of France. When oppressive measures aroused the ire of the Parisian populace, he was murdered in the massacres which followed the capture of that city by the Burgundians under John the Fearless.

Armagnac, Jean V, Comte d'. b. c1420; d. 1473. French political agitator; grandson of Bernard VII d'Armagnac. He formed an incestuous union with his sister, Jeanne Isabelle, which brought upon him the censure of the church and deprivation of his possessions by Charles VII. He was reinstated after the death of Charles, joined the League of the Public Weal against Louis XI in 1465, and was put to death by the royalists at the capture of the castle of Lectoure.

Armagnacs (Anglicized, är'mąn.yaks). The party of the house of Orléans, opponents of the house of Burgundy during the reign of Charles VI: so named from Bernard VII d'Armagnac, their leader.

Armagnacs. Bands of lawless mercenaries, consisting chiefly of natives of Armagnac, in France, trained in the civil wars between the Armagnac and Burgundian parties. To rid France of them they were sent by Charles VII to aid the emperor Frederick III in enforcing his claims against the Swiss (by whom they were roundly, and for Charles VII conveniently, defeated on Aug. 26, 1444 .

Armagnac War. [German, Armegeckenkrieg (är.me-gek'ẹn.krēk).] Contest between the Armagnac mercenaries of the emperor Frederick III and the Swiss in 1444, which ended in the total defeat of the Armagnacs on Aug. 26, 1444.

Armançon (är.mäñ.sôñ). River in E France, which joins the Yonne River E of Joigny. Length, ab. 100 mi.

Armand (är.mäñ), Charles. See Rouarie or Rouërie, Marquis de la.

Armande (är.mäñd). One of the learned ladies in Molière's comedy Les Femmes Savantes. She loves Clitandre, but he loves her sister Henriette, who is not a femme savante.

Armansperg (är'mäns.perk), Count Joseph Ludwig von. b. at Kötzting, in Lower Bavaria, Feb. 28, 1787; d. at Munich, April 3, 1853. Bavarian minister of foreign affairs (1826), and later of the interior. Dismissed for anticlerical views, he went to Greece with King Otto (1830), where he was president (1833–35) of the Greek regency, and Greek chancellor of state (1835–37).

Armatoles (är'mạ.tōlz) or Armatoli (är.mạ.tō'lī). Body of irregular Greek local militia, in the employ of the sultans of Turkey (although themselves Christians) from the 15th century to the Greek revolution in 1821. The Armatoles had existed in the Byzantine empire, and had served, in a measure, to protect the Greek population from the Franks, Albanians, and Serbians. The institution was accepted by the sultans and incorporated in their administration. After the peace of Belgrade (1739) the power of the Armatoles was undermined by the Turkish government, and it steadily declined. Large numbers of them joined the Greeks in the war of independence.

Armavir (är.mä.vēr'). City in the S part of the U.S.S.R., in the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, on the Kuban River. It is a rail junction (the line from Rostov to Baku passes through it) and an agricultural trading center of some importance. It was founded in 1848. In World War II, during the latter part of 1942, it was held by the Germans for approximately four months. 83,677 (1939).

Armbruster (ärm'brös''tėr), Charles Hubert. b. at London, 1874—. English colonial official in Africa, a student of Amharic. He accompanied Sir Francis Reginald Wingate on a mission to Somaliland (1909). Author of Amharic Grammar (1908), Amharic-English Vocabulary (1920), and others.

Ärmelkanal (er'mẹl.kä.näl''). A German name of the English Channel.

Armellina (är.me.lī'na). Shrewd maidservant of Antonio, in Thomas Tomkis's comedy Albumazar. She is loved and finally won by Trincalo.

Armendaris (är.men.dä'rēs), Lope Díaz de. See Díaz de Armendaris, Lope.

Armendariz (är.men.dä.rēth'), José de. [Title, Marqués de Castelfuerte.] b. at Rivagorza, in Navarre, c1670; d. c1740. Spanish general. He served in the War of the Spanish Succession (1701–14), commanding troops in Spain and Sicily. Later was governor (1724–36) of Peru.

Armendariz de Toledo (dā tō.lā'ᴛʜō), Alonso Henriquez de. b. in Navarre, 1543; d. in Mexico, Nov. 5, 1628. Spanish Franciscan friar. He was successively vicar-general of Peru, bishop of Sidonia in 1603, bishop of Cuba from 1610 to 1623, and bishop of Michoacán in Mexico from 1624 until his death.

Armenia (ar.mē'ni.ạ, -mēn'yạ). Country and region in W Asia. It has not been in modern times an autonomous political unit, but remains an ethnic and political entity, the inhabitants of which have a strong sense of their own distinct nationality. It is now usually considered to include the territory SE of the Black Sea and SW of the Caspian Sea, comprising geographical territory under the control of the U.S.S.R., Turkey, and Iran. Within it may be found the headwaters of the Euphrates and Araks rivers, and also Mount Ararat, of Biblical fame.

Armenia (är.mā'nyä). City in W Colombia, in Caldas department; center of a coffee district; railway terminus. 29,673 (1938).

Armenian (är.mē'ni.ạn, -mēn'yạn). The Indo-European language of Armenia.

Armenians (är.mē'ni.ạnz, -mēn'yạnz). Inhabitants of the Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic of the U.S.S.R., found also in Turkey and elsewhere in the Near East, numbering about 2,500,000. The Armenian language is one of the primary branches of Indo-European. Several sharply differing dialects exist. The first historical record of the Armenians (Khayi) comes in the chronicles of Darius, in the 5th century B.C. By the 1st century B.C., the Armenian kingdom under Tigran II dominated the Transcaucasus; it was soon eclipsed by Roman conquest. The oldest documents in Armenian date to the 5th century A.D., when the Armenians had already been converted to Christianity. Since that time, Armenia has been largely a pawn of the surrounding powers (Iran, Turkey, and later Russia). Although the Armenians are noted traders and craftsmen, the bulk of the population is agricultural, and formerly lived in extended, patriarchal families under one roof.

Armenian Soviet Socialist Republic. Southernmost republic of the European division of the U.S.S.R. It borders on Turkey and Iran between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea, S of the Caucasus Mountains. Capital, Erivan; area, 11,500 sq. mi.; pop. 1,281,599 (1939), 1,400,000 (est. 1951).

Armentières (är.mäñ.tyer). Town in N France, in the department of Nord, situated on the Lys River, near the Belgian frontier, ab. 9 mi. NW of Lille. It has textile manufactures, particularly of table linen and cotton cloth, and machine industries. The town was largely destroyed during the German World War I offensive of April, 1918, but was rebuilt after the end of the war. The population was 28,625 in 1914, dropped to 14,758 in 1925, and later rose to 22,667 (1946).

Armfelt (ärm'felt), Count Gustaf Mauritz. b. at Åbo, Finland, April 1, 1757; d. at Tsarskoe Selo, Russia, Aug. 19, 1814. Swedish general and diplomat. He was a trusted adviser of Gustavus III in the war with Russia (1788–90), and leader of the Dalecarlian levies in the defense of Gothenburg (1788) against the Danes. A member of the council of regency on the death (1792) of the king, he was forced by an anti-Gustavian intrigue to flee to Russia. He was restored on the majority of Gustavus IV, and served as ambassador (1802–04) to Vienna, and commander in chief (1805–07) in Pomerania. Driven from Sweden again for support of Gustavus, he entered (1811) the service of Alexander I of Russia; as governor general of Finland, he was the organizer of the Russian defense there.

Armfelt, Baron Karl Gustaf. b. in Ingermanland, Sweden, Nov. 9, 1666; d. in Finland, Oct. 24, 1736. Swedish general. He entered the French service in 1685, and returned to Sweden in 1700. Entrusted by Charles XII with the defense of Finland in 1713, he was overpowered by Dmitri Mikhailovich Gallitzin at Storkyro in 1714; later he was sent on an unsuccessful expedition to the north of Norway in 1718. He was commander in chief in Finland at his death.

Armida (är.mē'dä). [French, Armide (är.mēd).] Enchantress in Torquato Tasso's Gerusalemme Liberata (Jerusalem Delivered). She used her charms to seduce the Crusaders from their vows and duty. Her palace, surrounded by magnificent pleasure grounds, was so luxurious and splendid that "the gardens of Armida" have become a synonym for gorgeous luxury. She also possessed a magic girdle which surpassed even the cestus of Venus in its power. Her voluptuous witchery was finally destroyed by a talisman brought from the Christian army, and Rinaldo, who had been enslaved by her, escaped. She followed him, and he finally defeated her in battle, persuaded her to become a Christian, and became her knight.

Armida. [French, Armide.] Title of operas by (among others) Lully (produced in 1686), Jommelli (Naples, 1771), Cherubini (1782), and Rossini (Naples, 1817).

Armide (är.mēd). Opera in five acts, by Christoph Willibald Gluck, with a libretto by Philippe Quinault, first performed at the Académie Royale at Paris in 1777. The plot is based on an episode in Torquato Tasso's Gerusalemme Liberata (Jerusalem Delivered).

Armijo (är.mē'hō). Unincorporated community in W central New Mexico, in Bernalillo County, near Albuquerque. 4,516 (1950).

Armin (är'min), Robert. [Nicknamed Robin.] fl. c1610. English actor and playwright, probable successor to Richard Tarlton as actor, in the Lord Chamberlain's company of players, of Shakespearean clowns and fools; he also played in Ben Jonson's The Alchemist (1610). Author of Nest of Ninnies (1608) and others.

Arminians (är.min'i.ạnz). The followers of Arminius (1560–1609), also known as Remonstrants.

Arminius (är.min'i.us). [Latinized name of Armin (är'min); German, Hermann.] b. c17 B.C.; assassinated 21 A.D. German chieftain of the Cherusci (near modern Hanover), a liberator of the Germans from Roman rule. He entered the Roman military service in 1 A.D., and became a Roman citizen of the equestrian order, but on his return to Germany he organized a revolt of the Cherusci and destroyed (9 A.D.) three legions of the Roman governor Quintilius Varus in the Teutoburger Wald forcing withdrawal of the Roman frontier from the Elbe to the Rhine. Defeated (16) by Germanicus Caesar, he still maintained the independence of the right bank of the Rhine. He overthrew Marbo, head of the Marcomanni, but was killed in a feud among rival chiefs. He became a hero of 19th-century German nationalism, a monument having been erected to him at Detmold.

Arminius (är.mē'nē.us), Jacobus. [Original name, Jacob Harmensen, Hermanns, or Hermansz.] b. at Oudewater, in South Holland, Oct. 10, 1560; d. at Leiden, Oct. 19, 1609. Dutch theologian and founder of the anti-Calvinist Dutch reformed movement in Protestant theology known as Arminianism. His doctrines became the basis of the Arminian, or Remonstrant, sect in Holland, and are evident today in Methodist and certain other Protestant theologies. He studied at Geneva (1582 et seq.), served as a minister (1588–1603) at Amsterdam, and was a professor of theology (1603–09) at Leiden. His early acceptance of the Calvinist doctrine of predestination was modified as a result of studies undertaken when he was selected to defend the belief against its opponents; the reversal in his point of view brought on bitter controversy (1604 et seq.) with Franciscus Gomarus, a leading Calvinist also on the faculty at Leiden. The Arminian doctrine of ultimate redemption and predestination mitigated by divine prescience was carried even further by his followers in the five articles called The Remonstrance (1610), which precipitated internecine strife between the Calvinist House of Orange and the allegedly republican Arminian Remonstrants.

Armistead (är'mi.sted, -sted), George. b. at New Market, Va., April 10, 1780; d. at Baltimore, April 25, 1818. American army officer. He was prominent in the capture (1813) of Fort George from the British, and commander (1814) of Fort McHenry, his successful defense of which prevented a British assault on Baltimore and was the occasion of Francis Scott Key's writing the Star Spangled Banner.

Armistead, Lewis Addison. b. at Newbern, N.C., Feb. 18, 1817; killed in battle at Gettysburg, Pa., July 3, 1863. American soldier, a Confederate general in the Civil War; nephew of George Armistead. He served (1846–47) in the Mexican War, became (1862) a brigadier general in the Confederate army, and was killed in the charge of Pickett's division at Gettysburg.

Armistice Day. Holiday (November 11) celebrated in most states of the U.S. and in several other countries. It commemorates the anniversary of the signing (1918) of the World War I armistice.

Armistice of World War I. See Compiègne Armistice (1918).

Armisticio (är.mēs.tē'svō). Former territory of Venezuela, now forming the W part of the state of Bolívar.

Armitage (är'mi.tạj), Edward. b. at London, 1817; d. at Tunbridge Wells, England, 1896. English historical painter. His scenes from British and Biblical history, in fresco and on canvas, adorn many English public buildings.

Armitage, Merle. b. at Mason City, Iowa, Feb. 12, 1893—. American impresario. After a brief career as a civil engineer and stage designer (until 1911) he became a booking agent for Alice Nielsen, John McCormack, Alma Gluck, Ernestine Schumann-Heink, Amelita Galli-Curci, Mary Garden, and others; he was also director of publicity for the Diaghilev ballet (1915 et seq.) and later for Pavlova. A founder and general manager (1924–30) of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, he served also as manager of the Philharmonic Auditorium (1933 et seq.). He is the author of Biography of Rockwell Kent (1932), Igor Stravinsky (1936), George Gershwin (1938), So-called Abstract Art (1939), and others.

Armitage-Smith (är'mi.tạj.smith'), Sir Sydney Armitage. b. Sept. 3, 1876; d. at London, Oct. 31, 1932. English financial expert. He was a member (1911–12) of the West African currency committee, a representative (1919) at the Paris Peace Conference, a financial adviser (1920–21) to the Persian government, and secretary general (1924–30) of the Reparations Commission. He investigated (1931) the revenue of the Leeward and Windward Islands.

Armorica (är.môr'i.kạ). [Also, Aremorica.] In ancient geography, the NW part of France, comprising, in general, the region which lies between the mouths of the Seine and Loire rivers. It was restricted in the Middle Ages to Brittany.

Armorican (är.môr'i.kạn). See Breton.

Armour (är'mor), Herman Ossian. b. 1837; d. 1901. American grain merchant and meat packer; brother of Philip Danforth Armour. He established the Chicago grain-commission house known as H. O. Armour and Company in which Philip Danforth Armour became interested and which was to become (after 1870) the meat-packing firm of Armour and Company.

Armour, John Douglas. b. 1830; d. 1903. Canadian jurist. He served (1887–90) as chief justice of the Queen's Bench, Ontario, and was a Canadian supreme court justice (1902–03).

Armour, Jonathan Ogden. b. at Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 11, 1863; d. at London, Aug. 16, 1927. American meat packer; son of Philip Danforth Armour. He joined (1883) Armour and Company and became a partner in 1884. After the death of his father in 1901, he headed the firm.

Armour, Norman. b. at Brighton, England, Oct. 14, 1887—. American career diplomat, minister to Hait, (1932–35) and to Canada (1935–38), ambassador to Chile (1938), Argentina (1939–44), and Spain (1944–45), assistant secretary of state (1947–48). His major diplomatic feat was the negotiation of an agreement under which U.S. marines withdrew from Haiti. He served (1950–51) as U.S. ambassador to Venezuela.

Armour, Philip Danforth. b. at Stockbridge, N.Y., May 16, 1832; d. at Chicago, Jan. 6, 1901. American industrial promoter who headed (1875–99) Armour and Company, meat packers. Starting (1863) in the commission business (grain and meat) at Cincinnati, he made some two million dollars speculating in pork futures at the close of the Civil War; invested in the Chicago grain business of his brother, Herman Ossian Armour, adding (1868) a pork-packing plant and becoming (1875) head of the company. An innovator in the use of slaughtering by-products, he took advantage of the introduction of refrigeration to expand, shipping in his own refrigerated cars. He established distributing plants and an export business, and inaugurated the large-scale canning of meat. He founded (1893) the Armour Institute of Technology.

Armour Wherein He Trusted. Unfinished novel by Mary Webb, published in 1929. The time of the story is the First Crusade (1096).

Arms (ärmz), John Taylor. b. at Washington, D.C., 1887—. American etcher. He was elected (1933) to the National Academy. Examples of his work are owned by galleries throughout the U.S., and also in France and Great Britain.

Arms and the Man. Play by George Bernard Shaw, included in his Plays: Pleasant and Unpleasant (1898). It is a satirical treatment of the traditonal regard for martial prowess. The scene is set in Bulgaria, and the leading character is the Swiss Bluntschli, an unwilling soldier. Oskar Straus's operetta The Chocolate Soldier uses this same plot and character.

Armsby (ärmz'bi), Henry Prentiss. b. at Northbridge, Mass., Sept. 21, 1853; d. Oct. 19, 1921. American agricultural chemist. He organized and directed (1887–1907) the Pennsylvania Agricultural Station, and was director (1907–21) of the Pennsylvania Institute of Animal Nutrition. Aided by grants from the U.S. Bureau of Animal Industry, he headed the Pennsylvania staff which devised a respiration calorimeter with which he demonstrated the conservation of energy in cattle; his research showed that an economic loss is entailed in feeding to livestock agricultural products which are capable of direct use by humans. Author of The Conservation of Food Energy (1918), and others.

Armstead (ärm'stĕd, -stĕd), Henry Hugh. b. at London, 1828; d. there, 1905. English sculptor and silversmith, known for work in silver, gold, and bronze, particularly his St. George's Vase and Outram Shield. Taking up sculpture in 1863, he was employed by Sir Gilbert Scott, architect of the Albert Memorial, for which he did reliefs and figures; his other works include decorations at Whitehall and a fountain at King's College, Cambridge.

Armstrong (ärm'strông), Andrew Campbell. b. at New York, Aug. 22, 1860; d. Feb. 22, 1935. American psychologist and educator, professor of philosophy at Wesleyan University (1888–1930). He was the author of Transitional Eras in Thought (1904) and a translation, History of Modern Philosophy (1893).

Armstrong, Archibald. [Called Archie or Archy.] b. in Cumberland, England, or in S Scotland; d. 1672. Jester to James I and Charles I (of England), discharged, after attaining considerable power, for ridiculing William Laud. He is the original of a charcater in Sir Walter Scott's novel The Fortunes of Nigel.

Armstrong, David Maitland. b. at Newburgh, N.Y., 1836; d. 1918. American muralist and maker of stained glass. He studied at Paris and at Rome, and was U.S. consul general (1869–72) to the Papal States, Italy. He was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor for his directorship of the American department at the Paris Exposition (1878); he also executed frescoes for Machinery Hall at the Chicago World's Fair (1893). His works in glass include windows in All Souls' Chapel, Biltmore, N.C., and Columbia University Chapel, at New York.

Armstrong, Edwin Howard. b. at New York, Dec. 18, 1890—. American electrical engineer and inventor of radio improvements. A graduate of Columbia University in 1913, he remained there as associate in research with Michael I. Pupin and as professor (1934 et seq.). His inventions include a regenerative circuit (1912), a superheterodyne receiving set (1918), a superregenerative circuit (1920), and the development of wide-band frequency modulation (1939).

Armstrong, George Buchanan. b. at Armagh, Ireland, Oct. 27, 1822; d. at Chicago, May 5, 1871. American post-office employee, a pioneer of postal sorting facilities in mail cars; distant relative of President Buchanan. Appointed (1852) to the Post Office Department, Washington, D.C., and transferred two years later to Chicago, he resigned (1856) to enter private business, but reëntered the postal service when his business failed (1858). He held the title of colonel of Illinois volunteers during the Civil War, but seems to have spent the period with the Post Office. In 1864 he proposed reforms of the postal system which would eliminate distributing stations in favor of sorting facilities on mail cars; experiments on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad during the same year brought further trials and the adoption of the innovation by Congress in 1865. Later controversy over the possibility that others (including William A. Davis) may have conceived and even tried the scheme at an earlier date arose (1881) with the dedication of a statue of Armstrong near Chicago's Federal Building.

Armstrong, George Ellis. b. in Lawrence County, Ind., Aug. 4, 1900—. American army officer and surgeon, surgeon general of the U.S. army (1951 et seq.).

Armstrong, Hamilton Fish. b. at New York, April 7, 1893—. American writer and editor; son of David Maitland Armstrong. He served as managing editor (1922–28) and editor (1928 et seq.) of Foreign Affairs. He was also a special adviser (1945) to the U.S. secretary of state, and an adviser (1945) to the U.S. delegation at the San Francisco Conference. Author of The New Balkans (1926), Where the East Begins (1929), Hitler's Reich—the First Phase (1933), Europe Between Wars? (1934), When There Is No Peace (1939), Chronology of Failure (1940), Tito and Goliath (1951), and other works.

Armstrong, Helen Maitland. b. at Florence, Italy, Oct. 14, 1869; d. at New York, Nov. 26, 1948. American artist; daughter of David Maitland Armstrong. She studied at the Art Students League and with W. M. Chase. Her work, consisting chiefly of stained-glass windows, is owned by a number of churches in the U.S.

Armstrong, Henry W. b. at Somerville, Mass., July 22, 1879; d. at New York, Feb. 28, 1951. American popular composer. Among the songs to which he wrote the music were Eyes of Blue, I Love My Wife But Oh You Kid, and Sweet Adeline.

Armstrong, John. [Called Johnie (or Johnnie) Armstrong of Gilnockie.] Killed c1528. Scottish freebooter, subject of many Scottish and English ballads. Chief of a band of over 150 men, he is supposed to have levied tribute from the English almost as far south as Newcastle, though tradition has it that he never harmed a Scot. When James V (of Scotland) undertook (c1528) to suppress the turbulent border marauders, Armstrong, one of the most notorious, appeared before him with 36 of his band and offered his services; the king had them all hanged on trees near Hawick (or, according to other accounts, killed them in a bloody battle, or had them ambushed). This, and the rest of the legend, became the material for Armstrong's Good-Night, Johnie Armstrong, and other popular ballads.

Armstrong, John. b. in Roxburghshire, Scotland, 1709; d. at London, 1779. British physician, poet, and essayist. He was the author of the blank verse Art of Preserving Health (1744). At one time a close friend of John Wilkes (who is believed by some to have obtained for him a post as physician to the army in Germany), he severed the relationship as the result of disputes arising from the publication (c1761) by Wilkes of his verse Day.

Armstrong, John. [Called the "Hero of Kittanning."] b. in Brookborough Parish, Ireland, Oct. 13, 1717; d. at Carlisle, Pa., March 9, 1795. American soldier in the French and Indian Wars, a general in the Revolutionary War. A surveyor, he laid out the town of Carlisle; commissioned to defend the colony from Indians after Edward Braddock's defeat (1755), he led a successful night attack (1756) on the Delawares at Kittanning.

Armstrong, John. b. at Carlisle, Pa., Nov. 25, 1758; d. April 1, 1843. American general, politician, and diplomat; son of John Armstrong (1717–95). He served under John Francis Mercer and Horatio Gates in the Revolutionary War; later he admitted to the authorship of the "Newburgh Letters" (1783) which threatened army action if Congress failed to make good arrears in pay. He obtained a U.S. senatorship (1800–02, 1803–04) from New York through an alliance between the Clintons and the Livingstons (his wife's family) which made George Clinton governor of the state and De Witt Clinton mayor of the city of New York. As minister to France (1804–10) he has been held partly responsible, through the failure to investigate Napoleon's policy, for the outbreak of the War of 1812 with Great Britain. He served as secretary of war (1813–14) under Madison, but was hampered by insufficient Congressional appropriations, the enmity of Monroe, and his own unwise decisions. He has been considered responsible for the failure of the Montreal and Plattsburg campaigns and, in part, for the British capture (1814) of Washington.

Armstrong, Margaret Neilson. b. at New York, Sept. 24, 1867; d. there, July 18, 1944. American writer; daughter of David Maitland Armstrong (1836–1918). Author of Fanny Kemble: a Passionate Victorian (1938), Murder in Stained Glass (1939), Trelawny: a Man's Life (1940), The Man with No Face (1941), and others.

Armstrong, Martin Donisthorpe. b. at Newcastle, England, 1882—. English poet and short-story writer. Educated at Cambridge as a mechanical engineer, he forsook science for a literary career two years after his graduation. Author of Exodus, and Other Poems (1912), The Puppet Show (1922), Sir Pompey and Madame Juno (1927), Lover's Leap (1932), General Buntop's Miracle (1934), The Butterfly (1941), Chichester Concert (1944), Said the Cat to the Dog (1945), and others.

Armstrong, Paul. [Pseudonym (on New York newspapers) "Right Cross."] b. at Kidder, Mo., April 25, 1869; d. at New York, Aug. 30, 1915. American playwright. He was a reporter for newspapers at Buffalo (until 1896) and Chicago (1896–98), and a specialist on prize fights for New York newspapers (1898–1904). His play Heir to the Hoorah (1905) opened an eight-year period of tremendous success with such works as Salomy Jane (1907), based on a story by Bret Harte; Going Some (1908), written in collaboration with Rex Beach; Via Wireless (1908), with Winchell Smith; and The Greyhound (1912), with Wilson Mizner. He is probably best known for Alias Jimmy Valentine (1909), which was written in one week and set a pattern in crime melodrama that lasted for years.

Armstrong, Robert. b. at Abingdon, Va., Sept. 28, 1792; d. at Washington, Feb. 23, 1854. American soldier, diplomat, and newspaper owner. He served on the staff of Andrew Jackson at the battle of New Orleans and was later appointed brigadier of volunteers in the second Seminole war (1836) by Jackson, who was then in the White House. Appointed consul at Liverpool by President Polk (1845), he returned (1849) to the U.S. to become the owner (1851 et seq.) of the Washington Union, and a staunch supporter of Democratic policies.

Armstrong, Samuel Chapman. b. in the Hawaiian Islands, Jan. 30, 1839; d. at Hampton, Va., May 11, 1893. American educator, founder (1868) and principal of Hampton Normal and Industrial Institute, in Virginia, for Negroes. Colonel of colored troops in the Civil War and, as an agent of the Freedmen's Bureau, head of a Negro camp (1866), he secured the support of the American Missionary Association in 1867, and patterned the school on the Hilo Manual Labor School in Hawaii. The name of the school was subsequently officially shortened to Hampton Institute, and Indians were also admitted.

Armstrong, Thomas Henry Wait. b. at Peterborough, England, June 15, 1898—. English organist, music teacher, and composer. After serving as organist (1928–33) at Exeter Cathedral, he was appointed (1933) to an equivalent post at Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. Composer of choral works, as well as compositions for piano, violin, and chorus and orchestra.

Armstrong, Sir Walter. b. in Roxburghshire, Scotland, 1850; d. at London, 1918. British art critic; director (1892–1914) of the National Gallery at Dublin.

Armstrong, William. [Called "Kinmont Willie."] fl. c1587. Scottish marauder on the border between Scotland and England. Captured in 1587, he escaped and continued his depredations until again imprisoned (1596) by the English; his subsequent rescue by the Scotch led almost to a break in relations between England and Scotland. He should not be confused with the more famous Scottish freebooter and border raider, John Armstrong.

Armstrong, William George. [Title, Baron Armstrong of Cragside.] b. at Newcastle, England, Nov. 26, 1810; d. at Rothbury, England, Dec. 27, 1900. English inventor, in particular of the Armstrong gun, which was much used by the British army during the latter half of the 19th century. At first a lawyer, his study of hydraulics and hydroelectric power produced the invention of an improved rotary water-motor (1839), a hydraulic crane (patented 1846), and a hydroelectric machine (c1843) to produce frictional electricity. Crimean War ordnance orders to a factory set up (1847) at Elswick to manufacture hydraulic machinery led to the development (1855) of his field gun, on the principle of a steel cylinder kept in a state of tension by shrunk-on iron rings of smaller diameter, also including new designs for breech-loading, rifling, and elongated projectile. He formed (1859) the Elswick Ordnance Company and developed (1880) a 6-inch breech-loading gun substituting wire wound at high tension for metal rings. He also made important experiments (1855 et seq.) with smoke prevention. Having expanded (1868) his factory to include shipbuilding, he produced (1882) what some have considered the first modern armored cruiser. Author of Electric Movement in Air and Water (1897), and others.

Armstrong Legislative Committee. Joint committee of the New York Legislature, appointed July 20, 1905, to investigate the condition and the methods of the various life insurance companies of the state and to recommend suitable legislation in the interests of policy holders. Of its eight members, three, including the chairman, W. W. Armstrong, were appointed from the Senate and five from the Assembly. Charles Evans Hughes was chosen by the committee as its chief counsel. The sessions for receiving testimony opened on Sept. 6, 1905, and closed on Dec. 30, 1905. Many facts in regard to the mismanagement of the insurance companies of New York were brought to light, and important legislation resulted (1906) from the investigation.

Army, U. S. Department of the. Government department, one of three under the National Military Establishment created in 1947 (the other two are the Department of the Navy and the Department of the Air Force). It is headed by the secretary of the army, who does not have cabinet status and is responsible to the secretary of defense. Before unification of the armed forces was achieved, the War Department (as it was then called) had separate status as an executive department, and its head enjoyed cabinet rank. The commander in chief of the army is the president of the U.S.; the executive head of the army is the chief of staff. The Regular Army of the U.S. is a peacetime unit consisting of volunteers and of recruits raised through selective service. The chief function of the U.S. Army is to assure the ability to carry out prompt and sustained combat operations on land. The army general staff, with headquarters at Washington, D.C., has six divisions in charge of the entire administration of the army: personnel and administration; organization and training; service, supply, and procurement; plans and operations; research and development; and special. Six general administrative units (called army areas) are in charge of this number of field armies assigned to regional areas of the continental U.S. The combat units of the U.S. Army include the infantry, field artillery, coast artillery, mechanized cavalry, armored divisions, tank destroyer command, and the amphibian training command. Technical services include the Chemical Corps, Transportation Corps, Ordnance Department, Medical Department, Quartermaster Corps, Corps of Engineers, and Signal Corps. Administrative services include the Special Services Division, Provost Marshal General's Office, Corps of Chaplains, Finance Department, and Adjutant General's Department. The Women's Army Corps, originally an auxiliary service, became an integral part of the army in 1943. Under legislation approved in 1948, women enjoy equal military status with men. The smallest unit in the army is the squad (consisting of not more than nine men); the largest is the field army (consisting in full combat strength of 500,000 to 800,000 men). Intermediate units include the company (80 to 200 men), the regiment (800 to 3,700 men), the division (15,500 to 18,500 men), and the corps (65,000 to 90,000 men). Individual grades among enlisted men range from private to master sergeant; corporals and sergeants are known as noncommissioned officers. Warrant officers (of two grades) rank above enlisted men but below commissioned officers; the latter range in rank from second lieutenant to general (of which there are several ranks, the highest being general of the army). Among the peacetime reserves of the army are the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Technically, the U.S. Army had its inception in 1789, with the birth of the national government, and in its present form dates from the National Defense Act of 1916, but American armies fought on a large scale in the French and Indian Wars and in the Revolutionary War. The U.S. Army has participated in the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, World Wars I and II, and the Korean War, in addition to taking part in such actions as campaigns against the Indians, the China expedition, and the Mexican border campaign.

Army War College. Military educational institution founded in 1901 by U.S. Secretary of War Elihu Root for the purpose of training specifically chosen officers for general staff and other high post commands. It is the top-ranking body of its kind in the U.S. Army.

Arn (ärn). See Arno, German ecclesiastic.

Arnaboldi (är.nä.bôl'dē), Alessandro. b. at Milan, Nov. 19, 1827; d. 1898. Italian lyric poet. He resigned (1873) from municipal office at Milan to devote himself to literature. Author of Versi (1872), Nuovi versi (1888), and others.

Arnaldo da Brescia (är.näl'dō dä brā'shä). Italian name of Arnold of Brescia.

Arnall (är'nąl, -nôl), Ellis Gibbs. b. at Newnan, Ga., March 20, 1907—. American lawyer and politician. After serving as attorney general (1939–43), he was elected (1943) governor of Georgia, defeating Eugene Talmadge. In 1947, when his term ended, Talmadge had been voted his successor. Upon Talmadge's death (in December, 1946) only a few weeks before he was to assume office, the question arose of who was to become governor instead, the state having no provision for such an eventuality. Arnall, backed by the attorney general of the state, protested the popular nomination of Talmadge's son Herman, and refused to relinquish his post. He was ousted, however, by the adherents of Herman Talmadge. In 1948 he became president of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers. In 1952 he served briefly as director of the Office of Price Stabilization. Author of The Shore Dimly Seen (1946) and What the People Want (1948).

Arnason (är'nä.sôn), Jón. [Called, "the Grimm of Iceland."] b. at Reykjavík, Iceland, Nov. 13, 1819; d. Aug. 17, 1888. Icelandic writer and librarian. He published, as coauthor, Popular Legends of Iceland (1862–64).

Arnaud (är.nō), Henri. b. at Embrun, France, 1641; d. at Schönenberg, Germany, 1721. Waldensian clergyman and Swiss patriot. He was pastor (1685) at La Tour, in Piedmont, and leader of the Waldenses (or Vaudois) after their expulsion (1686) from that district by Victor Amadeus, duke of Savoy, under the terms of an alliance with Louis XIV of France. He conducted 3,000 exiles to Switzerland and there, with the aid of William of Orange, organized a band of 1,000 men who crossed the Alps, withstood the siege (1689–90) of 4,000 French and Savoyard troops at Balsille, and reached La Tour. During Victor Amadeus's temporary shift of allegiance from France to England and Holland, Arnaud led the Waldenses in Victor's service; forced into exile again (1698) by the peace between France and Savoy, he settled in Württemberg, where he became (1699) pastor of refugees. Author of Histoire de la glorieuse rentrée des Vaudois dans leurs vallées (1710).

Arnauld (är.nō). [Also: Arnault, Arnaut.] French family prominent in the Jansenist movement, chiefly through the connection of most of them with the Cistercian Abbey at Port-Royal (near Versailles; later also at Paris). It included Antoine Arnauld (1560–1619) and his 20 children, notably Robert Arnault d'Andilly (c1588–1674), Jacqueline Marie (1591–1661), Jeanne Catherine Agnes (1593–167!), Henri (1597–1692), and Antoine (1612–94) Arnauld, and Robert's daughter, Angélique Arnauld d'Andilly (1624–84).

Arnauld, Antoine. b. at Paris, Feb. 6, 1560; d. there, Dec. 29, 1619. French supporter of Henry IV, celebrated for his speech (1594) against the Jesuits in defense of the University of Paris; father of a large family important in the Jansenist movement.

Arnauld, Antoine. [Called "the Great Arnauld."] b. at Paris, Feb. 16, 1612; d. at Brussels, 1694. French philosopher and Jansenist theologian; youngest son of Antoine Arnauld (1560–1619). His exposition of the Jansenist movement, De la fréquente communion (1643), directed against the Jesuits, resulted in his expulsion from the Sorbonne; this event was the occasion of Provincial Letters by his friend Blaise Pascal. He retired (1656) to Port-Royal, where he collaborated on Logique de Port-Royal (also called Art de penser). Author, with Pierre Nicole, of the anti-Calvinist La Perpétuité de la foi (1669–72) and, after his flight (1679) to the Netherlands under new persecution, of numerous works in opposition to the Jesuits and Calvinists. A follower of René Descartes, he engaged also in later years (1683–85) in a long controversy with Nicolas de Malebranche.

Arnauld, Henri. b. at Paris, 1597; d. at Angers, France, June 8, 1692. French Jansenist ecclesiastic; brother of Antoine Arnauld (1612–94). He became bishop of Angers in 1649 and was one of the four bishops who refused to sign the acceptance of the papal bull condemning the Augustinus of Jansen.

Arnauld, Jacqueline Marie. [Called (as abbess) Mère Angélique; religious name, Marie Angélique de Sainte-Madeleine.] b. Sept. 8, 1591; d. Aug. 6, 1661. French nun; second daughter of Antoine Arnauld (1560–1619). According to some accounts she became abbess of Port-Royal at the age of eight or eleven. In 1608 she began the reforms under the guidance of Saint Francis of Sales which made Port-Royal nuns widely noted for piety. In 1626 she removed her charges to Paris for more healthful surroundings; the old buildings were thereafter, in strict parlance, known as Port-Royal-des-Champs and the new as Port-Royal-de-Paris, the former becoming the seat of a group of ascetics led by men of the Arnauld family and of the Port-Royal schools. In ordinary usage, the term "Port-Royal" continued to apply to the original establishment near Versailles. Under the influence of Jean Du Vergier de Hauranne, abbé of Saint-Cyran, she followed Jansenism, establishing Port-Royal as a stronghold of this movement. Author of writings and letters collected in Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Port-Royal (1742–44) by her niece, Angélique Arnauld d'Andilly.

Arnauld, Jeanne Catherine Agnès. [Called (as abbess) Mère Agnès.] b. 1593; d. 1671. French Jansenist nun; daughter of Antoine Arnauld (1560–1619). Author of L'Image d'une religieuse parfaite et d'une imparfaite (1660) and of Le Chapelet secret du Saint Sacrement (1663). The latter, a small treatise on the sacrament of love, was condemned by the Sorbonne and was the subject of an apology by Jean Du Vergier de Hauranne, abbé of Saint-Cyran, which precipitated a scandal and began his Jansenist influence over her sister, Jacqueline Marie Arnauld.

Arnauld d'Andilly (är.nō dän.dē.yē), Angélique. [Called (as abbess) Mère Angélique; religious name, Angélique de Saint-Jean.] b. at Paris, Nov. 28, 1624; d. Jan. 29, 1684. French Jansenist nun; daughter of Robert Arnauld d'Andilly. As abbess of Port-Royal (1678 et seq.), she bravely resisted persecutions which ended with the expulsion (1710) of the nuns. Author of Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Port-Royal (1742–44), containing writings of her aunt, Jacqueline Marie Arnauld.

Arnauld d'Andilly, Robert. b. at Paris, c1588; d. at Port-Royal, Sept. 27, 1674. French lawyer and theological writer; eldest son of Antoine Arnauld (1560–1619). An official of and favorite at the court of Anne of Austria, he became in 1646 a Jansenist ascetic at Port-Royal. He translated Augustine's Confessions and other works into French.

Arnault (är.nō), Antoine Vincent. b. at Paris, Jan. 1, 1766; d. near Le Havre, France, Sept. 16, 1834. French dramatist and poet, who was exiled (1815–19) for his support of Napoleon. Author of Marius à Minturnes (1791), Fables et poésies (1812), Souvenirs d'un sexagénaire (1833), and others.

Arnautlik (är.nä.öt''lik'). Turkish name of Albania.

Arnauts (är'nôts) or Arnaout (är.nä.öt'). [Modern Turkish, Arnavut (är.nä.vöt').] Turkish name for the Albanians.

Arndt (ärnt), Ernst Moritz. b. at Schoritz, on the island of Rügen (then under Sweden), in the Baltic Sea, Dec. 26, 1769; d. at Bonn, Germany, Jan. 29, 1860. German poet and historian; writer of nationalistic pamphlets and songs against Napoleon. He became privatdocent (1800) and professor (1806) of history at Greifswald, and in 1818 at Bonn. He was the author of Versuch einer Geschichte der Leibeigenschaft in Pommern und Rügen (1803), a history of serfdom in Pomerania and Rügen which led to the abolishment (1806) of the system by the Swedish king Gustavus IV. He also wrote Der Geist der Zeit (1806–18), containing a bitter attack on Napoleon which forced Arndt's flight to Sweden (1806), and criticism of reactionary tendencies in the Prussian government which led to his arrest (1819) and suspension of his professorship (1820–40). He is known also for his songs, such as Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland? and Was blasen die Trompeten?

Arndt or Arnd (ärnt), Johann. b. at Ballenstädt, in Anhalt, Germany, Dec. 27, 1555; d. at Celle, Germany, May 11, 1621. German Lutheran theologian, semimystic, and religious writer. He supported Melanchthon in the crypto-Calvinist dispute (1577 et seq.); also engaged in various iconological disputes as well as a controversy over the baptismal ritual. He is best known for Vom Wahren Christentumb (1609), since translated into English as True Christianity.

Arne (ärn), Michael. b. at London, 1741; d. there, Jan. 14, 1786. English harpsichordist and composer; son of Thomas Augustine Arne (1710–78). He wrote music for David Garrick's Cymon (1767), Hannah Cowley's The Belle's Stratagem (1780), and other plays, and popular songs such as The Highland Laddie.

Arne, Susannah Maria. Maiden name of Cibber, Susannah Maria.

Arne, Thomas Augustine. b. at London, March 12 1710; d. there, March 5, 1778. English composer of songs, especially for Shakespearean plays, and of oratorios and operas. In his first production, a setting of Addison's Rosamund (1733), the lead was played by his sister, Susannah Maria Cibber; in Opera of Operas (1733), based on Fielding's Tragedy of Tragedies, his brother played Tom Thumb. His most noteworthy works include music for John Milton's Comus (1738) and for James Thomson and David Mallet's masque Alfred (1740), the finale of which is now known as Rule Britannia; music for Under the Greenwood Tree and other songs in Shakespeare's As You Like It (1740), and for Where the Bee Sucks, among others, in The Tempest (1746); and the oratorios Abel (1744) and Judith (1764), a performance (1773) of the latter using female voices in an oratorio chorus for the first time. He also composed the operas Artaxerxes (1762) and Love in a Village (1762), and others.

Arneb (är'neb). The third-magnitude star α Leporis. It is sometimes called Arsh.

Arneiro (ar.nā'rō), Visconde de. [Title of José Augusto Ferreira Veiga.] b. at Macao, China, 1838; d. at San Remo, Italy, in July, 1903. Portuguese composer. He is now known chiefly for his operas L'Elisire di Giovinezza (1876) and La Derelitta (1885), and a Te Deum (1871).

Arnér (är.nār'), Sivar. [Full name, Ernst Nils Sivar Erik Arnér.] b. at Arbvar, Småland, Sweden, 1909—. Swedish novelist and short-story writer, professor at Skara and at Norrköping. Arnér first acquired literary fame as the result of short stories in Skon som krigaren bar (The Warrior's Shoe, 1943).

Arneth (är'net), Alfred von. b. at Vienna, July 10 1819; d. there, July 30, 1897. Austrian historian; son of Joseph Calasanza von Arneth. Author of works on Eugene of Savoy, Maria Theresa, Marie Antoinette, and numerous others; of them all the Geschichte Maria Theresa (10 vols., 1863–79) is best known.

Arneth, Joseph Calasanza von. b. Aug. 12, 1791; d. Oct. 31, 1863. Austrian archaeologist and numismatist. Appointed director of the cabinet of numismatics and antiquities at Vienna in 1840; author of Synopsis numorum antiquorum (1837–42), and others.

Arnheim (ärn'hīm), Baron Johann (or Hans) Georg von. See Arnim, Baron Johann (or Hans) Georg von.

Arnhem (ärn'hem). [German, Arnheim (-hīm); Latin, probably, Arenacum.] City in NE Netherlands, the capital of the province of Gelderland, situated on the right bank of the Rhine River, near its confluence with the Ijssel River, ab. 33 mi. E of Utrecht. It is surrounded by garden suburbs, has beautiful parks, and is a favorite residence of retired merchants and government officials. It is a river port, and has many commercial and banking enterprises; the factories produce nylon, hosiery, furniture, ceramics, cigars, and foodstuffs; there are metallurgical and chemical establishments. There is a museum of antiquities, a concert hall, and a theater. The 15th-century Groote Kerk had a famous chime of bells; the town hall dates from the 16th century. Arnhem received town privileges in 1233, was a residence of the dukes of Gelder in the 13th–16th centuries, and a member of the Hanseatic League in 1343. Conquered by Charles the Bold of Burgundy in 1473, it was contested between the Spaniards and the dukes of Gelder until the death of the last duke of Gelder in 1538; joined the Union of Utrecht in 1579 and the States General in 1585. It was taken by the French in 1795, and by the Prussians in 1813. A large part of the center of the town was destroyed in World War II, when Arnhem was the site of a large Allied airborne invasion (1944); the Groote Kerk is beyond repair. 102,434 (1949).

Arnhem (är'nem), Cape. Headland at the entrance of the Gulf of Carpentaria, in the Northern Territory of Australia: the easternmost point of Arnhem Land.

Arnhem Bay. Indentation on the N coast of the Northern Territory, Australia, in NE Arnhem Land.

Arnhem Land. [Also, Arnhemland.] District in N Australia, in the Northern Territory. It occupies most of the large peninsula between the Gulf of Carpenteria and the Timor Sea. A large part of it has been set aside as an aboriginal reserve.

Arnim (är'nim), Count Adolf Heinrich von. b. April 10, 1803; d. Jan. 8, 1868. Prussian politician and historical writer. He was the leading cabinet minister during the tense days of March 19–29, 1848, when the Prussian government was a chief target of the reformist insurrections of that year in Europe.

Arnim, Elisabeth (or Bettina) von. [Maiden name, Brentano.] b. at Frankfort on the Main, Germany, April 4, 1785; d. at Berlin, Jan. 20, 1859. German writer; wife of Ludwig Achim von Arnim and sister of Clemens Brentano. She was a member of a circle including Karl Wilhelm von Humboldt, Leopold von Ranke, the brothers Grimm, and the poet Karoline von Günderode, whose biography (Die Günderode, 1840) she wrote. Author also of Goethe's Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde (1835), a partly fictitious correspondence with Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, and Dies Buch gehört dem Kōnig (1843), an account of poverty and bad government in Berlin. It was addressed to Frederick William IV.

Arnim, Count Harry Karl Kurt Eduard von. b. at Moitzelfitz, in Pomerania, Oct. 3, 1824; d. at Nice, May 19, 1881. German diplomat under Bismarck. He was Prussian envoy at the papal court (1864–70) and ambassador at Paris (1872–74), and leader in the negotiation of the treaty of Frankfort (1871). He protested the doctrine of papal infallibility and proposed (1869) sending government representatives to the Vatican council, in the first of his series of struggles against Bismarck; he was recalled (1874) from his post at Paris for differences over policy and assigned to Constantinople. Dismissed for permitting the publication of diplomatic papers and charged with theft of state documents, he remained in exile (1875–81), publishing anti-Bismarck pamphlets including Pro nihilo (1876) and Der Nunzius kommt! (1878).

Arnim, Baron Heinrich Alexander von. b. at Berlin, Feb. 13, 1798; d. at Düsseldorf, Jan. 5, 1861. Prussian diplomat and politician. He was ambassador at Brussels (1840–46) and Paris (1846–48), and was minister of foreign affairs from March 21 to June 8, 1848.

Arnim, Baron Johann (or Hans) Georg von. [Also, Arnheim.] b. at Boitzenburg, Brandenburg, Prussia, 1581; d. at Dresden, April 18, 1641. German general and diplomat. He served with the Swedes under Gustavus Adolphus (Gustavus II) against Russia and later with the Poles against Turkey. He was persuaded (1626) by the Austrian general, Wallenstein, to join the newly formed imperial army and quickly rose to the rank of field marshal despite his known Protestant religious convictions; he quit the imperial service after the dismissal of Wallenstein and later fought on the side of the Swedes at Breitenfeld (1631) as commander of an army raised by the elector of Saxony. His later life found him less and less trusted by the Swedes, who imprisoned him in 1638 for alleged plots against them. At the time of his death he was striving to raise an army which would free German soil of foreign military forces.

Arnim, Karl Otto Ludwig von. b. at Berlin, Aug. 1, 1779; d. there, Feb. 9, 1861. German writer of travel works.

Arnim, Ludwig Achim (or Joachim) von. b. at Berlin, Jan. 26, 1781; d. at Wiepersdorf, Germany, Jan. 21, 1831. German romantic novelist and poet; husband of Elisabeth von Arnim. With his wife's brother, Clemens Brentano, he published the collection of folk songs entitled Des Knaben Wunderhorn (1806–08). He was the author of novels and tales, notably Die Kronenwächter (1817), laid in the 16th century and considered to have been the best historical novel of the day; among his other works are Der Wintergarten (1809), Gräfin Dolores (1810), and Halle und Jerusalem (1811).

Arniston the elder (är'nis.tən), Lord. See Dundas, Robert (1685–1753).

Arniston the younger, Lord. See Dundas, Robert (1713–87).

Arno (är'nō). [Also: Arn, Aquila.] b. c750; d. 821. German ecclesiastic and diplomat; friend of Alcuin; appointed (798) archbishop of Salzburg. He is said to have converted many Avars and Wends to Christianity, to have presided at several synods, and to have enjoyed the esteem of Charlemagne and Pope Leo III. He was active in both church and government, and established a library at Salzburg.

Arno. [Latin, Arnus.] River in Tuscany, N central Italy, which rises in the Apennines, flows S, W, NW, and then W, and empties into the Mediterranean ab. 6 mi. SW of Pisa. Florence and Pisa are situated on it. Length, ab. 154 mi.

Arno, Peter. [Original name, Curtis Arnoux Peters, Jr.] b. at New York, Jan. 8, 1904—. American cartoonist, designer, and author, best known for his cartoons, which have appeared both in periodicals and book form. He was educated at Yale University, and became associated with The New Yorker magazine in 1925. Since then he has written and produced musical revues, served as a writer and designer for films, and designed automobiles. Exhibitions of his work have been held at Paris, London, and in the U.S. Among his better known works are the books Peter Arno's Parade, Peter Arno's Circus, For Members Only, Man in the Shower, Peter Arno's Sizzling Platter, and cartoons, illustrations, and articles for the New Yorker, Saturday Evening Post, Harper's Bazaar, and other periodicals.

Arnobius (är.nō'bi.us). [Surnamed Afer.] fl. in Numidia, c300 A.D. Rhetorician and Christian apologist. He was the author of Adversus Gentes, a treatise on Christianity written shortly after his conversion (and based more on Plato and Lucretius than on the Scriptures) which sought to refute contemporary charges that Christian impiety was a cause of the world's troubles, and attacked heathenism and polytheism.

Arnold (är'nold). Urban district in C England, in Nottinghamshire, ab. 3 mi. NE of Nottingham, of which it is a suburb. It has no direct rail connections for passengers, being reached by rail to Nottingham, ab. 124 mi. N of London. 21,474 (1951).

Arnold. Borough in W Pennsylvania, in Westmoreland County, on the Allegheny River NE of Pittsburgh: manufactures glass. 10,263 (1950).

Arnold, Sir Arthur. b. at Gravesend, Kent, England, May 28, 1833; d. at London, May 20, 1902. English editor, reformer, and novelist; brother of Sir Edwin Arnold.

Arnold, Benedict. b. in England, Dec. 21, 1615; d. June 20, 1678. English colonial governor of Rhode Island (1663 et seq.).

Arnold, Benedict. b. at Norwich, Conn., Jan. 14, 1741; d. at London, June 14, 1801. American general in the Revolutionary War, chiefly remembered for his attempt to betray West Point to the British in 1780. Commissioned as a colonel in 1775, he took part in Ethan Allen's capture of Fort Ticonderoga, commanded the winter expedition through the Maine wilderness to Quebec, and was wounded, but maintained the blockade of Quebec, and in 1776 was promoted to brigadier general. He twice defeated the British in their attempted expedition down Lake Champlain in 1776, and defeated them again in 1777 at Norwalk, Conn., for which Congress gave him a delayed promotion to major general, though permitting certain junior officers to outrank him until after Saratoga, where his initiative and reputation for audacity were important factors leading to Burgoyne's surrender. Appointed (1778) commander at Philadelphia, he there met and married (1779) Margaret ("Peggy") Shippen, member of a wealthy Philadelphia family. He attempted to maintain a social position and household establishment not unlike that to which his wife was accustomed, and soon found himself seriously in debt. A court-martial for private use of the militia under his control, plus continuing indignation at slights by Congress and opposition to the French alliance, led in 1779 to the opening of the correspondence with Sir Henry Clinton, the British commander in chief in North America, that culminated (1780) in the arrangement with Major John André, of Clinton's staff, to betray West Point (which Arnold then commanded) to the British. Fleeing to the British lines after André's capture, he was appointed a brigadier general in the British army and subsequently led raids on Virginia (1780) and Connecticut (1781). He settled in England during the latter year, but was never able to collect the full amount of the reward he had expected from the British and spent the last years of his life in comparative poverty.

Arnold, Bion Joseph. b. at Casnovia, Mich., Aug. 14, 1861; d. Jan. 29, 1942. American electrical engineer. As a consulting engineer (1893 et seq.) he contributed to the development of street railway systems in many American cities; he was also a consultant in the building of New York subways and in the third-rail electrification of the Grand Central terminal at New York. He was the inventor of a magnetic clutch and innovator of alternating-current and single-phase traction systems.

Arnold (är'nolt), Christoph. b. at Sommerfeld, near Leipzig, Dec. 17, 1650; d. April 15, 1695. German astronomer, noted for his observations of the comets of 1682 and 1686, and of the transit of the planet Mercury in 1690.

Arnold (är'nold), Sir Edwin. b. at Gravesend, Kent, England, June 10, 1832, d. at London, March 24, 1904. English poet, journalist, educator, Oriental student and translator, and author of The Light of Asia; brother of Sir Arthur Arnold. He was educated at King's College, Rochester, King's College, London, and University College, Oxford, winning the Newdigate prize (1852) with his poem, Belshazzar's Feast. Thereafter he taught at Birmingham at the King Edward's School, and was principal (1856–61) of the Deccan Government College at Poona, Bombay. Returning to England in 1861, he joined the staff of the London Daily Telegraph, serving as editorial writer (until 1873) and as chief editor from 1873 until his death. He traveled in Japan (marrying a Japanese woman as his third wife) and along the U.S. Pacific coast (1889), and traveled and lectured elsewhere in the U.S. (1891). Author of Poems Narrative and Lyrical (1853), Griselda (1856), The Wreck of the Northern Belle (1857), The Light of Asia (1879), an epic poem on the life of Buddha, once his best-known and most popular work, but now little read; Pearls of the Faith (1883), Secret of Death (1885), Lotus and Jewel (1887), The Light of the World (1891), the last of which dealt with Christ in somewhat the same fashion as The Light of Asia did with Buddha. His other poetry includes Potiphar's Wife (1892), The Tenth Muse (1895), and The Voyage of Ithobal (1901). History, travel books, and comment include History of the Marquis of Dalhousie's Administration (2 vols., 1862–65), India Revisited (1886), Seas and Lands (1891), Japonica (1892), Wandering Words (1894), and East and West (1896). He also translated poetry by Victor Hugo and Giuseppe Garibaldi, Poets of Greece (1869), the Hero and Leander (1873) of Musaeus, several volumes of Indian poetry, and wrote (1877) a Turkish grammar.

Arnold, Elliott. b. at New York, Sept. 13, 1912—. American journalist and novelist. He was a reporter (1933–42) for the New York World-Telegram and served (1942 et seq.) in the U.S. army during World War II. Among his novels are Two Lovers (1934), Personal Combat (1936), Only the Young (1939), The Commandos (1942), Tomorrow Will Sing (1945), Blood Brother (1947), and Everybody Slept Here (1948).

Arnold, George. [Pseudonyms: McArone, George Garrulous, and others.] b. at New York, June 24, 1834; d. at Strawberry Farms, N.J., Nov. 9, 1865. American poet and essayist. He was a member of a 19th-century American literary group known as the "Bohemians."

Arnold (är'nolt), Gottfried. b. at Annaberg, in Saxony, Sept. 5, 1666; d. at Perleberg, in Prussia, May 30, 1714. German Pietist theologian and church historian, author of Die erste Liebe zu Christo (1696). His work was rediscovered and brought again to public attention during the 19th century by Leo Tolstoy.

Arnold (är'nold), Henry Harley. [Nicknamed "Hap" Arnold.] b. at Gladwyne, Pa., June 25, 1886; d. Jan. 15, 1950. American air-force officer. He served (1916–17) with the signal corps aviation division and was thereafter a member of the army air force; he was awarded the Mackay trophy (1912, 1935), the Collier trophy (1943), the Distinguished Flying Cross (1934), and others. He served as flight commander on the army air force flight to Alaska in 1934, assistant chief (1936–38) and chief (1938 et seq.) of the army air corps, and commanding general of U.S. army air forces (1942–46). Appointed (1944) general of the army, highest regular U.S. military rank, he retired from active service in January, 1946. Author of Air Power and Armed Force (1929), and others; collaborator with General Ira C. Eaker on Winged Warfare (1941), Army Flyer (1942), and others.

Arnold, Isaac Newton. b. at Hartwick, N.Y., Nov. 30, 1815; d. at Chicago, April 24, 1884. American politician and biographical writer, a member of Congress from Illinois (1861–65). Author of Life of Abraham Lincoln (1885), his best-known work, Life of Benedict Arnold (1880), and others.

Arnold, John. b. at Bodmin, Cornwall, England, 1736; d. 1799. English watchmaker who improved and named the chronometer. He was assisted in establishing a watchmaking shop by George III, to whom he gave a watch set into a ring; later he developed improvements in the instrument now known, from the name he gave it, as the chronometer.

Arnold (är'nolt), Karl. b. at Württemberg, March 21, 1901—. German politician. Originally a leather worker, he became a trade-union official; he was arrested after the attempt to assassinate Hitler in July, 1944. Mayor of Düsseldorf in 1945, he was elected Minister President of the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia in 1947.

Arnold (är'nold), Matthew. b. at Laleham, England, Dec. 24, 1822; d. at Liverpool, England, April 15, 1888. English critic, poet, and essayist; son of Thomas Arnold (1795–1842), headmaster of Rugby. Educated at Winchester, Rugby, and Balliol College, Oxford, Matthew became a fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, in 1845, and secretary to the marquis of Lansdowne in 1847; he was lay inspector of schools (1851–83) and professor of poetry at Oxford (1857–67). His teaching at Oxford prompted him to devote the greater part of his interest, over a period of years, to criticism in the widest sense and the formulation of his own standards in the evaluation of literature and literary techniques. This was first evident in his own poem on Wordsworth, Byron, and Goethe in Empedocles on Etna and Other Poems (1852) and in his preface to Poems by Matthew Arnold (1853). In the latter work he included his Requiescat, The Scholar-Gipsy, and Sohrab and Rustum (which last was taken from the works of the Persian epic poet, Firdausi, and which embodied Arnold's own standard of unity). This interest in critical writing was again apparent in Merope (1858), which was intended as a poetical manifesto and was, at least partly for the reason, not successful as a tragedy. Most modern critics consider that his poetry from this date on lacked the power of his earlier work, with certain notable exceptions such as the elegies Rugby Chapel (1857) on his father, A Southern Night (1859) on his brother, Thyrsis (1861) on Arthur Hugh Clough, and Westminster Abbey (1881) on Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, the dean of Westminster Abbey. His critical works, on which his fame as a master of clear and felicitous English may be said chiefly to rest, include published lectures On Translating Homer (1861–62) and On the Study of Celtic Literature (1867); two volumes of Essays in Criticism (1865, 1888), the first of which contains the essay depicting Heine as a great intellectual liberator, such as Arnold himself wanted very intensely to be; and Culture and Anarchy (1869), reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine, in which Arnold put forth his so-called "sweetness and light" theory. His other works include theological studies such as Literature and Dogma (1873), and such works of essays as Discourses in America (1885) and Civilization in the United States (Boston, 1888), both based on his American lecture tours (1883–84 and 1886).

Arnold, Ralph. b. at Marshalltown, Ia., April 14, 1875—. American geologist and petroleum consultant. He served (1900–09) on the staff of the U.S. Geological Survey, and has made oil surveys in Texas, Wyoming, Mexico, Trinidad, Venezuela, and elsewhere. Author of numerous technical articles, including Tertiary and Quaternary Pectens of California, Two Decades of Petroleum Geology, and Petroleum in the United States and Possessions.

Arnold, Richard. b. at Providence, R.I., April 12, 1828; d. on Governor's Island, N.Y., Nov. 8, 1882. American soldier, Union general in the Civil War. He served in the Peninsular Campaign in 1862, and commanded a cavalry division in 1864. He received promotions for gallantry at Savage Station, Port Hudson, and Fort Morgan.

Arnold, Richard. b. at Eilenburg, near Leipzig, Germany, 1845; d. at New York, 1918. American violinist and music teacher, concert master (1880–1909) of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. He came to the U.S. as a child, already proficient as a violinist, and was an orchestra conductor and violin performer at the age of 12.

Arnold, Samuel. b. at London, Aug. 10, 1740; d. there, Oct. 22, 1802. English composer and musicologist, organist (1793–1802) at Westminster Abbey. He composed operas such as The Maid of the Mill (1765), oratorios including The Cure of Saul (1767), overtures, pantomimes, harpsichord pieces, and others; he also published 40 volumes of an edition of George Frederick Handel's works.

Arnold, Samuel Greene. b. at Providence, R.I., April 12, 1821; d. there, Feb. 13, 1880. American historian. He was several times (1852, 1861, 1862) lieutenant governor of Rhode Island, and was a U.S. senator in 1862–63. Author of History of Rhode Island and Providence Plantation (1859), Historical Sketch of Middletown (1880), and others.

Arnold, Thomas. [Called "Arnold of Rugby."] b. at West Cowes, on the Isle of Wight, June 13, 1795; d. at Rugby, England, June 12, 1842. English educator and historian, headmaster of Rugby (1828–42); father of Matthew Arnold. Educated at Winchester and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was a fellow (1815–19) at Oriel College, Oxford. Ordained deacon in 1818, he settled (1819) at Laleham, where he tutored young men for universities. At Rugby, he set the modern pattern for the English public-school system. His leadership was widely recognized, in spite of outspoken criticism by certain elements of the clergy, and he was given an appointment (1841) as regius professor of modern history at Oxford. His works include a collection of sermons (1829–34), an edition of Thucydides (1830–35), History of Rome (3 vols., 1838–43), and Lectures on Modern History (1842).

Arnold, Thomas. b. at Laleham, England, 1823; d. at Dublin, 1900. English scholar; son of Thomas Arnold (1795–1842) and brother of Matthew Arnold. Inspector of schools in Tasmania (1850–56), he joined (1856) the Roman Catholic Church. He was professor of English literature at Dublin, appointed by Newman to New Catholic University there, and later at St. Stephen's Green. Author of Manual of English Literature, Historical and Critical (1862), of editions of Wycliffe (1869–71), Beowulf (1876), and others; also of Passages in a Wandering Life (1900), containing much material on Newman and the Tractarian (now better known as the Oxford) Movement.

Arnold, Thomas Kerchever. b. at Stamford, England, 1800; d. at Lyndon, England, March 9, 1853. English clergyman and writer of classical textbooks, including an English-Latin lexicon (with J. E. Riddle, 1847), based on an earlier work by a German scholar. He also produced Hebrew and various modern-language grammars (also based on German scholarship), pamphlets on the Oxford Movement, and others.

Arnold, Thurman Wesley. b. at Laramie, Wyo., June 2, 1891—. American jurist and author. Holding degrees from Princeton (1911), Harvard (1914), and Yale (1931), he was professor of law (1931–38) at Yale. Thereafter he served as assistant U.S. attorney general (1938–43) in charge of the antitrust division in the U.S. Department of Justice, and as associate justice (1943–45) of the federal court of appeals for the District of Columbia. Author of The Symbols of Government (1935), Cases on Trials, Judgments and Appeals (1936), The Folklore of Capitalism (1937), The Bottlenecks of Business (1940), and Democracy and Free Enterprise (1942).

Arnold, William Delafield. [Pseudonym, Purjabee.] b. at Laleham, near Staines, England, April 7, 1828; d. at Gibraltar, April 9, 1859. English educator and novelist; son of Thomas Arnold (1795–1842) and brother of Matthew Arnold. He was educated at Rugby, and was a student at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1847. In 1848 he went to India, as an ensign, and became an assistant commissioner in the Punjab, and, in 1856, director of public instruction. He wrote the novel Oakfield (1853).

Arnold, William Rosenzweig. b. at Beirut, Lebanon, Nov. 14, 1872; d. Dec. 11, 1929. American Orientalist philologist, and teacher. After serving as curator of antiquities (1896–98) at the Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York, he was professor of Hebrew language and literature at Andover Theological Seminary (1903–22) and at Harvard (1922–29). Author of The Rhythms of the Ancient Hebrews (1908), The Passover Papyrus from Elephantine (1912), and others.

Arnold, William Thomas. b. at Hobart, Tasmania, Sept. 18, 1852; d. at London, May 29, 1904. English historian, journalist, and editor; grandson of Thomas Arnold (1795–1842) and son of Thomas Arnold (1823–1900). He was author of a Manual of English Literature, and an inspector of schools in Tasmania. Educated at Rugby and at University College, Oxford, he was on the staff of the Manchester Guardian for many years. Author of The Roman System of Provincial Administration to the Accession of Constantine the Great (1879), a standard work in its field, and Studies in Roman Imperialism (1906). In 1886, he edited his grandfather's History of Rome: The Second Punic War. Matthew Arnold was his uncle, and Mary Arnold, better known as Mrs. Humphry Ward (1851–1920), the novelist, was his sister.

Arnold (är.nôlt'), Yurij (or Yuri) von. b. at St. Petersburg, Nov. 13, 1811; d. in the Crimea, July 20, 1898. Russian composer and writer on music. He served in the cavalry (1831 et seq.), and later taught music (1870) and history of music (1888) at Moscow.

Arnold-Forster (är'nold.fôr'stẽr), Hugh Oakeley. b. at Dawlish, England, 1855; d. at London, March 12, 1909. British politician and writer on imperial and military affairs; grandson of Thomas Arnold (1795–1842). He was called to the bar in 1879, and served as member of Parliament for Belfast (West) (1892–1905) and for Croydon (1906–09). He was also parliamentary secretary to the admiralty (1900–03) and secretary of state for war (1903–05). Author of In a Conning Tower (1891), Our Home Army (1891–92), Our Great City (1900), War Office, Army, and Empire (1900), and English Socialism of Today (1908).

Arnold of Brescia (är'nold; brā'shā). [Also: Arnaldus, Arnoldus, Ernaldus; Italian, Arnaldo da Brescia.] b. at Brescia, Italy, c1100; executed at Rome, 1155 Italian religious reformer and political agitator. Possibly a student of Abelard at Paris, he excoriated the corruption of the clergy and the power they exercised through ownership of the land. He was banished (1139) by Pope Innocent II for arousing the people against the bishop of Brescia; in France, he probably reprimanded Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, whose measures against him, including condemnation (with Abelard) by the Council of Sens (1140), drove him to Zurich and thence (1143 or 1145) to Italy, where he did penance to Pope Eugene III (but soon afterward took leadership of the republican faction at Rome which drove Eugene into exile). Though excommunicated (1148) by Eugene, Arnold remained powerful until the accession (1154) of Pope Adrian IV who, supported by the emperor Frederick I (Barbarossa), laid an interdict (1155) on Rome, driving out the republicans and reëstablishing papal power.

Arnold of Villanova. [French, Arnauld (or Arnaud) de Villeneuve; Latinized, Arnaldus Villanovanus.] b. c1240; d. 1313. Physician, alchemist, and astrologer, possibly originally from the region of Catalonia, in Spain. He taught at Paris, Barcelona, and Montpellier, and is said to have discovered the poisonous quality of what is now called carbon monoxide gas. He has been incorrectly credited with the discovery of sulfuric, nitric, and hydrochloric acids, which, according to some authorities, were known before his time.

Arnoldson (är'nůld.sôn), Klas Pontus. b. at Göteborg, Sweden, Oct. 27, 1844; d. at Stockholm, Feb. 20, 1916. Swedish writer, politician, and worker for international peace. He was a winner of the Nobel peace prize in 1908, with Fredrik Bajer. He introduced a motion for permanent neutrality while a member (1882–87) of the Swedish Riksdag (parliament), and opposed war with Norway in the Swedish-Norwegian union crisis of 1906. He is best known for his Hope of the Centuries, a Book on World Peace (1900).

Arnoldson, Sigrid. b. at Stockholm, March 20, c1862; d. 1943. Swedish operatic soprano. She distinguished herself in the opera houses of Paris, Amsterdam, Budapest, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Moscow, and London.

Arnoldstein (är'nolt.shtīn). Market village in S Austria, in Carinthia, SW of Villach. It is situated immediately N of the Italian and Yugoslav borders and is a station on the railroad from Villach to Venice. The population is partly German, partly Slovenian. 5,418 (1946).

Arnolfo di Cambio (är.nôl'fō dē kām'byō). [Also, Arnolfo di Lapo (lā'pō).] b. at Colle, in Tuscany, c1232; d. at Florence, c1300. Tuscan architect and sculptor, a pupil of Niccola Pisano. His work includes the churches of Santa Croce (1294–95) and Santa Maria del Fiore (1298 et seq.) at Florence.

Arnolphe (är.nolf). Cynical and morose man in Molière's École des Femmes. He is imbued with the idea that a woman can only be good and virtuous in proportion as she is ignorant. He brings up a young girl, Agnes, on these principles with the view of marrying her, but this system results in making her so ignorant that she says and does without a blush many things which normal society considers shocking. His warnings teach her exactly how to deceive him, and she marries her younger lover, Horace.

Arnon (är'non). [Arabic, Wadi Mojib.] In the Old Testament, a small river flowing into the Dead Sea. It formed the boundary between the Moabites on the S and the Amorites (and later the Israelites) on the N.

Arnon (är.nôn). River in N central France, a tributary of the Cher River, lying chiefly in the department of Cher.

Arnot (är'not), William. b. at Scone, Scotland, Nov. 6, 1808; d. at Edinburgh, June 3, 1875. Scottish minister and theological writer. He was ordained minister of Saint Peter's Church, Glasgow, in 1838, joined Chalmer's Free Church movement in 1843, and became minister of a Free Church congregation at Edinburgh in 1863. He visited America (1845, 1870, 1873), and was well received in the N part of the U.S. for his antislavery stand. Author of Laws from Heaven for Life on Earth, and others.

Arnott (är'not), Neil. b. at Arbroath, Scotland, May 15, 1788; d. at London, March 2, 1874. Scottish physician, physicist, and inventor. As ship's surgeon (1807–11) on China voyages for the East India Company, he made a study of meteorology, which served as foundation for his Elements of Physics (1827–29). In the same period he began the study of sanitation which led to his invention of a smokeless grate ("Arnott's Stove") and other devices, described in his Warming and Ventilation (1833), and for further development of which he gave up his London practice in 1855.

Arnould (är.nō), Madeleine Sophie. [Called Sophie Arnould.] b. at Paris, in February, 1744; d. there, in October, 1802. French actress and opera singer; leading soprano (1757–78) at the Paris Opéra. A friend of Claude Adrien Helvétius, Jean le Rond d'Alembert, Denis Diderot, Jean Jacques Rousseau, and others, she was known in her time as a wit. Her epigrams were collected in Arnouldiana (1813).

Arnouville-les-Gonesse (är.nō.vēl.lā.go.nes). Town in N France, in the department of Seine-et-Oise, situated NE of St.-Denis, between Paris and Senlis. It belongs to the metropolitan region of Paris. 6,879 (1946).

Arno Valley (är'nō). [Italian, Val d'Arno (val där'nō).] The fruitful valley of the upper Arno River, in N central Italy.

Arnprior (ärn''prī'ọr). Small industrial town on the S bank of the Ottawa River, E Ontario, Canada, ab. 42 mi. W of Ottawa. 4,381 (1951).

Arnsberg (ärns'berk). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of North Rhine-Westphalia, British Zone, formerly in the province of Westphalia, Prussia, situated on the upper Ruhr River. Industries include metallurgical, electrical, chemical, and shoe factories, and breweries. There is a ruined castle. Arnsberg was formerly the seat of the dreaded Vehmgericht of Westphalia. Originally an independent countship, it passed to Cologne in 1368, to Hesse in 1802, and to Prussia in 1815. Pop. 18,884 (1950).

Arnstadt (ärn'shtät). City in C Germany, in the Land (state) of Thuringia, Russian Zone, situated on the Gera River, ab. 11 mi. SW of Erfurt: a manufacturing center, which before World War II produced shoes, gloves, ravon, and machinery. It is one of the oldest cities in Thuringia, references to it having been found from as early as 704; it came into the possession of the counts of Schwarzburg in the 13th century, and was capital of the independent principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen until 1919 when it was incorporated into the free state of Thuringia. The population is predominantly Protestant; the German minority (1939) and Polish minority (1931) together amounted to 28.1 percent. Largely due to the influx of East-German refugees, 27,848 (1946).

Arnstein (ärn'stīn), Karl. b. at Prague, March 24, 1887—. American designer and builder of dirigibles and other airships. He arrived in the U.S. in 1924 after employment (1914–24) as a designer and engineer by the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshafen, Germany. He became a U.S. citizen in 1930. Technical director in aircraft construction for the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company (1924) and chief engineer of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation (1925 et seq.), he was in charge of designing and building the airships Akron and Macon.

Arnulf (är'nŭlf). b. c870; d. at what is now Regensburg, Bavaria, Dec. 8, 899. Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire; illegitimate son of Carloman, king of Bavaria. He was elected king of the East Franks in 887, and was crowned emperor in 896. He defeated the Normans near Louvain in 891, fought with the Moravians, and invaded Italy and stormed Rome in 895.

Arnulf. Roman Catholic ecclesiastic, archbishop of Reims during the period 989–994.

Arnus (är'nus). Latin name of the Arno.

Arod (ā'rod) or Arodi (ā'rō.dī). Son of Gad. Num. xxvi. 17. In Gen. xlvi. 16 the same person is called Arodi.

Arod. In the second part of Absalom and Achitophel (which was written in the main by Nahum Tate and revised by John Dryden), a character intended for Sir William Waller.

Aroe Islands (ä'rō). [Also: Aru (or Arru or Arroe Islands; Dutch, Aroe Eilanden.] Group of more than 90 islands, SE of New Guinea, in E Indonesia. Chief town, Dobo; area, 3,300 sq. mi.; pop. ab. 18,000.

Arolas (ä.rō'läs), Juan. b. at Barcelona, Spain, June 20, 1805; d. at Valencia, Spain, Nov. 25, 1849. Spanish poet, author of Poesías caballerescas y orientales (1840–50) and others.

Arolsen (ä'rol.zən). Town in W Germany, in the Land (state) of Hessen, American Zone, formerly in Waldeck, ab. 22 mi. N of Kassel; a summer resort; also has livestock markets and small industries. The castle of the princes of Waldeck-Pyrmont (erected 1710–25) is in the baroque style; it contains art collections and a valuable library. Arolsen was the birthplace of the sculptor Christian Rauch and the painter Friedrich Kaulbach. It was formerly the capital of the independent principality of Waldeck. 4,726 (1946).

Arona (ä.rō'nä). Town and commune in NW Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Piedmont, in the province of Novara, situated on Lago Maggiore, ab. 38 mi. NW of Milan. It is a railroad junction, has cotton textile mills, and is a resort town. A monument to Cardinal Carlo Borromeo is outside the town. Arona, fortified from Roman times, was at various later periods in the hands of the Lombards, of Milan, and of Austria until it was ceded to Sardinia in 1743. Buildings of interest to tourists were undamaged in World War II. Pop. of commune, 8,632 (1936); of town, 5,667 (1936).

Arondight (ä'ron.dīt). In later versions of the Arthurian legend, the sword of Lancelot.

Aronhold (ä'ron.holt), Siegfried Heinrich. b. at Angerburg, in East Prussia, July 16, 1819; d. at Berlin, March 13, 1884. German mathematician, one of the most important contributors to the theory of invariants of algebraic forms. He wrote on kinematics and was largely responsible, through "Aronhold's notation," for the modern symbolic methods in algebraic geometry. He took his doctorate at Königsberg in 1851 and taught at Giessen, Zurich, Heidelberg, and Berlin. Besides numerous papers, especially in Crelle's Journal, he wrote Ueber eine fundamentale Begründung der Invariantentheorie (1863).

Aroostook (a.rōs'tŭk). River in N and NE Maine, which joins the St. John River in W New Brunswick. Length, ab. 140 mi.

Aroostook War. So-called war (February–May, 1839) along the Maine-New Brunswick boundary involving Maine troops who were dispatched to the area to contest Canadian claims in the region. The dispute had no formal status and did not occasion any shedding of blood on either side; it had its roots in the absence of a definite boundary line (later established by the Webster-Ashburton Treaty of 1842 between the U.S. and Great Britain). Although the U.S. government made provisions for funds and troops should war break out, the dispute ended in the negotiation of a truce by General Winfield Scott and the lieutenant governor of New Brunswick.

Arosa (a.rō'za). Summer and winter resort in E Switzerland, in the canton of Graubünden at the head of the Plessur Valley, E of Chur, at an elevation of 6,000 ft. It is one of the leading winter-sport centers in Switzerland. 1,980 (1941).

Arosemena (ä.rō.sä.mā'nä), Florencio Harmodio. b. 1873; d. 1945. Panamanian politician, president (1928–31) of Panama. His administration was overthrown (Jan. 2, 1931) by the Acción Comunal, a nationalist Panamanian patriotic society.

Arp (ärp), Hans. b. at Strasbourg, Sept. 16, 1887—. Swiss painter of the dadaist school. He is best known for his compositions superimposing free forms on a flat background, several of which are in the Museum of Modern Art at New York.

Arpachshad (är.pak'shad). [Also: Arphaxad, Arphaxhad.] Third son of Shem, and a remote ancestor of Abraham, according to Genesis and 1 Chronicles. However, Arpachshad is not necessarily a single person. From the structure of the genealogical tables the name may be that of a tribe or land of which the people were descendants from that son of Shem. The name long referred to the mountainous country on the Upper Zab N and NE of Nineveh, called by the Greek geographers Arrapachitis. Gen. x. 22, 24; xi. 10.

Árpád (är'pad). d. 907. A Magyar national hero, founder (c890) of the Árpád dynasty in Hungary. It is said that he led the Magyars into Hungary c895.

Arpad (är'pad). [Also: Arphad; in Assyrian inscriptions, Ar-pad-da; modern name, Tel-Erfad.] Ancient city in N Syria, ab. 15 mi. N of Aleppo. In the Old Testament it is always mentioned in conjunction with Hamath (the modern Hama), on the Orontes River (Isa. x. 9, Jer. xlix. 23). It was taken by Tiglath-pileser II in 740 B.C., after a siege of three years.

Árpád Dynasty. Dynasty of Hungarian sovereigns, ruling as kings from 997 to 1301. The first actual sovereign of this dynasty (as distinct from Árpád, a national hero who was its progenitor) was Stephen I (called Saint Stephen); the last was Andrew III, who reigned from 1290 to 1301.

Arpasia (är.pā'zha). Greek princess, in Nicholas Rowe's tragedy Tamerlane.

Arphad (är'fad). See Arpad.

Arphaxad or Arphaxhad (är.fak'sad). See Arpachshad.

Arpi (är'pī). [Also, Argyrippa.] In ancient geography, a city in Apulia, Italy.

Arpino (är.pē'nō). [Ancient name, Arpinum (är.pī'nŭm).] Town and commune in C Italy, in the compartimento (region) of Latium, in the province of Frosinone, situated near the Garigliano River, SE of Rome; marble quarries worked. In ancient times a Roman town, the birthplace of Marius and Cicero, it was later sacked by Lombards, Hungarians, and Moslems, and became a stronghold of the Papal States. It preserves walls and fortifications from both Roman and medieval times. World War II damage to buildings of tourist interest consisted chiefly of broken windows in the churches of Sant' Andrea, Santa Maria Assunta in Civitâ, and San Michele Arcangelo. Pop. of commune, 10,564 (1936); of town, 2,613 (1936).

Arpino (där.pē'nō), Cavaliere d'. See Cesari, Giuseppe.

Arquà Petrarca (är.kwä' pā.trär'kä). Village in NE Italy, in the province of Padova, ab. 13 mi. SW of Padua; the place where Petrarch died (1374).

Arquebusiers of Saint Andrew. Oil painting (1633) by Frans Hals in the town hall at Haarlem, Holland. It comprises 14 figures, colonel, captains, lieutenants, ensigns, and sergeants of the company, and is characteristic in color and expression of the artist's middle period.

Arques (ärk). [Full name, Arques-la-Bataille (lä.bä.tāy').] Town in N France, in the department of Seine-Inférieure, on the Arques River near its junction with the Eaulne and Béthune rivers, ab. 3 mi. E of Dieppe. It contains a ruined castle, built in the 11th century by William the Conqueror. Nearby is the battlefield of Archelles, where Henry IV defeated Charles de Lorraine Duc de Mayenne, on Sept. 21, 1589. The church, built in flamboyant Gothic style, was damaged during World War II. 2,462 (1946).

Arquipélago (är.kē.peˈlą.gō). Portuguese word for "archipelago": see the specific element of the name.

Arrah (ärˈrą). City in E Union of India, in Bihar, ab. 35 mi. W of Patna: rail junction and trading center. In 1857 it was successfully defended against the Sepoy rebels. 53,122 (1941).

Arraignment of Paris (parˈis), The. Play, combining the elements of a pageant and a masque, which was published anonymously in 1584, but is thought to have been written by George Peele. It is written mainly in varied lyrical measures, with about 200 lines of blank verse, considered by critics to be the loveliest written before those of Marlowe.

Arrakis (arˈą.kis). The fourth-magnitude double-star μ Draconis, in the Dragon's tongue.

Arran (arˈąn). Island in C Scotland, in Buteshire, lying between the Firth of Clyde and Kilbrennan Sound. The surface is hilly and mountainous, rising to 2,866 ft. in Goatfell, the highest summit. Length, ab. 20 mi.; width, ab. 12 mi.; area, ab. 166 sq. mi.; pop. 4,506 (1931).

Arran Islands. See Aran Islands.

Arras (arˈąs; French, ȧ.räs). [Gallic, Atrabate, Atrebates; Latin, Nemetacum, Nemetocenna.] City in N France, the capital of the department of Pas-de-Calais situated at the influx of the Crinchon River into the Scarpe River, at the point where the latter becomes navigable. It is a trade center for the agricultural products of the region, having been one of the major French grain markets, and has manufactures of lace and of beet sugar. In medieval times it was noted for its tapestry. Arras was the capital of the Atrebates and later of the county of Artois; it later belonged to Burgundy, and passed with the Netherlands to Spain. It was taken by the French in 1640, besieged by the Spaniards in 1654, and ceded to France in 1659. Robespierre was born at Arras. During World War I, Arras was in the front line and was uninterruptedly bombarded. Almost the entire inner city, including the architecturally interesting Petite-Place and Grande-Place, the cathedral, the theater, the museum, and the railroad station, was completely destroyed. The city was again the scene of fighting in World War II and was largely destroyed for the second time. Reconstruction was initiated along modern lines. 33,346 (1946).

Arras, Battle of. British assault (April 9, 1917) on the Western Front in World War I. It was carried out by General Allenby's Third Army and a Canadian corps. Preceded by long and heavy artillery bombardment, it managed to take Vimy Ridge. The British lost 84,000 troops, but inflicted a loss of 75,000 men on the Germans, took 13,000 prisoners, and managed to retain Vimy Ridge, which was to prove an invaluable defensive position against the German offensive of March, 1918.

Arras, Lines of. Fortifications extending from Arras to Bouchain on the Scheldt River, crossed by John Churchill, 1st Duke of Marlborough, in 1711.

Arras, Treaty of. In French history: 1. Treaty concluded between the Armagnacs and the Burgundians in 1414. 2. Treaty between Charles VII of France and Philip the Good of Burgundy, concluded in 1435. 3. Treaty between Louis XI of France and Maximilian I of Germany, concluded in 1482. By its terms, France was to receive Artois, Franche-Comté, and other territories.

